- 56 XV. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν συνεχῆ καὶ ἀδιάστατον καὶ διαιωνίζουσαν ἑορτὴν ἄγεται δευτέρα ἢ δι' ἑξ ἡμερῶν ἱερὰ ἐβδόμη· ἦν οἱ μὲν ὠνόμασαν παρθένον εἰς τὴν ὑπερβάλλουσαν ἀγνείαν ἀπιδόντες αὐτῆς, οἱ δὲ αὐτοὶ καὶ ἀμήτορα, σπαρεῖσαν ἐκ μόνου τοῦ πατρὸς τῶν ὄλων, ιδέα τῆς ἄρρενος γενεᾶς, ἀμέτοχον τῆς πρὸς γυναικῶν· ἀνδριότατος γὰρ καὶ ἀλκιμώτατος ὁ ἀριθμὸς, πρὸς ἀρχὴν καὶ ἡγεμονίαν εὖ πεφυκῶς· ἔνιοι δὲ αὐτὴν καιρὸν προσηγόρευσαν ἀπὸ τῶν αἰσθητῶν τεκμηράμενοι τὴν νοητὴν αὐτῆς
- 57 οὐσίαν. ὅσα γὰρ τῶν ἐν αἰσθητοῖς ἄριστα, δι' ὧν αἱ ἐτήσιοι ὥραι καὶ τῶν καιρῶν αἱ περίοδοι τεταγμένως ἀποτελοῦνται, μετέσχηκεν ἐβδομάδος, λέγω δὲ πλάνητας ἑπτὰ καὶ ἄρκτον καὶ πλειάδα καὶ σελήνης αὐξομένης τε καὶ μειουμένης ἀνακυκλήσεις

<sup>a</sup> See on De Dec. 102.

<sup>b</sup> Alternatives for translating the untranslatable καιρός might be “the right season,” “the happy hour or moment,” or the abstract “timeliness.” Heinemann gives “die entscheidende Zeit.” In De Op. 59 καιρός is defined as χρόνοι κατορθώσεως. The application of it to the number seven is, like the other names, Pythagorean. As Philo understands it

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 55-57

until her doubts were set at rest. For the gracious 55 God allayed her fears by an oracle in which He bade her acknowledge that she laughed, meaning thus to teach us the lesson that joy is not altogether denied to the creature. Joy is of two kinds. One is unmixed and of the utmost purity, admitting nothing whatever of the nature opposite to its own.
This joy belongs to God and to no other. The other which flows from it is a mixed stream blended with lesser tributaries of sorrow, and if the blend is such that the pleasant ingredients outnumber the unpleasant, the wise man receives it as the greatest of gifts. So much for this matter.

XV. After this continuous unbroken feast which 56 has neither beginning nor end, the second to be observed is the sacred seventh day, recurring with six days between. Some have given to it the name of virgin,<sup>a</sup> having before their eyes its surpassing chastity. They also call her the motherless,<sup>a</sup> begotten by the father of the universe alone, the ideal form of the male sex with nothing of the female.
It is the manliest and doughtiest of numbers, well gifted by nature for sovereignty and leadership.
Some give it the name of the "season,"<sup>b</sup> judging its conceptual nature from its manifestation in the realm of sense. For seven is a factor common to all the 57 phenomena which stand highest in the world of sensible things and serve to consummate in due order transitions of the year and recurring seasons. Such are the seven planets, the Great Bear, the Pleiades and the cycles of the moon, as it waxes and wanes, here, we may perhaps say that it is personified like  $\tauύχη$ , of which it is the converse, and represents the due order in which events happen. See further App. p. 624.

PHILO

καὶ τῶν ἄλλων τὰς ἐναρμονίους καὶ παντὸς λόγου 58 κρείττους περιφοράς. Μωυσῆς δὲ ἀπὸ σεμνοτέρου πράγματος ἐκάλεσεν αὐτὴν συντέλειαν καὶ παντέ-λειαν, ἐξάδι μὲν τὴν γένεσιν τῶν τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν ἀναθείς, ἐβδομάδι δὲ τὴν τελείωσιν. ἐξὰς μὲν γὰρ ἄρτιοπέριττος ἀριθμός, ἐκ τοῦ δις τρία παγείς, ἔχων ἄρρενα μὲν τὸν περιττόν, θῆλυν δὲ τὸν ἄρτιον, ἐξ ὧν εἰσιν αἱ γενέσεις κατὰ φύσεως θεσμούς ἀ-59 κινήτους. ἐβδομὰς δὲ ἀμιγέστατος καὶ φῶς, εἰ χρῆ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἐξάδος· ἃ γὰρ ἐγέννησεν ἐξὰς, ταῦθ' ἐβδομὰς τελεσφορηθέντα ἐπεδείξατο. παρὸ καὶ γενέθλιος τοῦ κόσμου δεόντως ἂν προσαγορεύοιτο, καθ' ἣν τὸ τοῦ πατρὸς ἔργον τέλειον ἐκ τελείων 60 μερῶν ἀνεφάνη. ἐν ἣ προστέτακται πάντων ἀνέχειν ἔργων, οὐκ ἐπειδὴ ῥαθυμίας ὁ νόμος εἰσηγητῆς—ἀεὶ γὰρ ἐθίζει κακοπαθεῖν καὶ πρὸς πόνον ἀλείφει καὶ τοὺς ἀργεῖν καὶ σχολάζειν [282] ἐθέλοντας προβέβληται, διείρηται γοῦν | ἐξ ἡμέρας ἐνεργεῖν—, ἀλλ' ἵνα τοὺς συνεχεῖς καὶ ἀτρύτους πόνους χαλάσῃ καὶ τὰ σώματα μεμετρημέναις ἀνέσεσιν ἀνακτησάμενος καινώσῃ πάλιν πρὸς τὰς αὐτὰς ἐνεργείας· οἱ γὰρ διαπνεύσαντες, οὐκ ἰδιῶται μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀθληταί, ῥώμην συλλέγονται καὶ ἀπὸ κραταιότερας δυνάμεως ἀνυπερθέτως ἕκαστα 61 τῶν πρακτέων τλητικῶς ὑπομένουσι. προστάξας μέντοι μὴ διαπονεῖν τοῖς σώμασι κατὰ τὰς ἐβδόμας

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Μοσ. i. 207 (and note), and ii. 210.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 57-61

and the movements, harmonious and grand beyond description, of the other heavenly bodies. But 58 Moses from a higher point of view gave it the name of completion and full perfection when he laid down six as the number under which the parts of the universe were brought into being, seven as that under which they were perfected. For six is even-odd, formed out of twice three with the odd part as its male element and the even as its feminine, and these two, by the immutable laws of nature, are the sources of generation. But seven is a number en- 59 tirely uncompounded, and may be quite properly described as the light of six. For seven reveals as completed what six has produced, and therefore it may be quite rightly entitled the birthday of the world,<sup>a</sup> whereon the Father's perfect work, compounded of perfect parts, was revealed as what it was. On this day we are commanded 60 to abstain from all work, not because the law inculcates slackness; on the contrary it always inures men to endure hardship and incites them to labour, and spurns those who would idle their time away, and accordingly is plain in its directions to work the full six days. Its object is rather to give men relaxation from continuous and unending toil and by refreshing their bodies with a regularly calculated system of remissions, to send them out renewed to their old activities. For a breathing-space enables not merely ordinary people but athletes also to collect their strength and with a stronger force behind them to undertake promptly and patiently each of the tasks set before them. Further, when He forbids bodily labour 61 on the seventh day, He permits the exercise of ἐφῆκε τὰς ἀμείνους πράξεις ἐπιτελεῖν· αὐται δ' εἰσὶν αἱ διὰ λόγων καὶ δογμάτων τῶν κατ' ἀρετὴν· προτρέπει γὰρ φιλοσοφεῖν τότε βελτιοῦντας τὴν 62 ψυχὴν καὶ τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν. ἀναπέπταται γοῦν ταῖς ἐβδόμαις μυρία κατὰ πᾶσαν πόλιν διδασκαλεῖα φρονήσεως καὶ σωφροσύνης καὶ ἀνδρείας καὶ δικαιοσύνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν, ἐν οἷς οἱ μὲν ἐν κόσμῳ καθέζονται σὺν ἡσυχίᾳ τὰ ὦτα ἀνωρθιακότες μετὰ προσοχῆς πάσης ἕνεκα τοῦ διψῆν λόγων ποτίμων, ἀναστὰς δέ τις τῶν ἐμπειροτάτων ὑφηγεῖται τὰ ἄριστα καὶ συνοίσοντα, οἷς ἅπας ὁ βίος

PHILO

 63 ἐπιδώσει πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον. ἔστι δ' ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἀμυθῆτων λόγων καὶ δογμάτων δύο τὰ ἀνωτάτω κεφάλαια, τό τε πρὸς θεὸν δι' εὐσεβείας καὶ ὁσιότητος καὶ τὸ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους διὰ φιλανθρωπίας καὶ δικαιοσύνης· ὧν ἑκάτερον εἰς πολυσχιδεῖς ἰδέας καὶ πάσας ἐπαινετὰς τέμνεται.
 64 ἔξ ὧν δῆλόν ἐστιν, ὅτι Μωυσῆς οὐδένα καιρὸν ἀπράκτους ἐᾷ τοὺς χρωμένους αὐτοῦ ταῖς ἱεραῖς ὑφηγήσεσιν· ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ συνέστημεν ἐκ ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος, ἀπένειμε καὶ τῷ σώματι τὰ οἰκεία ἔργα καὶ τῇ ψυχῇ τὰ ἐπιβάλλοντα καὶ ἐφεδρεύειν τὰ ἕτερα τοῖς ἐτέροις ἐσπούδασεν, ἵνα πονοῦντος μὲν τοῦ σώματος ἢ ψυχῆ διαναπαύηται, ἀναπαύλη δὲ χρωμένου διαπονή, καὶ οἱ ἄριστοι τῶν βίων, ὃ τε θεωρητικὸς καὶ ὁ πρακτικὸς, ἀμείβωσιν ἀντιπαραχωροῦντες ἀλλήλοις, ὁ μὲν πρακτικὸς λαχὼν

---

<sup>a</sup> The meaning of ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν is not quite clear. Generally, if not always, it is applied to a general statement, mostly numerical, to indicate that it is not exact. Perhaps it may

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 61-64

the higher activities, namely, those employed in the study of the principles of virtue's lore. For the law bids us take the time for studying philosophy and thereby improve the soul and the dominant mind. So each seventh day there stand wide open 62 in every city thousands of schools of good sense, temperance, courage, justice and the other virtues in which the scholars sit in order quietly with ears alert and with full attention, so much do they thirst for the draught which the teacher's words supply, while one of special experience rises and sets forth what is the best and sure to be profitable and will make the whole of life grow to something better. But among the vast number of particular truths and 63 principles there studied, there stand out practically<sup>a</sup> high above the others two main heads : one of duty to God as shewn by piety and holiness, one of duty to men as shewn by humanity and justice, each of them splitting up into multiform branches, all highly laudable. These things shew clearly that Moses 64 does not allow any of those who use his sacred instruction to remain inactive at any season. But since we consist of body and soul, he assigned to the body its proper tasks and similarly to the soul what falls to its share, and his earnest desire was, that the two should be waiting to relieve each other. Thus while the body is working, the soul enjoys a respite, but when the body takes its rest, the soul resumes its work, and thus the best forms of life, the theoretical and the practical, take their turn in replacing each other. The practical life has six as mean here that it would be possible to find more than two main heads, or other than these two. Heinemann translates "so zu sagen," but I do not see what this means here, even if the Greek can be so translated.

ἐξάδα κατὰ τὴν τοῦ σώματος ὑπηρεσίαν, ὁ δὲ θεωρητικὸς ἑβδομάδα πρὸς ἐπιστήμην καὶ τελειότητα διανοίας.

- 65 XVI. Ἀπειρήται δὲ κατ' αὐτὴν πῦρ ἐναύειν ὡς | [283] ἀρχὴν καὶ σπέρμα τῶν περὶ βίον πραγματειῶν, ἐπειδήπερ ἄνευ πυρὸς οὐδὲν ἔστι τῶν εἰς τὰς πρὸς τὸ ζῆν ἀναγκαίαις χρείας ἐργάσασθαι· ὡς δι' ἑνὸς τοῦ ἀνωτάτω καὶ πρεσβυτάτου τῶν εἰς τὰς τέχνας 66 καὶ μάλιστα τὰς βαναύσους αἰτίου κεκωλύσθαι καὶ <τὰ><sup>1</sup> τῶν κατὰ μέρος ὑπηρεσιῶν. ἀλλ' ἔοικε διὰ τοὺς ἀπειθεστέρους καὶ ἥκιστα προσέχοντας τὸν νοῦν τοῖς προσταττομένοις<sup>2</sup> καὶ τὰ ἄλλα προσνομοθετεῖν, οὐ μόνον ἐλευθέρους ἀνέχειν ἔργων ἀξιῶν ταῖς ἐβδόμαις, ἀλλὰ καὶ θεράπουσι καὶ θεραπαίνοις ἐφιεῖς, ἄδειαν καὶ μόνον οὐκ ἐλευθερίαν δι' ἕξ 67 ἡμερῶν προκηρύττων τούτοις, ἵν' ἀμφοτέρους ἀνα-διδάξῃ μάθημα κάλλιστον· τοὺς μὲν δεσπότης αὐτουργεῖν ἐθίζεσθαι, μὴ ἀναμένοντας τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκετῶν λατρείας καὶ ὑπηρεσίας, ἵν', εἴ τινας ἀβούλητοι καιροὶ κατάσχοιεν κατὰ τὰς τῶν ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων μεταβολάς, μὴ τῷ ἀήθει τῆς αὐτουργίας προκάμνοντες τοῖς ἐπιτάγμασιν ἀπαγορεύωσιν, ἀλλ' εὐκίνητοτέροις χρώμενοι τοῖς τοῦ σώματος μέρεσιν εὐφόρως καὶ μετὰ ῥαστώνης

<sup>1</sup> The insertion was made by Tischendorf, though not accepted by Cohn. Sc. αἴτια. It seems to me necessary for the construction.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πραττομένοις.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxxv. 3, cf. Mos. ii. 219 and note.

<sup>b</sup> Or "primary," see on § 82.

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 66-69 see Ex. xx. 10.

<sup>d</sup> This seems to contradict both the foregoing and the

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 64-67

its number allotted for ministering to the body. The theoretical has seven for knowledge and perfection of the mind.

XVI. It is forbidden to light any fire on this day,<sup>a</sup> 65 fire being regarded as the source and origin of life, since without it nothing can be executed which serves the requirements necessary for existence. And thus the prohibition of the highest<sup>b</sup> and earliest instrument needed in the arts, and especially those of the mechanical kind, acts as a barrier to those required for the particular forms of service. <sup>c</sup>But it would 66 seem that his further enactments were given for the sake of the more disobedient who refused to pay attention to his commandments, when he not only requires the free men to abstain from work on the Sabbath, but gives the same permission to men-servants and handmaids, and sends them a message of security and almost of freedom after every six days, to teach both masters and men an admirable lesson. The masters must be accustomed to work 67 themselves without waiting for the offices and attentions of their menials,<sup>d</sup> and so in the event of times of difficulty such as occur through the vicissitudes of human affairs, they may not through unfamiliarity with personal service lose heart at the outset and despair of accomplishing the tasks set before them, but use the different parts of their body with more nimbleness and shew a robust and commandment itself "neither thou . . . nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant." Philo perhaps means that there are wants which must necessarily receive attention, and that if this attention is rendered by oneself, it is not work in the sense of the commandment, but is work if rendered by another. Strict modern Sabbatarians would probably feel the same.

PHILO

- ἐνεργῶσι, τοὺς δ' οἰκέτας μὴ ἀπογινώσκειν τὰς ἀμείνους ἐλπίδας, ἀλλ' ἔχοντας τὴν δι' ἕξ ἡμερῶν ἄνεσιν ἐμπύρευμά τι καὶ ζώπυρον ἐλευθερίας τὴν εἰς τὸ παντελὲς ἄφεςιν, εἰ διαμένοιεν χρηστοὶ καὶ
- 68 φιλοδέσποτοι, προσδοκᾶν. ἐκ δὲ τοῦ τοὺς μὲν ἐλευθέρους ὑπομείναι ποτε τὰς δούλων ὑπηρεσίας, τοῖς δ' οἰκέταις ἐγγενέσθαι μετασχεῖν ἀδείας, συμβήσεται τὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων βίον ἐπιδοῦναι πρὸς ἀρετὴν τελειοτάτην, ὑπομιμησκομένων ἰσότητος καὶ ἀντεκτινόντων ἀλλήλοις χρέος ἀναγκαῖον τῶν τε λαμπρῶν εἶναι δοκούντων καὶ τῶν ἀφανестέρων.
- 69 ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐ θεράπουσι μόνον ἐκεχειρίαν ἔδωκεν ὁ νόμος ταῖς ἐβδόμαις, ἀλλὰ καὶ κτήνεσι· καίτοι φύσει θεράποντες μὲν ἐλεύθεροι γεγόνασιν—ἄνθρωπος γὰρ ἐκ φύσεως δούλος οὐδεὶς—, τὰ δ' ἄλογα ζῶα πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀνθρώπων χρείαν καὶ ὑπηρεσίαν εὐτρεπισθέντα δούλων ἔχει τάξιν· ἀλλ' ὅμως ἀχθοφορεῖν ὀφείλοντα καὶ τοὺς ὑπὲρ τῶν κεκτημένων ὑπομένειν πόνους τε καὶ καμάτους
- 70 ἀναπαύλας εὐρίσκει ταῖς ἐβδόμαις. καὶ τί δεῖ τῶν ἄλλων μεμνήσθαι; οὐδὲ γὰρ βοῦς πρὸς τὰ ἀναγκαιότατα καὶ χρησιμώτατα τῶν ἐν τῷ βίῳ γεγωνῶς, ἄροτον<sup>1</sup> γῆς προετοιμαζομένης εἰς σπορὰν
- [284] καὶ πάλιν δραγμάτων συγκομισθέντων | ἀλοητὸν εἰς καρποῦ κάθαρσιν, τότε καταξεύγνυται, τὴν τοῦ κόσμου γενέθλιον ἑορτάζων. οὕτως ἄρα διὰ πάντων τὸ ἱεροπρεπὲς αὐτῆς πεφοίτηκε.
- 71 XVII. Τοσοῦτου δ' ἀξιοῖ σεβασμοῦ τὴν ἐβδόμην,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἄροτρον.

<sup>a</sup> See App. pp. 624-625.

<sup>b</sup> The Deuteronomic version of the fourth commandment

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 67-71

easy activity ; while on the other hand the servants are not to refuse to entertain still higher hopes, but should find in the relaxation allowed after six days an ember or spark of freedom, and look forward to their complete liberation if they continue to serve well and loyally. But the result of this occasional submission of the free to do the menial offices of the slave, together with the immunity allowed to the slave, will be a step forward in human conduct towards the perfection of virtue, when both the seemingly distinguished and the meaner sort remember equality and repay to each other the debt incumbent on them. 68

But the holiday of 69 the Sabbath is given by the law not only to servants but also to the cattle, though there might well be a distinction. For servants are free by nature, no man being naturally a slave,<sup>a</sup> but the unreasoning animals are intended to be ready for the use and service of men and therefore rank as slaves. Yet all the same, though it is their proper business to carry burdens and undergo toils and labour for their owners, they obtain their respite on the seventh days. There is 70 no need to go through the rest of the list, when even the ox <sup>b</sup> who serves the most useful and indispensable purposes in human life, namely ploughing when the soil is prepared for the sowing, and again thrashing when the sheaves are brought in for the purging of the fruit, is then kept free from the yoke and enjoys the birthday festival of the world. So universally has the sanctity of the day extended its influence.

XVII. So high is the reverence which he assigns 71

(v. 14) has "nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle." So also LXX in Ex. xx. 10, though the Hebrew and E.V. have only "nor thy cattle."

PHILO

ὥστε καὶ ἄλλα ὅποσα ταύτης μετέχει τετίμηται παρ' αὐτῷ. κατὰ γοῦν ἕβδομον ἐνιαυτὸν αἰεὶ χρεωκοπίαν εἰσηγείται πένησιν ἐπικουρῶν καὶ τοὺς πλουσίους ἐπὶ φιλανθρωπίαν προκαλούμενος, ἵνα τῶν ἰδίων μεταδιδόντες ἀπόροις χρηστὰ καὶ περὶ αὐτῶν προσδοκῶσιν, εἰ γένοιτό τι πταῖσμα· πολλὰ δὲ τὰ ἀνθρώπινα καὶ οὐκ ἐπὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ὁ βίος ὀρμεῖ πνεύματος ἀστάτου τρόπον μεταβάλλων πρὸς 72 τὰ ἐναντία. καλὸν μὲν οὖν τὴν ἀπὸ δανειστῶν χάριν ἐπὶ πάντας φθάνειν χρεώστας· ἐπεὶ δ' οὐ πάντες πρὸς μεγαλοφροσύνην πεφύκασιν, ἀλλ' εἰσὶν ἥττους ἔνιοι χρημάτων ἢ οὐ σφόδρα εὐποροί, καὶ τούτους ἐδικαίωσεν εἰσφέρειν ἅ μὴ λυπήσει 73 διδόμενα. παρὰ γὰρ τῶν ὁμοεθνῶν εἰσπράττειν οὐκ ἔασας ἐφῆκε παρὰ τῶν ἄλλων κομίζεσθαι, τοὺς μὲν καλέσας εὐθυβόλως “ἀδελφούς,” ἵνα μηδεὶς φθονῇ τῶν ἰδίων ὡς ἂν ἐκ φύσεως συγκληρονόμοις ἀδελφοῖς, τοὺς δὲ μὴ ὁμοεθνεῖς, ὅπερ εἰκός, “ἀλλοτρίους” ὠνόμασεν. ἢ δ' ἀλλοτριότης ἀκοινωνήτων, εἰ μὴ καὶ ταύτην τις ὑπερβολαῖς ἀρετῶν μεθαρμόσαιτο πρὸς συγγενικὴν οἰκειότητα· συνόλως γὰρ ἐν ἀρεταῖς ἢ πολιτεία καὶ νόμοις, οἳ μόνον τὸ
 74 καλὸν ἀγαθὸν εἰσηγοῦνται. ὑπαίτιον δὲ τὸ

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xv. 1-3.

<sup>b</sup> Heinemann translates “weniger wohlhabend,” apparently taking χρημάτων as a genitive of respect. I think this is impossible.

<sup>c</sup> Meaning perhaps “which must not be allowed to grieve them.” Cf. Deut. xv. 10, “Thine heart shalt not be grieved (LXX οὐ λυπηθήσῃ) because the Lord will bless thee.”

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 71-74

to the seventh day that other things which share in the qualities of the number are honoured in his estimation. Thus he lays down a rule for cancellation of debts in every seventh year,<sup>a</sup> both as a succour to the poor and as a challenge to the rich to shew humanity, in order that by giving some share of their own to the needy they may expect to receive the same kindness themselves, if any disaster befall them. Human vicissitudes are manifold, and life is not always on the same anchorage, but is like an unsteady wind, ever veering round to the opposite quarter. Now the best course would be that the creditors' 72 liberality should be extended to all debtors. But since they are not all capable of showing magnanimity, some being under the dominion of their money<sup>b</sup> or not very well off, he laid down that they too should make a contribution, the sacrifice of which would not give them pain.<sup>c</sup> He does not allow them to 73 exact money from their fellow-nationals, but does permit the recovery of dues from the others.<sup>d</sup> He distinguishes the two by calling the first by the appropriate name of brethren, suggesting that none should grudge to give of his own to those whom nature has made his brothers and fellow-heirs. Those who are not of the same nation he describes as aliens,<sup>e</sup> reasonably enough, and the condition of the alien excludes any idea of partnership, unless indeed by a transcendancy of virtues he converts even it into a tie of kinship, since it is a general truth that common citizenship rests on virtues and laws which propound the morally beautiful as the sole good.<sup>f</sup> Now lending 74

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xv. 3.

<sup>e</sup> E.V. "foreigner."

<sup>f</sup> See App. p. 625.

PHILO

δανείζειν ἐπὶ τόκῳ· δανείζεται γάρ τις οὐ περιουσία ζῶν, ἀλλὰ δηλονότι χρεῖος ὢν, ὃς<sup>1</sup> ἐπαναγκαζόμενος τόκους τοῖς ἀρχαίοις προσαποτίνειν ἀπορώτατος ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἂν γένοιτο καὶ νομίσας ὠφελεῖσθαι ἔτι βλάπτεται καθάπερ τὰ ὀλιγόφρονα τῶν ζῶων τῷ 75 παρόντι δελέατι. σοὶ δ' εἶποιμ' ἄν, ὦ δανειστά· τί κοινωνία τρόπον ἀκοινωνήτον συσκιάζεις; τί δὲ τῷ μὲν δοκεῖν εἶναι χρηστὸς καὶ φιλόανθρωπος προσ-ποιῆ, ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἔργοις ἀπανθρωπίαν ἐπιδείκνυσαι καὶ δεινὴν σκαιότητα, πλείω ὢν ἔδωκας ἀναπράττων καὶ ἔστιν ὅπου διπλάσιον, πενιχρότερον ἀ-76 εργαζόμενος τὸν πένητα; τοιγάρτοι συναλαγῆ μὲν οὐδεῖς, ὅταν ὀρεχθεῖς πλειόνων προσσυναποβάλης [285] καὶ τὰ ὄντα, πάντες | δ' ἐφήδονται τοκογλύφον καὶ ὀβολοστάτην καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ὀνομάζοντες, ὡς ἔφεδρον ἀλλοτρίων κακῶν καὶ τὴν ἐτέρων ἀτυχίαν 77 ἰδίαν κρίνοντα εὐτυχίαν. ἀλλὰ πηρόν,<sup>2</sup> ὡς ἔφη τις, ἢ κακία, καὶ ὁ δανείζων τυφλός, τὸν χρόνον τῆς ἀποδόσεως οὐ βλέπων, ἐν ᾧ μόλις ἢ οὐδ' ὅλως ὢν ἐκ πλεονεξίας τεύξεσθαι προσεδόκησεν ἐφίξεται.
78 οὗτος μὲν οὖν διδότης δίκας τῆς φιλαργυρίας, ἃ προήκατο μόνον κομιζόμενος,<sup>3</sup> ἵνα μὴ ἀτυχίας ἀν-θρώπων ἐργάζεταιται προσοδεύόμενος ἐξ ὧν οὐ προσῆκεν· οἱ δὲ χρεῶσται τῆς ἀπὸ τῶν νόμων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὡς.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πονηρόν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. μὴ κομιζόμενος.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxii. 25, Lev. xxv. 35-37, Deut. xxiii. 19; in the last passage lending money on interest to a foreigner is sanctioned.

<sup>b</sup> The source of the quotation is not known.

<sup>c</sup> ἐργάζεταιται ἀτυχίας could in itself mean "create or produce misfortunes," as Heinemann seems to take it, though we should expect ἀνθρώποις, but the point is rather that he uses people's misfortunes. ἐργάζεσθαι, to "trade" or "make money on interest is a blameworthy action,<sup>a</sup> for a person who borrows is not living on a superabundance of means, but is obviously in need, and since he is compelled to pay the interest as well as the capital, he must necessarily be in the utmost straits. And while he thinks he is being benefited by the loan, he is actually like senseless animals suffering further damage from the bait which is set before him. I ask you, Sir Moneylender, why do you 75 disguise your want of a partner's feeling by pretending to act as a partner? Why do you assume outwardly a kindly and charitable appearance but display in your actions inhumanity and a savage brutality, exacting more than you lend, sometimes double, reducing the pauper to further depths of poverty? And therefore no one sympathizes when 76 in your eagerness for larger gains you lose your capital as well. In their glee all call you extortioner and money-grubber and other similar terms, you who have lain in wait for the misfortunes of others, and regarded their ill-luck as your own good luck. It has 77 been said<sup>b</sup> that vice has no sense of sight; so too the moneylender is blind, and has no vision of the time of repayment, when it will hardly be possible, if at all, to obtain what he has expected to gain by his greed. Such a person may well pay the penalty 78 of his avarice by receiving back merely what he provided, and learn not to make a trade of other people's misfortunes<sup>c</sup> and enrich himself in improper ways. And the borrowers should be granted the privilege money," is common enough, and there is a good parallel of this use with the accusative in Demosthenes, p. 794 τὰ τῶν ἄλλων κακὰ τοῦτον τρέφει . . . ταῦτα γεωργεῖ, ταῦτα ἐργάζεται. (The genitive with ἀπό, or the dative, seems to be commoner, and perhaps we might read ἀπ' ἀρυχίας or ἀρυχίαις.)

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 74-78

PHILO

φιλανθρωπίας ἀξιούσθωσαν, τόκους καὶ ἐπιτοκίας μὴ τελούντες, αὐτὸ δὲ μόνον τὸ ἀρχαῖον ἀποτινύντες· πάλιν γὰρ ἐν καιροῖς τὸν αὐτὸν ἔρανον ἀνταποτίσουςι τοῖς συμβάλλουσιν ἀμειβόμενοι ταῖς ἴσαις ὠφελείαις τοὺς χάριτος ἄρξαντας.

- 79 XVIII. Τοιαῦτα διαταξάμενος ἐξῆς ἀναγράφει νόμον ἡμερότητος καὶ φιλανθρωπίας μεστόν. ἔάν, φησί, πραθῆ σοί τις τῶν ἀδελφῶν, ἐξ ἔτη δουλευέτω, τῷ δὲ ἐβδόμῳ προῖκα ἐλεύθερος ἀφίεσθω.
- 80 πάλιν “ἀδελφὸν” τὸν ὁμόφυλον εἶπεν ὑποσπείρων τῇ τοῦ κεκτημένου ψυχῇ διὰ τῆς προσρήσεως τὴν πρὸς τὸν ὑπήκοον συγγένειαν, ἵνα μὴ ὡς ξένου, πρὸς ὃν οὐδὲν φίλτρον ἐστὶν εὐνοίας, κατολιγωρῇ, φιλοΐκειον δέ τι προπεπονητῶς πάθος ἐκ διδασκαλίας, ἣν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος ὑπηχεῖ, μὴ ἀγανακτῆ μέλλοντος ἐλευθεροῦσθαι. τοὺς γὰρ τοιοῦτους δούλους μὲν ὀνομάζεσθαι συμβέβηκε, θῆτας δὲ τῷ ὄντι εἶναι τῶν ἀναγκαίων χάριν ὑπηρετοῦντας, καὶ μυριάκις αὐτεξούσιον δυναστείαν καὶ δεσποτείαν
- 82 ἀπειλώσιν τινες κατ’ αὐτῶν· οὗς τιθασευτέον, ἐπιλέγοντας τὰ χρηστὰ ἐκεῖνα τοῦ νόμου παραγγέλματα· μισθωτός ἐστίν, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, ὁ λεγόμενος δούλος, καὶ αὐτὸς ἄνθρωπος ὢν, ἔχων πρὸς σὲ τὴν ἀνωτάτω συγγένειαν, ἔπειτα καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ αὐτοῦ

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xv. 12, which follows the passage discussed in §§ 71-73, from which the prohibition of usury was a digression. The limitation of slavery is also enforced in Ex. xxi. 2. But the use of the word “brother” shews that it is Deuteronomy which he has in mind.

<sup>b</sup> For ὑπηχεῖν see note on De Som. i. 164.

<sup>c</sup> Or “hired labourers,” “wage-earners.” The word implies not merely occupation but a definite status, above the δούλος, but lower than the other citizens. In § 39 θητεύοντες are opposed to ἐλεύθεροι.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 78-82

of the law's charity, and pay neither simple nor compound interest, but just the principal. For later, as the proper occasion arise, they will make the same sacrifice to their present creditors and requite with equal assistance those who were the first to bestow the benefit.

XVIII. After ordinances of this sort he follows 79 them by laying down a law which breathes kindness and humanity throughout.<sup>a</sup> "If," he says, "one of your brethren is sold to you, let him continue in slavery for six years but in the seventh be set free without payment." Here again he uses the term 80 brother of a fellow-national, and by this name indirectly sows in the soul of the owner the thoughts of his close relationship to the person in his power. It bids him not despise him as a stranger who has no charm to win his affection, but allow the lesson which the holy word suggests<sup>b</sup> to create a preliminary sense of kinship, and thus feel no resentment at his approaching liberation. For people in this position, 81 though we find them called slaves, are in reality labourers<sup>c</sup> who undertake the service just to procure themselves the necessaries of life, however much some may bluster about the rights of absolute power which they exercise over them. <sup>d</sup>We must abate 82 their truculence by repeating these excellent injunctions of the law. The man whom you call a slave, my friend, is a hired person, himself too a man, ultimately<sup>e</sup> your kinsman, further of the same

<sup>a</sup> §§ 82-85 are a homily on Deut. xv. 12-18.

<sup>e</sup> ἀνωτάτω = "if you go right up to the beginning," "ultimately" or "primarily," as suits the context. So in § 233 and very probably in § 65. Cf. Mos. i. 314, he who kills a man is guilty διὰ τὴν ἀνωτάτω καὶ κωτὴν συγγένειαν. Heinemann in "höchsten Sinne" seems to me to miss the sense.

PHILO

- ἔθνους, τάχα δὲ καὶ φυλέτης καὶ δημότης, ἐνδείας 83 χάριν εἰς τουτὶ τὸ σχῆμα ὑπηγμένους. ἀνελὼν οὖν ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπίβουλον κακόν, ἀλαζονείαν, ὡς μισθωτῶ προσφέρου, τὰ μὲν διδούς, τὰ δὲ καὶ λαμβάνων· παρέξει μὲν οὖν ἐκεῖνος ἀοκνότατα τὰς ὑπηρεσίας αἰεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ, μηδὲν ὑπερτιθέμενος, ἀλλὰ φθάνων τὰς σὰς ἐπικελεύσεις τάχει καὶ προθυμία· σὺ δ' ἀντιδίδου τὰς τροφὰς καὶ ἐσθῆτα καὶ τὴν ἄλλην ἐπιμέλειαν, μὴ καταζεύξας ὡς ζῶον ἄλογον μηδὲ πλείοσι καὶ βαρυτέροις τῆς δυνάμεως ἄχθεσι πιέζων μηδ' ὑβρίζων μηδὲ ἀπειλαῖς καὶ [286] ἐπανατάσσειν εἰς | χαλεπὰς δυσθυμίας ἐφελκό-μενος, ἀλλ' ἀναχωρήσεις διδούς καὶ ἀνέσεις μεμετρημένας· τὸ γὰρ “μηδὲν ἄγαν” ἐπὶ πάντων ἄριστον καὶ μάλιστα πρὸς οἰκέτας δεσποτῶν.
 84 ὑπηρετηθεῖς μέντοι χρόνον ἀνταρκέστατον, ἕξα-ετίαν, ὅταν ὁ ἱερώτατος ἀριθμὸς ἐνίστασθαι μέλλῃ, τὸ ἕβδομον ἔτος, ἐλεύθερον μεθίεσο τὸν ἐλεύθερον φύσει μηδὲν ἐνδοιάσας, ἀλλ', ὡ γενναῖε, καὶ γε-γηθῶς δίδου τὴν χάριν, ὅτι καιρὸν ἔλαβες τὸ ζῶον ἄριστον, ἄνθρωπον, ἐν τοῖς μεγίστοις εὐεργετηῆσαι· δούλω γὰρ οὐκ ἔστι μείζον ἐλευθερίας ἀγαθόν.
 85 χαίρων οὖν καὶ προσεπιδαιψίλευσαί τι τῶν ἰδίων ἀφ' ἐκάστου μέρους τῆς κτήσεως ἐφοδιάσας τὸν εὐεργετηθέντα· σὸν γὰρ ἐγκώμιον, εἰ μὴ πένης ὢν ἀπαλλάττοιο τῆς οἰκίας, ἀλλὰ τῶν εἰς τὰναγκαῖα

<sup>a</sup> This is a case in which Philo seems to adapt the law to contemporary conditions. We do not hear of δῆμοι in old Israel, but apparently a classification into φυλαί and δῆμοι was in force in Alexandria. See App. p. 625.

<sup>b</sup> See Deut. xv. 18, “It shall not seem hard to thee when thou lettest him go free from thee.”

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 82-85

nation, perhaps also of the same tribe and ward,<sup>a</sup> reduced to the guise which he now adopts by actual need. Expel, then, from your soul that evil and 83 malignant thing, arrogance. Deal with him as your hired servant, both in what you give and what you take. As for the latter, he will render you his services without the slightest backwardness always and everywhere without procrastination, and anticipate your orders with zeal and rapidity. And you must give him in return food and raiment and take care for his other needs. Do not harness him like an unreasoning animal nor oppress him with weights too heavy and too numerous for his capacity, nor heap insults upon him, nor drag him down by threats and menaces into cruel despondency. Rather grant him time and places for respite according to some regular rule. For while "not too much of anything" is an excellent maxim in every case, it is particularly so as between masters and servants. <sup>b</sup> When however 84 you have received his services for the fullest term required, namely, six years, and when the truly sacred number of the seventh year is about to begin, grant his freedom to him who is naturally free and grant it without hesitation, my friend, and rejoice that you have found an opportunity of benefiting the highest of living creatures, man, in his chief interest. For a slave can have no greater boon than freedom. <sup>c</sup> Be 85 glad, too, to crown your benefaction by bestowing something of each of your various kinds of property to start him on his way. For it is a praise to you that he should not leave your home penniless but well stocked in resources to procure what is necessary.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid. v. 13, "when thou lettest him go free from thee thou shalt not let him go empty."

PHILO

ἀφορμῶν εὐπορηκῶς, ἵνα μὴ πάλιν ὑπ' ἐνδείας εἰς τὴν ἀρχαίαν ἀτυχίαν ὑπαχθῆ δουλεύειν ἀναγκασθεῖς διὰ σπάνιν τῶν περὶ δίαιταν καὶ ἡ σὴ χάρις ἀναιρεθῆ. πενήτων μὲν δὴ πέρι τοσαῦτα.

- 86 XIX. Κελεύει δ' ἐξῆς ἀργὴν τὴν χώραν εἶναι ἔτει ἐβδόμῳ, διὰ πολλά· πρῶτον μὲν, ἵνα τὴν ἐβδομάδα τιμῆση κατὰ πάντας χρόνους ἡμερῶν καὶ μηνῶν καὶ ἐνιαυτῶν· ἐβδόμη τε γὰρ πᾶσα ἡμέρα ἱερά, τὸ καλούμενον παρ' Ἑβραίοις σάββατον, μηνῶν τε ὁ ἔβδομος κατὰ πᾶν ἔτος ἑορτῶν ἔλαχε τὴν μεγίστην, ὥστ' εἰκότως καὶ ὁ ἔβδομος ἐνιαυτὸς τοῦ περὶ τὸν ἀριθμὸν σεβασμοῦ τυχῶν ἐκτετίμηται.
- 87 δεύτερον δ' ἐκεῖνο· μὴ πάντα,<sup>1</sup> φησίν, ἴσθι τοῦ κέρδους, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκῶν ζημίαν ὑπόμεινον, ἵνα καὶ τὴν ἀκούσιον βλάβην, εἴ ποτε γένοιτο, ῥαδίως ἐνέγκῃς, ἀλλὰ μὴ ὡς ἐπὶ καινῷ καὶ ξένῳ δυσχεραίνων ἀθυμῆσῃς. εἰσὶ γὰρ τῶν πλουσίων οὕτως ἀτυχεῖς τὰς γνώμας τινές, ὥστε ἀπορίας ἐπισχούσης στένουσι καὶ κατηφοῦσιν οὐδὲν ἦττον ἢ εἰ
- 88 πᾶσαν ἀφηρέθησαν τὴν οὐσίαν. ἀλλὰ τῶν Μωυσέως ὁμιλητῶν ὅσοι φοιτηταὶ γνήσιοι καλοῖς ἐνασκούμενοι νομίμοις ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐθίζονται τὰς ἐνδείας εὐμαρῶς ὑπομένειν διὰ τοῦ καὶ τὴν ἀρετῶσαν χώραν εἶναι ἀργὴν, ἅμα καὶ μεγαλοφροσύνην ἀναδιδασκόμενοι καὶ<sup>2</sup> τὰς ὁμολογουμένας

<sup>1</sup> The phrase "do not belong in all things to lucre," seems to me strange, and as the mss. vary between πάντα, φησίν, ἴσθι and παντάπασιν ἴσθι, one might be inclined to read, as Cohn thinks possible, παντάπασιν, φησί. Nicetas's paraphrase, however, ἵνα διδάξῃ μὴ πάντα εἶναι τοῦ κέρδους is an argument for the form here printed.

<sup>2</sup> Mangey proposed to correct καὶ to διὰ τοῦ. Heinemann suggests <διὰ τοῦ> καὶ. See note a, p. 362.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 85-88

Otherwise the same thing may happen again. He may be reduced by need to his old unhappy plight and compelled to undertake slavery again through lack of the means of life, and the boon you bestowed upon him may be cancelled. So much for the poor.

XIX. Then follows a commandment to let the 86 land lie fallow during the seventh year.<sup>a</sup> There are several reasons for this. In the first place he wished to give seven its honourable position in all the series in which time is measured, namely, days, months and years. For every seventh day is holy, a Sabbath as the Hebrews call it, and it is in the seventh month in every year that the chief of all the feasts falls, and therefore naturally the seventh year also has been marked out for a share in the dignity which belongs to the number. And there is this second reason. 87 Do not, he says, be entirely under the power of lucre, but submit voluntarily to some loss, so that you may find it easy to bear some involuntary injury, if ever it should occur, instead of resenting it as some strange and alien misfortune and falling into despair. For some of the rich are so poor-spirited that when adversity overtakes them, they are as mournful and depressed as if they had been robbed of their whole substance. But among 88 the followers of Moses all who have been his true disciples, trained in his excellent institutions from their earliest years, by allowing even rich territory to lie idle inure themselves to bear privations calmly and by the lesson of magnanimity thus learned voluntarily and deliberately to let even undoubted

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxiii. 11, Lev. xxv. 2 ff.

PHILO

προσόδους μόνον οὐκ ἐκ τῶν χειρῶν ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ 89 μεθιέναι. τρίτον κακεῖνο αἰνίττεσθαι μοι [287] δοκεῖ, τὸ μηδενὶ προσήκειν τὸ | παράπαν ἀνθρώ-πους ἄχθει βαρύνειν καὶ πιέζειν· εἰ γὰρ τοῖς μέρεσι τῆς γῆς, ἃ μῆτε ἡδονῆς μῆτε ἀλγηδόνας πέφυκε κοινωνεῖν, μεταδοτέον ἀναπαύλης, πῶς οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀνθρώποις, οἷς οὐ μόνον αἴσθησις πρόσσεστιν ἢ κοινὴ καὶ τῶν ἀλόγων ζώων, ἀλλὰ καὶ λογισμὸς ἐξαίρετος, ᾧ τὰ ἐκ πόνων καὶ καμάτων ὀδυνηρὰ 90 τρανοτέραις φαντασίαις ἐντυποῦται; παυσάσθωσαν οὖν οἱ λεγόμενοι δεσπότες τῶν ἐπὶ δούλοις σφοδρῶν καὶ δυστυχομονητῶν ἐπιταγμάτων, ἃ καὶ τὰ σώματα κατακλᾶ βιαζόμενα καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς πρὸ τῶν σω-91 μάτων ἀπαγορεύειν ἀναγκάζει. φθόνος γὰρ οὐδεὶς προστάττειν τὰ μέτρια, δι' ὧν καὶ ὑμεῖς τῆς προσηκούσης ὑπηρεσίας ἀπολαύσετε καὶ οἱ θεράποντες εὐφόρως τὰ κελευσθέντα δράσουσι καὶ τὰς δια-κονίας οὐ πρὸς ὀλίγον ἄτε προκαμόντες καὶ (εἰ δέ τάλθηθές εἰπεῖν) ἐν τοῖς πόνοις προγηράσαντες ὑπομενοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς μήκιστον ἀθλητῶν τρόπον ἀνηβῶντες, οὐ τῶν εἰς πολυσαρκίαν παινομένων, ἀλλ' οἷς ἔθος ἐγγυμνάζεσθαι διὰ ξηρῶν ἰδρώτων πρὸς τὴν τῶν περὶ τὸν βίον ἀναγκαίων καὶ χρησί-92 μων κτῆσιν. παυσάσθωσαν καὶ οἱ τῶν

---

<sup>a</sup> The correction suggested by Mangey and Heinemann (see note 2, p. 360) would make sacrificing revenues parallel to letting the land lie idle. I think the text is better as it stands. Leaving the land idle teaches the poorer to stand the privation, and the richer to sacrifice wealth voluntarily.

<sup>b</sup> The allusion, which neither Cohn nor Heinemann notices, is to Plato, Phaedrus 239 c, where ξηροὶ ἰδρώτες are coupled with πόνοι ἀνδρείοι, and contrasted with ἀπαλή καὶ ἀνανδρος 362

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 88-92

sources of wealth fall almost from their very hands.<sup>a</sup>

There is also, I think, this third suggestion, that men should absolutely abstain from putting any oppressive burden upon anyone else. For if the different parts of the earth which cannot share in any sensations of pain or pleasure yet have to be given respite, how much more must this be the case with men who not only possess the sense which is common also to the irrational animals but even the special gift of reason through which the painful feelings caused by toil and labour stamp and record themselves in mental pictures, more vivid than mere sensation! Let so-called masters therefore cease from imposing upon their slaves severe and scarcely endurable orders, which break down their bodies by violent usage and force the soul to collapse before the body. You need not grudge to moderate your orders. The result will be that you yourselves will enjoy proper attention and that your servants will carry out their orders readily and accept their duties not just for a short time to be abandoned through wearying too quickly, and, indeed, we may say, as if old age had prematurely overtaken them in their labours. On the contrary, they will prolong their youth to the utmost, like athletes, not those who fatten themselves up into full fleshiness, but those who regularly train themselves by "dry sweatings"<sup>b</sup> to acquire what is necessary and useful for life. So too let rulers of cities cease from δίατρα. The commentators take the phrase as meaning sweats in the gymnasium as opposed to sweating in the baths, and so with the verb ξηραλοιφεῖν. Philo, however, does not use it in this sense, but for toil-enduring people in general who are in his eyes the true athletes. On the depreciation of athletes see App. pp. 625-626.

PHILO

- πόλεων ἡγεμόνες φόροις καὶ δασμοῖς συνεχέσι καὶ μεγάλοις αὐτὰς ἐκτραχηλίζοντες, οἱ τὰ μὲν ἴδια ταμεῖα πληροῦσιν, ἅμα τοῖς χρήμασι καὶ τὰς ἀνελευθέρους κακίας καὶ τὸν σύμπαντα βίον αὐτῶν
- 93 ῥυπαινούσας θησαυροφυλακοῦντες. ἀηλεεστάτους γὰρ καὶ γέμοντας ἀπανθρωπίας τοὺς τῶν φόρων ἐκλογεῖς ἐπίτηδες αἰροῦνται τὰς πρὸς πλεονεξίαν ἀφορμὰς αὐτοῖς ἐνδιδόντες· οἱ δὲ τῇ φυσικῇ σκαιότητι προσειληφότες καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἐπιταγμάτων δε-σποτικῶν ἐκεχειρίαν καὶ πάντα ὑπὲρ ἀρεσκείας τῆς ἐκείνων ἐγνωκότες πράττειν οὐδὲν παραλείπουσι τῶν χαλεπωτάτων, ἐπιείκειαν καὶ ἡμερότητα μηδ'
- 94 ὄναρ εἰδότες· τοιγάρτοι πάντα φύρουσι καὶ συγ-χέουσι ἀργυρολογοῦντες, ὡς μὴ μόνον ἐκ τῶν οὐσιῶν ἀναπράττειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκ τῶν σωμαίων, ὕβρεσι, αἰκίαις, πρὸς ἀποτομίαν κεκαιουρρημέναις βασάνοις· ἦδη δὲ τινὰς ἀκούω μηδὲ νεκρῶν ἀποσχέσθαι δι' ἀγριότητα καὶ παρηλλαγμένην λύτταν, οἱ ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον ἐθηνιώθησαν, ὡς καὶ τύπτειν ὑστρίχισι τολμῶν τοὺς τεθνεῶτας·
- 95 καὶ ἐπειδὴ τις τῆς ἄγαν ὠμότητος κατεμέμφετο,<sup>1</sup> εἰ μηδ' ὁ θάνατος, ἢ κακῶν ἀπάντων ἀπαλλαγὴ καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς τελευτῇ, περιποιήσει τοῖς ἐκποδῶν τὸ ἀνύβριστον, ἀλλ' ἀντὶ ταφῆς καὶ τῶν νομιζομένων αἰκίας ὑπομενοῦσιν, ἀπολογία χείροني κατηγορίας ἐχρῶντο φάσκοντες προπηλακίζειν τοὺς τεθνεῶτας, οὐχ ὑπὲρ τοῦ κωφῆν καὶ ἀναίσθητον κόνιν ὑβρίζειν
- [288] —ἀνωφελές γάρ—, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ | τοὺς ἢ κατὰ γένος ἢ καθ' ἑταιρίαν προσήκοντας εἰς οἶκτον

<sup>1</sup> At this point R, as we have it, breaks off.

<sup>a</sup> I take αὐτῶν to refer to πόλεις, Heinemann apparently to the ἡγεμόνες.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 92-95

racking them with taxes and tolls as heavy as they are constant. Such rulers both fill their own coffers and while hoarding money hoard also illiberal vices which defile the whole of civic life.<sup>a</sup> For they purposely choose as tax-gatherers the most ruthless of men, brimful of inhumanity, and put into their hands resources for overreaching. These persons add to their natural brutality the immunity they gain from their masters' instructions, and in their determination to accommodate every action to those masters' pleasure they leave no severity untried, however barbarous, and banish mercy and gentleness even from their dreams. And therefore in carrying out their collecting they create universal chaos and confusion and apply their exactions not merely to the property of their victims but also to their bodies, on which they inflict insults and outrages and forms of torture quite original in their savagery.

Indeed, I have heard of persons who, actuated by abnormal frenzy and cruelty, have not even spared the dead, persons who become so utterly brutalized that they venture even to flog corpses with whips. And when anyone censured the extraordinary cruelty shewn in refusing to allow even death, the release and in very truth the "end" of all ills, to procure freedom from insult for those who are now beyond its reach, and in causing them to undergo outrage instead of the normal rites of burial, the line of defence adopted was worse than the accusation. They treated the dead, they said, with such contempt not for the useless purpose of insulting the deaf and senseless dust but in order to excite the pity of those who were related to them by birth or some other tie of fellowship, and thus

PHILO

ἀγαγεῖν καὶ προκαλέσασθαι λύτρα καταθέσθαι τῶν 96 σωμάτων ὑστάτην ἀπονείμαντας χάριν. XX. εἶτα, ὦ φαυλότατοι πάντων ἀνθρώπων, εἶπομι' ἂν ἀν-τοῖς, ἃ διδάσκετε, οὐ προεμάθετε; ἢ προκαλείσθαι μὲν εἰς ἔλεον ἐτέρους, εἰ καὶ δι' ὠμοτάτων ἔργων, οἴδατε, τὰ δὲ χρηστὰ καὶ φιλόανθρωπα πάντα τῆς ἑαυτῶν ψυχῆς ἐκτέμησθε; καὶ ταῦτα μὴ ἀποροῦντες ἀγαθῶν ὑφηγητῶν καὶ μάλιστα τῶν ἡμε-τέρων νόμων, οἳ καὶ τὴν γῆν μεθείσαν φόρων τῶν ἐτησίων ἀνεσι καὶ ἀνάπαυλαν αὐτῇ παρασχόντες; 97 αὕτη δέ, καίτοι δοκοῦσα ἄψυχος εἶναι, πρὸς ἀμοιβὴν εὐτρέπισται καὶ χάριτος ἀντίδοσιν, ἣν ἔλαβε δωρεὰν ἀντεκτίνειν ἐπειγομένη· τυχοῦσα γὰρ ἀδείας ἔτει ἐβδόμῳ καὶ μὴ πονηθείσα, σύμπαντα δὲ τὸν τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ κύκλον ἀπελευθεριά-σασα, τῷ μετὰ ταῦτα διπλασίους, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ 98 πολυπλασίους, ὑπ' εὐφορίας<sup>1</sup> ἦνεγκε καρπούς. τὸ παραπλήσιον μέντοι καὶ τοὺς ἀλείπτας ἔστιν ἰδεῖν δρῶντας ἐπὶ τῶν ἀθλητῶν· ὅταν γὰρ αὐτοὺς συγκροτήσωσιν ἐπαλλήλοις καὶ συνεχέσι γυμνασίαις, πρὶν εἰς ἄκρον καμεῖν, ἀνακτῶνται παρέχοντες ἀνέσεις οὐ μόνον τῶν ἐν ἀθλήσει πόνων ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν πρὸς ἐδωδὴν καὶ πόσιν, τὸ σκληροδίατον χαλῶντες εἰς τε ψυχῆς εὐθυμίαν καὶ εὐπάθειαν 99 σώματος. καὶ οὐ δήπου διδάσκαλοι ῥαθυμίας καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑπὲρ εὐφορίας ἢ ὑπὲρ ἐλευθερίας.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Philo thinks of the collectors as instructing the relatives on the duty of shewing pity, which they are incompetent to do, as they have no conception of pity themselves. A simpler sense might be obtained, particularly if the question marks are dropped and οἳ read for ἦ—"Vilest of men, 366

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 95-99

urge them to ransom the bodies of their friends by making a final gift in payment for them. XX. Foolish, foolish people, I would say to them, have you 96 not first learnt the lesson which you teach, or are you competent to induce others to shew pity, even with the cruellest actions before them,<sup>a</sup> when you have excinded all kindly and humane feelings from your own souls? And this you have done, though you had no lack of good advisers, particularly in our laws, which have relieved even the land from its yearly tolls and provided it with a rest and respite. This 97 land, though to all appearance a lifeless thing, is put into a condition to make its requital and to repay a boon which it received as a free gift but is now eager to return. For the immunity which it has during the seventh year and its rest from labour and complete freedom during the whole annual cycle give it a fertility in the next year which causes it to bear twice as much or even many times as much as in the previous years. We may also note that the trainers 98 of athletes take much the same line in dealing with their pupils. When they have thoroughly drilled them by an unbroken course of exercises, before they reach the point of exhaustion, they give them a fresh lease of life by providing relaxations, not only from the labour of the training itself but from the dietary regulations as to food and drink, the hardships of which they abate in order to make the soul cheerful and the body comfortable. And we 99 must not suppose that here we have the professional trainers to hard work appearing as instructors in you have not first learnt the lesson which you teach; you know how to evoke pity, though with deeds of great cruelty, yet you have excinded . . .”

PHILO

- τρυφῆς εἰσιν οἷς ἐπάγγελμα τὸ πρὸς πόνους ἀλείφειν, ἀλλὰ μεθόδῳ καὶ τέχνῃ προσποιούσιν ἰσχύν κραταιοτέραν ἰσχύϊ καὶ δυνάμεις σθεναρωτέρας δυνάμεισι, τὴν ῥώμην ἀνέσει καὶ ἐπιτάσει καθάπερ 100 ἁρμονίαν συναυξήσασθαι. ἔμαθον δὲ παρὰ τῆς πανσόφου ταῦτα φύσεως, ἥτις τὸ ἐπίπονον καὶ καμα-τηρὸν τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν ἐπισταμένη διένειμε τὸν χρόνον εἰς ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτα, τῇ μὲν ἐγγήγορσιν, 101 νυκτὶ δ' ὕπνον παρασχοῦσα. φροντὶς γὰρ αὐτὴν οἶα μητέρα κηδεμονικωτάτην εἰσήλθε τοῦ μὴ τὰ ἔγγονα ἀποτρύχεσθαι· μεθ' ἡμέραν γὰρ τὰ σώματα διανίστησι καὶ πρὸς τὰς τοῦ βίου χρείας καὶ ὑπηρεσίας ἀπάσας ἐγείρει κακίζουσα τοὺς ἀργῶ καὶ ἀβροδιαίτῳ βίῳ σχολάζειν ἐθιζομένους, νύκτωρ δὲ καθάπερ ἐν πολέμῳ τὸ ἀνακλητικὸν ὑποσημήνασα πρὸς ἀνάπαυλαν καλεῖ καὶ τὴν τῶν σωμάτων 102 ἐπιμέλειαν. οἱ δ' ἀποθέμενοι πολὺ βᾶρος πραγ-ματειῶν, ὅσον ἔωθεν εἰς ἑσπέραν ἦσαν ἐπηχθισμένοι, καὶ ἐπανελθόντες οἴκαδε πρὸς ἡσυχίαν τρέπονται καὶ καταδαρθόντες ὕπνω βαθεῖ τὸν μεθημερινὸν πόνον ἐκνοσηλεύονται, καὶ πάλιν νεαλεῖς καὶ ἀκμῆτες γενόμενοι σπεύδουσιν ἕκαστοι 103 πρὸς τὰ οἰκεῖα καὶ συνήθη. τὸν δόλιχον τοῦτον ἢ φύσις διὰ τε ὕπνου καὶ ἐγγρηγόρσεως ἀπένειμεν | [289] ἀνθρώποις, ἢ ἐν μέρει μὲν ἐνεργῶσιν, ἐν μέρει δ' ἀτρεμίζοντες ἐτοιμότερα καὶ εὐκινητότερα τὰ τοῦ σώματος ἰσχωσι μέρη.
- 104 XXI. Πρὸς ἅπερ ἀπιδὼν ὁ τοὺς νόμους ἡμῖν προφητεύσας ἄνεσιν ἐκήρυξε τῇ χώρᾳ δι' ἕξαιτίας γεωπόνους ἐπισχῶν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐχ ἕνεκα ὧν εἶπον αὐτὸ μόνον τοῦτ' εἰσηγήσατο, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 99-104

slackness and luxury ; they are following a scientific method by which further strength and power is given to what is already strong and powerful, and vigour enhanced as though it were a harmony by alternating relaxation with tension. This truth I have learnt 100 from the never-failing wisdom of nature who, knowing how toil-worn and weary our race becomes, divided our time into day and night, giving the hours of wakefulness to one and of sleep to the other. For, 101 most careful of mothers, her anxious thought was that her children should not be exhausted. In the daylight she wakens our bodies and stimulates them to carry out all the offices and demands of life, and reproaches those who are making it their practice to loiter through life in an idle and voluptuous way. But at night she sounds the recall as in war and summons them to repose and take care of their bodies. And 102 men casting off all the sore burden of affairs which has lain heavy upon them from morn till eve, turn homewards and betake themselves to rest, and in the deep sleep which falls upon them cast off the distempers of their daylight troubles, and then again unwearied and full of fresh vigour hasten eagerly each to his own familiar occupation. This double 103 course nature has assigned to men by means of sleeping and waking with the result that by alternating activity with inaction they have increased readiness and nimbleness in the various parts of their bodies.

XXI. These considerations the prophetic author 104 of our laws had before his eyes when he proclaimed a rest for the land and made the husbandman stay his work after six years. But he gave this enactment not only on the grounds which I have mentioned but also moved by that habitual kindness which he aims

PHILO

- συνήθους φιλανθρωπίας, ἣν ἅπαντι μέρει τῆς νομοθεσίας συνυφαίνειν ἀξιοῖ τοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσι ταῖς ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς κοινωνικὰ καὶ χρηστὰ ἐνσφραγιζόμενος ἦθη.
- 105 κελύει γὰρ τῷ ἐβδόμῳ ἔτει μηδὲν συγκλείειν χωρίον, ἀλλὰ πάντας ἀμπελῶνας καὶ ἐλαιῶνας ἀναπεπταμένους ἔαν καὶ τὰς ἄλλας κτήσεις ὅσαι σπαρτῶν εἰσιν ἢ δένδρων, ἵνα τοῖς ἀπαιτοματισθεῖσι καρποῖς οἱ πένητες ἀδεῶς χρῆσθαι δύνωνται μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον τῶν κεκτημένων.
- 106 ὅθεν τοῖς μὲν δεσπόταις οὐκ ἐφῆκεν ἐργάζεσθαι στοχασάμενος τοῦ μηδεμιᾶς λύπης αἴτιος αὐτοῖς γενέσθαι ὡς τὰ μὲν ἀναλώματα παρασχούσι, τὰς δ' ἀντὶ τούτων προσόδους μὴ λαμβάνουσι, τοὺς δ' ἀπόρους ὡς ἰδίων ἀπολαύειν τότε γοῦν τῶν ἀλλοτρίων εἶναι δοκούντων ἠξίωσε ταπεινοῦ σχήματος αὐτοὺς ἀπαλλάττων καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ μεταίταις ὄνειδῶν.
- 107 ἄρ' οὐκ ἀξίον ἐρασθῆναι τῶν νόμων, οἱ τοσαύτης γέμουσιν ἡμερότητας; δι' ἣν οἱ μὲν πλούσιοι διδάσκονται μεταδιδόναι καὶ κοινωνεῖν ὧν ἔχουσι, παρηγοροῦνται δ' οἱ πένητες, μὴ πάντοτε ταῖς τῶν εὐπόρων οἰκίαις ἐπιφοιτᾶν ἀναγκαζόμενοι πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν ὧν ἐνδεεῖς εἰσιν, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ὅτε καὶ προσοδεύομενοι καθάπερ ἐξ ἰδίων κτημάτων τοὺς ἀπαιτοματίζοντας, ὡς ἔφην, καρπούς.
- 108 χῆραι καὶ ὄρφανοὶ παῖδες καὶ ὅσοι ἄλλοι τῶν ἡμελημένων καὶ ἀφανῶν ἕνεκα τοῦ μὴ περιουσιάζειν τότε περιουσιάζουσι ταῖς τοῦ θεοῦ δωρεαῖς ἐξαπιναίως πεπλουτηκότες, ὃς αὐτοὺς πρὸς κοινωνίαν ἐκάλεσε τῶν κτητόρων ἐν τῷ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐβδόμης ἀριθμῷ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxiii. 11. In Lev. xxv. 6, 7 the produce of the seventh year is given as food for the household.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 104-109

at infusing into every part of his legislation, thereby impressing on the readers of the sacred scriptures the stamp of good and neighbourly customs. For he 105 forbids them to close up any field during the seventh year.<sup>a</sup> All olive-yards and vineyards are to be left wide open and so with the other kinds of property, whether of sown crops or orchard-trees, thus giving an unrestricted use of such fruits as are of natural growth to the poor quite as much, if not more so, than to the owners. Thus on the one hand he did 106 not allow the masters to do any work of tillage because he wished to avoid giving them the painful feeling that they had incurred the expenditure but did not receive the income in return, and on the other hand he thought fit that the poor should for this year at any rate enjoy as their own what appeared to belong to others, and in this way took from them any appearance of humiliation or possibility of being reproached as beggars. May not our passionate affec- 107 tion well go out to laws charged with such kindly feeling, which teaches the rich to give liberally and share what they have with others and encourages the poor not to be always dancing attendance on the houses of the wealthy, as though compelled to resort thither to make up their own deficiency, but sometimes also to come claiming a source of wealth in the fruits which, as I have said, develop untilled and which they can treat as their own ?

Widows and orphans and all others who are 108 neglected and ignored because they have no surplus of income have at this time such a surplus and find themselves suddenly affluent through the gifts of God, Who invites them to share with the owners under the sanction of the holy number seven. And 109

PHILO

- 109 καὶ ὅσοι μέντοι κτηνοτροφοῦσι, μετ' ἀδείας ἐπὶ χλοηφαγίας τὰ οἰκεῖα θρέμματα ἄγουσιν ἐκλεγόμενοι πεδία εὐχορτα καὶ ἐπιτηδειότατα ἐμβόσκεισθαι, καταχρώμενοι τῇ τῆς ἐκεχειρίας ἀδείᾳ· καὶ φθόνος οὐδεὶς ἀπαντάται<sup>1</sup> ἐκ τῶν δεσποτῶν ἅτε παλαιοτάτῳ ἔθει κεκρατημένων, ὃ σύντροφον ἐκ μακρῶν χρόνων γενόμενον εἰς φύσιν ἐκνενίκηκεν.
- 110 XXII. Ἀρχὴν ταύτην βαλλόμενος ὥσπερ θεμέλιόν τινα ἐπιεικείας καὶ φιλανθρωπίας ἐπτὰ ἑβδομάδας ἐτῶν συνθεῖς τὸ πεντηκοστὸν ὄλον ἀπέφηνεν ἱερόν, ἐξαίρετα καὶ πάντα διαφερόντως καλὰ νομοθετήσας ἐπ' αὐτῷ παρὰ τὰ κοινωνίαν
- 111 ἔχοντα.<sup>2</sup> πρῶτον μὲν τόδε· τὰς ἀλλοτριωθείσας κτήσεις οἶεται δεῖν ἀποδίδοσθαι τοῖς ἐξ ἀρχῆς κυρίοις, ἢν' αἱ κληρουχίαι τοῖς γένεσι διαφυλάτ-
- [290] τωνται | καὶ μηδεὶς τῶν λῆξιν εἰληχότων εἰς ἅπαν
- 112 στέρηται τῆς δώρεās. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ καιροὶ πολλάκις προσπίπτουσιν ἀβούλητοι, δι' οὓς ἀναγκάζονται τινες πιπράσκειν τὰ ἴδια, καὶ τῆς ἐν δέοντι χρείας τούτων προϋνόησε καὶ τοὺς ὠνουμένους ἐκώλυσε ἀπατᾶσθαι, τοῖς μὲν πιπράσκειν ἐφέεις, τοὺς δ' ἐφ'

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for ἀπαντᾶ ταῖς of M and ἐκ τῶν δεσποτῶν ἀπαντᾶ of F. (The latter he rejects on account of the harsh hiatus before ἅτε, but see on i. 90 (App.).)

<sup>2</sup> According to Cohn and Heinemann corrupt; see note b.

<sup>a</sup> For the year of Jubile (§§ 110-123) see Lev. xxv. 8-end.

<sup>b</sup> Cohn pronounces these words to be incurably corrupt and supposes them to express something like "confirming the sense of fellow-feeling." I do not think the meaning I have given to them, "those which have a nature common to the others" (and are not ἐξαίρετα), is impossible, though the nearest example I can find, iii. 182 μηδεμίαν ἔχοντα κοινωνίαν, is not quite analogous. For παρὰ cf. παρὰ ταύτας § 216, and for the antithesis ἐξαίρετον—κοινός § 190. Mangey's transindeed all stock-breeders feel at liberty to take out their own cattle in search of pasturage and to select meadow-land of good herbage and particularly suitable for grazing their beasts. Thus they take full advantage of the immunity secured by the time of freedom. And this is not opposed by any grudging on the master's side. They are under the sway of a very ancient custom, which through long familiarity has won its way to the standing of nature.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 109-112

XXII. While laying down this first foundation of 110 moderation and humanity, he built on it by adding years to the number of seven times seven and consecrated the whole of the fiftieth year.<sup>a</sup> This he made the subject of many special enactments, all of remarkable excellence, apart from those which are common to other seventh years.<sup>b</sup> The first of these 111 enactments is as follows. He considers that alienated estates ought to be restored to their original possessors in order that the apportionments should be secured to the families and that no one to whom they had been allotted should be altogether deprived of the grant.<sup>c</sup> For since times of adversity often arise 112 which make it necessary for some persons to sell their property, he made provision for the just needs of such persons and at the same time took steps to prevent the purchasers being deceived, by accompanying the permission to the vendors to sell with very clear instructions to the purchasers as to the lation, "supra ea quae ad vulgares annos pertinent," is not unlike mine except that he takes παρά = "beyond," and seems to see in κοινωνίαν the idea of ordinariness. If my view is right, the reference may be to Lev. xxv. 11, where the rules for the Sabbatical year are repeated, also to the liberation of slaves and remission of debts (cf. § 122).

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxv. 14-16.

- 113 οἷς ὠνήσονται μάλα σαφῶς ἀναδιδάξας. μὴ γὰρ δίδοτε, φησί, τὰς ἐπὶ παγκτησίᾳ τιμάς, ἀλλὰ τὰς πρὸς ἐνιαυτῶν ὠρισμένον ἀριθμόν, οἱ ἐντὸς εἰσι πεντηκονταετίας. οὐ γὰρ κτημάτων αἱ πράξεις ἀλλὰ καρπῶν ὀφείλουσιν εἶναι, διὰ δύο τἀναγκαιότατα· ἐν μὲν ὅτι σύμπασα ἡ χώρα κτῆμα κέκληται θεοῦ, τῶν δὲ θεοῦ κτημάτων οὐχ ὅσιον ἄλλους ἐπιγράφεσθαι δεσπότας· ἕτερον δὲ <ὅτι> λήξις ἀπονεύμηται ἐκάστῳ τῶν κληρούχων, ἧς στέρει-
- 114 σθαι τὸν λαχόντα οὐκ ἐδικαίωσεν ὁ νόμος. τὸν μὲν οὖν ἐντὸς τῆς πεντηκονταετίας δυνάμενον ἀναλαβεῖν τὰ οἰκεία ἢ τινα τῶν ἐγγυτάτῳ γένους ἀγγιστέων προκαλεῖται πάσῃ μηχανῇ κατατιθέναι ἢν ἔλαβε τιμὴν καὶ μὴ τῷ πριαμένῳ καθ' ὃν ἔδει
- 115 καιρὸν ὠφελήσαντι ζημίας αἴτιον γενέσθαι· τῷ δὲ ἀπόρως ἔχοντι συνεπάθησε καὶ μετέδωκεν ἐλέου τὴν ἀρχαίαν δωρησάμενος αὐθις περιουσίαν, δίχα τῶν κατ' εὐχὴν ἀφιερωθέντων ἀγρῶν ἐν τῇ τάξει τῶν ἀναθημάτων· ἀνάθημα δ' οὐχ ὅσιον ἀκυροῦσθαι χρόνῳ· διὸ προστέτακται τὴν ἀξίαν τιμὴν τούτων ἐκλέγειν μηδὲν καταχαρισσαμένους τῷ ποιησαμένῳ τὸ ἀνάθημα.
- 116 XXIII. Ταῦτα μὲν ἐπὶ ταῖς τῆς χώρας διανομαῖς καὶ κληρουχίαις διατέτακται· ἕτερα δ' ἐπὶ ταῖς οἰκίαις. ἐπεὶ δὲ [καὶ] τούτων αἱ μὲν κατὰ πόλεις ἐντὸς τειχῶν εἰσιν, αἱ δ' ἐν ἀγροῖς<sup>1</sup> ἔξω τείχους ἐπαύλεις, τὰς μὲν ἐν τοῖς χωρίοις ἐπέτρεψεν ὁ νόμος αἰεὶ λυτροῦσθαι, τὰς δὲ μὴ λυτρωθείσας ἄχρι τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀγρῶ.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxv. 23.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xxvii. 16-21.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxv. 29-31.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 113-116

terms of the transaction. "Do not pay the price," 113 he says, "of complete ownership, but only for a fixed number of years and a lower limit than fifty." For the sale should represent not real property but fruits, and this for two most convincing reasons. One is that the whole country is called God's property,<sup>a</sup> and it is against religion to have anything that is God's property registered under other masters. Another reason is that each of the holders has a portion assigned to him by lot, and that this should be taken from him is contrary to the law's conception of justice.
Anyone, therefore, who before the fifty years are 114 completed has the means to recover his own property, or anyone else very closely related to him, is urged by the lawgiver to take every step to recover the land at the price which he got for it, and not to occasion loss to the purchaser who helped him at the time when he needed it. On the other hand he sympathized with 115 the poor man and shewed him pity by restoring to him the additional wealth which he originally possessed, excepting fields which had been dedicated by a vow, and therefore rank with votive offerings.<sup>b</sup> Religion forbids that time should affect the validity of a votive offering, and therefore it is ordained that the proper price for such estates should be demanded and that no concessions should be made to the votary.

XXIII. These are the rules for cases where the 116 apportionments and holdings consist of land. There are different regulations as to houses.<sup>c</sup> Houses in some cases belong to cities and are inside the walls, and others are farm-buildings in the country outside the walls. Consequently the law allows the latter to be redeemable at any time, and prescribes that any that have not been ransomed by the fiftieth year

PHILO

- πεντηκοστοῦ ἔτους ἀποδίδοσθαι προίκα τοῖς πάλαι κυρίοις, καθάπερ καὶ τὰ κτήματα· μοῖρα γὰρ αἱ 117 ἐπαύλεις κτημάτων. ὅσαι δὲ τειχῶν ἐντός εἰσι, μέχρι μὲν ἐνιαυτοῦ τὴν ἀναπομπὴν ἐπὶ τοὺς πεπρακότας ἔχουσι, μετὰ δὲ τὸν ἐνιαυτὸν εἰς ἅπαν τοῖς ὠνησαμένοις βεβαιοῦνται, μηδὲν τῆς τοῦ πεντηκοστοῦ ἔτους ἐκεχειρίας βλαπτούσης τοὺς πρια-118 μένους. αἴτιον δὲ τὸ βούλεσθαι καὶ ἐπηλύταις ἰδρύσεως τῆς ἐνταῦθα βεβαίου παρασχεῖν ἀφορμὴν· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ μετουσίαν γῆς οὐκ ἔχουσιν, ἅτε μὴ καταριθμηθέντες ἐν ταῖς κληρουχίαις, οἰκιῶν αὐτοῖς [291] κτήσιν ὁ νόμος ἀπένειμε, φροντίσας τοῦ μὴ | μετανάστας γενέσθαι τοὺς τῶν νόμων ἰκέτας καὶ πρόσ-119 φυγας. αἱ γὰρ πόλεις, ὅτε ἐκκληροδοτεῖτο ἡ χώρα κατὰ φυλάς, οὐ διενεμήθησαν, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἦσαν συνωκοδομημέναι, κατὰ τὰς ἐν ἀγροῖς ἐπαύλεις τῶν οἰκητόρων ποιουμένων τὰς διατριβάς· ἐξ ὧν ὕστερον ἀναστάντες καὶ συνελθόντες, ἐπίδοσιν κοινωνίας καὶ φιλίας, ὥσπερ εἰκός, ἐν χρόνῳ μακρῷ λαμβανούσης, οἰκίας ἐν ταύτῳ καὶ πόλεις ἔδειμαντο, ὧν καὶ ἐπηλύταις, καθάπερ εἶπον, μετἔδοσαν, ἵνα μὴ πάντων ἀποροῖεν καὶ τῶν ἐν ἀγροῖς καὶ τῶν κατὰ πόλεις.
- 120 XXIV. Περὶ δὲ τῆς ἱερωμένης φυλῆς τάδε νομοθετεῖται· γῆς ἀποτομὴν οὐκ ἀπένειμε τοῖς νεωκόροις ὁ νόμος, ὑπολαβῶν ἀντάρκη πρόσοδον εἶναι τούτοις τὰς ἀπαρχάς, ὅκτῳ δὲ καὶ τεσσαράκοντα πόλεις ἀπεκλήρωσεν εἰς οἴκησιν καὶ δισχιλίους 121 ἐκάστη πῆχεις προάστειον ἐν κύκλῳ. τὰς οὖν ἐν ταύταις οἰκίας οὐ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ταῖς ἄλλαις,

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxv. 32-34.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 116-121

should be restored without compensation to the former owner as in the case of real property, for farm-buildings are a part of real property. But houses within 117 the walls may be recoverable by the vendors for the space of a year, but after the year are absolutely secured to the purchasers who are not liable to suffer any injury from the general remission in the fiftieth year. His reason is that he wishes to give the 118 newcomers also a basis on which they may feel themselves firmly established in the country. For since they have no apportionment of land as they were not counted when the holdings were distributed, the law assigned to them their houses in fee simple in its anxiety that those who had come as suppliants and refugees to the laws should not be cast adrift. For when the land was apportioned according to the tribes 119 the cities were not distributed, nor indeed built in city form at all, and the inhabitants took for their dwellings the outbuildings in the country. Subsequently when they left these and became concentrated as the feeling of unity and friendship naturally grew stronger in the course of many years, they built houses adjacent to each other, thus forming cities. And of these, as I have said, they assigned a share to the newcomers, to prevent them finding themselves cut off from holding property both in the country and in the cities.

XXIV. The legislation with regard to the conse- 120 crated tribe is as follows.<sup>a</sup> The temple-keepers were not allotted a section of land by the law, which considered that they were sufficiently provided for by the first-fruits, but assigned them instead forty-eight cities to dwell in, with a surrounding frontage in each case of two thousand cubits. Houses within 121 these were not, like the others within the walls, ὅσαι τειχῶν εἴσω τυγχάνουσιν, ἐβεβαίωσε τοῖς πριαμένοις, ἐντὸς ἐνιαυτοῦ τῶν ἀποδιδομένων κομίσασθαι μὴ δυναμένων, ἀλλ' εἰς ἅπαν ἐφῆκεν αὐτὰς λυτροῦσθαι, καθάπερ καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους τὰς ἐπαύλεις αἰς ἰσοδυναμοῦσιν, ἐπειδὴ μόνας ἐκ τοσαύτης χώρας διεκληρώσαντο τὰς οἰκίας, ὧν οὐκ ᾤετο δεῖν στέρεσθαι τοὺς λαβόντας, καθάπερ οὐδὲ τοὺς κληρούχους τῶν ἐπαύλεων. οἰκιῶν μὲν δὴ περί τοσαῦτα.

PHILO

- 122 XXV. Τὰ δὲ πρὸς χρεώστας δανειστῶν καὶ πρὸς θεράποντας δεσποτῶν ὅμοια τοῖς πρόσθεν νομοθετεῖται, ὅπως οἱ μὲν δανεισταὶ μὴ ἐκλέγωσι τόκους παρὰ τῶν ὁμοεθνῶν ἀλλ' ὅσον προήκαντο μόνον ἄσμενοι κομίζονται, οἱ δὲ δεσπότες τοῖς ἀργυρωνήτοις μὴ ὡς φύσει δούλοις ἀλλ' ὡς μισθωτοῖς προσφέρωνται, παρέχοντες ἄδειαν ἐλευθερίας, εὐθὺς μὲν τοῖς ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν λύτρα κατατιθέναί δυναμένοις, αὐθις δὲ τοῖς ἀπόροις ἢ ὅταν ἐπιγένηται ὁ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς δουλείας ἑβδομος ἐνιαυτὸς ἢ ὅταν ὁ πενηتكόστος, κἂν πρὸ μιᾶς ἡμέρας τύχη τις εἰς δουλείαν ὑπαχθεῖς· ἄφεςις γὰρ ὁ χρόνος ἐκεῖνός ἐστι καὶ νενόμισται, πάντων ἐπὶ τὰς ἀρχαίας διαυλοδρομούντων καὶ ἀνακαμπτόντων εὐπραγίας. ἐπιτρέπει δ' ἐκ τῶν μὴ ὁμοφύλων [οἷτινες ἐξ ἑτέρων ἔθνων εἰσιν] οἰκέτας κτᾶσθαι, βουλόμενος πρῶτον μὲν διαφορὰν οἰκείων τε καὶ ἀλλοτριῶν εἶναι, ἔπειτα δὲ μὴ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἀναγκαιότατον κτῆμα,

<sup>a</sup> "Lay population" seems to be the meaning required for τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους, but I do not know of any similar use of ἔθνος. The phrase is used of the nation in general in i. 54. Possibly ἄλλου has fallen out. (Heinemann strangely translates it by "members of the other tribes," with no hint as to how it is to be obtained from the Greek.)

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 121-123

secured to the purchasers, if the vendors could not find the means to redeem them within the year, but were liable to be redeemed for an unlimited period just as the lay population<sup>a</sup> could redeem the farm buildings, to which the dwelling-houses of the Levites correspond. For these were all that fell to their share in that great territory, and thus he considered that being once received they ought not to be taken back, any more than the farm-buildings in the case of those to whom the holdings were apportioned. So much for the subject of houses.

XXV. Similar rules to those already stated are 122 laid down as to the relations between creditors and debtors and between servants and masters.<sup>b</sup> Creditors are not to exact interest from their fellow-nationals but to be content with recovering what they provided. Masters are to treat their purchased slaves as their hired servants, not as their slaves by nature, and give them secure access to liberty on the spot if they can provide their ransom, or in the case of the needy at a later time, when either the seventh year from the beginning of their slavery or the fiftieth arrives, in the latter case even though only a single day has elapsed since the man was reduced to that condition. For that time is accepted as the remission and actually is such, when all reverse their course and turn back to the prosperity of the past. But the law does permit the acquisition of slaves 123 from other nations<sup>c</sup> for two reasons ; first, that a distinction should be made between fellow-countrymen and aliens ; secondly, that that most indispensable possession, domestic service, should not be absolutely

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xxv. 35-41. As Philo observes, the two sections really repeat the substance of §§ 71-85.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxv. 44.

θεράποντας, ἀνείρξαι τῆς αὐτοῦ πολιτείας· μυρία γὰρ τῶν ἐν τῷ βίῳ πραγμάτων ποθεῖ τὰς ἐκ δούλων ὑπηρεσίας.<sup>1</sup>

- 124 Υἱοὶ κληρονόμοι γονέων ἔστωσαν, εἰ δὲ μὴ εἶεν, θυγατέρες. ὡς γὰρ ἐν τῇ φύσει γυναικῶν ἄνδρες πρωτοστατοῦσι, κὰν ταῖς συγγενείαις ἐχέτωσαν προνομίαν διαδεχόμενοι τὰς οὐσίας καὶ τὴν τῶν τετελευτηκότων τάξιν ἐκπληροῦντες ἀνάγκης νόμῳ κατασχεθέντων<sup>2</sup> οὐδὲν θνητὸν <καὶ> γηγενὲς ἀθανά-125 τίζοντι. παρθένοι δὲ ἐὰν ἀπολειφθῶσιν ἀνέκδοτοι, προικὸς ὑπὸ ζώντων ἔτι τῶν γονέων μὴ διωρισμένης, ἰσομοιρεῖτωσαν τοῖς ἄρρεσιν. ἐπιμελείσθω δ' ἢ προεστῶσα ἀρχὴ φυλακῆς τε τῶν ἀπολειφθεισῶν<sup>3</sup> καὶ αὐξήσεως καὶ τῶν εἰς δίαιταν καὶ παιδείαν τὴν ἀρμόττουσαν κόραις ἀναλωμάτων καί, ὅποτε γένοιτο ὥρα, [καὶ] γάμου τοῦ πρέποντος, ἀνδρῶν ἐν<sup>4</sup> ἅπασι δοκίμων ἀριστίνδην ἐπικριθέντων.
 126 ἔστωσαν δ' οὗτοι μάλιστα μὲν συγγενεῖς, εἰ δὲ μὴ, πάντως γοῦν δημόται καὶ φυλέται, χάριν τοῦ μὴ τοὺς κλήρους τοὺς προικιδίους<sup>5</sup> ἐπιγαμίαις ἄλλο-

<sup>1</sup> Here F comes to an end as far as this treatise is concerned, and we are left dependent upon M and the occasional excerpts of Nicetas. As there are no such excerpts from the sections on the law of inheritance which follow down to § 139, they did not appear in Hoeschel's edition, and consequently are also absent in Mangey's, whose p. 291 ends with ὑπηρεσίας and p. 292 begins with ἐπόμενοι καὶ τῇ τάξει, § 140. On a probable lacuna in M at this point see note a.

<sup>2</sup> MS. κατασχεθέντες.

<sup>3</sup> MS. ἀπολειφθέντων.

<sup>4</sup> MS. μὲν.

<sup>5</sup> MS. πρὸς ἰδίους.

<sup>a</sup> The sections which follow down to § 139 seem entirely out of place here and have nothing to do with the sequence of thought, which has hitherto carried him on from the

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 123-126

excluded from his commonwealth. For the course of life contains a vast number of circumstances which demand the ministrations of slaves.

<sup>a</sup> The heirs of parents are to be sons,<sup>b</sup> or failing sons 124 daughters. For just as in nature men take precedence of women, so too in the scale of relationships they should take the first place in succeeding to the property and filling the position of the departed which they have ceased to hold, debarred by an inevitable law which admits to immortality nothing that is mortal or earth-born. But if virgins are left 125 without a dower, nothing of the kind having been settled on them by the parents while still alive, they should share equally with the males. The charge of protecting the girls left thus desolate and superintending their development, and the expenses of providing anything required for their maintenance and education as befits maidens should fall upon the head magistrate<sup>c</sup>; also when the time comes, the duty of arranging a suitable marriage and choosing husbands who are selected on their merits and approved in all respects. And these should be, if 126 possible, of the same family as the girls, or if that cannot be, at any rate of the same ward and tribe, in order that the portions assigned as dowry should not

Sabbath day to the Sabbatical year, and thence to the fiftieth year and the regulations connected with the last two. Cohn thinks that a connexion is to be found in Lev. xxv. 46, where after permitting the purchase of foreign slaves it continues "ye shall make them an inheritance" (ΛXX καταμεριεῖτε, "ye shall distribute") "to your children." If this is right, it can hardly be doubted, as Cohn says, that some words have fallen out which would shew the connexion.

<sup>b</sup> See Num. xxvii. 8-11, cf. Mos. ii. 243 ff.

<sup>c</sup> Or "the chief civil authority." See App. p. 626.

PHILO

- τριούσθαι, μένειν δ' ἐν ταῖς ἐξ ἀρχῆς τεταγμέναις 127 κατὰ φυλὰς λήξουσιν. εἴαν δὲ γενεᾶς ἔρημος ὦν τυγχάνη, παρίτωσαν ἐπὶ τὴν διαδοχὴν ἀδελφοὶ τοῦ τετελευτηκότος<sup>1</sup>. ἢ γὰρ μεθ' υἱοὺς καὶ θυγατέρας ἐν συγγενείαις τάξις ἀδελφῶν ἐστίν. εἰ δὲ ἀνάδελφός τις εἶη τελευτῶν, θεῖοι πρὸς πατρὸς διαδεχέσθωσαν τὴν οὐσίαν, θείων δὲ μὴ ὄντων, θεῖαι,<sup>2</sup> <εἶτα> τῶν ἄλλων οἰκείων καὶ συγγενῶν <οἱ> ἐγγυτάτω.<sup>3</sup> 128 σπάνις δ' εἰ καταλάβοι τῆς συγγενείας, ὡς μηδένα τῶν ἀφ' αἵματος ἀπολειφθῆναι, ἢ φυλὴ κληρονόμος ἔστω· συγγένεια γὰρ τίς ἐστὶ καὶ ἡ φυλὴ κατὰ περιγραφὴν μείζονα καὶ τελειοτέραν.
 129 ἄξιον μέντοι τὸ διαπορηθὲν ὑπ' ἐνίων <μη> ἡσυχασ-θῆναι· διὰ τί, γὰρ φασί, πάντων συγγενῶν καὶ δημοτῶν καὶ φυλετῶν ἐπιμνησθεῖς ὁ νόμος ἐν ταῖς τῶν κλήρων διαδοχαῖς γονεῖς μόνους παρεσιώπησεν, οὓς εἰκὸς ἦν, ὥσπερ κληρονομοῦνται, κληρονομεῖν τὰ παίδων; ὅτι, ὧ γενναῖε, θεῖος ὦν καὶ τὴν τῆς φύσεως ἀκολουθίαν αἰεὶ σκοπῶν οὐδὲν ὠήθη χρῆναι παλίμφημον εἰσηγεῖσθαι· γονέων μὲν γὰρ εὐχαί, ζῶντας ἀπολιπεῖν οὓς ἐγέννησαν, διαδεξο-μένους<sup>4</sup> ὄνομά τε αὐτῶν καὶ γένος καὶ οὐσίαν, ἐχθρῶν δὲ ἀμειλικτῶν ἀραὶ τάναντία, προαποθνή-130 σκειν υἱοὺς καὶ θυγατέρας τῶν φυσάντων. ὅπως

<sup>1</sup> MS. τῶν τετελευτηκότων.

<sup>2</sup> As aunts are not mentioned in Num. xxvii. nor in the parallel passage in Philo (Mos. ii. 245), θεῖαι might perhaps be expunged. In that case there would be no need for Cohn's insertion of εἶτα.

<sup>3</sup> MS. ἐγγυτέρω.

<sup>4</sup> MS. διαδεξαμένους.

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xxxvi. 6 ff. The point that they should, if possible, marry into the same family is not there expressly stated, but might be fairly inferred from v. 11, where it is

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 126-130

be alienated by inter-marriage with other tribes, but should retain the place given to them in the allotments originally made on the basis of tribes.<sup>a</sup> But if 127 the deceased has no descendants, the brothers must proceed to the succession, for brothers rank next in tables of relationship with sons and daughters. If the dead man has no brother, the succession must pass to the uncles on the father's side, and if there are no uncles, to the aunts, and then to the next nearest among their other connexions or kinsfolk. But if 128 kinsfolk are so scarce that no blood-relation remains, then the tribe shall be the heir.<sup>b</sup> For the tribe is in a sense a kinship with a wider and more all-embracing compass.

<sup>c</sup>One question, however, which 129 is raised by some inquirers should not be passed over in silence. Why, they ask, does the Law when dealing with the regulations of inheritance mention kinsmen of every degree and fellow-wardsmen and fellow-tribesmen, but leaves parents alone unmentioned who would naturally inherit from the children as the children do from them? The answer, good sir, is that the law, God-given as it is, and ever desirous to follow the course of nature, held that no sinister thought should be introduced. Parents pray that they may leave behind them alive the children they have begotten to succeed to their name, race and property, and the imprecations of their implacable enemies are just the opposite, that the sons and daughters may die before their parents. Now he did not 130

said that the daughters of Zelophehad married their first cousins. For "ward and tribe" see on § 82.

<sup>b</sup> Not stated in Num. xxvii. Probably (as Cohn and Heinemann) deduced from the intention of the law to prevent the inheritance passing from one tribe to another (xxxvi. 9).

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 129-132 cf. Mos. ii. 244, 245.

PHILO

οὐν μηδὲν ἀνάρμοστον καὶ ἀσύμφωνον ἐν ἁρμονίᾳ καὶ συμφωνίᾳ, καθ' ἣν διοικεῖται σύμπας ὁ κόσμος, διαγορευῆ, παίδων μὲν ἀποθνησκόντων, γονέων δ' ἐπιβιούντων, ἀναγκαίως ἅμα καὶ πρεπόντως οὐ προσέταξε μητέρας [ἅμα] καὶ πατέρας τὰ υἱῶν καὶ θυγατέρων κληρονομεῖν, εἰδὼς μὴ συνᾶδον τὸ

131 πρᾶγμα βίω τε καὶ φύσει. φυλαξάμενος οὐν γυμνοῖς ὀνόμασι καλέσαι γονεῖς ἐπὶ παίδων τετελευτηκότων κληρονομίαν,<sup>1</sup> ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ δοκεῖν ἀπευκτὴν ὠφέλειαν προσνέμων ὀνειδίζειν πενθοῦσιν ἢ ὑπομιμνήσκειν κακοπραγιῶν, ἑτέρῳ τρόπῳ τὰς οὐσίας ἀπένειμεν αὐτοῖς, βραχὺ παρηγόρημα με-

132 γάλου κακοῦ. τίς οὐν ὁ τρόπος; ἀδελφὸν πατρὸς γράφει κληρονόμον ἀδελφιδῶν, ἢ που διὰ τὸν πατέρα τὸν θεῖον γεραίρων· εἰ μὴ τις οὕτως ἡλίθιός ἐστιν, ὡς ὑπολαμβάνειν ὅτι ἕτερον τιμῶν ἑτέρου χάριν ἀτιμοῦν ἐκείνον προαιρεῖται· μὴ καὶ τοὺς τῶν φίλων γνωρίμους οἱ περιέποντες ἀμελεῖς τῶν ἐταίρων<sup>2</sup> εἰσίν; ἢ <οὐ> πάντων εὐνοϊκώτατοι κηδεμόνες τῶν ἐπὶ τιμῇ καὶ ἐταίρους<sup>2</sup> ἀποδέχονται; τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ τρόπον καὶ ὁ νόμος διὰ πατέρα καλέσας ἀδελφὸν πατρὸς ἐπὶ μετουσίαν κλήρου πολὺ πρότερον πατέρα καλεῖ, φωνῇ μὲν οὐ, διὰ τὰ λεχθέντα, γνωριμωτέρα

<sup>1</sup> MS. κληρον.

<sup>2</sup> MS. ἐτέρων . . . ἐτέρους.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Mos. ii. 245 καὶ τοῦ πρόποντος καὶ τοῦ μὴ τὴν οὐσίαν ἀλλοτριωθῆναι, which suggests that the "necessity" here is to keep the property in the family.

<sup>b</sup> After τιμῇ sc. τῶν γνωρίμων. But the whole sentence is very awkward and may contain some corruption besides the omission of οὐ. Heinemann's translation, "lassen sie nicht

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 130-132

wish to speak plainly of anything so out of tune with and discordant to the harmony and concord which prevails throughout the cosmic order as the death of children while the parents survive, and therefore he complied both with necessity and decency<sup>a</sup> in not ordaining that mothers and fathers should inherit from their sons and daughters. He knew that such an event was not in accordance with the ordinary course of life or with nature. So while he avoided 131 appointing the parents in undisguised terms as heirs to the property of their dead children, lest by assigning to them an acquisition of so undesirable a kind he should seem to be casting a slur upon their mourning or reminding them of their misfortunes, he adopted another way of conveying the ownership to them, a simple specific for a great mischief. What 132 was this way? He declares the father's brothers to be the heirs of their nephews, a privilege doubtless given to the uncle for the sake of the father, unless anyone is foolish enough to suppose that a person who honours A for the sake of B is deliberately dishonouring B. Is it the case that those who pay court to the acquaintances of their friends are neglecting those friends? Is it not rather the truth that their affectionate care for all that might honour these acquaintances<sup>b</sup> shews regard for the friends also? On the same principle the law, when it nominates the father's brother to share in the inheritance because of his relationship to the father, much more nominates the father, not in actual words it is true for reasons already stated, but with a force more die Ehrung ihrer Freunde in jeder Weise mit grösster Aufmerksamkeit angelegen sein," does not seem to represent the Greek as it stands.

PHILO

δὲ φωνῆς δυνάμει τρανούση τὸ βούλημα τοῦ νομοθέτου.

- 133 Παιδῶν ὁ πρεσβύτατος οὐκ ἰσομοιρεῖ τοῖς μετ' αὐτόν, ἀλλὰ διπλασίων ἀξιοῦται, διότι τε ἀνὴρ καὶ γυνὴ πρότερον ὑπάρχοντες αὐθις ἐγένοντο πατὴρ καὶ μήτηρ διὰ τὸν φύντα πρῶτον καὶ ἐπειδὴ ὁ <πρῶτος> γενόμενος τούτοις ἀνακαλεῖν ἤρξατο τοῖς ὀνόμασι τοὺς σπείραντας καὶ—τὸ ἀναγκαιοτάτον—ὅτι ὁ πρὸ τοῦ γενεᾶς ἔρημος οἶκος εὐπαις ἐγένετο πρὸς τὴν τοῦ γένους τῶν ἀνθρώπων διαμονήν, ἥσ<sup>1</sup> σπορὰ μὲν γάμος, καρποὶ δὲ τέκνων γενέσεις, ὧν ὁ
- 134 πρεσβύτατος ἀρχή. διὰ ταύτην γ' οἶμαι τὴν αἰτίαν οἱ πρωτότοκοι τῶν μὲν ἄσπονδα εἰργασμένων ἐχθρῶν, ὡς αἱ ἱεραὶ γραφαὶ δηλοῦσι, μιᾷ νυκτὶ πάντες ἠβηδὸν ἀνηρέθησαν, τῶν δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους χαριστήριον ἀνετέθησαν θεῷ καθιερωθέντες· ἔδει γὰρ τοὺς μὲν βαρυντάτῳ καὶ ἀπαρηγορήτῳ πένθει βαρῦναι, φθορᾷ τῶν πρωτοστατούντων, γεραίρειν δὲ τὸν σωτήρα θεὸν ἀπαρχαῖς, αἱ τὴν ἐν τέκνοις
- 135 ἡγεμονίαν ἔλαχον. ἐπεὶ δ' εἰσὶ τινες οἱ μετὰ γάμον καὶ παιδοποιίαν ὀψὲ σωφροσύνην ἀπομαθόντες ἐξώκειλαν εἰς ἀκρασίαν καὶ ἐπιμανέντες γυναιξὶν ἐτέραις τὰς προτέρας ἐκάκωσαν καὶ τοῖς ἐξ ἐκείνων οὐκέθ' ὡς πατέρες ἀλλ' ὡς πατρωοὶ προσηνέχθησαν ἀπομιμησάμενοι τὸ μητρειῶν εἰς

<sup>1</sup> Cohn in a note to Heinemann's translation would correct to εἰ σπορὰ, but with no improvement of the sense that I can see.

<sup>a</sup> This statement is founded on Deut. xxi. 15-17. See App. pp. 626-627.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Mos. i. 135.

<sup>c</sup> ἐπεὶ, which has no logical apodosis, is omitted in the translation.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 132-135

recognizable than words, leaving no doubt of the intention of the lawgiver.

The eldest son does not share equally with his 133 juniors, but is adjudged a double portion,<sup>a</sup> one reason being that his parents who before were but man and wife, owe to the first-born the fact that they have later become father and mother. Another is that it is their first-born who began to use these names in addressing his parents.<sup>b</sup> The third reason is the most important, that what was before their birth a house of barren stock has become fruitful for the preservation of the human race, a preservation which is sown in marriage and fructified in the birth of children, starting with the eldest. This was the 134 reason, I suppose, that the first-born sons of the enemies who had shewn themselves so merciless in action, were cut off in wholesale massacre in a single night, as the Holy Scriptures tell us, while the first-born of our nation were dedicated by consecration as a thank-offering to God. For it was just that on the enemy should fall the weight of a blow for which no consolation was possible, namely, the destruction of their foremost rank, while God Who wrought the salvation was honoured by the dedication as first-fruits of those who headed the line of children. <sup>c</sup>But there 135 are some who after marrying and begetting children unlearn in their later days what they knew of self-restraint and are wrecked on the reef of incontinence. Seized with a mad passion for other women, they maltreat those who hitherto belonged to them and behave to the children they have begotten by them as though they were uncles rather than fathers, copy the unrighteousness shewn

PHILO

- προγονοὺς δυσσεβῆς καὶ ὅλως ἑαυτοὺς καὶ τὰ ἑαυ-τῶν ἐξέδωκαν ταῖς δευτέραις καὶ παισὶ τοῖς τούτων ἡδονῆς, αἰσχίστου πάθους, ἥττους γενόμενοι, χαλινὸν μὲν εἶ πως οἶόν τε ἦν ἐμβαλεῖν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ ἀνασκιρτᾶν ἐπὶ πλεόν οὐκ ἂν 136 ἐμέλλησεν ὁ νόμος. ἐπεὶ δὲ μανίαν ἐξηγγριωμένην οἴστρω χαλεπὸν μᾶλλον δ' ἀδύνατον ἰάσασθαι, τὸν μὲν ὡς ἀθεραπεύτῳ νόσῳ κατεσχημένον ἀπέλιπε, τὸν δ' ἐκ τῆς διὰ τοὺς νέους ἔρωτας κακωθείσης υἱὸν οὐχ ὑπερεΐδε κελεύσας αὐτὸν λαμβάνειν διπλάσια τὰ ἐκ τῆς πρὸς τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς διανομῆς.
 137 αἷτια δὲ τούτου πολλά· πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ κολάζει τὸν ὑπαίτιον ἀνάγκην ἐπιθεῖς αὐτῷ ποιεῖν εὖ ὄν κακῶς διατιθέναι προαιρεῖται, καὶ τῆς ἀγνώμονος γνώμης ἄκυρον ἀποφαίνει δι' ὧν ὠφελεῖ τὸν κινδυννεύσαντα πρὸς ἐκείνου<sup>1</sup> ζημιωθῆναι τάττων αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ τάξει τοῦ γεγεννηκότος, ἣν ὁ φύσει πατὴρ ἐπὶ 138 πρεσβυτάτου παιδὸς ἔλιπε. δεύτερον δὲ ἔλεον καὶ οἶκτον λαμβάνει τῶν ἡδικημένων, οὓς βαρυτάτης ἀνίας ἐπελαφρίζει μετουσίᾳ χάριτος καὶ δωρεᾶς· οὐδὲν γὰρ ἥττον τοῦ κληρονομοῦντος υἱοῦ τὴν διπλασίαν μοῖραν εἰκὸς ἦν ἡδεσθαι τὴν μητέρα, φιλανθρωπία νόμου παρηγορηθεῖσαν, ὃς οὐκ εἴασεν αὐτὴν τε καὶ γενεὰν εἰς ἅπαν ἐχθρῶν ἐλαττοῦσθαι.
 139 τρίτον δέ· βραβευτῆς ὧν τῶν δικαίων ἀγαθὸς ἐλογίσαστο παρ' ἑαυτῷ, ὅτι τοῖς μὲν ἐκ τῆς στεργομένης ἐπεδαφιλεύσατο τὰς χορηγίας ὁ πατὴρ

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἐκεῖνο.

---

<sup>a</sup> For the allegorizing of this law (Deut. xxi. 15-17) cf. De Sac. 20, De Sob. 21 ff.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 135-139

by stepmothers to the first family and altogether devote themselves and all they have to the second wives and their children, overcome by the vilest of passions, voluptuousness. Such lusts the law would not have hesitated to bridle if it were possible, and prevent them from frisking and plunging still more. But since it is difficult, or rather impossible, to heal 136 the frenzy goaded into savagery, it left the father to his fate as one in the grip of an incurable disease but did not disregard the son of the wife who was wronged through his passion for another, but bade him take the double portion in the distribution between the brothers.<sup>a</sup> There are several reasons for this. In 137 the first place, it punishes the culprit by forcing him to give good treatment to the person to whom he intended to give the reverse and renders him incapable of carrying out his ill-judged judgement. This it effects by conferring benefits on the person who was likely to suffer loss at his hands, and by taking upon itself the parental position which had been abandoned by the natural father in so far as the eldest child was concerned. Secondly, 138 it shews mercy and pity for the victims of injustice whom it relieves of a very grievous trouble by enabling them to share in the boon thus bestowed. For naturally we may suppose that the gratification felt by the son at obtaining the double portion is shared by the mother, encouraged as she is by the humanity of the law which refuses to allow her and her family to lie entirely at the mercy of her enemies. And there was a third reason. 139 Being gifted with a power to judge justly, it reflected that the father had bestowed his bounties generously on the children of the beloved wife διὰ τὸν πόθον τῆς γυναικός, τοὺς δ' ἐκ τῆς συγθεΐσης οὐδενὸς [ἢ] παντάπασιν ἠξίωσε διὰ τὸ τῆς μητρὸς ἔχθος, ὡς ἐκείνους μὲν ἔτι ζῶντος<sup>1</sup> προκεκληρονομηκέναι πλείω τῆς ἰσομοιρίας, τούτους δὲ κινδυνεῦσαι καὶ τελευτήσαντος ἀπάντων ἀφαιρεθῆναι τῶν πατρῶων. ἴν' οὖν ἐπανισώσῃ τὴν διανομὴν τοῖς ἐξ ἀμφοτέρων τῶν γυναικῶν, ὥρισε διμοιρίαν τὰ πρεσβεία τῷ τῆς ἀπηλλαγμένης παιδί.

PHILO

[292] τούτων μὲν δὴ ἄλις.

140 XXVI. | Ἐπόμενοι δὲ τῇ τάξει τρίτον εἶδος ἀναγράφομεν ἑορτῆς, ὃ σημανοῦμεν. ἔστι δὲ νουμηνία κατὰ σελήνην, χρόνος<sup>2</sup> ὁ ἀπὸ συνόδου ἐπὶ σύνοδον, ὃν μαθηματικῶν παῖδες εὖ μάλα διηριθμήσαντο. τὴν δ' ἐν ἑορταῖς ἔλαχε τάξιν νουμηνία διὰ πολλά· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι ἀρχὴ μηνός, ἀρχὴ δὲ καὶ ἀριθμοῦ καὶ χρόνου τίμιον· ἔπειτα δὲ ὅτι κατ' αὐτὴν οὐδὲν ἀφώτιστον ἐν οὐρανῷ· συνόδῳ μὲν γὰρ ὑποδραμούσης ἥλιον σελήνης τὸ πρὸς γῆν μέρος ἐξόφωται, νουμηνία δὲ πέφυκεν ἀναλάμπειν.

141 τρίτον δὲ ὅτι τῷ ἐλάττονι καὶ ἀσθενεστέρῳ κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον τὸ κρεῖττον καὶ δυνατώτερον ὠφελείας ἀναγκαίας μεταδίδωσι· νουμηνία γὰρ ἄρχεται φωτίζειν αἰσθητῷ φέγγει σελήνην ὁ ἥλιος,

<sup>1</sup> MS. ζῶντας.

<sup>2</sup> On the text here see note b.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in asserting the rights of the eldest son it asserts those of the first family as a whole.

<sup>b</sup> For the New Moon see i. 177. Lit. "it, the new-month-day, according to the moon, the time" etc. i.e. the new moon is the time between the conjunctions. This, though unnoticed by Cohn and Heinemann, cannot, as it seems to me, have been stated by Philo. I suggest some such insertion as ἔστι γὰρ ὁ μὴν κατὰ σελήνην, which might because of his affection for her, but left the children of the hated wife entirely out of consideration owing to his hostility to their mother, so that the former even in his lifetime inherited more than their equal share, and the latter might expect at his death to find themselves robbed of the whole patrimony. And therefore it decreed that the son of the discarded wife should have the eldest son's privilege of the double share, in order to equalize the partition between both families.<sup>a</sup> Enough on these matters.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 139-141

XXVI. Following the order stated above, we record 140 the third type of feast which we will proceed to explain. This is the New Moon, or beginning of the lunar month,<sup>b</sup> namely the period between one conjunction and the next, the length of which has been accurately calculated in the astronomical schools. The new moon holds its place among the feasts for many reasons. First, because it is the beginning of the month, and the beginning, both in number and in time, deserves honour. Secondly, because when it arrives, nothing in heaven is left without light, for while at the conjunction, when the moon is lost to sight under the sun, the side which faces earth is darkened, when the new month begins it resumes its natural brightness. The third reason is, that the 141 stronger or more powerful element at that time supplies the help which is needed to the smaller and weaker. For it is just then that the sun begins to illumine the moon with the light which we perceive easily have fallen out after the preceding κατὰ σελήνην. Nicetas, who resumes his excerpts here, has τρίτην ἑορτὴν ἀναγράφομεν τὴν κατὰ σελήνην νομηνίαν. πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι κτλ. Of course in a country where non-lunar months are observed such an explanation is perfectly natural.

PHILO

ἡ δὲ τὸ ἴδιον κάλλος ἀναφαίνει τοῖς ὄρωσι. τοῦτο δ' ἐναργῆς ἐστίν, ὡς ἔοικε, διδασκαλία χρηστότητος καὶ φιλανθρωπίας, ἵνα μηδέποτε τῶν ἰδίων ἀγαθῶν ἄνθρωποι φθονῶσιν, ἀλλὰ μιμούμενοι τὰς ἐν οὐρανῷ μακαρίας καὶ εὐδαίμονας φύσεις ὑπερόριον τῆς ψυχῆς βασκανίαν ἐλαύνωσι καὶ προφέροντες εἰς μέσον τὰ οἰκεία κοινοπραγῶσι καὶ χαρίζονται

142 τοῖς ἀξίοις. τέταρτον δὲ ὅτι τῶν κατ' οὐρανὸν ἀπάντων ἐν ἐλάττονι προθεσμία σελήνη τὸν ζωφόρον περιπολεῖ· μηνιαίῳ γὰρ διαστήματι τὸν κύκλον ἀνύτει. διὸ καὶ τὸ συμπέρασμα τῆς περιόδου, τελευτώσης ἐπὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀφ' ἧς ἤρξατο φέρεσθαι σελήνης,<sup>1</sup> τετίμηκεν ὁ νόμος προσειπὼν ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν ἑορτήν, ὑπὲρ τοῦ πάλιν ἡμᾶς ἀναδιδάξαι μάθημα κάλλιστον, ἵν' ἐν ταῖς τοῦ βίου πράξεις τὰ τέλη συνωδὰ ταῖς ἀρχαῖς ἀποφαίνωμεν· γενήσεται δὲ τοῦτ', εἰάν λογισμῷ τὰς πρώτας ἡμιοχῶμεν ὁρμὰς μὴ ἐπιτρέποντες αὐταῖς ἀφηνιάζειν καὶ ἀνασκιρτᾶν τρόπον θρεμμάτων ἀγελάρχην

143 οὐκ ἐχόντων. ἃς δὲ παρέχεται τοῖς ἐπὶ γῆς<sup>2</sup> ἅπασιν ὠφελείας σελήνη, τί χρῆ διεξιόντα μηκύνειν; ἐμφανεῖς γὰρ αἱ πίστεις. ἢ οὐχὶ ταῖς αὐξήσεσιν αὐτῆς ἀναχέονται ποταμοὶ καὶ πηγαὶ καὶ μειοῦνται πάλιν μειώσεσι, καὶ πελάγη τοτὲ μὲν ἐξαναχωρεῖ καὶ ἀμπωτίζοντα ὑποσύρεται τοτὲ δ' ἐξαπιναίως ἐπιτρέχει κατὰ παλίρροϊαν, ὃ τε ἀῆρ αἰθρίαις καὶ νεφώσεσι καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις μεταβολαῖς παντοίας ἐνδέχεται τροπὰς, καρποὶ τε οἱ σπαρτῶν<sup>3</sup> καὶ δένδρων αὖξονται καὶ τελεσφοροῦνται σελήνης περιόδους τιθηνουμένης ἕκαστα τῶν φυομένων καὶ πεπαινούσης ἐνδρόσοις καὶ μαλακω-

<sup>1</sup> MS. τελευτῶντος . . . σελήνη (ἀφ' οὐ for ἀφ' ἧς).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 141-143

and the moon reveals its own beauty to the eye. And this is surely an obvious lesson inculcating kindness and humanity and bidding men never grudge their own good things, but imitating the blessed and happy beings in heaven banish jealousy from the confines of the soul, producing what they have for all to see, treat it as common property, and give freely to the deserving. The fourth reason <sup>142</sup> is, that the moon traverses the zodiac in a shorter fixed period than any other heavenly body. For it accomplishes that revolution in the span of a single month, and therefore the conclusion of its circuit, when the moon ends its course at the starting-point at which it began, is honoured by the law, which declares that day a feast, again to teach us an admirable lesson, that in the conduct of life we should make the ends correspond with the beginnings. And this will be effected if we keep our primitive appetites under the control of reason and do not permit them to rebel and riot like cattle that have no herdsman.

As for the services that the moon <sup>143</sup> renders to everything on earth, there is no need to dilate upon them. The proofs are perfectly clear. As the moon increases, the rivers and fountains rise, and again diminish as it diminishes. Its phases cause the seas to withdraw and dwindle at the ebb-tide, then suddenly rush back with the returning flood, and the air to undergo all manner of changes as the sky becomes clear or cloudy and alters in other ways. The fruits, both of the sown crops and orchard-trees, grow to their maturity according to the revolutions of the moon, which fosters and ripens everything that grows with the dew and very gentle breezes

---

<sup>2</sup> MS. ἐπὶ γῆν.

<sup>3</sup> MS. σπαρτοί.

PHILO

- 144 τάταις αὔραις; ἀλλ' οὐχὶ καιρός, ὅπερ ἔφην, μακρηγορεῖν ἔπαινον σελήνης διεξιόντα καὶ καταριθμούμενον ἄς παρέχεται ζώοις καὶ τοῖς ἐπὶ γῆς ἅπασιν ὠφελείας. διὰ μὲν δὴ ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις παραπλήσια νομηγία τετίμηται καὶ τάξιν ἔλαχε τὴν ἐν ταῖς ἑορταῖς.
- 145 XXVII. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν νομηγίαν ἐστὶν ἑορτὴ τετάρτη, τὰ διαβατήρια, ἣν Ἑβραῖοι Πάσχα πατρίῳ γλώττῃ καλοῦσιν, ἐν ἣ θύουσι πανδημεὶ πολλὰς μυριάδας ἱερείων ἀρξάμενοι ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας ἄχρι ἑσπέρας, ὁ λεὼς ἅπας, πρεσβῦται καὶ νέοι, κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν ἱερωσύνης ἀξιώματι τετιμημένοι· τὸν γὰρ ἄλλον χρόνον οἱ ἱερεῖς τὰς τε κοινὰς θυσίας καὶ τὰς ἰδίας ἐκάστου προστάξει νόμων ἐπιτελοῦσι, τότε δὲ σύμπαν τὸ ἔθνος μετὰ πάσης ἀδείας ἀγναῖς χερσὶν ἱεουργεῖ<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἱεράται.
- 146 αἴτιον δὲ τόδε· τῆς μεγίστης ἀποικίας ὑπόμνημά ἐστιν ἡ ἑορτὴ καὶ χαριστήριον, ἣν ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου μυριάσιν ὑπὲρ διακοσίας ἀνδρῶν ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναικῶν ἐστεύλαντο κατὰ τὰ χρησθέντα λόγια. τότε οὖν, ὡς εἰκός, ἀπολελοιπότες χώραν γέμουσαν ἀπανθρωπίας καὶ ξενηλασίας ἐπιτηδεύουσαν καὶ—τὸ χαλεπώτατον—τὰς τοῦ θεοῦ τιμὰς ἀλόγοις ζώοις οὐχ ἡμέροις μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀγρίοις προσνέμουσαν

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἱεουργεῖται.

<sup>a</sup> Philo consistently uses διαβατήρια or διάβασις = πάσχα, and several times, e.g. Leg. All. iii. 94, allegorizes it as in § 147, shewing that he traces the name not to the passing over of the Israelites by the destroying angel (Ex. xii. 23 and 27), but to the crossing of Israel itself from Egypt, the type of the body, and no doubt also the crossing of the Red Sea. In classical Greek διαβατήρια are offerings made before crossing a boundary, and also (Plut. Lucullus, 24) before

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 144-146

which it brings. But, as I have said, this is not the 144 time to dwell at length on the praises of the moon and record and catalogue the services which it renders to living creatures and everything on earth. It is for these or similar reasons that the New Moon is honoured and obtains its place among the feasts.

XXVII. After the New Moon comes the fourth 145 feast, called the Crossing-feast,<sup>a</sup> which the Hebrews in their native tongue call Pascha. In this festival many myriads of victims from noon till eventide<sup>b</sup> are offered by the whole people, old and young alike, raised for that particular day to the dignity of the priesthood.<sup>c</sup> For at other times the priests according to the ordinance of the law carry out both the public sacrifices and those offered by private individuals. But on this occasion the whole nation performs the sacred rites and acts as priest with pure hands and complete immunity. The reason for this is as follows: the 146 festival is a reminder and thank-offering for that great migration from Egypt which was made by more than two millions<sup>d</sup> of men and women in obedience to the oracles vouchsafed to them. Now at that time they had left a land brimful of inhumanity which made a practice of expelling strangers, and what was worst of all, assigned divine honours to irrational creatures, not merely domesticated animals, but even wild crossing a swollen river; cf. § 147 ἐπικλύζει χειμάρρου ποταμοῦ τρόπον. See also App. p. 627.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 627.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Mos. ii. 224.

<sup>d</sup> See Ex. xii. 37, "about six hundred thousand on foot that were men besides children" (i.e. "besides the baggage").
So too, Num. xi. 21. "600,000 men implies a total including women and children of at least 2,000,000 souls" (Driver, ad loc.).

PHILO

- ὑπὸ τῆς ἄγαν περιχαρείας ἔθνον αὐτοὶ διὰ προ-θυμίαν ἄλεκτον καὶ τάχος ἐσπευσμένον τοὺς ἱερεῖς οὐκ ἀναμένοντες. τοῦτο δὴ τότεπραχθὲν αὐτοκελεύστῳ καὶ ἐθελουργῶ πάθει δρᾶν ἐφῆκεν ὁ νόμος ἅπαξ κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ἕκαστον εἰς εὐχαριστίας ὑπόμνησιν. ταῦτα μὲν κατὰ παλαιὰν ἀρχαιολογίαν 147 ἱστορεῖται. οἷς δὲ τὰ ῥητὰ τρέπειν πρὸς ἀλληγορίαν ἔθος ψυχῆς κάθαρσιν αἰνίττεται τὰ διαβατήρια· φασὶ γὰρ τὸν σοφίας ἐραστὴν οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἐπιτηδεύειν ἢ τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ σώματος καὶ τῶν παθῶν διάβασιν, ὧν ἕκαστον ἐπικλύζει χειμάρρου ποταμοῦ τρόπον, εἰ μὴ τις τοῖς ἀρετῆς δόγμασιν ἀνακόπτοι καὶ ἀναχαιτίζοι τὴν φορᾶν.
 148 ἐκάστη δὲ οἰκία κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον σχῆμα ἱεροῦ καὶ σεμνότητα περιβέβληται, τοῦ σφαγιασθέντος ἱερέου πρὸς τὴν ἀρμόττουσαν εὐωχίαν εὐτρεπιζομένου καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ τὰ συσσίτια συνειλεγμένων ἀγνευτικοῖς περιρραντηρίοις κεκαθαρμένων, οἱ παραγεγόνασιν οὐχ ὡς εἰς τὰ ἄλλα συμπόσια χαριούμενοι γαστρὶ δι' οἴνου καὶ ἐδεσμάτων, ἀλλὰ πάτριον ἔθος ἐκπληρώσοντες μετ' 149 εὐχῶν τε καὶ ὕμνων. ἄξιον μέντοι καὶ τὴν ἡμέραν παρασημῆνασθαι τῆς πανδήμου εὐωχίας· ἄγεται γὰρ τεσσαρεσκαδεκάτῃ τοῦ μηνός, ἥτις ἐκ δυεῖν ἑβδομάδων συνέστηκεν, ἵνα μηδὲν ἀμοιρῆ τῶν ἀξίων τιμῆς ἑβδομάδος, ἀλλ' αὕτη κατάρχη πᾶσιν ἐπιφανείας καὶ σεμνότητος.
 [293] XXVIII. | Συνάπτει δὲ τοῖς διαβατηρίοις ἑορτὴν
 150 διάφορον ἔχουσαν καὶ οὐ συνήθη τροφῆς χρῆσιν,

---

<sup>a</sup> The suggestion that the feast was instituted after the departure is, of course, quite opposed to Ex. xii., where the 396

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 146-150

beasts. So exceedingly joyful were they that in their vast enthusiasm and impatient eagerness, they naturally enough sacrificed without waiting for their priest.<sup>a</sup> This practice which on that occasion was the result of a spontaneous and instinctive emotion, was sanctioned by the law once in every year to remind them of their duty of thanksgiving. These are the facts as discovered by the study of ancient history.

But to those who are accustomed to turn literal facts 147 into allegory, the Crossing-festival suggests the purification of the soul. They say that the lover of wisdom is occupied solely in crossing from the body and the passions, each of which overwhelms him like a torrent, unless the rushing current be dammed and held back by the principles of virtue. On 148 this day every dwelling-house is invested with the outward semblance and dignity of a temple. The victim is then slaughtered and dressed for the festal meal which befits the occasion. The guests assembled for the banquet have been cleansed by purificatory lustrations, and are there not as in other festive gatherings, to indulge the belly with wine and viands, but to fulfil with prayers and hymns the custom handed down by their fathers. The day on which 149 this national festivity occurs may very properly be noted. It is the 14th of the month, a number formed of the sum of two sevens, thus bringing out the fact that seven never fails to appear in anything worthy of honour but everywhere takes the lead in conferring prestige and dignity.

XXVIII. With the Crossing-feast he combines one 150 in which the food consumed is of a different and un-blood of the victim is to be smeared on the doorposts to avert the destroying angel.

PHILO

ἄζυμα, ἀφ' οὗ καὶ ὠνόμασαι. διττὸς δὲ ὁ περὶ αὐτῆς λόγος, ὁ μὲν ἴδιος τοῦ ἔθνους ἕνεκα τῆς λεχθείσης ἀποικίας, ὁ δὲ κοινὸς κατὰ φύσεως ἀκολουθίαν καὶ τὴν τοῦ κόσμου παντὸς ἁρμονίαν. ὡς δ' ἀψευδῆς ἢ ὑπόσχεσις, ἐπισκεπτέον. ἕβδομος ὢν ὁ μὴν οὗτος ἀριθμῶ τε καὶ τάξει κατὰ τὸν ἡλιακὸν κύκλον δυνάμει πρῶτός ἐστι, διὸ<sup>1</sup> καὶ πρῶτος ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις ἀναγράφεται.
 151 αἴτιον δὲ ὡς γε οἶμαι τόδε· τὴν ἑαρινὴν ἰσημερίαν ἀπεικόνισμά τι καὶ μίμημα συμβέβηκεν εἶναι τῆς ἀρχῆς ἐκείνης, καθ' ἣν ὅδε ὁ κόσμος ἐδημιουργεῖτο· τότε γὰρ διακρινομένων τῶν στοιχείων καὶ τὴν ἐναρμόνιον τάξιν λαμβανόντων πρὸς τε αὐτὰ καὶ πρὸς ἄλληλα, διεκοσμεῖτο μὲν ὁ οὐρανὸς ἡλίῳ καὶ σελήνῃ καὶ ταῖς τῶν ἄλλων πλανήτων καὶ ἀπλανῶν ἀστέρων χορείαις καὶ περιόδοις, διεκοσμεῖτο δὲ καὶ ἡ γῆ παντοίαις φυτῶν ἰδέαις καὶ ὄση τῆς ὄρεινῆς καὶ πεδιάδος ἀγαθῆ καὶ βαθεῖα πᾶσα 152 ἐτεθῆλει καὶ ἐχλοσφόρει. καθ' ἕκαστον οὖν ἐνιαυτὸν ὑπομμνήσκων ὁ θεὸς τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως ἀνέφηγε τὸ ἔαρ, ἐν ᾧ πάντα ἀνθεῖ καὶ βλαστάνει. διόπερ οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ πρῶτος ἀνα-γέγραπται μὴν ἐν τοῖς νόμοις, ἐπειδὴ τρόπον τινὰ τῆς πρώτης ἀρχῆς ἐκμαγεῖόν ἐστιν, ἀπ' ἐκείνης 153 ὡσπερ ἀρχετύπου σφραγίδος τυπωθεῖς. ὁ δὲ κατὰ<sup>2</sup> τὴν μετοπωρινὴν ἰσημερίαν τῇ τάξει [πρώτῃ] πρῶτος ὢν ἐν ταῖς ἡλιακαῖς περιόδοις οὐ λέγεται

<sup>1</sup> MS. and Nicetas διότι.

<sup>2</sup> MS. and Nicetas μετὰ.

---

<sup>a</sup> The feast of Unleavened Bread is regularly distinguished from the Passover, though following immediately after it.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 150-153

familiar kind, namely, unleavened bread, which also gives its name to the feast.<sup>a</sup> This may be regarded from two points of view, one peculiar to the nation, referring to the migration just mentioned, the other universal, following the lead of nature, and in agreement with the general cosmic order. To show that this affirmation is absolutely true, will require some examination. This month comes seventh in order and number as judged by the cycle of the sun, but in importance it is first, and therefore is described as first in the sacred books.<sup>b</sup> The reason for this I 151 believe to be as follows. In the spring equinox we have a kind of likeness and portraiture of that first epoch in which this world was created. The elements were then separated and placed in harmonious order with reference to themselves and each other. The heaven was adorned with sun and moon and the rhythmic movements and circlings of the other stars, both fixed and planetary. So too the earth was adorned with every manner of plants, and the uplands and lowlands, wherever the soil had depth and goodness, became luxuriant and verdant. So every year God reminds us of the creation of the 152 world by setting before our eyes the spring when everything blooms and flowers. And therefore there is good reason for describing it in the laws as the first month because in a sense it is an image of the primal origin reproduced from it like the imprint from an archetypal seal. But the month of the 153 autumnal equinox, though first in order as measured by the course of the sun, is not called first in the law, See Lev. xxiii. 5 ff., and also for the details mentioned below cf. i. 181 f.

<sup>b</sup> See Ex. xii. 2, and note (App.) on i. 180.

PHILO

παρὰ τῷ νόμῳ πρῶτος, ὅτι κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον συγκεκομισμένων τῶν καρπῶν ἀπάντων τὰ δένδρα φυλλορροεῖ καὶ ὅσα ἀκμάζον τὸ ἔαρ ἤνεγκε πάντα [ξηραίνεται] ἀφαναίνεται ξηροῖς πνεύμασι τοῦ αἰέρος ἀυχμῶδη καταστάντα τοῖς ἀφ' ἡλίου φλογ-154 μοῖς. πρῶτον μὲν οὖν ἐπιφημίσαι μῆνα, καθ' ὃν ἐστείρωται καὶ ἀγονεῖ ἢ τε ὄρεινῇ καὶ ἢ πεδιάς, παντάπασιν ὑπέλαβεν<sup>1</sup> ἀνάρμοστον καὶ ἀνοίκειον εἶναι· δεῖ γὰρ τοῖς πρώτοις καὶ ἡγεμονίδα τάξιν εἰληχόσι προσεῖναι τὰ κάλλιστα καὶ εὐκταιότατα, δι' ὧν αἱ ζώων καὶ καρπῶν καὶ φυτῶν γενέσεις καὶ αὐξήσεις εἰσίν, ἀλλ' οὐχ αἱ παλίμφημοι 155 φθοραί. τῆς δὲ ἑορτῆς ἀρχὴ διχόμηνος, ἢ πεντεκαιδεκάτη, καθ' ἣν σελήνη πλησιφαῆς γίνεται, προνοία τοῦ μηδὲν εἶναι σκότος κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν, ἀλλὰ φωτὸς ἀνάπλεα πάντα διὰ πάντων, ἡλίου μὲν ἔωθεν εἰς ἑσπέραν ἐπιλάμποντος, σελήνης δὲ ἀφ' ἑσπέρας ἄχρι τῆς ἔω τὰς αὐτὰς<sup>2</sup> . . . , τῶν <δ'> ἀστέρων ἀλλήλοις ἀντιπαραχωρούντων 156 ἀσκίοις φέγγεσιν. ἢ δὲ ἑορτὴ πάλιν ἐφ' ἡμέρας ἑπτὰ ἄγεται δι' ἣν ἔλαχεν ἐν κόσμῳ ὁ ἀριθμὸς προνομίαν τε καὶ τιμὴν, ἵνα μηδὲν τῶν εἰς εὐθυμίαν καὶ πάνδημον εὐφροσύνην καὶ εὐχαριστίαν τὴν πρὸς τὸν θεὸν ἀπολείπηται τῆς ἱερᾶς ἑβδομάδος, ἣν ἀρχὴν καὶ πηγὴν ἀνθρώποις

<sup>1</sup> MS. παντάπασι κατέλαβε.

<sup>2</sup> I have reproduced Cohn's text, though it might be as well to omit the signs of a lacuna, as it is quite possible that the corruption may lie in τὰς αὐτὰς itself. Cohn suggests τὰς αὐγὰς <πεμπούσης>, Wendland τὰς αὐτὰς <ἐπιτελούσης χρείας>. I think the simple correction to ὡσαύτως might be worth considering.

<sup>a</sup> Apart from the obvious faultiness of the text, the sentence

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 153-156

because at that time all the fruits have been gathered in and the trees are shedding their leaves and all the bloom which the spring brought in its prime already scorched by the heat of the summer sun is wilting under the dry currents of air. And so to give the name of "first" to a month in which both uplands and lowlands are sterilized and unfruitful seemed to him altogether unsuitable and incongruous. For things which come first and head the list should be associated with all the fairest and most desirable things which are the sources of birth and increase to animals and fruits and plants, not with the processes of destruction and the dark thoughts which it suggests. The feast begins at the middle of the month, on the fifteenth day, when the moon is full, a day purposely chosen because then there is no darkness, but everything is continuously lighted up as the sun shines from morning to evening and the moon from evening to morning and while the stars give place to each other no shadow is cast upon their brightness.<sup>a</sup>

Again, the feast is held for seven days to mark the precedence and honour which the number holds in the universe, indicating that nothing which tends to cheerfulness and public mirth and thankfulness to God should fail to be accompanied with memories of the sacred seven which He intended to be the source and fountain to is difficult. The stars, as Heinemann says, do not give place to each other on a night of full moon. He thinks that τῶν ἀστέρων refers to the sun and moon. I hardly think this is possible. Though we find the sun and moon coupled with the "other stars," and included in the "seven stars," there would be no point here in speaking of them as "the stars." Presumably ἀλλήλοις ἀντιπαραχωρούντων is loosely used for "as one gives way to another," and they are mentioned as reinforcing the light of the moon.

157 ἀγαθῶν ἀπάντων εἶναι διανοήθη. τῶν δὲ ἑπτὰ ἡμερῶν δύο, τὴν πρώτην καὶ τὴν ὑστάτην, “ἀγίας” προσεῖπεν, ἀρχῇ καὶ τέλει προνομίαν, ὡς εἰκός, διδούς καὶ ἅμα βουλόμενος καθάπερ ἐν ὄργανῳ μουσικῶ συμφωνία<sup>1</sup> τῶν ἄκρων τὰς μεθορίους συναρμόσασθαι, τάχα μέντοι καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ τόν τε παρελθόντα καὶ μέλλοντα χρόνον συνωδὸν ἀποφῆναι τῇ ἑορτῇ, τὸν μὲν παρεληλυθότα συνάπτοντα <τῇ πρώτῃ, τὸν δὲ μέλλοντα> τῇ τελευταίᾳ, ὧν ἑκατέρα τὴν ἑαυτῆς καὶ τῆς ἑτέρας δύναμιν εἴληχεν· ἢ τε γὰρ πρώτη τῆς μὲν ἑορτῆς ἐστὶν ἀρχή, τέλος δὲ τοῦ παρεληλυθότος χρόνου, ἢ τε ἐβδόμη τέλος μὲν τῆς ἑορτῆς, ἀρχή δὲ τοῦ μέλλοντος, ἴν’, ὃ καὶ πρόσθεν εἶπον, ἅπας ὁ τοῦ σπουδαίου βίος ἰσότημος ἑορτῇ νομίζεται λύπην καὶ φόβον καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν καὶ τᾶλλα πάθη καὶ νοσήματα τῆς ψυχῆς ἐληλα-158 κότος. ὁ δ’ ἄρτος ἄζυμος, ἦτοι διὰ τὸ τοὺς προγόνους, ἠνίκα θεία πομπῇ τὴν ἀποικίαν ἐστέλλοντο, χρωμένους ἀνυπερβλήτῳ τάχει τὰ φυράματα τοῦ σταιτὸς ἄζυμα ἐπενέγκασθαι ἢ ἐπειδὴ κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν ἐκείνον (λέγω δὲ τὴν ἑαρινὴν ὥραν, ἐν ἣ συμβαίνει τὴν ἑορτὴν ἄγεσθαι) ὁ τοῦ σίτου καρπὸς ἀτελής ἐστι, τῶν πεδίων σταχυηφορούντων καὶ μῆπω καιρὸν ἐχόντων εἰς ἄμητον. ἀτελεῖ δὴ τῷ μέλλοντι καρπῷ τελειω-θησομένῳ δὲ μικρὸν ὕστερον ἔδικαίωσεν ἐξομοιωσαι τὴν ἄζυμον τροφήν—ἀτελής γάρ ἐστι καὶ αὕτη—πρὸς ἐλπίδος χρηστῆς ὑπόμνησιν, ὡς ἤδη τῆς φύσεως τὰς ἐτησίους εὐτρεπιζομένης ἀνθρώπων γένει δωρεὰς ἐν τῇ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἀφθονίᾳ καὶ

<sup>1</sup> ms. and Nicetas συμφωνίαν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 157-158

men of all good things. Two days out of the seven, 157 the first and the last, are declared holy. In this way he gave a natural precedence to the beginning and the end; but he also wished to create a harmony as on a musical instrument between the intermediates and the extremes. Perhaps too he wished to harmonize the feast with a past which adjoins the first day and a future which adjoins the last. These two, the first and the last, have each the other's properties in addition to their own. The first is the beginning of the feast and the end of the preceding past, the seventh is the end of the feast and the beginning of the coming future. Thus, as I have said before,<sup>a</sup> the whole life of the man of worth may be regarded as equivalent to a feast held by one who has expelled grief and fear and desire and the other passions and distempers of the soul. The 158 bread is unleavened either because our forefathers, when under divine guidance they were starting on their migration, were so intensely hurried that they brought the lumps of dough unleavened,<sup>b</sup> or else because at that season, namely, the springtime, when the feast is held, the fruit of the corn has not reached its perfection, for the fields are in the ear stage and not yet mature for harvest. It was the imperfection of this fruit which belonged to the future, though it was to reach its perfection very shortly, that he considered might be paralleled by the unleavened food, which is also imperfect, and serves to remind us of the comforting hope that nature, possessing as she does a superabundant wealth of things needful, is already preparing her yearly gifts to the human

<sup>a</sup> In § 48.

<sup>b</sup> So Ex. xii. 34, 39, and Deut. xvi. 3.

PHILO

- 159 περιουσία. λέγεται δὲ κακείνο τοῖς ἐξηγηταῖς τῶν ἱερῶν γραμμάτων, ὅτι ἡ μὲν ἄζυμος τροφή δώρημα φύσεώς ἐστίν, ἡ δ' ἐζυμωμένη τέχνης ἔργον· ἐπιτηδεύσει γὰρ ἄνθρωποι τὰ ἡδέα τοῖς ἀναγκαίοις<sup>1</sup> ἀναμιγνύναι σπεύδοντες τὸ αὐστηρὸν τῇ 160 φύσει προσηνὲς τέχνη κατεσκεύασαν. ἐπεὶ οὖν ἐστίν ἡ ἑαρινὴ ἑορτῆ, καθάπερ ἐδίδαξα, τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως ὑπόμνημα, τοὺς δὲ παλαιάτους γηγενεῖς τε καὶ ἐκ γηγενῶν ἀναγκαῖον ἦν χρῆσασθαι [294] ταῖς | τοῦ κόσμου δωρεαῖς ἀδιαστρόφοις, μήπω τῆς ἡδονῆς παρευημερούσης, οἰκειοτάτην τροφήν ἐνομοθέτησε τῷ καιρῷ, βουλόμενος ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος τὰ τῆς σεμνῆς καὶ αὐστηρᾶς διαίτης ἐμπυρεύματα ζωπυρεῖν καὶ ἅμα τὸν ἀρχαῖον βίον τῆς ὀλιγοδείας καὶ εὐτελείας θαυμάσαι τε καὶ τιμῆσαι πανηγύρεως ἐκεχειρία καὶ τὸν ἡμῶν καθ' ὅσον οἶόν τε ἦν 161 ἐξομοιωῶσαι τῷ παλαιῷ. τὰ λεχθέντα πιστοῦται μάλιστα ἡ τῶν ἰσαρίθμων ταῖς φυλαῖς ἐπὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς τραπέζης ἄρτων δώδεκα πρόθεσις· εἰσὶ γὰρ πάντες ἄζυμοι, δεῖγμα σαφέστατον ἀμιγοῦς τροφῆς οὐ τέχνη πρὸς ἡδονὴν ἀλλὰ φύσει πρὸς τὸ τῆς χρήσεως ἀναγκαῖον εὐτρεπισθείσης. ταῦτα μὲν ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον.
- 162 XXIX. Ἐορτῆ δέ ἐστίν ἐν ἑορτῇ ἡ μετὰ τὴν πρώτην εὐθὺς ἡμέραν, ἣτις ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ὀνομάζεται δράγμα· τοῦτο γὰρ ἀπαρχὴ προσάγεται τῷ βωμῷ καὶ τῆς χώρας, ἣν ἔλαχε τὸ ἔθνος οἰκεῖν,

<sup>1</sup> MS. δικαίοις.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xxiv. 5 ff.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xxiii. 10 ff.; for “directly after the first day”

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 159-162

race. Another suggestion made by the interpreters 159 of the holy scriptures is that food, when unleavened, is a gift of nature, when leavened is a work of art. For men in their eagerness to temper the barely necessary with the pleasant, have learned through practice to soften by art what nature has made hard. Since, then, the spring-time feast, as I have laid down, 160 is a reminder of the creation of the world, and its earliest inhabitants, children of earth in the first or second generation, must have used the gifts of the universe in their unperverted state before pleasure had got the mastery, he ordained for use on this occasion the food most fully in accordance with the season. He wished every year to rekindle the embers of the serious and ascetic mode of faring, and to employ the leisure of a festal assembly to confer admiration and honour on the old-time life of frugality and economy, and as far as possible to assimilate our present-day life to that of the distant past. These 161 statements are especially guaranteed by the exposure of the twelve loaves corresponding in number to the tribes, on the holy table.<sup>a</sup> They are all unleavened, the clearest possible example of a food free from admixture, in the preparation of which art for the sake of pleasure has no place, but only nature, providing nothing save what is indispensable for its use. So much for this.

XXIX. But within the feast there is another feast 162 following directly after the first day. This is called the "Sheaf,"<sup>b</sup> a name given to it from the ceremony which consists in bringing to the altar a sheaf as a first-fruit, both of the land which has been given to ibid. 11; LXX "on the morrow of the first day"; Hebrew "on the morrow after the sabbath." See App. p. 627.

PHILO

καὶ τῆς συμπάσης γῆς, ὡς εἶναι τὴν ἀπαρχὴν καὶ τοῦ ἔθνους ἰδίαν καὶ ὑπὲρ ἅπαντος ἀνθρώπων 163 γένους κοινήν. τὸ δ' αἴτιον, ὅτι ὄν λόγον ἔχει πρὸς πόλιν ἱερεὺς, τοῦτον πρὸς ἅπασαν τὴν οἰκουμένην τὸ Ἰουδαίων ἔθνος. ἱεράται γάρ, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἅπασι τοῖς ἀγνευτικοῖς καθαρσίοις χρώμενον καὶ κατὰ σῶμα καὶ κατὰ ψυχὴν ὑφηγήσεσι νόμων θείων, οἱ τὰς τε γαστρὸς ἡδονὰς καὶ ὑπογαστρίου ἐστειλαν καὶ τὸν ὄχλον * * *<sup>1</sup> ταῖς αἰσθήσεσιν ἠνίοχον ἀλόγοις λόγον ἐπιστήσαντες, ἔτι δὲ καὶ τὰς τῆς ψυχῆς ἀκρίτους καὶ πλεοναζούσας ὀρμὰς ἀνέκοψαν καὶ ἀνεχαίτισαν, τὰ μὲν μαλακωτέραις ὑφηγήσεσι καὶ φιλοσόφοις προτροπαῖς, τὰ δ' ἐμβριθεστέροις καὶ εὐτονωτέροις ἐλέγχοις καὶ φόβῳ κολάσεως, ὄν ἐπανατείνονται.

164 χωρὶς δὲ τοῦ τὴν νομοθεσίαν τρόπον τινὰ διδασκαλίαν ἱερωσύνης εἶναι καὶ τὸν βιοῦντα κατὰ τοὺς νόμους εὐθὺς ἱερέα, μᾶλλον δ' ἀρχιερέα, παρ' ἀληθεία δικαζούση νομίζεσθαι κακέينو πρόσ-εστιν ἐξαίρετον· ἀπερίγραφον καὶ ἀπερίληπτον συμβέβηκεν εἶναι θεῶν πλῆθος τῶν κατὰ πόλεις<sup>2</sup> τιμωμένων ἀρρένων τε καὶ θηλειῶν, οὓς τό τε

<sup>1</sup> Cohn prints here καὶ τὸν ὄχλον <τῆς ψυχῆς ἐχαλίνωσαν, νοῦν> ταῖς αἰσθήσεσι κτλ. I have not followed him, since the insertion is, as he says, only "exempli gratia," and does not seem particularly happy. Philo is amplifying κατὰ σῶμα καὶ κατὰ ψυχὴν, and as we take up ψυχὴ in ἔτι δὲ καὶ κτλ. it seems out of place here. Something is certainly needed after ὄχλον, but αὐτῶν would be in itself enough, or αὐτῶν ἐχαλίνωσαν since ὄχλον contains the notion of turbulence as well as crowd.

<sup>2</sup> MS. πόλιν.

<sup>a</sup> Or "This follows from the fact that," etc. For the following sections cf. i. 97, though there it is the high priest, and not the Jewish nation, who prays for the world. Heine-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 162-164

the nation to dwell in and of the whole earth, so that it serves that purpose both to the nation in particular and for the whole human race in general. The 163 reason of this is<sup>a</sup> that the Jewish nation is to the whole inhabited world what the priest is to the State. For the holy office in very truth belongs to the nation because it carries out all the rites of purification and both in body and soul obeys the injunctions of the divine laws, which restrict the pleasures of the belly and the parts below it and the horde . . . setting reason to guide the irrational senses, and also check and rein in the wild and extravagant impulses of the soul, sometimes through gentler remonstrances and philosophical admonitions, sometimes through severer and more forcible condemnations and the fear of punishment which they hold over it as a deterrent.

But not only is the legislation in a sense 164 a lesson on the sacred office, not only does a life led in conformity with the laws necessarily confer priesthood or rather high priesthood in the judgement of truth, but there is another point of special importance. There is no bound or limit to the number of deities, male and female, honoured in different cities, the vain inven-

mann notes that it is curious that the sections which follow emphasizing the world-priesthood of the Jewish race should be connected with the comparatively insignificant rite of the Sheaf, particularly as Philo in De Som. ii. 75 has laid down that the sheaf must be taken from the holy land. But the sheaf is actually the first-fruit of the whole harvest, the accomplishment of which is celebrated in the feasts of Weeks and Tabernacles. Philo does not argue the world-priesthood from the rite, but asserts it as a fact shewn by (1) the obedience of Israel to the divine law; (2) its unique monotheism, and argues from it that the Sheaf, and by implication the other thank-offerings, are world-extensive. That he should attach this argument to the first example is not unnatural.

PHILO

ποιητικὸν γένος ἐμύθευσε καὶ <ὁ> πολὺς ὄμιλος ἀνθρώπων, οἷς ἄπορος<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἀδιερεύνητος ἡ ζήτησις τῆς ἀληθείας ἐστίν· οὐ μὴν τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἅπαντες ἀλλὰ ἑτέρους ἕτεροι σεμνοποιοῦσι καὶ γεραίρουσιν, ὡς μηδὲ θεοὺς τοὺς ἐπὶ τῆς ἀλλοδαπῆς νομίζειν, ἀλλὰ γέλωτα καὶ χλεύην θέσθαι<sup>2</sup> τὰς ἐκείνων ἀποδοχὰς<sup>3</sup> καὶ καταγινώσκειν τῶν τιμώντων πολλὴν ἠλιθιότητα ὡς ὑγιοῦς διαμαρτανόντων δόξης.

165 εἰ δ' ἔστιν, ὃν μιᾷ γνώμῃ πάντες ὁμολογοῦσιν Ἕλληνας ὁμοῦ καὶ βάρβαροι, ὁ ἀνωτάτω πατῆρ θεῶν τε καὶ ἀνθρώπων καὶ τοῦ σύμπαντος κόσμου δημιουργός, οὗ τὴν φύσιν ἀόρατον καὶ δυστόπαστον οὐσαν οὐ μόνον ὄραθῆναι ἀλλὰ καὶ νοηθῆναι πάντες οἱ περὶ τὰ μαθήματα καὶ τὴν ἄλλην φιλοσοφίαν διατρίβοντες ἀναζητεῖν γλίχονται μηδὲν παρέντες τῶν εἰς εὔρεσιν καὶ [τούτου] θεραπείαν, ἔδει μὲν πάντας ἀνθρώπους ἀνῆφθαι <τούτου> καὶ μὴ καθάπερ ἀπὸ μηχανῆς εἰσποιεῖν ἑτέρους ἐπὶ

166 μετουσίᾳ τῶν ἴσων τιμῶν. ἐπεὶ δὲ περὶ τὸ ἀναγκαιότατον ὠλισθον μέρος, τὸ σφάλμα τῶν ἄλλων ἐπηνωρθώσατο, κυριώτατα φάναι, τὸ Ἰουδαίων ἔθνος, ὅσα μὲν εἰς γένεσιν ἦλθε πάνθ' ὑπερκύψαν ὡς γενητὰ καὶ τῇ φύσει φθαρτά, τοῦ δ' ἀγενήτου

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἄπνοσ.

<sup>2</sup> MS. ὑποθέσθαι.

<sup>3</sup> MS. ὑποδοχὰς.

<sup>a</sup> This is a remarkable statement, and can hardly mean more than that all acknowledge a creator of some sort. In such a general statement he may perhaps ignore atheists, but the words are not easy to reconcile with what he says elsewhere of polytheists. Or does he think that all the theologies like the Greek and Roman acknowledged one God as above the rest?

<sup>b</sup> Heinemann translates by "Naturforschung." But

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 164–166

tions of the tribe of poets and of the great multitude of men to whom the quest for truth is a task of difficulty and beyond their powers of research. Yet instead of all peoples having the same gods, we find different nations venerating and honouring different gods. The gods of the foreigner they do not regard as gods at all. They treat their acceptance by the others as a jest and a laughing-stock and denounce the extreme folly of those who honour them and the failure to think soundly shewn thereby. But if He 165 exists Whom all Greeks and barbarians unanimously acknowledge,<sup>a</sup> the supreme Father of gods and men and the Maker of the whole universe, whose nature is invisible and inscrutable not only by the eye, but by the mind, yet is a matter into which every student of astronomical science <sup>b</sup> and other philosophy desires to make research and leaves nothing untried which would help him to discern it and do it service—then it was the duty of all men to cleave to Him and not introduce new gods staged as by machinery<sup>c</sup> to receive the same honours. When they went 166 wrong in what was the most vital matter of all, it is the literal truth that the error which the rest committed was corrected by the Jewish nation which passed over all created objects because they were created and naturally liable to destruction and chose μαθήματα, where it is not used quite generally, seems regularly to indicate either mathematics as in § 177 below, or what was regarded as a branch of mathematics, astronomy or astrology. For the latter cf. De Praem. 58 τῆς ἐν τοῖς μαθήμασι Χαλδαικῆς τερθρείας and De Virt. 212 ἀστρονομικοῦ τῶν περὶ τὰ μαθήματα διατριβόντων. So too μαθηματικός (-ή), § 140 above and De Mut. 71 πραγματευόμενον τὰ περὶ φύσεως οὐρανοῦ ὄν μαθηματικὸν ἔνιοι προσαγορεύουσι.

<sup>c</sup> See on i. 28.

PHILO

- καὶ αἰδίου μόνον τὴν θεραπείαν ἐλόμενον· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι καλόν, ἔπειτα δ' ὅτι καὶ ὠφέλιμον πρεσβυτέρῳ πρὸ νεωτέρων καὶ ἄρχοντι πρὸ ἀρχομένων καὶ ποιητῇ πρὸ γεγονότων ἀνακεῖσθαι τε καὶ προσ-
- 167 τίθεσθαι.<sup>1</sup> διὸ καὶ θαυμάζειν ἐπέρχεται μοι, πῶς τολμῶσί τινες ἀπανθρωπίαν τοῦ ἔθνους κατηγορεῖν, ὃ τοσαύτῃ κέχρηται κοινωνίας καὶ εὐνοίας τῆς<sup>2</sup> πρὸς <τοὺς> πανταχοῦ πάντας ὑπερβολῇ, ὡς τὰς τε εὐχὰς καὶ ἑορτὰς καὶ ἀπαρχὰς ὑπὲρ τοῦ κοινοῦ γένους τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπιτελεῖν καὶ τὸν ὄντως ὄντα θεὸν θεραπεύειν ὑπὲρ τε ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων, οἱ τὰς ὀφειλομένας λατρείας ἀποδεδράκασι.
- 168 Καὶ ταῦτα μὲν ὑπὲρ τοῦ σύμπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους. ἰδίᾳ δὲ πάλιν εὐχαριστοῦσι <διὰ> πολλά· πρῶτον μὲν <ὅτι> οὐκ αἰεὶ σποράδην ἀλώμενοι κατὰ τε νήσους καὶ ἡπείρους διατελοῦσι καὶ ὡς ὀθνεῖοι καὶ ἀνὶδρυτοὶ τὰς ἐτέρων ἐπωκηκότες καὶ ἀλλοτρίοις ἐφεδρεύοντες ἀγαθοῖς ὀνειδίζονται μηδεμίαν γῆς<sup>3</sup> τοσαύτης ἀποτομῆν τῷ μειονεκτεῖσθαι<sup>4</sup> δανεισάμενοι, χώραν δὲ καὶ πόλεις κτησάμενοι κλῆρον ἴδιον ἐκ πολλοῦ νέμονται, ἀφ' οὗ<sup>5</sup> τὰς
- 169 ἀπαρχὰς ὁσιόν ἐστι ποιεῖσθαι. δευτέρον δ' ὅτι οὔτε ἀπόβλητον καὶ τὴν ἐπιτυχοῦσαν<sup>6</sup> ἀλλ' ἀγαθὴν καὶ πάμφορον γῆν ἔλαχον πρὸς τε ζῶων ἡμέρων

<sup>1</sup> MS. προτίθεσθαι.

<sup>2</sup> MS. τῆ = τῇ.

<sup>3</sup> MS. τῆς.

<sup>4</sup> Cohn prints <ἐπι> τῷ μετοικίεσθαι; see note a.

<sup>5</sup> MS. ἀφ' ὧν.

<sup>6</sup> MS. ἀποτυχοῦσαν.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cohn in Hermes, 1908, p. 200, argues in justification of his correction (see note 4), that it fits in very well with the last words of § 170. This is true, but I cannot follow his

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 166-169

the service only of the Uncreated and Eternal, first because of its excellence, secondly because it is profitable to dedicate and attach ourselves to the elder rather than to the younger, to the ruler rather than to the subject, to the maker rather than to the thing created. And therefore it astonishes me to 167 see that some people venture to accuse of inhumanity the nation which has shewn so profound a sense of fellowship and goodwill to all men everywhere, by using its prayers and festivals and first-fruit offerings as a means of supplication for the human race in general and of making its homage to the truly existent God in the name of those who have evaded the service which it was their duty to give, as well as of itself.

So much for this feast as a thanksgiving for the 168 whole human race. But the nation in particular also gives thanks for many reasons. First, because they do not continue for ever wandering broadcast over islands and continents and occupying the homelands of others as strangers and vagrants, open to the reproach of waiting to seize the goods of others. Nor have they just borrowed a section of this great country for lack of means to purchase,<sup>a</sup> but have acquired the land and cities for their own property, a heritage in which they live as long established citizens and therefore offer first-fruits from it as a sacred duty. Secondly, the land which has fallen 169 to their lot is not derelict nor indifferent soil, but good land, well fitted for breeding domestic animals dictum that μειονεκτεῖσθαι makes no sense. The nation was not like people who borrow or hire a piece of ground because they have not enough to buy it. μειονεκτεῖν is common enough, though I have not found an example of the middle. Heinemann translates μειονεκτεῖσθαι, though he calls the word corrupt.

PHILO

- εὐγονίας καὶ καρπῶν ἀμυθήτων ἀφθονίαν· ἐν αὐτῇ γὰρ οὐδέν ἐστι λυπρόγεων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅσα λιθώδη καὶ ἀπόκροτα εἶναι δοκεῖ φλεψὶ μαλακαῖς διέζωσται καὶ σφόδρα βαθείαις, αἱ διὰ πύοτητα ζωοφυτεῖν
- 170 εἰσιν ἀγαθαί. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις οὐκ ἔρημον χώραν ἔλαβον, ἀλλ' ἐν ἣ πολυάνθρωπον ἔθνος ἦν καὶ εὐανδροῦσαι μεγάλαι πόλεις· ἀλλ' αἱ μὲν ἐκενώθησαν οἰκητόρων, τὸ δὲ σύμπαν ἔθνος ἔξω μέρους βραχέος ἠφανίσθη, τὰ μὲν πολέμοις, τὰ δὲ καὶ θεηλάτοις προσβολαῖς, διὰ καινὰς<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐκτόπους ἐπιτηδεύσεις ἀδικημάτων καὶ ὅσα μεγαλουργοῦντες ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τῶν τῆς φύσεως θεσμῶν ἠσέβουν, ἵνα οἱ ἀντὶ τούτων εἰσοικιζόμενοι τοῖς ἐτέρων σωφρονισθῶσι κακοῖς, ἀναδιδαχθέντες ἔργοις ὅτι ζηλωταὶ μὲν τῶν <κακίας><sup>2</sup> ἔργων γενόμενοι ταυτὰ πείσονται, τιμήσαντες δ' ἀρετῆς βίον ἔξουσι τὸν ἀπονεμηθέντα κλῆρον, οὐκ ἐν μετοίκοις ἀλλ' ἐν
- 171 αὐτόχθοσιν ἐξετασθέντες. ὧς μὲν τοίνυν ἀπαρχὴ τὸ δράγμα τῆς τε οἰκείας καὶ τῆς συμπάσης γῆς ἐστὶν ἐπ' εὐχαριστία γινόμενον εὐθηνίας καὶ εὐετηρίας, ἣ τὸ τε<sup>3</sup> ἔθνος καὶ τὸ σύμπαν ἀνθρώπων γένος ἐπόθει χρῆσθαι, δεδήλωται. προσήκει δὲ μὴ ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι πολλὰ διὰ τῆς ἀπαρχῆς καὶ ὠφελιμώτατα παρίσταται· πρῶτον μὲν θεοῦ μνήμη, ἣς οὐκ ἐστὶν εὐρεῖν ἀγαθὸν<sup>4</sup> τελειότερον, ἔπειτα δὲ τῷ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν αἰτίῳ τῆς εὐκαρπίας ἀμοιβῆς
- 172 δικαιοσύνη. τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ τέχνης γεωργικῆς
- <sup>1</sup> MS. κενὰς.      <sup>2</sup> On Cohn's insertion of <κακίας> see note a.
<sup>3</sup> MS. περί τε.      <sup>4</sup> MS. ἀγαθῶν.

<sup>a</sup> The insertion of κακίας is very doubtful, and perhaps weakens the sense. I suspect that there is a play, not reproducible in English, on two different meanings of ἔργα: (a)

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 169-172

and bearing fruits in vast abundance. For in it there is no poverty of soil and even such parts as seem to be stony or stubborn are intersected by soft veins of very great depth, the richness of which adapts them for producing life. But besides this it 170 was no uninhabited land which they received, but one which contained a populous nation and great cities filled with stalwart citizens. Yet these cities have been stripped of their inhabitants and the whole nation, except for a small fraction, has disappeared, partly through wars, partly through heaven-sent visitations, a consequence of their strange and monstrous practices of iniquity and all their heinous acts of impiety aimed at the subversion of the statutes of nature. Thus should those who took their place as inhabitants gain instruction from the evil fate of others and learn from their history the lesson that if they emulate deeds of vice<sup>a</sup> they will suffer the same doom, but if they pay honour to a life of virtue they will possess the heritage appointed to them and be ranked not as settlers but as native-born.

We have shewn, then, that the Sheaf was an offering 171 both of the nation's own land and of the whole earth, given in thanks for the fertility and abundance which the nation and the whole human race desired to enjoy. But we must not fail to note that there are many things of great advantage represented by the offering. First, that we remember God, and what thing more perfectly good can we find than this? Secondly, that we make a requital, as is most fully due, to Him Who is the true cause of the good harvest. For the 172 results due to the husbandman's art are few or as good taught by actual facts, cf. Mos. ii. 268 τοῦτ' ἀπέβαινεν ἔργοις, (b) emulate their actions.

PHILO

ὀλίγα καὶ τὸ μηδέν, αὐλακας ἀναστεῖλαι ἢ περισκάψαι καὶ γυρῶσαι φυτὸν ἢ βαθῦναι τάφρον ἢ τὰς περιττὰς ἐπιφύσεις ἀποτεμεῖν ἢ τι τῶν ὁμοιοτρόπων ἐργάσασθαι, τὰ δ' ἐκ φύσεως ἀναγκαῖα πάντα καὶ χρήσιμα, γοιμώτατον ἔδαφος, εὐῦδρα χωρία πηγαῖς καὶ ποταμοῖς αὐθιγενέσι καὶ χειμάρροις καὶ ἐτησίοις ὄμβροις καταρδόμενα, ἀέρος εὐκрасίαι ζωτικωτάταις αὔραις ἐπιπνέοντος, αἱ σπαρτῶν καὶ φυτῶν ἰδέαι μυρία· τί γὰρ τούτων ἄνθρωπος ἢ 173 εὔρεν ἢ ἐγέννησεν; ἢ μὲν οὖν γεννήσασα φύσις τῶν ἰδίων ἀγαθῶν οὐκ ἐφθόνησεν ἀνθρώπῳ, ζώων δὲ τῶν θνητῶν ἡγεμονικώτατον αὐτὸν εἶναι ὑπολαβοῦσα, διότι λόγου καὶ φρονήσεως κεκοινώ-νηκεν, ἀριστίνδην εἴλετο καὶ πρὸς μετουσίαν τῶν ἰδίων ἐκάλεσεν· ὑπὲρ ὧν ἄξιον ἐπαινέσθαι τε καὶ θαυμάζεσθαι τὸν ἐστιάτορα θεὸν τὴν ὡς ἀληθῶς ἐστίαν γῆν ἅπασαν αἰεὶ πλήρη παρέχοντα τῶν οὐκ ἀναγκαίων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ <τῶν πρὸς> τὸν ἀβρο-174 δίαιτον βίον. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις τὸ μὴ δεῖν εὐεργατῶν ἀλογεῖν· ὁ γὰρ πρὸς τὸν ἀνεπιδεᾶ καὶ ἑαυτοῦ <πλήρη><sup>1</sup> θεὸν εὐχάριστος γένοιτ' ἂν καὶ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἐξεθισθεῖς, οἱ μυρίων ὄσων ἐνδεεῖς 175 εἰσιν. κρίθινον δὲ τὸ τῆς ἀπαρχῆς δράγμα, πρὸς τὴν τῶν ὑποβεβηκότων ἀνυπαίτιον χρῆσιν· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ οὐτ' εὐαγὲς ἦν ἐκ πάντων ἀπάρχεσθαι, τῶν πλείστων πρὸς ἡδονὴν μᾶλλον ἢ τὴν ἀναγκαίαν χρῆσιν γεγονότων, οὐθ' ὅσιον ἀπολαῦσαι καὶ μετασχεῖν τινος τῶν πρὸς ἔδωδῆν

<sup>1</sup> On Cohn's insertion of πλήρη see note a.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 172-175

as nothing, furrows drawn, a plant dug or ringed around, a trench deepened, excessive overgrowth lopped, or other similar operations. But what we owe to nature is all indispensable and useful, a soil of great fruitfulness, fields irrigated by fountains or rivers, spring-fed or winter torrents, and watered by seasonable rains, happily tempered states of the air which sends us the breath of its truly life-giving breezes, numberless varieties of crops and plants. For which of these has man for its inventor or parent? No, it is nature, their parent, who has not grudged to man a share in the goods which are her very own, but judging him to be the chiefest of mortal animals because he has obtained a portion of reason and good sense, chose him as the worthiest and invited him to share what was hers to give. For all this it is meet and right that the hospitality of God should be praised and revered, God Who provides for His guests the whole earth as a truly hospitable home ever filled not merely with necessaries, but with the means of luxurious living. Further, we learn not to neglect benefactors, for he who is grateful to God, Who needs nothing and is His own fullness,<sup>a</sup> will thus become accustomed to be grateful to men whose needs are numberless. The sheaf thus offered is of barley, shewing that the use of the inferior grains is not open to censure. It would be irreverent to give first-fruits of them all, as most of them are made to give pleasure rather than to be used as necessaries, and equally unlawful to enjoy and partake of any <sup>a</sup> Cohn supports his insertion of πλήρη from Leg. All. i. 44 αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ πλήρης ὁ θεός, cf. De Mut. 27. Without it the text "having no need of Himself" might not be impossible, but would give a conception for which I know no parallel in Philo.

PHILO

μη ἐν οἷς εὐπρεπὲς καὶ θέμις εὐχαριστήσαντας, τὸ δευτερείοις τροφῆς τετιμημένον εἶδος, κριθήν, ἀπάρχεσθαι προσέταξεν ὁ νόμος· ὁ γὰρ τοῦ σίτου <καρπὸς> τὰ πρεσβεῖα ἔλαχεν, οὐδὲ πάλιν τὴν ἀπαρχὴν ἐπιφανεστέραν οὖσαν εἰς ἐπιτηδειότερον ἀνατίθεται καιρὸν, οὐ προεκφοιτῶν ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ παρόντι ταμιευόμενος ὑπὲρ τοῦ καὶ τὰς εὐχαριστίας ἡρμόσθαι χρόνων τεταγμέναις περιόδοις.

176 XXX. Τοσαύτας ἔχουσα προνομίας, ὅποσας ἔδειξεν ὁ νόμος, ἢ ἐπὶ τῷ δράγματι πανήγυρις προέορτός ἐστιν, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἑτέρας ἑορτῆς μείζονος· ἀπὸ γὰρ ἐκείνης ἡμέρα πεντηκοστή καταριθμεῖται ἑπτὰ ἑβδομάσιν, [ἐφ' αἷς]<sup>1</sup> ἱερὸν ἀριθμὸν ἐπισφραγιζομένης μονάδος, ἥτις ἐστὶν ἀσώματος θεοῦ εἰκῶν, ᾧ κατὰ τὴν μόνωσιν ἕξομοιοῦται. τοῦτο μὲν δὴ πρῶτον κάλλος ἐπι-

177 δείκνυται πεντηκοντάς. ἕτερον δὲ μηνυτέον· θαυμαστὴ καὶ περιμάχητός ἐστιν ἡ φύσις <αὐτῆς> διὰ τε τᾶλλα καὶ ἐπειδὴ συνέστηκεν ἐκ τοῦ στοιχειωδεστάτου καὶ πρεσβυτάτου τῶν ἐν οὐσίαις περιλαμβανομένων,<sup>2</sup> ὡς φασιν οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν μαθημάτων, ὀρθογωνίου τριγώνου· μήκει μὲν γὰρ αἰ

<sup>1</sup> ms. ἑβδόμη ἑβδομάς: Nicetas ἑπτὰ ἑβδομάδες. ἐφ' αἷς is omitted in Nicetas, Cohn substitutes for it ἀφέσεως. For a discussion of the text as a whole see App. pp. 627-628.

<sup>2</sup> ms. παραλαμβανομένων.

<sup>a</sup> There is no mention of barley in Lev. xxiii. As Josephus, Ant. iii. 250, says the same, the use of barley had probably become a general practice, which Philo by a slip of memory ascribes to the law.

<sup>b</sup> Or "privileges." If note b on § 162 is right, the προνομία consist in this, that the Sheaf is the first to exhibit all the virtues which accompany thanksgiving and have been enumerated in the preceding sections. Certainly in no other form of food for which thanks had not been offered in the proper and rightful manner. And therefore the law ordained<sup>a</sup> that the first-fruit offerings should be made of barley, a species of grain regarded as holding the second place in value as food. For wheat holds the first place and as the first-fruit of this has greater distinction, the law postponed it to a more suitable season in the future. It does not anticipate matters, but puts it in storage for the time being, so that the various thank-offerings may be adjusted to their appointed dates as they recur.

XXX. The festival of the Sheaf, which has all 176 these grounds of precedence,<sup>b</sup> indicated in the law, is also in fact anticipatory of another greater feast. For it is from it that the fiftieth day is reckoned, by counting seven sevens, which are then crowned with the sacred number by the monad,<sup>c</sup> which is an incorporeal image of God, Whom it resembles because it also stands alone. This is the primary excellence exhibited by fifty, but there is another which should be mentioned. One reason among others which 177 makes its nature so marvellous and admirable is that it is formed by what the mathematicians tell us is the most elemental and venerable of existing things,<sup>d</sup> namely, the right-angled triangle. In length its sense does the law give προνομία to a rite which is disposed of in a few verses in Leviticus and not mentioned elsewhere in the Pentateuch.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. the addition of 1 turns 49 into the sacred number 50. The use of ἐπισφραγίζεται in § 211 is exactly similar.

<sup>d</sup> Lit. "of what is included in existences." The same view of 50 as the sum of the squares of the sides of the primary right-angled triangle appears in De Vit. Cont. 65, where it is called the ἀγώτατος καὶ φυσικώτατος of numbers. See also Mos. ii. 80 and note. For other references see Zeller, Presocratic Philosophy (Eng. Trans.), i. 429 f.

PHILO

τοῦδε πλευραὶ τριῶν οὔσαι καὶ τεσσάρων καὶ πέντε συμπληροῦσιν ἀριθμὸν τὸν δώδεκα, τοῦ ζωοφόρου κύκλου παράδειγμα, διπλασιασθείσης ἑξάδος τῆς γονιμωτάτης, ἣτις ἐστὶν ἀρχὴ τελειότητος, ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων συμπληρουμένη μερῶν, οἷς<sup>1</sup> ἐξισοῦται· δυνάμει δ', ὡς ἔοικεν, ἀπογεννώσι τὸν πεντηκοστὸν διὰ τοῦ τρὶς τρία καὶ τετράκις τέσσαρα καὶ πεντάκις πέντε, ὥστε ἀναγκαῖον εἶναι λέγειν τοσοῦτῳ <κρείττω> δωδεκάδος<sup>2</sup> εἶναι πεντηκοντάδα 178 ὅσῳ καὶ τὸ δυνάμει τοῦ μήκει.<sup>3</sup> εἰ δὲ τοῦ ἐλάττονος εἰκῶν ἐστὶν ἡ καλλιστεύουσα τῶν ἐν οὐρανῷ σφαῖρα ἢ ζωοφόρος, τίνος ἂν εἴη παράδειγμα τὸ κρείττον, ἢ πεντηκοντάς, ἢ πάντως ἀμείνονος φύσεως; περὶ ἧς οὐ καιρὸς λέγειν· αὐτάρκες<sup>4</sup> γὰρ ἐν τῷ παρόντι σεσημειώσθαι τὴν διαφορὰν ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ ἐν παρέργῳ προηγούμενον ἔργον τίθεσθαι.
 179 Πρόσρησιν δ' ἔλαχεν ἡ κατὰ τὸν πεντηκοστὸν ἀριθμὸν ἐνισταμένη ἑορτὴ πρωτογεννημάτων, ἐν ἣ ἑξυμωμένους ἄρτους ἐκ πυροῦ γεγονότας ἔθος προσφέρειν ἀπαρχὴν σίτου, τῆς ἀρίστης τροφῆς. ὠνομάσθη δὲ πρωτογεννημάτων ἡ διότι, πρὶν εἰς τὴν ἀνθρώπων χρῆσιν ἔλθειν τὸν ἐπέτειον καρπὸν, τοῦ νέου σίτου τὸ πρῶτον γέννημα καὶ ὁ πρῶτος παραφανεὶς καρπὸς ἀπαρχὴ προσάγεται—180 δίκαιον γὰρ καὶ ὅσιον τὴν μεγίστην λαβόντας παρὰ θεοῦ δωρεὰν ἀφθονίαν ἀναγκαιοτάτης ὁμοῦ καὶ ὠφελιμωτάτης ἔτι δὲ καὶ ἡδίστης τροφῆς μήτε ἀπολαῦσαι μήτε συνόλως σπάσαι, πρὶν ἀπάρξασθαι τῷ χορηγῷ, διδόντας μὲν οὐδέν, αὐτοῦ γὰρ τὰ πάντα καὶ κτήματα καὶ δωρεαί, διὰ <δὲ> βραχείος

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἡμερῶν αἰς.

<sup>3</sup> MS. τοῦ δυνάμει τὸ μήκος.

<sup>2</sup> MS. δεκάδος.

<sup>4</sup> MS. αὐτάρκως.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 177-180

sides are 5, 3, 4, of which the sum is twelve, the pattern of the zodiac cycle, the duplication of the highly prolific six, which is the starting-point of perfection since it is the sum of the factors which produce it through multiplication. But we find that the sides when raised to the second power, i.e.  $3 \times 3 + 4 \times 4 + 5 \times 5$ , make 50, so that we must say that 50 is superior to 12 in the same degree as the second power is superior to the first. And if the 178 lesser of these is represented by the most excellent of the heavenly spheres, the zodiac, the greater, namely 50, must be the pattern of some quite superior form of existence. But a discussion of this would be out of place at this point. It is quite enough for the present to call attention to the difference, so as to avoid treating a prominent fact as of secondary importance.

The feast which is held when the number 50 is 179 reached has acquired the title of "first-products."<sup>a</sup> On it it is the custom to bring two leavened loaves of wheaten bread for a sample offering of that kind of grain as the best form of food. One explanation of the name, "Feast of First-products," is that the first produce of the young wheat and the earliest fruit to appear is brought as a sample offering before the year's harvest comes to be used by men. It is 180 no doubt just and a religious duty that those who have received freely a generous supply of sustenance so necessary and wholesome and also palatable in the highest degree should not enjoy or taste it at all until they have brought a sample offering to the Donor, not indeed as a gift, for all things and possessions and gifts are His, but as a token, however small,

<sup>a</sup> See on i. 183.

συμβόλου παραφαίνοντας εὐχάριστον καὶ θεοφιλῆς ἦθος πρὸς τὸν χαρίτων μὲν ἀνεπιδεᾶ συνεχεῖς δὲ 181 καὶ ἀενάους χάριτας ἄρδοντα—ἢ διότι κατ' ἐξοχὴν πρῶτον καὶ ἄριστον γέννημα ὁ τοῦ σίτου καρπὸς ἐστίν, ἐν δευτέρᾳ τάξει τῶν ἄλλων καταριθμου-μένων ὅσα σπαρτά· καθάπερ γὰρ ἄρχων <μὲν> ἐν πόλει, κυβερνήτης δ' ἐν νηὶ πρῶτος εἶναι λέγεται, τῷ τὸν μὲν κατὰ πόλιν, τὸν δὲ κατὰ ναῦν ἀφηγεῖσθαι τε καὶ προφέρειν, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ὁ τοῦ σίτου καρπὸς ὀνόματι συνθέτω πρωτογέννημα ὠνομάσθη διὰ τὸ πάντων ἄριστος εἶναι τῶν σπειρομένων· ἔδει γὰρ αὐτὸν καὶ τοῦ ζῶων ἀρίστου 182 τροφὴν εἶναι. ἐζυμωμένοι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ ἄρτοι, τοῦ [295] νόμου ζύμην ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν ἀναφέρειν ἀπειπόντος, οὐχ ἵνα διαμάχη τις ἦ ἐν τοῖς προσταττομένοις, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ τρόπου τινὰ δι' ἐνὸς εἶδους λαβεῖν τε καὶ δοῦναι, λαβεῖν μὲν τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν προσ-φερόντων εὐχαριστίαν, δοῦναι δὲ εὐθὺς ἀνυπερθέτως τὰ κομιζόμενα τοῖς προσφέρουσιν, οὐ μὴν ὥστε 183 χρῆσθαι· χρήσονται γὰρ τοῖς ἅπαξ καθιερωθεῖσιν οἷς ἕξεστί τε καὶ ἐφίεται, ἕξεσσι δὲ τοῖς ἱερωμένοις, οἱ τῶν προσαγομένων τῷ βωμῷ ὅσα μὴ ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀσβέστου πυρὸς ἀναλίσκεται τὴν μετουσίαν ἔλαβον φιλανθρωπία νόμου δοθεῖσαν ἢ μισθὸν ὑπηρεσιῶν<sup>1</sup> ἢ γέρας ἀγώνων, οὓς ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας ἀθλοῦσιν, ἢ κλήρον ἱερόν, τοῦ κατὰ τὴν χώραν μὴ τὸν αὐτὸν

<sup>1</sup> MS. μισθῶν ἢ ὑπηρεσιῶν.

<sup>a</sup> This is the only sense I can give to ἔδει γάρ ("it had to be"). Heinemann "bestimmt," but would not this be ἐμελλε?

<sup>b</sup> Lev. ii. 11, cf. above i. 291. The meaning of what follows seems to be that the prohibition is waived in this case, because the loaves, though given to the Lord (Lev. xxiii. 20),

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 180-183

by which they show a disposition of thankfulness and loyalty to Him Who, while He needs no favours, sends the showers of His favours in never-failing constancy. Another reason for the name may be that wheaten grain is pre-eminent as the first and best product, all the other sown crops ranking in the second class in comparison ; for as an archon in a city or a pilot in a ship are said to be the first because they regulate the course of the city or the ship, as the case may be, so wheaten grain has received the compound name of " first-product " because it is the best of all the cereals, which it would not be,<sup>a</sup> unless it were also the food used by the best of living creatures. The loaves are leavened in spite of the prohibition<sup>b</sup> against bringing leaven to the altar, not to produce any contradiction in the ordinances, but to ensure that so to speak there shall be a single kind, both for receiving and giving. By receiving I mean the thanksgiving of the offerers, by giving the immediate return without any delay to the offerers of what they bring, though not for their own use. For food that has once been consecrated will be used by those who have the right and authority, and that right belongs to those who act as priests who through the beneficence of the law have the right to partake of any thing brought to the altar which is not consumed by the undying fire—a privilege granted either as a payment for officiating or as a prize for the contests which they endure in the cause of piety, or a sacred allotment in lieu of land, in the apportionment of are also received back from Him (" they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest that offers them "). It seems to be assumed that therefore they must be brought in the most palatable form, cf. § 184, presumably because it is a festal occasion, as the unleavened shew-bread was also eaten by the priests.

PHILO

- τρόπον ταῖς ἄλλαις φυλαῖς τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος 184 διανειμάμενοι.<sup>1</sup> σύμβολον δ' ἐστὶ καὶ ἄλλων ἢ ζύμη δυεῖν. ἐνὸς μὲν ἐντελεστάτης καὶ ὀλοκλήρου τροφῆς, ἧς οὐκ ἔστιν εὐρεῖν ἐν τῇ καθ' ἡμέραν χρήσει κρείττονα καὶ λυσιτελεστέραν.
 κράτιστος δὲ καὶ ὁ τοῦ σίτου καρπὸς ἐν σπαρτοῖς, ὡς ἀρμόττειν ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἀρίστου ποιεῖσθαι τὴν 185 ἀρίστην ἀπαρχήν. ἕτερον δὲ συμβολικώτερον· πᾶν τὸ ἐζυμωμένον ἐπαίρεται· χαρὰ δὲ ψυχῆς ἐστὶν εὐλογος ἔπαρσις· ἐπ' οὐδενὶ δὲ τῶν ὄντων μᾶλλον χαίρειν πέφυκεν ἄνθρωπος ἢ εὐπορία καὶ ἀφθονία τῶν ἀναγκαίων· ἐφ' οἷς ἄξιον γεγηθότας εὐχαριστεῖν, ποιουμένους ἀοράτου τῆς περὶ τὴν διάνοιαν εὐπαθείας αἰσθητῆν διὰ τῶν ἐζυμωμένων 186 ἄρτων εὐχαριστίαν. ἄρτοι δ' εἰσὶν ἄλλ' οὐ σίτος<sup>2</sup> ἢ ἀπαρχή, διὰ τὸ μηδὲν ἔτι ἐνδεῖν τῶν εἰς ἀπόλαυσιν τροφῆς, σίτου γεγονότος· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι τῶν σπαρτῶν ἀπάντων τελευταῖος ὁ πυρὸς γεννᾶσθαι πέφυκε καὶ πρὸς ἄμητον παρίστασθαι.
 187 δύο δ' εἰσὶν ἄριστα δυοῖν χρόνων χαριστήρια, τοῦ τε παρεληλυθότος, ἐν ᾧ τῶν ἐξ ἐνδείας καὶ λιμοῦ κακῶν οὐκ ἐπειράθημεν ἐν εὐετηρία διάγοντες, καὶ τοῦ μέλλοντος, διότι τὰς εἰς αὐτὸν χορηγίας καὶ παρασκευὰς εὐτρεπισάμεθα καὶ γέμοντες χρη-

<sup>1</sup> ms. δανεισάμενοι, which Cohn retains, holding that it can bear the sense of acquiring (Hermes, 1908, p. 200). It may be objected to the correction (Tischendorf's) that no example is given of the middle in this sense, but it is a natural extension.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn brackets ἄλλ' οὐ σίτος. See note b.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 628.

<sup>b</sup> Cohn's rejection of ἄλλ' οὐ σίτος as "a foolish insertion"

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 183-187

which they had not received their proper share like the other tribes. But leaven is also a 184 symbol for two other things : in one way it stands for food in its most complete and perfect form, such that in our daily usage none is found to be superior or more nourishing, and as wheat-meal is superior to that of the other seed crops, its excellence demands that the offering made in recognition of it should be of the same high quality. The other point 185 is more symbolical. Everything that is leavened rises, and joy is the rational elevation or rising of the soul.<sup>a</sup> And there is nothing that exists which more naturally gives a man joy than the possession in generous abundance of necessaries. Such rightly call forth gladness and thanksgiving in those who by the leavened loaves give outward expression to the invisible sense of well-being in their hearts.

The offering takes the form of loaves 186 instead of wheaten meal,<sup>b</sup> because when the wheat has come there is nothing still missing in the way of appetizing food. For we are told that of all the seed crops, wheat is the last to spring up and be ready for harvesting. And these thank-offerings of 187 the best kind are two in number for the two kinds of time, the past and the future ; for the past, because our days have been spent in abundance, free from the experience of the evils of want and famine ; for the future, because we have laid by and prepared resources to meet it, and are full of bright rests on the ground that the antithesis is between the wheaten loaves and other kinds of grain. I think he misapprehends the point, which is that when the harvest is completed by the reaping of the wheat, the offering naturally takes the form in which it is actually consumed. I suspect that Philo connects ἀpros and ἀπριος.

PHILO

στῶν ἐλπίδων ταμιευόμεθα τὰς τοῦ θεοῦ δωρεὰς εἰς τὴν καθ' ἡμέραν προσφέροντες<sup>1</sup> αἰεὶ δίαιταν, ὅσων ἂν <ἦ> χρεία κατὰ νόμους τῆς οἰκονομικῆς ἀρετῆς.

- 188 XXXI. Ἐξῆς ἐστὶν ἱερομηνία, καθ' ἣν ἅμα ταῖς ἀναγομέναις θυσίαις ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ σαλπίζειν ἔθος· ἀφ' οὗ καὶ “σαλπίγγων” ἐτύμως ἑορτὴ προσαγορεύεται, διττὸν λόγον ἔχουσα, τὸν μὲν ἴδιον τοῦ ἔθνους, τὸν δὲ κοινὸν ἀνθρώπων ἀπάντων· ἴδιον μὲν ὑπόμνησιν τεραστίου καὶ μεγαλουργηθέντος ἔργου, καθ' ὃν χρόνον τὰ λόγια τῶν νόμων ἔθεσπί-189 ζετο· τότε γὰρ ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ φωνὴ σάλπιγγος ἐξήχησεν, ἣν εἰκὸς ἄχρι τῶν τοῦ παντὸς φθάσαι περάτων, ἵνα καὶ τοὺς μὴ παρόντας καὶ μόνον οὐκ ἐν ἐσχατιαῖς κατοικοῦντας διὰ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ἢ πτοῖα ἐπιστρέψῃ λογισαμένους, ὅπερ εἰκὸς, ὅτι τὰ οὕτως μεγάλα μεγάλων ἀποτελεσμάτων ἐστὶ σημεῖα· τί δὲ μείζον ἢ ὠφελιμώτερον εἰς ἀνθρώπους ἐλθεῖν ἐδύνατο τῶν γενικῶν νόμων, οὓς προεφήτευσεν ὁ θεός, οὐ δι' ἐρμηνέως καθάπερ τὰ ἐν 190 εἶδει νόμιμα ; τούτο μὲν ἐξαίρετον τοῦ ἔθνους· κοινὸν δὲ πρὸς πάντας ἀνθρώπους· ἐκείνο· ἡ σάλπιγξ ὄργανόν ἐστι πολέμου καὶ πρὸς τὴν κατ'
[296] ἐχθρῶν | ἐφόρμησιν, ὁπότε καιρὸς εἶη συμπλέκεσθαι καὶ πρὸς ἀνάκλησιν, ὁπότε διακρίνεσθαι δέοι πρὸς τὰ οἰκεία ἐπανελευσομένους στρατόπεδα. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἕτερος θεήλατος πόλεμος, ὅταν ἡ φύσις ἐν ἑαυτῇ στασιάσῃ, τῶν μερῶν ἀντεπιτιθεμένων ἀλλήλοις, ἰσότητος εὐνομωτάτης πλεονεξία τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MS. προσφέροντες.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 187-190

hopes while we dispense and bring out for daily use the gifts of God as they are needed by the rules of good economy.<sup>a</sup>

XXXI. Next comes the opening of the sacred month,<sup>b</sup> when it is customary to sound the trumpet in the temple at the same time that the sacrifices are brought there, and its name of "trumpet feast" is derived from this. It has a twofold significance, partly to the nation in particular, partly to all mankind in general. In the former sense it is a reminder of a mighty and marvellous event which came to pass when the oracles of the law were given from above. <sup>c</sup> For then the sound of the trumpet pealed from heaven and reached, we may suppose, the ends of the universe, so that the event might strike terror even into those who were far from the spot and dwelling well nigh at the extremities of the earth, who would come to the natural conclusion that such mighty signs portended mighty consequences. And indeed what could men receive mightier or more profitable than the general laws which came from the mouth of God, not like the particular laws, through an interpreter? This is a significance peculiar to the nation. What follows is common to all mankind. The trumpet is the instrument used in war, both to sound the advance against the enemy when the moment comes for engaging battle and also for recalling the troops when they have to separate and return to their respective camps. And there is another war not of human agency when nature is at strife in herself, when her parts make onslaught one on another and her law-abiding sense of equality

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 628.

<sup>b</sup> See on De Dec. 159, and cf. i. 186.

<sup>c</sup> See Ex. xix. 16.

PHILO

- 191 ἀνίσου κρατηθείσης. ὑπ' ἀμφοτέρων δὲ τῶν πολέμων φθείρεται τὰ ἐπίγεια, πρὸς μὲν ἐχθρῶν δενδροτομίαις, δηώσεσιν, ἐμπρήσεσι τροφῶν καὶ πεδίων σταχυηφορούντων, ὑπὸ δὲ τῶν κατὰ φύσιν αὐχμοῖς, ἐπομβρίαις, νοτίων βίαις πνευμάτων, φλογώσεσι ταῖς ἀφ' ἡλίου, χιονώδει περιψύξει, τῆς ἀρμονίας τῶν ἐτησίων ὠρῶν περιηκούσης εἰς ἀναρμοστίαν, ἔνεκά μοι δοκῶ τῆς οὐ κατὰ μικρὸν ἐπιπολαζούσης ἀλλ' ἀθρώω φορᾶ κεχυμένης ἀ-
- 192 σεβείας, παρ' οἷς ἂν ταῦτα γίνηται. διὰ τοῦτο καθάπερ<sup>1</sup> ἐπώνυμον ἑορτὴν ὄργάνου πολεμικοῦ σάλπιγγος ἀπέφηεν ὁ νόμος, ἐπ' εὐχαριστίᾳ τοῦ εἰρηνοποιῦ θεοῦ καὶ εἰρηνοφύλακος, ὃς καὶ τὰς ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι καὶ τὰς ἐν τοῖς μέρεσι τοῦ παντὸς στάσεις ἀνελὼν εὐθηνίας καὶ εὐετηρίας καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀγαθῶν ἀφθονίαν ἀπειργάσατο, μηδὲν ἐμπύρευμα καρπῶν φθορᾶς ἐάσας ζωπυρηθῆναι.
- 193 XXXII. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν τῶν σαλπίγγων ἄγεται νηστεία ἑορτῆ. τάχα ἂν τις εἴποι τῶν ἑτεροδόξων καὶ ψέγειν τὰ καλὰ μὴ αἰδουμένων· ἑορτῆ δ' ἐστὶ τίς, ἐν ἣ μὴ συμπόσια καὶ συσσίτια καὶ ἐστιατόρων καὶ ἐστιωμένων θίασος καὶ πολὺς ἄκρατος καὶ τράπεζαι πολυτελεῖς καὶ χορηγίαι καὶ παρασκευαὶ τῶν ἐν δημοθoinία πάντων εὐφροσύναι τε καὶ κῶμοι σὺν ἀθύρμασι καὶ τωθασμοῖς καὶ παιδιὰ μετ' αὐλοῦ καὶ κιθάρας καὶ τυμπάνων τε καὶ κυμβάλων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα <κατὰ> τὸ παραλελυμένον καὶ ἐκτεθλυμμένον εἶδος μουσικῆς δι'
- 194 ὧτων ἐγείρει τὰς ἀκαθέκτους ἐπιθυμίας; ἐν γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Tischendorf, καθάπερ <εἶπον>.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. i. 186.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 191-194

is vanquished by the greed for inequality. Both 191 these wars work destruction on the face of the earth.
The enemy cut down the fruit-trees, ravage the country, set fire to the foodstuffs and the ripening ears of corn in the open fields, while the forces of nature use drought, rainstorms, violent moisture-laden winds, scorching sun-rays, intense cold accompanied by snow, with the regular harmonious alternations of the yearly seasons turned into disharmony, a state of things in my opinion due to the impiety which does not gain a gradual hold but comes rushing with the force of a torrent among those whom these things 192 befall. And therefore the law instituted this feast figured by that instrument of war the trumpet, which gives it its name, to be as a thank-offering to God the peace-maker and peace-keeper, Who destroys faction both in cities and in the various parts of the universe and creates plenty and fertility and abundance of other good things and leaves the havoc of fruits without a single spark to be rekindled.

XXXII. The next feast held after the "Trumpets" 193 is the Fast.<sup>a</sup> Perhaps some of the perversely minded who are not ashamed to censure things excellent will say, What sort of a feast is this in which there are no gatherings to eat and drink, no company of entertainers or entertained, no copious supply of strong drink nor tables sumptuously furnished, nor a generous display of all the accompaniments of a public banquet, nor again the merriment and revelry with frolic and drollery, nor dancing to the sound of flute and harp and timbrels and cymbals, and the other instruments of the debilitated and invertebrate kind of music which through the channel of the ears awaken the unruly lusts? For it is in these and 194

PHILO

τούτοις καὶ διὰ τούτων, ὡς ἔοικε, τὸ εὐφραίνεισθαι τίθενται ἀγνοία τῆς πρὸς ἀλήθειαν εὐφροσύνης· ἦν ὀξύτερκεστάτοις ὄμμασιν ἰδὼν ὁ πάνσοφος Μωυσῆς τὴν νηστείαν ἑορτὴν ἀνείπε καὶ ἑορτῶν τὴν μεγίστην πατρίῳ γλώττῃ “ σάββατα σαββάτων ” αὐτὴν ὀνομάσας, ὡς δ’ ἂν Ἕλληνες εἴποιεν, ἑβδομάδα ἑβδομάδων καὶ ἀγίων ἀγιωτέραν, διὰ πολλά·

195 πρῶτον μὲν <δι’> ἐγκράτειαν, ἦν αἰεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ παραγγέλλων ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς κατὰ βίον ἐπιδεικνυσθαι πράγμασι διὰ τε γλώττης καὶ γαστρὸς καὶ τῶν μετὰ γαστέρα νυνὶ δὲ διαφερόντως κελεύει περιέπειν, ἐξαίρετον ἡμέραν ἀναθεὶς αὐτῇ· σιτιῶν γάρ τις καὶ ποτῶν μαθὼν ἀλογοῖν τῶν οὕτως ἀναγκαίων τίνος οὐκ ἂν ὑπερίδοι τῶν περιττῶν, ἃ γέγονεν οὐ διαμονῆς καὶ σωτηρίας ἕνεκα

196 μᾶλλον ἢ βλαβερωτάτης ἡδονῆς; δεύτερον δὲ ἐπειδὴ πᾶσα ἀνάκειται λιταῖς καὶ ἱκεσίαις, περὶ μηδὲν ἕτερον ἄχρις ἑσπέρας ἐξ ἑωθिनῶν τῶν ἀνθρώπων σχολὴν ἀγόντων ἢ δεητικωτάτας εὐχάς, αἷς σπουδάζουσι τὸν θεὸν ἐξευμενίζεσθαι παραίτησιν ἀμαρτημάτων ἐκουσίων τε καὶ ἀκουσίων αἰτούμενοι καὶ χρηστὰ ἐλπίζοντες, οὐ δι’ ἑαυτοὺς ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν ἰλεω φύσιν τοῦ συγγνώμην πρὸ κολάσεως

197 ὀρίζοντος. τρίτον δὲ διὰ τὸν καιρὸν, ἐν ᾧ συμβέβηκε τὴν νηστείαν ἄγεσθαι· κατὰ γὰρ τοῦτον ἤδη συγκεκόμισται πάντα ὅσα δι’ ἔτους ἠνεγκεν ἡ γῆ. τὸ μὲν οὖν εὐθὺς ἐμφορεῖσθαι τῶν γεγονότων ἀπληστίας ὑπέλαβεν ἔργον εἶναι, τὸ δὲ νηστεῦσαι καὶ τροφῆς μὴ προσάψασθαι παντελοῦς through these that men, in their ignorance of what true merriment is, consider that the merriment of a feast is to be found. This the clear-seeing eyes of Moses the ever wise discerned and therefore he called the fast a feast, the greatest of the feasts, in his native tongue a Sabbath of Sabbaths,<sup>a</sup> or as the Greeks would say, a seven of sevens, a holier than the holy. He gave it this name for many reasons.

---

<sup>a</sup> So LXX, in Lev. xvi. 31 and xxiii. 32. In E.V. “ a sabbath of solemn rest.”

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 194-197

First, because of the self-restraint which it entails ; 195 always and everywhere indeed he exhorted them to shew this in all the affairs of life, in controlling the tongue and the belly and the organs below the belly, but on this occasion especially he bids them do honour to it by dedicating thereto a particular day. To one who has learnt to disregard food and drink which are absolutely necessary, are there any among the superfluities of life which he can fail to despise, things which exist to promote not so much preservation and permanence of life as pleasure with all its powers of mischief ?

Secondly, because 196
the holy-day is entirely devoted to prayers and supplications, and men from morn to eve employ their leisure in nothing else but offering petitions of humble entreaty in which they seek earnestly to propitiate God and ask for remission of their sins, voluntary and involuntary, and entertain bright hopes looking not to their own merits but to the gracious nature of Him Who sets pardon before chastisement.

Thirdly, because of the time at which the celebration 197 of the fast occurs, namely, that when all the annual fruits of the earth have been gathered in. To eat and drink of these without delay would, he held, shew gluttony, but to fast and refrain from taking them as food shews the perfect piety which teaches εὐσεβείας, ἥτις ἀναδιδάσκει τὴν διάνοιαν μὴ πεποιθέναι τοῖς εὐτρεπισθεῖσι καὶ παρεσκευασμένοις ὡς ὑγείας ἢ ζωῆς αἰτίοις· ταῦτα γὰρ καὶ παρόντα 198 πολλάκις ἔβλαψε καὶ μὴ παρόντα ὤνησε. μόνον οὐκ ἄντικρυς, κὰν μηδὲν τῇ φωνῇ φθέγγωνται τὸ παράπαν, οἱ μετὰ τὴν συγκομιδὴν τῶν καρπῶν ἀπεχόμενοι σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν ἐκβοῶσι ταῖς ψυχαῖς καὶ φασι ταῦτα· τὰς μὲν τῆς φύσεως χάριτας εἰλήφαμεν ἄσμενοι καὶ ταμιευόμεθα, φθαρτὸν δὲ οὐδὲν ἐπιγραφόμεθά ποτε τῆς ἡμετέρας διαμονῆς αἴτιον, ἀλλὰ τὸν γεννητὴν καὶ πατέρα καὶ σωτῆρα τοῦ τε κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν κόσμῳ θεόν, ᾧ καὶ διὰ τούτων καὶ ἄνευ τούτων τρέφειν θέμις καὶ δια-199 φυλάττειν. ἰδοὺ γοῦν καὶ τοὺς ἡμετέρους προγόνους μυριάσι πολλαῖς ἐρήμην ἀτριβῆ καὶ πᾶσαν ἄγονον διεξιόντας γενεᾶς βίον ἔτη τεσσαράκοντα [297] | διέθρεψε ὡς ἐν βαθυγειοτάτῃ καὶ εὐφορωτάτῃ χώρα, πηγὰς μὲν τότε πρῶτον ἀνατεμῶν εἰς ἄφθονον ποτοῦ χρήσιν, ὕων δὲ τροφὴν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ μήτε πλείονα μήτ' ἐλάττονα τῆς διεξαρκούσης εἰς ἐκάστην ἡμέραν, ἵνα ἀταμιεύτοις χρώμενοι τοῖς ἀναγκαίοις μὴ πωλῶσιν ἀψύχων, ὧν ἂν ἐθησαυρί-σαντο, τὰς ἀγαθὰς ἐλπίδας, ἀλλὰ μικρὰ φροντίζοντες τῶν χορηγουμένων τὸν χορηγὸν θαυμάζωσι καὶ προσκυνῶσι καὶ τοῖς ἀρμόττουσιν ὕμνοις καὶ 200 εὐδαιμονισμοῖς γεραίρωσιν. ἡ δὲ ἡμέρα τῆς νηστείας ἄγεται νόμου προστάξει δεκάτῃ μηνὸς αἰεί. διὰ τί δὲ ἐν τῇ δεκάτῃ; ὡς ἐν τοῖς περὶ αὐτῆς λόγοις ἠκριβώσαμεν, ὀνομάζεται μὲν

PHILO

<sup>a</sup> By θέμις is meant, perhaps, that it is in accordance with the law of His being. But the application of the word to the mind not to put trust in what stands ready prepared before us as though it were the source of health and life. For often its presence proves injurious and its absence beneficial. Those who abstain from food and drink after the ingathering of the fruits cry aloud to us with their souls, and though their voices utter no sound, their language could hardly be plainer. They say, "We have gladly received and are storing the boons of nature, yet we do not ascribe our preservation to any corruptible thing, but to God the Parent and Father and Saviour of the world and all that is therein, Who has the power and the right <sup>a</sup> to nourish and sustain us by means of these or without these. See, for example, how the many thousands of our forefathers as they traversed the trackless and all-barren desert, were for forty years, the life of a generation, nourished by Him as in a land of richest and most fertile soil; how He opened fountains unknown before to give them abundance of drink for their use; how He rained food from heaven, neither more nor less than what sufficed for each day, that they might consume what they needed without hoarding, nor barter for the prospect of soulless stores <sup>b</sup> their hopes of His goodness, but taking little thought of the bounties received rather reverence and worship the bountiful Giver and honour Him with the hymns and benedictions that are His due." By order of the law the fast is held on the tenth day. Why on the tenth? As has been shewn in our detailed discussion of that God is strange, and I do not know of any exact parallel. οὐ θέμις, as in Plato, Ap. 21 B οὐ γὰρ δήπου ψεύδεταί γε· οὐ γὰρ θέμις αὐτῶ, is not quite the same.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 197-200

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "the lifeless things which they would have stored."

PHILO

- ὑπὸ σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν παντέλεια, περιέχει δ' ἐν αὐτῇ τὰς ἀναλογίας πάσας, τὴν τε ἀριθμητικὴν καὶ τὴν ἀρμονικὴν καὶ τὴν γεωμετρικὴν, καὶ προσέτι τὰς ἀρμονίας, ἐπίτριτον τὴν διὰ τεσσάρων καὶ ἡμιόλιον τὴν διὰ πέντε καὶ διπλασίαν τὴν διὰ πασῶν καὶ τετραπλασίαν τὴν δις διὰ πασῶν, ἔχει δὲ καὶ τὸν ἐπόγδοον λόγον, ὡς εἶναι πλήρωμα τῶν κατὰ μουσικὴν θεωρημάτων τελειότατον, ἀφ' οὗ καὶ 201 ὠνόμασται παντέλεια. τὴν οὖν σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν ἔνδειαν προστέταχε κατ' ἀριθμὸν τέλειον καὶ πλήρη γίνεσθαι τῆς δεκάδος διὰ τὰς τοῦ ἀρίστου τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀρίστας τροφάς, ἵνα μηδεὶς ὑπολάβῃ λιμὸν τὸ πάντων ἀφορητότατον κακῶν εἰσηγεῖσθαι τὸν ἱεροφάντην, ἀλλὰ τῆς εἰς τὰς τοῦ σώματος δεξαμενὰς φερομένης ἐπιρροῆς ἀνακοπὴν βραχεῖαν.
 202 οὕτως γὰρ ἔμελλε διαυγῆς καὶ καθαρὸν τὸ ἀπὸ τῆς λογικῆς πηγῆς [εἰς καθαρὸν] ἐπὶ ψυχὴν φέρεσθαι νᾶμα λείως, ἐπειδὴ περ αἱ συνεχεῖς καὶ ἐπάλληλοι τροφαὶ κατακλύζουσαι τὸ σῶμα καὶ τὸν λογισμὸν προσεπισύρουσιν, εἰ δ' ἐπισχεθεῖεν, εὖ μάλα στηριχθεὶς ὡς ἐπὶ ξηρᾶς ἀτραποῦ καὶ λεωφόρου τὴν πορείαν ἄπταιστον δυνήσεται ποιεῖσθαι τῶν 203 θείας καὶ ἀκοῆς ἀξίων ἐφιέμενος. ἄλλως τε ἀρ-μόττον ἦν, τῶν εἰς εὐθηνίαν ἀπάντων κατὰ νοῦν κεχωρηκότων ἐπὶ τελείοις καὶ πλήρεσιν ἀγαθοῖς, ἐν εὐετηρία καὶ χορηγιῶν ἀφθονία λαβεῖν ἔνδειας ὑπόμνησιν ἀποχῆ σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν καὶ λιτὰς καὶ ἱκεσίας ποιεῖσθαι, ἅμα μὲν ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ εἰς ἀληθῆ πείραν ἐλθεῖν ἀπορίας τῶν ἀναγκαίων, ἅμα δὲ καὶ

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Dec. 20, 21. But the "detailed discussion" probably refers to a lost treatise on numbers. Cf. Mos. ii. 115 τῇ περὶ ἀριθμῶν πραγματείᾳ, and De Op. 52.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 200-203

number,<sup>a</sup> it is called by the learned the all-perfect, and embraces all the progressions, arithmetical, harmonic and geometrical, and further the harmonies, the fourth, the fifth, the octave and the double octave, representing respectively the ratios 4 : 3, 3 : 2, 2 : 1 and 4 : 1, and it also contains the ratio of 9 : 8, so that it sums up fully and perfectly the leading truths of musical science, and for this reason it has received its name of the all-perfect. In ordaining 201 that this privation of food and drink should be based on the full and perfect number 10, he intended to prescribe the best possible form of nourishment for the best part of us. He did not wish anyone to suppose that as their instructor in the mysteries he was advocating starvation, the most intolerable of sufferings, but only a brief stoppage in the influx which passes into the receptacles of the body. For this 202 would ensure that the stream from the fountain of reason should flow pure and crystal-clear with smooth course into the soul, because the constantly repeated administrations of food which submerge the body sweep the reason away as well, whereas if they are checked, that same reason stoutly fortified can in pursuit of all that is worth seeing and hearing make its way without stumbling as upon a dry firm causeway. Besides, it was meet and right when every- 203 thing has shewn abundance as they would have it, and they enjoy a full and perfect measure of goodness, that amid this prosperity and lavish supply of boons, they should by abstaining from food and drink remind themselves of what it is to want, and offer prayers and supplications, on the one hand to ask that they may never really experience the lack of necessities, on the other to express their thankfulness εὐχαριστοῦντας, ὅτι ἐν ἀγαθῶν περιουσίᾳ μέμνηται κακῶν οὐ γενομένων. τούτων μὲν δὴ ἄλις.

PHILO

- 204 XXXIII. Τελευταία δ' ἐστὶν ἑορτὴ τῶν ἐνιαυσίων προσαγορευομένη σκηναί, καιρὸν ἔχουσα τὸν μετοπωρινῆς ἰσημερίας· ἐξ οὗ δύο παρίσταται, τό τε δεῖν ἰσότητα τιμᾶν ἀνισότητα ἐχθραίνοντας—ἡ μὲν γὰρ δικαιοσύνης ἐστίν, ἡ δὲ ἀδικίας ἀρχή τε καὶ πηγὴ, καὶ ἡ μὲν ἀσκίου φῶτος, ἡ δὲ σκότους συγγενής—καὶ τὸ προσήκειν μετὰ τὴν ἀπάντων καρπῶν τελείωσιν εὐχαριστεῖν τῷ τελεσφόρῳ θεῷ
- 205 καὶ πάντων τῶν ἀγαθῶν αἰτίῳ. τὸ γὰρ μετ-ὀπωρον, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸ δήπου δηλοῖ τοῦνομα, καιρὸς ὁ μετὰ τὴν ὀπώραν ἐστὶν ἤδη συγκεκομισμένην, καὶ φόρους τοὺς ἐτησίους καὶ δασμοὺς τοὺς ἀναγ-καίους εἰσενηνοχότων <τῶν> σπαρτῶν τε καὶ τῶν δένδρων καὶ τῆς γῆς ὅσας<sup>1</sup> τροφὰς ἐγέννησε ταῖς τῶν ἀμυθῆτων ζώων ἰδέαις ἡμέρων τε καὶ ἀγρίων ἀφθόνως παρεσχημένης, οὐ μόνον εἰς τὴν ἐν χερσὶ καὶ πρόσκαιρον ἀπόλαυσιν ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν ὕστερον διὰ τὸ προμηθὲς τῆς φιλοζώου φύσεως.
- 206 καὶ μὴν ἐν σκηναῖς προστέτακται διαιτᾶσθαι τὸν χρόνον τῆς ἑορτῆς, ἥτοι διὰ τὸ μηκέτι εἶναι χρεῖαν ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ διάγειν τὰ περὶ γεωργίαν ἐκπονοῦντας, οὐδενὸς μὲν ὑπολειφθέντος ἕξω, πάντων δὲ καρπῶν ἐναποκειμένων σιροῖς καὶ τοιουτοτρόποις χωρίοις διὰ τὰς εἰθυίας βλάβας παρακολουθεῖν ἕκ τε
- 207 φλογώσεως ἡλιακῆς καὶ φορᾶς ὑετῶν—ὅτε μὲν γὰρ ἐν πεδίοις ἐστὶ τὰ τρέφοντα, μὴ συγκλεισά-

<sup>1</sup> MS. ὅσα.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 203-207

because in such wealth of blessings they remember the ills they have been spared. Enough on this matter.

XXXIII. The last of the annual feasts, called 204 Tabernacles, recurs at the autumn equinox.<sup>a</sup> From this we may draw two morals. The first is, that we should honour equality and hate inequality, for the former is the source and fountain of justice, the latter of injustice. The former is akin to open sunlight, the latter to darkness. The second moral is, that after all the fruits are made perfect, it is our duty to thank God Who brought them to perfection and is the source of all good things. For autumn, or after- 205 fruitage, is, as also the name clearly implies, the season after the ripe fruit has been gathered in, when the sown crops and the fruit-trees have paid their annual toll and bounden tribute, and the land has richly provided all that it yields for the sustenance of the various kinds of animals without number, both tame and wild, sustenance not only to be enjoyed on the spot and for the moment, but also in the future, through the foresight of nature, the friend of all that lives. Further, the people are commanded, during 206 the time of the feast, to dwell in tents.<sup>b</sup> The reason of this may be that the labour of the husbandmen no longer requires that they should live in the open air, as nothing is now left unprotected but all the fruits are stored in silos or similar places to escape the damage which often ensues through the blazing sunshine or storms of rain. For when the crops which 207 feed us are standing in the open field, you can only watch and guard the food so necessary to you, by

<sup>a</sup> Cf. i. 189.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xxiii. 40-43.

PHILO

μενος θαλαμαίου γυναικὸς τρόπον ἀλλὰ προελθὼν ἐπιμελητῆς καὶ φύλαξ εἰ σὺ τῶν ἀναγκαίων· κἂν ὑπαιθρίῳ διατελοῦντί σοι προσπίπτῃ κρυμὸς καὶ θάλπος, εἰσὶν ἔφεδροι <καὶ> σκιαὶ τὰ λάσια τῶν δένδρων, οἷς ὑποστείλας τὴν ἀφ' ἑκατέρου δυνήσῃ βλάβην εὐμαρῶς ἐκφυγεῖν· ὅταν δ' οἱ καρποὶ πάντες εἰσκομίζωνται, συνεισέρχου στεγανωτέρας διαίτης ἐφιξόμενος πρὸς ἀνάπαυλαν ἀντὶ καμάτων οὓς γεωπονῶν ὑπέμεινας· ἢ δι' ὑπόμνησιν τῆς τῶν προγόνων μακρᾶς ὁδοιπορίας, ἣν δι' ἐρήμου ποιούμενοι βαθείας σκηναῖς πολυετῆ

208 χρόνον καθ' ἕκαστον σταθμὸν ἐνδιητῶντο. προσήκει δὲ καὶ ἐν πλούτῳ πενίας μεμνήσθαι καὶ ἀδοξίας ἐν δόξῃ καὶ ἐν ἡγεμονίαις ἰδιωτικοῦ σχήματος καὶ ἐν εἰρήνῃ κινδύνων τῶν ἐν πολέμῳ καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς χειμώνων τῶν κατὰ θάλασσαν καὶ ἐν πόλεσιν ἐρημίας· ἡδονὴ γὰρ οὐκ ἔστι μείζων ἢ ἐν ταῖς ἄγαν εὐπραγίαις ἔννοϊαν ἔχειν παλαιῶν ἀτυχη-

209 μάτων. πρὸς δὲ τῇ ἡδονῇ καὶ ὄφελος οὐ μικρὸν εἰς ἀρετῆς ἄσκησιν ἐγγίνεται· λαβόντες γὰρ πρὸ ὀφθαλμῶν τό τε εὖ καὶ τὸ χεῖρον καὶ τὸ μὲν ἀπεωσμένοι καρπούμενοι δὲ τὸ ἄμεινον ἐξ ἀνάγκης εὐχάριστοι γίνονται τὸ ἦθος καὶ πρὸς εὐσέβειαν παρορμῶνται φόβῳ τῆς πρὸς τάναντία μεταβολῆς. ὅθεν καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς παροῦσιν ἀγαθοῖς τὸν θεὸν ὤδαῖς καὶ λόγοις γεραίρουσι καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μηκέτι πειραθῆναι κακῶν λιπαροῦσι καὶ ἰκεσίαις ἐξευμενίζονται.

210 ζονται. πάλιν δὲ ἡ ταύτης τῆς ἑορτῆς ἀρχὴ πεντεκαδεκάτῃ μηνὸς ἐνίσταται, διὰ τὴν

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 207-210

coming out and not shutting yourself up like a woman who never stirs outside her quarters. And if while you remain in the open air you encounter extreme cold or heat, you have the thick growth of the trees waiting to shade you, and sheltered under them you can easily escape injury from either source. But when all the fruits are being gathered in, come in yourself also to seek a more weatherproof mode of life and hope for rest in place of the toils which you endured when labouring on the land.

<sup>a</sup> Another reason may be, that it should remind us of the long journeyings of our forefathers in the depths of the desert, when at every halting-place they spent many a year in tents. And indeed it is well in wealth 208 to remember your poverty, in distinction your insignificance, in high offices your position as a commoner, in peace your dangers in war, on land the storms on sea, in cities the life of loneliness. For there is no pleasure greater than in high prosperity to call to mind old misfortunes. But besides giving 209 pleasure, it is a considerable help in the practice of virtue. For people who having had both good and ill before their eyes have rejected the ill and are enjoying the good, necessarily fall into a grateful frame of mind and are urged to piety by the fear of a change to the reverse, and also therefore in thankfulness for their present blessings they honour God with songs and words of praise and beseech Him and propitiate Him with supplications that they may never repeat the experience of such evils. Again, the 210 beginning of this feast comes on the fifteenth day of the month for the same reason as was given when

<sup>a</sup> This is the reason assigned in Leviticus, l.c.

PHILO

λεχθείσαν καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς ἑαρινῆς ὥρας αἰτίαν, ἵνα μὴ μεθ' ἡμέραν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ νύκτωρ πλήρης ὁ κόσμος ἦ τοῦ φύσει παγκάλου φωτός, ἡλίου καὶ σελήνης κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν ἀλλήλοις ἐπ-
 [298] ανατελλόντων ἀγαῖς ἀδιαστάτοις, ἀς<sup>1</sup> | μεθόριον οὐ
 211 διακρίνει σκότος. ἐπτὰ δὲ ἡμέραις ὀγδόην ἐπι-σφραγίζεται καλέσας "ἐξόδιον" αὐτήν, οὐκ ἐκείνης, ὡς ἔοικε, μόνον τῆς ἑορτῆς, ἀλλὰ καὶ πασῶν τῶν ἔτησιων, ὅσας κατηριθμησάμην καὶ διεξήλθον· τελευταία γὰρ ἐστὶ τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ καὶ 212 συμπέρασμα. τάχα μέντοι καὶ πρῶτος κύβος, ὀγδοάς, ἐπενεμήθη <τῆ> ἑορτῇ διὰ τόδε· τῆς μὲν δυνάμει στερεᾶς οὐσίας ἐστὶν ἀρχὴ κατὰ τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀσωμάτων μετάβασιν, τῆς δὲ νοητῆς συμπέρασμα· τὰ δὲ νοητὰ ταῖς παραυξήσεσι πρὸς 213 τὴν στερεὰν φύσιν * * *.<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἡ μετοπωρινὴ μέντοι ἑορτῇ, καθάπερ εἶπον, πλήρωμά τι καὶ συμπέρασμα τῶν ἐντὸς ἐνιαυτοῦ πασῶν ἔοικεν

<sup>1</sup> ms. and Nicetas ais.

<sup>2</sup> For the missing verb Cohn suggests μεταβαίνει or πληροῦται.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. § 155.

<sup>b</sup> One would expect ισημερίας or the omission of ὥρας, in which case ἑορτῆς would be understood. And so Heinemann, "Frühlingsfest." But ὥρας may be justified perhaps on the ground that §§ 151 f. dealt rather with the spring as a whole than with the equinox in particular.

<sup>c</sup> See Lev. xxiii. 36, Num. xxix. 35. This is "the last day, the great day of the feast" in John vii. 37. The word ἐξόδιον is used both in Leviticus and Numbers; E.V. "solemn assembly," but in R.V. marg. "closing festival."

<sup>d</sup> For the general idea cf. De Op. 98, where plane geometry (γεωμετρία) and solid geometry (στερεομετρία) are identified respectively with things incorporeal and corporeal, though the equation of ἀσώματα to νοητά is something of an extension.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 210-213

we were speaking <sup>a</sup> of the season of spring,<sup>b</sup> namely that the glorious light which nature gives should fill the universe not only by day but also by night, because on that day the sun and moon rise in succession to each other with no interval between their shining, which is not divided by any borderland of darkness. As a crown to the seven days he adds an eighth,<sup>c</sup> 211 which he calls the "closing," not meaning apparently that it is the closing of that feast only, but also of all the yearly feasts which I have enumerated and described. For it is the last in the year and forms its conclusion.

Perhaps also the number 212 eight, the first cubic number, was assigned to the feast for the following reason: it is the beginning of the higher category of solids, marking where we pass from the unsubstantial and bring to its conclusion the category of the conceptual which rises to the solid in the scale of ascending powers.<sup>d</sup> And indeed the 213 autumn festival, being as I have said a sort of complement <sup>e</sup> and conclusion of all the feasts in the year,

By δυνάμει, represented in the translation by "higher," he means, perhaps, that solidity is gained by raising to a higher power in the mathematical sense = παραυξήσεσι below. But this technical use is generally, if not always, confined to the second power or square (as in § 177) and the meaning may be less technical = "in nature" or "value." παραυξήσεσι is taken by Heinemann to mean the increase from 7 to 8. My preference for the rendering given above rests on the use of the plural (unless this may be accounted for by the plural νοητά). As I understand it, 1 = the point, 2 = the line, 4 = the superficies, and 8 = the solid. So in De Op. 91, 93 and 94 παραυξηθείς and παραύξων are used of the processes by which 1 is raised by multiples of 2 to 64, and 3 to 729. See further App. p. 628.

<sup>e</sup> Here the word πλήρωμα, used in § 200 in the sense of sum or fullness, = that which fills up. For examples of both these senses see L. & S. revised.

PHILO

εἶναι σταθερώτερον καὶ παγιώτερον, τὰς ἀπὸ τῆς χώρας προσόδους εἰληφότων ἤδη καὶ μηκέτ' ἐνδοιασμοῖς τοῖς περὶ φορᾶς καὶ ἀφορίας πλαζομένων καὶ δεδιότων· ἀνίδρυτοι γὰρ αἱ γεωπόνων φροντίδες, ἄχρισ ἂν οἱ καρποὶ συγκομισθῶσι, διὰ τὰς ἐφέδρους ἀπὸ μυρίων ὄσων ἀνθρώπων τε καὶ θρεμμάτων ζημίας.

214 Ταῦτα ἐπὶ πλέον ἐμήκυνα διὰ τὴν ἱερὰν ἐβδόμην ἐπιδειξασθαι βουλόμενος, ὅτι πάσας τὰς ἐτησίους ἑορτὰς συμβέβηκεν ὡς ἂν ἀπογόνους ἐβδομάδος εἶναι μητρὸς λόγον ἐχούσης<sup>1</sup> * * * ἀφροσύνη καὶ εὐφροσύνη, καὶ διότι ἐν πανηγύρεσι καὶ ἰλαρῷ βίῳ τέρψεις ἀμέτοχοι συννοίας καὶ κατηφείας συνίστανται σώματα καὶ ψυχὰς ἀναχέουσαι, τὰ μὲν<sup>2</sup> τῷ ἀβροδιαίτῳ, τὰς δὲ τῷ φιλοσοφεῖν.

215 XXXIV. "Ἔστι δέ τις παρὰ ταύτας ἑορτὴ μὲν οὐ, ἑορτώδης δὲ<sup>3</sup> πανήγυρις, ἣν καλοῦσι "κάρταλον" ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος, ὡς μικρὸν ὕστερον ἀποδείξομεν. τὸ μὲν οὖν μὴ ἑορτῆς ἔχειν ἀξίωμα καὶ

<sup>1</sup> With λόγον ἐχούσης Nicetas's excerpts come to an end, and the rest of the treatise depends solely on M and does not appear in Mangey at all. For the lacuna Heinemann suggests something like the following: " <but it is prescribed that people should enjoy themselves at the feasts" (Lev. xxiii. 40 and elsewhere) "because > folly and joy <are irreconcilable opposites>." It is certainly quite possible that some lost clause or clauses ended up with <ἐναντία> ἀφροσύνη καὶ εὐφροσύνη (cf. the same antithesis in § 49), but the rest of Heinemann's suggestion does not seem to me suitable. Apart from these three words, which may have intruded through some now inexplicable accident, the whole section reads like a continuous apology for the length at which the fourth commandment is treated compared with the third and fifth, the defence being (1) the sanctity of seven (διὰ τὴν ἱερὰν ἐβδόμην); (2) the intrinsic value of the feasts (καὶ διότι ἐν . . . ).

If something has really been lost I should rather suppose

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 213-215

seems to have more stability and fixity, because the people have now received their returns from the land and are no longer perplexed and terrified by doubts as to its fertility or barrenness. For the anxious thoughts of the husbandman are never settled till the crops are gathered in, so numberless are the men and animals from whom they are liable to suffer harm.

All this long exposition is due to my regard for the 214 sacred seventh day, and my wish to shew that all the yearly feasts prove to be as it were the children of that number which stands as a mother . . . scenes of folly and joy . . . and because the festal assemblies and the cheerful life which they afford bring delights that are free from all anxiety and dejection, and spread exhilaration both in the body and in the soul, in the body by the comfortable way of living, in the soul by the study of philosophy.

XXXIV. <sup>a</sup> But besides these we have what is not a 215 feast, but is a general ceremony of a festal character called the Basket, a name which describes what takes place, as we shall shortly shew.<sup>b</sup> That it has not the prestige and standing of a feast is clear for many that it continued μητρος λόγον έχούσης with "to those who feast" (or "to feasts conducted") "religiously, and not with folly, for folly and joy are incompatible." This certainly presupposes that Nicetas had the same corruption before him as we have, but I know no reason to the contrary.

<sup>a</sup> Here Cohn begins a fresh numeration of chapters. See Gen. Introd. p. xviii.

<sup>b</sup> See Deut. xxvi. 1-11. Cf. De Som. ii. 272.

---

<sup>2</sup> MS. τοῖς μὲν.

<sup>3</sup> MS. έορτή μὲν θεοῦ έορτής, which Cohn prints as <ούχ> έορτή μὲν θεοῦ, έορτής δὲ ζουγγενής>. The text adopted here is that suggested by Heinemann (partly from Holwerda). For έορτώδης cf. § 216.

PHILO

- τάξιν δῆλον ἐκ πολλῶν· οὔτε γὰρ τοῦ ἔθνους ἐστὶν ὡς πάνδημος, οἷα τῶν ἄλλων ἐκάστη, οὔτε τι τῶν προσαγομένων ἢ προσφερομένων ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν καθαγιαζεται παραδιδόμενον τῷ ἀσβέστῳ πυρὶ καὶ ἱερῷ, οὔθ' ἡμερῶν ἀριθμὸς ὃν χρῆ (ταύτην)
- 216 ἑορτάζειν εἴρηται. XXXV. τὸ δ' ἑορτώδη τύπον ἔχειν καὶ ἐγγὺς ἴστασθαι<sup>1</sup> πανηγυρικῆς ἰδέας<sup>2</sup> εὐμαρῶς κατίδοι τις ἄν. ἕκαστος γὰρ τῶν ἀγροῦς καὶ κτήσεις ἐχόντων ἀφ' ἐκάστου τῶν ἀκροδρῦων εἶδους ἀγγεῖα πληρώσας, καθάπερ ἔφη, ἃ προσ-αγορεύουσι καρτάλους, ἀπαρχὴν τῆς εὐκαρπίας εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν κομίζει γεγηθῶς καὶ στὰς ἀντικρὺ τοῦ βωμοῦ δίδωσι τῷ ἱερεῖ, τὸ πάγκαλον καὶ θαυμάσιον ἄσμα διεξιῶν, εἰ δὲ μὴ τύχοι μεμνημένος, ἀκούων παρὰ τοῦ ἱερέως μετὰ προσοχῆς
- 217 πάσης. ἔστι δὲ τοιόνδε ἄσμα. " Συρίαν ἀπέβαλον<sup>3</sup> οἱ ἀρχηγέται τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν καὶ μετανέστησαν εἰς Αἴγυπτον. ὀλίγος ὄντες ἀριθμὸς ηὔξήθησαν εἰς πλῆθος ἔθνους. οἱ ἀπόγονοι μυρία κακωθέντες ὑπὸ τῶν ἐγχωρίων, οὐδεμιᾶς ἔτι φαινομένης ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἐπικουρίας, ἐγένοντο θεοῦ ἰκέται κατα-218 φυγόντες ἐπὶ τὴν ἐξ αὐτοῦ βοήθειαν. προδεξάμενος τὴν ἰκεσίαν ὁ πᾶσι τοῖς ἀδικουμένοις εὐμενῆς τοὺς μὲν ἐπιτιθεμένους κατέπληξε σημείοις καὶ τέρασι καὶ φάσμασι καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον ἐθαυματοουργεῖτο, τοὺς δ' ἐπηρεαζομένους καὶ πάσας ὑπομένοντας ἐπιβουλάς ἐρρύσατο, οὐ μόνον εἰς ἐλευθερίαν ἐξελόμενος, <sup>1</sup> MS. ἐστιᾶσθαι.

<sup>2</sup> MS. ἀδείας, which Cohn retains, though suggesting ἰδέας.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 215-218

reasons. For it does not affect the nation as a united whole like each of the others, nor do we find any victim being brought or led to the altar and then sacrificed and given over to be consumed by the sacred and unquenchable fire, nor is there any specified number of days during which the feast is to last. XXXV. But that it has a festal character and nearly 216 approaches the form of a general ceremony<sup>a</sup> can be easily seen. For every person who possesses farms or landed estates takes some of every kind of fruit and fills receptacles which, as I have said, are called baskets, and brings them with joy as a sample offering of his rich fruit-harvest, to the temple, and there standing opposite the altar, gives them to the priest. Meanwhile he recites this beautiful and admirable canticle, or if he does not remember it, he listens with all attention while the priest repeats it. The 217 sense of this canticle is as follows: "The founders of our race abandoned Syria and migrated to Egypt and, though few in number, increased to a populous nation. Their descendants suffered wrongs without number from the inhabitants, and when no further assistance from men appeared forthcoming, became suppliants of God and sought refuge in His help. He 218 Who is kindly to all the wronged accepted their supplication and confounded their assailants with signs and wonders and portents and all the other marvels that were wrought at that time, and saved the victims of outrage who were suffering all that malice could devise, and not only brought them forth

<sup>a</sup> Presumably because though there is no general assembly everybody has to do it at some time.

---

It is difficult to see what ἀδεία can mean in connexion with the ceremony here described. <sup>3</sup> MS. ἀπέβαλλον.

PHILO

- 219 ἀλλὰ καὶ χώραν πάμφορον δούς. ἀπὸ τῶν ταύτης καρπῶν, εὐεργέτα, σοὶ φέρομεν τὴν ἀπαρχήν, εἰ δὴ θέμις εἰπεῖν ἐστὶ κομίζειν τὸν λαμβάνοντα· σαι γάρ, ὦ δέσποτα, χάριτες καὶ δωρεαὶ τὰ πάντα, ὧν ἀξιωθέντες ἐναβρυνόμεθα καὶ ἐνευφραινόμεθα τοῖς ἀπροσδοκῆτοις ἀγαθοῖς, ἅπερ οὐκ ἐλπίσαμεν
- 220 ἡμῖν ἔδωκας.” XXXVI. τὸ ἄσμα τοῦτο σχεδὸν ἀπὸ θέρους ἐνισταμένου μέχρι μετοπώρου λήγοντος ἀδιαστάτως ὑφ’ ἐτέρων καὶ ἐτέρων ἄδεται δυσὶ καιροῖς, ὀλοκλήρῳ μέρει ἡμίσει τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ, διὰ τὸ μὴ πάντα ἀθρόους κατὰ ῥητὴν προθεσμίαν τὰ ὠραῖα δύνασθαι κομίζειν, ἀλλ’ ἄλλοτε ἄλλους, ἐστὶ δ’ ὅτε καὶ τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν χωρίων.<sup>1</sup>
- 221 ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τῶν καρπῶν οἱ μὲν θάττον οἱ δὲ βραδύτερον πεπαίνονται, καὶ διὰ τὰς τῶν τόπων διαφορὰς ἀλεινοτέρων ἢ κρυμωδεστέρων ὄντων καὶ διὰ μυρίας ἄλλας αἰτίας, εἰκότως ἀόριστός ἐστι καὶ ἀπερίγραφος ὁ χρόνος τῆς τῶν ἀκροδρῦων ἀπαρχῆς
- 222 ἐπὶ μήκιστον ἐκτεινόμενος. ἡ δὲ τούτων χρῆσις ἐπιτέτραπται τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν, ἐπεὶ γῆς μὲν ἀποτομῆν οὐκ ἔλαχον οὐδὲ προσοδομενάς κτήσεις, κλήροι δ’ εἰσὶν αὐτοῖς αἱ παρὰ τοῦ ἔθνους ἀπαρχαὶ ἀντὶ τῶν λειτουργιῶν, ἃς μεθ’ ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ ὑπομένουσι.
- 223 XXXVII. Τοσαῦτα μὲν περὶ ἐβδομάδος καὶ τῶν εἰς αὐτὴν ἀναφερομένων ἐν τε ἡμέραις καὶ μηνσὶ καὶ ἐνιαυτοῖς καὶ περὶ ἐορτῶν, αἱ συγγένειαν ἔχουσι

<sup>1</sup> Cohn, followed by Heinemann, proposes either to strike out αὐτοὺς, or read κατὰ τοὺς αὐτοὺς <χρόνους τοὺς>. See note a.

<sup>a</sup> See note 1. The second of these suggestions, which is what Heinemann actually translates, seems to me quite into freedom, but gave them a land fertile in every way. Of the fruits of this land we present a sample 219 offering to Thee, our Benefactor, if indeed we may speak of presenting that which we receive. For all these things, good Master, are Thy boons and gifts, and as Thou hast judged us worthy of them, we take pride and delight in the unexpected blessings which Thou hast given us beyond all our hopes." 220 XXXVI. This canticle is used continually by a succession of worshippers from early summer to late autumn, through the two seasons which constitute a complete half of the year. For the whole population cannot in a body bring the fruits of the season at a fixed time, but must do so at different times, and this may even be the case with the same persons coming from the same places.<sup>a</sup> For since some of the fruits 221 ripen more quickly than others, both because of the difference of the situation which may be warmer or colder, and for a multitude of other reasons, naturally the time when this sample of the fruits is due cannot be exactly defined or limited, but extends over a very considerable period. These offerings 222 are assigned for the use of the priests, because they have no territory allotted to them, nor property which brings them income, and their heritage consists of the offerings of the nation in return for the religious duties imposed upon them by night and day.

444

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 218-223

XXXVII. I have now completed the discussion of 223 the number seven and of matters connected with days and months and years that have reference to that number, and also of the feasts which are associationless. I understand the text to mean that the same growers may find their fruits ripening at different times in different years. This of course in itself would prevent a fixed date for the ceremony.

PHILO

πρὸς ἑβδομάδα, διεξήλθον ἐπόμενος εἰρμῶ τῶν προκειμένων κεφαλαίων κατὰ τὴν ἐν λόγοις ἀκολουθίαν. ἐπισκέψομαι δ' ἐξῆς τὸ ἐπόμενον, ὃ περὶ γονέων ἀναγέγραπται τιμῆς.

- 224 XXXVIII. Τέτταρα εἶδη πρότερον ὑπειπών, ἃ καὶ τῇ τάξει καὶ τῇ δυνάμει πρῶτα ἦν ὡς ἀληθῶς, τό τε περὶ μοναρχίας ἢ μοναρχείται ὁ κόσμος, καὶ τὸ περὶ τοῦ μηδὲν ἀπεικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα δημιουργεῖν θεοῦ, καὶ τὸ περὶ τοῦ μὴ ψευδορκεῖν ἢ συνόλως μάτην ὀμνύναι, καὶ τὸ περὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐβδόμης, ἅπερ σύμπαντα τείνει πρὸς εὐσέβειαν καὶ ὀσιότητα, μέτειμι ἐπὶ τὸ πέμπτον τὸ περὶ γονέων τιμῆς, ὃ, καθάπερ ἐν τοῖς ἰδία περὶ αὐτοῦ λόγοις
- 225 ἔδειξα, μεθόριον ἀνθρωπέων τε καὶ θείων. οἱ γὰρ γονεῖς μεταξὺ θείας καὶ ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεώς εἰσι μετέχοντες ἀμφοῖν· ἀνθρωπίνης μὲν, ὡς ἔστι δῆλον, ὅτι καὶ γεγόνασι καὶ φθαρῆσονται, θείας δ' ὅτι γεγενήκασι καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα εἰς τὸ εἶναι παρήγαγον· ὅπερ γάρ, οἶμαι, θεὸς πρὸς κόσμον, τοῦτο πρὸς τέκνα γονεῖς, ἐπειδὴ ὡς ἐκείνος τῷ μὴ ὑπάρχοντι ὑπαρξιν κατειργάσατο, καὶ οὗτοι μιμούμενοι καθ' ὅσον οἷόν τε τὴν ἐκείνου δύναμιν τὸ γένος ἀθανά-
- 226 τίζουσιν. XXXIX. ἄξιοι δ' οὐ διὰ τοῦτο μόνον τιμῆς πατῆρ τε καὶ μήτηρ, ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ἕτερα πλείω. παρ' οἷς γὰρ λόγος ἀρετῆς ἐστί, πρεσβύτεροι νεωτέρων προκρίνονται καὶ διδάσκαλοι γνωρίμων καὶ εὐεργέται τῶν εἰς πεπονθότων καὶ ἄρχοντες
- 227 ὑπηκόων καὶ δεσπότες δούλων. ἐν μὲν οὖν τῇ ἀμείνονι τάξει κρίνονται γονεῖς, πρεσβύτεροι γάρ

<sup>a</sup> Here begins the fifth commandment. Again a fresh numeration of chapters in Cohn.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. De Dec. 106-120.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 223-227

ated with it. In this I have followed the order of the principal heads set before us as the sequence of the subjects demanded. I now proceed to the next head, in which we find recorded a statement of the honour due to parents.

XXXVIII. <sup>a</sup>In my previous remarks I have sketched 224
the four divisions which both in order and importance stand undoubtedly first. They comprise the assertion of the absolute sovereignty by which the universe is governed, the prohibition against making any image or likeness of God and against perjury or vain swearing in general and the doctrine of the sacred seventh day, all of them tending to promote piety and religion. I now proceed to the fifth, which states the duty of honouring parents, a matter which, as I have shewn in the discussion devoted to this in particular, <sup>b</sup> stands on the border-line between the human and the divine. For parents are midway between 225 the natures of God and man, and partake of both ; the human obviously because they have been born and will perish, the divine because they have brought others to the birth and have raised not-being into being. Parents, in my opinion, are to their children what God is to the world, since just as He achieved existence for the non-existent, so they in imitation of His power, as far as they are capable, immortalize the race. XXXIX. And a father and mother de- 226 serve honour, not only on this account, but for many other reasons. For in the judgement of those who take account of virtue, seniors are placed above juniors, teachers above pupils, benefactors above beneficiaries, rulers above subjects, and masters above servants. Now parents are assigned a place 227 in the higher of these two orders, for they are seniors

PHILO

εἰσι καὶ ὑφηγηταὶ καὶ εὐεργέται καὶ ἄρχοντες καὶ δεσπόται, ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐλάττονι υἱοὶ καὶ θυγατέρες, νεώτεροι γὰρ καὶ μαθηταὶ καὶ εὖ πεπονηότες ὑπήκοοί τε καὶ δούλοι. ὥς δ' οὐδὲν τούτων κατέψευσται, δῆλον μὲν ἐκ τῆς ἐναργείας<sup>1</sup>.
 αἱ δ' ἐκ λόγου πίστεις ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐπισφραγιούνται 228 τὴν ἀλήθειαν. XL. λέγω τοῖνυν, ὅτι τὸ ποιῶν τοῦ γινομένου καὶ τὸ αἴτιον οὐπὲρ ἔστιν αἴτιον ἀεὶ πρεσβύτερόν ἐστιν· οἱ δὲ γεννήσαντες αἴτιοι καὶ δημιουργοὶ τρόπον τινὰ τῶν γεννηθέντων εἰσὶ· καὶ οἱ μὲν ὑφηγητῶν ἔχουσι τάξιν, ὅσαπερ ἂν εἰδότες τυγχάνωσι τοὺς παῖδας ἐκ πρώτης ἀναδιδάξαντες ἡλικίας, καὶ οὐ μόνον τὰ περὶ τὰς ἐπιστήμας ἀσκοῦσι καὶ νεάζουσιν ἐναποματτόμενοι λογισμοὺς ἀκμάζουσι παίδων,<sup>2</sup> ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἀναγκαιότατα τῶν πρὸς αἰρέσεις καὶ φυγὰς, αἰρέσεις μὲν ἀρετῶν, φυγὰς δὲ κακιῶν καὶ τῶν 229 κατ' αὐτὰς ἐνεργειῶν. εὐεργέται μέντοι τίνες ἂν εἶεν μᾶλλον ἢ παίδων γονεῖς, οἳ καὶ μὴ ὄντας εἰργάσαντο<sup>3</sup> καὶ αὐθις τροφῆς ἠξίωσαν καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα παιδείας τῆς κατὰ τε σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, 230 [καὶ] ἵνα μὴ μόνον ζῶσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ εὖ ζῶσι; τὸ

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἐνεργείας.

<sup>2</sup> The text here is well-nigh hopeless, and Cohn's treatment of it in Hermes, 1908, p. 202, is unsatisfactory. He places ἀσκοῦσι καὶ νεάζουσιν in brackets (which I have removed) as glosses (surely odd glosses) to ἀκμάζουσι, and apparently takes the next words as—"impressing thoughts on those of the children who are in their prime" (so also Heinemann). But this use of ἀκμάζουσι παίδων for τοῖς ἀκμάζουσι τῶν παίδων, which he himself says is "scarcely correct," seems to me impossible. For a tentative suggestion see App. pp. 628-629.

<sup>3</sup> I suggest μὴ ὄντας <ὄντας> εἰργάσαντο. See note b.

and instructors and benefactors and rulers and masters : sons and daughters are placed in the lower order, for they are juniors and learners and recipients of benefits and subjects and servants.

That none of these statements is false is self-evident, but logical proofs will ratify their truth still further.

XL. I say, then, that the maker is always senior to the thing made and the cause to its effect, and the begetters are in a sense the causes and the creators of what they beget. They are also in the position of instructors because they impart to their children from their earliest years everything that they themselves may happen to know, and give them instruction not only in the various branches of knowledge which they impress upon their young minds,<sup>a</sup> but also on the most essential questions of what to choose and avoid, namely, to choose virtues and avoid vices and the activities to which they lead.

Further, who could be more truly called benefactors than parents in relation to their children ? First, they have brought them out of non-existence;<sup>b</sup> then, again, they have held them entitled to nurture and later to education of body and soul, so that they may have not only life, but a good life. They have

<sup>a</sup> The translation does not do more than give the general sense. See note 2.

<sup>b</sup> Or "brought them out of non-existence into existence." See note 3. As the words stand in the text they should mean "made them to be non-existent," for ἐργάζομαι does not appear to be used absolutely = "create." On the other hand, ἐργάζεσθαι τινά τι = "to render a person something" (adjective) is a known construction used by Philo, e.g. De Agr. 58 τὸν λαὸν . . . φιλήδονον . . . ἐργάσεται, cf. Quod Deus 43, De Sac. 48. If corrected as suggested, the phrase "made non-existent persons existent" is quite parallel to τὰ μὴ ὄντα εἰς τὸ εἶναι παρήγαγον in § 225 and elsewhere.

PHILO

μὲν οὖν σῶμα διὰ τῆς γυμναστικῆς καὶ ἀλειπτικῆς ὠφέλησαν εἰς εὐτονίαν τε καὶ εὐεξίαν σχέσεις τε καὶ κινήσεις εὐμαρεῖς, οὐκ ἄνευ ῥυθμοῦ καὶ τοῦ πρέποντος, τὴν δὲ ψυχὴν διὰ τε γραμμάτων καὶ ἀριθμῶν γεωμετρίας τε καὶ μουσικῆς καὶ τῆς συμπάσης φιλοσοφίας, ἣ τὸν νοῦν εἰσῶκισμένον θνητῷ σώματι μετέωρον αἴρουσα παραπέμπει μέχρι οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς ἐν αὐτῷ μακαρίας καὶ εὐδαίμονας φύσεις ἐπιδείκνυται, ζῆλον ἅμα καὶ πόθον ἐνεργαζομένη τῆς ἀτρέπτου καὶ ἑναρμονίου τάξεως, ἣν οὐδέποτε λείπουσι πειθόμενοι τῷ 231 ταξίαρχῳ. πρὸς δὲ ταῖς εὐεργεσίαις καὶ τὴν ἐφ' οἷς ἐγέννησαν ἀρχὴν ἔλαβον, οὐχ ὥσπερ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι κατὰ κλήρον ἢ χειροτονίαν, ὡς αἰτιᾶσθαι δύνασθαι τὸν μὲν ὀλίσθῳ τύχης γενό-μενον, οὐ σὺν λογισμῷ, τὴν δὲ ὄχλου, πράγματος ἀνεξετάστου καὶ ἀνεπισκέπτου, φορᾶ, γνώμη δὲ ἀρίστη καὶ τελειοτάτη τῆς ἄνω φύσεως, ἣ<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὰ θεῖα καὶ τὰ ἀνθρώπινα σὺν δίκῃ πρυτανεύεται.
 232 XLI. διὰ τοῦτ' ἔξεστι τοῖς πατράσι καὶ κακηγορεῖν<sup>2</sup> [πρὸς] τοὺς παῖδας καὶ ἐμβριθέστερον νουθετεῖν καί, εἰ μὴ ταῖς δι' ἀκοῶν ἀπειλαῖς ὑπέικουσι, τύπτειν καὶ προπηλακίζειν καὶ καταδεῖν. ἂν μέντοι γε καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα ἀφηνιάζωσι τῇ ῥύμῃ τῆς ἀνιάτου μοχθηρίας ἀπαυχενίζοντες, ἐπέτρεψεν ὁ νόμος καὶ μέχρι θανάτου κολάζειν, ἀλλ' οὐκέτι

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἣ.

<sup>2</sup> MS. κατηγορεῖν.

<sup>a</sup> Including the lower instruction in reading and writing and the higher in literature, called respectively γραμματιστικὴ and γραμματικὴ, De Cong. 148.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. perhaps by setting them to degrading tasks. Heine-450

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 230-232

benefited the body by means of the gymnasium and the training there given, through which it gains muscular vigour and good condition and the power to bear itself and move with an ease marked by gracefulness and elegance. They have done the same for the soul by means of letters<sup>a</sup> and arithmetic and geometry and music and philosophy as a whole which lifts on high the mind lodged within the mortal body and escorts it to the very heaven and shews it the blessed and happy beings that dwell therein, and creates in it an eager longing for the unswerving ever-harmonious order which they never forsake because they obey their captain and marshal.

But in addition to the benefits they 231 confer, parents have also received authority over their offspring. That authority is not obtained by lot nor voting as it is in the cities, where it may be alleged that the lot is due to a blunder of fortune in which reason has no place, and the voting to the impetuosity of the mob, always so reckless and devoid of circumspection, but is awarded by the most admirable and perfect judgement of nature above us which governs with justice things both human and divine. XLI. And therefore fathers have the 232 right to upbraid their children and admonish them severely and if they do not submit to threats conveyed in words to beat and degrade them<sup>b</sup> and put them in bonds. And further if in the face of this they continue to rebel, and carried away by their incorrigible depravity refuse the yoke, the law permits the parents to extend the punishment to death, though here it requires more than the father alone or mann aptly quotes Plato, Laws 866 Ε προσηλακισθέντες λόγοις ἢ καὶ ἀτίμοις ἔργοις.

PHILO

μόνῳ πατρὶ ἢ μόνῃ μητρὶ, διὰ τὸ μέγεθος τῆς τιμωρίας, ἣν οὐκ ἄξιον ὑφ' ἐνὸς ἀλλ' ὑπ' ἀμφοῖν δικασθῆναι· συμφρονῆσαι γὰρ οὐκ εἰκὸς ἐπ' ἀναιρέσει τοῦ παιδὸς ἐκάτερον τῶν γονέων, μὴ βαρυνόντων καὶ καθελκόντων τῶν ἀδικημάτων ὀλκῇ τινι βεβαίῳ νικώσῃ τὴν ἐκ φύσεως ἐν-

233 ἰδρυμένην πάγιον εὐνοίαν. ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀρχὴν μόνον καὶ ἡγεμονίαν τὴν ἐπὶ τέκνοις ἀλλὰ καὶ δεσποτείαν γονεῖς ἔλαχον κατ' ἄμφω τὰς ἀνωτάτω θεραπόντων κτήσεως ιδέας, τὴν τε ἐπ' οἰκότρυφι καὶ ἀργυρωνήτοις· πολυπλασίους τε γὰρ τῆς ἀξίας τιμὰς<sup>1</sup> κατατιθέασιν εἰς τε παῖδας καὶ ὑπὲρ παίδων τιτθαῖς καὶ παιδαγωγοῖς καὶ διδασκάλοις, δίχα τῶν εἰς ἐσθῆτας καὶ τροφὰς καὶ τὴν ἄλλην ἐπιμέλειαν ὑγαιωνόντων τε καὶ καμνόντων ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας μέχρι τελείας· οἰκότριβές τε ἂν εἶεν οἱ μὴ μόνον οἴκοι γεννηθέντες ἀλλὰ καὶ [οἱ] ὑπὸ τῶν τῆς οἰκίας δεσποτῶν συνεισενεγκάντων τὰ πρὸς γένεσιν φύσεως θεσμοῖς εἰσφορὰν ἀναγκαίαν.

234 XLII. τοσοῦτων οὖν ὑπαρχόντων ἄξιον (ἐπαῖνον) μὲν οὐδὲν δρῶσιν οἱ τιμῶντες (τούς) γονεῖς, ἐπεὶ καὶ ἐν τι τῶν εἰρημένων αὐταρκέστατον εἰς σεβασμὸν αὐτοὺς προκαλέσασθαι, ψόγου δὲ καὶ κατηγορίας καὶ τῆς ἀνωτάτω δίκης οἱ μὴθ' ὡς πρεσβυτέρους αἰδούμενοι μὴθ' ὡς ὑψηγητὰς ἀποδεχόμενοι μὴθ' ὡς εὐεργέτας ἀμοιβῆς ἀξιοῦντες μὴθ' ὡς ἄρχουσι πειθαρχοῦντες μὴθ' ὡς δεσπότας

235 εὐλαβούμενοι. πατέρα, οὖν φησι, μετὰ θεὸν καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MS. τιμῆς.

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xxi. 18-21. Philo's language suggests a more independent action on the part of the parents than Deuteronomy. See App. p. 629.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 232-235

the mother alone.<sup>a</sup> So great a penalty should be the sentence, not only of one of them but of both. For it is not to be expected that both the parents would agree to the execution of their son unless the weight of his offences depressed the scale strongly enough to overcome the affection which nature has firmly established in them.

But parents have 233
not only been given the right of exercising authority over their children, but the power of a master corresponding to the two primary<sup>b</sup> forms under which servants are owned, one when they are home-bred, the other when they are purchased. For parents pay out a sum many times the value of a slave on their children and for them to nurses, tutors and teachers, apart from the cost of their clothes, food and superintendence in sickness and health from their earliest years until they are full grown. "Home-bred" too must they be who are not only born in the house but through the masters of the house, who have made the contribution enforced by the statutes of nature in giving them birth.<sup>c</sup>

XLII. With 234
all these facts before them, they do not do anything deserving of praise who honour their parents, since any one of the considerations mentioned is in itself quite a sufficient call to shew reverence. And on the contrary, they deserve blame and obloquy and extreme punishment who do not respect them as seniors nor listen to them as instructors nor feel the duty of requiting them as benefactors nor obey them as rulers nor fear them as masters. Honour there- 235 fore, he says, next to God thy father and thy mother,

<sup>b</sup> See on § 82.

<sup>c</sup> Does this imply that the οικότριβες were assessed in determining the εἰσφορά, as ἀργυρώνητοι naturally would be?

PHILO

- μητέρα τίμα δευτερείοις τοῖς γέρασιν ἀναδου-μένους, ἅπερ ἡ φύσις ἀπένειμεν αὐτοῖς ἀθλο-θετοῦσα. τιμήσεις δ' [ἐπ'] οὐδενὶ μᾶλλον ἢ πειρώμενος ἀγαθός τε εἶναι καὶ δοκεῖν εἶναι, ὧν τὸ μὲν τὴν ἄτυφον καὶ ἄπλαστον ἀρετὴν ἐπιζητεῖ, τὸ δὲ τὴν σὺν ὑπολήψει χρηστῇ καὶ τῷ παρὰ τῶν 236 συνόντων ἐπαίνῳ. μικρὰ γὰρ τῶν ἰδίων φροντίζοντες ὠφελειῶν τέλος εὐδαιμονίας νομίζουσι τὴν τῶν παίδων καλοκαγαθίαν, δι' ἣν καὶ τοῖς προσταπτομένοις θελήσουσιν ὑπακούειν ἐκείνοι καὶ ἐν ἅσασι καταπειθεῖς εἶναι τοῖς δικαίοις καὶ συμ-φέρουσιν· οὐδὲν γὰρ ἀλλότριον ἀρετῆς ὁ ταῖς ἀληθείαις<sup>1</sup> ὑφηγήσεται πατὴρ παιδί.
- 237 XLIII. Τεκμηριώσαιτο δ' ἂν τις τὴν πρὸς γονεῖς εὐσέβειαν οὐ μόνον ἐκ τῶν εἰρημένων, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς πρὸς τοὺς ἡλικας ἐκείνων ἀποδοχῆς.<sup>2</sup> ὁ γὰρ πρεσβύτην καὶ πρεσβύτιδα οὐδὲν γένει προσήκοντας αἰδούμενος ἔοικέ πως ὑπομιμνήσκεισθαι πατρός τε καὶ μητρὸς καὶ ἀποβλέπων ὡσπερ εἰς ἀρχέτυπα 238 τεθηπέναι<sup>3</sup> τὰς εἰκόνας ἐκείνων. ὅθεν ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς γράμμασιν οὐ μόνον προεδρίας ἐξίστασθαι διείρηται νέους πρεσβύταις, ἀλλὰ καὶ παριοῦσιν ὑπανίστασθαι πολὴν γήρως αἰδουμένους, εἰς ὅπερ ἐλπὶς ἀφ-239 ἰκέσθαι τοὺς προνομίας τοῦτ' ἀξιοῦντας. παγκάλως δέ μοι κακείνο νενομοθετῆσθαι δοκεῖ· φησὶ γάρ· “ ἕκαστος πατέρα τε ἑαυτοῦ καὶ μητέρα φοβείσθω,”

<sup>1</sup> Cohn suspects the wording and conjectures ὁ τῆς ἀληθείας <έρων>, but the form has already occurred and been accepted in i. 97 and De Ios. 38.

<sup>2</sup> MS. ἀποχῆς.

<sup>3</sup> MS. τεθεικέναι.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xix. 32, “Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man.” The LXX has 454

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 235-239

who are crowned with a laurel of the second rank assigned to them by nature, the arbitress of the contest. And in no way wilt thou honour them as well as by trying both to be good and to seem good, to be good by seeking virtue simple and unfeigned, to seem good by seeking it accompanied by a reputation for worth and the praise of those around you. For 236 parents have little thought for their own personal interests and find the consummation of happiness in the high excellence of their children, and to gain this the children will be willing to hearken to their commands and to obey them in everything that is just and profitable ; for the true father will give no instruction to his son that is foreign to virtue.

XLIII. But the proof of filial piety may be given 237 not only in the ways above mentioned, but also by courtesy shewn to persons who share the seniority of the parents. One who pays respect to an aged man or woman who is not of his kin may be regarded as having remembrance of his father and mother. He looks to them as prototypes and stands in awe of those who bear their image. And therefore in the 238 Holy Scriptures the young are commanded not only to yield the chief seats to the aged but also to give place to them as they pass,<sup>a</sup> in reverence for the grey hairs that mark the age to which they may hope to attain who judge it worthy of precedence. Admirable 239 too, as it seems to me, is that other ordinance where he says, "Let each fear his father and mother." <sup>b</sup>

ἀπὸ προσώπου πολιού ἐξαναστήση, which Philo might easily take to mean "rise up away from," i.e. make room for him. He need not be supposed to be claiming scriptural authority for yielding the chief seats, but mentions it as the universally accepted mark of respect.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xix. 3.

PHILO

φόβον πρὸ εὐνοίας τιθείς, οὐχ ὡς πρὸς ἅπαν ἄμεινον, ἀλλ' ὡς πρὸς τὸν παρόντα καιρὸν χρησιμώτερόν τε καὶ λυσιτελέστερον. πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ τοῖς παιδευομένοις καὶ νουθετουμένοις ἄφροσιν εἶναι συμβέβηκεν· ἀφροσύνη δ' οὐκ ἄλλω ἢ φόβῳ θεραπεύεται· δεύτερον δ' ἀρμόττον οὐκ ἦν νομοθέτου παραγγέλμασι τοὺς παῖδας εὐνοίαν διδάσκεσθαι τὴν πρὸς γονεῖς, ἣν αὐτοκέλευστον ἡ φύσις ἐξ ἔτι σπαργάνων [δέ]<sup>1</sup> ταῖς ψυχαῖς τῶν 240 οὕτως ἠνωμένων κατὰ γένος ἐνιδρύσατο. διὸ φιλίαν μὲν τὴν πρὸς τοὺς γεννήσαντας ὡς αὐτομαθῆ καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον καὶ προστάξεως οὐ δεομένην ἀπέλιπε, φόβον δὲ προστάττει διὰ τοὺς εἰωθότας ῥαθυμεῖν· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ γονεῖς παῖδας ὑπερβαλλούση χρώμενοι φιλοστοργία περιέπουσι καὶ πάντοθεν ἐκπορίζοντες αὐτοῖς τὰγαθὰ χαρίζονται μηδένα πόνον ἢ κίνδυνον ὑπερτιθέμενοι, δυνάμεσιν ὀλοκοῖς εὐνοίας<sup>2</sup> συνδεδεμένοι, τὸ λίαν φιλόστοργον αὐτῶν οὐ δέχονται τινες ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ, τρυφὴν καὶ χλιδὴν ἐζηλωκότες καὶ θαυμάζοντες μὲν τὸν ὑγρὸν βίον, διαρρέοντες δὲ κατὰ τε σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, καὶ μηδὲν μέρος ἐὼντες ὀρθοῦσθαι ταῖς οἰκείαις δυνάμεσιν, ὡς ὑποσκελιζόντες καὶ ἐκνευρίζοντες οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσιν ἔνεκα τοῦ μὴ δεδιέναι τοὺς σωφρο-νιστὰς πατέρας καὶ μητέρας, ἐνδιδόντες καὶ 241 ἐπιχαλῶντες ταῖς ἰδίαις ἐπιθυμίαις. ἀλλὰ καὶ τούτοις ἀναγκαῖον παραινεῖν, ὅπως εὐτονωτέραις καὶ ἐμβριθεστέραις χρώμενοι νουθεσίαις θερα-πεύσωσι τὸν τῶν παιδῶν ῥοῦν, καὶ τοῖς παισίν,

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἐξαιτεῖ σπαργάνων δέ.

<sup>2</sup> MS. ὄρκοις εὐνοίαις.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 239-241

Here he sets fear before affection, not as better in every way, but as more serviceable and profitable for the occasion which he has before him. For in the first place, persons subject to instruction and admonition are in fact wanting in sense, and want of sense is only cured by fear. Secondly, it would not be suitable to include in the enactments of a lawgiver an instruction on the duty of filial affection, for nature has implanted this as an imperative instinct from the very cradle in the souls of those who are thus united by kinship.<sup>a</sup> And therefore he omitted any mention 240 of love for parents because it is learned and taught by instinct and requires no injunction, but did enjoin fear for the sake of those who are in the habit of neglecting their duty. For when parents cherish their children with extreme tenderness, providing them with good gifts from every quarter and shunning no toil or danger because they are fast bound to them by the magnetic forces of affection, there are some who do not receive this exceeding tenderheartedness in a way that profits them. They pursue eagerly luxury and voluptuousness, they applaud the dissolute life, they run to waste both in body and soul, and suffer no part of either to be kept erect by its proper faculties which they lay prostrate and paralyzed without a blush because they have never feared the censors they possess in their fathers and mothers but give in to and indulge their own lusts. But these 241 parents also must be exhorted to employ more active and severe admonitions to cure the wastage of their children, and the children also that they may stand

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 629.

PHILO

ὅπως εὐλαβῶνται τοὺς γειναμένους<sup>1</sup> δεδιότες καὶ ὡς ἄρχοντας καὶ ὡς φύσει δεσπότας· μόλις γὰρ οὕτως ἀδικεῖν ὀκνήσουσι.

- 242 XLIV. Τὰ μὲν δὴ κατὰ τὴν προτέραν δέλτον πέντε κεφάλαια νόμων καὶ ὅσα τῶν κατὰ μέρος εἰς ἕκαστον ἐλάμβανε τὴν ἀναφορὰν διεξῆλθον. χρῆ δὲ καὶ τὰς ὀρισθείσας ἐπὶ τῇ τούτων παρα-243 βάσει τιμωρίας δηλῶσαι. κοινὸς μὲν οὖν ἐστὶ κατὰ πάντων θάνατος, δι' ἧν<sup>2</sup> ἔχει τὰ δικάσματα πρὸς ἀλληλα συγγένειαν. αἰτίαι δὲ τῆς δίκης διάφοροι. ἀρκτέον δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ τελευταίου τοῦ πρὸς γονεῖς, ἐπειδὴ καὶ περὶ αὐτοῦ λόγος ἔναυλος. ἐάν, φησί, τις τυπτήσῃ πατέρα ἢ μητέρα, καταλευέσθω· πάνυ δικαίως· οὐ γὰρ θέμις ζῆν τῷ προπηλακίζοντι
 244 τοὺς τοῦ ζῆν αἰτίους. ἀλλ' ἔνιοι τῶν εὐπαρῦφων καὶ νομοθετῶν πρὸς δόξας ἀπιδόντες μᾶλλον ἢ τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐκομψεύσαντο κατὰ πατροτυπτῶν ὀρίσαντες χειρῶν ἀποκοπὴν, ὑπὲρ τοῦ παρὰ τοῖς εἰκαιτέροις καὶ ἀνεξετάστοις εὐδοκιμῆσαι νομίζουσιν ἀρμόττον εἶναι τὰ μέρη οἷς ἐτύπησαν τοὺς 245 γονεῖς ἀκρωτηριάξασθαι. ἔστι δ' εὐήθες τοῖς ὑπρηρετηκόσι πρὸ τῶν αἰτίων δυσχεραίνειν, τὴν γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> So Holwerda for ms. τοὺς γινομένους, for which Cohn conjectured τοὺς <τοῦ ζῆν αἰτίους> γενομένους.

<sup>2</sup> ms. δι' ὄν.

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxi. 15, "Let him be surely put to death" (ΙΧΧ θανάτῳ θανατούσθω). Philo quotes it in De Fuga 83 with τελευτάτῳ. As stoning is the common form of execution in the Pentateuch and is definitely mentioned as the method to be used in the case of the disobedient son, the discrepancy is not remarkable.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 241-245

in awe of those who begot them, fearing them both as rulers and masters. For only so, and that hardly, will they shrink from wrongdoing.

XLIV. I have now discussed the five heads of the 242 laws belonging to the first table, and all the particular enactments which may be classed under each of the five. But I must also state the penalties decreed for transgression of them. The result of 243 the close affinity which the offences have to each other is that they all have a common punishment, namely, death, but there are different reasons for this punishment. We should begin with the last commandment, on the behaviour due to parents, since our discussion of it is fresh in our minds. He says "if anyone strikes his father or mother, let him be stoned."<sup>a</sup> This is quite just, for justice forbids that he should live who maltreats the authors of his life. But some dignitaries and legislators who had 244 an eye to men's opinions rather than to truth, have decreed that striking a father should be punished by cutting off the hands, a specious refinement<sup>b</sup> due to their wish to win the approval of the more careless or thoughtless, who think that the parts with which the offenders have struck their parents should be amputated.<sup>c</sup> But it is silly to visit displeasure on the 245 servants rather than on the actual authors, for the

<sup>b</sup> The common meaning of κομψένω as applied to clever or subtle words and actions (Heinemann, "in spitzfindiger Weise"), cf. De Mig. 75, does not fit in well with the next words, which represent the practice as a concession to the thoughtless. The feeling expressed in it may be either that the officials disguise their real feelings or that the course adopted is less coarse and drastic than capital punishment, or perhaps a combination of both these.

<sup>c</sup> On the evidence for the existence of this law see App. pp. 629-630.

PHILO

- ὑβριν οὐ χεῖρες ἀλλὰ διὰ χειρῶν ὑβρισταὶ δρώσιν, οὓς ἀναγκαῖον κολάζειν· εἰ μὴ καὶ τοὺς ἀνδροφονήσαντας ξίφει μεθετέον ὑπερόριον τὸ ξίφος ῥύψαντας, καὶ τοῦναντίον τοῖς ἀριστεύσασιν ἐν πολέμῳ τιμὰς οὐ δοτέον, ἀλλὰ ταῖς ἀψύχοις παν-246 τευχίαις, δι' ὧν ἠνδραγαθίσαντο· μὴ καὶ τῶν ἐν γυμνικοῖς ἀγῶσι στάδιον ἢ δίαυλον ἢ δόλιχον νενικηκότων ἢ πυγμῆν ἢ παγκράτιον σκέλη καὶ χεῖρας αὐτὸ μόνον<sup>1</sup> ταινιοῦν ἐπιχειρήσουσιν ὅλα τὰ σώματα τῶν ἀθλητῶν παρέντες; γέλως μέντ' ἂν εἴη τὰ τοιαῦτ' εἰσηγεῖσθαι, <τὰ> ὧν οὐκ ἄνευ κολάζοντας ἢ τιμῶντας, δέον τοὺς αἰτίους· οὐδὲ γὰρ μουσικὴν ἐπιδεικνύμενόν τινα δι' αὐλῶν ἢ λύρας καὶ σφόδρα κατορθοῦντα παραμειψάμενοι τὰ
 247 ὄργανα κηρυγμάτων καὶ τιμῶν ἀξιοῦμεν. τί οὖν ἔδει πατροτύπτας, ὧ γενναῖοι νομοθέται, χειροκοπεῖν; ἢ ἵνα πρὸς τῷ εἶναι μηδὲν χρήσιμοι τὸ παράπαν καὶ δασμὸν οὐκ ἐτήσιον ἀλλ' ἐφήμερον ἀναπράττωσι παρὰ τῶν ἠδίκημένων τροφὰς ἀναγκαίας ἅτε πορίζειν ἀδυνατοῦντες; οὐ γὰρ σιδήρειος πατήρ ἐστὶ τις οὕτως, ὡς λιμῷ περιϋδεῖν θνήσκοντα υἱόν, καὶ ταῦτα χρόνῳ τῆς ὀργῆς ἀμαυρουμένης.
 248 κἂν μὴ ἐπενέγκῃ μέντοι χεῖρας, κακηγορηῆ δ' οὓς χρέος ἀναγκαῖον εὐφημεῖν ἢ καὶ τρόπῳ ἑτέρῳ δρᾶτι τῶν ἐπ' ἀτιμία γονέων, θνησκέτω· κοινὸς γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> MS. αὐτῶν μόνον.

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxi. 16 (17), Lev. xx. 9, E.V. "curseth," but R.V. margin "or revileth." In the latter half of the sentence he perhaps alludes to Deut. xxvii. 16, "Cursed be he that setteth light by (ΙΧΧ ἀτιμάζων) his father or his mother."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 245-248

outrage is not committed by the hands but by the persons who used their hands to commit it, and it is these persons who must be punished. Otherwise, when one man has killed another with a sword, we should cast the sword out of the land and let the murderer go free, and conversely, honour should be given, not to those who have distinguished themselves in war, but to the lifeless equipments and weapons which were the instruments of their exploits. In the case of the victors in the athletic contests, 246 whether at the single or the double course or the long race or the boxing or the general contest, will they try to garland the legs and hands only and disregard the bodies of the athletes as a whole? It would surely be ridiculous to introduce such practices and give to the indispensable accompaniments the punishments or honours which should be given to the responsible persons. For similarly, in musical exhibitions, when anyone makes a highly successful performance on the flute or lyre, we do not pass him by and adjudge the laudatory announcements and honours to the instruments. Why then, you 247 grand legislators, should we cut off the hands of those who strike a father? Or is your object that the offenders, besides being quite useless, may levy a tribute not annually, but daily, on those whom they have wronged, because they are unable to provide the sustenance they need. For no father is so iron-hearted as to allow his son to starve to death, particularly as his anger grows faint as time goes on. And even if while making no assault with his hands 248 he uses abusive language to those to whom good words are owed as a bounden duty, or in any other way does anything to dishonour his parents, let him die.<sup>a</sup> He ἐχθρὸς καί, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, δῆμιος ἀπάντων· ἐπεὶ<sup>1</sup> τίνι γένοιτ' ἂν εὐμενῆς ἄλλω ὁ μηδὲ τοῖς αἰτίοις τοῦ ζῆν, δι' οὓς εἰς γένεσιν ἦλθεν, ὧν ἔστι προσθήκη;

PHILO

- 249 XLV. Πάλιν δ' ὁ τὴν ἱερὰν ἐβδόμην βέβηλον ἀποφήνας τὸ γ' ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἦκον μέρος ὑπόδικος ἔστω θανάτου. τούναντίον γὰρ τοῖς βεβήλοις καὶ πράγμασι καὶ σώμασι καθαρσίων εὐπορητέον εἰς τὴν ἀμείνω μεταβολήν, ἐπειδὴ “ φθόνος,” ὡς ἔφη τις, “ ἔξω θείου χοροῦ βαίνει.” τὸ δὲ τολμᾶν τὰ καθωσιωμένα παρακόπτειν καὶ παραχαράττειν ὑπερ-250 βάλλουσαν ἀσέβειαν ἐμφαίνει. κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν ἐκείνην ἐξ Αἰγύπτου μετανάστασιν ἠνίκα δι' ἐρήμης ἀτριβοῦς ἅπασα ἢ πληθὺς ὠδοιπόρει, γενομένης ἐβδόμης<sup>2</sup> αἱ μὲν τοσαῦται μυριάδες, ὅσας ἐδήλωσα πρότερον, ἐν ταῖς σκηναῖς κατὰ πολλὴν ἡσυχίαν διέτριβον, εἰς δ' οὐχὶ τῶν ἡμελημένων καὶ ἀφανῶν ὀλίγα φροντίσας τῶν διατεταγμένων καὶ χλευάσας τοὺς φυλάττοντας ἐξήει μὲν ἐπὶ φρυ-
251 γανισμόν, ἔργω δ' εἰς παρανομίας ἐπίδειξιν. καὶ ὁ μὲν ὑπέστρεφεν ἀγκαλίδα ἀγαγών, οἱ δὲ τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἐπὶ.

<sup>2</sup> MS. ἐβδομάδος.

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxxi. 14, 15.

<sup>b</sup> See note on Quis Rerum 242.

<sup>c</sup> Plato, Phaedrus 247 A, a quotation again made in Quod Omnis Probus 13, and with many echoes elsewhere, e.g. i. 320. See note on De Fuga 62.

<sup>d</sup> See Num. xv. 32-36. Cf. Mos. ii. 213 ff. <sup>e</sup> § 146.

<sup>f</sup> Heinemann, ignoring οὐχί, translates “one of the obscure and little esteemed,” and adds in a note that Philo has inferred his insignificance either from his collecting firewood, or from the absence of any mention of his name. If this is not mere inadvertence, he must have considered that οὐχί should be expunged. But his explanations of the man's is the common and indeed the national enemy of all. For who could find kindness from him who is not kind even to the authors of his life, through whom he has come into existence and to whom he is but a supplement ?

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 248-251

XLV. Again, let him who has turned the sacred 249 seventh day into a profane thing, as far as lies in his power, be sentenced to death.<sup>a</sup> For on the contrary we ought to be rich in ways of purifying things profane, both material and immaterial,<sup>b</sup> to change them for the better, since, as it has been said, "envy has no place in the divine choir."<sup>c</sup> But to dare to debase and deface the stamp of things consecrated shews the utmost height of impiety. There is an incident 250 which occurred during the great migration from Egypt in ancient days while the whole multitude was journeying through the pathless wilderness.<sup>d</sup> The seventh day had come, and all those myriads, how numerous I have stated in an earlier place,<sup>e</sup> were staying very quietly in their tents, when a single person of a rank by no means mean or insignificant,<sup>f</sup> regardless of the orders given and mocking at those who maintained them, went out to gather firewood, but actually succeeded<sup>g</sup> in displaying his disobedience to the law: He returned bringing an armful, 251 insignificance are very unconvincing, and, as the mss. of Philo do not shew as much tendency to insert negatives as they do to omit them, the text may stand, though I know of no explanation of Philo's statement that the offender was of high rank.

<sup>g</sup> Or "with the result that he displayed." This is perhaps an unusual meaning for εἰς. Heinemann gives "with the intention of shewing," but this would need ἐξήκει λόγῳ μὲν rather than ἐξήκει μὲν. He says that the same motive is suggested in § 213 of the parallel account, but misinterprets, I think, the sense of the phrase used there. See my note.

PHILO

σκηνῶν ἐκχυθέντες,<sup>1</sup> καίτοι παρατεθηγμένοι, νεώτερον οὐδὲν ἔνεκα τοῦ περὶ τὴν ἡμέραν ἱεροπρεποῦς εἰργάσαντο, πρὸς δὲ τὸν ἄρχοντα ἀγαγόντες τὸ ἀσέβημα μηνύουσιν· ὁ δ' εἰς εἰρκτὴν ἀποθέμενος, ἐκπεσόντος λογίου καταλεύειν τὸν ἄνθρωπον, ἐκδίδωσι τοῖς πρῶτον θεασαμένοις εἰς ἀπώλειαν. ὡς γάρ, οἶμαι, πῦρ ἐναύειν<sup>2</sup> ἐβδόμαις οὐκ ἐπιτέτραπται—δι' ἣν πρόσθεν αἰτίαν εἶπον—, οὕτως οὐδὲ τὰ πυρὸς ἐκκαύματα συλλέγειν.

- 252 XLVI. Τοῖς μάρτυρα καλοῦσιν ἐπὶ μὴ ἀληθεῖ θεὸν ὄρισται δίκη θανάτου· προσηκόντως· οὐδὲ γὰρ ἄνθρωπος τῶν μετρίων ἀνέξεταιί ποτε παρακληθεὶς συνεπιγράψασθαι ψεύδεσιν, ἀλλ' ἐχθρὸν ἄπιστον ὑπολαβεῖν ἂν μοι δοκεῖ τὸν εἰς ταῦτα 253 προτρέποντα. ὅθεν ῥητέον· τὸν ὀμνύντα μάτην ἐπ' ἀδίκῳ θεὸς ὁ τὴν φύσιν ἰλεως οὔποτε τῆς αἰτίας ἀπαλλάξει δυσκάθαρτον καὶ μαρὸν ὄντα, καὶ διαφύγη τὰς ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων τιμωρίας. διαδράσεται δ' οὐδέποτε· μυρίοι γὰρ ἔφοροι, ζηλωταὶ νόμων, φύλακες τῶν πατριῶν ἀκριβέστατοι, <τοῖς>

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἐκκαυθέντες.

<sup>2</sup> MS. ἐν δυοῖν.

<sup>a</sup> In the parallel account persons who have gone out to pray in the wilderness catch the Sabbath-breaker in the act. As Heinemann points out, we have in the two accounts two different answers to the question how they discovered the crime when they should have been staying in the tents.

<sup>b</sup> In Numbers "all the congregation."

<sup>c</sup> i.e. in § 65.

but the others, pouring out from the tents,<sup>a</sup> though greatly enraged if repelled from violence on account of the sanctity of the day, took him to the ruler and reported the impious deed. The ruler put him in custody, but when the divine pronouncement had been given out that he should be stoned, he surrendered him to those who had first seen him<sup>b</sup> to be done to death. For the prohibition against lighting a fire on the seventh day, the reason for which I have stated earlier,<sup>c</sup> applies equally, I presume, to collecting the means for kindling fire.

XLVI. For persons who call God to witness to an 252 untruth, death is the appointed punishment,<sup>d</sup> quite rightly. For not even a man, if he is of a decent sort, will tolerate an invitation to join in subscribing to an untruth, but would in my opinion regard anyone who urged him to this course as an enemy unfit to be trusted. And therefore we must declare that God, 253 though His nature is to be merciful, will never free from guilt him who swears falsely<sup>e</sup> to an injustice, a miscreant almost beyond possibility of purification, even if he evades the chastisements of men. And these he will never escape; for there are thousands who have their eyes upon him full of zeal for the laws, strictest guardians of the ancestral institutions, <sup>a</sup> Philo has no scriptural authority for death as a punishment for breaking the third commandment, which he here confines to perjury, and indeed this was recognized in § 27. His argument, as appears in. § 254, is that the sentence of death for the lighter shews that it must have been intended for the heavier offence.

<sup>e</sup> Not, I think, "lightly," "thoughtlessly," as Heinemann ("leichtfertig"). The sense of "falsely" is not uncommon in classical Greek. Philo uses μάτην to bring it into connexion with the ἐπι ματαίῳ of the commandment, and to suggest that perjury is included in "taking in vain."

PHILO

ἐπὶ καταλύσει<sup>1</sup> τι δρῶσιν ἀμειλίκτως ἔχοντες· εἰ μὴ ἄρα ἐπὶ μὲν ἀτιμία πατρὸς ἢ μητρὸς φονᾶν<sup>2</sup> ἄξιον, ἐπὶ δ' ὀνόματι τῷ καὶ αὐτῆς εὐκλεεστέρῳ σεμνότητος ὑπ' ἀσεβῶν ἀτιμουμένῳ μετριώτερον 254 οἰστέον. ἀλλ' οὐχ οὕτως ἐστὶ τις ἀνόητος, ὡς ἔνεκα τῶν ἐλαττόνων κτείνων τοὺς αἰτίους ἐπὶ τοῖς μείζουσιν ἔαν· μείζον δ' ἀσέβημα τοῦ πρὸς γονεῖς κακηγορουμένους<sup>3</sup> καὶ ὑβριζομένους τὸ περὶ τὴν ἱερὰν πρόσρησιν θεοῦ γενόμενον ἐκ ψευδορκίας.

255 Εἰ δὲ ὁ μὴ προσηκόντως ὀμνὺς ὑπαίτιος, πόσης ἄξιος τιμωρίας ὁ τὸν ὄντως ὄντα θεὸν ἀρνούμενος καὶ τοὺς γεγονότας πρὸ τοῦ πεποιηκότος τιμῶν καὶ μὴ μόνον γῆν ἢ ὕδωρ ἢ ἀέρα ἢ πῦρ, τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ παντός, ἢ πάλιν ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ πλάνητας καὶ ἀπλανεῖς ἀστέρας ἢ τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανόν τε καὶ κόσμον σέβειν ἀξιῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅσα θνητοὶ δημιουργοὶ κατεσκεύασαν ξύλα καὶ λίθους, ἅπερ
 256 εἰς ἀνθρωποειδεῖς τύπους ἐμορφώθη; τοιγάρτοι καὶ αὐτὸς ἐξομοιούσθω τοῖς χειροκμήτοις· θέμις γὰρ μὴ μετέχειν ψυχῆς τὸν τὰ ἄψυχα τιμήσαντα, καὶ μάλιστα φοιτητὴν γενόμενον Μωυσέως, οὗ πολλάκις ἤκουσε λέγοντός τε καὶ προφητεύοντος τὰς ἱερωτάτας καὶ καταθέους ἐκείνας ὑφηγήσεις·

<sup>1</sup> MS. ἀκριβέστεροι ἐπὶ καταλεύσει. Cohn's emendation of καταλεύσει to καταλύσει, sc. τῶν πατρίων, is certain. For the rest he suggested ἀκριβέστατοι <ἐπὶ τοῖς> ἐπὶ καταλύσει. The form here adopted (see Grégoire, Hermes, 1909, p. 313), or possibly <τοῖς τῶν>, seems preferable.

<sup>2</sup> MS. φόνον.

<sup>3</sup> MS. κατηγορουμένους.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 253-256

merciless to those who do anything to subvert them. Otherwise we must suppose that while it is right to seek the death of one who dishonours a father or a mother, more moderation should be shewn when impious men dishonour the name which is more glorious than majesty itself. Yet none is so foolish 254 as to visit the lesser offences with death and spare those who are guilty of the greater ; and the sacrilege involved in reviling or outraging parents is not so great as that committed by perjury against the sacred title of God.

But if he who swears a wrongful oath is guilty, how 255 great a punishment<sup>a</sup> does he deserve who denies the truly existing God and honours created beings before their Maker, and thinks fit to revere, not only earth or water or air or fire, the elements of the All, or again the sun and moon and planets and fixed stars, or the whole heaven and universe, but also the works of mortal craftsmen, stocks and stones, which they have fashioned into human shape? And there- 256 fore let him too himself be made like unto these works of men's hands. For it is right that he who honours lifeless things should have no part in life, especially if he has become a disciple of Moses and has often heard from his prophetic<sup>b</sup> lips those most holy and godly instrucon the breach of the first commandment Deut. xvii. 2-5, where the false gods are described in much the same way as here, and on breaches of the second Ps. cxv. 8, where instead of the A.V. "they that make them are like unto them" the LXX has ὁμοιοὶ γέγονντο, "may they become like."

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "both speaking and prophesying," meaning perhaps that though it is Moses speaking he is also God's spokesman, or that sometimes he speaks in his own person and sometimes as the spokesman. The words that follow, though primarily reproducing Ex. xxiii. 13, are, as "often" shews, intended to represent Moses' teaching elsewhere.

PHILO

ὄνομα θεῶν ἑτέρων μήτε τῇ ψυχῇ παραδέξῃ εἰς ὑπόμνησιν μήτε φωνῇ διερμηνεύσης, ἀλλ' ἑκάτερον, νοῦν καὶ λόγον, μακρὰν τῶν ἄλλων διαζεύξας ἐπίστρεψον πρὸς τὸν πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν τῶν ὅλων, ἵνα καὶ φρονῆς περὶ μοναρχίας τὰ ἄριστα καὶ κάλλιστα καὶ λέγῃς τὰ πρέποντα καὶ λυσιτελέστατα σαυτῷ τε καὶ τοῖς ἀκουσομένοις.

- 257 XLVII. Αἱ μὲν οὖν κατὰ τῶν παραβαιόντων τοὺς πέντε χρησμούς τιμωρίαὶ δεδήλωνται. τὰ δὲ προκείμενα τοῖς φυλάττουσιν αὐτοὺς ἄθλα, καὶ εἰ μὴ ῥηταῖς προστάξεισι μεμήνυκεν ὁ νόμος, ἀλλὰ 258 τοι δι' ὑπονοίας ἐμφαίνεται. τὸ μὲν οὖν μὴ νομίζειν θεοὺς ἑτέρους μηδὲ χειρόκμητα θεοπλαστεῖν μηδὲ ψευδορκεῖν ἑτέρου γέρωσ χρεῖον οὐκ ἔστιν· αὐτὸ γάρ, οἶμαι, τὸ ταῦτα ἐπιτηδεύειν ἄριστον καὶ τελεωτάτον ἔστι γέρας· ἐπὶ τίνι γὰρ δύναιτ' ἄν τις ἡσθῆναι μᾶλλον ἀληθείας ἐρῶν ἢ τῷ ἐνὶ προσκεισθαι θεῷ καὶ τῆς τούτου θεραπείας ἀδόλως 259 καὶ καθαρῶς περιέχεσθαι; καλῶ δὲ μάρτυρας, οὐχ οἵτινες θεραπεύουσι τῷφον, ἀλλὰ τοὺς ἀπλανῆ ζῆλον ἐζηλωκότας, παρ' οἷς ἀλήθεια τιμᾶται· φρονήσεώς τε γὰρ ἄθλον αὐτῇ ἢ φρόνησις καὶ δικαιοσύνη καὶ ἐκάστη τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν ἑαυτῆς ἔστι γέρας. ἢ δ' ὥσπερ ἐν χορῷ καλλιστεύουσα καὶ κατάρχουσα πασῶν ὀσιότης<sup>1</sup> πολὺ πλεον ἔστιν ἑαυτῆς καὶ ἀγώνισμα καὶ ἄθλον, παρέχουσα καὶ τοῖς χρωμένοις εὐδαιμονίαν καὶ τοῖς τούτων παισὶ καὶ ἐγγόνοις εὐπραγίας ἀναφαιρέτους.

- 260 XLVIII. πάλιν γε μὴν τοῖς τὴν ἱερὰν ἐβδόμην

<sup>1</sup> MS. ὀσιότητων.

<sup>a</sup> LXX, Ex. xxiii. 13, ἀναμνήσεσθε, E.V. "make no mention," which may have been intended by the Greek translator.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 256-260

tions, "Do not admit the name of other gods into thy soul to remember it," nor give expression to it with thy voice. Keep both thy mind and thy speech far apart from these others, and turn to the Father and Maker of all, that thy conceptions of His sole sovereignty may be the best and the noblest, and thy words such as are suitable and most profitable to thyself and to them that shall hear thee." 257

XLVII. We have now explained the punishments inflicted on those who transgress the five oracles. But the guerdons awaiting those who keep them, even if not stated by the law in actual words of the 258 injunctions, yet may be seen to underlie them. The refusal to acknowledge other gods, or to deify the works of men's hands, or to commit perjury, needs no other reward. For surely the practice of such abstinence is in itself the best and most perfect reward. For where can any lover of truth find greater pleasure than by devoting himself to the one God and embracing his service in guilelessness and 259 purity? I call to witness not such as serve vanity but those who are inspired with a zeal which never goes astray, those among whom truth is honoured. For wisdom is itself the guerdon of wisdom, and justice and each of the other virtues is its own reward.<sup>b</sup> And much more is she, who as in a choir is the fairest and the queen of the dance—religion<sup>c</sup>—her own prize and guerdon, providing happiness to those who cherish her and to their children and children's children blessings of welfare which can never be 260 taken from them.

XLVIII. Again, the experience of those who keep the seventh day is that

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 630.

<sup>c</sup> Or "holiness."

PHILO

φυλάττουσι συμβαίνει περὶ δύο τὰ ἀναγκαιότατα ὠφελείσθαι, σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, τὸ μὲν ἀναπαύλαις ἐκ τῶν συνεχῶν καὶ ἀτρύτων πόνων, τὴν δ' ὑπολήψεσιν ἀρίσταις περὶ θεοῦ ὡς κοσμοποιουῦ καὶ ἐπιμελουμένου ὧν ἐγέννησε· καὶ (γὰρ) τὰ σύμπαντα ἐτελεσφόρησεν ἑβδομάδι. δῆλον οὖν ἐκ τούτων, ὅτι τὴν ἑβδόμην τιμῶν αὐτὸς εὐρίσκεται

- 261 τιμὴν. ὁμοίως μέντοι καὶ ὁ τοὺς γονεῖς ἀποδεχόμενος μὴ θηράσθω τι πλέον· εὐρήσει γὰρ σκοπῶν ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ ἔργῳ τὸ ἄθλον. οὐ μὴν ἄλλ' ἐπειδὴ τῶν προτέρων τεσσάρων κεφαλαίων, ἃ θειοτέρας ἔλαχε μοίρας, ἔλαττον τοῦτ' ἐστὶ διὰ τὸ θνητῶν ἐφάπτεσθαι, παρηγόρησεν εἰπών· “ τίμα πατέρα καὶ μητέρα, ἵνα εὖ σοι γένηται καὶ ἵνα 262 μακροχρόνιος γένη,” δύο γέρα τιθεῖς· ἐν μὲν μετουσίαν ἀρετῆς, τὸ γὰρ εὖ ἢ ἀρετὴ ἢ οὐκ ἄνευ ἀρετῆς, ἕτερον δέ, εἰ δεῖ τὰληθές εἰπεῖν, ἀθανασίαν διὰ πολυχρονίου ζωῆς καὶ βίου μακραίωνος, ὃν καὶ μετὰ σώματος θρέψεις ψυχῇ κεκαθαρμένη τελεία καθάρσει βιῶν. ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἀποχρώντως λέλεκται, τὰ δ' ἐν τῇ δευτέρᾳ δέλτῳ μετὰ ταῦτα καιροῦ διδόντος ἐπισκεψόμεθα.

<sup>a</sup> For the same play on τιμή, “honour,” and τιμή, “value,” cf. Quod Deus 169 f.

<sup>b</sup> Or “when opportunity offers.” See on iii. 6 (App.).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 260-262

both body and soul are benefited in two most essential ways. The body is benefited by the recurrence of respite from continuous and wearisome toil, the soul by the excellent conceptions which it receives of God as the world-maker and guardian of what He has begotten. For He brought all things to their completion on the seventh day. These things shew clearly that he who gives due value <sup>a</sup> to the seventh day gains value <sup>a</sup> for himself.

So too indeed he who <sup>261</sup> shews respect to his parents should not seek anything further, for if he look he will find his guerdon in the action itself. However, since this commandment, inasmuch as it is concerned with mortal things, is inferior to the first four heads whose province is nearer the divine, He gave encouragement with the words, "Honour thy father and thy mother, that it may be well with thee and that thy time may be long." Here He names two rewards: one is the pos- <sup>262</sup> session of virtue, for "well" is virtue or cannot exist without virtue, the other in very truth is salvation from death given by prolonged vitality and a long life which thou wilt keep thriving even while in the body, if thou live with a soul purged clean of all impurity.

This part of the subject has now been sufficiently discussed. We will proceed in due season <sup>b</sup> to examine the contents of the second table.

INTRODUCTION TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, III

This treatise opens with an impassioned lamentation over the public business and troubles, which have debarred Philo in the past from his beloved studies, and an expression of his thankfulness that he now has some respite (1-5).

The Sixth (LXX) Commandment. We begin with some general thoughts on the need of continence even in marriage, and the gravity of the crime of adultery (7-11). Intercourse with a mother is mentioned with horror, and Philo traces to this practice the troubles rife among the Persians (12-19). But the law condemns no less marriage with a step-mother (20-21), with a sister (22-25), and forbids it with others less closely related, such as a wife's sister (26-28), and with an alien (29). It also strictly refuses to allow a woman who has been divorced and then married another to return to her first husband (31-31). There must be no intercourse during menstruation (32-33), and Philo himself disapproves of marriage with a woman known to be barren (34-36).

Graver matters are pederasty, popularly treated with a favour which Philo deplors (37-42), and bestiality which he illustrates with the story of Pasiphaë (48-50). A harlot, too, is worthy of death (51).

Speaking of adultery itself, he gives a full account of the test laid down in Numbers for the suspected wife (52-63). The penalties for rape or seduction of a widow or maiden are stated (64-71), and also for intercourse with a maiden betrothed to another (72-78), and for slander by a husband impugning the virginity of his bride (79-82).

The Seventh (LXX) Commandment. Murder is sacrilege and deserves the utmost penalty (83-85), and attempted murder is as bad (86-87). Murderers must not be allowed sanctuary in the temple (88-91). While unpremeditated homicide may be less heinous (92), no mercy must be shewn to poisoners (93-99), and with them may be classed magicians, though there is a higher magic (100-103). Returning to the subject of unpremeditated homicide, as in a sudden quarrel, he notes the law which enacted that if the sufferer did not die at once, his opponent would not suffer the extreme penalty (104-107). From the law as stated in the LXX, that a miscarriage caused by a blow was a capital crime if the child was fully formed (108-109), he draws the inference that the exposure of infants is murder, and inveighs very feelingly against the cruelty of the practice (110-119).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III

He then turns to the law which enables the involuntary homicide to fly to the "Cities of Refuge." He dwells on the hint given in Exodus, that the death of the man thus killed was divinely ordained, and suggests that these Levitical Cities were privileged because of the conduct of the Levites in slaughtering the calf-worshippers, which story he repeats at length (120-129). In connexion with this he discusses the meaning of the provision that the homicide must remain there till the death of the high priest (130-136).

Next we have laws dealing with cases where death is caused by a master beating a slave (137-143), or by a vicious bull left unguarded (144-146), or a pit left uncovered (147-148), or a roof left without a parapet (149).

The insistence of the law that murder must be punished with death is emphasized by the order that the body is to be prominently exhibited for a time (150-152).

No one is to suffer death as a substitute for the criminal, and here he enlarges on the cruelty shewn in attempts to extort taxes from the relatives of the debtors, and in laws which inflict death on the families of political offenders (153-168).

We now come to assaults not actually causing death. The decree in Deuteronomy that the woman who makes an indecent assault is to lose her hand gives rise to reflections on the modesty demanded of women (169-177), followed by an allegorical interpretation of the law (178-180). Punishment for violence must correspond with the crime (181-183). The law of "an eye for an eye" leads to a disquisition on sight as the channel of wisdom (184-191), and the eye as expressing the phases of the mind (192-194), though the law is modified in the case of a slave. Similarly "a tooth for a tooth" is justified by the indispensability of the teeth for maintaining life (195-204).

In conclusion he recurs to murder itself and argues that by holding contact with a corpse to cause uncleanness, the law shews its horror of the crime of taking life.

Γ'

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΑΝΑΦΕΡΟΜΕΝΩΝ ΕΝ ΕΙΔΕΙ
ΝΟΜΩΝ ΕΙΣ ΔΥΟ ΓΕΝΗ ΤΩΝ ΔΕΚΑ ΛΟΓΙΩΝ, ΤΟ ΕΚΤΟΝ ΚΑΙ ΤΟ ΕΒΔΟΜΟΝ, ΤΟ ΚΑΤΑ ΜΟΙΧΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΠΑΝΤΟΣ ΑΚΟ-ΛΑΣΤΟΥ ΚΑΙ ΤΟ ΚΑΤΑ ΑΝΔΡΟΦΟΝΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΠΑΣΗΣ ΒΙΑΣ

<sup>1</sup>
[299] I. Ἦν ποτε χρόνος, ὅτε φιλοσοφία σχολάζων καὶ θεωρία τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ τὸν καλὸν καὶ περιπόθητον καὶ μακάριον ὄντως νοῦν<sup>1</sup> ἐκαρπούμην, θείοις αἰεὶ λόγοις συγγινόμενος καὶ δόγμασιν, ὧν ἀπλήστως καὶ ἀκορέστως ἔχων ἐνευφραϊνόμεν, οὐδὲν ταπεινὸν φρονῶν ἢ χαμαίζηλον οὐδὲ περὶ δόξαν ἢ πλοῦτον ἢ τὰς σώματος εὐπαθείας ἰλυσπώ-μενος, ἀλλ' ἄνω μετάρσιος ἐδόκουν αἰεὶ φέρεσθαι κατὰ τινα τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπιθειαςμὸν καὶ συμπερι-πολεῖν ἡλίῳ καὶ σελήνῃ καὶ σύμπαντι οὐρανῷ τε <sup>2</sup> καὶ κόσμῳ. τότε δὴ τότε διακύπτων ἄνωθεν ἀπ' αἰθέρος καὶ τείνων ὥσπερ ἀπὸ σκοπιᾶς τὸ τῆς διανοίας ὄμμα κατεθεώμην τὰς ἀμυθήτους θεωρίας τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ἀπάντων καὶ εὐδαιμόνιζον ἐμαντὸν ὡς ἀνὰ κράτος ἐκπεφευγότα τὰς ἐν τῷ θνητῷ βίῳ

<sup>1</sup> Mangey βίον. See note a.

<sup>a</sup> I hardly think that νοῦν can be right. It is true that Philo often uses νοῦς τῶν ὄλων or νοῦς τοῦ παντός as an 474

BOOK III

ON THE PARTICULAR LAWS WHICH COME UNDER TWO OF
THE TEN GENERAL COMMANDMENTS, NAMELY THE SIXTH AGAINST ADULTERERS AND ALL LICENTIOUS-NESS AND THE SEVENTH AGAINST MURDERERS AND ALL VIOLENCE

I. There was a time when I had leisure for philo-<sup>1</sup> sophy and for the contemplation of the universe and its contents, when I made its spirit <sup>a</sup> my own in all its beauty and loveliness and true blessedness, when my constant companions were divine themes and verities, wherein I rejoiced with a joy that never cloyed or sated. I had no base or abject thoughts nor grovelled<sup>b</sup> in search of reputation or of wealth or bodily comforts, but seemed always to be borne aloft into the heights with a soul possessed by some God-sent inspiration, a fellow-traveller with the sun and moon and the whole heaven and universe. Ah then I gazed down<sup>2</sup> from the upper air, and straining the mind's eye beheld, as from some commanding peak, the multitudinous world-wide spectacles of earthly things, and blessed my lot in that I had escaped by main force equivalent for God, e.g. i. 18 above. But could he say ἐκαρπούμην θεόν? For Mangey's suggestion of βίον cf. εὐδαίμονα βίον ἐδύναντο καρποῦσθαι, De Op. 156 and De Som. ii. 74.

<sup>b</sup> Or "wallowed." More exactly "wriggled"; cf. De Dec.
149.

[300] <sup>3</sup> κήρας. | ἐφήδρευε δ' ἄρα μοι τὸ κακῶν ἀργαλεώ-τaton, ὁ μισόκαλος φθόνος, ὃς ἐξαπιναίως ἐπιπεσὼν οὐ πρότερον ἐπαύσατο καθέλκων πρὸς βίαν ἢ με καταβαλεῖν εἰς μέγα πέλαγος τῶν ἐν πολιτεία φροντίδων, ἐν ᾧ φορούμενος οὐδ' ὅσον ἀνανήξασθαι <sup>4</sup> δύναμαι. στένων δ' ὅμως ἀντέχω τὸν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐνιδρυμένον τῇ ψυχῇ παιδείας ἡμερον ἔχων, ὃς ἔλεόν μου καὶ οἶκτον αἰεὶ λαμβάνων ἀνεγείρει καὶ ἀνακουφίζει. διὰ τοῦτον ἔστιν ὅτε τὴν κεφαλὴν ἐπαίρω καὶ τοῖς τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμασιν ἀμυδρῶς μὲν —τὸ γὰρ ὀξυδερκές αὐτῶν ἢ τῶν ἀλλοκότων πραγμάτων ἀχλὺς ἐπεσκίασεν— ἀλλ' ἀναγκαίως γοῦν περιβλέπομαι τὰν κύκλῳ καθαρᾶς καὶ ἀμιγυῶς <sup>5</sup> κακῶν ζωῆς σπάσαι γλιχόμενος. εἰ δέ μοι καὶ ἐξ ἀπροσδοκίτου βραχεῖα γένοιτο εὐδία καὶ γαλήνη θορύβων τῶν ἐν πολιτεία, ὑπόπτερος ἐπικυματίζω μόνον οὐκ ἀεροπορῶν, αὔραις τῆς ἐπιστήμης καταπνεόμενος, ἢ με πολλάκις ἀναπείθει δραπετεύειν συνημερεύσοντα αὐτῇ καθάπερ ἀπὸ δεσποτῶν ἀμειλίκτων, οὐκ ἀνθρώπων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ πραγμάτων ἀλλαχόθεν ἄλλων χεიმάρρου τρόπον ἐπ<sup>6</sup> εἰσχεομένων. ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ ἐπὶ τούτοις θεῶ προσῆκον εὐχαριστεῖν, ὅτι καίτοι κατακλυζόμενος οὐκ ἐγκαταπίνομαι βύθιος, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς τῆς ψυχῆς ὀφθαλμούς, οὓς ἀπογνώσει τινὸς χρηστῆς ἐλπίδος ᾧήθην<sup>1</sup> ἤδη πεπηρῶσθαι, διοίγω καὶ φωτὶ τῷ σοφίας ἐναυγάζομαι μὴ πάντα τὸν βίον τῷ σκότῳ παραδοθεῖς. ἰδοὺ γέ τοι τολμῶ μὴ μόνον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τινὲς . . . ᾧήθησαν (Mangey ᾧήθην ἄν).

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 631.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 3-6

from the plagues of mortal life. But, as it proved, my 3 steps were dogged by the deadliest of mischiefs, the hater of the good, envy, which suddenly set upon me and ceased not to pull me down with violence till it had plunged me in the ocean of civil cares,<sup>a</sup> in which I am swept away, unable even to raise my head above the water. Yet amid my groans I hold my own, for, 4 planted in my soul from my earliest days I keep the yearning for culture which ever has pity and compassion for me, lifts me up and relieves my pain. To this I owe it that sometimes I raise my head and with the soul's eyes—dimly indeed because the mist of extraneous affairs has clouded their clear vision—I yet make shift<sup>b</sup> to look around me in my desire to inhale a breath of life pure and unmixed with evil.
 And if unexpectedly I obtain a spell of fine weather 5 and a calm from civil turmoils, I get me wings and ride the waves and almost tread the lower air, wafted by the breezes of knowledge which often urges me to come to spend my days with her, a truant as it were from merciless masters in the shape not only of men but of affairs, which pour in upon me like a torrent from different sides. Yet it is well for me to give 6 thanks to God even for this,<sup>c</sup> that though submerged I am not sucked down into the depths, but can also open the soul's eyes, which in my despair of comforting hope I thought had now lost their sight, and am irradiated by the light of wisdom, and am not given over to lifelong darkness. So behold me

<sup>b</sup> For this idiomatic use of ἀναγκάως = "as best I can" see note on Quod Det. 160.

<sup>c</sup> καὶ ἐπὶ τούτοις is better taken as explained by ὅτι κτλ. than as referring to the last sentence. The metaphor of the open eye goes back to § 4. For this and for the general sense of these sections see App. pp. 631-632.

PHILO

τοῖς ἱεροῖς Μωυσέως ἐρμηνεύμασιν ἐντυγχάνειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ φιλεπιστημόνως διακύπτειν εἰς ἕκαστον καὶ ὅσα μὴ γνώριμα τοῖς πολλοῖς διαπτύττειν καὶ ἀναφαίνειν.

- 7 Π. Ἐπεὶ δὲ τῶν δέκα λογίων, ἅπερ αὐτὸς ἔχρησεν ὁ θεὸς ἄνευ προφήτου καὶ ἐρμηνέως, πέντε μὲν εἴρηται τὰ χαραχθέντα ἐν τῇ προτέρᾳ δέλτῳ καὶ ὅσα τῶν κατὰ μέρος συνέτεινεν εἰς ταῦτα, δεῖ δ' ἐν τῷ παρόντι καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ τὰ κατὰ τὴν ἑτέραν δέλτον ὡς οἶόν τε ἄριστα συνυφῆναι, πειράσομαι πάλιν καθ' ἕκαστον τῶν γενῶν ἐφ-
- 8 αρμόζειν τοὺς ἐν εἴδει νόμους. ἐν δὲ τῇ δευτέρᾳ δέλτῳ πρῶτον γράμμα τοῦτ' ἐστίν· “οὐ μοιχεύσεις,” ὅτι, οἶμαι, πανταχοῦ τῆς οἰκουμένης μέγα πνεῖ ἡ ἡδονὴ καὶ οὐδὲν μέρος τὴν δυναστείαν αὐτῆς ἐκπέφευγεν, οὐ τῶν κατὰ γῆν, οὐ τῶν κατὰ θάλατταν, οὐ τῶν ἐν ἀέρι· χερσαῖά τε γὰρ καὶ
- [301] πτηνὰ καὶ ἔνυδρα πάντα διὰ πάντων τέθηπε | καὶ περιέπει καὶ τοῖς ἐπιτάγμασιν αὐτῆς ὑπέικει πρὸς τι βλέμμα καὶ νεῦμα ἀφορῶντα κἂν εἰ φρυάττοιο ὑπ' ἀλαζονείας ἀσμενίζοντα καὶ μόνον οὐ φθάνοντα τὰς προστάξεις ὀξύτητι καὶ ἀνυπερθέτῳ τάχει τῶν
- 9 ὑπηρεσιῶν. ἔχει μὲν οὖν καὶ ἡ κατὰ φύσιν ἡδονὴ πολλὴν καὶ πολλάκις μέμψιν, ὅταν ἀμέτρως καὶ ἀκορέστως χρήται τις αὐτῇ, καθάπερ οἱ περὶ ἐδωδὴν ἄπληστοι, κἂν εἰ μηδὲν τῶν ἀπαγορευομένων προσφέροντο, καὶ οἱ φιλογύναιοι συνουσίαις ἐπιμεμηνότες καὶ λαγνίστερον ὀμιλοῦντες γυναιξίν
- 10 οὐκ ἄλλοτρίαις ἀλλὰ ταῖς ἑαυτῶν. ἡ δὲ μέμψις σώματός ἐστι μᾶλλον ἢ ψυχῆς κατὰ τοὺς πολλούς,<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> κατὰ τοὺς πολλοὺς is omitted by several mss.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 6-10

daring, not only to read the sacred messages of Moses, but also in my love of knowledge to peer into each of them and unfold and reveal what is not known to the multitude.

II. Since out of the ten oracles which God gave 7 forth Himself without a spokesman or interpreter, we have spoken of five, namely those graven on the first table, and also of all the particular laws which had reference to these, and our present duty is to couple with them those of the second table as well as we can, I will again endeavour to fit the special laws into each of the heads. The first<sup>a</sup> commandment in 8 the second table is "Thou shalt not commit adultery." It comes first, I think, because pleasure is a mighty force felt throughout the whole inhabited world, no part of which has escaped its domination, neither the denizens of land nor of sea nor of the air, for in all three elements beasts, fowls and fishes all alike treat her with profound respect and deference and submit to her orders, look to her every glance or nod, accept contentedly even the caprices of her arrogance and almost anticipate her commands, so promptly and instantaneously do they hasten to render their services. Now even natural pleasure is often greatly 9 to blame when the craving for it is immoderate and insatiable, as for instance when it takes the form of voracious gluttony, even though none of the food taken is of the forbidden kind, or again the passionate desire for women shewn by those who in their craze for sexual intercourse behave unchastely, not with the wives of others, but with their own. But the 10 blame in most of these cases rests less with the soul

<sup>a</sup> So LXX in Ex. xx., though not in Deut. v. Cf. De Dec. 121.

PHILO

πολλήν μὲν ἔχοντας εἴσω φλόγα, ἢ τὴν παραβληθεῖσαν τροφήν ἐξαναλίσκουσα ἑτέραν οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἐπιζητεῖ, πολλήν δὲ ἰκμάδα, ἧς τὸ ῥοῶδες διὰ τῶν γεννητικῶν ἀποχετεύεται κνησμοὺς καὶ ὀδαξησμοὺς ἐμποιοῦν καὶ γαργαλισμοὺς ἀπαύστους.

11 τοὺς δὲ [καὶ]<sup>1</sup> γυναιξὶν ἄλλων καὶ ἔστιν ὅτε οἰκείων καὶ φίλων ἐπιμεμηνότας καὶ ἐπὶ λύμῃ τῶν πλησίον ζῶντας, ὅλα γένη πολυάνθρωπα κιβδηλεύειν ἐπιχειροῦντας καὶ τὰς μὲν ἐπὶ γάμοις εὐχὰς παλιμφήμους τὰς δὲ ἐπὶ τέκνοις ἐλπίδας ἀτελεῖς ἀπεργαζομένους, ἀνιάτον νόσον ψυχῆς νοσοῦντας, ὡς κοινούς ἐχθροὺς ἅπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους κολαστέον θανάτῳ, ὡς μήτε ζῶντες ἐν ἀδείᾳ πλείους διαφθείροιεν οἴκους μήτε διδάσκαλοι γένοιτο ἑτέρων, οἷς τὰ πονηρὰ τῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων ζηλοῦν ἐπιμελές.

12 III. Εὐ μέντοι καὶ τὰ ἄλλα τὰ περὶ τὰς ὀμιλίας ὁ νόμος διατάξατο. κελεύει γὰρ οὐ μόνον ἀλλοτρίων ἀπέχσθαι γυναικῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ χηρευσῶν<sup>2</sup> αἷς οὐ

13 θέμις συνέρχεσθαι. τὸ Περσικὸν ἔθος εὐθὺς ἀποστραφεῖς καὶ μυσαξάμενος ἀπεῖπεν ὡς μέγιστον ἀνοσιούργημα· μητέρας γὰρ οἱ ἐν τέλει Περσῶν

<sup>1</sup> I have followed Heinemann against Cohn in expunging καὶ. It is inserted by only one ms.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn χηρευσῶν <μητριῶν>, after which he places a comma which is here expunged. See note c.

<sup>a</sup> For the death penalty for adultery see Lev. xx. 10, Deut. xxii. 22.

<sup>b</sup> This list of prohibited unions follows, as Heinemann notes, the order of Lev. xviii. Some of them appear also in Lev. xx. and Deut. xxii.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps "women who have not a husband," femmes seules, thus including not merely mothers and stepmothers,

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 10-13

than with the body, which contains a great amount both of fire and of moisture ; the fire as it consumes the material set before it quickly demands a second supply ; the moisture is sluiced in a stream through the genital organs, and creates in them irritations, itchings and titillations without ceasing.

It is not s~~b~~ with men who are mad to possess the 11 wives of others, sometimes those of their relations and friends, who live to work havoc among their neighbours, who go about to bastardize wholesale widespread family connexions, to turn their prayers for married happiness into a curse and render their hopes of offspring fruitless. Here it is the soul which is incurably diseased. Such persons must be punished with death<sup>a</sup> as the common enemies of the whole human race, that they may not live to ruin more houses with immunity and be the tutors of others who make it their business to emulate the wickedness of their ways.

III. Excellent also are the other injunctions laid 12 down by the law on the relation of the sexes.<sup>b</sup> It commands abstinence not only from the wives of others but also from widows<sup>c</sup> in cases where the union is forbidden by the moral law. To the Persian 13 custom it at once shows its aversion and abhorrence and forbids it as a very grave offence against holy living.<sup>d</sup> For the Persian magnates marry their but all the prohibited relations which follow. Cohn's insertion of μητρικῶν is indefensible, as clearly it is mothers rather than stepmothers who are primarily under consideration. But no insertion is required. αἷς . . . συνέρχεσθαι is a natural way of describing unions which, though not adulterous, are incestuous.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xviii. 7 ff. For the Persians' practice see App. p. 632.

PHILO

- τὰς ἑαυτῶν ἄγονται καὶ τοὺς φύντας ἐκ τούτων εὐγενεστάτους νομίζουσι καὶ βασιλείας, ὡς λόγος,
- 14 τῆς μεγίστης ἀξιοῦσιν· οὐ τί ἂν γένοιτο δυσσεβέστερον ἀνοσιούργημα; πατὴρ εὐνήν τετελευτηκότος, ἦν ἄψαυστον ὡς ἱερὰν ἐχρῆν φυλάττεσθαι, καταισχύνειν, γήρως δὲ καὶ μητρός· αἰδῶ μὴ λαμβάνειν, τὸν αὐτὸν τῆς αὐτῆς υἱὸν καὶ ἄνδρα γίνεσθαι καὶ πάλιν τὴν αὐτὴν τοῦ αὐτοῦ καὶ γυναῖκα καὶ μητέρα, καὶ τοὺς ἀμφοῖν παῖδας τοῦ μὲν πατὴρ ἀδελφούς, υἰώνους δὲ τῆς μητρός, καὶ τὴν μὲν ὧν ἔτεκε μητέρα τε καὶ μᾶμμην, τὸν δὲ ὧν ἐγέννησεν ἐν ταύτῳ πατέρα τε καὶ ὁμομήτριον
- 15 ἀδελφόν. ταῦτ<sup>1</sup> ἐπράχθη τὸ παλαιὸν καὶ παρ' Ἑλλήσιν ἐν Θήβαις ἐπὶ τοῦ Λαῖου παιδὸς
- [302] Οἰδίποδος καὶ ἐπράχθη κατ' ἄγνοιαν, | οὐχ ἔκουσῖω γνώμῃ, καὶ ὅμως τοσαύτην κακῶν φορὰν ἤνεγκεν ὁ γάμος, ὡς μηδὲν ἐλλειφθῆναι τῶν εἰς τὴν ἀνω-
- 16 τάτῳ βαρυδαιμονίαν. πολέμων τε γὰρ ἐμφυλίων καὶ ξενικῶν διαδοχαὶ καθάπερ κλήρος παισὶ καὶ ἐκγόνοις παρὰ πατέρων καὶ προγόνων ἀπελείπετο καὶ πορθήσεις πόλεων τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἑλλάδι μεγίστων ἐγίνοντο καὶ φθοραὶ<sup>2</sup> στρατιωτικῶν δυνάμεων ἐγχωρίων τε καὶ τῶν κατὰ συμμαχίαν ἀφικνουμένων καὶ ἡγεμόνων τῶν παρ' ἑκατέροις ἀρίστων ἐπάλληλοι φθοραὶ<sup>2</sup> καὶ διὰ τὰς περὶ κράτους [καί]<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cohn prints ἀδελφόν—ταῦτ<sup>1</sup>, regarding what follows as a continuance of the sentence which begins with πατὴρ εὐνήν.

<sup>2</sup> The duplication of φθοραὶ has been justly suspected. Mangey proposed to substitute φόνοι for the first φθοραὶ, Heinemann thought it better to omit it.

<sup>3</sup> καὶ should be omitted. κράτος ἀρχῆς is a common expression in Philo, e.g. Mos. i. 96, 307.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 13-16

mothers and regard the children of the marriage as nobles of the highest birth, worthy, so it is said, to hold the supreme sovereignty. What form of un-<sup>14</sup>holiness could be more impious than this: that a father's bed, which should be kept untouched as something sacred, should be brought to shame: that no respect should be shown for a mother's ageing years: that the same man should be son and husband to the same woman, and again the same woman wife and mother to the same man: that the children of both should be brothers to their father and grandsons to their mother: that she should be both mother and grandmother of those whom she bore and he both father and half-brother of those whom he begot?

Even, among the Greeks these things <sup>15</sup>were done in old days in Thebes in the case of Oedipus the son of Laïus. They were done in ignorance, not by deliberate intention, and yet the marriage produced such a harvest of ills that nothing was wanting that could lead to the utmost misery. For a succes-<sup>16</sup>sion of wars civil and foreign was left to be passed on as a heritage to children and descendants from their fathers and ancestors.<sup>a</sup> The greatest cities in Greece were sacked, and armed forces both of natives and allied contingents were destroyed: the bravest leaders on both sides fell one after the other; brothers slew brothers in the deadly feud engendered by <sup>a</sup> The reference is not only to the war of the Seven against Thebes, caused by the rivalry of the two sons of Oedipus, but also to the later war of the Epigoni (the sons of the first set of chieftains), which might be regarded as indirectly caused by the curse of Oedipus, and in which Thebes according to the legend was sacked. Cf. Diodorus, iv. 66. The whole section, however, is a great exaggeration of the ordinary tradition.

PHILO

- ἀρχῆς ἀσυμβάτους ἔχθρας ἀδελφοκτονίαι, δι' ἧς οὐ μόνον αἱ συγγένειαι καὶ πατρίδες ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ πλείστη μοῖρα τοῦ Ἑλληνικοῦ παντὸς ἐξεφθάρη πανωλεθρία· κεναὶ γὰρ αἱ πρότερον εὐανδροῦσαι πόλεις οἰκητόρων μνημεῖα τῶν τῆς Ἑλλάδος συμφορῶν ὑπελείφθησαν, ἀτυχῆς θέα τοῖς ὀρώσιν.
- 17 οὐ μὴν οὐδὲ Πέρσαι, παρ' οἷς ταῦτα ἐπιτηδεύεται, τῶν παραπλησίων κακῶν ἀμοιροῦσιν· αἰεὶ γὰρ ἐν στρατείαις καὶ μάχαις εἰσὶ κτείνοντες καὶ κτεινόμενοι καὶ τοτὲ μὲν τοὺς πλησιοχώρους κατατρέχοντες τοτὲ δὲ τοὺς ἐπανισταμένους ἀμυνόμενοι· πολλοὶ δὲ πολλαχόθεν ἐπανίστανται, τοῦ βαρβαρικοῦ μὴ πεφυκότος ἡρεμεῖν· πρὶν γοῦν καταλυθῆναι τὴν ἐν χερσὶ στάσιν, ἑτέρα φύεται, ὡς μηδένα τοῦ ἔτους ὑπεξῆρησθαι καιρὸν εἰς ἡσυχίαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ θέρους καὶ χειμῶνος μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ ὀπλοφορεῖν, πλείω χρόνον ἐν τοῖς στρατοπέδοις ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ ταλαιπωροῦντας ἢ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν οἰκοῦντας διὰ πολλὴν ἔνδειαν εἰρήνης.
- 18 ἔω λέγειν τὰς τῶν βασιλέων μεγάλας καὶ ὑπερόγκους εὐπραγίας, οἷς ἀγώνισμα πρῶτον εὐθὺς ἄμα τῇ παραλήψει τῆς ἡγεμονίας τὸ μέγιστον ἄγος, ἀδελφοκτονία, μαντευομένων τὴν ἐκ τῶν ἀδελφῶν γενησομένην ἴσως ἐπίθεσιν ὑπὲρ τοῦ δοκεῖν
- 19 εὐλόγως κτείνειν. ἅπερ μοι δοκεῖ πάντα συμβαίνειν διὰ τὰς ἀναρμόστους νιῶν πρὸς μητέρας ὀμιλίας, τῆς ἐφόρου τῶν ἀνθρωπειῶν δίκης ἀμυνομένης τῶν ἀνοσιουργημάτων τοὺς ἀσεβοῦντας· ἀσεβοῦσι δ' οὐχ οἱ δρῶντες μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅσοι τοῖς δρῶσιν ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ συνεπιγράφονται.
- 20 τοσαύτην δὲ ὁ ἡμέτερος νόμος φυλακὴν

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 16-20

ambition for sovereign power. In consequence not only families and independent territories, but also the largest part of the Greek world perished involved in the general destruction. For cities formerly well populated were left stripped of their inhabitants as monuments of the disasters of Greece, a sinister sight to contemplate.

Nor are the Persians 17 either who follow these practices exempt from similar troubles, for they are always engaging in campaigns and battles, slaying and being slain.<sup>a</sup> Sometimes they are attacking the neighbouring populations, sometimes defending themselves against insurrection. For of insurgents many appear from many quarters, as the barbarian nature can never remain in quietude. Thus before the sedition of the hour is put down another springs up, so that no season of the year is reserved for a tranquil life, but summer and winter, day and night they are bearing arms, and so rarely does peace reign that they spend more time enduring the hardships of encampment in the open air than dwelling in their cities. I put on one side the great 18 and magnificent triumphs of kings whose first exploit when they succeed to the throne is that worst of sacrileges fratricide—murders which they try to vindicate as reasonable by predicting that their brothers will probably attack them. All these things 19 appear to me to be the result of the ill-matched matings of sons with mothers. For justice who watches over human affairs avenges the unholy deeds on the impious, and the impiety extends beyond the perpetrators of the deed to those who voluntarily range themselves with the perpetrators.

But such careful precautions has our law taken in 20

<sup>a</sup> See App. pp. 632-633.

- πεποίηται τοῦ πράγματος, ὥστε οὐδὲ προγονῶ τελευτήσαντος πατρὸς ἄγεσθαι μητριὰν ἐφήκε, διὰ τε τὴν εἰς τὸν πατέρα τιμὴν καὶ διότι μητριᾶς καὶ μητρὸς ὄνομα συγγενές, εἰ καὶ μὴ τὸ τῆς 21 ψυχῆς συνωδὸν πάθος· ὁ γὰρ ἄλλοτρίας ἀπέχεσθαι διδαχθεῖς, ὅτι μητριὰ προσερρήθη, πολὺ μᾶλλον ἀφέξεται τῆς φύσει μητρός· καὶ εἴ τις διὰ τὴν [303] ἐπὶ τῷ πατρὶ μνήμην αἰδεῖται τὴν ἐκείνου | ποτὲ γενομένην γυναῖκα, δηλὸς ἐστὶν ἔνεκα τῆς εἰς ἀμφοτέρους τοὺς γονεῖς τιμῆς οὐδὲν βουλευσόμενος ἐπὶ τῇ μητρὶ νεώτερον, ἐπεὶ καὶ σφόδρα ἐστὶν εὖηθες ἡμίσει μέρει τοῦ γένους χαριζόμενον ὀλοκλήρου καὶ παντελοῦς ὀλιγωρεῖν δοκεῖν.
- 22 IV. Ἐξῆς ἐστὶ παράγγελμα μηδ' ἀδελφὴν ἐγγυᾶσθαι, πάνυ σπουδαῖον καὶ συντεῖνον εἰς ἐγκράτειαν ὁμοῦ καὶ εὐκοσμίαν. ὁ μὲν οὖν Ἀθηναῖος Σόλων ὁμοπατρίους ἐφείς ἄγεσθαι τὰς ὁμομητρίους ἐκώλυσεν, ὁ δὲ Λακεδαιμονίων νομοθέτης ἔμπαλιν τὸν ἐπὶ ταῖς ὁμογαστρίοις γάμον ἐπιτρέψας τὸν 23 πρὸς τὰς ὁμοπατρίους ἀπέειπεν· ὁ δὲ τῶν Αἰγυπτίων χλεῦν (θέμενος)<sup>1</sup> τὴν ἐκατέρων εὐλάβειαν ὡς ἡμίεργα διαταττομένων εὐφόρησεν<sup>2</sup> εἰς ἀσέλγειαν, ἐπιδαψιλευόμενος δυσθεράπευτον κακὸν σώμασι καὶ ψυχαῖς ἀκρασίαν καὶ παρασχὼν ἄδειαν ἀπάσας ἀδελφὰς ἄγεσθαι, τὰς τε ἰδίας τοῦ ἐτέρου τῶν

<sup>1</sup> A verb has evidently been lost. Cohn's insertion of θέμενος is justified by χλεῦν τίθεσθαι in several places, e.g. Mos. i. 190.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn suspects this word, for which impossible variants are given in some mss., and suggests ἐφόρμησεν. I think the word as given in the translation (or possibly "blossomed into") is natural and appropriate.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xviii. 8.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 20-23

these matters that it has not even permitted the son of a first marriage to marry his stepmother after the death of his father,<sup>a</sup> both on account of the honour due to his father and because the names of mother and stepmother are closely akin, however different are the feelings called up by the two words.<sup>b</sup> For he 21 who has been taught to abstain from another's wife because she is called his stepmother, will a fortiori abstain from taking his natural mother; and if the memory of his father makes him respect her who was once his father's wife, the honour which he pays to both his parents will certainly keep him from entertaining the idea of violating his mother in any way. For it would be the height of folly while acknowledging the claims of a half parentage to appear to treat with contempt the full and complete whole.

IV. Next comes a prohibition against espousing 22 a sister, a very excellent rule tending to promote both continence and outward decency.<sup>c</sup> Now Solon the lawgiver of the Athenians permitted marriage with half-sisters on the father's side but prohibited it when the mother was the same.<sup>d</sup> The lawgiver of the Lacedaemonians, on the other hand, allowed the second but forbade the first. But the lawgiver 23 of the Egyptians poured scorn upon the cautiousness of both, and, holding that the course which they enjoined stopped half-way, produced a fine crop of lewdness. With a lavish hand he bestowed on bodies and souls the poisonous bane of incontinence and gave full liberty to marry sisters of every degree whether they belonged to one of their brother's parents or

<sup>b</sup> The allusion is to the hostility constantly connected with the name μητρύια. See examples in L. & S.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xviii. 9, xx. 17.

<sup>d</sup> See App. p. 633.

PHILO

γονέων, τοῦδε ἢ τοῦδε, καὶ τὰς ἐξ ἀμφοῖν καὶ τὰς οὐ νεωτέρας μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ πρεσβυτέρας καὶ ἰσηλικας· καὶ δίδυμοι γὰρ πολλακίς ἐγεννήθησαν, οὓς ἢ μὲν φύσις ἅμα τῇ γενέσει διήρτησε καὶ διέζευξεν, ἢ δ' ἀκολασία καὶ φιληδονία εἰς κοινωνίαν ἐκάλεσεν ἀκοινώνητον καὶ ἄρμονίαν ἀνάρμοστον.

24 ἄπερ ἐκμυσαζάμενος ὁ ἱερώτατος Μωυσῆς ὡς ἀλλότρια καὶ ἐχθρὰ πολιτείας ἀνεπιλήπτου καὶ προτρέποντα καὶ ἀλείφοντα πρὸς τὰ αἰσχιστα τῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων ἀνὰ κράτος ἀπέειπεν ἀδελφῇ συνέρχεσθαι, εἴτε ἐξ ἀμφοῖν εἴτε καὶ μόνου γένοιτο τοῦ

25 ἐτέρου. τί γὰρ δεῖ τὸ τῆς αἰδοῦς κάλλος αἰσχύνειν; τί δ' ἀχρωμάτους κατασκευάζειν παρθένους, ἃς ἐρυθρίαν ἀναγκαῖον; τί δὲ τὰς πρὸς τοὺς ἄλλους ἀνθρώπους κοινωνίας καὶ ἐπιμιξίας ἐπέχειν εἰς βραχὺ χωρίον τὸ ἐκάστης οἰκίας συνωθούντας μέγα καὶ λαμπρὸν ἔρνος<sup>1</sup> ἐκτείνεσθαι καὶ χεῖσθαι δυνάμενον εἰς ἡπείρους καὶ νήσους καὶ τὴν οἰκουμένην πᾶσαν; αἱ γὰρ πρὸς τοὺς ὀθνεῖους ἐπιγαμίαι καινὰς ἀπεργάζονται συγγενείας τῶν ἀφ' αἵματος

26 οὐκ ἀποδεούσας. V. ὦν χάριν πολλὰς καὶ ἄλλας ὀμιλίας ἐκώλυσε προστάξας μὴ θυγατριδῆν, μὴ υἰιδῆν, μὴ τηθίδα πρὸς πατρός ἢ μητρός, μὴ θείου ἢ υἱοῦ ἢ ἀδελφοῦ γυναῖκα γενομένην ἐγγυᾶσθαι, μηδ' αὖ προγονὴν ἢ χήραν ἢ παρθένον

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἔργον, for which Mangey and Cohn substitute γένος. I have adopted ἔρνος (my own correction), as favoured both by the sense and the ductus literarum.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 633.

<sup>b</sup> Philo prohibits the marriage of brother and sister (a practice which, it must be remembered, was adopted by the dynasty of the Ptolemies, which he did not regard with disfavour, cf. Mos. ii. 30) on the grounds (1) that it outrages

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 23-26

to both, and not only if they were younger than their brothers but also if they were older or of the same age.<sup>a</sup> For twins are often born who, although separated and disunited by nature at birth, enter at the call of concupiscence and voluptuousness into a partnership and wedlock which are neither in the true sense of the words. These practices our most 24 holy Moses rejected with abhorrence as alien and hostile to a commonwealth free from reproach and as encouragements and incitements to the vilest of customs. He stoutly forbade the union of a brother with a sister whether both her parents were the same as his or only one.<sup>b</sup> For modesty is lovely, why put it 25 to shame? Maidens must blush, why drive the hue from their cheeks? Why hamper the fellow-feeling and inter-communion of men with men by compressing within the narrow space of each separate house the great and goodly plant which might extend and spread itself over continents and islands and the whole inhabited world? For intermarriages with outsiders create new kinships not a wit inferior to blood-relationships. V. On this principle 26

he prohibits many other unions,<sup>c</sup> not allowing marriage with a son's daughter or a daughter's daughter, nor with an aunt whether paternal or maternal, nor with one who has been wife to an uncle or son or brother, nor again with a stepdaughter whether family decency; (2) tends to prevent intermarriage with less closely related families.

<sup>c</sup> All these degrees of relationship are mentioned in Lev. xviii 10-16, except that there the prohibition against marriage with the paternal uncle's wife does not seem to be extended, as here implied, to the maternal uncle's wife. In the parallel passage, xx. 20, the R.V. has "uncle's wife" simply, but Philo would read in the LXX τῆς συγγενοῦς αὐτοῦ.

PHILO

ζώσης μὲν τῆς γυναικὸς—ἄπαγε—ἀλλὰ μὴδ' ἀπο-θανούσης· δυνάμει γὰρ ὁ γε πατρῶος πατὴρ ὀφείλων τὴν ἐκ τῆς γυναικὸς ἐν τάξει θυγατρὸς 27 τίθεσθαι. πάλιν δύο ἀδελφὰς ἄγεσθαι τὸν αὐτὸν [304] οὐκ ἐπιτρέπει, οὐτ' ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ | οὐτ' ἐν δια-φέρουσι χρόνοις, κἂν τύχη τις ἦν προέγημεν ἀπεωσμένος· ζώσης γὰρ ἔτι τῆς συνοικουσίας, εἴτε<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἀπηλλαγμένης, εἴαν τε χηρεύῃ εἴαν τε καὶ ἐτέρῳ γαμηθῇ, τὴν ἀδελφὴν οὐχ ὅσιον ὑπέλαβεν ἐπὶ τὰ τῆς ἡτυχηκυίας παρέρχεσθαι, προδιδάσκων τὰ συγγενικὰ δίκαια μὴ λύειν μὴδ' ἐπιβαίνειν πταιίσμασι τῆς οὕτως ἡνωμένης κατὰ γένος μὴδ' ἐναβρύνεσθαι καὶ ἐντρυφᾶν θεραπευομένην ὑπὸ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἐκείνης καὶ ἀντιθεραπεύουσαν αὐτούς.
 28 ἐγείρονται γὰρ ἐκ τούτων χαλεπαὶ ζηλοτυπίαὶ καὶ δυσπαρηγόρητοι φιλονεικίαι φορὰς ἀμυθήτους ἐπἀγουσαι κακῶν· ὁμοιον γὰρ ὡς εἰ καὶ τὰ μέρη τοῦ σώματος τῆς κατὰ φύσιν ἁρμονίας ἐκστάντα καὶ κοινωνίας στασιάζουσι πρὸς ἄλληλα, ὁ νόσους ἀνιάτους ἀπεργάζεται καὶ φθοράς· ἀδελφαὶ δέ, εἰ καὶ διαιρετὰ μέρη γεγόνασιν, ἀλλ' οὖν ἁρμόζονται καὶ ἐνοῦνται φύσει καὶ συγγενείᾳ μιᾷ· ἡ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read εἰ. See note b.

---

<sup>a</sup> In these two sections Philo follows closely Lev. xviii. 18, "thou shalt not take a woman to her sister to be a rival to her, to uncover her nakedness beside the other in her lifetime." The LXX for "rival," ἀντίζηλος, suggests even better than the R.V. the idea of jealousy which Philo stresses. Nothing is said in Leviticus of the deceased wife's sister, nor by Philo, though his argument suggests that he would not object to it. He also says nothing about marriage with a brother's wife, though that is forbidden in v. 16. Possibly he did not see how to reconcile it with the express injunction widow or unmarried, I need not say while the wife is alive, heaven forbid, but even after her death. For the stepfather is virtually a father whose duty is to set his wife's daughter in the same position as his own. Again, he does not allow the same man to 27 marry two sisters either at the same or at different times, even if the person in question has repudiated the one he married first.<sup>a</sup> For while she is still alive either as his consort or divorced,<sup>b</sup> whether she is remaining in widowhood or has married another, he considered that the law of holiness required that the sister should not take the position which the wife has lost by her misfortune, but should learn not to set at nought the rights of kinship, nor use as a stepping-stone the fallen state of one so closely united to her by birth, nor bask at ease while enjoying and returning the caresses of her sister's enemies. For from this source grow grave jealousies and bitter 28 feuds bringing with them train upon train of evils without number. For it is just as if the parts of the body were to renounce their natural partnership and place in the system and engage in strife with each other, thus producing incurable diseases and fatalities. Sisters though made as separate parts of the system are fitted into it and formed into a single whole by nature and identity of parentage.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 26-28

of such a marriage, "to raise up seed to the brother," in Deut. xxv. 5 ff.

<sup>b</sup> If εἰ is read for εἴτε (see note 1), the meaning will be "while his (former) partner is alive, even though she has been divorced." This certainly best suits the rest of the sentence, which is confined to the case of the divorced wife. On the other hand it strains the meaning of the present participle τῆς συννοικουσίας and leaves out of consideration τῷ αὐτῷ χρόνῳ above, which clearly contemplates the possibility of bigamy.

PHILO

- ζηλοτυπία, πάθος ἀργαλεύτατον, ἀπορρήττουσα χαλεπὰ καινουργεῖ κακὰ καὶ δυσίατα.
- 29 ἀλλὰ μηδὲ ἄλλοεθνεῖ, φησί, κοινωνίαν γάμου συντίθεσο, μὴ ποτε μαχομένοις ἔθεσιν ὑπαχθεῖς ἐνδῶς καὶ τῆς πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ὁδοῦ λάθης διαμαρτῶν πρὸς ἀνοδίαν ἐκτραπείς· καὶ τάχα μὲν αὐτὸς ἀνθέξεις ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἡρματισμένος ὑποθήκαις ἀρίσταις, ἃς οἱ γονεῖς κατεπάδοντες αἰετοὺς ἱεροὺς νόμους ὑψηγοῦντο· δέος δὲ οὐ μικρὸν ἐστὶ περὶ υἱῶν καὶ θυγατέρων, ἴσως γὰρ δελεασθέντες νόθοις πρὸ γνησίων ἔθεσι κινδυνεύουσι τὴν τοῦ ἐνὸς θεοῦ τιμὴν ἀπομαθεῖν, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος τῆς ἀνωτάτω βαρυδαιμονίας.
- 30 Ἐὰν δέ, φησὶν, ἀνδρὸς ἀπαλλαγείσα γυνὴ καθ' ἣν ἂν τύχῃ πρόφασιν ἐτέρῳ γημαμένη πάλιν χηρεύσῃ, ζῶντος ἢ καὶ τετελευτηκότος τοῦ δευτέρου, μὴ ἐπανίτω πρὸς ἄνδρα τὸν πρότερον, ἀλλὰ πᾶσι τοῖς ἄλλοις ἔνσπονδος μᾶλλον ἢ τῷδε γενέσθω, θεσμοὺς παραβᾶσα τοὺς ἀρχαίους, ὧν ἐξέλαθετο
- 31 φίλτρα καινὰ πρὸ τῶν παλαιῶν ἐλομένη. πρὸς δὲ συμβάσεις εἴ τις ἐθέλει χωρεῖν ἀνὴρ τῇ τοιαύτῃ

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxxiv. 16, Deut. vii. 3 (here, as also in §§ 30, 31, Philo digresses from his interpretation of the prohibitions in Lev. xviii.). Though the prohibition in both Exodus and Deuteronomy is against intermarriage with the conquered Canaanites, the motive assigned, viz. fear of contamination with heathenism, is naturally regarded as making it a general ordinance. Josephus also appeals to it in condemnation of Solomon, Ant. viii. 191.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxiv. 4, where such an act is described as an abomination before the Lord, and defiling (λεῖψαι) the land. Though no penalty is mentioned, Philo, perhaps not un-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 28-31

And jealousy is a most troublesome passion, creating if it breaks out grave evils unknown before and hardly to be cured. <sup>a</sup> But also, he says, 29 do not enter into the partnership of marriage with a member of a foreign nation, lest some day conquered by the forces of opposing customs you surrender and stray unawares from the path that leads to piety and turn aside into a pathless wild. And though perhaps you yourself will hold your ground steadied from your earliest years by the admirable instructions instilled into you by your parents, with the holy laws always as their key-note, there is much to be feared for your sons and daughters. It may well be that they, enticed by spurious customs which they prefer to the genuine, are likely to unlearn the honour due to the one God, and that is the first and the last stage of supreme misery.

Another commandment is that if a woman after 30 parting from her husband for any cause whatever marries another and then again becomes a widow, whether this second husband is alive or dead, she must not return to her first husband but ally herself with any other rather than him, because she has broken with the rules that bound her in the past and cast them into oblivion when she chose new love-ties in preference to the old.<sup>b</sup> And if a man is willing to 31 contract himself with such a woman, he must be reasonably, interprets these strong phrases as describing an act deserving the death penalty, but is hard put to justify it. Apparently he understands the text as meaning that the remarriage shews that there was no real reason for the divorce. The woman is therefore "defiled" and an adulteress, and he not only a "pander," but an adulterer, either because he has connived at her adultery or perhaps because to marry an adulteress is in itself adultery. See further, App. p. 633.

γυναικί, μαλακίας καὶ ἀνανδρίας ἐκφερέσθω δόξαν, ἐκτετμημένος τῆς ψυχῆς τὸ βιωφελέστατον, μισοπόνηρον πάθος, ὅφ' οὐ καὶ τὰ οἴκων καὶ τὰ πόλεων πράγματα κατορθοῦται, καὶ δύο τὰ μέγιστα τῶν ἀδικημάτων εὐφόρως<sup>1</sup> ἀπομαζάμενος, μοιχείαν τε καὶ προαγωγειαν· αἱ γὰρ ἀθθις καταλλαγαὶ μνηύματ' εἰσὶ τοῦ ἐκατέρου· θανάτου δίκην τινέτω σὺν τῇ γυναικί.

<sup>32</sup> VI. | Φορὰ τῶν μηνιαίων ὁπότε γένοιτο, μὴ
[305] φανέτω γυναικὸς ἀνὴρ, ἀλλὰ τὸν χρόνον ἐκείνον ὁμιλίας ἀνεχέτω νόμον φύσεως αἰδούμενος καὶ ἅμα προδιδασκόμενος μὴ ἀτελεῖς γονὰς ἀκαίρου καὶ ἀμούσου χάριν ἡδονῆς προΐεσθαι· ὅμοιον γὰρ ὡς εἶ τις γεωπόνος ὑπὸ μέθης ἢ φρενοβλαβείας πυροῦς καὶ κριθὰς εἰς λίμνας καὶ χειμάρρους ἀντὶ πεδίων σπείροι, ξηραῖς γὰρ γενομέναις ταῖς ἀρούραις καταβάλλεσθαι χρὴ τὸν σπόρον εἰς
<sup>33</sup> εὐκαρπίαν. καθαίρει δὲ καὶ ἡ φύσις ἐκάστω μηνὶ τὴν μήτραν οἷά τινα θαυμαστὴν ἄρουραν, ἧς τὸν καιρὸν ἀγαθοῦ γεωργοῦ τρόπον ἐπιτηρητέον, ἵν' ἔτι μὲν ἐπικλυζομένης ἐπέχει τὸν σπόρον—λήσεται γὰρ τῇ φορᾷ κατασυρεῖς<sup>2</sup> ὑπὸ τῆς ὑγρότητος τοὺς σπερματικούς τόνους οὐ χαλασθεῖς<sup>2</sup> μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ εἰς ἅπαν ἐκλυθεῖς<sup>2</sup>. οὗτοι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ ἐν τῇ μήτρᾳ τῷ τῆς φύσεως ἐργαστηρίῳ ζωοπλαστοῦντες καὶ

<sup>1</sup> mss. εὐφυῶς.

<sup>2</sup> mss. mostly λήσεται γὰρ ἡ σπορὰ κατασυρεῖσα . . . χαλασθεῖσα . . . ἐκλυθεῖσα. Cohn follows F (supported by the Armenian), which has τῇ φορᾷ, though combined with the impossible feminine participles.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xviii. 19 (cf. Ezekiel, xviii. 6). Here Philo resumes his interpretation of Lev. xviii. and, except for §§ 34-36, concludes 494

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 31-33

saddled with a character for degeneracy and loss of manhood. He has eliminated from his soul the hatred of evil, that emotion by which our life is so well served and the affairs of houses and cities are conducted as they should be, and has lightly taken upon him the stamp of two heinous crimes, adultery and pandering. For such subsequent reconciliations are proofs of both. The proper punishment for him is death and for the woman also.

VI. Whenever the menstrual issue occurs, a man <sup>32</sup> must not touch a woman, but must during that period refrain from intercourse and respect the law of nature.<sup>a</sup> He must also remember the lesson that the generative seeds should not be wasted fruitlessly for the sake of a gross and untimely pleasure. For it is just as if a husbandman should in intoxication or lunacy sow wheat and barley in ponds or mountain-streams instead of in the plains, since the fields should become dry before the seed is laid in them. Now nature also each month purges the womb as if <sup>33</sup> it were a cornfield—a field with mysterious properties, over which, like a good husbandman, he must watch for the right time to arrive. So while the field is still inundated he will keep back the seed, which otherwise will be silently swept away by the stream, as the humidity not only relaxes, but utterly paralyses the seminal nerve-forces, which in nature's laboratory, the womb, mould the living creature and with consummate craftsmanship perfect tinues it in the same order to the end of § 53. He omits vv. 20, 21, the first denouncing simple adultery, already dealt with, the second against offering children to Moloch, which has no connexion with his present subject, even if he understood it, which is hardly possible, as the LXX has "give thy seed to serve the ruler."

PHILO

τῶν μερῶν ἕκαστον σώματός τε καὶ ψυχῆς ἀκρότητι τέχνης τελεσιουργοῦντες—, εἰ δ' ἐπίσχοι τὰ μηνιαῖα, θαρρῶν ἤδη γόνιμα κατασπεῖροι μηκέτι φθορὰς τῶν καταβληθησομένων δεδιώς.

- 34 Ὀνειδιστέον καὶ τοῖς σκληρὰν καὶ λιθώδη γῆν ἀροῦσιν· οὗτοι δὲ τίνες ἂν εἶεν ἢ οἱ στείραις συν-ερχόμενοι γυναιξί; θήρα γὰρ αὐτὸ μόνον ἡδονῆς ἀκράτορος ὡς οἱ<sup>1</sup> λαγνίστατοι τὰς γονὰς ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ διαφθείρουσιν· ἐπεὶ τίνος ἄλλου χάριν ἐγγυῶνται τὰς τοιαύτας; οὐ μὴν δι' ἐλπίδα τέκνων ἦν ἴσασιν ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἀτελῆ γενησομένην, ἀλλὰ δι'
- 35 ὑπερβάλλοντα οἴστρον καὶ ἀκρασίαν ἀνίατον. ὅσοι μὲν οὖν ἄγονται κόρας ἀγνοία τοῦ πῶς ἔχουσιν εὐθὺς εὐτοκίας ἢ τούναντίον, ὁπόταν χρόνῳ μακρῷ ὕστερον ἐκ τῆς ἀγονίας αισθανόμενοι στείρας αὐτὰς μὴ ἀποπέμπωνται, συγγνώμης εἰσὶν ἐπάξιοι συν-ηθείας, βιαστικωτάτου πράγματος, ἠττώμενοι καὶ φίλτρα ἀρχαῖα συμβιώσει μακρᾷ ταῖς ψυχαῖς
- 36 ἐνεσφραγισμένα λύειν ἀδυνατοῦντες. ὅσοι δὲ προ-δεδοκιμασμένας ἑτέροις ἀνδράσιν ὡς εἰσὶν ἄγονοι μνῶνται συῶν τρόπον ἢ τράγων ὀχεύοντες αὐτὸ μόνον, ἐν ἀσεβῶν στήλαις ἐγγραφέσθωσαν ὡς ἀντίπαλοι θεοῦ· τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἄτε φιλοζῶν καὶ φιλανθρώπῳ δι' ἐπιμελείας τῆς πάσης ἐστὶ σω-τηρίαν καὶ μονὴν τοῖς γένεσιν ἅπασιν ἐργάζεσθαι, οἱ δ' ἅμα τῇ καταβολῇ σβέσειν τοῖς σπέρμασι τεχνάζοντες ἐχθροὶ τῆς φύσεως ὁμολογουμένως εἰσὶν.

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for the ὅσοι of most mss. F, however, has οἱ (=οἱ), which may be right, οἱ λαγνίστατοι being the common belated epithet, "lecherous people that they are."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 33-36

each part both of body and soul. But if the menstruation ceases, he may boldly sow the generative seeds, no longer fearing that what he lays will perish.

<sup>a</sup> They too must be branded with reproach, who <sup>34</sup> plough the hard and stony land. And who should they be but those who mate with barren women? For in the quest of mere licentious pleasure like the most lecherous of men they destroy <sup>b</sup> the procreative germs with deliberate purpose. For what other motive can they have in plighting themselves to such women? It cannot be the hope of offspring, a hope which they know must necessarily fail to be realized; it can only be an inordinate frenzy, and incontinence past all <sup>35</sup> cure. Those who marry maidens in ignorance at the time of their capacity or incapacity for successful motherhood, and later refuse to dismiss them, when prolonged childlessness shews them to be barren, deserve our pardon. Familiarity, that most constraining influence, is too strong for them, and they are unable to rid themselves of the charm of old affection imprinted on their souls by long companionship. But those who sue for marriage with women <sup>36</sup> whose sterility has already been proved with other husbands, do but copulate like pigs or goats, and their names should be inscribed in the lists of the impious as adversaries of God. For while God in His love both for mankind and all that lives spares no care to effect the preservation and permanence of every race, those persons who make an art of quenching the life of the seed as it drops, stand confessed as the enemies of nature.

<sup>a</sup> Philo has not, nor does he claim to have, any biblical authority for these three sections. See App. pp. 633-634.

<sup>b</sup> Or "waste."

PHILO

- 37 VII. Ἐπεισκεκώμακε δὲ ταῖς πόλεσιν ἕτερον πολὺ τοῦ λεχθέντος μείζον κακόν, τὸ παιδεραστεῖν, ὃ πρότερον μὲν καὶ λεχθῆναι μέγα ὄνειδος ἦν, νυνὶ δ' ἔστιν αὐχχημα οὐ τοῖς δρῶσι μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ |
 [306] τοῖς πάσχουσιν, οἳ νόσον θήλειαν νοσεῖν ἐθιζόμενοι τὰς τε ψυχὰς καὶ τὰ σώματα διαρρέουσι μηδὲν ἐμπύρευμα τῆς ἄρρενος γενεᾶς ἔωντες ὑποτύφεσθαι, περιφανῶς οὕτως τὰς τῆς κεφαλῆς τρίχας ἀναπλεκόμενοι καὶ διακοσμούμενοι καὶ ψιμμυθῖω καὶ φύκεσι καὶ τοῖς ὁμοιοτρόποις τὰς ὄψεις τριβόμενοι καὶ ὑπογραφόμενοι καὶ εὐώδεσι μύροις λίπα χριόμενοι—προσαγωγὸν γὰρ μάλιστα ἐν τοῖς τοιούτοις τὸ εὐώδες ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς εἰς εὐκοσμίαν ἡσκημένοις—, καὶ τὴν ἄρρενα φύσιν ἐπιτηδεύσει τεχνάζοντες εἰς θήλειαν μεταβάλλειν οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσι.
- 38 καθ' ὧν φονᾶν ἄξιον νόμῳ πειθαρχοῦντας, ὃς κελεύει τὸν ἀνδρόγυνον τὸ φύσεως νόμισμα<sup>1</sup> παρακόπτοντα νηποινεῖ τεθνάναι, μηδεμίαν ἡμέραν ἀλλὰ μηδ' ὥραν ἐώμενον ζῆν, ὄνειδος αὐτοῦ καὶ οἰκίας καὶ πατρίδος ὄντα καὶ τοῦ σύμπαντος
- 39 ἀνθρώπων γένους. ὃ δὲ παιδεραστῆς ἴστω<sup>2</sup> τὴν αὐτὴν δίκην ὑπομένων, ἐπειδὴ τὴν παρὰ φύσιν ἡδονὴν διώκει καὶ τὰς πόλεις τό γε ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἦκον μέρος ἐρήμους καὶ κενὰς ἀποδεικνυσιν οἰκητόρων διαφθειρών τὰς γονὰς καὶ προσέτι τῶν μεγίστων κακῶν, ἀνανδρίας καὶ μαλακίας, ὑψηγητῆς καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὰ φύσει (φύσεως) νόμιμα (ὄργανα).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔστω.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xviii. 22, xx. 13. Cf. the similar treatment of the vice, De Abr. 135, 136, and also De Vit. Cont. 59-62, following on an adverse criticism of Plato's Symposium. The wording here is also very similar to i. 325 above, though there it is

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 37-39

VII. Much graver than the above is another evil, 37 which has ramped its way into the cities, namely pederasty.<sup>a</sup> In former days the very mention of it was a great disgrace, but now it is a matter of boasting not only to the active but to the passive partners, who habituate themselves to endure the disease of effemination, let both body and soul run to waste, and leave no ember of their male sex-nature to smoulder.
Mark how conspicuously they braid and adorn the hair of their heads, and how they scrub and paint their faces with cosmetics and pigments and the like, and smother themselves with fragrant unguents. For of all such embellishments, used by all who deck themselves out to wear a comely appearance, fragrance is the most seductive. In fact the transformation of the male nature to the female is practised by them as an art and does not raise a blush. These persons 38 are rightly judged worthy of death by those who obey the law, which ordains that the man-woman who debases the sterling coin of nature should perish unavenged, suffered not to live for a day or even an hour, as a disgrace to himself, his house, his native land and the whole human race. And the lover of such may 39 be assured that he is subject to the same penalty.
He pursues an unnatural pleasure and does his best to render cities desolate and uninhabited by destroying<sup>b</sup> the means of procreation. Furthermore he sees no harm in becoming a tutor and instructor in the based on Deut. xxiii. 1, and the expulsion of such persons from the congregation, here on Lev. xx. 13, where the death penalty is prescribed for both offenders (see §§ 38, 39 below). See also App. p. 634.

<sup>b</sup> Or again "wasting," as in § 34. But here at least the thought may be the same as in De Abr. 135, where the pederast is supposed to become impotent.

PHILO

διδάσκαλος ἀξιοῖ γενέσθαι τοὺς νέους ὠραΐζων καὶ τὸ τῆς ἀκμῆς ἄνθος ἐκθηλύνων, ὃ πρὸς ἀλκὴν καὶ ῥώμην ἀλείφειν ἀρμόττον ἦν, καὶ τελευταῖον ὅτι κακοῦ τρόπον γεωργοῦ τὰς μὲν βαθυγείους καὶ εὐκάρπους ἀρούρας χερσεύειν ἐᾷ μηχανώμενος ἐπ' αὐταῖς ἀγωνίαν, ἐξ ὧν δ' οὐδέν βλάστημα προσδοκᾶται τὸ παράπαν, εἰς ταῦτα πονεῖται μεθ' 40 ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτωρ. αἴτιον δ' οἶμαι τὸ παρὰ πολλοῖς τῶν δήμων ἀκρασίας καὶ μαλακίας ἄθλα κεῖσθαι· τοὺς γοῦν ἀνδρογύνους ἔστιν ἰδεῖν διὰ πληθυσίας ἀγορᾶς αἰεὶ σοβοῦντας κὰν ταῖς ἑορταῖς προπομπεύοντας καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ τοὺς ἀνιέρους διειληχότας καὶ μυστηρίων καὶ τελετῶν κατάρχοντας 41 καὶ <τὰ> Δήμητρος ὀργιάζοντας. ὅσοι δ' αὐτῶν τὴν καλὴν νεανειάν προσεπιτείνοντες εἰς ἅπαν ὠρέχθησαν μεταβολῆς τῆς εἰς γυναῖκας καὶ τὰ γεννητικὰ προσapéκοψαν, ἀλουργίδας ἀμπεχόμενοι καθάπερ οἱ μεγάλων ἀγαθῶν αἴτιοι ταῖς πατρίσι προέρχονται δορυφορούμενοι, τοὺς ὑπαντῶντας 42 ἐπιστρέφοντες. εἰ δ' ἦν ἀγανάκτησις οἷα παρὰ τῷ ἡμετέρῳ νομοθέτῃ κατὰ τῶν τὰ τοιαῦτα τολμώντων καὶ ὡς κοινὰ τῶν πατρίδων ἄγη καὶ μιάσματα δίχα συγγνώμης ἀνηροῦντο, πολλοὺς ἂν ἑτέρους συνέβαινε νουθετεῖσθαι· αἱ γὰρ τῶν προκαταγνωσθέντων ἀπαραίτητοι τιμωρίαι ἀνακοπήν οὐ βραχεῖαν ἐργάζονται τοῖς ζηλωταῖς τῶν ὁμοίων ἐπιτηδευμάτων.

---

<sup>a</sup> The translation supposes that the idea is the same as in 500

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 39-42

grievous vices of unmanliness and effeminacy by prolonging the bloom<sup>a</sup> of the young and emasculating the flower of their prime, which should rightly be trained to strength and robustness. Finally, like a bad husbandman he lets the deep-soiled and fruitful fields lie sterile, by taking steps to keep them from bearing, while he spends his labour night and day on soil from which no growth at all can be expected. The reason 40 is, I think, to be found in the prizes awarded in many nations to licentiousness and effeminacy. Certainly you may see these hybrids of man and woman continually strutting about through the thick of the market, heading the processions at the feasts, appointed to serve as unholy ministers of holy things, leading the mysteries and initiations and celebrating the rites of Demeter.<sup>b</sup> Those of them who by way of 41 heightening still further their youthful beauty have desired to be completely changed into women and gone on to mutilate their genital organs, are clad in purple like signal benefactors of their native lands, and march in front escorted by a bodyguard, attracting the attention of those who meet them. But if 42 such indignation as our lawgiver felt was directed against those who do not shrink from such conduct, if they were cut off without condonation as public enemies, each of them a curse and a pollution of his country, many others would be found to take the warning. For relentless punishment of criminals already condemned acts as a considerable check on those who are eager to practise the like.

i. 325 τὸ τῆς ὥρας ταμείοντος ἄνθος ἵνα μὴ ῥαδίως παραίνοιτο. But the phrase is strange; Heinemann gives "die jungen Leute sich herausputzen lässt." Two MSS. have τοῦ γένους, which Mangey would correct to τοὺς γένους (genas venustans).

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 634.

- 43
[307] VIII. | Ἄλλα γὰρ ἔνιοι τὰς Συβαριτῶν καὶ τὰς ἔτι λαγνιστέρων ἐπιθυμίας ζηλώσαντες τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ὀψοφαγίαις καὶ οἰνοφλυγίαις καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις ταῖς γαστρὸς καὶ τῶν μετὰ γαστέρα ἡδοναῖς ἐνησκήθησαν, εἶτα δὲ κορεσθέντες ἐξ-ῦβρισαν—ῦβριν γὰρ κόρος γεννᾶν πέφυκεν—, ὡς ὑπὸ φρενοβλαβείας λυττᾶν καὶ ἐπιμεμηνῆναι μηκέτ' ἀνθρώποις εἴτ' ἄρρεσιν εἶτε θηλείαις ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀλόγοις ζώοις, ὡσπερ ἐν Κρήτῃ φασὶ τὸ παλαιὸν τὴν γυναῖκα Μίνω τοῦ βασιλέως ὄνομα Πασιφάην· 44 ταύρου γὰρ ἐρασθεῖσαν καὶ τῷ πάθει σφαδάζουσαν ἔνεκα τῆς περὶ τὴν ὀμιλίαν ἀπογνωσεως—ἀποτυγχανόμενος γὰρ ἔρως οὐ μετρίως ἐπιτείνεται—Δαιδάλω τὴν κατέχουσαν συμφορὰν ἀνευγεκῆν, ὃς ἦν τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν ἄριστος δημιουργός· τὸν δὲ πάνυ δεινὸν ὄντα ταῖς ἐπινοίαις τὰ ἀθήρατα θηρᾶν δούρειον κατασκευάσαι βούν καὶ διὰ τῆς ἐτέρας πλευρᾶς ἐνθεῖναι τὴν Πασιφάην, τὸν δὲ ταῦρον ὀρμήσαντα ὡς ἐπὶ ζῶον συγγενὲς ἐπιβαίνειν· ἐγκύμονα δὲ γενομένην χρόνοις ὕστερον ἀποτεκεῖν 45 μιξόθηρα τὸν ἐπικαλούμενον Μινώταυρον. εἰκὸς δὲ καὶ ἄλλας ἔσεσθαι Πασιφάας, ἀχαλινώτων ἑωμένων τῶν παθῶν, καὶ οὐ γυναῖκας μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄνδρας ἐπιμανήσεσθαι θηρίοις, ἐξ ὧν γενήσεσθαι τέρατα παλίμφημα, μηνύματα τῆς ἀνθρώπων ὑπερβαλλούσης βδελυρίας· δι' ἣν ἴσως καὶ αἱ τῶν ἀνυπάρκτων καὶ μεμυθευμένων ἀγέννητοι φύσεις Ἴπποκενταύρων καὶ Χιμαιρῶν καὶ τῶν ὁμοιο-46 τρόπων ἔσονται. τοσοῦτον δ' ἄρα τὸ προμηθὲς ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς νόμοις ἐστίν, ὡσθ' ὑπὲρ

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xviii. 23; xx. 15-16; Ex. xxii. 19.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 43-46

VIII. Even worse than this is the conduct of some 43 who have emulated the lusts of the Sybarites and those of others even more lascivious than they. These persons begin with making themselves experts in dainty feeding, wine-bibbing and the other pleasures of the belly and the parts below it. Then sated with these they reach such a pitch of wantonness, the natural offspring of satiety, that losing their senses they conceive a frantic passion, no longer for human beings male or female, but even for brute beasts.<sup>a</sup> So according to the story did Pasiphaë the wife of King Minos long ago in Crete.<sup>b</sup> She was enamoured of a 44 bull, but had no hope of obtaining its company.
Consequently wild with passion, for amorousness is vastly intensified by unsuccess, she reported the trouble under which she was labouring to Daedalus, who was the best craftsman of his time. His masterly skill in devising plans for capturing the uncaptured enabled him to construct a wooden cow, into which he introduced Pasiphaë through one of its sides, and the bull supposing it to be a living animal of its own kind, charged and mounted it. She became pregnant, and in the course of time bore a half-beast called the Minotaur. Probably, if passions are suffered to go 45 unbridled, there will be other Pasiphaës, and not only women but also men will be frantically in love with wild beasts, which will produce unnatural monsters to serve as monuments of the disgusting excesses of mankind; whence possibly the Hippocentaurs and Chimeras and the like, forms of life hitherto unknown and with no existence outside mythology, will come into being. Actually so great is the pro- 46 visions made in the law to ensure that men should <sup>b</sup> Cf. Diodorus, iv. 77.

PHILO

τοῦ μηδεμίαν ἔκθεσμον ὁμιλίαν ἀνθρώπους προσ-ἴεσθαι διείρηται μηδὲ κτήνος ἕαν ὑπὸ τινος ἕτερογενοῦς ὀχεύεσθαι· τράγον οὐδεὶς ἑάσει ποιμὴν Ἰουδαῖος ἐπιβαίνειν ἀμνάδι οὐδὲ κριὸν χιμαῖρα οὐδὲ βοῦν ἵππῳ, εἰ δὲ μή, δώσει δίκας ὡς φύσεως δόγμα λύων, ἧ τὰ ἀνωτάτω γένη διατηρεῖν ἐπιμελὲς 47 οὐ νοθεύόμενα. τοὺς ὀρεῖς ἔνιοι μὲν ἀπάντων ὑποζυγίων προτιμῶσιν, ἐπειδὴ τὰ σώματα αὐτοῖς πέπηγε καὶ σφόδρα νενεύρωται, κὰν τοῖς ἵποφορβίοις καὶ ταῖς ἵπποστάσεσιν ὄνους ὑπερμεγέθει, οὓς προσαγορεύουσι κήλωνας, ἀνατρέφουσιν, ἵνα ταῖς θηλείαις ἐπιβαίνωσι πώλοισι, αἱ δὲ μικτὸν ζῶον ἀποτίκτουσιν ἡμίονον, ἧς παρὰ φύσιν τὴν γένεσιν εἰδὼς ἀνὰ κράτος ἀπέιπε Μωυσῆς καθολικωτέρα προστάξει, τοῖς ἀνομοιογενέσι μὴ ἐφείς 48 ὀχεύειν ἢ ὀχεύεσθαι. προῦνόησε μὲν οὖν ἀναλόγως τοῦ πρέποντος καὶ ἀκολουθούτου τῇ φύσει, μακρόθεν δ' ὡς ἀπὸ σκοπῆς ἐσωφρόνισεν ἀνθρώπους, ἵν' ἐκ τῶνδε προμαθόντες ἄνδρες ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναῖκες 49 ἀνέχωσιν ὁμιλιῶν ἐκνόμων. ἕαν τε οὖν ἀνὴρ ὀχεύῃ τετράπουν ἕαν τε γυνὴ ὑπὸ τετράποδος ὀχεύηται, θησκέτωσαν καὶ οἱ ἄνθρωποι καὶ τὰ [308] τετράποδα, οἱ μὲν ὅτι ὑπὲρ τοὺς ὄρους ἀκρασίας αὐτῆς ἤλασαν εὐρεταὶ γενόμενοι παρηλλαγμένων ἐπιθυμιῶν καὶ ὅτι ἡδονὰς ἀηδεστάτας ἐκαινούργη-σαν, ὧν καὶ ἡ διήγησις αἰσχίστη, τὰ δὲ ὅτι τοιούτοις ὀνειδέσιν ὑπῆρέτησε καὶ ἵνα μηδὲν ἢ τέκη

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xix. 19, where the prohibition is joined with others against sowing different seeds in a field and combining two stuffs in a garment. Cf. Deut. xxii. 9-11.

<sup>b</sup> Mules, however, are several times mentioned, evidently without reproach, in the O.T., e.g. Is. lxvi. 20, 1 Kings i. 33.

<sup>c</sup> See note b on § 63 below.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 46-49

admit no unlawful matings, that it ordains that even cattle are not to be crossed with others of a different species.<sup>a</sup> No Jewish shepherd will allow a he-goat to mount a ewe or a ram a she-goat, or a bull a mare, or if he does he will be punished as an offender against the decree of nature, who is careful to preserve the primary species without adulteration. It is true that 47 some people value mules above all other beasts of burden, because their bodies are compact and exceedingly muscular, and accordingly in horse-stables or other places where horses are kept they rear donkeys of huge size to which they give the name of "Celons" to copulate with the female colts, who then give birth to a hybrid animal, the mule or half-ass. But Moses, recognizing that the way in which this animal is produced contravenes nature, stringently forbade it under the wider order by which he refused permission for animals of either sex to breed with those of an unlike species.<sup>b</sup> In making this 48 provision he considered what was in accord with decency and conformity to nature, but beyond this he gave us as from some far-off commanding height<sup>c</sup> a warning to men and women alike that they should learn from these examples to abstain from unlawful forms of intercourse. Whether, then, it is the man 49 who uses a quadruped for this purpose, or the woman who allows herself to be used, the human offenders must die and the beasts also; the first because they have passed beyond the limits of licentiousness itself by evolving abnormal lusts, and because they have invented strange pleasures than which nothing could be more unpleasing, shameful even to describe; the beasts because they have ministered to such infamies, and to ensure that they do not bear or beget any

PHILO

ἡ γεννήσῃ παλίμφημον, οἷα εἰκὸς ἐκ τοιούτων 50 μiasμάτων· ἄλλως τε οἷς καὶ βραχὺ μέλει τοῦ πρέποντος οὐκέτ' ἂν χρήσαιτο τοῖς θρέμμασιν εἰς οὐδεμίαν τῶν περὶ βίον ὑπηρεσίαν, μυσσαττόμενοι καὶ ἀποστρεφόμενοι καὶ τὴν ὄψιν αὐτὴν δυσχεραίνοντες καὶ νομίζοντες ὧν ἂν προσάψαιτο κάκεῖνα εὐθὺς ἀκάθαρτα εἶναι· τὰ δὲ μηδαμῇ χρήσιμα τῷ βίῳ ζῆν εἰ καὶ λυσιτελεῖς<sup>1</sup> ἀλλ' οὖν περιττὸν “ ἄχθος γῆς,” ὡς εἶπέ τις.

51 IX. Πάλιν πόρνην ἢ κατὰ Μωυσῆν οὐ παρα-δέχεται πολιτεία κοσμιότητος καὶ αἰδοῦς καὶ σωφροσύνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν ἀλλοτρίαν, ἡ ἀναπιμπλάσα τὰς ψυχὰς ἀνδρῶν ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναικῶν ἀκολασίας τὸ μὲν τῆς διανοίας ἀθάνατον κάλλος αἰσχύνει, τὴν δὲ τοῦ σώματος ὀλιγοχρόνιον εὐ-μορφίαν προτιμᾷ, παραρριπτοῦσα μὲν αὐτὴν τοῖς ἐπιτυχοῦσι, τὴν δ' ὥραν ὥσπερ τι τῶν ὠνίων ἐπ' ἀγορᾶς πιπράσκουσα, καὶ ἐπὶ μὲν θήρα τῶν νέων ἕκαστα λέγει τε καὶ πράττει, τοὺς δὲ ἐραστὰς ἀλείφει κατὰ ἀλλήλων αἴσχιστον ἄθλον αὐτὴν προτιθεῖσα τοῖς τὸ πλεον εἰσενεγκοῦσιν. ὡς λύμη καὶ ζημία καὶ κοινὸν μίασμα καταλευέσθω, τὰς τῆς φύσεως διαφθείρασα χάριτας, ἃς ἤρμωτε καλοκάγαθία προσεπικοσμῆσαι.

<sup>1</sup> Mangey reads (with A) οὐ ζῆν εἶναι λυσιτελεῖς, περιττὸν ὄντα γῆς ἄχθος (most mss. insert ὄντα). See note a.

<sup>a</sup> The text as here translated makes some sort of sense, if we take λυσιτελεῖς = something that has a monetary value. The text adopted by Mangey from A (see note 1), is much

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 49-51

monstrosity of the kind that may be expected to spring from such abominations. Besides, even people 50 who care little for seemliness would not continue to use their cattle for any purpose serviceable to their life, but would regard them with abhorrence and aversion, disliking the very sight of them and thinking that even what they touch, that too must become unclean. And, when things serve no purpose in life, their survival, even if it can be turned to some account,<sup>a</sup> is just a superfluity, "cumbering the earth," as the poet puts it.<sup>b</sup>

IX. Again, the commonwealth of Moses' institution 51 does not admit a harlot,<sup>c</sup> that stranger to decency and modesty and temperance and the other virtues. She infects the souls both of men and women with licentiousness. She casts shame upon the undying beauty of the mind and prefers in honour the short-lived comeliness of the body. She flings herself at the disposal of chance comers, and sells her bloom like some ware to be purchased in the market. In her every word and deed she aims at capturing the young, while she incites her lovers each against the other by offering the vile prize of herself to the highest bidder. A pest, a scourge, a plague-spot to the public, let her be stoned to death—she who has corrupted the graces bestowed by nature, instead of making them, as she should, the ornament of noble conduct.

clearer (the infinitive είναι may be defended as continuing the construction after νομιζόντες). As Mangey and A have it, it omits ἀλλ' ὄν, but this might be retained in the sense of "nay indeed," i.e. the survival is not merely unprofitable, but actually burdensome.

<sup>b</sup> See on i. 74.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xxiii. 17, which, however, does not suggest death as the penalty. See App. p. 634.

52 X. <sup>1</sup>Μοιχείας δὲ τὰς μὲν ἢ αὐτοφώρους ἢ ἐν-αργέσις ἐλέγχοις πιστουμένας ὑπαιτίους ἀπέφηνεν ὁ νόμος, τὰς δὲ καθ' ὑπόνοιαν οὐκ ἔδικαίωσεν ἐξετάζεσθαι πρὸς ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλὰ εἰς τὸ τῆς φύσεως ἤγαγε δικαστήριον, ἐπειδήπερ ἄνθρωποι μὲν τῶν ἐμφανῶν ἐπιγνώμονες, θεὸς δὲ καὶ τῶν ἀδήλων, ὧ μόνῳ δυνατὸν ψυχὴν ἐναργῶς θεά-53 σασθαι. φησὶν οὖν τῷ ὑπονοήσαντι ἀνδρὶ· γρα-ψάμενος πρόκλησιν εἰς τὴν ἱερόπολιν ἴθι σὺν τῇ γυναικὶ καὶ καταστάς ἐπὶ τῶν δικαστῶν ἀπο-γύμνωσον τὸ παραστάν σοι τῆς ὑπονοίας πάθος, μὴ ὡς ἂν τις συκοφάντης ἢ κακοτεχνῶν ὑπὲρ τοῦ πάντως περιγενέσθαι, ἀλλ' ὡς ἂν τις τῆς ἀληθείας 54 ἀκριβῆς ἐξεταστὴς ἄνευ σοφιστείας. ἡ δὲ γυνὴ δύο κινδύνους ὑπομένουσα, τὸν μὲν ὑπὲρ ψυχῆς, [309] τὸν δὲ | αἰσχύνῃς βίου, παντὸς ἀργαλεώτερον θανάτου, κρινάτω παρ' αὐτῇ τὸ πρᾶγμα, κἄν μὲν καθαρεύῃ, θαρροῦσα ἀπολογείσθω, εἰ δὲ ὑπὸ τοῦ συνειδότης ἐλέγχοιτο, καταδύεσθω, προκαλύμμα τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων αἰδῶ ποιησαμένη· τὸ γὰρ μέχρι 55 τέλους ἀναισχυντεῖν ὑπερβολὴ κακίας. ἐὰν δὲ ἀμφήριστα ἢ τὰ λεχθέντα καὶ μηδέτερον καθέλκη μέρος, ἴτωσαν εἰς τὸ ἱερόν, καὶ ὁ μὲν ἀνὴρ στὰς ἀντικρὺ τοῦ βωμοῦ, παρόντος τοῦ κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν ἱερωμένου, δηλούτω τὴν ὑπόνοιαν, ἅμα καὶ κομίζων ἄλευρον κρίθινον, εἰδός τι θυσίας ὑπὲρ τῆς γυναικός, εἰς ἔνδειξιν τοῦ μὴ κατ' ἐπ-ἡρειαν ἀλλ' ἀπὸ γνώμης ὑγιούς κατ' ἐνδοιασμόν

<sup>1</sup> mss. heading Περὶ μοιχαλίδος.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 52-55

X. Adulteries detected on the spot or established by <sup>52</sup> clear evidence are condemned by the law. But when they are a matter of suspicion, the law did not think good to have them tried by men, but brought them before the tribunal of nature. For men can arbitrate on open matters, but God on the hidden also, since He alone can see clearly into the soul. <sup>a</sup> So the <sup>53</sup> law says to the husband who suspects his wife, "Draw up a formal challenge and come to the holy city with your wife and standing before the judges lay bare the suspicion which troubles you, not in the spirit of a false accuser or malicious schemer, set on winning at any cost, but of one who would strictly test the truth without sophistry. The woman who is threatened with two dangers, <sup>54</sup> one of losing her life, the other of bringing shame on her past (and this is a thing far more grievous than death), must judge the matter in her heart, and if she is pure, plead her cause with good courage, but if her conscience convicts her, make her submission and use her ashamedness to palliate her sins. For shamelessness carried to the end is the culmination of wickedness. But if the statements <sup>55</sup> of the two are inconclusive, and do not turn the scale to either side, let them go to the temple and let the man standing opposite the altar, in the presence of the priest officiating on that day, explain his suspicion. At the same time he should bring barley-meal, as a kind of sacrifice on behalf of the woman, to shew that the accusation is not made in wanton spite, but with honest intentions <sup>a</sup> For §§ 53-62 see Num. v. 12-31, which Philo follows fairly closely, except that the law does not provide for a previous hearing before judges as in §§ 53, 54.

PHILO

56 εὐλογον αἰτιᾶσθαι. ὁ δὲ ἱερεὺς λαβὼν προτεινέτω τῇ γυναικὶ καὶ τοῦτίκρανον ἀφελὼν, ἢν' ἐπικρίνηται γεγυμνωμένη τῇ κεφαλῇ, τὸ τῆς αἰδοῦς περιηρημένη σύμβολον, ᾧ ταῖς εἰς ἅπαν ἀναιτίοις ἔθος χρῆσθαι. μήτε δὲ ἔλαιον μήτε λιβανωτὸς ὡς ἐπὶ τῶν ἄλλων θυσιῶν παρέστω, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἐπὶ χαρτοῖς ἀλλ' ἄγαν ὀδυνηροῖς τὴν θυσίαν μέλλειν ἐπι-
 57 τελείσθαι. κρίθινον δ' ἐστὶ τὸ ἄλευρον, ἴσως ἐπειδὴ ὑπαμφίβολός ἐστιν ἢ ἀπὸ κριθῆς τροφή καὶ ἀλόγοις ζώοις καὶ ἀτυχέσιν ἀνθρώποις ἐφαρμόζεται,<sup>1</sup> σύμβολον τοῦ τὴν μεμοιχευμένην οὐδὲν θηρίων διαφέρειν, ὧν ἀδιακρίτους εἶναι καὶ ἀνεπιστάτους τὰς ὀχείας συμβέβηκε, τὴν δὲ καθ-
 58 αρεύουσαν τῶν ἐγκλημάτων τὸν οἰκεῖον ἀνθρώπων βίον ἐζήλωκέναι. λαβὼν δέ, φησὶν, ὁ ἱερεὺς κεραμεοῦν ἀγγεῖον ἐγχείτω καθαρὸν ὕδωρ ἐκ πηγῆς ἀρυσάμενος καὶ ἐπιφερέτω βῶλον γῆς ἐκ τοῦ κατὰ τὸ ἱερόν ἐδάφους· ἅπερ οἶμαι καὶ αὐτὰ συντείνειν πρὸς τὴν ἔρευναν τῆς ἀληθείας διὰ συμβόλων, τὸ μὲν κεραμεοῦν ἀγγεῖον πρὸς τὸ μεμοιχεῦσθαι, διὰ τὸ εὐκάτακτον, θάνατος γὰρ ἢ κατὰ μοιχῶν δίκη, ἢ δὲ γῆ καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ πρὸς τὸ καθ-
 59 ἰερεῦν τῆς αἰτίας, ἐπειδὴ δι' ἀμφοτέρων αἰ γενέσεις καὶ αὐξήσεις καὶ τελειώσεις ἀπάντων. ὅθεν ἐκάτερον οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ καὶ τοῖς ὀνόμασιν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐφαρμόζεσθαι.

---

<sup>a</sup> By εἶδος he may mean that this oblation, though called θύσια in the text, is not of the ordinary kind. In the E.V. the words are "he shall bring her offering for her"; in LXX "he shall bring the (or "his") gift about her." As he regards the oblation as made by the man and not by the woman, he appends this explanation of his motives.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 56-59

and is founded on reasonable doubt.<sup>a</sup> The priest 56 taking the offering hands it to the woman and removes her kerchief, in order that she may be judged with her head bared and stripped of the symbol of modesty, regularly worn by women who are wholly innocent. But there must be no oil nor frankincense, as in the other sacrifices, because the intention of the sacrifice to be performed on this occasion is not joyful but exceedingly painful.<sup>b</sup> The meal used 57 is of barley, perhaps because as a foodstuff it is of somewhat doubtful merit, suited for irrational animals and men in unhappy circumstances, and thus is a symbol that the adulteress is quite on a par with wild beasts, which copulate without discrimination or due consideration, while the wife who is innocent of the charges brought against her has emulated the life which is fitted to human beings. The priest, it 58 continues, will take an earthen vessel, pour into it pure water which he has drawn from a spring, and put in a clod of earth got from the ground on which the temple stands.<sup>c</sup> These likewise, I consider, refer symbolically to the quest for the truth. The act of adultery is signified by the earthen vessel because of its fragility, since death is the punishment decreed for adulterers ; innocence of the charge by the earth and water, since both these are factors in the birth and growth and consummation of all things. And 59 therefore the terms used in both cases make an <sup>b</sup> In Numbers the reason of the absence of oil and frankincense is that "it is a sacrifice of jealousy, a sacrifice of memorial calling sin to remembrance," which assumes the guilt of the accused more than Philo is willing to do.

<sup>c</sup> Or "on the floor of the temple." LXX, "the earth," E.V. "the dust."

PHILO

ἐπεκόσμησε, τὸ μὲν ὕδωρ εἰπὼν δεῖν “καθαρὸν” λαμβάνειν καὶ “ζῶν,” ἐπεὶ ἀνυπαίτιος ἢ γυνὴ καθαρεύει τὸν βίον καὶ ζῆν ὀφείλει, τὴν δὲ γῆν οὐκ ἀπὸ τοῦ τυχόντος ἀλλ’ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐδάφους, ὅπερ ἀναγκαῖον ἀρετῶν, ὡς καὶ γυναῖκα τὴν 60 σῶφρονα. τούτων δὲ προευντροπισθέντων, ἢ μὲν ἀκατακαλύπτῳ τῇ κεφαλῇ τὸ κρίθινον ἄλευρον κομίζουσα, καθάπερ ἐλέχθη, παρίτω, ὁ δὲ ἱερεὺς [ἀντικρῦ] τὸ κεραμεοῦν ἀγγεῖον, ἐν ᾧ ὕδωρ ἐστὶ 61 καὶ γῆ, (ἀντικρῦ) στὰς ἐπιλεγέτω τάδε· “εἰ μὲν τοὺς ἐπὶ γάμοις θεσμοὺς οὐ παραβέβηκας οὐδ’ ἀνὴρ ἕτερος ὠμίλησέ σοι καθυφεμένη τὰ πρὸς τὸν [310] | νόμῳ<sup>1</sup> συνοικισθέντα δίκαια, ἀνυπαίτιος καὶ ἀθῶος ἴσθι· εἰ δ’ ὠλιγόρησας μὲν ἀνδρὸς καινὰς δὲ ἐζήλωσας<sup>2</sup> ἐπιθυμίας ἢ ἐρασθεῖσα ἢ ἐρασθέντι ἐνδοῦσα, τὰ ἀναγκαιότατα καὶ φίλτατα προδοῦσα καὶ νοθεύσασα, μὴ ἀγνόει πάσαις ἀραῖς ἔνοχος γεγεννημένη, ὧν τὰ δείγματα ἀναφανείς ἐπὶ τοῦ σώματος. ἴθι δὴ ἔκπινε ποτὸν ἐλέγχου, ὃ τὰ κεκρυμμένα νῦν καὶ ἀδηλούμενα ἀπαμφιάσει καὶ 62 ἀπογυμνώσει.” ταῦτα γράψας ἐν χαρτιδίῳ καὶ ἀπαλείψας τῷ κατὰ τὸ ἀγγεῖον ὕδατι προτεινέτω τῇ γυναικί· ἢ δὲ πιούσα ἀπαλλαττέσθω προσδοκῶσα ἢ σωφροσύνης ἄθλον ἢ ἀκολασίας τὴν ἀνωτάτω τιμωρίαν. εἰ μὲν γὰρ σεσυκοφάντηται, σπορὰν καὶ γένεσιν τέκνων ἐλπιζέτω τῶν ἐπὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. νόμον.<sup>2</sup> MSS. ζηλώσασα.

<sup>a</sup> So LXX. E.V. and Hebrew merely “holy.” In Num. xix. 17, where the E.V. has “running water,” the LXX has ζῶν.

<sup>b</sup> So, as the sequel shews, rather than “conviction,” though

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 59-62

appropriate addition to the picture. The water, it says, must be taken "pure" and "living,"<sup>a</sup> since if the woman is guiltless her conduct is "pure" and she deserves to "live"; the earth is taken not from any chance place but from the "holy" ground, which must needs be capable of fertility, as also must the chaste wife. When these preliminaries are completed, 60 the woman is to come forward with her head uncovered, bringing the barley-meal, as has been said, and the priest holding the earthen vessel with the earth and water in it stands fronting her and pronounces as follows: "If thou hast not transgressed 61 the lawful usages of marriage, if no other man has had intercourse with thee, suffered by thee in abandonment of thy duties to the legitimate partner of thy home, be clear of guilt and its consequences. But if thou hast set at naught thy husband and eagerly gratified thy new desires, seized with love for another or surrendering to his love, betraying and debasing the closest and fondest ties, be well assured that thou hast laid thyself open to every curse, and the signs of their fulfilment thou wilt exhibit in thy body. Come then, drink the draught of testing<sup>b</sup> which will uncover and lay bare what is now hidden in secrecy." He will 62 then write these words on a piece of paper and after blotting them out in the water in the vessel, proffer it to the woman, and when she has drunk she will depart expecting either reward for her chastity or extreme punishment for her incontinence. For if she has been falsely accused she may hope to conceive and bear children and pay no heed to her fears and that is the meaning of the LXX ἐλεγμαὸν followed by "that brings the curse." E.V. "the water of bitterness that causeth the curse."

PHILO

στειρώσει καὶ ἀγονία φόβων καὶ φροντίδων ἀλογοῦσα· εἰ δ' ἐστὶν ἔνοχος, ἐφεδρεύοντα ἴστω γαστρὸς ὄγκον οἰδούσης καὶ πιμπραμένης καὶ τῶν περὶ μήτραν δεινὴν κάκωσιν, ἣν καθαρὰν οὐκ ἠξίωσε διατηρεῖν ἀνδρὶ τῷ κατὰ πάτρια γήμαντι.
 63 τοσαύτην δ' ἔχει πρόνοιαν ὁ νόμος τοῦ μηδὲν ἐπὶ γάμοις νεωτερίζεσθαι, ὥστε καὶ τοὺς συνιόντας εἰς ὁμιλίαν ἀνδρας καὶ γυναῖκας κατὰ τοὺς ἐπὶ γάμοις θεσμούς, ὅταν εὐνῆς ἀπαλλάττωνται, οὐ πρότερον ἐὰν τινος ψαύειν ἢ λουτροῖς καὶ περιρραντηρίοις χρῆσθαι, πόρρωθεν μοιχείας ἀνείργων καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ μοιχείαις ἐγκλημάτων.

64 XI. Ἐὰν δέ τις χήραν ἀποθανόντος ἀνδρὸς ἢ καὶ διαζευχθεῖσαν ἄλλως βιασάμενος αἰσχύνῃ, κουφό-τερον ἢ κατὰ μοιχείαν ἀμάρτημα δρῶν, ἥμισυ σχεδὸν ἐκείνου, τῆς μὲν θανάτου τιμωρίας ἀφείσθω, βίαν δὲ καὶ ὕβριν καὶ ἀκολασίαν καὶ θράσος τὰ αἰσχιστα ὡς κάλλιστα ἀποδεξάμενος κατηγορεῖσθω καὶ ὅ τι χρὴ παθεῖν ἢ ἀποτίσαι τιμάτων<sup>1</sup> τὸ δικαστήριον ἐπ' αὐτῷ.

65 <sup>2</sup> Ἀδελφὸν μὲν καὶ συγγενὲς ἀδίκημα μοιχείας φθορά, καθάπερ ἐκ μητρὸς μιᾶς, ἀκολασίας, φύντα<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> mss. τιμάσθω.

<sup>2</sup> ms. heading Περὶ φθορᾶς.

<sup>3</sup> For the solecism φύντα Mangey suggests φύσα, but this does not suit μιᾶς.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xv. 18.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "forbidding from afar." The same word (or μακρόθεν) is used in the same way § 47 above, and again §§ 48, 117. Cf. also iv. 104, De Virt. 137.

<sup>c</sup> Philo neither has nor claims any biblical authority for this section. He is about to describe the pentateuchal law about the rape or seduction of a virgin, and feels that the similar offence in the case of a married woman who is now without a husband must call for punishment or redress. Whether what he says reflects the practice of his time (see apprehensions of sterility or childlessness. But if she is guilty she may be sure that the fate awaiting her is an unwieldy belly, swollen and inflamed, and terrible suffering all round the womb, which she has not cared to keep pure for the husband who married her according to ancestral custom. So careful is the law to provide against the introduction of violent changes in the institution of marriage that a husband and wife, who have intercourse in accordance with the legitimate usages of married life, are not allowed, when they leave their bed, to touch anything until they have made their ablutions and purged themselves with water.<sup>a</sup> This ordinance extends by implication to a prohibition<sup>b</sup> of adultery, or anything which entails an accusation of adultery. 63

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 62-65

XI. If anyone dishonours by violence a woman widowed by the death of her husband or through any other form of separation, the crime he commits is less serious than in adultery, of which it may be said to be the half.<sup>c</sup> The penalty of death should not be enforced in his case: but since he has accepted as highly honourable such vile things as violence, outrage, incontinence and effrontery, he must be indicted and the court must determine for him the penalty he should suffer or the compensation he should pay. 64

The corruption<sup>d</sup> of a maiden is a criminal offence closely akin to adultery, its brother in fact, for both spring as it were from one mother, licentiousness, to 65

Goodenough, p. 90), or merely what he feels would be right, seems to me quite uncertain.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxii. 16, 17; Deut. xxii. 28, 29. The first passage deals rather with seduction ("entice," ἀπατήσας); the second with rape ("lay hold on her," βιασάμενος). The right of the father to refuse his consent to the marriage does not appear in the second passage.

ἦν ἔνιοι τῶν εἰωθότων εὐπρεπέσιν ὀνόμασι τὰ αἰσχροῦ ἐπικοσμεῖν ἔρωτα ὀνομάζουσι τάληθές ὁμολογεῖν ἐρυθριῶντες. ἀλλ' ὅμως, εἰ καὶ συγ-γενές, οὐ παντάπασιν ὅμοιον, τῷ τὸ ἀδίκημα μὴ εἰς πλείους χωρεῖν οἰκίας, ὡς ἐπὶ τῆς μοιχείας συμβέβηκεν, ἀλλ' εἰς μίαν συνῆχθαι τὴν τῆς 66 παρθένου. λεκτέον οὖν τῷ κόρης ἀστῆς ἐπιθυμοῦντι. “ προπέτειαν καὶ θράσος ἀναίσχυντον ἢ τὰς ἐπ' ἐνέδρα πάγας ἢ τι τῶν ὁμοιοτρόπων, ὧ [311] | οὗτος, ἀποστραφεὶς μήτε ἀναφανδὸν μήτε λάθρα
 67 πονηρὸς ἐξετασθῆς. ἀλλ' εἴπερ ἄρα τι τῇ ψυχῇ πέποιθας πρὸς τὴν παῖδα οἰκείον, ἴθι πρὸς τοὺς γονεῖς αὐτῆς, ἐὰν ζῶντες τυγχάνωσιν, εἰ δὲ μὴ, πρὸς τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς ἢ ἐπιτρόπους ἢ ἄλλους κυρίους, καὶ ἀπογυμνώσας τὸ σεαυτοῦ πάθος, ὡς χρή τὸν ἐλεύθερον, αἴτει πρὸς γάμον καὶ παρακάλει μὴ 68 ἀνάξιος νομισθῆναι. σκαιὸς γὰρ οὐδεὶς ἂν οὕτως γένοιτο τῶν ἐπιμελουμένων τῆς παιδός, ὡς ἐν-αντιωθῆναι πρὸς λιπαρεστέρας δεήσεις, καὶ μάλιστα γε ἐπειδὴν ἐξετάσας ἀνευρίσκη μὴ κατεψευσμένον ἢ ἐπιπόλαιον ἄλλως τὸ πάθος ἀλλ' ἐπαληθεῦον καὶ 69 παγίως ἐνιδρυμένον.” ἐὰν δέ τις λυττῶν καὶ μεμηνῶς, ἅπασι τοῖς ἐκ λογισμοῦ πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσας, δυναστείαν τὸν οἶστρον καὶ τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ὑπολαβὼν, νόμου βίαν, ὡς φασί τινες, προτιμοτέραν θέμενος, ἀρπάξῃ καὶ φθειρή ταῖς ἐλευθέραις ὡς θεραπαίνας χρώμενος, τὰ πολέμου δρῶν ἐν εἰρήνῃ, 70 πρὸς τοὺς δικαστὰς ἀγέσθω. κἂν μὲν ἢ πατὴρ τῇ βιασθείσῃ, βουλευέσθω περὶ ἐγγύης τῆς πρὸς<sup>1</sup> τὸν ἐφθαρκότα· εἶτα ἐὰν μὲν ἀνανεύῃ, προικιζέτω

<sup>1</sup> MSS. περὶ.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 65-70

which some whose way it is to bedizen ugly things with specious terms, ashamed to admit its true nature, give the name of love. Still the kinship does not amount to complete similarity, because the wrong caused by the corruption is not passed on to several families as it is with adultery, but is concentrated in one, that of the maiden herself. Our advice then to one who desires a damsel of gentle birth should be this : “ My good sir, have nothing to do with reckless and shameless effrontery or treacherous snares, or anything of the kind, and do not either openly or secretly prove yourself a rascal. But if you have, heart and soul, centred your affections on the girl, go to her parents, if they are alive, or, if not, to her brothers or guardians or others who have charge of her, lay bare before them the state of your affections, as a free man should, ask her hand in marriage and plead that you may not be thought unworthy of her. For none of those who have had the care of the girl would behave so stupidly as to set himself in opposition to the increasing earnestness of your entreaties, particularly if, on examination, he finds that your affections are not counterfeited nor superficial, but are genuine and firmly established.” But if anyone in furious frenzy will have nothing to say to the suggestions of reason, but regarding wild passion and lust as sovereign powers and giving the place of honour to violence above law, as the saying goes, turns to rapine and ravishment and treats free women as though they were servant-maids, acting in peace as he might in war-time, he must be brought before the judges. And if the victim of the violation has a father he must consider the question of espousing her to the author of her ruin. If he refuses, the

PHILO

- τὴν παῖδα ὁ φθορεὺς ἄλλως ζημιούμενος χρήμασιν, ἔαν δὲ συναινῇ καὶ συνεπιγράφηται, μηδὲν ὑπερτιθέμενος ἀγέσθω προῖκα πάλιν τὴν ἴσιν ὁμολογῶν καὶ μήτε ἀναδύεσθαι τὴν ἐξουσίαν ἐχέτω μήτε παραιτεῖσθαι, καὶ δι' αὐτόν, ἵνα μὴ λαγνείας ἕνεκα δοκῇ μᾶλλον ἢ κατ' ἔρωτα νόμιμον ἐφθαρκεῖναι, καὶ διὰ τὴν κόρην, ἵν' αὐτῆς τὸ περὶ τὴν πρώτην σύνοδον ἀτύχημα παρηγορηθῇ βεβαιοτάτῳ γάμῳ,
- 71 ὃν οὐδὲν ἄλλο τι ἢ θάνατος διαζεύξει. ἔαν δὲ πατρὸς ὀρφανῇ τυγχάνῃ, πρὸς τῶν δικαστῶν ἐρωτάσθω, εἴτε βούλεται συνοικεῖν εἴτε μή· ἔαν τε δὲ συναινῇ ἔαν τε ἀρνήται, τὰ αὐτὰ γινέσθω ἅ ἂν καὶ ἐπὶ ζῶντι διωμολογήθη τῷ πατρί.
- 72 XII. <sup>1</sup>Μεθόριόν τινες ὑπολαμβάνουσιν ἀδίκημα εἶναι φθορᾶς καὶ μοιχείας ὑπογάμιον, ὅταν ὁμολογίαι μὲν ὑπερεγγυήσωσι, μήπω δὲ τῶν γάμων ἐπιτελεσθέντων ἕτερος ἀπατήσας τις ἢ καὶ βιασάμενος εἰς ὁμιλίαν ἔλθῃ. παρ' ἐμοὶ δὲ κριτῇ μοιχείας καὶ τοῦτ' ἐστὶν εἶδος· αἱ γὰρ ὁμολογίαι γάμοις ἰσοδυναμοῦσιν, αἷς ἀνδρὸς ὄνομα καὶ γυναικὸς καὶ

<sup>1</sup> ms. heading Περὶ ὑπογαμίου.

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "to dismiss her" (at a later time). Cf. the examples of παρατεῖσθαι in the sense of "divorce" in L. & S. This will correspond with Deuteronomy, "he may not put her away all his days," as well as with Philo's words at the end of the section.

<sup>b</sup> Philo has no biblical authority for this section. It is curious that the guardians whose consent has to be obtained for the ordinary marriage of an orphan do not appear here.

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 72-78 see Deut. xxii. 23-27.

<sup>d</sup> The curious word ὑπογάμιον occurs only here. The suggestion in the translation is that it is formed on the analogy of the not uncommon use of ὑπό = "just before." But except

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 70-72

seducer must give a dowry to the girl, his punishment being thus limited to a monetary fine, but if the father consents to the union, he must marry her without any delay and agree to give the same dowry as in the former case, and he must not be at liberty to draw back, or to make difficulties.<sup>a</sup> This is in the interest both of himself, to make the rape appear due to legitimate love rather than to lasciviousness, and of the girl, to give her for the misfortune, which she has suffered at their first association, the consolation of a wedlock so firmly established that nothing but death will undo it. <sup>b</sup> If 71 she has lost her father, she must be asked by the judges whether she wishes to consort with the man or not. And whether she agrees or refuses, the terms agreed upon must be the same as they would have been if her father were alive.

XII. <sup>c</sup>Some consider that midway between the cor- 72 ruption of a maiden and adultery stands the crime committed on the eve of marriage,<sup>d</sup> when mutual agreements have affianced the parties beyond all doubt, but before the marriage was celebrated, another man, either by seduction or violence, has intercourse with the bride. But this too, to my thinking, is a form of adultery. For the agreements, being documents containing the names of the man and woman, and the other particulars for the epic adjectives ὑπηόιος and ὑποδείελος, I cannot find any analogous compounds. However, ὑπό γάμον would be an easy correction. The general opinion seems to be that the ὑπό suggests "secret" or "illicit," and presumably this is the idea in Mangey's "interceptus concubitus," and L. & S.'s "illicit intercourse with a betrothed person." Also the word seems to be regularly regarded as a substantive. It seems to me more likely that it is an adjective agreeing with ἀδίκημα.

PHILO

73 τὰ ἄλλα τὰ ἐπὶ συνόδοις ἐγγράφεται. ὦν χάριν καταλείπει ὁ νόμος ἀμφοτέροισι προσέταξεν, εἴαν γε ἀπὸ μιᾶς καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς γνώμης ἐπιθῶνται τοῖς ἀδικήμασι συμφρονήσαντες· οὐχ οἶόν τε γὰρ μὴ ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν ὀρμηθέντας βουλευμάτων νομίζεσθαι

74 συναδικεῖν, οὐ συναδικούοντας. παρὰ γοῦν τὰς [312] τῶν τόπων διαφορᾶς | αὔξεσθαι συμβέβηκε καὶ μειοῦσθαι τὰ δίκημα· μείζον μὲν γάρ, ὡς εἰκός, ἐστίν, εἰ πραχθεῖη κατὰ πόλιν, ἔλαττον δέ, εἰ τειχῶν ἔξω κατ' ἐρημίαν· ἐνταῦθα μὲν γὰρ βοηθὸς οὐδὲ εἰς ἐστὶ τῇ παιδί πάνθ' ὅσα ὑπὲρ τοῦ διατηρῆσαι τὴν παρθενίαν ἄψαυστον καὶ ἀνεπιβούλευτον λεγούσῃ τε καὶ δρώσῃ, ἐν ἄστει δὲ βουλευτήρια, δικαστήρια, στρατηγῶν, ἀγορανόμων, ἀστυνόμων, ἄλλων ἀρχόντων ὄμιλοι μεγάλοι καὶ 75 σὺν τούτοις ὁ δῆμος. ἔστι γὰρ ἔστιν ἐν ἐκάστου τῇ ψυχῇ, καὶ ἰδιώτης τυγχάνη, μισοπόνηρον πάθος, ὃ διακινηθὲν ἀποδείκνυσι τὸν ἔχοντα κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον ὑπέρμαχον καὶ προαγωνιστὴν αὐτο- 76 κέλευστον τοῦ δόξαντος ἠδικῆσθαι. XIII. τῷ μὲν οὖν διαπραξαμένῳ τὴν βίαν ἔπεται δίκη πανταχοῦ, μηδὲν ἐκ τῆς τῶν χωρίων διαφορᾶς εὐρισκομένῳ πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν ὦν ὑβρισε καὶ παρηνόμησε· τῇ δὲ παιδί, καθάπερ ἔφην, τοτὲ μὲν ἔλεος καὶ συγγνώμη τοτὲ δὲ ἀπαραίτητος τιμωρία παρ- 77 ακολουθήσει. καὶ περὶ ταύτης μέντοι πολυπραγμονητέον τῷ δικαστῇ μὴ πάντ' ἐπὶ τοὺς τόπους ἀναφέροντι· δύναται γὰρ καὶ κατὰ μέσσην τὴν πόλιν

<sup>a</sup> Deuteronomy makes no suggestion of a documentary form of betrothal, though it speaks of a "bill of divorcement" (xxiv. 3). But Philo naturally reads into it the practice of his own time. See App. pp. 634-635.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 72-77

needed for wedlock, are equivalent to marriage.<sup>a</sup> And therefore the law ordains that both should 73 be stoned to death, if, that is, they set about their misdeeds by mutual agreement with one and the same purpose. For if they were not actuated by the same purpose, they cannot be regarded as fellow-criminals, where there was no such fellowship. Thus we find that difference of situation makes the 74 criminality greater or less. Naturally it is greater if the act is committed in the city and less if it is committed outside the walls and in a solitude. For here there is no one to help the girl, though she says and does everything possible to keep her virginity intact and invulnerable, while in the town there are council-chambers and law-courts, crowds of controllers of districts,<sup>b</sup> markets and wards, and other persons in authority and with them the common people. For 75 assuredly there is in the soul of every man, however undistinguished he may be, a detestation of evil, and if this emotion is roused, no outside influence is then needed to turn its possessor into a champion ready to do battle for anyone who to all appearance has been wronged. XIII. As for the man who perpetrated the 76 violation, justice pursues him everywhere, and difference of situation lends him no help to make good his outrageous and lawless conduct. It is not so with the girl. In the one case pity and forgiveness attend her, as I have said, in the other inexorable punishment. And indeed her position demands care- 77 ful inquiry from the judge who must not make everything turn upon the scene of the act. For she may have been forced against her will in the heart of the <sup>b</sup> Or "nomes." See on i. 55.

PHILO

ἄκουσα βεβιάσθαι καὶ ἔξω τῆς πόλεως ἐκούσα πρὸς ἔκθεσμον ὀμιλίαν ἐνδοῦναι. διὸ παρατετηρημένως καὶ σφόδρα καλῶς ἀπολογούμενος ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐν ἔρημιά φθειρομένης φησὶν ὁ νόμος· “ἐβόησεν ἡ νεᾶνις, καὶ ὁ βοηθήσων οὐκ ἦν αὐτῇ,” ὥστε, εἰ μήτε ἐβόησε μήτε ἠναντιώθη, βουλομένη δὲ συναπῆρε, γένοιτ’ ἂν ἔνοχος, σόφισμα τοῦ βεβιάσθαι 78 δοκεῖν προστησαμένη τὸν τόπον. καὶ μὴν ἐν πόλει τί γένοιτ’ ἂν ὄφελος τῇ πάντα μὲν ἐθελούσῃ ποιεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς ἰδίας ἐπιτιμίας, ἀδυνατούσῃ δὲ ἔνεκα τῆς περὶ τὸν ὑβριστὴν ἰσχύος; τί γάρ, εἰ μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων<sup>1</sup> καταδήσειεν ἢ τὸ στόμα ἀποφράξειεν, ὡς μηδὲ φωνὴν ῥῆξαι δύνασθαι, γένοιτ’ ἂν ὄφελος ἐκ τῶν συνοικούντων; τρόπον γάρ τινα ἦδε μὲν ἐν πόλει διατρίβουσα κατ’ ἔρημίαν ἐστὶν ἅτε βοηθῶν ἔρημος, ἡ δέ, κἂν μηδεὶς παρατυγχάνῃ, τῷ ἐκούσῃ συναπαῖραι λέγοιτ’ ἂν οὐδὲν διαφέρειν τῆς ἐν ἄστει.

79 XIV. Εἰσὶ δὲ τινες περὶ τὰς ὀμιλίας ἀψίκοροι, γυναικομανεῖς ἐν ταῦτῳ καὶ μισογύναιοι, συγ-

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. μετὰ τῶν κάλων, which Mangey adopted, translating “cum funibus.” But such a use of μετὰ seems hardly possible. Cohn at first suggested μετὰ<γων ἀποθεν> τῶν. But see note a.

---

<sup>a</sup> Lit. “the others,” i.e. those others whose help would be required to bind and gag her before she could cry out. Perhaps, however, τῶν ἄλλων is neuter, i.e. “besides the rest of his violence”; translate, “if he further proceeds to bind her.” Cohn, who originally suggested the correction mentioned in note 1, came to the conclusion (Hermes, 1908, p. 205) that this solution was satisfactory. He compares De Dec. 69.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 77-79

city, and she may have surrendered voluntarily to unlawful embraces outside the city. And therefore the law in defending the case of a woman deflowered in a solitude is careful to add the very excellent proviso: "The damsel cried out and there was none to help her;" so that if she neither cried out nor resisted but co-operated willingly, she will be found guilty, and her use of the place as an excuse is merely a device to make it seem that she was forced. Again what help would be available in the city to one 78 who was willing to use all possible means to protect her personal honour, but was unable to do so because of the strength which the ravisher could bring to bear? If he should bind her with the help of others<sup>a</sup> and gag her mouth so that she could not utter a sound, what help could she get from the neighbours? In a sense such a one, though living in a city, is in a solitude, being solitary so far as helpers are concerned. The other, even if no one was present to help, may be said, in view of her willing cooperation, to be in exactly the same position as the offender in the town.

XIV. <sup>b</sup> There are some persons who show fickleness 79 in their relations to women, mad for them and loath-

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 79-83 see Deut. xxii. 13-21. Philo's account makes no mention of the "tokens of virginity." Also there is no allusion to the order that if the case is given against the wife she is to be stoned. This is perhaps because the real subject of these sections is the misconduct of husbands who make treacherous attempts to get rid of unwanted wives. Still, the omission is curious. Apart from the concealment, the misconduct of the woman is not, or need not be, υπογάμιον, and falls under the head of φθορά, which Philo has treated as an ἀτύχημα to the maiden rather than a crime (§ 70). One would expect an explanation of why the extreme penalty was required.

PHILO

κλύδων καὶ μιγάδων ἡθῶν ἀνάπλεω, οἱ ταῖς πρώταις εὐθύς ὀρμαῖς ἐνδιδόντες, ὅποιαί περ ἂν οὔσαι τυγχάνωσιν, ἄς ἡνιοχεῖν δέον ἀχαλινώτους ἐῶσιν, ἀπερισκέπτως καὶ ἀπροοράτως σώμασιν ὁμοῦ καὶ πράγμασιν ἐπεμπίπτοντες τυφλῶν τρόπον, ἅτε ῥύμη καὶ φορᾶ βιαίῳ συνωθοῦντες καὶ ἀνατρέποντες, οὐκ 80 ἐλάττω ὧν διατιθέασι πάσχουσι. περὶ ὧν τάδε νομοθετεῖται· κόρας οἱ ἀγόμενοι νόμῳ καὶ γάμους θύσαντές τε καὶ ἐστιαθέντες, μηδὲν οἰκείον ἐπὶ ταῖς γαμεταῖς πάθος σῶζοντες, ἀλλ' ὑβρίσαντες | [313] καὶ ὡς ἐταίραις ταῖς ἀσταῖς προσενεχθέντες, ἐὰν διάζευξιν τεχνάζωσι μηδεμίαν ἀπαλλαγῆς πρόφασιν ἀνευρίσκοντες, εἶπ' ἐπὶ τὸ συκοφαντεῖν τραπόμενοι σπᾶνει φανερῶν ἐγκλημάτων πρὸς τὰ ἀφανῆ τρέπωσι τὰς αἰτίας καὶ παρελθόντες κατηγορῶσιν, ὅτι παρθένους δόξαντες συνεληλυθέναι γυναῖκας ἐν ταῖς πρώταις ὁμιλίαις ἐφώρασαν, ἀθροίζέσθω μὲν ἢ γερουσία πᾶσα πρὸς τὴν κρίσιν, παρίτωσαν δὲ οἱ τῶν κατηγορουμένων γονεῖς ἀπολογησόμενοι περὶ 81 κοινοῦ κινδύνου. κίνδυνος γὰρ οὐ ταῖς θυγατράσι μόνον περὶ τῆς τῶν σωμάτων ἀγνείας ἐστίν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἐπιμεληταῖς, οὐ μόνον ὅτι εἰς τὸν ἀναγ-καιότατον τῆς ἀκμῆς καιρὸν οὐ παρετήρησαν, ἀλλ' ὅτι καὶ ὡς παρθένους τὰς ὑφ' ἐτέρων ἐφθαρμένας

---

<sup>a</sup> The causal clause introduced by ἅτε may look forward and give the reason why they suffer as they have done to others. It seems to me better to take it as looking backwards and giving the reason why they stumble over everything. For σώματα καὶ πράγματα see note on Quis Rerum 242 (vol. iv. p. 573).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 79-81

ing them at the same time, each of them a mass of chaotic and promiscuous characteristics. They give way in a moment to their first impulses of any and every kind and let them go unbridled instead of reining them in as they should. They run about wildly and violently, pushing about and upsetting everything material or immaterial, with the result that like blind men without eyes to see before or around they tumble over them and suffer in the same measure as they have meted.<sup>a</sup> For these 80 people the law lays down as follows: In the case of persons who take maidens in lawful matrimony and have celebrated the bridal sacrifices and feasts, but retain no conjugal<sup>b</sup> affection for their wives, and insult and treat these gentlewomen as if they were harlots—if such persons scheme to effect a separation, but finding no pretext for divorce resort to false accusation and through lack of matters of open daylight shift the charges to secret intimacies and bring forward an incriminating statement that the virgins whom they supposed they had married were discovered by them, when they first came together, to have lost their virginity already—then the whole body of elders will assemble to try the matter and the parents will appear to plead the cause in which all are endangered. For the danger affects 81 not only the daughters whose bodily chastity is impugned, but also their guardians, against whom the charge is brought not only that they failed to watch over them at the most critical period of adolescence, but that the brides they had given as virgins had been dishonoured by other men, and thereby the bride-<sup>b</sup> i.e. suitable to the intimate relation. Cf. the use of οικείον πρόσχειν, § 67.

PHILO

- ἐνεγύησαν ἀπατῶντες καὶ φενακίζοντες τοὺς λαμ-82 βάνοντας. εἶτα ἐὰν περιγέωνται τοῖς δικαίοις, τιμάτωσαν οἱ δικασταὶ κατὰ τῶν ψευδεῖς αἰτίας πλαττομένων χρημάτων ζημίας καὶ τὰς διὰ πληγῶν εἰς τὰ σώματα ὕβρεις καὶ—τὸ πάντων ἐκείνοις ἀηδέστατον—τὴν τῶν γάμων βεβαίωσιν, ἐὰν ὑπο-μένωσιν αἱ γυναῖκες ἔτι τοῖς τοιούτοις συνοικεῖν· ταῖς μὲν γὰρ ἐφίησιν ὁ νόμος θελούσαις καὶ μένειν καὶ ἀπαλλάττεσθαι, τοὺς δὲ οὐδετέρου κυρίου ἀπέφηνεν, ἀνθ' ὧν ἐσυκοφάντησαν.
- 83 XV. <sup>1</sup>Ὄνομα μὲν ἀνδροφονία κατὰ τοῦ κτείναντος ἄνθρωπον ἐπιφημίζεται, τὸ δ' ἀληθὲς ἔργον ἐστὶν ἱεροσυλία καὶ ἱεροσυλιῶν ἢ μεγίστη, διότι τῶν ἐν κόσμῳ κτημάτων καὶ κειμηλίων οὐδὲν οὔτε ἱεροπρεπέστερον οὔτε θεοειδέστερόν ἐστιν ἀνθρώπου· * * *<sup>2</sup> παγκάλῃς εἰκόνας πάγκαλον ἐκμαγεῖον ἀρχετύπου λογικῆς ιδέας παραδείγματι τυπωθέν.
 84 τὸν οὖν ἀνδροφόνον εὐθὺς ἀσεβῆ καὶ ἀνοσιουργὸν ὑποληπτέον, ἀνοσιουργημάτων καὶ ἀσεβημάτων δρῶντα τὸ μέγιστον, ὃν ἀμείλικτα ἐργασάμενον

<sup>1</sup> ms. heading Κατὰ ἀνδροφόνων.

<sup>2</sup> The insertion of ὅς ἐστι (Mangey), or ἔστι γὰρ (Cohn), will make the sentence grammatical. But quite possibly the text as it stands may be due to a slip of Philo, the eye being caught by the nominatives οὐδὲν, etc. Cf. φύντα, § 65.

<sup>a</sup> There is no biblical authority for this right of the slandered women, nor according to Heinemann any rabbinical tradition. It may be regarded as a slip of memory, perhaps induced by the similar liberty allowed to the seduced maidens in § 71.

<sup>b</sup> At this point Philo turns to the sixth (his seventh) commandment, and this takes up the rest of the treatise. The transition is abrupt (though not more so than that from the first to the second commandment in i. 21) and suggests that grooms were cheated and deceived. Then, if the <sup>82</sup> justice of their cause prevails, the judges must assess the punishments due to these concoctors of false charges. This will consist of monetary fines, bodily degradation in the form of stripes, and what is most distasteful of all to the culprits, confirmation of the marriage, if, that is, the women can bring themselves to consort with such persons.<sup>a</sup> For the law permits the wives to stay or separate as they wish, but deprives the husbands of any choice either way, as a punishment for their slanderous accusations.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 82-84

XV. <sup>b</sup>The term murder or manslaughter is used to <sup>83</sup> signify the act of one who has killed a human being, but in real truth that act is a sacrilege,<sup>c</sup> and the worst of sacrileges; seeing that of all the treasures which the universe has in its store there is none more sacred and godlike than man, the glorious cast of a glorious image, shaped according to the pattern of the archetypal form of the Word.<sup>d</sup> It follows necessarily that <sup>84</sup> the murderer must be regarded as an offender against piety and holiness, both of which are violated in the highest degree by his action. For his merciless conhe may himself have headed these chapters with the words of the commandment, as he must have done with the ninth in iv. 41.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. De Dec. 132, 133. The other argument against murder used there, viz. that it is against the law of nature which has made man a social creature, is not repeated here.

<sup>d</sup> Philo is following his regular interpretation of κατ' εικόνα θεού, i.e. that man was made in the likeness of God's image, i.e. the Logos, which is εἰκόν to God, but παρδείγμα to man. Cf. particularly De Som. i. 76, and examples given in note there. λογικῆς here = of the Logos; cf. § 207 below. Philo also has in mind Gen. ix. 6, "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made he man."

PHILO

ἀναιρετέον, ἐπειδὴ<sup>1</sup> μυρίων θανάτων ἐπάξιος ὢν ἕνα ὑπομένει διὰ τὸ τῆς τιμωρίας ἀθάνατον<sup>2</sup> εἰς πλῆθος μὴ πεφυκίας συναύξεσθαι· χαλεπὸν δὲ οὐδέν, εἰ 85 ταυτόν οἷς διέθηκέ τις πείσεται. καίτοι πῶς ἐστι ταυτόν, εἰ καὶ χρόνοις καὶ πράξεσι καὶ βουλήμασι καὶ προσώποις διαλλάττει; ἢ οὐχὶ τὸ μὲν χειρῶν ἄρχειν ἀδίκων ἐστὶ πρότερον, τὸ δ' ἀμύνεσθαι ὕστερον; καὶ ἀνδροφονία μὲν παρανομώτατον, ἢ δὲ κατὰ ἀνδροφόνων κόλασις νομιμώτατον; καὶ ὁ μὲν κτείνας ἐκπεπλήρωκε τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ὃν προήρητο ἀνελῶν, ὁ δὲ πεπονθὼς ἄτε γεγονὼς ἐκποδῶν οὐτ' ἀντιδιαθεῖναι οὐτ' ἀντεφησθῆναι δυνατός ἐστι; καὶ [314] ὁ μὲν ἐπιβουλεύειν αὐτοχειρία | πέφυκε δι' ἑαυτοῦ, τῷ δ' ἀτελῆς ἢ ἐπέξοδος, εἰ μὴ συγγενεῖς ἢ φίλοι προαγωνίσαιντο λαβόντες τοῦ πάθους οἶκτον; 86 Ἐάν τις ἐπανατείνηται ξίφος, ὥστε ἀποκτείνειν, κἂν μὴ ἀνέλη, ἔνοχος ἔστω προαιρέσει γεγονὼς ἀνδροφόνος, εἰ καὶ μὴ τὸ τέλος τῇ γνώμῃ συν-ἔδραμε. τὰ δ' αὐτὰ πασχέτω, κἂν σὺν τέχνῃ τις ἐξ ἐνέδρας, οὐ θαρρῶν ἀντικρυς ἐπιχειρεῖν, βουλεύῃ

<sup>1</sup> I suggest εἰ καὶ δὴ: Cohn καίτοι. The difficulty of logic in "because" would be eased if ἀμειλίκτως is inserted before ἀμειλίκτη, the thought being that since he can have only one death, that must be inflicted without mercy. Even so, however, "although" is to be expected. For εἰ καὶ δὴ cf. εἰ καί, § 86, and εἰ δὴ, § 132.

<sup>2</sup> This is certainly corrupt. The simplest emendation, as it seems to me, will be to suppose some word lost before ἀθάνατον, which will then be taken with πλῆθος. The word which I should suggest is ἐνικόν, the regular term in grammar for the "singular" opposed to "πληθυντικόν" plural; cf. ἐνικῶς, De Dec. 43. See further App. p. 635.

* For death as a penalty for killing a man see Ex. xxi. 12; Lev. xxiv. 17, 21; Num. xxxv. 16-21, 30-31; besides Gen. lx. 6.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 84-86

duct he must be put to death,<sup>a</sup> though indeed it is a thousand deaths that he deserves instead of the one which he suffers, because his punishment being necessarily single cannot grow into a plurality in which death has no place.<sup>b</sup> And there is no hardship if he suffers the same as he has done ; and yet how can it 85 be called the same when the times, the actions, the motives and the persons are different ? Is it not the fact that the unprovoked wrong comes earlier and the punishment for it later ; that murder is entirely lawless and the punishment for murder entirely lawful ; that the slayer has satisfied his desire with the blood which he purposed to shed while his victim, being removed from the scene, can neither retaliate nor feel the pleasure which retaliation gives ; that the former can work his will single-handed and as sole agent, while to the latter any counter-stroke is only possible if his friends and kinsmen in pity for his misfortune make his cause their own ?

If anyone threatens the life of another with a 86 sword, even though he does not actually kill him, he must be held guilty of murder in intention, although the fulfilment has not kept pace with the purpose.<sup>c</sup> The same should be the lot of anyone who craftily lies in wait, and, though not daring to attack outright,

<sup>b</sup> The translation follows the suggestion in note 2. The πλήθος is ἀθάνατον because if a punishment can be repeated it is "deathless" in the sense that it does not involve death.

<sup>c</sup> Philo is here giving his interpretation of Ex. xxi. 14, as it is in the LXX. Where the E.V. has "if a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour to slay him with guile," the LXX has ἐπιθῆναι, which Philo understands to mean "if he attack him, even if he does not succeed." This appears from De Conf. 160, where he takes the same text as shewing that the intention to kill is the same as actually killing, because the word used is ἐπιθῆσθαι, not ἀναιρεῖν. See App. p. 635.

PHILO

καὶ μηχανᾶται δολερῶς τὸν φόνον· ἐναγῆς γὰρ καὶ οὗτος εἰ καὶ μήπω ταῖς χερσὶν ἀλλὰ τοι τῇ ψυχῇ 87 καθέστηκεν. ὡσπερ γάρ, οἶμαι, πολεμίους οὐ μόνον τοὺς ἤδη ναυμαχοῦντας ἢ πεζομαχοῦντας ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς εἰς ἑκάτερον παρεσκευασαμένους καὶ τὰς ἐλεπόλεις ἐφιστάντας τοῖς λιμέσι καὶ τείχεσι, κἂν μήπω συμπλέκωνται, κρίνομεν, οὕτως καὶ ἀνδροφόρους χρῆ νομίζειν οὐ τοὺς κτείναντας αὐτὸ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς πάντα δρῶντας εἰς τὸ ἀνελεῖν ἢ φανερῶς ἢ λάθρα, κἂν μὴ τὸ ἀδίκημα ὦσιν
 88 εἰργασμένοι. ἔαν δὲ καὶ ὑπὸ δειλίας ἢ θράσους, μαχομένων καὶ ἐπιλήπτων παθῶν, καταφυγεῖν τολμῶσιν εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν ὡς ἀσυλίαν εὐρησόμενοι, κωλυτέον· κἂν φθῶσι<sup>1</sup> παρεισδύντες, ἐκδοτέον ἐπ' ἀναιρέσει τοιαῦτα ἐπιλέγοντας, ἀσυλίαν ἀνιέροις τὸ ἱερὸν μὴ παρέχεσθαι. πᾶς γὰρ ὁ ἀνίατα δρῶν ἐχθρὸς θεῷ· ἀνδροφόνοι δὲ ἀνίατα δρῶσιν, ἐπεὶ καὶ οἱ ἀνδροφονηθέντες ἀνίατα πε-
 89 πόνθησιν. ἢ τοῖς μὲν μηδὲν ἡμαρτηκόσιν, ἕως ἂν ἀπολούσωνται καὶ περιρρανάμενοι καθαρθῶσι τοῖς εἰωθόσι καθαρσίοις, ἄβατος ὁ νεῶς ἐστι, τοὺς δὲ ἐνόχους ἀνεκπλύτοις ἄγεσιν, ὧν τὰ μιάσματα οὐδεὶς ἀπονίβει χρόνος, ἄξιον ἐπιφοιτᾶν καὶ ἐνδιατρίβειν τοῖς ἔδεσιν, οὓς οὐδ' ἂν οἰκία δέξαιτο 90 κοσμίων ἀνδρῶν οἷς μέλει τῶν ὀσίων; XVI. προσ-

<sup>1</sup> So Heinemann. Cohn ὀφθῶσι with two mss. The rest have φθάνωσι, which (or φθῶσι) gives the better sense.

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 88-91 see Ex. xxi. 14, "thou shalt take him from mine altar that he may die."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 86-90

plots and schemes to shed blood treacherously, for he too is under the curse in his soul at least even though his hands are innocent as yet. For just as not only 87 those who fight battles by sea or land, but also those who have made preparations for either and planted their engines to command our harbours and walls are judged by us to be our enemies, even though there is no engagement as yet, so too in my opinion should we regard as murderers, not merely those who have slain but also those whose every action aims at destroying life either openly or secretly, even though they have not carried out the crime.

And if through cowardice or effrontery, two antagonistic but equally culpable emotions, they venture to 88 take refuge in the temple, hoping to obtain an asylum there, they must be prevented from entering; and if they manage to slink in, they must be handed over for execution with a declaration to the effect that the holy place does not provide asylum for the unholy.<sup>a</sup> Everyone whose actions are irremediable is an enemy of God, and the actions of murderers are irremediable, as are also the calamities which the murdered have sustained. If those who have committed no sin are 89 forbidden access to the sanctuary, until they have bathed and purged themselves with purifying water according to the customary rites, is it fitting that the sacred building should be the resort and abode of men labouring under the curse of ineffaceable crimes, the pollution of which no length of time will wash away—men who would not be admitted into the dwelling-houses of decent people who take any thought for what the law of holiness<sup>b</sup> permits or forbids? XVI. So 90

<sup>b</sup> ῥοιός is perhaps used here in the common Attic sense of what is allowable and therefore almost = βέβηλος.

PHILO

τιθέντας οὖν ἀδικήματα ἀδικήμασιν, ἀνδροφονία παρανομίαν καὶ ἀσέβειαν, ἀναγκαῖον ἀπάγειν δώστοντας δίκην, τοὺς ὡς ἔφην ἄξια μυρίων θανάτων, οὐχ ἑνός, εἰργασμένους. ἄλλως τε τοῖς συγγενέσι καὶ φίλοις τοῦ δολοφονηθέντος ἀποκεκλείσεται τὸ ἱερόν, εἰ ὁ ἀνδροφόνος ἐνδιατρίβοι, μὴ ἂν ὑπομείνασιν εἰς ταυτόν ποτε ἔλθειν· ἄτοπον δὲ ἑνός ἕνεκα πολλοὺς καὶ τοῦ παρανομηθέντος τοὺς παρανομηθέντας ἐξελαύνεσθαι, οἱ πρὸς τῷ μηδὲν ἁμαρτεῖν ἔτι καὶ πένθος πρόωρον ἀνεδέξαντο.

91 τάχα μέντοι καὶ τὰ μακρὰν ὀξύωπία λογισμοῦ
 [315] πεφυκῶς ἐμβλέπειν | προὔνησε μὴ φόνον ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ γενέσθαι κατὰ τὰς ἐπιφοιτήσεις τῶν τοῦ σφαγέντος ἐπιτηδείων, οὓς στοργή, πάθος ἀδού-λωτον, ὥσπερ τοὺς ἐνθουσιῶντας καὶ κατεχομένους προκαλέσεται μόνον οὐκ αὐτοχειρία κτεῖναι τὸν ἀνδροφόνον· οὗ γενομένου συμβήσεται τι τῶν ἀνοσιωτάτων, αἵματι γὰρ ἀνδροφόνων αἷμα θυσιῶν ἀνακραθήσεται, τὸ καθοσιωμένον<sup>1</sup> τῷ μὴ καθαρῷ. διὰ μὲν δὴ ταῦτα κελεύει καὶ ἀπ' αὐτῶν τῶν βωμῶν ἐκδοῦναι τὸν ἀνδροφόνον.

92 XVII. Ἄλλ' οἱ μὲν ξίφεσιν ἢ δορατίοις ἢ βέλεσιν ἢ ξύλοις ἢ λίθοις ἢ τισιν ὁμοιοτρόποις ἀναιροῦντες

<sup>1</sup> So or καθοσιωμένον most mss. S has τῶν καθοσιωμένων, which Cohn adopts (correcting the o to ω).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 90-92

as they have added crimes to crimes and capped murder with defiance of the law and impiety, these malefactors whose deeds, as I have said, deserve not one but a thousand deaths must be carried off to pay the penalty.

Another consideration is that the temple will remain closed ground to the friends and kinsmen of the victim of treachery, if the murderer makes it his abode, since they would never bring themselves to come under the same roof as he. And it would be preposterous that a single person, a transgressor of the worst kind, should cause the banishment of the many sufferers from his transgression, who not only have committed no sin but have sustained a sad and untimely bereavement. It may 91 well be also that Moses, who in the keenness of his mental vision could look into the distant future, took steps to provide that the visits of the slain man's relatives should not lead to bloodshed in the temple. For family affection is an emotion which cannot be kept in bondage, and as with persons possessed by fanaticism it will incite them to slay him almost on the spur of the moment,<sup>a</sup> and the result of this will be a profanation of the gravest sort. For the blood of the murderer will mix with the blood of the sacrifices, the impure with the consecrated. These are the reasons why he ordered the murderer to be handed over from the altar itself.

XVII. But those who take another's life with swords 92 or spears or javelins or staves or stones or anything else <sup>a</sup> The dictionaries do not suggest this meaning for αυτοχειρία and αυτόχειρ as a variant to the ordinary meaning of "with one's own hand"; but the sense here seems to require such a modification. To suggest that the injured persons would like to do the act almost with their own hands seems feeble. Still more is this the case in § 96.

PHILO

δύνανται μὴ προβεβουλευμένοι μηδ' ἐκ πολλοῦ παρ' αὐτοῖς λελογισμένοι τὸ ἄγος, ἐκ ταῦτομάτου διακινήθεις καὶ θυμῷ δυνατωτέρῳ χρησάμενοι λογισμοῦ, δρᾶσαι τὸν φόνον, ὡς ἡμίεργον τὴν πράξιν εἶναι, τῆς διανοίας μὴ προκατεσχημένης ἐκ μακροῦ 93 τοῖς μιάσμασιν. εἰσὶ δὲ ἕτεροι πονηρότατοι, χερσὶ καὶ γνώμαϊς ἑναγείς, οἱ μάγοι καὶ φαρμακευταί, σχολῆν καὶ ἀναχώρησιν ἐνδιδόντες αὐτοῖς πρὸς καιρίου ἐπιθέσεις καὶ τέχνας καὶ μηχανὰς πολυτρόπους ἀνευρίσκοντες ἐπὶ ταῖς τῶν 94 πλησίον συμφοραῖς. ὅθεν κελεύει φαρμακευτὰς καὶ φαρμακίδας μηδεμίαν ἡμέραν ἀλλὰ μηδ' ὥραν ἐπιβιοῦν, ἀλλ' ἅμα τῷ ἀλῶναι τεθνάναι, μηδεμιᾶς ἐγγινομένης προφάσεως εἰς ἀναβολὴν καὶ ὑπέρθεσιν τῆς τιμωρίας· τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ἀντικρὺς ἐπι-βουλεύοντας δύναϊτ' ἂν τις φυλάξασθαι, τῶν δὲ κρύφα συντιθέντων καὶ σκευωρούντων τὰς ἐπιθέσεις 95 φαρμακείαις οὐ ράδιον τὰς τέχνας συνιδεῖν. ἀναγκαῖον οὖν, ἃ μελλήσουσι δι' αὐτοὺς ἕτεροι ποθεῖν, τοὺς δρῶντας προδιαθεῖναι. καὶ γὰρ ἄλλως ὁ μὲν ἐμφανῶς ξίφει κτείνων ἢ τινὶ ὄπλῳ τῶν ὁμοιο-τρόπων καθ' ἓνα καιρὸν ὀλίγους ἀνελεῖ, φαρμά-κοὶς δὲ θανασίμοις μυρίους ὄσους τὴν ἐπιβουλήν

---

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xxxv. 16-18, where we have the same enumeration of weapons (iron, stone, wood), the use of which constitutes murder, followed later (vv. 22, 23) by the proviso that if the death was not caused through enmity, it is not murder, though this refers rather to accidental than, as Philo seems to construe it, to unpremeditated slaying. He resumes the subject in § 104. At present his point is that poisoning cannot possibly have such an excuse.

<sup>b</sup> Philo's main authority for these two sections is Ex. xxii. 18, where, while the A.V. has "thou shalt not suffer a witch

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 92-95

of the kind may not act on premeditation<sup>a</sup>; they may not have long pondered the abomination in their hearts; they may have been moved by a momentary instinct and allowed their anger to overpower their reason when they did the fatal deed. If so, theirs is but a half action, since the mind has not been under the control of the polluting influences from some far earlier time. <sup>b</sup> But there are others, the 93 worst of villains, accursed both in hand and will, the sorcerers and poisoners, who provide themselves with leisure and retirement to prepare the onslaughts they will make when the right time comes,<sup>c</sup> and think out multiform schemes and devices to harm their neighbours. And therefore he orders that poisoners, male 94 or female,<sup>d</sup> should not survive for a day or even an hour, but perish as soon as they are detected, since no reason can be given for delay or for postponing their punishment. Hostile intentions if undisguised can be guarded against, but those who secretly frame and concoct their plans of attack with the aid of poisons employ artifices which cannot easily be observed. The only course, then, is to anticipate the 95 by meting to the actors the treatment which others may expect to suffer through their acts. For apart from other considerations the slayer who openly uses a sword or any similar weapon will make away with a few on one particular occasion, but if he mixes an injection of deadly poison with some articles of food

(R.V. "sorceress") to live," the LXX has φαρμακούς οὐ περιποιήσεις. The word φαρμακός is applied to sorcerers as well as poisoners, as Philo himself implies in § 102, where see note.

<sup>c</sup> Or possibly "deadly," as in § 106.

<sup>d</sup> Does this suggest that Philo had an inkling or had been informed that the Hebrew word which the LXX translated by φαρμακούς was actually feminine?

PHILO

οὐ προαισθανομένους ἔδωδίμοις τισὶν ἀναμίξας καὶ 96 συνανακερασάμενος. ἤδη γοῦν πολυάνθρωπα συσ-σίτια καθ' ἑταιρείαν συνεληλυθότων ἐπὶ τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἄλας καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν τράπεζαν ἐν σπονδαῖς ἄσπονδα ἔπαθεν ἐξαίφνης διαφθαρέντα καὶ θάνατον ἀντ' εὐωχίας ἀντηλλάξατο. διὸ προσήκει κατὰ τῶν τοιούτων καὶ τοὺς ἐπιεικεστάτους καὶ τοὺς μετριοπαθεστάτους φονᾶν, μόνον οὐκ αὐτόχειρας γινομένους καὶ νομίζοντας εὐαγές εἶναι τὸ μὴ 97 ἑτέροις τὴν τιμωρίαν ἐπιτρέπειν ἄλλ' ἑαυτοῖς. πῶς γὰρ οὐκ ἔστι πάνδεινον, διὰ τροφῆς ἢ τοῦ ζῆν αἰτία καθέστηκε θάνατον τεχνάζειν καὶ τοῖς φύσει τροφίμοις φθοροποιὸν ἐνεργάζεσθαι μεταβολήν, ἵνα τινὲς διὰ φυσικὴν ἀνάγκην ἐπ' ἔδωδὴν καὶ πόσιν ἰόντες, οὐ προιδόντες τὴν ἐνέδραν, ὡς σωτήρια 98 προσῶνται τὰ πανωλεθρίας αἰτία; τὴν δ' αὐτὴν ὑπομενέτωσαν τιμωρίαν, κἄν [εἴ] τινες θανάσιμα μὴ συντιθέντες τὰ δι' ὧν μακρὰ κατασκευάζονται [316] | νόσοι προσφέρωσι· θάνατοι γὰρ πολλάκις αἰρετώτεροι νόσων εἰσὶ καὶ μάλιστα τῶν τοιούτων, αἱ μῆκεσι χρόνων ἀποτείνονται καὶ τέλος ἔχουσιν οὐκ αἴσιον· δυσίατα γὰρ ἤδη καὶ παντελῶς ἀθεράπευτα τὰ ἐκ φαρμακειῶν ἀρρωστήματα.
 99 χαλεπώτερα μέντοι συμβαίνει φιλεῖ τῶν ἐν τοῖς σώμασι καὶ <τὰ> περὶ τὰς ψυχὰς πάθη τῶν ἐπι-βουλευομένων· ἐκστάσεις γὰρ καὶ παραφροσύναι

---

* Goodenough, who translates this passage, p. 105, gives the meaning more literally, "suffer in the libation something which should have no connexion with it." But the idea of "truce," is inextricably bound up with "libation" in σπονδή and still more in ἄσπονδος.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 95-99

his victims who have no foreknowledge of the plot will be counted by thousands. We have certainly 96 heard of banquets where sudden destruction has fallen upon a great assemblage of guests drawn by comradeship to eat of the same salt and sit at the same board, to whom the cup of peace has brought the bitterness of war<sup>a</sup> and festivity has been changed into death. And therefore it is right that even the most reasonable and mild-tempered should seek the blood of such as these, that they should lose hardly a moment in becoming their executioners,<sup>b</sup> and should hold it a religious duty to keep their punishment in their own hands and not commit it to others. For 97 surely it is a horror of horrors to manufacture out of the food which is the source of life an instrument of death, and to work a destructive change in the natural means of sustenance, so that when the compulsion of nature sends them to take food and drink they do not see the pitfall that lies before them and put to their lips what will annihilate the existence which they think it will preserve. The same punishment must 98 be suffered by any who, although the compounds which they make are not deadly, purvey what will set up chronic diseases.<sup>c</sup> For death in many cases is preferable to diseases, particularly such as drag on through long periods of time without any favourable termination. For maladies caused by poisoning have been found difficult to cure and sometimes entirely unamenable to treatment. However, the bodily 99 troubles of the sufferers from these machinations are often less grievous than those which affect their souls. Fits of delirium and insanity and intolerable frenzy

<sup>b</sup> See note on ἀτροχειρία, § 91.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 635.

PHILO

καὶ ἀφόρητοι μανίαι κατασκήπτουσι, δι' ὧν ὁ νοῦς, ἦν μεγίστην ἀπένειμεν ἀνθρώπων γένει δωρεὰν ὁ θεός, κακούμενος πάσας κακώσεις, ὅταν ἀπογνῶ τὰ σωτήρια, μετανίσταται καὶ μετοικίζεται τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς φαυλότερον εἶδος ὑπολειπόμενος ἐν τῷ σώματι, τὸ ἄλογον, οὗ καὶ τὰ θηρία μετέσχηκεν, ἐπειδὴ πᾶς ὁ ἐρημωθείς λογισμοῦ τοῦ κρείττονος μέρους ψυχῆς μεταβέβληκεν εἰς θήρειον φύσιν, κἂν ἔτι μένωσιν οἱ τοῦ σώματος χαρακτῆρες ἀνθρωπόμορφοι.

- 100 XVIII. Τὴν μὲν οὖν ἀληθῆ μαγικὴν, ὀπτικὴν ἐπιστήμην οὖσαν, ἣ τὰ τῆς φύσεως ἔργα τρανοτέραις φαντασίαις ἀυγάζεται, σεμνὴν καὶ περιμάχητον δοκοῦσαν εἶναι, οὐκ ἰδιῶται μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ βασιλεῖς καὶ βασιλέων οἱ μέγιστοι καὶ μάλιστα οἱ Περσῶν διαπονοῦσιν οὕτως, ὥστ' οὐδένα φασὶν ἐπὶ βασιλείαν δύνασθαι παραπεμφθῆναι παρ' αὐτοῖς, εἰ μὴ πρότερον τοῦ μάγων γένους κεκοινωνηκῶς τυγχάνοι. ἔστι δέ τι παράκομμα ταύτης, 101 κυριώτατα φάναι κακοτεχνία, ἣν μηναγύρται καὶ βωμολόχοι μετίασι καὶ γυναίων καὶ ἀνδραπόδων τὰ φαυλότατα, περιμάττειν καὶ καθαίρειν κατεπαγγελλόμενα καὶ στέργοντας μὲν εἰς ἀνήκεστον ἔχθραν μισοῦντας δὲ εἰς ὑπερβάλλουσαν εὐνοίαν ἄξιον ὑπισχνούμενα φίλτροις καὶ ἐπωδαῖς τισιν, εἶτα τοὺς ἀπλάστοις καὶ ἀκακωτάτοις ἦθεσι κεχημένους ἀπατᾶ τε καὶ ἀγκιστρεύεται, μέχρις ἂν τὰς μεγίστας προσλάβωσι συμφοράς, δι' ἃς οἰκείων καὶ συγγενῶν ὄμιλοι μεγάλοι καὶ πολυάνθρωποι

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Quod Omn. Prob. 74, where the magic of the Persians

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 99-101

swoop down upon them, and thereby the mind, the greatest gift which God has assigned to human kind, is subject to every sort of affliction, and when it despairs of salvation it takes its departure and makes its home elsewhere, leaving in the body the baser kind of soul, the irrational, which the beasts also share. For everyone who is left forsaken by reason, the better part of the soul, has been transformed into the nature of a beast, even though the outward characteristics of his body still retain their human form.

XVIII. Now the true magic,<sup>a</sup> the scientific vision by 100 which the facts of nature are presented in a clearer light, is felt to be a fit object for reverence and ambition and is carefully studied not only by ordinary persons but by kings and the greatest kings, and particularly those of the Persians, so much so that it is said that no one in that country is promoted to the throne unless he has first been admitted<sup>b</sup> into the caste of the Magi. But there is a counterfeit of this, 101 most properly called a perversion of art,<sup>c</sup> pursued by charlatan mendicants and parasites and the basest of the women and slave population, who make it their profession to deal in purifications and disenchantments and promise with some sort of charms and incantations to turn men's love into deadly enmity and their hatred into profound affection. The simplest and most innocent natures are deceived by the bait till at last the worst misfortunes come upon them and thereby the wide membership which unites great companies is described in almost the same words as here. See App. pp. 635-636.

<sup>b</sup> Or "made a partner with," i.e. "has learnt their lore." But this would seem to need the dative. The genitive, at any rate in Philo, is regularly applied to the thing shared.

<sup>c</sup> For the use of κακοτεχνία see note on De Mut. 151.

κατὰ μικρὸν ὑπορρέοντες ἀφοφητὶ ταχέως ἐξ-102 εφθάρησαν. εἰς ἅπερ, οἶμαι, πάντα ἀπιδὼν ὁ ἡμέτερος νομοθέτης οὐκ ἐᾷ τὰς κατὰ φαρμακευτῶν εἰς ὕστερον ἀναβάλλεσθαι δίκας, παραχρῆμα τὰς τιμωρίας ἀναπράττειν κελεύσας· αἱ γὰρ ὑπερθέσεις τοὺς μὲν ὑπαιτίους ἐνευκαιρεῖν τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἀδικήμασι παρορμῶσιν ἄτε θανατῶντας,<sup>1</sup> τοὺς δὲ εἰς τὸ παθεῖν ὑπόπτους φοβερωτέρου δέους ἀνα-πιμπλᾶσι, τὴν ἐκείνων ζωὴν θάνατον αὐτῶν εἶναι 103 νομίζοντας. καθάπερ οὖν ἔχεις καὶ σκορπίους | καὶ [317] ὅσα ἰοβόλα, πρὶν δακεῖν ἢ τρῶσαι ἢ συνόλως ἐφορμῆσαι, θεασάμενοι μόνον χωρὶς ὑπερθέσεως κτείνομεν, προφυλαττόμενοι διὰ τὴν ἐνυπάρχουσαν αὐτοῖς κακίαν τὸ μηδὲν παθεῖν, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἀνθρώπους ἄξιον τιμωρεῖσθαι, οἱ φύσεως ἐπι-λαχόντες ἡμέρου διὰ τὴν κοινωνίας αἰτίαν, λογικὴν ψυχὴν,<sup>2</sup> ἐπιτηδεύσει πρὸς θηρίων ἀτιθάσων ἀγριότητας μετέβαλον ἐν ἡδονῇ καὶ ὠφελείᾳ τῇ πάσῃ τιθέμενοι τὸ κακῶς ποιεῖν ὅσους ἂν δύνωνται.

104 XIX. Τοσαῦτ' ἐν τῷ παρόντι περὶ φαρμακευτῶν ἀποχρώντως λελέχθω. προσήκει μέντοι μηδὲ τοῦτ' ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι καιροὶ συμπίπτουσιν ἀβουλήτοι πολ-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn, who originally suggested ἄτε θανατοῦντας, later in a note to Heinemann's translation declared the words to be an interpolation. See note c and App. pp. 636-637.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn following Mangey for mss. πηγῆν. I follow them without doubt. Is λογικὴ πηγὴ in the sense of the "fountain of reason," i.e. containing reason, as a periphrasis for the mind or soul, impossible?

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 101-104

of friends and kinsmen falls gradually into decay and is rapidly and silently destroyed. All these things our lawgiver had in view,<sup>a</sup> I believe, when he prohibited any postponement in bringing poisoners to justice and ordained that the punishment should be exacted at once.<sup>b</sup> For postponement encourages the culprits to use the little time they have to live<sup>c</sup> as an opportunity for repeating their crimes, while it fills those who already have misgivings as to their safety with a still more horrifying fear, as they think that the survival of the poisoners means death to themselves. So just as the mere sight of vipers and scorpions and all venomous creatures even before they sting or wound or attack us at all leads us to kill them without delay as a precaution against injury necessitated by their inherited viciousness, in the same way it is right to punish human beings who though they have received a nature mellowed through the possession of a rational soul, whence springs the sense of fellowship, have been so changed by their habits of life that they shew the savageness of ferocious wild beasts and find their only source of pleasure and profit in injuring all whom they can. 103

XIX. Enough has been said for the present on the subject of poisoners, but we must not fail to observe that occasions often arise unsought in which a man 104

<sup>a</sup> Philo here clearly implies that he sees that the magical arts described in the previous section fall under the head of the crime denounced in Ex. xxii. 18 φαρμακοῦς οὐ περιποιήσεις.

<sup>b</sup> Philo finds this meaning in οὐ περιποιήσεις. The verb might properly be used of a person temporarily reprieved.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "to make the best of their opportunities since they are about to die," if the text is to stand, on which see App. pp. 636-637. Cohn's first suggestion of ἄτε θανατοῦντας, meaning, I suppose, "since they are murderous people," seems to me impossibly weak.

PHILO

λάκεις, ἐν οἷς ἀνδροφονεῖ τις οὐκ ἐπὶ τοῦτ' ἐλθὼν ἢ παρεσκευασμένος, ἀλλ' ἐξαπιναίως ἀρπασθεὶς ὑπ' ὀργῆς, ἀνηκέστου καὶ ἐπιβούλου πάθους, ὃ καὶ τὸν ἔχοντα καὶ <τὸν> καθ' οὗ γίνεται τὰ μέγιστα 105 βλάπτει. προελθὼν γὰρ ἔστιν ὅτε εἰς ἀγορὰν ἕνεκα πραγματείας ἐπειγούσης, ἐντυχὼν τινι προπετεστέρῳ κακηγορεῖν ἢ τύπτειν ἐπιχειροῦντι ἢ καὶ αὐτὸς ἀρξάς τῆς πρὸς ἐκεῖνον διαφορᾶς, συμπλοκῆς γενομένης, ὑπὲρ τοῦ διαζευχθῆναι καὶ θάπτον ἐκφυγεῖν ἢ πύξ ἔπαισε τῇ χειρὶ ἢ λίθον ἀράμενος 106 ἔρριψε· καιρίως δὲ τῆς πληγῆς ἐνεχθείσης, εἰ μὲν εὐθὺς θνήσκοι, καὶ ὁ παῖσας θνησκέτω τὰ ἴσα οἷς διέθηκε παθῶν· εἰ δὲ παραχρῆμα μὲν ἐκ τῆς πληγῆς μὴ τελευτήσῃ, νόσω δὲ χρήσεται καὶ κληήρης γενόμενος ἐπιμελείας τυχὼν τῆς προσηκούσης αὐθις ἐξαναστῆ καὶ προέλθῃ, κἂν μὴ ποσὶν ἀρτίοις πως δύνηται βαδίξειν ἀλλ' ὑπερειδόντων τινῶν ἢ καὶ βακτηρία σκηριπτόμενος, διττὰς ὁ παῖσας ἐκτινέτω ζημίας, τὴν μὲν εἰς ἀργίας ἐπανόρθωσιν, τὴν δ' ἀντὶ τῶν ἰατρείων.
 107 καταθεὶς δ' ἀπηλλάχθω τῆς ἐπὶ τῷ θανάτῳ τιμωρίας, κἂν ὕστερον ὁ τὴν πληγὴν λαβὼν τελευτήσῃ· τάχα γὰρ οὐκ ἀπὸ τῆς πληγῆς, ἐπειδὴ ῥάων γενόμενος εἰς περίπατον προήλθεν, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἑτέρας αἰτίας, αἱ καὶ τοὺς ὑγιεινοτάτους τὰ σώματα πολλάκις ἐξαίφνης ἐπιθέμεναι διέφθειραν.

---

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 105-107 see Ex. xxi. 18, 19. Observe that Philo does not really follow up the idea suggested in the preceding section and still more clearly in § 92, viz. that manslaughter committed in sudden anger is only a "half action," and presumably, therefore, to be punished less severely. For if the other dies on the spot the penalty is still death, and if he dies later, the remission of the penalty is only justified by the commits murder without having come with this purpose in his mind or with any preparations, but has been carried away by anger, that intractable and malignant passion so highly injurious both to him who entertains it and to him against whom it is directed. <sup>a</sup> Sometimes a man goes to the market-place 105 through stress of business ; he meets another of the more headstrong kind who sets about abusing or striking him, or it may be that he himself begins the quarrel ; then when they have set to, he wishes to break off and escape quickly ; he smites the other with his clenched fist or takes up a stone and throws it. Suppose that the blow strikes home, then if his 106 opponent dies at once, the striker too must die and be treated as he has treated the other, but if that other is not killed on the spot by the blow, but is laid up with sickness and after keeping his bed and receiving the proper care gets up again and goes abroad, even though he is not sound on his feet and can only walk with the support of others or leaning on a staff, the striker must be fined twice over, first to make good the other's enforced idleness and secondly to compensate for the cost of his cure.<sup>b</sup> This 107 payment will release him from the death-penalty, even if the sufferer from the blow subsequently dies. For as he got better and walked abroad, his death may be due not to the blow but to other causes which often suddenly attack and put an end to persons whose bodily health is as sound as possible.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 104-107

uncertainty that the death was due to the blow. See on § 120 (App. pp. 637-638).

<sup>b</sup> E.V. "only he shall pay for the loss of his time and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed." Philo follows closely the wording of the LXX, πλὴν τῆς ἀργίας αὐτοῦ ἀποτίσει καὶ τὰ ἰατρεία.

PHILO

- 108 Ἐὰν δὲ συμπλακείς γυναικί τις ἐγκύω πληγὴν ἐμφορήσῃ κατὰ τὴν γαστέρα, ἢ δὲ ἀμβλώσῃ, εἰ μὲν ἀπλαστον καὶ ἀδιατύπτωτον τὸ ἀμβλωθὲν τύχῃ, ζημιούσθω, καὶ διὰ τὴν ὕβριν καὶ ὅτι ἐμποδῶν ἐγένετο τῇ φύσει ζωογονῆσαι τὸ κάλλιστον τεχνιτεύουσα καὶ δημιουργούσα ζῶον, ἄνθρωπον· εἰ δὲ ἤδη μεμορφωμένον, ἀπάντων μελῶν τὰς οἰκείους
- 109 τάξεις καὶ ποιότητας ἀπειληφότων, θηησκέτω. τὸ γὰρ τοιοῦτον ἄνθρωπός ἐστιν, ὃν ἐν τῷ τῆς φύσεως ἐργαστηρίῳ διεχρήσατο μήπω καιρὸν εἶναι νομι-
- [318] ζούσης εἰς φῶς προαγαγεῖν, ἔοικὸς ἀνδριάντι | ἐν πλαστικῇ κατακειμένῳ, πλέον οὐδὲν ἢ τὴν ἕξω παραπομπὴν καὶ ἄνεσιν<sup>1</sup> ἐπιζητοῦντι.
- 110 XX. Διὰ ταύτης τῆς προστάξεως καὶ ἕτερόν τι μείζον ἀπηγόρευται, βρεφῶν ἔκθεσις, ὃ παρά πολλοῖς τῶν ἄλλων ἐθνῶν ἔνεκα τῆς φυσικῆς ἀπ-
- 111 ἀνθρωπίας χειρόθες ἀσέβημα γέγονεν. εἰ γὰρ τοῦ μηδέπω ταῖς ὠρισμέναις τῶν καιρῶν περιόδοις ἀποκνηθέντος προνοητέον, ὡς μὴ ἕξ ἐπιβουλῆς τι δεινὸν πάθοι, πῶς οὐχὶ μᾶλλον τοῦ τελειογονηθέντος καὶ ὡσπερ εἰς ἀποικίαν ἦν ἔλαχον ἄνθρωποι προπεμφθέντος ἐπὶ τῷ μεταλαχεῖν τῶν τῆς φύσεως δωρεῶν, ἃς ἀνίσχιν ἐκ γῆς καὶ ὕδατος καὶ ἀέρος καὶ οὐρανοῦ, παρέχουσα τῶν μὲν οὐρανίων τὴν

<sup>1</sup> Cohn suggests ἀφεσιν.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxi. 22. Here Philo follows the LXX, which differs seriously from the Hebrew. There the words "so that her fruit depart, and yet no mischief follow," appear to mean (see Driver) that the woman does not die or suffer permanent injury from the miscarriage, and the question of the complete formation or not of the child does not appear at all. LXX εἰ μὲν . . . ἐξέλθῃ τὸ παιδίον μὴ ἐξείκονισμένον.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 637.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 108-111

<sup>a</sup> If a man comes to blows with a pregnant woman 108 and strikes her on the belly and she miscarries, then, if the result of the miscarriage is unshaped and undeveloped, he must be fined both for the outrage and for obstructing the artist Nature in her creative work of bringing into life the fairest of living creatures, man.<sup>b</sup> But, if the offspring is already shaped and all the limbs have their proper qualities and places in the system, he must die, for that which answers to 109 this description is a human being, which he has destroyed in the laboratory of Nature who judges that the hour has not yet come for bringing it out into the light, like a statue lying in a studio requiring nothing more than to be conveyed outside and released from confinement.<sup>c</sup>

XX. This ordinance carries with it the prohibition 110 of something else more important, the exposure of infants,<sup>d</sup> a sacrilegious practice which among many other nations, through their ingrained inhumanity, has come to be regarded with complacency. For if 111 on behalf of the child not yet brought to the birth by the appointed conclusion of the regular period thought has to be taken to save it from disaster at the hands of the evil-minded, surely still more true is this of the full-born babe sent out as it were to settle in the new homeland assigned to mankind, there to partake of the gifts of Nature. These gifts she draws from earth and water and air and heaven.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 637.

<sup>d</sup> The exposure of children is nowhere expressly forbidden in the law, though doubtless it would fall under the general head of murder as Philo himself suggests in § 118, and Josephus presumably held when he says, Contra Ap. ii. 202, that it was forbidden by the law. The LXX mistranslation of Ex. xxi. 22 comes in happily to help Philo to clinch the point.

PHILO

- θέαν, τῶν δὲ ἐπιγείων τὸ κράτος καὶ τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, καὶ πάσαις μὲν χορηγοῦσα ταῖς αἰσθήσεσιν ἄφθονα τὰ πάντων, τῷ δὲ νῶ καθάπερ μεγάλῳ βασιλεῖ τὰ μὲν διὰ τούτων ὡς ἂν δορυφόρων ὅσα αἰσθητά, τὰ
- 112 δ' ἄνευ τούτων ὅσα λόγῳ καταληπτά; τοσοῦτων οὖν ἀποστεροῦντες ἀγαθῶν τοὺς παῖδας οἱ τροφεῖς, ἅμα τῇ γενέσει τούτων μηδενὸς μεταδιδόντες, ἴστωσαν νόμους φύσεως καταλύοντες καὶ τὰ μέγιστα κατηγοροῦντες αὐτῶν, φιληδονίαν, μισανθρωπίαν, ἀνδροφονίαν καὶ—τὸ χαλεπώτατον ἄγος—
- 113 τεκνοκτονίαν. φιλήδονοι μὲν γάρ, εἰ μὴ σπορᾶς ἔνεκα τέκνων καὶ τοῦ διαιωνίσει τὸ γένος συνέρχονται γυναιξίν ἀλλὰ θηρώμενοι συῶν ἢ τράγων τρόπον τὴν ἐξ ὀμίλιας ἀπόλαυσιν· μισάνθρωποι δὲ τίνες ἂν εἶεν μᾶλλον ἢ οἱ τῶν γεννηθέντων ἐχθροὶ καὶ ἀμείλικτοι δυσμενεῖς; εἰ μὴ τις οὕτως ἐστὶν ἡλίθιος, ὡς ὑπολαβεῖν ὅτι πρὸς τοὺς ἄλλοτρίους ἔνσπονδοὶ γένοιτ' ἂν οἱ τοὺς ἠνωμένους κατὰ γένος
- 114 ἔκσπονδα εἰργασμένοι. τὰς γε μὴν ἀνδροφονίας καὶ τεκνοκτονίας ἐναργεστάταις βεβαιοῦνται πίστεσιν οἱ μὲν αὐτόχειρες γινόμενοι καὶ τὴν πρώτην εἰσπνοὴν τῶν βρεφῶν πιέζοντες καὶ ἀναθλίβοντες ὑπὸ ὠμότητος καὶ δεινῆς ἀναλγησίας, οἱ δὲ εἰς ποταμὸν ἢ θαλάττης βυθὸν ἀφιέντες, ὅταν ἀπαιωρήσωσιν
- 115 ἄχθος, ἵνα θάπτον τῷ βάρει καταφέρηται· οἱ δ' ἐπ' ἐρημίαν κομίζουσιν ἐκθήσοντες, ὡς μὲν αὐτοὶ φασιν, ἐλπίδι σωτηρίας, ὡς δὲ τάληθὲς ἔχει, πρὸς ἀνιαιοτάτας συμφοράς· ὅσα γὰρ ἀνθρωπίνων σαρ-

---

<sup>a</sup> πάντων apparently refers to earth, air, and water summed up in τὰ ἐπίγεια. The οὐράνια are not given to all the senses.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 111-115

Of heavenly things she grants the contemplation, of earthly things the sovereignty and dominion. She bestows in abundance on all the senses what every element contains,<sup>a</sup> on the mind, as on a mighty king, through the senses as its squires, all that they perceive, without them all that reason apprehends. If 112 the guardians of the children cut them off from these blessings, if at their very birth they deny them all share in them, they must rest assured that they are breaking the laws of Nature and stand self-condemned on the gravest charges, love of pleasure, hatred of men, murder and, the worst abomination of all, murder of their own children. For they are pleasure-lovers 113 when they mate with their wives, not to procreate children and perpetuate the race, but like pigs and goats in quest of the enjoyment which such intercourse gives. Men-haters too, for who could more deserve the name than these enemies, these merciless foes of their offspring? For no one is so foolish as to suppose that those who have treated dishonourably their own flesh and blood will deal honourably with strangers. As to the charges of murder in general 114 and murder of their own children in particular the clearest proofs of their truth is supplied by the parents. Some of them do the deed with their own hands; with monstrous cruelty and barbarity they stifle and throttle the first breath which the infants draw or throw them into a river or into the depths of the sea, after attaching some heavy substance to make them sink more quickly under its weight. Others 115 take them to be exposed in some desert place, hoping, they themselves say, that they may be saved, but leaving them in actual truth to suffer the most distressing fate. For all the beasts that feed on human

PHILO

- κῶν ἄπτεται θηρία, μηδενὸς ἀνείργοντος, ἐπιφοιτᾶ καὶ εὐωχεῖται τῶν βρεφῶν, καλῆς θοίνης, ἣν οἱ μόνου κηδεμόνες καὶ πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων σώζειν ὀφείλοντες, πατὴρ καὶ μήτηρ, προὔθεσαν· καὶ τὰ λείψανα μέντοι προσεπιλιχμῶνται τῶν οἰωνῶν οἱ σαρκοβόροι καταπτάντες, ὅταν μὴ προαίσθωνται·
- 116
[319] αἰσθόμενοι γὰρ καὶ περὶ τῶν ὄλων<sup>1</sup> πρὸς τοὺς χειρσαίους θήρας κονίονται. φέρε δ' οὖν | τῶν ὀδῶ παριόντων τινὰς ἡμέρῳ κινήθοντας πάθει λαβεῖν οἶκτον καὶ ἔλεον τῶν ἐκτεθέντων, ὡς ἀνελέσθαι τε καὶ τροφῆς μεταδοῦναι καὶ τῆς ἄλλης ἐπιμελείας ἀξιῶσαι· ταυτὶ τὰ οὕτως χρηστὰ ἔργα τί νομίζομεν; ἄρ' οὐ τῶν γεννησάντων εἶναι καταδίκην,<sup>2</sup> εἴ γ' οἱ μὲν ἀλλότριου τὰ γονέων, οἱ δὲ γονεῖς οὐδὲ τὰ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων εἰς εὐνοίαν ἐπετήδευσαν;
- 117 Πόρρωθεν οὖν τὴν βρεφῶν ἔκθεσιν ἀπέειπε δι' ὑπονοιῶν θάνατον, ὡς ἔφην, ὀρίσας κατὰ τῶν αἰτίων ἀμβλώσεως τὰ μεμορφωμένα ἤδη κυῖσκού-σαις· καίτοι τὰ μὲν ἔτι κατὰ γαστρὸς προσεχόμενα τῇ μήτρᾳ τῶν κνουσῶν εἶναι μέρη λέγεται παρά τε φυσικοῖς ἀνδράσιν, οἷς ὁ θεωρητικὸς διαπονεῖται βίος, καὶ παρὰ ἰατρῶν τοῖς δοκιμωτάτοις, οἱ τὴν ἀνθρώπου κατασκευὴν διηρεύνησαν τὰ τ' ἐν ὄψει καὶ τὰ ἀφανῆ μετ' ἐπιμελείας ἐξ ἀνατομῆς ἀκριβώσαντες, ἢν', εἰ χρεῖα τις γένοιτο θεραπείας, μηδὲν ἀγνοία παρολιγωρηθὲν αἴτιον μεγάλου

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καὶ πρὸ τῶν ὀδῶν οἱ καὶ τῶν ὄλων.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. καταδίκη οἱ καταδίκας.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 115-117

flesh visit the spot and feast unhindered on the infants, a fine banquet provided by their sole guardians, those who above all others should keep them safe, their fathers and mothers. Carnivorous birds, too, come flying down and gobble up the fragments, that is, if they have not discovered them earlier, for, if they have, they get ready to fight the beasts of the field for the whole carcase. But suppose some passing 116 travellers, stirred by humane feeling, take pity and compassion on the castaways and in consequence raise them up,<sup>a</sup> give them food and drink, and do not shrink from paying all the other attentions which they need, what do we think of such highly charitable actions? Do we not consider that those who brought them into the world stand condemned when strangers play the part of parents, and parents do not behave with even the kindness of strangers?

So Moses then, as I have said, implicitly and in- 117 directly forbade the exposure of children, when he pronounced the sentence of death against those who cause the miscarriage of mothers in cases where the foetus is fully formed. No doubt the view that the child while still adhering to the womb below the belly is part of its future mother is current both among natural philosophers whose life study is concerned with the theoretical side of knowledge and also among physicians of the highest repute, who have made researches into the construction of man and examined in detail what is visible and also by the careful use of anatomy what is hidden from sight, in order that if medical treatment is required nothing which could cause serious danger sense of "taking up" or acknowledgment by the father.
Lat. tollere. See L. & S.

PHILO

- 118 κινδύνου γένηται. τὰ δ' ἀποκηθέντα τῆς τε συμφυίας ἀπέζευκται καὶ διωφειμένα καθ' αὐτὰ ζῶα γέγονεν οὐδενὸς ἐπιδεᾶ τῶν ὅσα συμπληρωτικὰ τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεώς ἐστιν, ὥστε ἀνευδοιάστως ἀνδροφόνον εἶναι τὸν βρέφος ἀναιροῦντα, τοῦ νόμου μὴ ἐπὶ ταῖς ἡλικίαις ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ γένει παρα-
- 119 σπονδουμένῳ δυσχεραίνοντος. εἰ μέντοι καὶ ἡλικιῶν ἔδει προμηθεῖσθαι, δοκεῖ μοί τις ἂν δεόντως ἀγανακτῆσαι μᾶλλον ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀναιροῦσι βρέφη· πρὸς μὲν γὰρ τοὺς τελείους μυρίαὶ προφάσεις εὐλογοὶ προσκρουσμάτων τε καὶ διαφορῶν, τοῖς δὲ κομιδῇ νηπίοις ἄρτι παρεληλυθόσιν εἰς φῶς καὶ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον οὐδ' ἐπιψεύσασθαι κατηγορίαν ἀκακωτάτοις οὖσιν ἐνδέχεται. διὸ πάντων ὠμότητοι καὶ ἀνηλεέστατοι κριθεῖεν ἂν οἱ ἐπαποδύμενοι ταῖς τούτων ἐπιβουλαῖς, οὓς ἐχθαίρων ὁ ἱερός νόμος ἐνόχους ἀπεφίηνατο.
- 120 XXI. <sup>1</sup>Τὸν μὴ ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ τοῦ κτείναντος ἀναιρεθέντα φησὶν ὁ ἱερός νόμος παραδεδόσθαι ὑπὸ θεοῦ χερσὶν ἀνδροφόνοις, τῇ μὲν ἀπολογούμενος ὑπὲρ τοῦ δόξαντος ἀνελεῖν ὡς ἐνοχον ἀνελόντος—
- 121 μὴ γὰρ ἂν ποτε τὸν ἴλεω καὶ συγγνώμονα θεὸν ἐπ' ἀναιρέσει τὸν γε ἀναίτιον ἐκδοῦναι, ἀλλ' ὅστις τὰς μὲν παρὰ ἀνθρώποις κρίσεις εὐμηχάνως ἔνεκα τοῦ πολυτρόπου διαδιδράσκει, πρὸς δὲ τὸ τῆς φύσεως ἀχθεῖς ἀφανὲς δικαστήριον ἐάλω, ἐν ᾧ μόνῳ

<sup>1</sup> mss. heading Περὶ ἀκουσίου φόνου.

<sup>a</sup> See note (App.) on § 109.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxi. 13. E.V. "If a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand," i.e. if he is killed by accident (Driver), "then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee." For the first words the LXX has "he that did not

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 118-121

should be neglected through ignorance. But when 118 the child has been brought to the birth it is separated from the organism with which it was identified and being isolated and self-contained becomes a living animal, lacking none of the complements needed to make a human being.<sup>a</sup> And therefore infanticide undoubtedly is murder, since the displeasure of the law is not concerned with ages but with a breach of faith to the race. Though indeed, if 119 age had to be taken into consideration, infanticide to my mind gives a greater cause for indignation, for in the case of adults quarrels and differences supply any number of reasonable pretexts, but with mere babes, who have just passed into the light and the life of human kind, not even a false charge can be brought against such absolute innocence. Therefore those who gird themselves up to conspire against such as these must be judged to be the cruellest and most ruthless of men. The holy law detests them and has pronounced them worthy of punishment.

XXI. The holy law describes the man who has been 120 slain without the deliberate intention of him who did the deed as having been delivered by God into the manslayer's hands.<sup>b</sup> In this phrase it is partly defending one who has admittedly taken the life of another on the ground that it was the life of a guilty person. For it assumes that a merciful and forgiving 121 God would never surrender an innocent man to be done to death but only one who having been enabled by his resourcefulness to make a skilful escape from the justice of men has been arraigned and condemned in the invisible court of Nature, that court in which intend it" (ὁ δὲ οὐχ ἔκων). For Philo's conception of ἀκούσιος φόνος see App. pp. 637-638.

PHILO

τάληθές ἀκραιφνέστατον ὀράται, λόγων τέχναις οὐκ ἐπισκιαζόμενον, οὐδὲ γὰρ λόγους τὴν ἀρχὴν παραδέχεται βουλήματα ἀπαμπίσχον καὶ διανοίας ἀφανείς εἰς τοῦμφανές ἄγον—, τῇ δὲ καὶ τὸν ἀνελόντα φόνῳ μὲν οὐ ποιῶν ὑπόδικον ἅτε θεία κρίσει δόξαντα ὑπηρετῆσαι, μιάσματι δὲ ἀδηλουμένῳ καὶ [320] βραχεὶ πάντως, ὃ παραιτητὸν καὶ | συγγνωστόν 122 ἔστι. χρῆται γὰρ ὁ θεὸς τοῖς ὀλίγα καὶ ἰάσιμα διαμαρτάνουσι κατὰ τῶν μέγιστα καὶ ἀνιάτα ἡδικηκότων ὑπηρεταῖς κολάσεως, οὐκ ἐκείνους ἀποδεχόμενος, ἀλλ' ὡς ἂν ὄργανα παραλαμβάνων ἐπιτήδεια πρὸς τιμωρίαν, ἵνα μηδεὶς ὄλω βίῳ καθαρὸς ὦν καὶ ἐκ καθαρῶν φόνου, κἂν δικαιοτάτος 123 ᾗ, προσάμψηται. φυγὴν οὖν κατὰ τοῦ κτείναντος ἀκουσίως ὤρισεν, οὐχ ὅπη τύχοι οὐδ' εἰς αἰεὶ πόλεις μὲν γὰρ ἐξ ἀπένειμεν, ὀγδόῃν μοῖραν ὦν ἔλαχεν ἡ ἱερωμένη φυλὴ, τοῖς ἀλουῦσιν, ἃς ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ὠνόμασε “φυγαδευτηρίων”<sup>1</sup>. χρόνον δὲ τῆς φυγῆς τὸν βίον τοῦ ἀρχιερέως προσενομοθέτησε κάθοδον μετὰ τὴν ἐκείνου τελευτὴν ἐπιτρέπων.

124 XXII. αἰτία δὲ τούτου μὲν<sup>2</sup> προτέρα ἦδε· ἡ λεχθεῖσα φυλὴ τὰς πόλεις εἴληφεν ἄθλον ἀνδροφονίας εὐαγούς, ἣν ἀριστεῶν ὅσαι πώποτε γεγόνασιν ἐπιφανεστάτην καὶ μεγίστην ὑποληπτέον.

<sup>1</sup> mss. φυγαδευτήριον (-ου) (-α).

<sup>2</sup> The μὲν seems out of place. I suggest τούτου <ἢ> μὲν.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. setting the slayer to be His executioner, God marks him as one of a less worthy type. Philo is assigning a reason for the φυγή, which he regards rather as a sentence of banishment than as an escape from vengeance.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 121-124

truth is seen in perfect purity, which is not beclouded by verbal artifices, since it never accepts words at all but unveils motives and brings hidden intentions into open daylight. Partly, too, it lays the manslayer under the imputation, not indeed of murder, since he is held to have been the minister of divine judgment, but of a defilement of little note and quite insignificant, for which pardon may well be asked and granted.<sup>a</sup> For in inflicting chastisement on 122 offenders whose deeds have been evil beyond all remedy God uses as His ministers those whose sins are few and easily remedied, though He does not show approval of them but merely takes them as suitable instruments of vengeance. For He would not wish that anyone whose whole life is stainless and his lineage also should set his hand to homicide however justly deserved. He therefore sentenced the 123 involuntary manslayer to go into exile, but not just anywhere nor yet for all time. For He assigned to persons convicted under this head six cities, an eighth part of those allotted to the consecrated tribe,<sup>b</sup> a fact recorded in the name of "cities of refuge" which He gave to them, and by a further edict He limited the time of banishment to the life of the high priest, after whose death the exile should be permitted to return.<sup>c</sup>

XXII. <sup>d</sup> The first reason for this is as 124 follows : the aforesaid tribe received the cities as a reward for a righteous slaughter which we must regard as the most illustrious act of heroism that has

<sup>b</sup> Num. xxxv. 6, 11-15.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid. 28.

<sup>d</sup> For §§ 124-127 see Ex. xxxii. Philo here recurs to the story which he has already told at length in Mos. ii. 159 ff. and 270 ff., to say nothing of shorter accounts in De Ebr. 67, and above, i. 79.

PHILO

125 ἡνίκα γὰρ ὁ προφήτης εἰς τὸ περιμηκέστατον καὶ ἱερώτατον τῶν κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν τόπον ὄρων ἀνακληθεὶς ἐθεσπίζετο τὰ γένη τῶν ἐν εἴδει νόμων καὶ πλείους ἦν ἀφανὴς ἡμέρας, οἱ μὴ τὰς φύσεις εἰρηνικοὶ τῶν ἐξ ἀναρχίας κακιῶν<sup>1</sup> πάντα κατἐπλησαν καὶ τέλος προσέθηκαν ἀσεβειαν· τὰς μὲν ἀρίστας καὶ καλὰς ὑφηγήσεις περὶ τῆς τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος θεοῦ τιμῆς χλευάσαντες, ταῦρον δὲ κατασκευασάμενοι χρυσοῦν, Αἴγυπτιακοῦ μίμημα τύφου, θυσίας ἀνήγον ἀθύτους καὶ ἐορτὰς ἀνεόρτους καὶ χοροὺς ἀχορεύτους ἐπετέλουν σὺν ὠδαῖς καὶ ὕμνοις 126 ἀντὶ θρήνων. ἡ δὲ λεχθεῖσα φυλὴ πάνυ χαλεπῶς ἐνεγκοῦσα τὴν αἰφνίδιον ἐκδιαίτησιν καὶ ζήλω πυρωθεῖσα διὰ μισοπόνηρον πάθος, ὑπόπλεω πάντες ὀργῆς, μεμνηότες, ἐνθουσιῶντες, ὡς ἀφ' ἐνὸς συνθήματος ὀπλισάμενοι, διττὴν μεθύοντας μέθην, τὴν μὲν ἀσεβεία, τὴν δὲ οἴνω, μάλα καταφρονη-τικῶς ἐπιστροφάδην ἀνήρουν, ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκειοτάτων καὶ φιλτάτων ἀρξάμενοι, φίλον καὶ συγγένειαν ἐν τὸ θεοφιλὲς εἶναι νομίζοντες· καὶ βραχεὶ μέρει ἡμέρας τέσσαρες πρὸς ταῖς εἴκοσι χιλιάδες ἀνηρέ-θησαν, ὧν αἱ συμφοραὶ τοὺς συναπονοεῖσθαι μέλ-λοντας ἐνουθέτησαν, δέει τοῦ μὴ τὰ παραπλήσια 127 παθεῖν. ταύτην τὴν στρατείαν ἐβελουργὸν καὶ αὐτοκέλευστον ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας καὶ ὁσιότητος τῆς<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κακῶν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τὴν.

<sup>a</sup> This certainly is the sense required for this passive (or middle?) of θεσπίζω, but no other examples seem forthcoming, unless De Abr. 262 οὗς Μωυσῆς ἐθεσπίσθη, is to be taken in the sense of "was inspired to give" instead of "prophesied." See note there.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 125-127

ever been achieved. When the prophet, summoned 125 up to the highest and most sacred mountain in that region, was receiving<sup>a</sup> from God the heads which sum up the particular laws, and had disappeared for several days, the born enemies of peace had diffused through every part of the camp the vices that spring up in the ruler's absence and had crowned them with impiety. They mocked at the most excellent and admirable injunctions which bade them honour the truly existing God, constructed a golden bull in imitation of the vanity of Egypt, offered sacrifices which were no sacrifices, held feasts which were no feasts and danced dances of death with songs and hymns which should have been dirges.<sup>b</sup> Then this 126 same tribe, sorely distressed at the sudden backsliding and fired with zeal by their heart-felt hatred of evil, every man of them filled with rage, frenzied, possessed, took arms as if at one signal,<sup>c</sup> and despising all thoughts of danger mowed down their foes drunk with the twofold intoxication of impiety and wine.
They began with their nearest and dearest, for they acknowledged no love nor kinship but God's love, and in the space of a few hours 24,000<sup>d</sup> had fallen whose fate served as a warning through fear that they might suffer the like to those who were on the brink of sharing their delusion. This campaign, waged spon- 127 taneously and instinctively on behalf of piety and

<sup>b</sup> Much the same phraseology as in Mos. ii. 162, except that there the χοροὺς coupled with ἰσραῆλ signifies the dancers rather than, as here, the dances.

<sup>c</sup> The same phrase as in Mos. ii. 170.

<sup>d</sup> A slip for 3000 (given correctly De Ebr. 67 and Mos. ii. 274), induced by confusion with Num. xxv. 9, where Philo saw a similar slaughter rather than a plague. See Mos. i. 304 and note.

PHILO

εἰς τὸν ὄντως ὄντα θεὸν γενομένην οὐκ ἄνευ μεγάλων κινδύνων τοῖς ἀραμένοις τοὺς ἀγῶνας αὐτὸς ὁ πατὴρ τῶν ὄλων ἀπεδέξατο καὶ τοὺς ἀνελόντας δικάσας παρ' αὐτῷ καθαρούς εἶναι παντὸς ἄγους |
 [321] καὶ μιάσματος ἱερωσύνην τῆς ἀνδραγαθίας τούτοις
 128 ἀντιδωρεῖται. XXIII. τὸν οὖν ἀκούσιον δράσαντα φόνον κελεύει φυγεῖν εἰς ἐνίας ὧν ἔλαχον οὗτοι πόλεις ἕνεκα παρηγορίας καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ ἀπογινώσκειν τὴν εἰς ἅπαν ἀσφάλειαν, ὑπομιμνησκόμενον ἐκ τοῦ τόπου τὸ ἄφοβον καὶ λογιζόμενον, ὅτι τοῖς ἐκουσίως ἀπεκτονόσιν οὐ μόνον ἀμνηστία δέδοται ἀλλὰ καὶ γέρα μεγάλα καὶ περιμάχητα καὶ πολλῆς εὐδαιμονίας, εἰ δὲ τούτοις, πολὺ μᾶλλον τοῖς μὴ ἐκ προνοίας ἀνελοῦσιν, εἰ καὶ μηδὲν τῶν ἐπὶ τιμῇ, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ γοῦν τὸ πανύστατον, μὴ ἀνταναιρεθῆναι· δι' οὗ παρίσταται τὸ μὴ πᾶσαν ἀνδροφονίαν ἐπίληπτον ἀλλὰ τὴν σὺν ἀδικίᾳ μόνην εἶναι, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἐπαινετὴν μὲν τὴν κατὰ πόθον καὶ ζῆλον ἀρετῆς, οὐ ψεκτὴν δὲ τὴν ἀκούσιον.

129 ἦδε μὲν αἰτία προτέρα λελέχθω, δευτέραν δ' αὐτίκα μνηστέον· βούλεται ὁ νόμος τὸν ἀκουσίως ἀποκτείναντα διασώζειν, εἰδὼς γνώμη μὲν οὐκ ἔνοχον χερσὶ δὲ ὑπηρετήσαντα τῇ τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἐφόρῳ δίκῃ πραγμάτων· ἐφεδρεύουσι γὰρ ἐχθροὶ φονῶντες οἱ τοῦ τεθνεώτος ἀγχιστεῖς, οἱ δὲ ὑπερβάλλοντα οἶκτον καὶ πένθος ἀπαρηγόρη-

---

<sup>a</sup> The first reason for the choice of the Levitical cities was that their history shewed that homicide was not necessarily a crime. The second was that their superior sanctity made them a more secure refuge.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 127-129

holiness towards the truly existing God and fraught with much danger to those who undertook it, was approved by none other than the Father of all Who took it upon Himself to judge the cause of those who wrought the slaughter, declared them pure from any curse of bloodguiltiness and gave them the priesthood as a reward for their gallantry.

XXIII. So then he bids the unintentional homicide 128 flee to some of the cities allotted to this tribe, there to gain consolation and be saved from despairing of salvation altogether. There the place will remind him of the fearless courage once shewn in the past ; there he may reflect that those who shed blood intentionally received not only full pardon but also rewards great and much to be desired and fraught with abundant happiness ; and that, if they fared thus, much more will those whose act was not premeditated receive, not indeed such privileges as confer honour, but at least the lowest and last that they do not pay for the blood they have shed with their own. This shews that not every kind of homicide is culpable but only that which entails injustice, and that as for the other kinds if it is caused by an ardent yearning for virtue it is laudable and if unintentional it is free from blame. No 129 more need be said about the first reason ; we must proceed at once to explain the second.<sup>a</sup> The law wishes to preserve the unintentional homicide, as it recognizes that in intention he was free from guilt, and that with his hands he had been the servant of justice, the overseer of human affairs. It knows that watching and waiting for him are blood-thirsty enemies, the kinsmen of the dead man, urged on to vengeance by overwhelming pity and inconsolable

PHILO

- τον ἵενται πρὸς ἄμυναν ἀλόγῳ φορᾷ τάληθές και 130 τὸ φύσει δίκαιον οὐκ ἐξετάζοντες. ἐπέτρεψεν οὖν τῷ τοιούτῳ καταφεύγειν οὔτε εἰς ἱερὸν ἄτε μήπω κεκαθαρμένῳ οὔτε εἰς ἡμελημένον και ἀφανές χωρίον, ἵνα μὴ ῥαδίως ἐκδοθῆ καταφρονηθεῖς, ἀλλ' εἰς ἱερόπολιν, ἣτις ἐστὶν ἱεροῦ και βεβήλου τόπου μεθόριος, τρόπον τινὰ δεύτερον ἱερὸν· αἱ γὰρ τῶν ἱερωμένων πόλεις σεμνότεραι τῶν ἄλλων εἰσίν, ἐφ' ὅσον, οἶμαι, και οἰκήτορες οἰκητόρων ἐντιμότεροι· βούλεται γὰρ τῇ τῆς ὑποδεξαμένης προνομία βε-βαιοτάτην ἀσφάλειαν περιποιῆσαι τῷ καταφυγόντι.
 131 χρόνον δ', ὡς ἔφην, ὥρισε τῆς καθόδου τῆν τοῦ μεγάλου ἱερέως τελευτὴν αἰτίας ἔνεκα τοιαύδε· ὥσπερ ἐνὸς ἐκάστου τῶν δολοφονηθέντων οἱ συγγενεῖς εἰσιν ἔφεδροι τῆς κατὰ τῶν δολο-φονησάντων δίκης και τιμωρίας, οὕτως και τοῦ σύμπαντος ἔθνους συγγενῆς και ἀγχιστεὺς κοινὸς ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς ἐστι, πρυτανεύων μὲν τὰ δίκαια τοῖς ἀμφισβητοῦσι κατὰ τοὺς νόμους, εὐχὰς δὲ και θυσίας τελῶν καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν και τὰ ἀγαθὰ αἰτούμενος ὡς ὑπὲρ ἀδελφῶν και γονέων και τέκνων, ἵνα πᾶσα ἡλικία και πάντα μέρη<sup>1</sup> τοῦ ἔθνους ὡς ἐνὸς σώματος εἰς μίαν και τῆν αὐτὴν ἀρμόζηται κοινωνίαν εἰρήνης και εὐνομίας ἐφιέμενα.
 132 τοῦτον οὖν εὐλαβεῖσθω πᾶς ὁ ἀκουσίως ἀνελὼν ὡς ὑπέρμαχον και προαγωνιστὴν τῶν ἀναιρεθέντων και

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὰ μέρη.

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo's explanations in §§ 131-136 of "till the death of the high priest" are (1) that the high priest, as representing the nation, is bound to inflict the punishment which the grief, and so carried away by unreasoning passion that they do not inquire what is true or essentially just. It therefore permitted such a one to fly for refuge, 130 not to the holy temple, since he had not yet been purged, nor yet to some obscure and insignificant place where he might easily be surrendered as one of little account, but to a holy city which comes midway between holy and profane ground and is in a sense a secondary temple. For the cities of the consecrated order compared with the others receive a higher reverence, corresponding, I consider, to the honour paid to their respective occupants. The law wished in fact to use the superior rank of the city which gave them shelter to put the safety of the fugitive on the firmest possible footing.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 129-132

<sup>a</sup> When, as 131 I said, it appointed the death of the high priest as the date for the exile's return, it did so for some such reason as this. Just as each single individual who is wilfully murdered has kinsmen to inflict vengeance on the murderer, so too the whole nation has a kinsman and close relative common to all in the high priest, who as ruler dispenses justice to litigants according to the law, who day by day offers prayers and sacrifices and asks for blessings, as for his brothers and parents and children, that every age and every part of the nation regarded as a single body may be united in one and the same fellowship, making peace and good order their aim. Everyone, then, who has slain another 132 unintentionally must fear the high priest as a champion and defender of the slain and keep himself fugitive incurs by leaving his refuge; (2) that he is a theoretically perfect character and will therefore refuse to tolerate the presence of even the involuntary offender. In the first case the φυγή is regarded as a refuge, in the second as exile (as in § 123). See further App. p. 638.

PHILO

- εἶσω τῆς πόλεως εἰς ἣν κατέφυγε κατακεκλείσθω, | [322] μὴ ἐπιθαρρῶν ἕξω προέρχεσθαι τειχῶν, εἰ δὴ τινα ποιεῖται λόγον ἀσφαλείας καὶ τοῦ ζῆν ἀκινδύνως.
 133 ὅταν οὖν λέγη “ μὴ ἐπανίτω ὁ φυγάς, ἕως ἂν ἀποθάνῃ ὁ ἱερεὺς ὁ μέγας,” ἴσον τι τούτῳ φησίν· ἕως ἂν ἀποθάνῃ ὁ πάντων κοινὸς ἀγχιστεὺς, ᾧ μόνῳ καὶ τὰ τῶν ζώντων καὶ τὰ τῶν τετελευτη-134 κόντων ἐφείται βραβεύειν. XXIV. τὴν μὲν οὖν καὶ νεωτέρων ἀκοαῖς ἐφαρμόζουσαν αἰτίαν τοιαύτην εἶναι συμβέβηκεν. ἦν δὲ πρεσβυτέροις καὶ τελείοις τὸ ἦθος θέμις ἀναφέρειν, ἥδ' ἐστί· τῶν μὲν ἔκουσίων ἀδικημάτων αὐτὸ μόνον ἰδιώτας καθαρεύειν ἐφείσθω, λεγέτω δ' εἰ βούλεται τις καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἱερεῖς, ἀμφοτέρων δ' ἔκουσίων τε καὶ ἀκουσίων κατὰ τὸν ἐξαιρετὸν λόγον τὸν ἀρχιερέα.
 135 προσάπτεσθαι γὰρ αὐτῷ μιάσματος τὸ σύνολον οὐ θεμιτόν, οὔτ' ἐκ προνοίας οὔτε κατὰ τροπὴν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀβούλητον, ἵνα ἱεροφάντης ὢν κοσμηῆται καθ' ἑκάτερον, διανοία τε χρώμενος ἀνεπιλήπτῳ καὶ 136 εὐπραγίᾳ βίου, ᾧ μηδὲν ὄνειδος πρόσεστι. τῷ δὴ τοιούτῳ γένοιτ' ἂν ἀκόλουθον ὑποβλέπεσθαι καὶ τοὺς ἀκουσίως ἀπεκτονότας οὐχ<sup>1</sup> ὡς ἐναγεῖς, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς καθαρὸς καὶ παντὸς ἀμετόχους ἀμαρτήματος, καὶ εἰ τὰ μάλιστα τοῖς τῆς φύσεως

<sup>1</sup> Cohn expunged the οὐχ, quite wrongly, I think; see note b.

<sup>a</sup> While the second explanation has something in common with the allegorical interpretation in De Fuga 108 f., it is difficult to see why as it stands it is more suitable for older ears than the other. Perhaps the idea is that it involves the theological and somewhat mystical distinction between voluntary and involuntary sins on which Philo often dwells in his allegorical disquisitions, cf. e.g. De Ebr. 125.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 132-136

shut up within the city in which he has taken refuge, never venturing to shew himself outside the walls, that is, if he sets any value on his safety, or on a life secure from danger. When, then, he says that the 133 exile must not return till the death of the high priest, it is as much as to say till the death of the common kinsman of all, who alone has authority to arbitrate on the rights both of the living and the dead.

XXIV. Such is the reason which we find suitable to 134 younger ears, but for elders and those whose character is fully developed there is another which may properly be given.<sup>a</sup> For laymen it may be allowed that it is enough to keep undefiled from voluntary misdeeds only, and anyone who likes may say the same of the other priests, but he must make an exception of the high priest and agree that he needs to be innocent of the involuntary as well as the voluntary. The contact with pollution of any kind is forbidden 135 to him, whether it is the result of definite purpose or of some movement of the soul which he has not willed, for only so can he take his place as revealer in both aspects, his motives blameless and his life so fortunate that no stigma attaches to it. It is a 136 necessary consequence that such a one should include in the objects of his displeasure the unintentional homicides, regarding them not indeed as accursed,<sup>b</sup> but yet not pure or free from sin of every kind, however much they are admitted to have ministered to <sup>b</sup> Cohn's rejection of οὐχ, though accepted by Heinemann, seems to me unreasonable. ἐναγείς is a strong word, and to negative it perfectly agrees with the description of unintentional homicide as a pollution of little note (§ 121). Apart from this, ἀλλά does not suit the parallelism, which Cohn's text demands, between ἐναγείς and οὐ καθαρούς.

PHILO

ὑπηρετήσαι βουλήμασιν ἔδοξαν τισαμένης διὰ τούτων τοὺς ἀναιρεθέντας, ὧν ἀφανῶς αὐτῇ<sup>1</sup> δικάσασα παρ' ἑαυτῇ θάνατον κατέγνω.

XXV. Ταῦτα μὲν ἐπ' ἑλευθέροις καὶ ἀστοῖς· ἐξῆς δὲ καὶ περὶ οἰκετῶν νομοθετεῖται βιαίως ἀναιρεθέντων.

- 137 <sup>2</sup>Θεράποντες τύχη μὲν ἐλάττονι κέχρηται, φύσεως δὲ τῆς αὐτῆς μεταποιοῦνται τοῖς δεσπόταις. τῷ δὲ θείῳ νόμῳ κανὼν τῶν δικαίων ἐστὶν οὐ τὸ τῆς τύχης ἀλλὰ τὸ τῆς φύσεως ἑναρμόνιον. διὸ προσήκει τοὺς κυρίους μὴ κατακόρως χρῆσθαι ταῖς ἐξουσίαις κατὰ τῶν οἰκετῶν, ἀλαζονείαν καὶ ὑπεροφίαν καὶ δεινὴν ὠμότητα ἐπιδεικνυμένους· ταῦτα γὰρ οὐκ ἔστι δείγματα ψυχῆς εἰρηνικῆς ἀλλ' ὑπὸ ἀκρασίας τὸ ἀνυπεύθυνον ζηλούσης κατὰ
- 138 τυραννικὴν δυναστείαν. ὁ γὰρ τὴν μὲν ἰδίαν οἰκίαν ὥσπερ ἄκραν ἐπιτειχίσας, παρρησίας δὲ τῶν ἔνδον μηδενὶ μεταδιδούς, ἀλλὰ πρὸς ἅπαντας ἡγριωμένος ὑπὸ τῆς ἐμφύτου τάχα δὲ καὶ ἐπιτετηδευμένης μισανθρωπίας, τύραννός ἐστιν ἐλάττοσι παρα-
- 139 σκευαῖς χρώμενος. ἐξ ὧν διελέγχεται μὴ στησόμενος ἐπὶ τῶν αὐτῶν, εἰ μειζόνων λάβοιτο χρημάτων· διαβήσεται γὰρ εὐθὺς ἐπὶ πόλεις τε καὶ χώρας καὶ ἔθνη τὴν αὐτοῦ πατρίδα προδουλώσάμενος εἰς ἔνδειξιν τοῦ μηδενὶ μέλλειν τῶν ἄλλων
- 140 ὑπηκόων ἡμέρως προσφέρεσθαι. σαφῶς οὖν ὁ τοιοῦτος ἴστω μὴ τὴν τοῦ συνεχῶς καὶ εἰς πολλοὺς [323] ἀμαρτάνειν | ἄδειαν ἔξω· ἐναντιώσεται γὰρ ἡ

<sup>1</sup> So mss. : Cohn corrects to αὐτῇ. In view of the common conjunction between αὐτός and the reflexive, I think the ms. reading is preferable.

<sup>2</sup> MS. heading Κατὰ τῶν οἰκέτας κτεινόντων.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 136-140

Nature's will, who has used them as instruments of vengeance against those who have fallen by their hands, condemned to death in the secret tribunal where she sits as sole judge.

XXV. What has been said applies to free-born persons of citizen rank; the enactments which follow deal with slaves whose death is caused by violence.

<sup>a</sup> Servants rank lower in fortune but in nature can <sup>137</sup> claim equality with their masters, and in the law of God the standard of justice is adjusted to nature and not to fortune. And therefore the masters should not make excessive use of their authority over slaves by showing arrogance and contempt and savage cruelty. For these are signs of no peaceful spirit, but of one so intemperate as to seek to throw off all responsibility and take the tyrant's despotism for its model. He who has used his private house as a <sup>138</sup> sort of stronghold of defiance and allows no freedom of speech to any of the inmates, but treats all with the brutality created by his native or perhaps acquired hatred for his fellow-men, is a tyrant with smaller resources. By his use of them he gives proof that he <sup>139</sup> will not stay where he is, if he gets more wealth into his hands, for he will pass on at once to attack cities and countries and nations, after first reducing his own fatherland to slavery, a sign that he will not deal gently with any of his other subjects. Such a one <sup>140</sup> must clearly understand that his misconduct cannot be prolonged or widely extended with immunity, for he will have for his adversary justice, the hater <sup>a</sup> Presumably these are non-Israelites, cf. ii. 123. For the sentiments expressed cf. ii. 69. For the following sections see Ex. xxi. 20, 21.

PHILO

- μισοπόνηρος αὐτῷ δίκη, ἢ βοηθὸς καὶ ὑπέρμαχος τῶν ἀδικηθέντων, ἢ λόγον καὶ εὐθύνας αὐτὸν τῆς
- 141 περὶ τοὺς πεπονθότας συμφορᾶς ἀπαιτήσῃ· κἂν ἄρα φάσκη πληγὰς ἔνεκα νουθεσίας ἐντείνει μὴ διανοηθεὶς ἀνελεῖν, οὐκ εὐθύς βαδιεῖται γεγηθῶς, ἀλλ' εἰς δικαστήριον ἀπαχθεὶς παρ' ἀκριβέσι λογισταῖς τῆς ἀληθείας ἐξετασθήσεται, πότερον ἐκὼν ἀπέκτεινεν ἢ ἄκων· κἂν ἐπιβεβουλευκῶς ἀνευρίσκηται γνώμη ἀνοσίῳ, θνησκέτω, μηδὲν παρόσον δεσπότης ἐστὶ κερδαίνων εἰς τὸ σωθῆναι.
- 142 εἰ δὲ μὴ εὐθύς ἐκ τῶν πληγῶν οἱ τυπτηθέντες ἀναιρεθῶσιν, ἀλλὰ βιώσωσιν ἡμέραν μίαν ἢ καὶ δύο, μηκέθ' ὁμοίως ὁ δεσπότης ὑπόδικος ἔστω φόνου, πλεονέκτημα εἰς ἀπολογίαν πεπορισμένος τὸ μῆτε παραχρῆμα τύπτων ἀνελεῖν μῆθ' ὕστερον, ἔχων κατὰ τὴν οἰκίαν, ἀλλὰ ζῆν ἑάσας ὅσον βιοῦν οἰοῖτε ἦσαν χρόνον, εἰ καὶ παντάπασιν ὀλίγον· χωρὶς τοῦ μηδένα οὕτως ἡλίθιον εἶναι, ὡς λυπεῖν ἕτερον
- 143 ἐπιχειρεῖν, ἐν οἷς αὐτὸς ἀδικηθήσεται. κτείνων δέ τις οἰκέτην πολὺ πρότερον ἑαυτὸν βλάπτει, ὑπ-

---

<sup>a</sup> The thought of justice as the adversary and the legal process described in the next section probably spring from a misunderstanding of Ex. xxi. 20. There, where the E. V. has "he shall surely be punished," the LXX has δίκη ἐκδικηθήσεται. Philo, misunderstanding, as often, the Hebrew idiomatic way of strengthening the verb, takes this to mean "he shall be condemned by justice." He also interprets this to imply the death-penalty, though the text points rather to a fine (see Driver, ad loc.).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 140-143

of evil, the defender and champion of the ill-used, who will call upon him to give an account for the unhappy condition of the sufferers.<sup>a</sup> And if he 141 alleges that the stripes he inflicted were meant as a deterrent and not with the intention of causing death, he shall not at once depart with a cheerful heart, but will be brought before the court, there to be examined under strict investigators of the truth as to whether he meant to commit homicide or not ; and if he is found to have acted with intentional wickedness and with malice aforethought he must die, and his position as master will avail him nothing to escape the sentence.

<sup>b</sup> But if the 142 sufferers do not die on the spot under the lash but survive for one or perhaps two days, the situation is different and the master is not to be held guilty of murder. In this case he is provided with a valuable plea, namely that he did not beat them to death at the time nor yet later when he had them in his house, but suffered them to live as long as they could, even though that was quite a short time. Furthermore he may argue that no one is so foolish as to try to harm another when he himself will be wronged thereby. And it is true that anyone who kills a slave 143 injures himself far more, as he deprives himself of <sup>b</sup> Ex. xxi. 21, "Notwithstanding if he continue (ΛXX διαβιώση, "survive") a day or two, he shall not be punished ; for he is his money." Philo understands the first part of this to mean that the master will be acquitted on the grounds that if he had intended to kill the slave he would have done so at once. The last words, "for he is his money," which probably mean that the master will not be fined, as he anyhow loses his property, are construed as a plea that he cannot have intended to destroy a valuable possession. Philo fails to observe that the plea would have been equally applicable if the slave had died on the spot.

PHILO

ηρεσιῶν τε ἄς παρὰ ζῶντος εἶχε στερόμενος καὶ τὴν τιμὴν ζημιούμενος καὶ πλείστην ἴσως. ἐὰν μέντοι θανάτου πεπραχῶς ἄξια τυγχάνῃ, πρὸς τοὺς δικαστὰς ἀγέτω καὶ δηλούτω τὸ ἀδίκημα, τοὺς νόμους κυρίους ποιῶν τῆς τιμωρίας ἀλλὰ μὴ ἑαυτόν.

- 144 XXVI. <sup>1</sup>Ἐάν τινα ταῦρος ἀναπείρας ἀποκτείνῃ, καταλευέσθω—ἀσφαγῆς γὰρ ἱερείοις—καὶ ἄβρωτα ἔστω τὰ τούτου κρέα. διὰ τί; ὅτι τροφήν ἢ προσόψημα τροφῆς ἀνθρώπων γίνεσθαι τὰ τοῦ
- 145 κτείναντος ἀνθρωπον οὐχ ὄσιον. ἐὰν δὲ ὁ τοῦ κτήνους κύριος ἄγριον εἰδῶς καὶ ἀτίθασον μῆτε καταδήσῃ μῆτε κατακλείσας φυλάττῃ, τύχη δὲ καὶ παρ' ἐτέρων πεπυσμένος ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι χειρόηθες, ἄφετον ἐάσας ἐκνέμεσθαι ὡσπερ αἷτιος ὑπόδικος ἔστω· καὶ τὸ μὲν ἀναπείραν αὐτίκα θνησκέτω, ὁ δὲ κύριος προσαναιρείσθω ἢ λύτρα καὶ σῶστρα κατατιθέσθω, τὸ δὲ δικαστήριον ὃ τι χρὴ παθεῖν ἢ ἀποτίσαι διαγνώσεται. εἰ μέντοι δούλος ὁ ἀναιρεθεὶς εἶη, τὴν τιμὴν ἐπανορθούσθω τῷ δεσπότῃ.
- 146 ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ἀνθρωπον ἀλλὰ | κτήνος ἀναπείρῃ, τὸ
[324] τεθνηκὸς ὁ τοῦ κτείναντος λαβὼν δεσπότης τὸ ὅμοιον ἀποτισάτω, [διότι τὸ ἀνήμερον τοῦ ἰδίου

<sup>1</sup> ms. heading Κατὰ ζῶων ἀλόγων ἃ παραίτια γίνεταί θανάτου.

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 144-146 see Ex. xxi. 28-32 and 35, 36.

<sup>b</sup> The stoning is probably to avoid contact, cf. Ex. xix. 13, "no hand shall touch him but he shall surely be stoned or 566

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 143-146

the service which he receives from him when alive and loses his value as a piece of property, which may be possibly very considerable. When the slave has committed some act worthy of death his master should bring him before the judges and state the offence, thus leaving the decision of the penalty with the laws instead of keeping it in his own hands.

XXVI. <sup>a</sup>If a bull gores a man and kills him, it must 144 be stoned,<sup>b</sup> since it is not fit to be slaughtered as a sacrifice, and its flesh must not be eaten. Why is this? It is required by the law of holiness that the flesh of an animal that has killed a man should not be used as a foodstuff for men or to make their food more palatable. If the owner of the animal knowing 145 that it is savage and wild has not tied it up nor kept it shut up under guard,<sup>c</sup> or if he has had information from others that it is unmanageable, he must be held guilty as responsible for the death by allowing it to range at large. And while the aggressive animal is to be put to death at once, the owner must also forfeit his life or else redeem it by a ransom, what punishment he must suffer or what compensation he must pay being left to the decision of the court. If, however, it is a slave who is killed, he must make good his value to the owner and if it has gored not a man 146 but one of the live-stock, here too the owner of the beast which has caused its death must pay like for shot through" (with a dart). Philo seems to understand it that any animal killed in the ordinary way is suitable for sacrifice.

<sup>c</sup> So E.V. "hath not kept him in." The LXX has ἀφανίσθη αὐτόν = "removed" or "kept him out of the way." Heinemann notes that here Philo is nearer to the Hebrew than to the LXX. But this may be merely accidental. His interpretation of ἀφανίσθη is a very natural one.

PHILO

προαισθανόμενος οὐκ ἐφυλάξατο· κὰν αὐτὸ μέντοι τὸ θρέμμα ἀλλότριον ἀνέλη, πάλιν ὁμοιον ἀποτινέτω,]<sup>1</sup> χάριν εἰδὼς ἐπὶ τῷ μὴ πλείονα ζημίαν ὑπομένειν ἀρξας ἐπηρείας.

- 147 XXVII. <sup>2</sup> Ὅρυγματα γῆς εἰώθασι τινες εὖ μάλα βαθύνειν ἢ φλέβας πηγαζούσας ἀναστέλλοντες ἢ πρὸς ὑποδοχὴν ὀμβρίου ὕδατος, εἶθ' ὑπονόμους εὐρύναντες ἀφανεῖς, δέον τὰ στόμια ἢ περιοικοδομῆσαι ἢ περιπωμάσαι, κατὰ τινα δεινὴν ῥαθυμίαν ἢ φρενοβλάβειαν ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ τινῶν εἴασαν ἀγανῆ.
- 148 εἰάν οὖν τις τῶν ὁδῶ παριόντων μὴ προαισθόμενος κατὰ κενοῦ ἐπιβὰς ἐνεχθῆ καὶ τελευτήσῃ, ἐπιγραφέσθωσαν οἱ βουλόμενοι ὑπὲρ τοῦ τετελευτηκότος πρὸς τοὺς τὸ ὄρυγμα ποιησαμένους καὶ τιμάτω τὸ δικαστήριον ὅ τι χρὴ παθεῖν ἢ ἀποτίσαι. εἰάν δὲ θρέμμα κατενεχθὲν ἀποθάνῃ, τὴν ἀξίαν τιμὴν ὡς ζῶντος ἐπανορθούσθωσαν τῷ δεσπότῃ τὸ νεκρὸν
- 149 αὐτοὶ λαβόντες. ἀδελφὸν δὲ καὶ συγγενὲς ἀδίκημα δρῶσι τῷ λεχθέντι καὶ ὅσοι κατασκευάζοντες οἰκίας ἰσόπεδα καταλείπουσι τὰ τέγη, περιστεφανοῦν θωρακίοις δέον ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ τινα κατακρημνισθῆναι λαθόντα· φόνον γάρ, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, δρῶσι, <sup>1</sup> The words in brackets only appear in two mss. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> ms. heading Περὶ ὄρυγματων.

---

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxi. 36, "pay bull for bull." Philo, I think, rightly interprets this to pay compensation enough to buy another bull (or whatever the animal killed is), not as Goodenough, to hand over his own (and vicious) bull to the other. The words expunged by Cohn (see note 1), "because having foreknowledge of the savageness of his own animal he has not taken precautions; and if it kills the beast of another, he must pay the like as compensation," are absurdly super-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 146-149

like,<sup>a</sup> taking the dead animal for his own, and be thankful that as the original cause of the wanton mischief he does not suffer a greater loss.<sup>b</sup>

XXVII. <sup>c</sup> It is a common practice with some people 147 to dig deep holes in the ground either when they are opening veins of spring water or making receptacles for the rain water. Then after widening the tunnels out of sight, instead of walling the mouths in or covering them up with a lid as they should, through some fatal carelessness or mental aberration they leave them gaping as a death-trap. If, then, some person walking 148 along does not notice them in time but steps on a void and falls down and is killed, anyone who wishes may bring an indictment on behalf of the dead man against the makers of the pit, and the court must assess what punishment they must suffer or what compensation they must pay. But if anyone of the cattle falls down and is killed, they must make good to the owners the value of the animal as if it were alive and keep the dead body for themselves.<sup>d</sup> Of the 149 same family as the above is the offence committed by those who in building their houses leave their roofs flat instead of ringing them in with parapets to prevent anyone being precipitated unawares over the edge. Indeed they are to the best of their ability fluous. Cohn (Hermes, 1908, p. 206) also considers that the Greek has faults of which Philo would not have been guilty.

<sup>b</sup> Philo passes over the case (v. 36) where the bull has not been known to be vicious, when the two owners divide the loss between them.

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 147-148 see Ex. xxi. 33, 34, which, however, legislates for cases where death is thus caused to an animal, not to a man. See App. p. 638.

<sup>d</sup> Deut. xxii. 8, where, though no penalty is prescribed, it is implied that the omission will constitute bloodguiltiness (לxxx ποιήσεις φόνον). See App. pp. 638-639.

PHILO

κἂν μηδεὶς ὑποσυρεῖς ἀποθάνῃ, τό γε ἐπ' αὐτοὺς ἦκον μέρος. κολαζέσθωσαν οὖν ἐν ἴσῳ τοῖς ἀχανῆ τὰ στόμια τῶν ὀρυγμάτων καταλείπουσι.

- 150 XXVIII. Λύτρα παρὰ ἀνδροφόνου, ὃν δέον τεθνᾶναι, διαγορευεῖ ὁ νόμος μὴ ἐξεῖναι λαμβάνειν ἐπὶ μειώσει τῆς τιμωρίας ἢ ὑπαλλαγῆ φυγῆς ἀντὶ θανάτου· αἷματι γὰρ αἷμα καθαίρεται, τῷ τοῦ
- 151 κτείναντος τὸ τοῦ ἐπιβουλευθέντος. ἐπεὶ δ' ὄρον οὐκ ἔχουσιν οἱ πονηροὶ τὰς φύσεις τοῦ πλημμελεῖν, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ μεγαλοουργοῦσι προσυπερβάλλοντες καὶ τὰς κακίας ἐπιτείνουσι καὶ διαίρουσι πρὸς τὸ ἄμετρον καὶ ἀπερίγραφον, μυρίους μὲν θανάτους, εἴπερ οἶόν τε ἦν, ὥρυσεν ἂν κατ' αὐτῶν ὁ νομοθέτης· ἐπεὶ δὲ τοῦτ' οὐκ ἐνεδέχετο, τιμωρίαν ἄλλην προσδιατάττεται κελεύων τοὺς ἀνελόντας ἀνασκολοπίζεσθαι.
- 152 καὶ τοῦτο προστάξας ἀνατρέχει πάλιν ἐπὶ τὴν αὐτοῦ φιλανθρωπίαν, ἡμερούμενος πρὸς τοὺς ἀνήμερα εἰργασμένους, καὶ φησι· μὴ ἐπιδυέτω ὁ ἥλιος ἀνεσκολοπισμένοις, ἀλλ' ἐπικρυπτέσθωσαν γῆ πρὸ δύσεως καθαιρεθέντες. ἦν γὰρ ἀναγκαῖον τοὺς ἅπασιν τοῖς μέρεσι τοῦ κόσμου πολεμίους μετρωρίσαντας εἰς τοῦμφανὲς ἐπιδείξασθαι μὲν αὐτοὺς murderers, even if no one is killed by the force of the fall. They must receive the same penalty as those who leave the mouths of their pits wide open.

<sup>a</sup> Num. xxxv. 31, 32. In the second of these verses, where the E.V. has "ye shall take no ransom for him that is fled to his city of refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land until the death of the priest," the LXX has οὐ λήψεσθε λύτρα τοῦ φυγεῖν εἰς πόλιν κτλ., which might easily be wrongly taken to mean "ye shall not accept a ransom so that he shall fly." Philo's phrase in "substitute banishment for death" suggests that he did take it so, meaning presumably that the voluntary homicide might purchase a leave to use the city of refuge.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 149-152

XXVIII. <sup>a</sup>The law forbids the acceptance of 150 ransom-money from a murderer deserving of death, in order to mitigate his punishment or substitute banishment for death, for blood is purged with blood,<sup>b</sup> the blood of the wilfully murdered with the blood of the slayer. Since there are no bounds to the in- 151 iquities of evil natures, and they are ever committing a superabundance of enormities and extending and exalting their vices beyond all measure and all limit, the lawgiver would, if he could, have sentenced them to die times beyond number. But since this was impossible he ordained another penalty as an addition, and ordered the manslayers to be crucified.<sup>c</sup> Yet 152 after giving this injunction he hastened to revert to his natural humanity and shews mercy to those whose deeds were merciless when he says "Let not the sun go down upon the crucified but let them be buried in the earth before sundown."<sup>d</sup> For while it was necessary that the enemies of every part of the universe should after punishment be set on high and

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. v. 33 "the land shall not be purged from the blood shed upon it but by the blood of him that shed it."

<sup>c</sup> Or simply "hanged up." But in the other two places where Philo uses the word, De Post. 61 and De Som. ii. 213, it is definitely coupled with nailing, and he probably understood the κρεμάσθητε ἐπὶ ξύλου of the LXX to mean "affix to something wooden," as also did Paul in Gal. iii. 13. Probably he understood that it is only the corpse of the malefactor which is so affixed, though he does not make it absolutely clear.

<sup>d</sup> Deut. xxi. 22, 23. Philo treats the text very freely. It does not enjoin the "hanging," but merely that if it is done, the body shall be buried the same day. Nor is it specified that it is a punishment for murderers in particular.

PHILO

[325] ἡλίῳ καὶ οὐρανῷ καὶ ἀέρι καὶ ὕδατι καὶ γῆ | κολασθέντας, πάλιν δὲ εἰς τὸν νεκρῶν χώρον ὑποσῦραί τε καὶ καταχῶσαι, ὅπως μὴ τὰ ὑπὲρ γῆν μαιίνωσι.

- 153 XXIX. Παγκάλως μέντοι κἀκέينو διατέτακται, πατέρας ὑπὲρ υἱῶν μὴ ἀποθνήσκειν μηδ' υἱοὺς ὑπὲρ γονέων, ἀλλ' ἕκαστον τῶν ἄξια θανάτου δεδρακότων αὐτὸν ἰδία μόνον ἀναιρεῖσθαι, διὰ τοὺς ἢ βίαν τοῦ δικαίου προτιμῶντας ἢ πάνυ φιλο-154 στόργους. οὗτοι μὲν γὰρ διὰ περιττὴν καὶ ὑπερ-βάλλουσαν εὐνοίαν ἐθελήσουσι πολλάκις ἄσμενοι προαποθνήσκειν, αὐτοὺς ἐπιδιδόντες ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐνόχων οἱ ἀνυπαίτιοι, μέγα κέρδος νομίζοντες τὸ μὴ ἐπιδεῖν κολαζομένους ἢ τοὺς γεννήσαντας υἱοὶ ἢ τοὺς παῖδας γονεῖς, ὡς ἀβίωτον καὶ παντὸς ἀργαλεώτερον θανάτου τὸν αὖθις χρόνον βιωσό-155 μενοι. πρὸς οὓς λεκτέον· “ ἡ εὐνοία ὑμῶν οὐκ ἔχει καιρὸν, τὰ δ' ὅσα μὴ ἐν καιρῷ ψέγεται δεόντως, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰ καίρια ἐπαινεῖται. χρὴ μέντοι φιλεῖν τοὺς ἄξια φιλίας δρῶντας, πονηρὸς δ' οὐδεὶς πρὸς ἀλήθειαν φίλος. συγγενεῖς δὲ καὶ ἐν συγγενεσί φίλους καλουμένους ἠλλοτριώσαν αἱ μοχθηρίαι πλημμελούντας· συγγένεια γὰρ οἰκειοτέρα τῆς πρὸς αἵματος ἢ πρὸς δικαιοσύνην καὶ πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν ὁμολογία, ἣν ἐκλιπών τις οὐκ ἐν ὀθνείοις καὶ ξένοις μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν ἀσπόνδοις ἐχθροῖς 156 ἀναγράφεται. τί οὖν κατεψευσμένον ὄνομα εὐνοίας ὃ τι χρηστὸν καὶ φιλόανθρωπὸν ἐστὶν ὑποδύεσθε, τ'ἀληθῆ μαλακίαν καὶ ἀνανδρίαν παρακαλυπτόμενοι;
 ἢ οὐκ ἀνανδροὶ τὰς φύσεις, παρ' οἷς οἴκτου λο-

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxiv. 16.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 152-156

exhibited to the sun and heaven and air and water and earth, it was equally necessary that they should be thrust down into the place of the dead and there entombed, that nothing above the earth might be polluted by them.

XXIX. Another excellent ordinance is that fathers 153 should not die for their sons nor sons for their parents, but each person who has committed deeds worthy of death should suffer it alone and in his own person.<sup>a</sup> This order has in view those who either set violence before justice or are strongly influenced by family affection. These last in their excessive and over- 154 whelming devotion will often be willing and glad to sacrifice their guiltless selves for the guilty and die in their stead. They count it a great gain to be spared from seeing, parents their children and sons their parents, undergoing a punishment which they feel will make their after-life intolerable and more painful than any death. To these we should answer 155 "your devotion is mistimed and the mistimed deserves censure just as the rightly timed deserves praise. It is right indeed to shew friendship to those whose actions are worthy of friendship, but no evil-doer is a true friend. Those whom we call our kinsfolk or within the circle of kinsmen our friends are turned into aliens by their misconduct when they go astray ; for agreement to practise justice and every virtue makes a closer kinship than that of blood, and he who abandons this enters his name in the list not only of strangers and foreigners but of mortal enemies. Why, 156 then, under the false name of devotion do you assume to be all that is kind and humane and cloak the realities, your weakness and unmanliness? For unmanly is the nature you shew in letting compassion γισμὸς ἡττᾶται; καὶ ταῦθ' ἵνα διπλοῦν ἀδίκημα δράσητε, τοὺς μὲν ὑπαιτίους ῥυόμενοι τῆς τιμωρίας, αὐτοὺς δ' ἐπὶ μηδενὶ μεμφθέντας τὸ παράπαν οἴομενοι δεῖν ἀντ' ἐκείνων κολάζειν;''

PHILO

- 157 XXX. ἀλλ' οὗτοι μὲν ὑποτίμησιν ἔχουσι τὸ μηδὲν<sup>1</sup> θηρᾶσθαι ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ καὶ τὸ λίαν πρὸς τοὺς ἐγγυτάτω γένους φιλόστοργον, ὑπὲρ ὧν τῆς 158 σωτηρίας ἀποθνήσκειν ἄσμενοι διανοοῦνται. τοὺς δὲ ὠμοθύμους καὶ τὴν φύσιν θηριώδεις τίς οὐκ ἂν προβάλοιτο τῶν οὐ λέγω μετρίων ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν μὴ σφόδρα ἀτιθάσων τὴν ψυχὴν, οἱ ἢ λάθρα τεχνάζουσι ἢ ἐπιθαρροῦσι φανερώς ἑτέροις ἀνθ' ἑτέρων τὰς μεγίστας ἐπανατείνεσθαι συμφοράς, φιλίαν ἢ συγγένειαν ἢ κοινωνίαν ἢ τι ὁμοιότροπον ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ τῶν οὐδὲν ἡδικηκότων προφασιζόμενοι; καὶ ταῦτα δρῶσιν ἔστιν ὅτε μηδὲν πεπονθότες δεινόν, ἔνεκα δὲ πλεονεξίας ἢ ἀρπαγῆς.
 159 πρῶην τις ἐκλογεὺς φόρων ταχθεὶς παρ' ἡμῖν, ἐπειδὴ τινες τῶν δοξάντων ὀφείλουν διὰ πενίαν ἔφυγον δέει τιμωριῶν ἀνηκέστων, γύναια τούτων
 [326] | καὶ τέκνα καὶ γονεῖς καὶ τὴν ἄλλην γενεὰν ἀπαγαγὼν πρὸς βίαν, τύπτων καὶ προπηλακίζων καὶ πάσας αἰκίας αἰκιζόμενος, ἔν' ἢ τὸν φυγόντα μὴνύσωσιν ἢ τὰ ὑπὲρ ἐκείνου καταθῶσιν οὐδέτερον δυνάμενοι, τὸ μὲν ὅτι ἡγνόουν, τὸ δ' ὅτι οὐχ ἦττον τοῦ φυγόντος ἀπόρως εἶχον, οὐ πρότερον ἀνῆκεν,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μηδενός.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 156-159

overcome your reason, only to commit a double wrong in trying to deliver the guilty from chastisement and in thinking it right that you should be punished in their stead when no blame at all has been cast upon you.” XXX. Still these 157 can plead in their defence that they seek no profit and are moved by exceeding affection for their nearest of kin, to save whom they propose cheerfully to lay down their lives. But the other 158 kind, the cruel of heart and bestial of nature, would be spurned, I need not say by all respectable people, but by any who are not thoroughly uncivilized in soul. I mean those who either secretly and craftily or boldly and openly threaten to inflict the most grievous sufferings on one set of persons in substitution for another and seek the destruction of those who have done no wrong on the pretext of their friendship or kinship, or partnership, or some similar connexion, with the culprits. And they sometimes do this without having suffered any grievous harm but merely through covetousness and rapine. An 159 example of this was given a little time ago in our own district by a person who was appointed to serve as a collector of taxes. When some of his debtors whose default was clearly due to poverty took flight in fear of the fatal consequences of his vengeance, he carried off by force their womenfolk and children and parents and their other relatives and beat and subjected them to every kind of outrage and contumely in order to make them either tell him the whereabouts of the fugitive or discharge his debt themselves. As they could do neither the first for want of knowledge, nor the second because they were as penniless as the fugitive, he continued this treatment until while

PHILO

- ἢ βασάνοις καὶ στρέβλαις τὰ σώματα κατατείνων ἀποκτεῖναι κεκαινουργημέναις ἰδέαις θανάτου·
- 160 ἄμμου σπυρίδα πλήρη βρόχοις ἐκδησάμενος ἀνήρτα κατὰ τῶν αὐχένων, βαρύτατον ἄχθος, ἰστάς ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ κατὰ μέσσην ἀγοράν, ἕν' οἱ μὲν ἀθροαῖς τιμωρίαῖς, ἀνέμῳ καὶ ἡλίῳ καὶ τῇ ἀπὸ τῶν παριόντων αἰσχύνῃ καὶ τοῖς ἐκκρεμαμένοις ἄχθεσι, βιαζόμενοι χαλεπῶς ἀπαγορεύωσιν, οἱ δὲ θεώμενοι
- 161 τὰς τούτων τιμωρίας προαλγῶσιν· ὧν ἔνιοι τρανότερον τῆς διὰ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν τὴν διὰ τῆς ψυχῆς λαβόντες αἰσθησιν, ὡς ἐν τοῖς ἐτέρων σώμασιν αὐτοὶ κακούμενοι, τῷ βίῳ προαπετάξαντο ξίφεσιν ἢ φαρμάκοις ἢ ἀγχόναῖς, μεγάλην ὡς ἐν κακοπραγίαις νομίζοντες ἐπιτυχίαν τὴν ἄνευ βασάνων
- 162 τελευτήν· οἱ δὲ μὴ φθάσαντες ἑαυτοὺς διαχρήσασθαι καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς τῶν κλήρων ἐπιδικασίαις, κατὰ στοιχὸν ἤγοντο οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ γένους πρῶτοι καὶ μετ' αὐτοὺς δεύτεροι καὶ τρίτοι μέχρι τῶν ὑστάτων· καὶ ὅποτε μηδεὶς λοιπὸς εἶη τῶν συγγενῶν, διέβαινε τὸ κακὸν καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς γειτνιῶντας, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ ἐπὶ κώμας καὶ πόλεις, αἱ ταχέως ἔρημοι καὶ κεναὶ τῶν οἰκητόρων ἐγένοντο μετανισταμένων καὶ σκεδαννυμένων ἔνθα λήσεσθαι προσεδόκων.
- 163 ἄλλ' οὐδὲν ἴσως θαυμαστόν, εἰ φορολογίας ἔνεκα βάρβαροι τὰς φύσεις, ἡμέρου παιδείας ἄγευστοι, δεσποτικοῖς πειθαρχοῦντες ἐπιτάγμασι τοὺς ἐτησίους ἀναπράττουσι δασμούς, οὐ μόνον ἐκ τῶν οὐσιῶν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκ τῶν σωμαίων, ἄχρι καὶ ψυχῆς τοὺς κινδύνους ἐπιφέροντες ὑπὲρ ἐτέρων

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 159-164

wringing their bodies with racks and instruments of torture he finally dispatched them by newly-invented methods of execution. He filled a large 160 basket with sand and having hung this enormous weight by ropes round their necks set them in the middle of the market-place in the open air, in order that while they themselves sank under the cruel stress of the accumulated punishments, the wind, the sun, the shame of being seen by the passers-by and the weights suspended on them, the spectators of their punishments might suffer by anticipation. Some of 161 these, whose souls saw facts more vividly than did their eyes, feeling themselves maltreated in the bodies of others, hastened to take leave of their lives with the aid of sword or poison or halter, thinking that in their evil plight it was a great piece of luck to die without suffering torture. The others 162 who had not seized the opportunity to dispatch themselves were brought out in a row, as is done in the awarding of inheritances, first those who stood in the first degrees of kinship, after them the second, then the third and so on till the last. And when there were no kinsmen left, the maltreatment was passed on to their neighbours and sometimes even to villages and cities which quickly became desolate and stripped of their inhabitants who left their homes and dispersed to places where they expected to remain unobserved.

Yet perhaps it is not to be wondered at 163 if uncivilized persons who have never had a taste of humane culture, when they have to collect the revenue in obedience to imperious orders levy the annual tributes not only on property but on bodies, and even on the life when they bring their terrors to bear upon these substitutes for the proper debtors. Indeed in 164

PHILO

164 ἑτέροις. ἤδη δὲ καὶ οἱ τῶν δικαίων ὄροι καὶ κανόνες, αὐτοὶ οἱ νομοθέται, πρὸς δόξαν μᾶλλον ἢ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀπιδόντες, τῶν ἀδικωτάτων ὑπέμειναν γενέσθαι, κελεύσαντες τοῖς μὲν προδότηις τοὺς παῖδας συναναιρεῖσθαι, τοῖς δὲ τυράν- 165 *νοις τὰς ἐγγυτάτω πέντε οἰκίας. διὰ τί; φαίην ἂν εἰ μὲν γὰρ συνεξήμαρτον, καὶ συγκολαζέσθωσαν, εἰ δὲ μήτε κατεκοινωνήσαν μήτε ζηλωταὶ τῶν ὁμοίων ἐγένοντο μήτε ταῖς τῶν οἰκείων εὐτυχίαις ἐπαρθέντες ἐνθουσιάσθησαν, τίνος χάριν ἀναιρεθή-
 [327] σονται; ἢ δι' ἐν τούτῳ μόνον, ὅτι συγγενεῖς εἰσι; γένους γὰρ ἢ | παρανομημάτων αἱ τιμωρίαι;
 166 *χρηστῶν ἴσως ὑμεῖς, ὧ σεμνοὶ νομοθέται, τῶν οἰκείων ἐλάχετε. μοχθηροὶ δ' εἶπερ ἐγένοντο, δοκεῖτέ μοι μηδ' ἂν εἰς νοῦν ποτε βαλέσθαι τὰς τοιαύτας προστάξεις, ἀλλὰ καὶ γράφοντας ἑτέρους δυσχερᾶναι, διὰ τὴν τοῦ μηδὲν ἀνήκεστον παθεῖν προφυλακὴν * * *<sup>1</sup> τὸν ἐν ἀσφαλεῖ βίῳ διάγοντα μετὰ τῶν κινδυνευόντων σκοπεῖν καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἴσαις κακοπραγίαις ἐξετάζεσθαι. τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἔχει δέος, ὃ φυλαττόμενός τις οὐδ' ἂν ἕτερον περιῖδοι, τὸ δ'

<sup>1</sup> The text here is very difficult. I have not altered the form printed by Cohn, who, as also Mangey, supposed a lacuna after προφυλακὴν, but I doubt whether the error lies here. Something like τὸν διάγοντα ἐν ἀσφαλεῖ βίῳ is required as subject to παθεῖν, for the legislator is not supposed to be guarding against his own ruin, but that of his relations. If σκοπεῖν is omitted, or some other infinitive = ἀλῶναι dependent on κινδυνευόντων substituted, and μη inserted before ἐξετάζεσθαι, the sentence, though very awkward, will be translatable. In that case ἐξετάζεσθαι is co-ordinate with παθεῖν and the sense as given in the translation. Heinemann, accepting the lacuna, suggested filling it by δεινὸν γὰρ, i.e. "it would be terrible to see the safe man in such a plight," but this, I think, would require ἐξεταζόμενον.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 164-166

the past the legislators themselves, who are the landmarks and standards of justice, have not shrunk from acting as such<sup>a</sup> to the greatest injustice. With an eye to men's opinions rather than to truth they have ordained that the fate of traitors and tyrants should be shared by the children in the first case and by the next five families in the second.<sup>b</sup> Why, one might ask? If they were companions in 165 error let them also be companions in punishment, but if they had no association with the others, never followed the same objects, never let elation at the success of their kinsmen tempt them to a life of ease and pleasure, why should they be put to death? Is their relationship the one sole reason? Then is it birth or lawless actions which deserve punishment? Probably you, most reverend 166 lawgivers, had worthy people for relations. If they had been bad, I do not think the idea of such enactments would have entered your minds. Indeed you would have been indignant if others had proposed them, for you would have taken precautions that the man who lives in safety should not suffer ruin with those who run into danger, nor be set on a level with them in misfortune.<sup>c</sup> Of the two situations<sup>d</sup> one involves a danger which you would guard against and not allow another to incur: the other has nothing to

<sup>a</sup> τῶν ἀδικωτάτων depends on ὄροι καὶ κανόνες understood.

<sup>b</sup> Heinemann impossibly translates "die fünf nächsten Verwandten ihres Hauses." For the law see App. pp. 639-640.

<sup>c</sup> The translation is based, as stated in note 1, on the conjecture that σκοπεῖν is to be omitted. Though the idea of the passage is fantastic, the general meaning seems clear, however uncertain the details of the text.

<sup>d</sup> I understand τὸ μὲν "as having bad," τὸ δέ "as having good" relations.

PHILO

- ἔστιν ἄφοβον, ὑφ' οὗ πολλάκις ἀνεπίσθησάν τινες ἀλογοῖν ἀνθρώπων ἀνυπαιτίων ἀσφαλείας.
- 167 Ταῦτ' οὖν ἐκλογισάμενος ὁ ἡμέτερος νομοθέτης καὶ τὰ παρὰ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἁμαρτήματα συνιδῶν ὡς φθοροποιὰ τῆς ἀρίστης πολιτείας ἀπεστράφη καὶ διεμίσησε [καὶ] τοὺς χρωμένους εἴτε ῥαθυμίαις εἴτε ἀπανθρωπίαις καὶ κακίαις καὶ οὐδέποτε τινα τῶν συμβεβιωκότων ἐξέδωκεν ἐπὶ τιμωρία προσθήκην ποιησάμενος αὐτὸν ἀδικημάτων ἐτέρων.
- 168 διόπερ ἄντικρυς ἀπέειπεν υἱοὺς ἀντὶ γονέων ἢ γονεῖς ἀντὶ υἱῶν ἀναιρεῖσθαι, δικαιοῦσας ὧν τὰ ἁμαρτήματα τούτων εἶναι καὶ τὰς τιμωρίας, εἴτε ζημίας χρημάτων εἴτε καὶ πληγὰς καὶ βιαιοτέρας ὕβρεις εἴτε τραύματα καὶ πηρώσεις καὶ ἀτιμίας καὶ φυγὰς καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα τῶν ἐπὶ δίκαις· ἐνὸς γὰρ τοῦ μὴ ἕτερον ἀνθ' ἐτέρου κτείνειν μνησθεῖς καὶ τὰ ἡσυχασθέντα προσπεριέλαβεν.
- 169 XXXI. <sup>1</sup> Ἀγοραὶ καὶ βουλευτήρια καὶ δικαστήρια καὶ θίασοι καὶ σύλλογοι πολυανθρώπων ὁμίλων καὶ ὁ ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ βίος διὰ λόγων καὶ πράξεων κατὰ πολέμους καὶ κατ' εἰρήνην ἀνδράσιν ἐφαρμόζουσι, θηλείαις δὲ οἰκουρία καὶ ἡ ἔνδον μονή, παρθένοις μὲν εἴσω κλισιάδων τὴν μέσαυλον ὄρον πεποιημέναις, τελείαις δὲ ἤδη γυναιξὶ τὴν αὐλειον.

<sup>1</sup> ms. heading Περὶ τοῦ μὴ ἀναισχυνητεῖν γυναῖκας.

---

<sup>a</sup> At this point Philo, having hitherto discussed actions which lead, or are intended to lead, to the loss of human life, turns to the question of assaults which do not necessarily have, nor are intended to have, that result. That these should be included under his seventh commandment is perfectly rational, and indeed he has stated this in De Dec. 170. They may fear and a sense of security often persuades people to neglect insuring the safety of the innocent.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 166-170

So then our legislator took these things into con- 167 sideration and observing the errors current among other nations regarded them with aversion as ruinous to the ideal commonwealth; persons whose conduct shewed any kind of sloth or inhumanity or vice he detested and would not ever surrender anyone whose life had been passed in their company to be punished with them and thus made an appendix to the crimes of others. He therefore expressly forbade that sons 168 should be slain instead of fathers or fathers instead of sons. Thereby also he gave it as his judgement that persons who had sinned should be the persons who were punished, whether the punishment consisted of monetary fines or stripes and injurious treatment of a still more violent kind, or wounds and maiming and disfranchisement and exile or any other kind of sentence. For in the single statement that one man should not be killed instead of another he included also the cases which he left unmentioned.

XXXI. <sup>a</sup> Market-places and council-halls and law- 169 courts and gatherings and meetings where a large number of people are assembled, and open-air life with full scope for discussion and action—all these are suitable to men both in war and peace. The women are best suited to the indoor life which never strays from the house, within which the middle door is taken by the maidens as their boundary, and the outer door by those who have reached full womanhood. Organ- 170 involve other matters. Thus the law discussed in the next twelve sections, though it gives rise to a disquisition on female modesty, is primarily directed against an assault, just as the “eye for eye” of § 184 is preceded by the discussion of equal punishment in §§ 181 f.

PHILO

- 170 διττὸν γὰρ πόλεων εἶδος, μειζόνων καὶ βραχυτέρων· αἱ μὲν οὖν μείζους ἄστη καλοῦνται, οἰκίαι δ' αἱ βραχύτεραι. τὴν δ' ἑκατέρων προστασίαν διειλήχασιν ἄνδρες μὲν τῶν μειζόνων, ἧς ὄνομα πολιτεία, γυναῖκες δὲ τῶν βραχυτέρων, ἧς ὄνομα οἰκονομία.
- 171 μηδὲν οὖν ἔξω τῶν κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν πολυπραγμονεῖτω γυνὴ ζητοῦσα μοναυλίαν μηδ' οἰανομὰς κατὰ τὰς ὁδοὺς ἐν ὄψεσιν ἀνδρῶν ἐτέρων ἐξεταζέσθω, πλὴν εἰς ἱερὸν ὅποτε δέοι βαδίζειν, φροντίδα ποιουμένη καὶ τότε μὴ πληθυσσοῦσης ἀγορᾶς, ἀλλ' ἐπανεληλυθότων οἴκαδε τῶν πλείστων, ἐλευθέρας τρόπον καὶ τῷ ὄντι ἀστῆς ἐν ἡρεμίᾳ
- [328] θυσίας | ἐπιτελοῦσα καὶ εὐχὰς εἰς ἀποτροπὴν
- 172 κακῶν καὶ μετουσίαν ἀγαθῶν. τὸ δὲ λοιδορομένων ἢ συμπλεκομένων ἀνδρῶν ἐπεκθεῖν τολμᾶν κατὰ πρόφασιν συμμαχίας ἢ βοηθείας γυναῖκας ἐπίληπτον καὶ οὐ μετρίως ἀναίσχυντον, ἃς οὐδ' ἐν πολέμοις καὶ στρατείαις καὶ τοῖς ὑπὲρ πάσης τῆς πατρίδος κινδύνοις ἐδικαίωσεν ὁ νόμος ἐξετάζεσθαι, τὸ πρέπον ἰδῶν, ὅπερ ἀκίνητον αἰεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ φυλάττειν διενεόθη, νομίσας αὐτὸ τοῦτ' εἶναι καθ' αὐτὸ νίκης καὶ ἐλευθερίας καὶ πάσης
- 173 ἄμεινον εὐτυχίας. εἰ μὲντοι καὶ πυθομένη τις ὑβρίζεισθαι τὸν ἄνδρα, πόθω τῷ πρὸς ἐκείνον ἠττηθεῖσα φιλανδρίας, ὑπὸ τοῦ παραστάντος πάθους ἐξορμησαί βιασθῆ, μὴ πλέον τῆς φύσεως ἀρρε-

<sup>a</sup> There was of course no Jewish temple in Alexandria. Philo may mean the synagogue, but surely no sacrifice could be offered there. It seems to me more probable that he is giving advice to the female population in general and does not feel any necessity to speak disrespectfully of their religious observances. But see App. p. 640.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "a citizeness," carrying with it something of the idea

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 170-173

ized communities are of two sorts, the greater which we call cities and the smaller which we call households. Both of these have their governors; the government of the greater is assigned to men under the name of statesmanship, that of the lesser, known as household management, to women. A woman, 171 then, should not be a busybody, meddling with matters outside her household concerns, but should seek a life of seclusion. She should not shew herself off like a vagrant in the streets before the eyes of other men, except when she has to go to the temple,<sup>a</sup> and even then she should take pains to go, not when the market is full, but when most people have gone home, and so like a free-born lady<sup>b</sup> worthy of the name, with everything quiet around her, make her oblations and offer her prayers to avert the evil and gain the good. The audacity of women who when men are exchanging angry words or blows hasten to join in, under the pretext of assisting their husbands in the fray, is reprehensible and shameless in a high degree. 172 And so in wars and campaigns and emergencies which threaten the whole country they are not allowed to take their place according to the judgement of the law, having in view the fitness of things, which it was resolved to keep unshaken always and everywhere and considered to be in itself more valuable than victory or liberty or success of any kind. If indeed 173 a woman learning that her husband is being outraged is overcome by the wifely feeling inspired by her love for him and forced by the stress of the emotion to hasten to his assistance, she must not unsex herself by a boldness beyond what nature of ἀσρέϊος. Cf. ἀσραί τε καὶ ἀσρέϊαι, De Mig. 99, also De Cong. 63.

PHILO

νούσθω θρασυνομένη, μενέτω δὲ καὶ ἐν οἷς βοηθεῖ γυνή· πάνδεινον γάρ, εἰ βουλομένη τις ὑπεξελεῖσθαι τὸν ἄνδρα ὕβρεως ὑβρισθήσεται πρὸς ἑαυτῆς κατάπλεων ἀποφαινούσης τὸν ἴδιον βίον αἰσχύνης καὶ μεγάλων ὀνειδῶν τῶν ἐπ' ἀνιάτῳ θρασύτητι.
 174 λουδορήσεται γάρ γυνή κατ' ἀγορὰν ῥῆμά τέ τι τῶν ἀπηγορευμένων φθέγγεται, ἐτέρου δὲ κακ-ηγοροῦντος οὐκ ἀποδραμεῖται τὰ ὦτα ἐπιφράξασα; νυνὶ δὲ προβαίνουσί τινες, ὡς μὴ μόνον ὑπὸ γλωσσαλγίας ἐν ἀνδρῶν ὄχλῳ γυναῖκες<sup>1</sup> κακηγορεῖν καὶ προπηλακίζειν,<sup>2</sup> ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς χεῖρας ἐπιφέρειν τὰς ὑφάσμασι καὶ ταλασίαις ἀλλ' οὐ πληγαῖς καὶ ὕβρεσι καθάπερ παγκρατιαστῶν καὶ πυκτῶν ἐν-175 ασκουμένας. καὶ τὰ μὲν ἄλλα [οἰστά καὶ] φέρειν ἂν τις δύναιτο· χαλεπὸν δ' ἐκεῖνο, εἴ τις γυνή τοσοῦτον καταθρασύνοιτο, ὡς διαδράξασθαι τῶν τοῦ διαφερομένου γεννητικῶν· μὴ γάρ, παρόσον ἀνδρὶ βοηθοῦσα δοκεῖ τοῦτο πράττειν, ἀφείσθω, τῆς δ' ἄγαν θρασύτητος ἐπεχέσθω τίνουσα δίκην, ὑφ' ἧς αὐτὴ μὲν τὰ ὅμοια ἐξαμαρτάνειν ἐθέλουσα αὐθις οὐκ ἂν δύναιτο, τῶν δ' ἄλλων ὄσαι προπετέστεραι φόβῳ μετριάσουσιν· ἔστω δ' ἡ δίκη χειρὸς ἀποκοπὴ τῆς ἀψαμένης ὧν οὐ θέμις.

<sup>1</sup> Cohn brackets γυναῖκες, or would transfer it to after προβαίνουσι. It seems to me in its antithetical position very idiomatic. Mangey's correction to γυναῖκας is, I think, inferior Greek.

<sup>2</sup> In the mss. καὶ προπηλακίζειν is placed after ἐπιφέρειν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 173-176

permits but limit herself to the ways in which a woman can help. For it would be an awful catastrophe if any woman in her wish to rescue her husband from outrage should outrage herself by befouling her own life with the disgrace and heavy reproaches which boldness carried to an extreme entails. What, is a 174 woman to wrangle in the market-place and utter some or other of the words which decency forbids? Should she not when she hears bad language stop her ears and run away? As it is, some of them go to such a length that, not only do we hear amid a crowd of men a woman's bitter tongue venting abuse and contumelious words, but see her hands also used to assault—hands which were trained to weave and spin and not to inflict blows and injuries like pancratiasts and boxers.

And while all else might be 175 tolerable, it is a shocking thing, if a woman is so lost to a sense of modesty, as to catch hold of the genital parts of her opponent.<sup>a</sup> The fact that she does so with the evident intention of helping her husband must not absolve her.<sup>b</sup> To restrain her over-boldness she must pay a penalty which will incapacitate herself, if she wishes to repeat the offence, and frighten the more reckless members of her sex into proper behaviour. And the penalty shall be this—that the hand shall be cut off which has touched what decency forbids it to touch. The managers of gymnastic 176 approval to this law, and if he realizes that it is open to the same objections as he made to a similar enactment in ii. 244, he does not say so. Still one may perhaps see some hesitation. The phrase ἔστω δ' ἡ δίκη may not mean more than that the law says so. In § 178 of the literal explanation he merely says that is what is commonly given, not that it is true, and his preference for the allegorical is not disguised.

<sup>b</sup> So Deuteronomy, "Thine eye shall have no pity."

PHILO

- 176 ἄξιον ἐπαινεῖν καὶ τοὺς τῶν γυμνικῶν ἀγῶνων ἀθλοθέτας, οἱ τῆς θεᾶς ἀνεῖρξαν γυναικας, ἵνα μὴ γυμνουμένοις ἀνδράσι παρατυγχάνουσαι τὸ δόκιμον αἰδοῦς νόμισμα παρακόπτωσιν ἀλογοῦσαι φύσεως θεσμῶν, οὓς ὤρισεν ἑκατέρω τμήματι τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν. οὐδὲ γὰρ ἄνδρας, ἀποτιθεμένων ἐσθῆτας γυναικῶν, ἐμπρεπὲς παρατυγχάνειν, ἀλλ' ἑκατέρους τὰς τῶν ἐτέρων ὄψεις ἐκτρέπεσθαι γυμνουμένων
- 177 τοῖς τῆς φύσεως βουλήμασιν ἐπομένους. εἶθ' ὧν ἢ ὄψις ἐπίληπτος, οὐ πολὺ μᾶλλον αἱ χεῖρες ὑπαίτιοι; ὀφθαλμοὶ μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἃ μὴ βουλόμεθα πολλάκις ὄραν ἀπελευθεριάζοντες ἀποβιάζονται, χεῖρες δ' ἐν τῇ τῶν ὑπηκόων τάξει τεταγμένοι |
- [329] μερῶν πειθαρχοῦσαι τοῖς ἡμετέροις ἐπιτάγμασιν ὑπηρετοῦσιν.
- 178 XXXII. Ἦδε μὲν αἰτία ἧ<sup>1</sup> παρὰ πολλοῖς εἶωθε λέγεσθαι· ἐτέραν δὲ ἤκουσα θεσπεσίων ἀνδρῶν τὰ πλείεστα τῶν ἐν τοῖς νόμοις ὑπολαμβανόντων εἶναι σύμβολα φανερὰ ἀφανῶν καὶ ῥητὰ ἀρρήτων. ἦν δὲ τοιάδε· ψυχῆς, ὥσπερ ἐν ταῖς συγγενείαις, ἡ μὲν ἐστὶν ἄρρην καὶ πρὸς ἀνδρῶν, ἡ δὲ θήλεια καὶ πρὸς γυναικῶν· ἄρρην μὲν ἡ μόνῳ θεῷ προσκληροῦσα ἑαυτὴν ὡς πατρὶ καὶ ποιητῇ τῶν ὅλων καὶ πάντων αἰτίῳ, θήλεια δὲ ἡ ἐκκρεμαμένη τῶν ἐν γενέσει καὶ φθορᾷ καὶ ἀποτείνουσα καθάπερ χεῖρα τὴν δύναμιν αὐτῆς, ἵνα τυφλῶς τῶν ἐπιτυχόντων ἐφάπτηται, γένεσιν δεξιουμένη τὴν τροπαῖς ἀμυθῆτοις χρωμένην καὶ μεταβολαῖς, δέον τὴν ἀμετάβλητον καὶ μακαρίαν καὶ τρισευδαίμονα θείαν

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps omit ἡ with one ms.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 640.

<sup>b</sup> The text is allegorized in substantially the same way in

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 176-178

competitions also deserve praise for debarring women from the spectacle,<sup>a</sup> in order that they may not be present, when men are stripping themselves naked, nor debase the sterling coin of modesty, by disregarding the statutes of nature which she has laid down for each section of our race. For men too cannot with propriety be present when women are taking off their clothes. Each sex should turn away from seeing the nakedness of the other and so comply with what nature has willed. Surely, then, if it is 177 reprehensible for them to use their sight, their hands are far more guilty. For the eyes often take liberties and compel us to see what we do not wish to see, but the hands are ranked among the parts which we keep in subjection, and render obedient service to our orders.

XXXII. This is the explanation commonly and 178 widely stated, but I have heard another from highly gifted men who think that most of the contents of the law-book are outward symbols of hidden truths, expressing in words what has been left unsaid. This explanation was as follows.<sup>b</sup> There is in the soul a male and female element just as there is in families, the male corresponding to the men, the female to the women. The male soul assigns itself to God alone as the Father and Maker of the Universe and the Cause of all things. The female clings to all that is born and perishes ; it stretches out its faculties like a hand to catch blindly at what comes in its way, and gives the clasp of friendship to the world of created things with all its numberless changes and transmutations, instead of to the divine order, the immutable, the

De Som. ii. 68, 69, though the point of the "female soul" is not there brought out.

- 179 φύσιν. εικότως οὖν τὴν ἐφαψαμένην χεῖρα τῶν διδύμων ἀποκόπτειν διείρηται συμβολικῶς, οὐχ ὅπως ἀκρωτηριάζεται τὸ σῶμα στερόμενον ἀναγκαιοτάτου μέρους, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ τῆς ψυχῆς πάντας τοὺς ἀθέους ἐκτέμνειν λογισμοὺς ἐπιβάθρα χρωμένους ἅπασιν ὧν γένεσις ἐστὶ· διδυμοὶ γὰρ σύμβολον σπορᾶς καὶ γενέσεως. ἐπόμενος δ' ἀκολουθία φύσεως κἀκείνο λέξω, ὅτι μονὰς μὲν ἐστὶν εἰκῶν αἰτίου πρώτου, δυὰς δὲ παθητῆς καὶ διαιρετῆς ὕλης· ὅς ἂν οὖν δυάδα πρὸ μονάδος τιμήσῃ καὶ δεξιῶσθαι, μὴ ἀγνοεῖτω <τὴν> ὕλην ἀποδεχόμενος μᾶλλον ἢ θεόν. ἥς χάριν αἰτίας ἐδικαίωσεν ὁ νόμος ταύτην τὴν ἐπιβολὴν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀποκόπτειν οἷα χεῖρα· μείζον γὰρ οὐκ ἐστὶν ἀσέβημα ἢ τῷ παθητῷ τὴν τοῦ δρώντος ἀνατιθέναι δύναμιν.
- 181 XXXIII. Μέμφαιτ' ἂν τις δεόντως τοὺς ἀνόμοια τοῖς ἀδικήμασι τάττοντας ἐπιτίμια κατὰ τῶν εἰργασμένων, ζημίας χρημάτων ἐπ' αἰκίαις ἢ ἐπὶ τραύμασι καὶ πηρώσεσιν ἀτιμίας ἢ ἐπ' ἀνδροφονίαις ἐκουσίους ἐλάσεις ὑπερορίους καὶ τὰς εἰς αἰεὶ φυγὰς ἢ δεσμοὺς ἐπὶ κλοπαῖς· τὸ γὰρ ἀνώμαλον καὶ ἄνισον ἐχθρὸν πολιτείας ζηλούσης τὴν ἀλήθειαν
- 182 ἰσότητος δὲ ὑψηγητῆς ὁ ἡμέτερος νόμος τὰ ὅμοια κελεύων τοὺς ἀμαρτάνοντας ὑπομένειν οἷς ἔδρασαν, ἐκ τῶν οὐσιῶν, ἐὰν περὶ τὰς οὐσίας ἀδικοπραγῶσι τῶν πλησίον, ἐκ τῶν σωμάτων, ἐὰν εἰς τὰ σώματα

<sup>a</sup> As noted on De Som. ii. διδυμοὶ is the LXX translation of the word translated "secrets" in E.V.

<sup>b</sup> Heinemann "in natürlichem Zusammenhang." I hardly think φύσεως can bear this meaning. I understand it of the higher truths of nature, which the allegorist (ὁ φυσικός) contemplates. See note on De Abr. 99, and the references there given.

blessed, the thrice happy. Naturally therefore we 179 are commanded in a symbol to cut off the hand which has taken hold of the "pair,"<sup>a</sup> not meaning that the body should be mutilated by the loss of a most essential member, but to bid us excise from the soul the godless thoughts which take for their basis all that comes into being through birth ; for the "pair" are a symbol of seed-sowing and birth. I will add 180 another thought, following where the study of nature leads me.<sup>b</sup> The monad is the image of the first cause, the dyad of matter passive and divisible. Therefore one who honours the dyad before the monad should not fail to know that he holds matter in higher esteem than God. It is for this reason that the law judged it right to cut off this tendency of the soul as if it were a hand, for there is no greater impiety than to ascribe to the passive element the power of the active principle.

XXXIII. The legislators deserve censure who 181 prescribe for malefactors punishments which do not resemble the crime, such as monetary fines for assaults, disfranchisement for wounding or maiming another, expulsion from the country and perpetual banishment for wilful murder or imprisonment for theft.<sup>c</sup> For inequality and unevenness is repugnant to the commonwealth which pursues truth. Our 182 law exhorts us to equality<sup>d</sup> when it ordains that the penalties inflicted on offenders should correspond to their actions, that their property should suffer if the wrongdoing affected their neighbour's property, and their bodies if the offence was a bodily injury,

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 640.

<sup>d</sup> For the ius talionis see Ex. xxi. 24, Lev. xxiv. 19-21, Deut. xix. 21, and cf. Matthew v. 38.

PHILO

- ἐξαμαρτάνωσι κατὰ μέρη καὶ μέλη καὶ τὰς [330] αἰσθήσεις· κὰν ἄχρι | μέντοι τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπιβουλεύσωσιν, εἰς ψυχὴν τιμωρεῖσθαι κελεύει· ὑπομένειν γὰρ ἀνθ' ἑτέρων ἕτερα μηδεμίαν ἔχοντα κοινωνίαν ἀλλὰ τοῖς εἴδεσιν ἀπηρητημένα κατα-183 λυόντων νόμους ἐστίν, οὐ βεβαιούντων. ταυτὶ δέ φαμεν τῶν ἄλλων [οὐχ] ὁμοίως ἐχόντων· οὐ γὰρ ταυτὸν ἀλλοτρίῳ καὶ πατρὶ πληγὰς ἐμφορῆσαι οὐδὲ ἄρχοντα ἢ ἰδιώτην κακῶς εἰπεῖν οὐδὲ ἐργά-σασθαί τι τῶν μὴ ἐφειμένων ἐν βεβήλοις ἢ ἱεροῖς χωρίοις οὐδ' ἐν ἐορταῖς καὶ πανηγύρεσι καὶ δημοτελέσι θυσίαις καὶ πάλιν ἐν ἡμέραις αἷς μηδὲν πρόσεστι τῶν εἰς ἐκεχειρίαν ἢ καὶ συνόλως ἀπο-φράσι, καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα τοιοῦτότροπα διερευνητέον εἰς συναύξησιν ἢ μείωσιν κολάσεως.
- 184 Πάλιν ἕάν τις, φησίν, ὀφθαλμὸν οἰκέτου ἢ θεραπαίνης ἐκκόψη, ἐλευθέρους ἀφιέτω. διὰ τί; ὥσπερ τὴν τοῦ σώματος ἡγεμονίαν ἢ φύσιν ἀνῆψε κεφαλῇ χαρισαμένη καὶ τόπον οἰκειότατον ὡς βασιλεῖ τὴν ἄκραν—ἄνω γὰρ αὐτὴν ἐπ' ἀρχὴν παραπέμψασα ἰδρύσατο καθάπερ ἀνδριάντι βάσιν ὑποθεῖσα τὴν ἀπ' αὐχένος ἄχρι ποδῶν ἅπασαν ἀρμονίαν—, οὕτως καὶ τῶν αἰσθήσεων τὸ κράτος ἀνέδωκεν ὀφθαλμοῖς· ὑπεράνω γοῦν καὶ τούτοις ὡς ἄρχουσιν ἀπένειμεν οἴκησιν, βουλευθεῖσα μὴ

---

<sup>a</sup> The translation assumes that the subject of ὑπομένειν is to be understood out of καταλυόντων κτλ. But perhaps in view of the ὑπομένειν above it may be better, though looser, to take it "that a man should suffer."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 182-184

the penalty being determined according to the limb, part or sense affected, while if his malice extended to taking another's life his own life should be the forfeit. For to tolerate a system <sup>a</sup> in which the crime and the punishment do not correspond, have no common ground and belong to different categories, is to subvert rather than uphold legality. In saying this I 183 assume that the other conditions are the same, for to strike a stranger is not the same as to strike a father nor the abuse of a ruler the same as abuse of an ordinary citizen. Unlawful actions differ according as they are committed in a profane or sacred place, or at festivals and solemn assemblies and public sacrifices as contrasted with days which have no holiday associations or are even quite inauspicious.<sup>b</sup> And all other similar facts must be carefully considered with a view to making the punishment greater or less.

Again he says that if anyone knocks out the eye of 184 a manservant or maidservant he must set him or her at liberty.<sup>c</sup> Why is this? Just as nature conferred the sovereignty of the body on the head when she granted it also possession of the citadel as the most suitable position for its kingly rank, conducted it thither to take command and established it on high with the whole framework from neck to foot set below it, like the pedestal under the statue, so too she has given the lordship of the senses to the eyes. Thus to them too as rulers she has assigned a dwelling right above the others in her wish to give them

<sup>b</sup> i.e. (apparently) for religious observances. This seems somewhat different from the usual meaning of the phrase which signifies days on which secular business was forbidden — “dies nefasti.” See App. p. 641.

<sup>c</sup> Ex. xxi. 26.

PHILO

- μόνον τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀλλὰ καὶ χωρίῳ περισημοτάτῳ καὶ περιφανεστάτῳ τούτους γεῤῥαι.
- 185 XXXIV. τὰς μὲν οὖν χρείας καὶ ὠφελείας, ἃς παρέχουσι τῷ γένει ἡμῶν ὀφθαλμοί, μακρὸν ἂν εἶη καταριθμείσθαι· μίαν δὲ τὴν ἀρίστην λεκτέον. φιλοσοφίαν ὤμβρησε μὲν ὁ οὐρανός, ἐχώρησε δὲ ὁ ἀνθρώπινος νοῦς, ἐξενάγησε δὲ ὄψις· πρώτη γὰρ αὕτη κατείδε τὰς λεωφόρους ἐπ' αἰθέρος<sup>1</sup> ὁδοὺς.
- 186 ἀγαθῶν δέ, ὅσα πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀγαθὰ, πηγὴ φιλοσοφία· ἧς ὁ μὲν ἀρυτόμενος εἰς κτῆσιν καὶ χρήσιν ἀρετῆς ἐπαινετός, ὁ δ' ἔνεκα πανουργίας καὶ τοῦ κατασοφίσασθαι<sup>2</sup> τινα ψεκτός· ἔοικε γὰρ ὁ μὲν ἀνδρὶ συμποτικῶ καὶ ἑαυτὸν καὶ τοὺς συνεστιωμένους πάντας εὐφραίνοντι, ὁ δὲ τῷ τὸν ἄκρατον εἰς παροιμίαν καὶ ὕβριν ἑαυτοῦ τε καὶ τῶν
- 187 πλησίον ἐμφορουμένων. ὅτῳ δ' οὖν<sup>3</sup> τρόπῳ φιλο-σοφίαν ἐξενάγησεν ὄψις, ἤδη λεκτέον. ἀναβλέψασα εἰς αἰθέρα κατεῖδεν ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ πλάνητας καὶ ἀπλανεῖς ἀστέρας, τὴν ἱεροπρεπεστάτην οὐρανοῦ στρατιάν, κόσμον ἐν κόσμῳ, εἰτ' ἀνατολὰς καὶ δύσεις καὶ χορείας ἐμμελεῖς καὶ τεταγμέναις
- 188 χρόνων περιόδοις συνόδους, ἐκλείψεις, ἐπιλάμψεις, εἰτ' αὐξήσεις καὶ μειώσεις σελήνης, ἡλίου κινήσεις τὰς κατὰ πλάτος, ἀπὸ μὲν τῶν νοτίων ἐπὶ τὰ βόρεια προσιόντος, ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν βορείων ἐξανα-
[331] χωροῦντος | πρὸς τὰ νότια, εἰς καιρῶν τῶν ἐτησίων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπ' αἰθέρος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. καταψηφίσασθαι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. γοῦν.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 641.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 184-188

amongst other privileges the most conspicuous and distinguished situation.<sup>a</sup> XXXIV. Now as 185 for the services and benefits which the eyes render to the human race, it would take a long time to enumerate them, but one, the best, must be mentioned. Philosophy was showered down by heaven and received by the human mind, but the guide which brought the two together was sight, for sight was the first to discern the high roads which lead to the upper air.<sup>b</sup> Now philosophy is the fountain 186 of good things, all that are truly good, and he who draws from that spring deserves praise, if he does so for the acquisition and practice of virtue, but blame, if it is for knavish ends and to outwit another with sophistry. For in the first case he resembles the convivial man who makes himself and all his fellow-guests merry, in the second the drinker who swills himself with strong wine, only to play the sot and insult himself and his neighbours. Now let us 187 describe the way in which sight acted as guide to philosophy; sight looked up to the ethereal region and beheld the sun and moon and the fixed and wandering stars, the host of heaven in all its sacred majesty, a world within a world; then their risings and settings, their ordered rhythmic marchings, their conjunctions as the appointed times recur, their eclipses, their reappearances; then the waxing and 188 waning of the moon, the courses of the sun from side to side<sup>c</sup> as it passes from the south to the north and returns from the north to the south, thus producing

<sup>b</sup> For this often repeated thought, originally, as has been noted before, derived from Timaëus 47 A, cf. i. 339 above, De Abr. 164 and De Op. 54 f. and notes.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "along a broad space" (?), Heinemann "ausgedehnten," Mangey "transversos (motus)."

PHILO

γένεσιν, οἷς<sup>1</sup> τὰ πάντα τελεσφορεῖται, καὶ πρὸς τούτοις μυρία ἄλλα θαυμάσια· καὶ περιαθρήσασα κατὰ τε γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλατταν καὶ ἀέρα τάδε 189 πάντα τῷ νῶ μετὰ σπουδῆς ἐπεδείξατο. ὁ δ' ἄπερ οὐχ οἷός τ' ἦν δι' αὐτοῦ καταλαβεῖν διὰ τῆς ὀράσεως ἰδὼν οὐκ ἐπὶ τῶν ὀραθέντων αὐτὸ μόνον ἔστη, ἀλλ' ἄτε φιλομαθῆς καὶ φιλόκαλος, ἀγάμενος τὴν θέαν, λογισμὸν εἰκότα ἐλάμβανεν, ὅτι ταῦτα οὐκ ἀπαυτοματισθέντα συνέστη φοραῖς ἀλόγοις, ἀλλὰ διανοία θεοῦ, ὃν πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν ὀνομάζειν θέμις, καὶ ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἄπειρα, πεπέρασται δὲ ἐνὸς κόσμου περιγραφῇ, πόλεως τρόπον τῇ τῶν ἀπλανῶν ἐξωτάτῳ σφαίρᾳ περιλαμβανόμενα, καὶ ὡς ὁ γεννήσας πατὴρ νόμῳ φύσεως ἐπιμελεῖται τοῦ γενομένου, προνοούμενος καὶ τοῦ ὄλου καὶ 190 τῶν μερῶν. εἶτα προσεπεσκέψατο, τίς οὐσία τοῦ ὄρατοῦ καὶ εἰ πάντων ἢ αὐτῆ τῶν κατὰ τὸν κόσμον ἢ ἐτέρων ἐτέρα καὶ ἐκ τίνων ἕκαστα ἐτελέσθη, καὶ τὰς αἰτίας δι' ἃς ἐγένετο καὶ δυνάμεις αἷς συν-191 ἔχεται καὶ πότερον αὐταὶ σώματα ἢ ἀσώματοι. ἢ γὰρ περὶ τούτων καὶ τῶν παραπλησίων ἔρευνα τί ἂν ἄλλο ἢ φιλοσοφία προσαγορευόιτο; τί δὲ τῷ σκοπούμενῳ ταῦτα θεῖτο ἂν τις οἰκειότερον ὄνομα ἢ φιλόσοφον; τὸ γὰρ περὶ θεοῦ σκοπεῖν καὶ κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ κοινῶς ζῶων τε καὶ φυτῶν καὶ περὶ νοητῶν παραδειγμάτων καὶ πάλιν αἰσθητῶν ἀποτελεσμάτων καὶ τῆς καθ' ἕκαστον τῶν γεγονότων ἀρετῆς τε καὶ κακίας φιλομαθῆ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὡς.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 188-191

the yearly seasons by which all things are brought to their consummation. Numberless other marvels did it behold, and after it had gazed around over earth and sea and the lower air, it made speed to shew all these things to the mind. The mind, having 189 discerned through the faculty of sight what of itself it was not able to apprehend, did not simply stop short at what it saw, but, drawn by its love of knowledge and beauty and charmed by the marvellous spectacle, came to the reasonable conclusion that all these were not brought together automatically by unreasoning forces, but by the mind of God Who is rightly called their Father and Maker ; also that they are not unlimited but are bounded by the ambit of a single universe, walled in like a city by the outermost sphere of the fixed stars ; also that the Father Who begat them according to the law of nature takes thought for His offspring, His providence watching over both the whole and the parts. Then it went on to inquire 190 what is the substance of the world which we see and whether its constituents are all the same in substance or do some differ from others ; what are the elements of which each particular part is composed, what are the causes which brought them into being, and what are the forces or properties which hold them together and are these forces corporeal or incorporeal. We 191 may well ask what title we can give to research into these matters but philosophy and what more fitting name than philosopher to their investigator. For to make a study of God and the Universe embracing all that is therein, both animals and plants, and of the conceptual archetypes and also the works which they produce for sense to perceive, and of the good and evil qualities in every created thing—shews a dis-

PHILO

- καὶ φιλοθεάμονα καὶ τῷ ὄντι φιλόσοφον διάθεσιν 192 ἐμφαίνει. μέγιστον μὲν δὴ τοῦτο τῷ βίῳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀγαθὸν ὄψις παρέχεται· δοκεῖ δέ μοι ταύτης ἡξιῶσθαι τῆς προνομίας, ἐπειδὴ τῶν ἄλλων αἰσθήσεων συγγενεστέρα ψυχῇ καθ-ἔστηκεν· ἅπασαι μὲν γὰρ τὴν πρὸς διάνοιαν ἔχουσιν οἰκειότητα, αὕτη δὲ καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις τὴν ἐγγυτάτω γένους πρώτην καὶ ἀνωτάτω 193 τάξιν εἶληχε. τεκμηριώσαίτο δ' ἂν τις ἐκ πολλῶν· τίς γὰρ οὐκ οἶδεν, ὅτι χαιρόντων μὲν ὀφθαλμοὶ γανοῦνται καὶ μειδιῶσι, λυπουμένων δὲ συννοίας γέμουσι καὶ κατηφείας; εἰ δὲ πλεονάζοι καὶ πιέζοι καὶ ἀναθλίβοι τὸ ἄχθος, ἐκδακρύνουσι καὶ κρατούσης μὲν ὀργῆς οἰδοῦσι καὶ ὕφαιμον καὶ πυρωπὸν ἐμβλέπουσιν, ἴλεων δὲ καὶ εὐμένες, εἰ 194 χαλάσαι ὁ θυμὸς. καὶ ἐν μὲν τῷ λογιζέσθαι καὶ σκοπεῖν αἱ κόραι πεπήγασι τρόπον τινὰ συν-εννοοῦσαι, τῶν δὲ εὐηθεστέρων ὑπ' ἡλιθιότητος [332] πλάζεται καὶ ἡ ὄρασις οὐκ ἡρεμοῦσα· | καὶ συνόλως τοῖς τῆς ψυχῆς πάθει συμπάσχουσιν ὀφθαλμοὶ καὶ ταῖς ἀμυθήτοις τροπαῖς συμμεταβάλλειν πε-φύκασιν διὰ τὴν οἰκειότητα· δοκεῖ γὰρ μοι μηδὲν οὕτως ὁ θεὸς ἐμφανὲς ἀφανοῦς ἀπεργάσασθαι μίμημα ὡς ὄψιν λογισμοῦ.
- 195 XXXV. Ἐάν τις οὖν εἰς τὴν ἀρίστην καὶ ἡγεμονικωτάτην τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὄρασιν ἢ ἐπιβεβου-λευκῶς τῷ καὶ καταφανῇ μὲν ἐλευθέρου ὀφθαλμὸν ἐκκόψας, τὰ αὐτὰ ἀντιπασχέτω, δούλου δὲ μὴ· οὐχ ὅτι συγγνώμης ἐστὶν ἄξιος ἢ ἔλαττον ἀδικεῖ,

<sup>a</sup> i.e. "to the mind," regarded as the head of the family.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Abr. 151 f.

<sup>c</sup> Philo reads Ex. xxi. 26 as limiting the previous verse,

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 191-195

position which loves to learn, loves to contemplate and is truly wisdom-loving or philosophical.

This is the greatest boon which sight bestowed on 192 human life, and I think that this pre-eminence has been awarded to it because it is more closely akin to the soul than the other senses. They are all of the same family as the mind, but, just as it is with families, the place which is closest in birth <sup>a</sup> and first and highest, is held by sight. We may find many 193 proofs of this, for who does not know that when we rejoice the eyes are bright and smiling, when we are sad they are full of anxiety and dejection, and, if the burden is magnified and presses and crushes, they break out into tears ; when anger prevails they swell and their look is bloodshot and fiery ; when the temper dies down it is gentle and kindly ; when we 194 are reflecting or inquiring the pupils are set and seem to share our thoughts, while in persons of little sense their silliness makes their vision roaming and restless. In general the emotions of the soul are shared by the eyes, and as it passes through its numberless phases they change with it, a natural consequence of their affinity.<sup>b</sup> Indeed it seems to me that nowhere else in God's creations is the inward and invisible so well represented by the outward and visible as reason is by sight.

XXXV. If, then, anyone has maliciously injured 195 another in the best and lordliest of his senses, sight, and is proved to have struck out his eye, he must in his turn suffer the same, if the other is a free man,<sup>c</sup> but not if he is a slave. Not that the offender deserves pardon or is less in the wrong, but because “eye for eye, tooth for tooth . . . but (δέ) if he strikes out the eye of a slave,” etc.

- ἀλλ' ὅτι πονηροτέρω χρήσαιτ' ἂν ὁ πεπονθὼς ἀντιπηρωθέντι τῷ δεσπότη, μνησικακήσουσι<sup>1</sup> τῆς συμφορᾶς τὸν αἰεὶ χρόνον καὶ ἀμυννομένῳ καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ὡς ἐχθρὸν ἄσπονον ἀφορήτοις καὶ βαρυτέροις τῆς δυνάμεως ἐπιτάγμασιν, οἷς 196 πιεζόμενος καὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἀπορρήξει. προϋνόησεν οὖν ὁ νόμος τοῦ μήτε τὸν ἐπιβεβουλευκότα ἀθῶον ἀφεθῆναι μήτε τὸν πεπηρωμένον προσαδικηθῆναι κελύσας, εἴ τις ἐκκόψειε θεράποντος ὀφθαλμόν, 197 ἀνενδοιάστως ἐλευθερίας μεταδιδόναι.<sup>2</sup> οὕτως γὰρ ὁ μὲν ἀνθ' ὧν ἔδρασε διττὴν ἐνδέχεται<sup>3</sup> ζημίαν, ἅμα τῇ τιμῇ καὶ τὴν ὑπηρεσίαν ἀφαιρεθεῖς, καὶ τρίτον ἐκατέρου τῶν λεχθέντων χαλεπώτερον, ἀναγκαζόμενος ἐν τοῖς μεγίστοις εὐεργετεῖν ἐχθρόν, ὃν ἴσως ἠὔχετο κακοῦν αἰεὶ δύνασθαι, ὁ δὲ ἀνθ' ὧν ὑπέμεινε παρηγορίαν ἕξει διπλῆν, οὐ μόνον ἐλευθερωθεῖς ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀργαλέον καὶ ὠμόν δεσπότην ἐκφυγών.
- 198 XXXVI. Προστάττει δὲ κἂν εἴ τις ὀδόντα θεράποντος ἐκκόψειεν, ἐλευθερίαν χαρίζεσθαι τῷ θεράποντι. διὰ τί; ὅτι ζωὴ μὲν τίμιον, ὄργανα δὲ ζωῆς ἐτεκτήνατο ἢ φύσις ὀδόντας, οἷς τὴν τροφήν οἰκονομεῖσθαι συμβέβηκεν. ὀδόντες δὲ οἱ μὲν εἰσι τομίαι τῷ τέμνειν σιτία καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ἐδώδιμα,<sup>4</sup> διὰ τοῦτο ταύτης τῆς προσηγορίας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μνησικακήσαντι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. μεταδιδότω or μεταδιδῶ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐνδείχεται or ἐνδέχεται et alia.

<sup>4</sup> The construction is somewhat difficult, as εἰσι τῷ τέμνειν = "are for the purpose of cutting" is hardly Greek. Heinemann and Cohn (doubtfully) suggest omitting διὰ τοῦτο with F. In this case it would be almost necessary to omit ταύτης also. If the text is kept, perhaps understand τροφήν οἰκο-νομοῦντες from the sentence before.

if the master is mutilated as a punishment the injured slave will find him worse than before. He will harbour a perpetual grudge for his misfortune and avenge himself on one whom he regards as a mortal enemy by setting him every day to tasks of an intolerable kind and beyond his powers to cope with, the oppressive weight of which will break his spirit also. The law, therefore, provided 196 on the one hand that a master should not go unpunished for his malicious assault and on the other that the servant should not suffer further wrong in addition to the loss of his eye. It effected this by enacting that if anyone struck out his servant's eye he should without hesitation grant him his liberty, for 197 in this way the master will incur a double penalty ; he will lose the value of the slave as well as his services, and a third affliction more severe than either of these two is that he will be forced to confer a benefit that touches his highest interest on an enemy whom he probably hoped to be able to maltreat indefinitely. The servant will receive a double solatium for his suffering ; he is not only set at liberty but has escaped from a harsh and cruel master.

XXXVI. A further command is that if anyone 198 strikes out a servant's tooth he must grant him his liberty.<sup>a</sup> Why is this ? Because life is precious and the means contrived by nature for the preservation of life are teeth by which the food is subjected to the processes necessary for dealing with it. Now the teeth are divided into the cutters and the grinders ; the former do their part by cutting or biting the bread-stuffs and all other comestibles, whence their appropriate name of cutters, the latter by their

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxi. 27.

PHILO

ἀξιωθέντες, οἱ δὲ μύλαι τῷ τὰ διατμηθέντα εἰς 199 μείονα λαιΐνιν δύνασθαι. παρ' ἣν αἰτίαν ὁ ποιητῆς καὶ πατήρ οὐδὲν εἰωθῶς δημιουργεῖν, ὁ μὴ πρὸς τινι τέτακται χρεία, τοὺς ὀδόντας οὐχ ὡσπερ τῶν ἄλλων μερῶν ἕκαστον κατὰ τὴν πρώτην γένεσιν εὐθύς εἰργάζετο, διανοηθεὶς ὅτι βρέφει μὲν γαλακτοτροφεῖσθαι μέλλοντι περιττὸν ἄχθος γενήσονται, μαστοῖς δὲ πηγάζουσιν, οἷς ἄρδεται ἡ τροφή, χαλεπὴ ζημία κατὰ τὴν ὄλκην τοῦ γάλακτος 200 ὀδαξωμένοις. τὸν ἐπιτήδειον οὖν καιρὸν προἰδόμενος—ἔστι δ' οὗτος, ἡνίκα τὸ βρέφος ἀπότιθον γίνεται—τὴν ἔκφυσιν τῶν ὀδόντων, ἣν ἔταμιεύσατο πρότερον, ἀπέφηεν * * *<sup>1</sup> ἤδη τῆς τε-λειοτέρας ἀνέχεσθαι τροφῆς ὀργάνων ὧν εἶπον δεομένης τὴν διὰ τοῦ γάλακτος ἀποστρεφόμενον.
 201 Ἐὰν οὖν τις εἴξας ἀλαζονείᾳ | θεράποντος ὀδόντα [333] ἐκκόψη τὸν ὑπηρέτην καὶ ὑποδιάκονον τῶν ἀναγκαιοτάτων, τροφῆς τε καὶ ζωῆς, ἐλευθερούτω τὸν ἀδικηθέντα, στερόμενος καὶ αὐτὸς τῆς ἐκ τοῦ πεπονθότος λατρείας τε καὶ ὑπηρεσίας. ἰσότιμον 202 οὖν, φήσει<sup>2</sup> τις, ὀδοὺς ὀφθαλμῶ; πρὸς ἃ γέγονεν ἑκάτερον, εἴπομι' ἄν, ἰσότιμον, πρὸς μὲν τὰ ὄρατὰ ὀφθαλμός, πρὸς δὲ τὰ ἐδώδιμα ὀδοὺς. εἰ δὲ καὶ συγκρίναί τις ἐθελήσει, σεμνότατον μὲν εὐρήσει τῶν ἐν σώματι μερῶν ὀφθαλμὸν ἅτε θεωρὸν ὄντα τοῦ σεμνοτάτου τῶν κατὰ τὸν κόσμον, οὐρανοῦ, χρήσιμον δὲ ὀδόντα ὡς ἂν τροφῆς, τοῦ χρησιμω-

<sup>1</sup> Something is wanted to complete the construction. Cohn inserts ὅτε δύνασθαι. I suggest ἐνόν (impersonal participle) as more easily lost after ἀπέφηεν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. φησί.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 198-202

capacity for reducing the bitten pieces into smaller particles. This is the reason why the 199 Maker and Father, Whose way is to frame nothing that does not serve some purpose, did not make the teeth straight away at birth like each of the other parts. He bore in mind that they would be a superfluous burden to the infant who would be fed on milk, and would also bring serious trouble to the breasts, the fountain through which the liquid sustenance flows, as they would be galled during the suction of the milk. He 200 looked forward, therefore, to the proper time, that is, to when the infant is weaned from the breast, and brought out that supplementary growth of teeth, which He hitherto kept in storage, only when the infant would refuse to take food in the form of milk and could bear the more mature kind which requires the instruments which I have mentioned.

If, then, anyone gives way to insolent presumption 201 and strikes out his servant's tooth which ministers obediently to his most essential needs, sustenance and survival, he must set at liberty the victim of his injustice and suffer himself the loss of the services and ministries of the injured party.<sup>a</sup> Is a tooth then, I shall be asked, of the same value as an eye? They 202 are both, I should reply, of the same value for the purposes for which they were made, the eye being made for what is visible, the tooth for what is edible. And if anyone cares to compare these, he will find that the eye is the noblest of the body's members because it contemplates the heaven which is the noblest part of the universe, while the tooth is useful as the operator <sup>a</sup> Thus the ius talionis is preserved, as both lose a servant.

PHILO

- τάτου πρὸς τὸ ζῆν, ἐργάτην· καὶ ὁ μὲν τὰς ὄψεις ἀποβαλὼν οὐ κεκώλυται βιοῦν, τῷ δὲ ἐκκοπέντι 203 τοὺς ὀδόντας ἐφεδρεύει θάνατος οἰκτιστος. εἰ δὴ τις ἐπιβουλεύει περὶ τὰ μέρη ταῦτα τοῖς οἰκέταις, μὴ ἀγνοεῖτω λιμὸν ἐν εὐθηνία καὶ εὐετηρία κατασκευάζων τούτοις χειροποίητον· τί γὰρ ὄφελος ἀφθονίαν μὲν εἶναι τροφῶν, τὰ δὲ πρὸς τὴν διοίκησιν αὐτῶν ὄργανα σεσυλησθαι καὶ ἀποβεβληκῆναι χαλεπῶν ἔνεκα καὶ ἀμειλίκτων καὶ ὠμοθύμων 204 δεσποτῶν; διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἐτέρωθι παρὰ χρεωστῶν ἀπαγορεύει δανεισταῖς μύλον ἢ ἐπιμύλιον ῥύσιον αἰτεῖν, ἐπειπὼν ὅτι ὁ τοῦτο δρῶν ψυχὴν ἐνεχυριάζει· ὁ γὰρ τὰ τοῦ ζῆν ὄργανα ἀφαιρούμενος ἐπ' ἀνδροφονίαν ἵεται, μέχρι καὶ ψυχῆς ἐπιβουλεύειν διανοηθεῖς.
- 205 Τοσαύτην δὲ πρόνοιαν ἐποίησατο τοῦ μηδένα παραίτιόν τινα γενέσθαι θανάτου, ὡς καὶ τοὺς προσαιψαμένους νεκροῦ σώματος, ὃ τελευταίην ἐνδέδεκται τὴν κατὰ φύσιν, οἷεται δεῖν μὴ εὐθύς<sup>1</sup> εἶναι καθαρούς, μέχρις ἂν περιρρανάμενοι καὶ ἀπολουσάμενοι καθαρθῶσιν. εἰς μέντοι τὸ ἱερόν οὐδὲ τοῖς σφόδρα καθαροῖς ἐφήκεν εἰσιέναι ἐντὸς ἡμερῶν

<sup>1</sup> Cohn, while retaining εὐθύς, adds excludendum videtur. See note c.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxiv. 6. See App. p. 641.

<sup>b</sup> Numbers xix. 11 ff. Philo here, in concluding the treatise, leaves the discussion of acts of violence and recurs to murder in the proper sense. The argument in the next three sections is exactly similar to that of § 63, viz. that if a thing when

of what is most useful for maintaining life, namely food. Also anyone who has lost his sight is not thereby prevented from living, but one who has had his teeth struck out has only a most miserable death awaiting him. So if anyone takes steps to injure his servants in this part of their bodies he must recognize that the effect of his act upon them is a famine artificially created in the midst of abundance and plenty. For what use have they for a generous supply of food if they have been robbed of the instruments needed for dealing effectively with it, lost to them through the actions of hard, cruel and merciless masters? And therefore elsewhere the lawgiver forbids creditors to demand that their debtors should give their mill or upper millstone as a surety, and he adds that anyone who does so takes the life to pledge.<sup>a</sup> For one who deprives another of the instruments needed to preserve existence is well on the way to murder, since his hostile intentions extend to attacking life itself.

<sup>b</sup> So careful was the lawgiver to guard against anyone helping to bring about the death of another that he considers that even those who have touched the corpse of one who has met a natural death must remain unclean<sup>c</sup> until they have been purified by aspersions and ablutions. Indeed he did not permit even the fully cleansed to enter the temple within caused naturally and innocently produces defilement, how much more defiling must it be if caused in a sinful way!

<sup>c</sup> If εὐθὺς is retained in its present position, it should mean they are not straight away (i.e. necessarily) clean, as might be expected since what they have done is natural and innocent. This is very strained. The sense to be expected is that they are ipso facto unclean, but this would be rather εὐθὺς μὴ. To omit the word would certainly simplify the sense.

PHILO

ἐπτά, τρίτη καὶ ἑβδόμη κελεύσας ἀφαγνίζεσθαι.
 206 ἔτι μέντοι καὶ τοῖς εἰσιούσιν εἰς οἰκίαν, ἐν ἣ τετελεύτηκέ τις, προστάττει μηδενὸς ἄπτεσθαι, μέχρις ἂν ἀπολούσωνται καὶ τὰς ἐσθῆτας αἷς ἀμπίσχοντο προσαποπλύναντες· σκευή δὲ καὶ ἔπιπλα καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ἔνδον εἶναι συμβέβηκε πάνθ' 207 ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν ἀκάθαρτα ἡγείται. ψυχὴ γὰρ ἀνθρώπου τίμιον, ἥς μετανισταμένης καὶ μετοικι-ζομένης τὰ ἀπολειφθησόμενα πάντα μαιίνεται στερόμενα θείας εἰκόνος, ἐπειδὴ θεοειδῆς ὁ ἀνθρώπινος νοῦς πρὸς ἀρχέτυπον ἰδέαν, τὸν ἀνω-208 τάτω λόγον, τυπωθεῖς. ἔστω δέ, φησίν, ἀκάθαρτα καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ὅσων ἂν ὁ ἀκάθαρτος προσάψῃται, μετουσία τοῦ μὴ καθαροῦ μαινώμενα. καθολικωτέραν δ' ἀπόφασιν ὁ χρησμὸς οὗτος ἔοικέ πως δηλοῦν, οὐκ ἐπὶ σώματος αὐτὸ μόνον ἰστά-μενος, ἀλλὰ ἦθη καὶ τρόπους προσδιερευνώμενος 209 ψυχῆς. ἀκάθαρτος γὰρ κυρίως ὁ ἄδικος καὶ
 [334] ἀσεβής, ὅτω μήτε τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων μήτε | τῶν θείων αἰδώς τις εἰσέρχεται, πάντα φύρων καὶ συγχεῶν διὰ τε τὰς ἀμετρίας τῶν παθῶν καὶ τὰς τῶν κακιῶν ὑπερβολάς, ὥστε ὧν ἂν ἐφάψῃται πραγμάτων πάντ' ἐστὶν ἐπίληπτα τῇ τοῦ δρῶντος

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo's account differs from Numbers in that he implies that, except to get admission to the temple, a purification at 604

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 206-209

seven days and ordered them to purge themselves on the third and seventh.<sup>a</sup> Further too, those who 206 enter a house in which anyone has died are ordered not to touch anything until they have bathed themselves and also washed the clothes which they were wearing.<sup>b</sup> And all the vessels and articles of furniture, and anything else that happens to be inside, practically everything is held by him to be unclean.<sup>c</sup> For a man's soul is a precious thing, and when it 207 departs to seek another home, all that will be left behind is defiled, deprived as it is of the divine image. For it is the mind of man which has the form of God, being shaped in conformity with the ideal archetype, the Word that is above all.

Everything else too, he says, that the unclean person 208 touches must be unclean, being defiled by its participation in the uncleanness.<sup>d</sup> This pronouncement may be thought to include a more far-reaching veto, not merely stopping short with the body but extending its inquiry to matters of temperament and characteristics of soul. For the unjust and impious 209 man is in the truest sense unclean. No thought of respect for things human or divine ever enters his mind. He puts everything into chaos and confusion, so inordinate are his passions and so prodigious his vices, and thus every deed to which he sets his hand is reprehensible, changing in conformity with the time is enough, and the man is then "fully cleansed." In Numbers everyone who touches the corpse is impure for seven days and requires the purging on the third and seventh. The exclusion from the temple only appears (vv. 13 and 20), in the words "whosoever . . . purifieth not himself defileth the tabernacle of the Lord."

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. v. 14: "washing the clothes," v. 19.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid. v. 15.

<sup>d</sup> Ibid. v. 22.

PHILO

συμμεταβάλλοντα μοχθηρία· καὶ γὰρ κατὰ τοῦναντίον αἱ πράξεις τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἐπαινεταί, βελ-τιούμεναι ταῖς τῶν ἐνεργούντων ἀρεταῖς, ἐπειδὴ πέφυκέ πως τὰ γινόμενα τοῖς δρῶσιν ἕξομοιοῦσθαι.

---

<sup>a</sup> These last two sections are not really germane to the sub-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, III. 209

the worthlessness of the doer. For conversely all the doings of the good are laudable, gaining merit through the virtues of the agents in accordance with the general law that the results of actions assimilate themselves to the actors.<sup>a</sup> ject. The point is introduced because of the spiritual lesson which can be drawn from it.

APPENDIX TO DE DECALOGO

§ 1. For knowledge loves to learn, etc. As stated in the footnote, the phrasing seems almost impossible. I can find no case where ἐπιστήμη bears a sense which could be coupled with φιλομαθής, or where διάνοια means an understanding which is above knowledge. The translators appear to be at a loss. Treitel has "wegen der auf den tieferen Sinn gerichteten Schriftforschung." But how can ἐπιστήμη = "Schriftforschung"? Mangey (perhaps translating the conjecture mentioned below) has "reconditae scientiae studio et curiosae." Yonge (probably translating Mangey) "natural love of more recondite and laborious study." The emendations mentioned are Mangey's δι' ὑπονοιῶν for πρὸς διάνοιαν, and Wendland's ἐπιστάσεως for ἐπιστήμης. If ἐπίστασις can = "intentio," this will give some sense, though it would be better if ὑπόνοιαν is accepted for διάνοιαν (ὑπόνοια sing. is used for "allegorizing" in Spec. Leg. ii. 257).

§ 21. The arithmetical, etc. This seems to be very loosely expressed. ἀναλογία does not carry with it the idea of a series like our "progression," but of an equality of ratio, and indeed it can only be properly (κυρίως) applied, as Nicomachus says, to the geometrical. It certainly cannot itself be said to exceed or be exceeded. Philo has stated it quite clearly in De Op. 108, in much the same words as are used in the translation. Possibly here also we should read ἢ ὁ μέσος ὄρος) ὑπερέχει, κτλ.

§ 30. The categories. Philo follows with little variation the two lists given by Aristotle in Topica, i. 9 and Categoriae 4 of the 10 categories. But he carries them away into a very different region from Aristotle's logical meaning of predicates or "classification of the manners in which assertions may be made of the subject." His reason for asserting that he has οὐσία, and his view of time and place (in Aristotle πότε and ποῦ) as the indispensables for all existence are quite foreign to Aristotle's thought, at any rate in drawing up this list.

PHILO

§ 39. (Text of ὅτε δὲ προσάπτων, etc.) Cohn deals with this passage in Hermes, 1903, pp. 502 f., but not very conclusively. The solution he would prefer is to omit ὅτε δὲ and to correct (with one ms.) ἰδίᾳ to ἰδίᾳ δ', a change which he bases largely on the improbability of such an hiatus as ἰδίᾳ ὡς. I do not feel competent to estimate the value of this last argument (see remarks on Spec. Leg. i. 90, App. p. 620). The omission of ὅτε δὲ has some support from one ms. (G), which has διαλέγεται ἐνὶ ἐκάστῳ προσάπτων, κτλ. Of the rest, one has ἐνὶ, ὅτε δὲ, the others an obvious corruption of this, ἐνίστε δὲ. No doubt with Cohn's changes the sentence is translatable. He, however, says that he cannot see the sense of τῶν ἐμπερομένων, which he justly remarks cannot mean, as Mangey takes it, "eorum qui adsunt." I think the sense given in the translation, which will also fit in with the form suggested by Cohn, does not present much difficulty. In the kind of oration which Philo has in mind definite instruction as to the steps to be taken (τὰ πρακτέα) would be only part of the contents.

§ 54. They call air Hera. This is first suggested by Plato, Cratylus 404 c (ἄηρ being an anagram of Ἥρα) and was adopted by the Stoics. See particularly Diog. Laert. vii. 147, where Hera is the name given to the divine power in virtue of its extension (διάτασις) to the air, as Athena, Poseidon, Hephaestus and Demeter represent its extension to aether, sea, fire and earth. For other references see Index to S. V. F. So also Philo, De Vit. Cont. 3, where the name is supposed to be derived παρὰ τὸ αἰρεσθαι καὶ μετεωρίζεσθαι εἰς τὸ ὕψος.

§ 56. Living on alternate days. Or perhaps as Philo understands it "living (and dying) alternately every day," which is what the interpretation of the story by the hemispheres requires. So, too, in the other place where he alludes to the story, De Som. i. 150, since the antithesis there is between sleeping and waking. The only other passage where I have found this interpretation is in Sext. Emp. Adv. math. ix. 37 τὰ γὰρ δύο ἡμισφαίρια τό τε ὑπὲρ γῆς καὶ τὸ ὑπὸ γῆν Διοσκούρου οἱ σοφοὶ τῶν τότε ἀνθρώπων ἔλεγον.

§ 77. (Egyptian animal worship.) See Herodotus ii. 65-74. These chapters lay stress chiefly on cats (αἰλουροὶ) and crocodiles, but ibises and snakes are mentioned also. Juv. xv. 1-7 mentions crocodiles, ibises, apes, dogs and fishes.

APPENDICES

On these lines Mayor has collected a number of illustrations, among them Philo, Legatio 139, where he speaks very briefly in the same sense as here. Neither Herodotus nor Juvenal mentions wolves and lions, and I see no other allusion to them in Mayor's quotations.

§ 88. ἐγὼ μὲν γε. This is one of the small matters in which an earlier knowledge of the Palimpsest would apparently have led Cohn to alter his reading. His mss. have μὲν, except M which has μὲν γὰρ, on the strength of which he printed μὲν γε. The Palimpsest has μὲν οὖν, which he considers preferable. Unwilling or unable to judge, I have retained μὲν γε with this warning.

§ 92. τὰ κενὰ τῶν. This emendation of μὲν αὐτῶν to κενὰ τῶν seems certain and will perhaps support my emendation of the same two words in De Mig. 164, where I have altered them to μελιττῶν.

§ 96. Once a month. The principal passages quoted in support of this are Herod. vi. 57, where he says that the Spartans made offerings to Apollo at every new moon and seventh day of the month, and Hes. Op. 770, where the seventh day is said to be sacred as Apollo's birthday. Also there are inscriptions in various places where ἑβδομαῖος and ἑβδομαῖον appear as epithets of Apollo or indicating feasts held in his honour. See references in L. & S. (revised).

Ibid. (σελήνην or θεόν.) Cohn writing in Hermes, 1903, p. 548, before the discovery of the Palimpsest, had declared for σελήνην. His explanation of the corruption to θεόν is that it arises from the scribes mistaking the astronomical symbol of the moon for Θ̄N̄ = θεόν. (This would be convincing if this symbol were as he describes it. On my present information it is rather C, while Θ = the sun.) Prima facie it does not seem impossible that in a country where the opening of the sacred and lunar month has to be distinguished from the civil the phrase "according to the goddess" might have been in such common use that Philo might employ it without much thought or scruple. See note on Spec. Leg. iii. 171. But the discovery that the Palimpsest actually has σελήνην certainly weights the evidence strongly in favour of it.

§ 106. προσάττεται for πρὸς τὰ πέντε, which may be presumed from Cohn's silence to be the reading of the Palimpsest as well as of the other mss, is adopted by him on the grounds that TTETAI might easily be corrupted to ΠENTE, and that the Armenian version gives a similar sense

PHILO

“ut videtur.” If this last is clearly established, the emendation may be accepted. Otherwise it is difficult to see why a word like προσάπτειν, which perpetually recurs in these treatises, should be corrupted. The reading of G, ἐνοῖ (“unites”) πρὸς τὰ ἕτερα πέντε καὶ συνάπτει τῇ δευτέρᾳ, looks, as he says, like an unsuccessful attempt to emend the passage. Perhaps we might consider as an alternative προσπεθέν τε, “last of the first pentad in which are the most sacred things and added to it,” i.e. “an appendage.” Philo often uses προσθήκη with a sense of inferiority, e.g. Spec. Leg. ii. 248, and it would fitly describe the relation of the fifth to the first four commandments.

§ 116. (Filial affection of storks.) The currency of this idea is best shewn by the existence of the verb ἀντιπελαργεῖν = “to return kindness.” Other mentions of it will be found in Aristotle, Hist. Anim. ix. 18, Aristophanes, Av. 1353 ff.; and the φρονιμώτατοι οἰωνοί of Sophocles, El. 1058, “who are careful to nourish those who gave them nurture,” are no doubt the same.

§ 120. Some bolder spirits. One such is Hierocles the Stoic quoted by Stobaeus (Meineke, iii. p. 96), οὗς (sc. γονεῖς) δευτέρους καὶ ἐπιγείους τινὰς θεοὺς οὐκ ἂν ἀμάροισι, ἐνεκά γε τῆς ἐγγύτητος, εἰ θέμις εἰπεῖν, καὶ θεῶν ἡμῖν τιμωτέρους. Heinemann quotes Dikaiogenes (Fr. 5 Nauck), θεὸς μέγιστος τοῖς φρονοῦσιν οἱ γονεῖς. The ordinary Stoic view is given by Diog. Laert. vii. 120, that parents, brothers and sisters are to be revered next to the gods.

§§ 142-146. This disquisition on the four passions is thoroughly Stoic in substance and much of its phraseology is found elsewhere. Thus any passion is a κίνησις ψυχῆς παρὰ φύσιν (S. V. F. iii. 389, and elsewhere). So, too, pleasure is ἐπαρσις ἄλογος (ibid. 391). A passage which closely resembles this is Cic. De Fin. ii. 13 (S. V. F. iii. 404) “(Voluptatem) Stoici . . . sic definiunt: sublacionem animi sine ratione, opinantis se magno bono frui.” πτοία, which Philo associates with fear, is a characteristic of all four; (λέγονσι) πᾶσαν πτοίαν πάθος εἶναι καὶ πᾶν πάθος πτοίαν (ibid. 378), while ἀγωνία is a subdivision of φόβος, defined by Diog. Laert. vii. 112 as φόβος ἀδήλου πράγματος (ibid. 407). Also ἐπιθυμία is often an ὄρεξις, though none of the definitions quoted otherwise agree closely with Philo’s. I have not found any parallels to his idea that desire differs from the others in being more voluntary.

For a shorter definition of the four see Mos. ii. 139.

APPENDICES

§ 147. (Text at end of section.) Cohn in his description of the Palimpsest has an interesting if not quite convincing theory about this. In place of ἀμαυροῦνται καὶ θροῦ the Palimpsest has in the main body of the text ὀμάδου τε καὶ θροῦ beginning the next sentence, while ἀμαυροῦνται is set in smaller writing on the margin. Cohn's view is that ὀμάδου τε is the original text, and was corrupted in one or more mss. to ἀμαυροῦνται, which was then set in others such as the Palimpsest as a marginal variant and finally ousted the real words. One may perhaps accept his theory about the corruption of ὀμάδου τε to ἀμαυροῦνται, which as he says is not indispensable to the construction, but his other argument that ὀμάδου τε is wanted to correspond to ὀφθαλμοί τε in the previous sentence seems questionable. "Both . . . and" are expressed by τε . . . καί, as well as by τε . . . τε.

§ 158. τὸ περὶ τῆς ἑβδομάδος. While there would be no great difficulty in this passage, where the virtues of the number are so prominent, in taking ἑβδομάς as = "the number seven," there can be no doubt that Philo does sometimes use it for the seventh day. See notes on Quis Rerum 170, where we have ἀπραξία ascribed to it, and Mos. i. 205, where οὐδὲν ἐφέεται δρᾶν ἐν αὐτῇ, i. e. on ἱερὰ ἑβδομάς. So, too, Jos. Contra Apion. ii. 282 τῆς ἑβδομάδος ἣν ἀργοῦμεν ἡμεῖς. This use is ignored in L. & S. (revised), which indeed has expunged the entry of older editions, "The seventh day, Eccl."

On the other hand, ἑβδόμη below appears to be used for ἑβδομάς, as also in Spec. Leg. ii. 40 τῆς ἐν ἀριθμοῖς ἑβδόμης, and there are other instances in earlier treatises, where clearly the number and not the seventh day is under consideration, e. g. De Op. 116, De Post. 64. I leave to experts to consider whether a confusion of the two words may have been produced by varying interpretations of ζ'.

§ 159. ἱερομηνία. Except in Mos. ii. 23, where he is apparently referring to pagan use, Philo consistently uses this word to denote the first of Tishri or Feast of Trumpets (New Year's day in the civil year). Whether this usage is in accordance with its regular meaning in classical Greek is not clear to me. The general opinion seems to be that there it indicates a period during which, as stated in the note on Mos. loc. cit., hostilities or legal proceedings are forbidden, not a particular day. See Dict. of Ant. and L. & S. (revised), where it is only given two meanings, "sacred month during which the great festivals were held and hostilities suspended," and (in the plural) "sacrifices offered during the sacred month." On the other hand Stephanus gives examples from Harpocration, Scholiasts, etc., which assert that it means a festal day, and that is what is suggested in Mos. loc. cit., where it is contrasted with the single day fast of the Jews.

PHILO

A scholiast on Pind. Nem. iii. 2, who says that ιερομηνία is an abbreviation κατὰ σύντημσιν of ιερονουμηνία "because the beginnings of months are sacred to Apollo," expresses, whatever his authority may be worth, the idea which had occurred to me in connexion with Spec. Leg. i. 180. I refer these points to the lexicographer. The entry in L. & S. is clearly inadequate.

APPENDIX TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, I

§ 2. (Circumcision in Egypt.) The original authority for this is Herodotus ii. 36. In itself it is not impossible that Philo, knowing little of the intimate practices of the Egyptians outside the Jewish and Hellenistic world, should take Herodotus for his authority. But in Quaest. in Gen. iii. 47, 48, where he gives the arguments for circumcision in much the same way as here, he adds that the Egyptians circumcised females as well as males and at the age of puberty, and neither of these did he find in Herodotus. The statement made here is supported by Diodorus i. 28, iii. 32. Josephus, Contra Apion. ii. 140 ff. says positively that the Egyptian priests were circumcised, but the fact that Apion, himself an Egyptian, appears to have ridiculed the Jews on this ground tells rather against it for the nation at large. See on the whole question Wendland in Archiv für Papyrusforschung ii. (1903) (referred to by Goodenough, p. 30).

§ 6. The spirit force in the heart. The doctrine and phraseology is Stoic. So "All the Stoics say that τὸ ἡγεμονικόν resides ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ καρδίᾳ ἢ ἐν τῷ περὶ τὴν καρδίαν πνεύματι," S. V. F. ii. 838. The ἡγεμονικόν itself is a πνεῦμα according to them, ibid. 96. For the question between the brain and the heart as the seat of the mind see §§ 213 f. below.

§ 25. "Blind" wealth. Philo in several places, e.g. ii. 23 below, De Abr. 25, contrasts the "seeing" with the "blind" riches, and in these passages he borrows the phrase from Plato, Laws 631 c πλοῦτος οὐ τυφλὸς ἀλλ' ὁξὺ βλέπων, though the thought is not quite the same, since with Plato the "seeing wealth" is wealth in the literal sense used wisely, with Philo wisdom or virtue itself. But here, where there is no such contrast and the stress is rather on the uncertainty of riches, τοῦ λεγομένου may refer rather to the fable, earlier than Plato, that Zeus made Plutus blind, so that he should distribute his gifts without regard to merit (see Aristophanes, Plutus).

PHILO

§ 27. Some assert . . . state of flux. Cf. e.g. Plato, Theaetetus 160 D κατὰ μὲν Ὅμηρον καὶ Ἡράκλειτον καὶ πᾶν τὸ τοιοῦτον φῶλον οἶον ρεύματα κινεῖσθαι τὰ πάντα, Cratylus 402 A λέγει πού Ἡράκλειτος ὅτι πάντα χωρεῖ καὶ οὐδὲν μένει, καὶ ποτάμου ῥῶῃ ἀπεικάζων τὰ πάντα λέγει ὡς δις ἐς τὸν αὐτὸν ποταμὸν οὐκ ἂν ἐμβαίης. Rather nearer to our passage is Aristot. Physica viii. 3, 253 b 9, φασὶ τινες (apparently the Heracleiteans) κινεῖσθαι τῶν ὄντων οὐ τὰ μὲν τὰ δ' οὐ, ἀλλὰ πάντα καὶ αἰεὶ, ἀλλὰ λανθάνει τὴν ἡμετέραν αἴσθησιν.

§ 28. θεοὺς . . ὥσπερ ἀπὸ μηχανῆς. The phrase seems to me to suggest primarily the use of the supernatural as a facile way of getting out of a difficulty and to carry with it the idea of artificiality rather than suddenness and unexpectedness. The fact that the "machine" was employed to bring the god hovering over the stage is incidental, though it served to enhance the impression of something artificial and slightly ludicrous. To take the examples given in Stephanus, this is the sense in Plato, Cratylus 425 D ὥσπερ οἱ τραγωδοποιοί, ἐπειδάν τι ἀπορώσω, ἐπὶ τὰς μηχανὰς καταφεύγουσι θεοὺς αἶροντες ("like the tragic poets who in any perplexity have their gods waiting in the air," Jowett), and in Aristotle, Poetics xv. 7. So in Plutarch, Them. 10 Themistocles employs oracles and divine signs ὥσπερ ἐν τραγωδίᾳ μηχανὴν ἄρας. In Demosthenes, p. 1026. I Τιμοκράτης μόνος ἀπὸ τοσοῦτων, ὥσπερ ἀπὸ μηχανῆς, μαρτυρεῖ, the thought seems to be that he assumes the rôle of a superior being. In Plato (?), Cleitophon 407 A the point is different, viz. that the gods in these appearances are apt to rebuke the follies of humanity. In our passage and in ii. 165 the main idea seems to be artificiality.

§§ 33 f. The argument from design has been given in much the same form in Leg. All. iii. 97-99. For other statements of it see S.V.F. ii. 1009-1020, particularly Cic. De Nat. Deorum, ii. 16-17, iii. 26. Cf. also Cic. Tusc. i. 68 (referred to by Heinemann), Pro Milone 83, 84 and Xen. Mem. i. 4.

§ 55. (Lynching of apostates.) Two questions arise here, (1) whether the lynching so strongly recommended here and almost as explicitly in § 316 is in accordance with Deut., (2) whether it was customary or practicable in Philo's time. As to (1), in Deut. xiii. 6-11, which I take to be more to the point than ibid. 12-17 (enjoining the destruction of an apostate city), which Heinemann cites, the E.V. merely says, "thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people." Philo would indeed find in the LXX, instead of "thou shalt surely kill him," "thou shalt surely report it" (ἀναγγέλλων ἀναγγελεῖς), which sounds more judicial. But in § 316 this is interpreted to mean that the report is to be sent round to summon the lovers of piety to assist in the execution. In Deut. xvii. 4-7 a careful inquiry is to be made when such a call is reported, and two or three witnesses are required. Heinemann thinks that Philo is not referring to these passages at all, but is merely extracting a general law from the case of Phinehas. I do not think this can be right, so far as Deut. xiii. is concerned, as in § 316 he formally expounds that passage. As for Deut. xvii., Philo if faced with it might reply that it does not suggest a formal trial, but that the self-constituted executioners before taking action must assure themselves that the charge is true, and that what he says here does not deny that.

APPENDICES

As to (2), Goodenough (pp. 36 ff.) argues that the Acts (e.g. Stephen's execution and the attempts to stone Paul) shews that the Jews did sometimes inflict capital punishment without direct permission from the Roman government. He also cites 3 Maccabees vii. 10-15, which gives an account of a decree of Ptolemy Philopator empowering the Jews in Alexandria to put transgressors against the law to death (E.V. somewhat inaccurately "without warrant or special commission") (Greek ἄνευ πάσης βασιλικῆς ἐξουσίας ἢ ἐπισκέψεως). All this may be true, but hardly meets the case. Stephen was tried by the Sanhedrin; and the persons for whose execution Paul voted, Acts xxvi. 10, were presumably legally tried. And the Decree, even if historical, need not mean more than that Jewish constituted authorities might condemn independently of the king. But Philo's words, "Jury, council or any kind of magistrate at all," must surely include Jewish as well as Roman courts. That he should be seriously encouraging his fellow-Jews in Alexandria, where we know that the Jews had independent jurisdiction, to put apostates to death without any legal trial, seems to me almost impossible. But was it perhaps otherwise in other cities of the Dispersion, where the Jews had no such privileges and knew that the ordinary courts would not take cognizance of apostasy or heresy? Paul's experiences at Iconium and Lystra possibly lend themselves to such a view. It is to Jews so circumstanced that this section is addressed if it has any practical bearing. Otherwise it must be regarded as a rhetorical way of saying that apostasy is so hateful a crime that to avenge it on the spot is not only pardonable but a duty.

PHILO

§ 58. The connexion of this section, which comes in so oddly as it stands, would become much clearer, if we might suppose that some words had been lost at the end, as "such practices Moses absolutely forbids." In this case a new paragraph would begin with ἐννοι δέ, linked with the preceding by the antithesis of the two bondages, but introducing the new subject of indirectly idolatrous practices. What he means by the "like principle" would then become quite clear. It may be noted that in Lev. xix. the prohibition of printing marks comes in directly after and is followed shortly by denunciation of divination and the like.

§§ 59 ff. Goodenough, pp. 37 f., observes that Philo ignores the passages in Leviticus which prescribe the death-penalty for some kinds of divination and only alludes to Deut. xvii. where we have no punishment prescribed but expulsion from the commonwealth and that only indirectly. In this he sees a reflection of the fact that public opinion would not have tolerated stoning such persons, while the Roman government always discouraged and in A.D. 16 expelled them from Italy. But he fails to note that Deut. provided Philo with a far more specific list of the forms of μαντική, on which he enlarges in the following section, and also that it leads on to the promise of the true divination, which is described in § 65.

§ 67. Only one temple. Cohn and Heinemann note that Josephus also gives the same reason for the one temple (Contra Apion. ii. 193, Ant. iv. 200). It does not follow that Josephus is dependent on Philo. The argument of the oneness of God, which Josephus supplements with the oneness of the Hebrew race, was an obvious argument against the attempts to build other temples like that of Leontopolis in the Dispersion.

§§ 71 f. The temple here described is of course Herod's temple (18 or 19 B.C.), elaborately described by Josephus, Wars v. and Ant. xv. Philo (Mangey ii. 646, an extract from De Providentia) speaks of something which he saw at Ascalon, when he visited that city in the course of a journey to "the temple of his fathers to pray and sacrifice." The passage does not in the least suggest that this was his only visit to Jerusalem, and he may have gone there often, though I cannot find authority for Edersheim's statement that he acted as envoy to carry the tributes (see § 78). But whether he went there once or oftener, there is not much sign of personal observation in his description of the building itself, which is very slight compared with Josephus's. Heine-mann (Bildung, p. 16) notes an inaccuracy, viz. that the sanctuary stood in the "very middle," whereas the part in front was much larger than the part behind. However, that the description should be slight is natural enough. He is expounding the laws of the Pentateuch and these did not provide for the building which would be needed when the nation was settled in Palestine, as he himself observes in Mos. ii. 72, 73, but only for a portable sanctuary. This last with its furniture was fully described in Mos. ii. 74-108, and the omission of any such description here may be due to a feeling that this one part of the law had been definitely suspended.

APPENDICES

§ 79. (The consecration of the Levites.) The idea that the Levites received consecration as a reward for slaughtering the idolaters is supposed to have been obtained by Philo from Ex. xxxii. 29, "consecrate yourselves to the Lord," where the Hebrew phrase is literally "fill your hands," which the LXX translates literally, but in the indicative, "ye have filled your hands." In Ex. xxviii. 41 (37) the same Hebrew phrase evidently meaning "consecrate" or "install" is translated in LXX by "thou shalt fill their hands." See Driver on both passages. In the other eight passages, however, cited by Driver from the Pentateuch, where the same phrase is used in the Hebrew, the LXX has a different verb, τελειόω with or without χείρας. It seems to me rather doubtful whether Philo would have seen consecration in the words "ye have filled your hands every man against his son," etc., and more likely that he found it rather in the words that follow, "that a blessing should be given you."

§ 80. Redundant . . . excrescence. The E.V. in Lev. xxi. 18 has "anything superfluous," which prima facie would seem to be represented here by κατὰ πλεονασμὸν περιτεύσαντος. But in the LXX the word in the list of defects corresponding to the Hebrew translated as "superfluous" is ωτόμητος, "with a split ear." Is this one of the few cases where Philo seems somehow to have known the Hebrew? Heinemann does not notice the point.

PHILO

§ 83. εὐχάς = votive offerings. If the word is genuine here, this must surely be the sense, as what requires an unhampered rapidity must be a concrete object. The word seems to be used in the LXX in this sense, Deut. xii. 6, 17, 26, but I cannot find that it is so used elsewhere by Philo or other authors. Stephanus only quotes it from inscriptions and L. & S. (revised) do not mention it at all. I have left the text as Cohn prints it, pending further knowledge as to what is exactly meant by the ? appended to R's εὐχάς, or what the Armenian, which is extant for this part, has to say.

§ 90. (φῶς ἡλίου as R, or as Cohn φῶς, ἡλίου ἥλιος?) Cohn's principal objection to the reading of what he considers the best authority, R, is that ἡλίου ἀνέλαμψεν is an inadmissible hiatus. I do not know how far this argument is valid. Cohn nowhere, so far as I know, formulates his doctrine of hiatus. On p. 197 of the article in Hermes, 1908, he gives examples of corrigenda, and amongst them is γάμον οὕτως for γάμου οὕτως, and γάμων ἀγνήν for γάμου ἀγνης. I do not understand how on these principles his own ἡλίου ἥλιος is to stand. It is no doubt an objection to R's reading that it does not account for the φῶς ἥλιος or φῶς ἥλιος δ' of the other mss. Could not this be met by φῶς ἡλιός τ'? Mangey has ἥλιος διανέλαμψε, to which Cohn objects that there is no such word, i.e. it is not found in the dictionaries. This is no argument at all, see on Mos. i. 172. Words compounded with διά and ἀνά are fairly common, and the διά would have some point here.

§ 96. ιερωμένον. Cohn, who printed ιερώμενον (present of ιεράομαι), later declared for the mss. ιερωμένον (perfect participle of ιερόω), and this is followed in the translation. But except for the mss., ιερώμενον = "acting as priest," makes equally good sense.

§ 103. Scars and prints. Cohn quotes Seneca, De Ira, i. 16. 7, S.V.F. i. 215 "Nam ut dicit Zenon, in sapientis quoque animo, etiam cum vulnus sanatum est, cicatrix manet. Sentiet itaque suspiciones quasdam et umbras affectuum, ipsis quidem carebit." This is not quite the same. The figure of the scarred soul was familiar to Philo from Gorgias 524 ε.

§ 146. The thought here, though differing in detail, bears in mind Timaeus 69 ε, where the mortal soul is placed in the thorax, with its nobler part = θυμός divided by the midriff from the baser = ἐπιθυμία. The θυμός is settled nearer the head, in order that it may be under the control of the reason and join with it in restraining the lusts. The sequel in Plato is definitely quoted in § 149, where see footnote.

APPENDICES

§ 172. δι' ἣν αἰτίαν . . . Cohn suggests completing this passage thus: δι' ἣν αἰτίαν τοῦτο προστέτακται αὐτίκα λεκτέον ἐαρινῇ μὲν κτλ. That is, ἣν stands for τίνα or ἣντινα and introduces an indirect question. This is no doubt common in Greek and may be in Philo, though I have not noticed an example: ii. 251 is not as it stands parallel. On the other hand, it may be pure relative, and introduce something of which the preceding statement is the cause. So above, § 124, and ii. 51.

§ 180. At the beginning of the year. Though the Jewish sacred year began with Nisan in the spring, the civil year continued to begin with Tishri in the autumn. See article "Time" in Hastings' Biblical Dictionary, and cf. Jos. Ant. i. 81. Heinemann, however, says that Philo knows nothing of this, and is merely following the Macedonian calendar introduced into Egypt. He certainly seems to take it for granted, ii. 153, that the month of the autumnal equinox is the "first in the sun's revolution." He must, however, have known that in Ex. xxiii. 16 and elsewhere in the Law, the Feast of Tabernacles is said to occur at the "going out (ἐξόδος) of the year."

§ 208. Fullness and Want, etc. That with Heraclitus κόρος = ἐκπύρωσις and χρησιμοσύνη = διακόσμησις is also stated by Hippolytus (quoted in Zeller, Pres. Phil. ii. p. 46, note 1), καλεῖ δὲ αὐτὸ (sc. τὸ πῦρ) χρησιμοσύνην καὶ κόρον. χρησιμοσύνη δὲ ἐστὶν ἡ διακόσμησις κατ' αὐτόν, ἡ δὲ ἐκπύρωσις κόρος. The thought is perhaps the same in Diog. Laert. ix. 8 (of Heraclitus), "that what tends to γένεσις is called war and strife, what tends to ἐκπύρωσις is agreement and peace."

§ 242. Thirdly because . . . thrust from office. The thought lying behind this somewhat illogical sentence may be this. In § 117 he has said that all priests, whether suffering from defects or not, were entitled to eat the sacred meats, and therefore it might be thought that the defective are included in "every male priest"; cf. Lev. vi. 29. But in v. 26 we have "the priest that offers it shall eat of it," and as the defective cannot offer the sacrifice "every male priest" must be taken to mean "such as are qualified by freedom of defect."

§ 273. (Footnote a.) It must be remembered of course that the temple which Hecataeus mentioned is Zerubbabel's temple, not Herod's, which Philo saw. But it may be presumed that in a matter like this the third temple would reproduce the second, about the details of which I understand that little is known.

PHILO

§ 291. (Wasps bred from horses.) So Plutarch (Cleomenes, ad fin.) mentions the idea that bees are bred from the carcasses of oxen, wasps from horses, beetles from donkeys, and serpents from men.

§ 318. What is pleasing to nature, etc. Philo, I suspect, substituted the Stoic "nature" for "before the Lord thy God," because he sees in καλόν and ἀρεστόν Stoic phraseology. The Stoic identification of τὸ καλόν with the Good is of course one of their leading doctrines, but ἀρεστόν was also a term applied to τὸ ἀγαθόν and ἀρετή, cf. S.V.F. iii. 208 τὴν δ' ἀρετὴν πολλοῖς ὀνόμασι προσαγορεύουσι. ἀγαθόν τε γὰρ λέγουσιν αὐτὴν ὅτι ἄγει ἡμᾶς ἐπὶ τὸν ὀρθὸν βίον· καὶ ἀρεστόν ὅτι δοκιμαστόν ἐστὶν ἀνυπόπτως. So also ibid. 88.

§ 321. λόγων ποτίμων. This phrase, which occurs again in ii. 62 and several times in other treatises, is no doubt a reminiscence of Phaedrus (243 D), which has also been clearly, though rather loosely, quoted in the preceding section. In Quod Omn. Prob. 13 the same two passages from the Phaedrus are brought together in the same sentence. The connexion of πότιμοι λόγοι with Plato is brought out most clearly in Leg. All. ii. 32, where, as in Plato, they serve to wash away the briny taste (τὸ ἀλμυρόν).

§ 322. (Footnote 1.) I have adopted Cohn's reading from R with the alteration of πνευμάτων into αὐρῶν. But the fact that the sense which lies behind R's nonsensical διανέμοντες αὐτῶν is easily recovered does not, I think, make the reading of A and H unworthy of consideration. Their wording τὰς . . . ἀέρος εὐκρασίας ἀνέμων τε corresponds with the parallel in De Praem. 41 ἀέρος καὶ πνευμάτων εὐκρασίας, while none of the other parallels corresponds with the form postulated by R.

§§ 327–end. (Errors attacked in these sections.) It seems to me, subject to correction by others more expert in such matters, that Philo in these allegorical interpretations is not alluding to particular schools, but to ways of thinking in general. The theory of Ideas, which he here rather unexpectedly adopts as an essential part of the true creed, was, I think, denied by the Stoics (S.V.F. i. 65), and in the full Platonic sense by Aristotle, but did any school of Philo's time hold it? The atheistical argument in § 330 that God has been invented to deter men more effectually from evil-doing is developed at length in an iambic poem (to which Mr. Angus has called my attention), attributed to the tyrant Critias, and quoted by Sext. Emp. ix. 54. But this again does not belong to a particular school. The Stoics sometimes identified νοῦς and θεός (see on iii. 1), and Heinemann, (Bildung, p. 176) quotes Sen. Ep. xxxi. 11, where the "animus rectus bonus" is said to be "deus in humano corpore hospitans." But this surely belongs to a region of thought different from Philo's description of the practical achievements of mind. The votaries of sense may at first sight suggest the Epicureans, who held that sensations are always true, though our judgements about them are fallible (Zeller, Stoics and Epicureans, Eng. trans. p. 402), but that again is different from Philo's disquisition on the practical value of the senses. (Heinemann, loc. cit. says that the doctrine of the divinity of αἴσθησις was ascribed to Diogenes, but I have been unable to trace the reference.)

APPENDICES

My feeling is that by his fourth and fifth class Philo is simply speaking of the οἴησις which, as he constantly says, leads men to ascribe to themselves what belongs to God, and the division into mind and sense, a very reasonable division since human self-confidence divides itself between the two, is merely made to fit in with Ammon and Moab, which, on philological grounds, he identifies with the two.

§ 333. Fourth and fifth class also. Heinemann suggests with considerable probability that in De Mut. 205 τεθλασμένοι γὰρ τὰ γεννητικὰ τῆς διανοίας ἢ καὶ τελείως ἀποκοπέντες οἱ τὸν ἴδιον νοῦν καὶ τὴν αἴσθησιν ἀποσεμνύνοντες ὡς μόνα τῶν κατ' ἀνθρώπους αἴτια πραγμάτων, we should read ἀποκοπέντες <ἦ> οἱ, thus bringing into the allegory as here Deut. xxiii. 3, as well as the two preceding verses. The only objection to this is that it leaves the τεθλασμένοι and ἀποκοπέντες without any theological interpretation corresponding to the other classes. Possibly this might be met by inserting κοί ἄθεοι ἦ instead of merely <ἦ>.

APPENDIX TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, II

§ 4. For the elliptical oath cf. Plato, Gorgias 466 ε, Aristoph. Frogs 1374. Commentators have ascribed the first example to piety, but this is incompatible with Plato's use of the names of deities elsewhere and even in the same dialogue, and no such motive can be ascribed to Aristophanes. See Thompson's note on Gorgias, loc. cit.

§ 46. Lightened by anticipation. On the value of πρόληψις (praemeditatio) as alleviating λύπη (aegritudo) see the discussion in Cic. Tusc. Disp. iii. 24-34 and 52 f., where the opinion is represented as Cyrenaic in opposition to the Epicurean that it was futile to dwell on evils beforehand. But it was also to some extent a Stoic view, see ibid. and S. V. F. iii. 482, where Poseidonius (or Chrysippus?) is quoted as saying προενδημιεῖν δεῖν τοῖς πράγμασι μήπω τε παροῦσαι οἶον παροῦσαι χρήσθαι.

§ 56. Some give it the name of the "season." For the Pythagorean application of καιρός to Seven see Aristotle, Met. i. 5, 985 b. They say ὅτι τὸ μὲν τοιονδὶ τῶν ἀριθμῶν πάθος, τὸ δὲ τοιονδὶ ψυχὴ καὶ νοῦς, ἕτερον δὲ καιρός (quoted in Ritter and Preller, 65 d), and more explicitly Alexander Aphr. in Met. pp. 28, 29 καιρὸν δὲ πάλιν ἔλεγον τὸν ἑπτά. δοκεῖ γὰρ τὰ φυσικὰ τοὺς τελείους καιροὺς ἴσχειν καὶ γενέσεως καὶ τελειώσεως κατὰ ἑβδομάδας (quoted ibid. 78 c).

For Philo's more or less mystical use of the word, apart from the number seven, see his comments on Num. xiv. 9 ἀφέστηκεν ὁ καιρὸς ἀπ' αὐτῶν, ὁ δὲ κύριος ἐν ἡμῖν in De Post. 121 f., and De Mut. 265. In the first of these καιρός is the passing moment or opportunity which men impiously take for their God, in the second it is the God-sent opportunity which they fail to take.

§ 69. No man being naturally a slave. This is said to be a Stoic doctrine. But among the passages collected by Arnim, S. V. F. iii. 349-366, there is no other which lays down the principle so explicitly as this. The Stoic mind concentrates itself on the thought that only the wise are truly free and only the foolish or wicked truly slaves, and does not concern itself with the actual institution of slavery. That the rights of humanity do not extend to the unreasoning animals appears in Cic. De Fin. iii. 67 (quoting Chrysippus) "cetera nata esse hominum causa et deorum . . . ut bestiis homines uti ad utilitatem suam possint sine iniuria."

APPENDICES

§ 73. Since it is a general truth . . . sole good. I do not see any exact parallels in S.V.F. 327-332 (which Heinemann cites) to the doctrine implied here that ideally there is no such thing as a foreigner (ἀλλότριος), but it accords with De Ios. 29 that the Megalopolis, the world, has a single πολιτεία and a single law in the λόγος φύσεως.

For the Stoic canon (Στωικὸν δόγμα De Post. 133) that μόνον τὸ καλὸν ἀγαθὸν see note on Quod Det. 9 (App.) where, however, the statement that "no Greek passage seems to reproduce the dogma exactly in this form" must have been written under a misapprehension. There are several passages in S.V.F. (see Index) which exhibit it or its Latin equivalent "solum bonum esse quod honestum sit." Note particularly Diog. Laert. vii. 101 λέγουσι δὲ μόνον τὸ καλὸν ἀγαθὸν εἶναι, καθά φησιν Ἐκάτων καὶ Χρυσίππος.

§ 82. Tribe (or deme?) and ward. "The full citizens in Alexandria were those enrolled in tribes and demes. The important and constant element was the deme rather than the tribe and during the Ptolemaic and earlier Roman period it was customary, since the deme-names of Alexandria and Ptolemais differed, to describe a citizen of either city by his deme only. The tribe-names were more fluid, thus we know that Claudius sanctioned a proposal to name a tribe in his honour," Bell, Camb. Mod. Hist. x. p. 295. The evidence for this statement (from Papyri?) is not given, nor is it stated whether it applies equally to the πολιτευμα of the Jews. If nothing is known to the contrary, Philo's words suggest that it does.

It should be noted, however, that Philo found δῆμος as well as φυλή in Num. xxxvi. (see v. 6). Apparently, however, they are there convertible terms. E.V. has "the family of the tribe."

§ 91. (Depreciation of athletes and athletic training.) This is not uncommon, especially in contrast with military training. Cf. Quintilian, x. 1. 33, where the athlete's "tori" or fleshy protuberances are contrasted with the military "lacerti." Several parallels are quoted by Peterson in his note on that passage, bringing out the idea that the athlete's training did not fit him to endure the various hardships of the soldier's life. Philo may have the same idea here, though he does not bring in the contrast with the soldier.

PHILO

For παινομένων cf. Leg. All. i. 98, where the athlete's diet is ἐνεκα τοῦ παινεσθαι καὶ βῶνυσθαι, and for πολυσαρκία see Lucian, Dial. Mort. x. 5 (quoted by Peterson), where an athlete πολύσαρκός τις ὢν nearly makes Charon's boat sink.

§ 125. ἡ προστώσα ἀρχὴ κτλ. In making this statement, and indeed in the whole section, Philo has no biblical authority and is simply giving what he considers to be just, based apparently on Attic (or Alexandrian ?) law. In Attic law the archon (who seems to be alluded to in ἡ προστώσα ἀρχή) had the general duty of caring for orphans and heiresses. See Lipsius, Att. Recht. p. 58, though this seems to mean only the obligation to see that the legitimate ἐπίτροποι performed their duty (ibid. p. 525). Philo's words here would naturally imply something more definite than this and are not easy to reconcile with iii. 67, where proposals of marriage to orphan maidens are to be addressed "to the brothers or guardians or others who have charge of her."

§ 133 and sequel to § 139. (The double portion of the first-born.) Goodenough, pp. 56 f., after giving evidence of the right of the eldest son to a double portion in Ptolemaic Egypt as well as in Greece, holds that Philo has no scriptural warrant for attesting this as a general Mosaic law, but quotes Deut. xxi. as the nearest thing he can find in scripture to a law which had forced itself on Jewish practice. It seems to me that Philo could reasonably find an acknowledgement of the claims of primogeniture in v. 17, "for he is the beginning of his children (LXX) and to him belong the rights of the first-born (πρωτοτοκεία)." That is to say, what the law forbids in this passage is that the repudiation of the mother, who in Philo's view is not only hated but discarded (ἀπηλλαγμένη § 139), should be allowed to cancel the acknowledged rights of her son.

There is more to be said for Heinemann's contention that the arguments in §§ 132-139 imply that what was stated as a general law in § 133 only obtained in the particular case here discussed. The third reason in particular (§ 139) might be taken to mean that the duplication of the portion of the first-born was a compensation for the wrongs he had already suffered. But this is not necessarily so. Philo may mean, as indeed he implies in the last sentence, that the law wishes to protect the just rights of both families and shews its intention by asserting the special right of the first-born.

APPENDICES

§ 145. The Crossing-feast. I have not found in any authority which I have seen any light thrown on Philo's departure from the ordinary explanation of Passover. Josephus, Ant. ii. 313 explains πάσχα as meaning ὑπερβασία (so also later Aquila; see Driver on Ex. xii. 13). It must be remembered that the point is disguised in the LXX, which translates the noun pēsah in xii. 21 and 27 by πάσχα, but the verb pāsah in v. 13 and 27 by σκεπάω and ἐσκέπασε, in v. 23 by παρελύσεται. That Philo was not alone in his opinion is shewn by his statement that others allegorized in the same way, for such an allegory could only be founded on the "crossing" interpretation. That he believed διάβασις to be the correct translation appears in De Mig. 25 τὸ πάσχα, τὸ δὲ ἐστὶν ἐρμηνευθὲν διάβασις.

Ibid. From noon till eventide. See Ex. xii. 6, Lev. xxiii. 5, Num. ix. 3, where the R.V. has "at even," (margin) Hebrew "between the two evenings." The LXX translates this in Ex. and Num. by πρὸς ἑσπέραν, but in Leviticus by ἀνάμεσον τῶν ἑσπερινῶν. "For this the traditional interpretation adopted by the Pharisees and Talmudists was that the 'first' evening was when the heat of the sun begins to decrease, about 3 P.M., and that the second evening began with sunset" (Driver on Ex. xii. 6). Philo's interpretation is in accordance with another opinion quoted by Driver, "that the sacrifice if offered before noon was not valid."

§ 162. Directly after the first day. The Hebrew "on the morrow after the Sabbath," translated by the LXX in Lev. xxiii. 11 by ἐπαύριον τῆς πρώτης though in v. 15 by ἐπαύριον τῶν σαββάτων, is said to have been diversely interpreted by the Pharisees and Sadducees (see Thackeray on Jos. Ant. iii. 250). The Pharisees, with whom Josephus as well as Philo agrees, understood it to mean the second day of Unleavened Bread. The Sadducees held it to be on the day after the Sabbath, which necessarily occurred at some time in the festal week.

§ 176. (Text of ἀπὸ . . . μονάδος.) M has ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἐκείνης ἡμέρα πεντηκοστή καταριθμῆται ἐβδόμη ἐβδομάς, ἐφ' αἷς ἱερὸν ἀριθμὸν ἐπισφραγιζομένης μονάδος. Nicetas ἀπὸ γὰρ ἐκείνης τῆς ἡμέρας πεντηκοστῆ ἀριθμεῖται ἑπτὰ ἑβδομάδες ἱερὸν ἀριθμὸν ἐπισφραγιζομένης μονάδος. Nicetas's text is followed by Mangey with the correction of ἑβδομάδες to -δων. Nicetas's ἀπό is clearly right (see Lev. xxiii. 15, for reckoning Pentecost from the Sheaf) and the question between his τῆς ἡμέρας . . . ἀριθμεῖται . . . and M's ἡμέρα . . . καταριθμεῖται is unimportant, but his ἑβδομάδες is impossible; Cohn's correction to ἑβδομάσι agrees, as he says, with the parallel in De Dec. 160, whereas Mangey's ἑβδομάδων will make the sacred number 49 instead of 50. Cohn's correction of ἐφ' αἷς to ἀφέσεως seems to me much more doubtful. In De Cong. 109 which he cites, and a similar passage in De Mut. 228, an allegory is founded on the connexion of "release" with the Jubile of the fiftieth year. Here we are talking of a different feast which, except for the number 50, has no connexion with the Jubile, and there is no further allusion to the idea of release. The corruption of ἑβδόμη ἑβδομάς ἐφ' αἷς in M may have arisen (1) by an assimilation of ἑβδομάδες to the singular verb καταριθμεῖται, (2) by a variation of construction between a relative clause and a genitive absolute.

PHILO

§ 185. Joy is the rational elevation or rising of the soul. This is the regular Stoic definition of χαρά, in contrast with ἡδονή. See S. V. F. iii. 431, 432. Each of the "good emotional states" (εὐπάθειαι) is distinguished from the corresponding πάθος by being εὐλογος. Thus εὐλάβεια ("cautiousness") is opposed to φόβος as being εὐλογος ἑκκλισις, Diog. Laert. vii. 116.

§ 188. Rules of good economy. Lit. "laws of economic virtue." According to the Stoics οἰκονομική or the knowledge of what is profitable to the household is an ἀρετή (S. V. F. iii. 267) and only the wise man is οἰκονομικός (ib. 567). So Philo, Quaestio in Gen. iv. 165 "urbanitas (i.e. πολιτική) et oeconomia cognatae sunt virtutes." Cf. De Ebr. 91.

§ 212. In the scale of ascending powers. I have not found the compound παραύξησης (-άνω) in Plato or Nicomachus meaning "to raise to a higher power." But the uncompounded verb or noun is common in this sense. So in Rep. 528 ν the square is the δευτέρα αὐξη and the cube the τρίτη αὐξησις. In 587 δ κατὰ δύναμιν καὶ τρίτην αὐξήν seems to mean "by squaring and cubing." In Nicomachus xi. 15, 9 being thrice 3 by another 3 αὐξεται ἐπ' ἄλλο διάστημα and becomes 27.

§ 228. (Text of καὶ οὐ μόνον . . . παιδων.) The simplest suggestion I can make for this is to correct λογισμοὺς to λογισμοῖς

APPENDICES

καί. Translate "impressing them on the minds of the children both in the earlier and in the riper stage of youth." This will make good sense, giving three stages of parental instruction—early childhood, boyhood, and later adolescence. But I lack authority for the antithesis implied between νεάζειν and ἀκμάζειν, and also while λογισμός = "reasoning faculty" or "mind" is quite common in Philo, I have not found it in the plural.

Another difficulty felt by Cohn, that οἱ μὲν just above has no following δὲ, which leads him to suggest that the end of the sentence has been lost, does not seem to be weighty. Philo begins no doubt with thinking of the parents as μὲν and the children as δέ, but that he should forget to express the latter formally does not seem unlike him.

§ 232. (The disobedient son.) In Deut. xxi. the incorrigible son is brought before the "elders," after which (LXX) he is denounced to the "men of the city," who thereupon stone him. Nothing is said of any right of either the "elders" or the "men of the city" to examine the accusation, but the account savours more of a judicial proceeding than Philo's words suggest. And Heinemann (ad loc. and Bildung, pp. 251) and Goodenough, p. 69 ff., may be right in tracing here the influence of the Roman patria potestas, as also in the doctrine of parental δεσποτεία in the next sentence.

§ 239. Secondly, it would not be suitable . . . by kinship. Heinemann aptly quotes Seneca, De Beneficiis, iv. 17 "quomodo nulla lex amare parentes . . . iubet (super vacuum est enim, in quod imus, impelli)."

§ 244. (Penalty for striking a parent.) Heinemann quotes Seneca, Controv. ix. 4 "qui patrem pulsaverit manus ei praeacidantur," which he calls a Roman law and also declares it to come from the Twelve Tables. Goodenough, accepting the first part of this, bases on it an argument that the ἐπάρυφοι of § 244 are definitely Roman officials. Such a law is certainly not found among any of the fragments of the Twelve Tables known to us, but there is no reason to think that it is a Roman law at all. Seneca's words are no evidence. The laws which form the basis of the several controversiae need not have and do not claim to have any foundation in fact. In this particular case the theme is as follows: The law is supposed to be as stated above. A "tyrant" has commanded two sons to strike their father. One commits suicide rather than do so; the other obeys the command. When the tyrant has fallen or in one version has been killed by the same son, the son is charged under this law and arguments are adduced by the debaters for and against exacting the penalty. The same law with practically the same theme is noted by a scholiast as used by the Greek rhetor Syrianus (Walz, Rhet. Graeci, iv. 467), and, with different themes attached, in the Declamations ascribed to Quintilian 358, 362, 372. Another of Seneca's Controv. (viii. 2) starts with a law that amputation of the hands is the penalty for sacrilege. Whether these imaginary laws prescribing the mutilation of the offending member (cf. Deut. xxv. 11, 12, and iii. 175, below) are based on some old tradition, or are the product of the inventiveness of the rhetoricians, it is impossible to say. The only code known to us which assigns this punishment for striking a father is the Babylonian code of Hammurabi (about 2000 B.C.), and this is hardly likely to have influenced either the rhetor or Philo. The common assumption in the schools that such legislation existed or had existed somewhere would be enough to make him embark without further inquiry on a demonstration of its injustice.

PHILO

§ 259. Each of the other virtues is its own reward. The sentiment is of course implicit in the common Stoic aphorism that virtue is αὐτῇ δι' αὐτὴν αἰρετός and αὐταρκής πρὸς εὐδαιμονίαν. The most exact parallel quoted is S. V. F. iii. 45, from Servius, "Stoici dicunt virtutem esse pro praemio si nulla sint praemia."

APPENDIX TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, III

§ 3. The ocean of civil cares. I do not know that we know enough about the dates of Philo's writings to say that Heinemann's positive statement that this refers to the serious troubles of A.D. 38-41 described in the In Flaccum and Legatio ad Gaium is impossible. But it is at any rate uncertain. Apart from such matters as the apparently unsuccessful attempt to interfere with Jewish religion mentioned in De Som. ii. 123 (where see note in App.), and the oppression of the tax-collectors noted below (§§ 159 ff.), there must have been considerable friction in Alexandria caused by the special position of the Jewish πολιτεία long before the outbreak. It is this to which I understand the φθόνος to refer, rather than, as Goodenough, to the conventional idea of the jealousy of fate shewn to prosperity, an idea which does not seem to fit in well with the epithets μισόκαλος and κακῶν ἀργαλεώτατον.

§ 6. Yet . . . even for this. The meaning of §§ 1-6, when reduced to plain prose, is that the days when Philo could devote his whole powers to philosophy are far back in the past. He is now permanently engaged and sometimes absorbed in political business of a troublesome nature, but there are times when he can get some leisure for his favourite studies and use his philosophical insight (§ 4). There are indeed other times (§ 5) when he can shake off the shackles altogether and perhaps feel the inspiration which he described in De Mig. § 35. But this is not one of these times. His condition is that he can open his eyes as in § 4, though he cannot triumphantly ride the waves as in § 5; yet even for this he is thankful.

If it is asked why this eloquent outcry is introduced at this point, I think it is enough to say that it is a natural literary device marking that he is just halfway through his great subject. Such prologues at pauses in a long disquisition are not, I think, uncommon. They appear, for instance, in Quintilian. It is possible, though I think less probable, that it means to indicate that the work has actually been interrupted by civic troubles and that καιροῦ διδόντος at the end of the preceding treatise should be translated "when opportunity offers," with the suggestion that the opportunity will have to be waited for.

PHILO

Goodenough's idea (p. 9), that the outcry is elicited by a feeling that the criminal and civil laws now to be treated forcibly remind him of his civic distractions, seems to me fanciful.

§ 13. (Persian incest.) See Clement Alex. Strom. iii. 2. 11, who cites the early historian Xanthus as saying μίγνυνται οἱ Μάγοι μητράσι καὶ θυγατράσι, and couples them with sisters. In Paedagogus, i. 7 he says the same of the Persians in general. Tertullian also in Ad Nationes, i. 15 and Apol. 9 repeats the statement on the authority of Ctesias, another early historian. Philo evidently assumes that these early authorities hold good for his own time, though he says nothing of the Magi, for whom elsewhere he expresses admiration (see on § 100 below). Compare on the other hand Sext. Emp. Pyrrh. Hyp. iii. 305 Πέρσαι δὲ καὶ μάλιστα αὐτῶν οἱ σοφίαν ἀσκέειν δοκοῦντες, οἱ Μάγοι, γαμοῦσι τὰς μητέρας καὶ Αἰγύπτιοι τὰς ἀδελφὰς ἄγονται πρὸς γάμον. The charge against the Persians is often repeated in later writers (references in Mangey ad loc. and Commentator on Clement (Migne)).

§§ 17-18. (Persian civil troubles.) No suggestions are given by Heinemann as to what events, if any, Philo has in mind. Possibly he may have known of the troubles both before and after the succession of Darius Hystaspes and after the death of Xerxes, and a number of fratricides are recorded, beginning with the murder of Smerdis by Cambyzes, and before or after the accessions of Darius Nothus and Ochus and Codomannus. See Rawlinson, Fifth Great Monarchy. But his words fit better into more contemporary matters and he is more likely to be thinking of the later Parthian empire which absorbed the Persian. He was quite aware that the Parthians had conquered the Persians (De Ios. 136, Quod Deus 174), but he might, like Horace, identify the two in a vague statement of this kind. Plutarch, Lucullus 36 speaks of the Parthian power as weakened ὑπ' ἐμφυλίων καὶ προσοίκων πολέμων at the time of Lucullus's campaign (about 78 B.C.), and the civil war between Mithradates III and Orodes after their murder of their father Phraates, a war which ended with the victory of Orodes and the execution of his brother, would be well known to Philo.

APPENDICES

§ 22. Marriage with half-sisters on the father's side. So Cimon married his germana (here = ὁμοπάτριος) soror, "nam Atheniensibus licet eodem patre natas uxores ducere," Corn. Nep. Cim. i. 2. Themistocles' daughter married her brother οὐκ ὄντα ὁμομήτριον, Plut. Them. 32. The scholiast on Aristophanes, Nubes 1372, where the poet denounces marriage with an ὁμομήτριος ἀδελφή, says that since marriage between ὁμοπάτριοι was lawful at Athens, the word is added εἰς αὐξήσῃ τοῦ ἀδικήματος. Philo is right in saying that there was such a law at Athens, whether dating from Solon or not. He does not say that it was a common practice, and when Plato, Laws 838 A, B puts brother and sister without adding ὁμομήτριος among the relations between which intercourse was not only unlawful but felt so strongly to be unlawful that most people had no desire for it, it is difficult to suppose that it was common.

No evidence appears to be forthcoming for Philo's statement about the Spartan law.

§ 23. (Egyptian marriage with sisters on both sides.) See Diod. Sic. i. 27, where the practice is said to be modelled on the marriage of Isis and Osiris, also the words of Sext. Emp. quoted in note on § 13. Goodenough cites for a later age from the Papyri a card of invitation issued by a mother for the marriage of one of her sons to a daughter.

§ 30. (Remarriage with a divorced wife). On this point Goodenough, pp. 85, 86 calls attention to the Lex Iulia de adulteriis, 18 B.C., which provides that among the things which that law punishes as adultery is "si adulterii damnatam sciens uxorem duxerit," Dig. iv. 37. 1. Assuming, then, that the remarriage shewed that the intermediate union was adultery, the offender would be liable under Roman law in Philo's time. Elsewhere (see references in Dict. of Ant.) condonation of adultery is treated under the same law as lenocinium. Is this the Latin equivalent for what Philo calls προαγωγεία? In Greek law this last was a capital crime, as Goodenough notes (though only perhaps if proved to be ἐπι μισθῶ. See Lipsius, A.R. p. 435).

§§ 34-36. Heinemann, Bildung, pp. 262-267, has a long and careful discussion of the views expressed here by Philo, and less specifically in other places (Quod Det. 102, De Ios. 43, Mos. i. 28), as compared with Rabbinical and Greek opinion. The upshot of it is that Philo goes far beyond the latter at any rate. The only passage cited which at all approaches this is from Charondas (Stobaeus, Flor. ii. p. 184 Meineke). According to Zeller (Stoics and Epicureans, Eng. Trans. p. 303), the Stoics merely required chastity and moderation in marriage (including total abstinence from pregnant women).

PHILO

§§ 37-38. Philo may also be bearing in mind Deut. xxiii. 17, where  $\delta$  πορνείων (E.V. "sodomite") is coupled with πόρνη as forbidden in Israel. πορνείων and πόρνος seem regularly to mean a male prostitute rather than as in Heb. xii. 16 simply a fornicator. Though no punishment is prescribed in Deut., the fact that Philo seems to base the stoning of the πόρνη on this verse (see on § 81) shews that he would feel the same about the πόρνος.

§ 40. Celebrating the rites of Demeter, etc. I have not been able to find any evidence in support of this account of the prominence of male prostitutes in the mysteries of Demeter or similar rites; nor yet of the next sections describing the honours paid to the castrated. No doubt the Galli, the priests of Attis, were well known and also the votaries who castrated themselves in honour of Attis. See Frazer (Adonis, Attis, and Osiris, pp. 22 ff.), who also mentions the eunuch priests of Artemis of Ephesus, and the Syrian Astartē. But Philo can hardly be referring to these.

§ 51. (Death penalty for harlots.) This severity is in accordance with De Ios. 43, where Joseph is represented as saying "with us death is the penalty for harlots," but inconsistent with i. 81, where the repentant harlot may retain her civic rights and marry anyone except a priest, and presumably not merely escape death, but remain unpunished.

§ 72. Documents containing the names, etc. Heinemann, Bildung, p. 289, gives an excellent parallel from the Papyri. "The announcement of marriage" contains the names of the parties and of the parents of the wife, the amount of her dowry, the guarantee of the husband to make fitting provision, the promise of fidelity on both sides, and the penalties in the event of infringement.

Goodenough's theory (p. 92) that this ὁμολογία is regarded by Philo as justifying marital relations before the completed marriage, and that therefore ὑπογάμιον (or ὑπογάμιον ἀδίκημα) was de facto adultery seems to me to be negated by the phrase in § 74 (which Goodenough passes over very lightly), that the girl has her virginity to defend. Clearly some people did not regard it as adultery, and, when Philo maintains the contrary, he seems to me to be upholding what he takes to be the view of Deuteronomy, which assigns the same punishment as for adultery, and speaks of the violator as having dishonoured (ἐταπείνωσε) his neighbour's wife. For the equivalence of betrothal to marriage see also i. 107, where it is implied that the betrothed is no longer a παρθένος, "even though her body is pure."

APPENDICES

§ 84. τὸ τῆς τιμωρίας ἀθάνατον. Cohn (Hermes, 1908, p. 206) offers a solution of this corruption which perhaps is preferable to that suggested in the translation. He suggests that εἶδος or an equivalent word has fallen out, and that ἀθάνατον is the result of a gloss explanatory of εἶδος. The glossator wrote α' (= ένα) θάνατον, and this having been re-embodied in the text in the form of ἀθάνατον ultimately ousted εἶδος.

In the first part of the sentence the suggestion of inserting ἀμειλίκτως is due to H. Grégoire in Hermes, 1909, p. 320, though he would place it between ἐργασάμενον and ἀναιρετέον.

§ 86. (Intention to kill.) Heinemann points out that in giving this interpretation to Ex. xxi. 14 ἐπιθῆται . . . δόλω, and extending it to cover βούλευσις in general, Philo is following Greek law, τὸν βουλευσάντα ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ἐνέχεσθαι καὶ τὸν χειρὶ ἐργασάμενον, Andocides i. 94.

§ 89. (Punishment of poisoners.) Heinemann and Goodenough point out that Philo's views on this subject are in accordance with the spirit of the Lex Cornelia de sicariis et veneficis (about 81 B.C.) which decreed punishment for preparing, having or selling poisons for the destruction of human life, as well as for actually using them. Josephus, Ant. iv. 279 is closer to the Roman law, as he expressly includes the possession of such poisons as criminal. Both authors apparently go beyond the Lex Cornelia in saying that poison intended to cause other injuries than death. (Jos. εἰς ἄλλας βλάβας πεποιημένον is on the same footing.)

§ 100. (The Magi and the true magic.) Mangey and others quote for the last part of the sentence Cic. De Div. i. 91 "Nec quisquam rex Persarum potest esse qui non ante Magorum disciplinam scientiamque perceperit."

PHILO

As to what Philo understands by "true magic" I hazard the conjecture that he has in mind the distinction between "artificiosa divinatio" and "naturalis," a distinction which is made by the Stoic in the De Div., and accepted by his opponent. The coincidence quoted above inclines one to think that both this passage and the substance of De Div. i. are based on some Stoic treatise (? Poseidonius). In the De Div. the "artificiosa" comprises haruspicy, augury, and the like, while the "naturalis" is limited to inspiration, such as oracles, and dreams. It seems to be equated in i. 90 with "ratio naturae quam φυσιολογίαν Graeci appellant." This agrees with our passage and with Quod Omn. Prob. 74, where the Magi are extolled as "researching in tranquillity into the works (or facts) of nature and by clearer visions receiving and giving revelations (ιεροφαντοῦνται τε καὶ ιεροφαντοῦσι) of divine excellences." Further at the end of De Div. i. the Stoic, though he has defended the "artificiosa" in general, rejects the charlatan impostors in much the same tone as Philo takes in § 101. Compare also Mos. i. 277 where ἔντεχνος μαντική was inadequately translated by "his art of wizardry." Rather it means the "artificiosa" discarded for the "naturalis" of the prophetic spirit. It is an objection to this, but not I think a fatal objection, that either Philo or Cicero must have misunderstood the reference to the Magi. For in Cicero the Magi "augurantur et divinant," i.e. practise the "artificiosa."

Heinemann thinks that Philo is just adopting the accepted Stoic definition of μαντική as ἐπιστήμη οὐσα θεωρητικὴ καὶ ἐξηγητικὴ τῶν ὑπὸ θεῶν ἀνθρώποις διδομένων σημείων (S. V. F. ii. 1018, iii. 654), while giving the last words a "monotheistic" twist. He means, I suppose, that φύσις=(as often) θεός is substituted for θεῶν. In view of Philo's wholesale denunciation of μαντική in i. 59 ff. it seems to me improbable that he would accept this definition without more explanation than this.

It is possible, no doubt, that he is simply echoing the vague popular idea that there is a respectable as well as a disreputable magic, which we find also in the N.T. with the "wise men" from the east on the one hand and Simon and Elymas on the other, all described as μάγοι.

§ 102. θανατῶντας. The same sense for θανατᾶν, i.e. "to be about to die," is demanded certainly or preferably in De Virt. 34, De Ex. 159, and De Aet. 89. The word cannot be an interpolation in all these places; nor does Cohn raise any objection there. It is true that the accepted meaning of θανατᾶν is "to desire death," as in Phaedo 64 b. If here and elsewhere it carries the sense of imminence rather than desire, it is presumably on the analogy of verbs of sickness such as ὕδεριάω = "be dropsical" or ὀφθαλμιάω = "have sore eyes." In this way it may easily = "sick unto death," and thence pass on to being doomed to death from other causes than sickness. It is a pertinent objection that these verbs are in -ιάω rather than -άω, though indeed to add the vowel in each case in Philo would be less drastic than expunging the word. At any rate the positive fact for the lexicographer is that in these four places the mss. of Philo exhibit θανατᾶν as = "being near to death." Possibly to these should be added i. 237, where θανατῶσαν νόσον is corrected by Cohn to θανατοῦσαν νόσον. That the disease itself is near to death (cf. "this sickness is not unto death") would be a fairly natural extension.

APPENDICES

§ 108. Both for the outrage, and for obstructing nature, etc. Goodenough, pp. 113 f. points out that Josephus, Ant. iv. 278 mentions a double fine, (1) for diminishing the population; (2) compensation to the husband, and that Philo's two reasons, "nature" and ὑβρις, roughly correspond to these. He infers that Philo also contemplates a double fine. He may very likely have found the LXX ἐπιζήμιον ζημιωθήσεται καθότι ἂν ἐπιβάλῃ ὁ ἀνὴρ τῆς γυναικὸς δώσει μετὰ ἀξιώματος obscure.

§ 109. A human being . . . from confinement. Heinemann and Goodenough note a discrepancy between this and § 117, where Philo accepts the Stoic theory (S. V. F. ii. 806) that the child is not a separate living creature till it has left its mother's womb. I do not think there is any real discrepancy. Here he is stating what he considers to be implied by the LXX, i.e. that the child at this stage is (potentially) a human being. There he argues that while the Stoic theory may be true and is supported by high authorities, the stricter law of the LXX seems to emphasize the sacredness of the infant and shews a fortiori how heinous is the destruction of the fully born. Cf. for a very similar argument De Virt. 137, 138.

§ 120. (Involuntary homicide.) What does Philo understand by this? In the Pentateuch it seems to mean accidental homicide, see particularly the example given in Deut. xix. 5 of the man killed by the slip of the head from his neighbour's axe. Nothing is said in these sections exactly in contradiction of this, though the μη ἐκ προνοίας in § 128 may point to a wider interpretation. But in §§ 92 and 104 we have had suggestions that he regards homicide, if committed in sudden anger or in an unpremeditated quarrel, as different from ordinary murder, though he does not follow this up (see notes on §§ 92 and 104). His view in fact seems much the same as that of Plato, who (Laws 866 D ff.) discusses the point and says that one who kills another in hot blood or unpremeditatedly is οὐ παντάπασι ἀκούσιος ἀλλ' εἰκῶν ἀκουσίου. Philo's ἡμίεργον in § 92 is a rough equivalent of Plato's εἰκῶν ("likeness or shadow," Jowett) and indeed may be a reminiscence of it. That is to say, it is something between ἀκούσιος and ἐκούσιος. One may conjecture that he does not consider it worthy of death, but in face of the law of Ex. xxi. 18, 19, described in § 100, refrains from saying so.

PHILO

§§ 131-136. The death of the high priest. Why the death of one high priest should abrogate the reasons assigned for the limit of the exile, when he is immediately succeeded by another, is not here discussed. The real explanation, as I understand from the commentators, is that the rights of the avenger of blood had to be limited, and that the succession of a new high priest, like the accession of a new sovereign, made a convenient limit. Philo himself in De Fuga 106 f. has pronounced the enactment, if literally taken, to be absurd, and therefore explains the death of the high priest as the death of the Logos in the soul.

§ 148. (Punishment in the case where a man is killed by falling into an unguarded pit.) Philo's statement in the face of the absence of any specific provision in the Law is regarded by Goodenough, p. 129 as clear evidence that he is here giving us the practice of the Jewish courts in Egypt. I think it is merely one of his reasonable inferences from analogous cases. By making the negligence punishable when an animal is killed, the law suggests that it is still more punishable in the case of a human being. What he says really amounts to saying that no one need think himself debarred from making a complaint to the court, which will then have to follow the principle laid down in the matter of the unguarded well, i.e. either death or a fine. He naturally hesitates to prescribe death in so many words, but evidently thinks it would be justified, as also in the case of the φόνος of the unguarded roof mentioned in § 149.

§ 149. (The unguarded roof.) It is noteworthy that Josephus,

APPENDICES

Ant. iv. 284 also couples this with the unguarded pit, though they came from quite different parts of the Pentateuch, and this has sometimes (see Thackeray ad loc.) been regarded as one of the points which shew Josephus's dependence upon Philo. See vol. vi., Introd. p. xxii, note e. I think the analogy of the two is obvious enough to have struck both writers independently.

§ 164. (Traitors and tyrants, etc.) Heinemann in his note says positively that the latter law, i.e. against tyrants (in Bildung, p. 212, both laws, regarded as a single law), is an old Macedonian law. Goodenough accepts this and infers that it was probably continued in Ptolemaic Egypt and therefore known to Philo. All this has very slender foundation. Heinemann's authority is two passages (cited quite reasonably by Cohn as illustrations), one from Curtius Rufus vi. 42. 20, the other from Cicero, De Inventione, ii. 144. The first of these mentions in connexion with a plot against Alexander a "law of the Macedonians providing that the relations of a conspirator against the king should be put to death." Here it is relations (propinqui), not children, and an "insidiator" is not the same as a προδοτής. Still there may be some connexion.

The second passage deals with a problem in the rhetorical schools. There are supposed to be two laws: one that the tyrannicide may claim any reward; another that the "five nearest relations of the tyrant shall be put to death." The example given is that of Alexander, tyrant of Phærae, who was murdered in 367 B.C., by his wife. By the first law she can claim the life of her son by him as the reward; by the second he must be put to death, and the arguments for either course are elaborately discussed by Cicero. As apparently Alexander's wife was acting in concert with her brother, who afterwards assumed the tyranny (Diod. xvi. 14), the question can hardly have arisen, and if it did, Phærae was presumably not under Macedonian jurisdiction. But it is quite unsafe to assume that such a law was in existence. The death of Alexander was a famous case of tyrannicide and a useful peg on which to hang one of the controversies, in which tyrannicide was a favourite subject, and to which historicity was a matter of complete indifference. Heinemann and Goodenough have fallen into the same error as on ii. 244, in mistaking these fictions of the schools for sober history; though it must not be assumed that because they are worthless as evidence, Philo had not some other ground, historical or traditional, for his statements.

PHILO

§ 171. The temple. Possibly τὸ ἱερόν may have become in the διασπορά a conventional name for the synagogue as the best possible substitute for the temple, particularly in Alexandria where the synagogue is said to have been especially magnificent and famous (Jewish Encyclopedia, s.v. synagogue); and so too with the common collocation εὐχὰς καὶ θυσίας for the due performance of all religious rites possible.

On the strict seclusion of women indicated in this section Heinemann (Bildung, p. 234) quotes In Flaccum 89 (of the Jewish women in Alexandria) γυναῖκα κατάκλειστα μηδὲ τὴν αὔλειον προερχόμενα καὶ θαλαμεύμεναι παρθένοι, though he points out that it reflects Greek rather than Jewish ideas.

Goodenough cites a passage from the female Pythagorean Phintys, quoted in Stobaeus (Meineke, iii. 64), which in some ways curiously resembles this, but shews less strictness. Phintys's lady may go out duly attended not only to public worship but to see spectacles (θεωρίαι) and to shop.

§ 176. (Exclusion of women from gymnastic competitions.) The only evidence for this known to me is their exclusion from the Olympic games mentioned in Aelian, V.H. x. 1, and Pausanias, v. 6. 7. Elsewhere Pausanias, vi. 20. 9 (if the text is right) states that virgins were not excluded.

§ 181. (Penalties not corresponding to the crimes.) Goodenough, p. 137 says that the list of punishments here given follows those provided in Greek law for the several crimes. This seems to be only partially correct. The punishment for αἰκία was a monetary fine, and murderers were apparently allowed to evade the death-penalty by flying the country. But the punishment for τραύματα ἐκ προνοίας, i.e. wounding intended to kill, which perhaps may be equated with Philo's τραύματα καὶ πηρώσεις, was banishment, not ἀτιμία, which is a loss of civil rights not entailing banishment. It seems to be true that theft might sometimes be punished by a few days' imprisonment as a supplement to a manifold restitution of the things stolen, but what Philo here means is imprisonment instead of such restitution. I do not see any reason to think that he refers to any particular body of legislation.

The references given by Goodenough to Lipsius are to pp. 646, 605-607, 440, to which add for wilful murder, 603-604.

APPENDICES

§ 183. ἀποφράδες ἡμέραι. The idea suggested in the translation is that, as all religious rites are forbidden on these days, the action cannot desecrate them. Compare Lucian, Pseudologistae 12, where the performance of sacred rites is included among the things prohibited on the Apophrades. Something of the same sort appears in Laws 800 D, where Plato forbids the melancholy strains used at sacrifices as blasphemy and relegates them to the Apophrades.

It seems possible, however, that the contrast intended may be the opposite of this, namely that things which are lawful on the feast-days are intolerable at other times. Philo may be thinking of pagan usage around him and allude to the license allowed on public feast-days (cf. De Cher. 91 ff.). This will give ἀποφράδες ἡμέραι something more like its ordinary meaning. Days which are inauspicious for ordinary business will be still more inauspicious for unlawful actions.

§ 184. The most conspicuous and distinguished situation. Heinemann quotes Cic. De Natura Deorum, ii. 140 "oculi tanquam speculatores altissimum locum obtinent," but the thought there is somewhat different, rather of convenience than dignity, as it continues "ex quo plurima conspicientes fungantur suo munere."

§ 204. (The law of the millstone). Heinemann, who (Bildung, p. 430) gives ἱεταί ἐπ' ἀνδροφονίαν the somewhat stronger sense of "aims at murder," considers Philo's comments to be a rhetorical exaggeration, and that no such murderous intention on the part of the creditors is suggested by a law which merely prohibits the attachment for debt of an indispensable article. (Such laws are paralleled in other legislations, indeed in the Common Law of England, see Adam Smith ad loc. Goodenough (p. 142) aptly cites out of the Papyri an example from the Ptolemaic law of Egypt, where a farmer's cattle and tools and a weaver's loom are mentioned.) But Philo gives a natural interpretation of the strong phrase ψυχὴν ἐνεχυράζει. It must be remembered that he only notes this law incidentally to strengthen his point of the criminality of destroying a man's teeth.

PHILO
VOLUME VIII

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY
F. H. COLSON

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS
LONDON, ENGLAND

First published 1939
Reprinted 1954, 1960, 1968, 1989, 1999

LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY® is a registered trademark of the President and Fellows of Harvard College

ISBN 0-674-99376-4

Printed in Great Britain by St Edmundsbury Press Ltd, Bury St Edmunds, Suffolk, on acid-free paper.
Bound by Hunter & Foulis Ltd, Edinburgh, Scotland.

CONTENTS

PREFACE	vii
GENERAL INTRODUCTION	ix
LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS	xxv
ON THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV
INTRODUCTION	3
TEXT AND TRANSLATION	6
ON THE VIRTUES
INTRODUCTION	158
TEXT AND TRANSLATION	162
ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS
INTRODUCTION	309
TEXT AND TRANSLATION	312
APPENDICES
I. TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS , IV	425
II. TO DE VIRTUTIBUS	440
III. TO DE PRAEMIIS ET POENIS	451

PREFACE TO VOLUME VIII

THIS volume concludes the exposition of the Law which began in vol. vi., and also vol. v. of Cohn and Wendland's edition. There is only one other point which need be mentioned here.

As in vols. vi. and vii., I have made full use of the German translation published in 1906. The first of the three treatises here translated, Spec. Leg. iv., was the work of Heinemann, who also translated the three first books of the Special Laws, which formed the main part of my vol. vii. In the preface to that volume I said that I occasionally found myself differing from Heinemann as to the meaning of particular sentences and phrases. I say very much the same of his translation of this fourth book. But the translation of the other two treatises, the De Virtutibus and De Praemiis, comes from Dr. Cohn himself, whose labours on the text embodied in his great edition have earned the unbounded gratitude of every student of Philo. I have been startled by the number of times in which I find myself in disagreement with him, a disagreement extending beyond the translation to the text particularly in the cases where he seems to me to have printed unjustified emendations. Though it may sometimes seem disputatious, I have felt bound to record in the footnotes or appendix my reasons for differing from him, as what is only due to so high an authority.

PREFACE

As in the last volume, I am also indebted to Goodenough's Jewish Jurisprudence in Egypt and Heinemann's Philon's Bildung, but not to the same extent. Goodenough's discussion only extended to the first part of Spec. Leg. iv., and Heinemann's references are also less copious.

F. H. C.

CAMBRIDGE, December 1938.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

THE first ninety pages of this volume complete the survey of the laws referable to the Ten Commandments, and cover the eighth, ninth and tenth, though on a scale by no means commensurate with the 130 pages in which he treated the sixth and seventh in the preceding volume. Here the eighth is well exemplified from the particular laws. For the ninth Philo has said (De Decalogo 172) "that it forbids not only false witness but deceit, false accusation, co-operation with evildoers and using honesty for a screen for dishonesty, all of which have been the subjects of appropriate laws." Here he can hardly be said to make good the statement in the last clause. The third of these four points is dealt with fully, and perhaps the fourth, though incidentally. But after the discussion of witness in general this part of the treatise is mainly occupied with the qualities required of a judge, a matter which belongs rather, as he himself recognizes later, to the second half of the treatise on justice.

Though Philo has said (De Decalogo 174) that many ordinances fall under the tenth commandment he does not produce any except the dietary laws, and these are not really germane. Even if we admit his assumption that the flesh of swine and that of other animals are forbidden because they are the most appetizing, Moses is not forbidding the appetite but only the indulgence of it. The fact is that there are no specific laws to quote. For though the Pentateuch does enjoin or prohibit feelings as well as actions such as "thou shalt love thy neighbour" and the like, I do not think there are any except the tenth commandment itself which develops the thought "thou shalt not desire."

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The words "thy neighbour's," which are repeated so emphatically in the tenth commandment, as we have it and Philo also had it in the LXX, receive little attention from him. In this he follows the Stoic idea which conceives of the desire of what we have not got as a spiritual disease quite independent of whether it affects other people or not. Many forms of it of course lead to wrongdoing to others, as Philo points out in the disquisition on desire in general (§§ 79-94), but this is really incidental and is quite absent from the particular example given, namely gluttony, which occupies the rest of his treatment of this commandment.<sup>a</sup>

At this point comes the great break. The subject may be treated in another aspect. The commandments as a whole, and indeed each separately, inculcate all the virtues, and therefore if we classify the laws according to the virtues which they enjoin we shall still be referring them to the great Ten. The accepted list of the chief virtues both according to Plato and the Stoics is justice, wisdom or prudence, courage and temperance. To these Philo adds piety <sup>a</sup> The allegorical interpretation of the dietary laws is of course a digression, though a very natural one. The story of the quails which concludes this part is a law in the sense that it records the punishment which gluttony incurred.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

(εὐσέβεια), which with the Stoics at any rate is a subordinate virtue,<sup>a</sup> and humanity (φιλανθρωπία),<sup>b</sup> a term which, so far as I can judge, was not current in the schools. Of these, piety, wisdom and temperance have been treated earlier,<sup>c</sup> and there remain

<sup>a</sup> Defined as ἐπιστήμη θεῶν θεραπείας (see index S. V. F.). Cf. Quod Det. 55, where perhaps read θεραπείας (sc. ἐπιστήμην) for θεραπείαν.

<sup>b</sup> The curious description given of φιλανθρωπία in Diog. Laert. iii. 98 as from Plato does not suggest that it ranks among the virtues; there it is said to have three forms, (a) cordial hand-shaking and greeting, (b) helping anyone in misfortune, (c) liking to give good dinners (φιλοδειπνιστής). This is, I suppose, just a lexicographical account of the uses of the word which with its cognates is common enough; it does not appear at all in S. V. F. except in a quotation from Clement, who probably depends upon Philo. The later Stoics such as Seneca no doubt prized many of the qualities which it involves, but I am not clear whether even Roman Stoicism had any real equivalent. "Humanitas" seems to have a somewhat different connotation and to include good manners and culture. Possibly "caritas"—and De Car. as sometimes used as a title for this treatise—is the nearest. Compare Cic. Acad. ii. 140 "ruunt communitas cum humano genere, caritas, amicitia, iustitia aliaque virtutes," and the following from De Fin. v. 65 gives Philo's conception, though not in a single word: "Caritas humani generis quae . . . serpit sensim foras, cognationibus primum . . . deinde totius complexu gentis humanae."

<sup>c</sup> What does this mean? As stated on p. xiv, a treatise on εὐσέβεια actually existed, but if Cohn and Wendland are right in thinking that this once stood between the De Fort. and De Hum. it cannot be referred to here. Of special treatises on σωφροσύνη and φρόνησις there are no traces. And to satisfy the scheme these treatises should not be so much disquisitions on the virtues as on the special laws which illustrate them. Presumably therefore he means that the three virtues have been sufficiently exemplified in the laws discussed up to now. All of the laws grouped in the first two books on the first four commandments might fairly be said justice, courage and humanity. We proceed to justice, which in defiance of natural arrangement is included in this fourth book instead of in the De Virtutibus. The treatment of the subject keeps well to the point throughout, as may be seen from the analysis of the contents on page 5, and is copiously illustrated from the law book.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The treatise here printed under the title De Virtutibus, commonly regarded as consisting of four parts, on courage, on humanity, on repentance and on nobility of birth, raises several questions. One thing is certain, that the fourfold form presented here is the same as that in which it was read by Clement of Alexandria at the end of the second century A.D. Clement in book ii. 18 of his Miscellanies (Στροματείς) sets himself to show that the Old Testament scriptures enjoin all the virtues in the philosophical list, and to do so he makes copious use of the De Virtutibus as we have it. That is to say, nothing is taken from the De Iustitia in the fourth book. The borrowings, mainly of substance, but with an obvious colouring from Philo's wording, begin with the De Fortitudine, pass on to the De Humanitate, then to the De Poenitentia, and finally to the De Nobilitate.<sup>a</sup> to refer to εὐσέβεια, and those on sexual matters in Book III and the dietary laws in this book would fall under σωφροσύνη, but I do not see where any referable to φρόνησις are to be found.

<sup>a</sup> The source of these semi-extracts is unacknowledged perhaps because Clement regarded them as merely references to scripture to which his attention has been called by Philo. A little later, where he quotes a non-scriptural saying from the Vita Mosis, he names "Philo the Pythagorean" as his authority.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The first of these four components seems to me a poor piece of work, at any rate as far as the Exposition of the Particular Laws is concerned. The first seventeen sections, which praise fortitude in meeting misfortunes and difficulties, are not illustrated from the laws at all. He then notes the law which forbids a man to assume a woman's dress, which, as the converse that a woman must not dress as a man is coupled with it, is hardly a law promoting ἀνδρεία in the sense of courage. Passing on to courage in war, the only laws quoted are two which allow exemption from the duty of showing courage,<sup>a</sup> and the final account of the origin and conduct of the Midianite War is told to illustrate the promise that obedience will ensure either peace or victory and enjoins εὐσέβεια as much as or more than ἀνδρεία.

The next component in our list is the De Humanitate, but at this point Cohn and Wendland believe that a De Pietate originally stood. While I will not presume to contradict them I cannot accept this unhesitatingly.<sup>b</sup> Anyhow, as we know nothing about <sup>a</sup> Unless indeed this may be regarded as exemplifying the curious second part of the Stoic definition of ἀνδρεία, as knowledge of not only τὰ ὑπομενετέα but also τὰ οὐχ ὑπομενετέα.

<sup>b</sup> (1) Cohn and Wendland primarily rely on the opening words "the virtue closest to piety its sister and its twin, humanity is next to be examined." I do not think that these words necessarily or even strongly suggest that piety has just been examined. Piety (see iv. 147) is the queen of the virtues, while in § 95 below piety and humanity share the queenship. It is not remarkable that here when he passes on from the less royal "courage" to the more royal "humanity" he should note its kinship to the undoubted queen. On the other hand, by any ordinary interpretation the phrase "Of

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

it, we may pass on to what we have. The De Humanitate opens with some sections describing the last actions of Moses which are supposed to exemplify his φιλανθρωπία. In a sense they do this, but evidently their main purpose is to give a supplement to the piety we have spoken earlier" indicates that it is not to be treated in what follows.

(2) The traditional titles in the mss., see note (App. p. 440): apparently nearly all the mss, though not the oldest, S, include εὐσεβείας as Cohn does in the title which he prints and I have reproduced. One of these indeed gives the sub-title Περὶ εὐσεβείας to the De Hum. and omits φιλανθρωπίας altogether. Observation of this leads me to wonder whether the introduction of εὐσεβείας into the general title may be due to the fact that as noted above the De Hum. opens with the words τὴν δ' εὐσεβείας κτλ., from which the scribe or scribes drew the same inference as Cohn and Wendland have done. I put this forward more boldly since I have found that Schürer, Jewish People, ii. 3 (Eng. trans.), p. 346, takes this view. Again one ms. puts the sub-title Περὶ εὐσεβείας at the beginning of the story of the Midianite War and this suggests to me that the insertion of the word was supported by the belief that that story is concerned with piety even more than with courage. Still my knowledge of the general value of titles in mss. as evidence is not enough to allow me to do more than put forward these points for consideration.

(3) Harris's collection of fragments drawn from mss. of collections of parallels from the Fathers and others contains three items which purport to come from a treatise Περὶ εὐσεβείας. I suppose this is sufficient to show that a treatise existed under that name, and perhaps in combination with the mss. titles noted above there may be a presumption that it formed part of the De Virt. But this presumption has to meet the undoubted fact that Clement did not find it in his copy. Cohn indeed goes so far as to say that this shows that "iam antiquis temporibus videtur periisse." "Periisse" is a strong word, and I think Cohn should at least have noted that if it had perished in the second century, its reappearance in the next century only to perish again after some hundred years requires some explanation.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

Vita Mosis. Philo has there given a few sections to the last stage of Moses' life, but it is easy to understand that he was glad to take an opportunity of enlarging his account. After this the treatise proceeds in an orderly way through the main classes of human society, then to animals and finally to plants. It shows Philo at his best and includes some of his finest thoughts, and though many of us are not Wordsworthian enough to share his sympathy for plants, and the rhetoric of his denunciation of slaughtering the mother and offspring on the same day and seething the lamb in its mother's milk is extravagant, his thoughts about kindness to animals and particularly his words about the order not to muzzle the ox while treading out the corn show a spirit more to our mind than Paul's comment on that text "Does God take care for oxen?"

What of the two components which complete the book, the De Poenitentia and De Nobilitate? What is their connexion with the De Humanitate and with each other? Cohn, who says of the first "artissime cohaerere cum capite Περὶ φιλανθρωπίου nemo non videt," explains this very close connexion thus. When Philo has explained the humane precepts of the Mosaic law he turns to those who are still held captive in error and lead a vicious life and calls upon them to embrace the true faith and lead a virtuous life. I should accept this more readily if "or" were substituted for "and" in the phrase "and lead a vicious life." I do not think that the proselytes here occupy such an absorbing place in Philo's mind as Cohn seems to hold. No doubt they take the first place. Conversion to the faith is the first necessity for those outside the faith, but the second half of this short sermon is, I believe, addressed to those within the fold. He speaks to the people at large, neither to the proselytes nor to those who have definitely apostatized. He calls on all members of the Jewish Church to note how the former testify in their lives to the sincerity of their conversion and the latter lose all sense of morality (§ 182), and to deepen and strengthen the honour they give to God, "choose Him" in fact, and this will inevitably mean a better life. With this emendation and perhaps another to the effect that the call is based not merely on the De Humanitate but on the whole of the Exposition, I should accept Cohn's view as nearer to the truth than that implied in the title given in the various mss. which treat μετάνοια as one of the virtues. Repentance is not a virtue but a necessary stepping-stone to the virtues.<sup>a</sup>

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

According to Cohn the connexion of the De Nobilitate with the treatise which precedes it is that, as there the outsiders are urged to become proselytes, so here the Jews are urged to treat them with <sup>a</sup> According to the title in S it is one of the three virtues which Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. ii. 18, in his catalogue of Philo's works, declared to be the subject of the De Virt. Cohn, convinced that the De Piet. originally stood between De Fort. and De Hum., naturally concluded that the three are courage, piety and humanity.

May it be that while the incorporation of the De Iust. with the fourth book of the Spec. Leg., an arrangement presumably dictated by convenience of size, did, as we know from Clement, exist from early times, there were also libraries in which the arrangement dictated by sense prevailed? There is not a word in the text to suggest anything to the contrary. To Eusebius in this case the De Virt. began at Spec. Leg. iv. 132, and his three virtues are justice, courage and humanity. Whether this conjecture is plausible I leave for bibliographers to consider.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

affection and not with contempt. If this is the intention it is expressed with remarkable indirectness. Abraham and Tamar indeed are treated as converts from heathenism and the former is held out as the standard for proselytes, but nothing whatever is said of what is so often stated elsewhere that it is the duty of the Jews to cherish and esteem them. The treatise is in fact an essay on the Stoic paradox "the virtuous man alone is high born," similar to the Quod Omnis Probus on "the virtuous man alone is free," but with a far more religious and scriptural colouring. The moral to the Jews is primarily that their lineage will not in itself give them acceptability with God. No doubt this indirectly involves a warning against showing arrogance to outsiders in general and proselytes in particular, and if we must assume a connexion with the De Poenitentia,<sup>a</sup> and if Cohn is right in thinking that that sermon is entirely concerned with the proselytes, the point of the De Nobilitate will, however dubiously expressed, be what he says. But if the second half of the sermon is, as I think, a call to penitence in general, the moral of the De Nobilitate is rather the same as that of the Baptist "Bring forth fruit therefore worthy of repentance and think not to say within yourselves 'we have Abraham to our father.'"

A possible alternative, I think, is that although Clement found the De Nobilitate as part of the De Virtutibus, it ought not to be there. The mss. tradition <sup>a</sup> Such a close connexion is implied by the διὸ καὶ of F, adopted by Cohn (§ 187). The reading of the majority of mss. τοῖς δὲ is somewhat looser, and might conceivably be a harking back after the discussion on μετάνοια to the denunciation of arrogance which closes De Hum. (169 ff.).

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

is not against this, for the majority either omit it or put it in a different place, either after the Vita Mosis or after the De Confusione. Mangey placed it after the "curses" at the end of the De Praemiis, but a more unsuitable place can hardly be imagined than this, where the indestructible εὐγένεια of the nation has just been asserted. Equally futile seems the suggestion of Schürer that it is part of the Apology or Hypothetica. Indeed apart from the connecting conjunctions διὸ καί, καί or δέ, which may easily have been appended, the treatise will stand perfectly well by itself, and I should be glad to think it was so. For while the high level of the De Humanitate is adequately maintained in the short De Poenitentia, this final component shows a sad falling-off. Its thought rarely rises above the commonplace: the rhetoric of the speech of the personified εὐγένεια (§§ 195 ff.) is exceedingly stilted, and the last examples, not only Tamar but the harmony and virtues of the patriarchal family, border on absurdity.<sup>a</sup> While it suits him, as in the De Somniis, to idealize the Jewish Patriarchs for allegorical purpose, here allegory is not required and the perversion of history, quite unlike the sober story of the De Iosepho, is distressing. The De Virtutibus would gain much if we might suppose that the treatise was incorporated with it under the idea that εὐγένεια, as indeed in one sense it might, should rank among the virtues.

The De Praemiis has been described as an epilogue <sup>a</sup> Something of the same sort appears in De Praem. 65, but by no means so emphatically. Philo of course was familiar not only with the crime of the brothers against Joseph, but with the outrage of Reuben on Bilhah (Gen. xxxvi. 22 ; xlix. 4). See also note on Tamar, App. p. 450.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

to the whole Exposition. I am not sure that the description is very suitable, for sanctions after all are a necessary part of any law : at the end of Spec. Leg. ii. he has described the penalties attaching to breaches of the first five commandments and those incurred under the second five are frequently mentioned. But in this treatise both rewards and punishments attach to loyalty or disloyalty to the law as a whole and the Exposition would not be complete without them.

The difficulties which I felt about the components of the De Virtutibus do not arise in this treatise. Its scheme is perfectly consistent from first to last. Strangely enough, three of the four mss. which contain the work appear to treat the last part, the De Exsecrationibus, as a separate work, but its affinity to the part called by Cohn De Benedictionibus speaks for itself, while the unity of both parts with the first 78 sections, though broken by a lacuna at that point, is perfectly clear. I was in error when in the Introduction to vol. vii. p. xi I described De Praemiis as a treatise on rewards and punishments followed by another perhaps entirely separate on blessings and cursings.<sup>a</sup> The blessings and cursings are not <sup>a</sup> I wrote this under the influence of Prof. Goodenough's article in Harvard Theological Review, April 1933. At the end of this article, with much of which I agree, he pronounces that the blessings and cursings show a totally different spirit to the first part of De Praem. So strongly does he feel this that he suspects that they have been substituted for some different conclusion. To me it seems that what difference here is corresponds to the necessary difference between the indefiniteness of the unwritten laws which Philo finds in the patriarchal story and the definiteness of the written law expressed generally in the decalogue and specifically in the other laws. Goodenough rehearses the blessings without another, but the indispensable second half of De Praemiis. Indeed the words blessings and curses are misleading. They are the rewards promised and the punishments decreed for the future, as what precede them are those given in the past. We remember that Philo's conception of the Pentateuch, stated in De Abrahamo 6 ff. and Mos. ii. 47 and briefly in De Praemiis 2, is that the historical part containing the lives of saints and sinners constitutes a series of unwritten laws, while the actual law book legislates for the future. The scheme of the De Praemiis is in exact accordance with this.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The first part of the treatise follows in the main the scheme of De Abrahamo 1-59 with its two observing or at least without noting, that they are expansions verse by verse of what Philo finds mainly in Leviticus xxvi. and Deuteronomy xxviii. He declares that they lay upon the importance of the specific and literal laws an emphasis unique in Philo's works. They do lay an emphasis on obedience to the written law but so do the originals which he is expounding. But I see no grounds for saying that emphasis is laid on specific laws; both in the Pentateuch and in Philo the blessings and curses are appointed for loyalty and disloyalty to the law as a whole. The one example of reference to a specific law which Goodenough quotes does not belong to the main thread of the curses but to a transitional meditation in which an explanation is given of the phrase that in the desolation the land will enjoy its Sabbaths.

As Goodenough holds that the Exposition is intended for Gentile readers, he thinks that it is impossible that it should have ended in anything so Judaistic. I see no reason to change my view as given in the Introduction to vol. vii. that Philo writes primarily for Gentiles but also for Jews, and has at one moment the first, at another the second class of readers in view, but even if he was writing for Gentiles, why should they be offended by learning that the law promised high rewards for obedience and terrible punishments for disobedience and apostasy?

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

triads of Enos, Enoch, Noah representing hope, repentance and justice, and Abraham, Isaac, Jacob representing instruction, nature and practice. And as all these are thought of as values or qualities rather than actual men, the rewards are spiritual rather than material. So too with the family of the second triad, the founders of the twelve tribes who expand not merely into flourishing cities but into schools of wisdom and justice. So too with the one name which does not appear in the scheme of De Abrahamo, Moses. His rewards are the fourfold gifts of kingship, lawgiving, prophecy and priesthood, all conceived of as not mere offices but powers for doing good. The punishment of Cain is treated in something of the same mystical way, and how he would have dealt with Korah and with the two events<sup>a</sup> which I surmise to have been contained in the portion lost after § 78, the flood and the destruction of the cities of the plain, we have no certain means of knowing. But I should expect that they were treated literally. The true rewards are to Philo spiritual; punishments are punishments, though not merely vindictive but a means of reformation where possible and of admonition to others.

When we come to the blessings promised in the law for the future Philo has not the same opportunity of letting his mystical fancy range freely as it did in the historical past. These blessings are set down in black and white, chiefly collected in two particular chapters in Leviticus and Deuteronomy, and Philo reports them faithfully. Yet it is noteworthy how he takes the opportunity of giving them a spiritual touch where possible. The promise that the evil beasts will be destroyed is not merely read in the light of Isaiah xi. and other passages, but coupled with the necessity of first destroying the evil beasts within the soul (§§ 85 ff.). The promised victories are an opportunity for establishing good government among the conquered (§ 97), and the freedom from bodily disease is justified on the ground that a healthy body is the necessary condition for the proper working of the good mind in which God walks as in a temple and which is itself the crowning blessing (§§ 119 ff.).

<sup>a</sup> See note on the lacuna, App. p. 455.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The terrific curses are described with a vigour, perhaps unequalled, certainly unsurpassed in Philo's writings. They close in § 152 with the affirmation that the proselyte will be exalted to teach the world the lesson that the only true εὐγένεια is virtuous living. There follows a transitional meditation on the saying that in the desolation the land will enjoy its Sabbaths, ending with a suggestion of the hope of better things, and then his heart goes out in a burst of triumphant patriotism as he predicts the return of the converted remnant, led by the Divine Vision to the land of their fathers, who have all this time been watching over their children and interceding for them.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> I think, however, that we may regret that the last two sections where he develops the text "that the Lord will turn these curses upon thy enemies" show something of the vindictiveness which we find in some of the psalms, and also a conception of εὐγένεια as still latent in the apostate Israel, which is not quite the same as that of the De Nob. or § 152 above.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

NOTE ON THE SUB-TITLES AND NUMERATION OF CHAPTERS IN COHN'S EDITION

This is indicated throughout in the footnotes, but collected here for convenience.

Spec. Leg. iv.

The natural division of this gives four parts :

The eighth commandment . . . . .	§§ 1-40
The ninth commandment . . . . .	§§ 41-72
The tenth commandment . . . . .	§§ 79-135
On Justice . . . . .	§§ 136-end

Cohn, however, while marking the beginning of the ninth commandment by the heading Ὁὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις (De Falso Testimonio), continues the same numeration of chapters till § 55, when he gives the heading Τὰ πρὸς δικαστήν (De Iudice) and begins a fresh numeration. At § 79 with the tenth commandment we have the sub-title Ὁὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις (De Concupiscentia), and a third numeration which takes us on to § 135. Then a fourth numeration with the sub-title Περὶ δικαιοσύνης (De Iustitia), which continues only to § 151, when comes a fifth numeration, under the head of Κατάστασις ἀρχόντων (De Constitutione Principum), and this regardless of the contents goes on to the end. Cohn marks his sense of the unreasonableness of this last division in the heading of his pages—where the sub-title De Iustitia (following in brackets De Spec. Leg. iv.) is continued from § 136 to the end.

The arrangement in De Virtutibus is far less complicated. The four obvious divisions of De Fortitudine, De Humanitate, De Poenitentia and De Nobilitate, have all in Cohn's edition as in mine their proper sub-titles, and in his a fresh numeration for each.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

In De Praemiis Cohn, both in the headings and the numeration, ignores the point that at § 78 a new subdivision which he rightly calls De Benedictionibus begins, and his one new numeration comes at § 127 with the De Exsecrationibus. This he gives in the heading of the pages as the sole title, not as subtitle following De Praemiis in brackets. This is entirely contrary to his practice in the rest of the volume and is, I suppose, a concession to the fact that the mss., evidently wrongly, class it as a separate treatise.

The numerations then run as follows :

SPEC. LEG. IV.

	COHN	THIS TRANSLATION
De Furto et Falso Testi- monio . . . . .	i.-viii.	i.-viii.
De Iudice . . . . .	i.-v.	ix.-xiii.
De Concupiscentia . . . . .	i.-xii.	xiv.-xxv.
De Iustitia . . . . .	i.-iii.	xxvi.-xxviii.
De Constitutione Principum	i.-xiv.	xxix.-xlii.

DE VIRTUTIBUS

	COHN	THIS TRANSLATION
De Fortitudine . . . . .	i.-viii.	i.-viii.
De Humanitate . . . . .	i.-xxiv.	ix.-xxxii.
De Poenitentia . . . . .	i.-ii.	xxxiii.-xxxiv.
De Nobilitate . . . . .	i.-vii.	xxxv.-xli.

DE PRAEMIIS

	COHN	THIS TRANSLATION
De Praemiis et Poenis	i.-xx.	i.-xx.
De Exsecrationibus . . . . .	i.-ix.	xxi.-xxix.

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

SHOWING THEIR DIVISION INTO VOLUMES IN THIS EDITION

VOLUME

- I. On the Creation (De Opificio Mundi)
Allegorical Interpretation (Legum Allegoriae)
- II. On the Cherubim (De Cherubim)
On the Sacrifices of Abel and Cain (De Sacrificiis Abelis et Caini)
The Worse attacks the Better (Quod Deterius Potiori insidiari solet)
On the Posterity and Exile of Cain (De Posteritate Caini)
- III. On the Unchangeableness of God (Quod Deus im-mutabilis sit)
On Husbandry (De Agricultura)
On Noah's Work as a Planter (De Plantatione)
On Drunkenness (De Ebrietate)
On Sobriety (De Sobrietate)
- IV. On the Confusion of Tongues (De Confusione Lin-guarum)
On the Migration of Abraham (De Migratione Abrahami)
Who is the Heir (Quis Rerum Divinarum Heres)
On the Preliminary Studies (De Congressu quaerendae Eruditionis gratia)
- V. On Flight and Finding (De Fuga et Inventione)
On the Change of Names (De Mutatione Nominum)
On Dreams (De Somniis)
- VI. On Abraham (De Abrahamo)
On Joseph (De Iosepho)
Moses (De Vita Mosis)

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

VOLUME

- VII. On the Decalogue (De Decalogo)
On the Special Laws Books I-III (De Specialibus Legibus)
- VIII. On the Special Laws Book IV (De Specialibus Legibus)
On the Virtues (De Virtutibus)
On Rewards and Punishments (De Praemiis et Poenis)
- IX. Every Good Man is Free (Quod Omnis Probus Liber sit)
On the Contemplative Life (De Vita Contemplativa)
On the Eternity of the World (De Aeternitate Mundi)
Flaccus (In Flaccum)
Hypothetica<sup>1</sup> (Apologia pro Iudaeis)
On Providence<sup>1</sup> (De Providentia)
- X. On the Embassy to Gaius (De Legatione ad Gaium)
GENERAL INDEX TO VOLUMES I-X

SUPPLEMENT

- I. Questions and Answers on Genesis<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesin)
- II. Questions and Answers on Exodus<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Exodum)
- GENERAL INDEX TO SUPPLEMENTS I-II

<sup>1</sup> Only two fragments extant.

<sup>2</sup> Extant only in an Armenian version.

THE SPECIAL LAWS
(DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS)

INTRODUCTION TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, IV

The first part of this treatise (1-135) deals with particular laws falling under the eighth, ninth and tenth commandments. We begin with the eighth. Note that robbery with violence is a worse crime than mere stealing, which is punished by a two-fold restitution, so if the thief cannot pay he may be sold into temporary slavery (2-4). Some considerations follow showing that this is not too severe (5-6). A housebreaker caught in the act may be killed in the nighttime, but in daylight the ordinary legal process must be observed (7-10). Also the law provides a higher rate of compensation, if sheep and, still more, if oxen are stolen, reckoned, Philo thinks, according to the services they render to mankind (11-12). Kidnapping is another worse form of stealing, especially if the sufferer is an Israelite (13-19). Damage done by the trespassing of other people's cattle, or by fire started carelessly, also calls for compensation (20-29). Then follows an account of the complicated procedure laid down by the law when anything deposited or lent is stolen from the depositary or borrower (30-38). And this part concludes with shewing how stealing leads up to other crimes culminating in perjury (39-40).

The ninth commandment. We begin with false witness in the literal sense, but pass almost at once to the thought that assent to evil, especially when it arises from subservience to the multitude, comes under the same head (41-47). And so do the deceits of the practisers of divination, which is really false witness against God (48-54). So, too, does any dereliction on the part of judges, who must remember the sacredness of their office (55-58). Three of their special duties are emphasized by the law. First, not to listen to idle reports (59-61). Secondly, to receive no gifts, even if no injustice results. To do this is to forget that just and honest actions may be vitiated by being done with dishonest motives (62-66).

PHILO

This leads to a digression on the supreme importance of truthfulness and how it is often lost by bad associations in childhood and how it is symbolized in the place given to it on the breastplate of the high priest (67-69). Thirdly, the judge must not respect persons but must consider only the facts (70-71). And the particular injunction not in giving judgement to show mercy to the poor causes him to point out that the law calls also on the possessor of any authority to remember his weaker brethren and only means that the guilty cannot plead poverty to escape from punishment (72-77). We now pass on to the tenth commandment (78).

The commandment "Thou shalt not desire" leads to a long disquisition, much of it repeating what was said of it in De Decalogo on the evils which spring from the desire of what one has not got (79-94). The lawgiver realizing this showed the necessity of restraining concupiscence by regulating, as an example, one particular form, the appetite for food and drink (95-97). He did this, first, by demanding the first fruits (98-99). Secondly, by the dietary laws on the use of the flesh of beasts, fishes and fowls (100-101). All carnivorous beasts are on the prohibited list, and only ten species, which divide the hoof and chew the cud, are allowed (102-104). An allegorical explanation of these two qualifications follows (105-109). Of fishes only such that have scales and fins are permitted, and again an allegorical explanation is given (110-112). So also creeping things with few exceptions (113-115), predatory birds (116-118), flesh of animals that have died a natural death or been torn by wild beasts (119-121) are forbidden. Eating strangled animals and taking blood and fat are also forbidden (122-125). The need of restraint is illustrated from the story of the quails and the visitation that followed that craving for flesh (126-131).

So much for the particular laws falling under one or other of the Ten Commandments, but the cardinal virtues belong to all the ten, and we must note how these virtues are exemplified in various laws. For piety, wisdom or prudence and temperance, this has been done sufficiently. There remain three others, justice, courage or fortitude and humanity or kindness. The rest of this treatise is concerned with the exemplification of justice (132-135). We need not here repeat what was said about judges and law-courts when treating the ninth commandment, but before going on to our subject, we give some general thoughts on justice (136). First, there is the injunction to record the laws in the heart, on the hand and before the eyes and on the doors and on the gates (137-142). Secondly, that nothing is to be added or taken away, which may be taken to suggest that each virtue is a mean, which must not be allowed to degenerate into the extremes on the other side (143-148). Thirdly, that in the law, "not to remove the landmarks which thy forefathers set up," we may see a command to observe the unwritten law of custom (149-150).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV

Now for the exemplification of justice. First, as seen in the ruler or king. He must not be chosen by lot, a system which we see in ordinary matters to be absurd (151-156), but by election by the people, confirmed by God, and this ruler is not to be a foreigner (157-159). The ruler must copy out and study the law and its principles (160-169). Thirdly, he must follow the example of Moses in appointing subordinates to decide minor cases, but reserve the greater for himself (170-175). And the greater are those which concern not great people but the weak and helpless, the stranger, the widow and the orphan (176-178). And as orphanhood is the condition of the Jews as a nation (179-182), the ruler must use no guile but hold himself to be the father of his people (183-187). But the ruler or judge may sometimes find cases too difficult for him, in which case they are to be referred to the priests (188-192). Leaving the duties of the ruler, we have the following general rules of justice. There must be complete honesty in commerce (193-194). Wages must be paid on the same day (195-196). The deaf and the blind are not to be ill-treated (197-202). The ordinances about mating different species, ploughing with ox and ass together, and wearing garments of mixed material and sowing the vineyard to bear two kinds of fruit, are treated as rules of justice (203-207). This last is discussed at greater length as injustice to the land like the violation of the sabbatical year (208-218). Next we have the laws of warfare, willingness to make terms, severity if they are not accepted, but mercy to the women (219-225), and joined with this is the prohibition of destroying the fruit-trees (226-229). The treatise concludes with the praises of justice, the daughter of that equality which is the general principle of all life as well as of the cosmic system (230-238).

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΕΝ ΜΕΡΕΙ ΔΙΑΤΑΓΜΑΤΩΝ

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΑΝΑΦΕΡΟΜΕΝΩΝ ΕΝ ΕΙΔΕΙ ΝΟΜΩΝ ΕΙΣ ΤΡΙΑ ΓΕΝΗ ΤΩΝ ΔΕΚΑ ΛΟΓΙΩΝ, ΤΟ ΟΓΔΟΟΝ ΚΑΙ ΤΟ ΕΝΑΤΟΝ ΚΑΙ ΤΟ ΔΕΚΑΤΟΝ, ΤΟ ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΜΗ ΚΛΕΠΤΕΙΝ ΚΑΙ <ΜΗ> ΨΕΥΔΟΜΑΡΤΥΡΕΙΝ ΚΑΙ ΜΗ ΕΠΙΘΥΜΕΙΝ, ΚΑΙ ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΕΙΣ ΕΚΑΣΤΟΝ ΑΝΑΦΕΡΟΜΕΝΩΝ, ΚΑΙ ΠΕΡΙ ΔΙΚΑΙΟΣΥΝΗΣ, Η ΠΑΣΙ ΤΟΙΣ ΔΕΚΑ ΛΟΓΙΟΙΣ ΕΦΑΡΜΟΖΕΙ, Ο ΕΣΤΙ ΤΗΣ ΟΛΗΣ ΣΥΝΤΑΞΕΩΣ <ΤΕΛΟΣ>

- 1 I. Τὰ μὲν ἐπὶ μοιχείᾳ καὶ ἀνδροφονίᾳ καὶ ὅσα [335] | ἑκατέρᾳ τούτων ὑποστέλλει νόμιμα μετὰ πάσης ἀκριβείας, ὡς γε ἑμαυτὸν πείθω, λέλεκται πρότερον. τὸ δ' ἐπόμενον τῇ τάξει συνεπισκεπτέον, ὅ τι τρίτον μὲν ἐστὶ τῶν ἐπὶ τῇ δευτέρᾳ στήλῃ, τῶν δ' ἐν ἀμφοτέραις ὄγδοον, περὶ τοῦ μὴ κλέπτειν.
2 ὃς ἂν ἄγῃ ἢ φέρῃ τὰ ἑτέρου, μὴ δέον, εἰ μὲν βία καὶ φανερώς τοῦτο ποιῇ, κοινὸς ἀναγραφέσθω
[336] πολέμιος, | [γεγραφέθω] παρανομία συνυφαίνων

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 425.

<sup>b</sup> In the phrase ἄγειν καὶ φέρειν, ἄγειν, according to the

THE SPECIAL LAWS

BOOK IV

ON THE SPECIAL LAWS WHICH FALL UNDER THREE OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS, THE EIGHTH AGAINST STEALING, THE NINTH AGAINST BEARING FALSE WITNESS, THE TENTH AGAINST COVETOUSNESS, AND ON LAWS WHICH FALL UNDER EACH, AND ON JUSTICE WHICH IS PROPER TO ALL TEN, WHICH CONCLUDES THE WHOLE TREATISE.<sup>a</sup>

I. The laws directed against adultery and murder 1 and the offences which fall under either head have been already discussed with all possible fullness as I venture to think. But we must also examine the one which follows next in order, the third in the second table or eighth in the two taken together, which forbids stealing. Anyone who carries off 2 any kind of property <sup>b</sup> belonging to another and to which he has no right must be written down as a public enemy,<sup>c</sup> if he does so openly and with violence, because he combines shameless effrontery with lexicon, applies properly to animals, φέρειν to other property. But the phrase seems to have become almost proverbial to cover any kind of misappropriation.

<sup>c</sup> For the kind of punishment which this term implies see § 23.

PHILO

ἀναίσχυντον θράσος, ἐὰν δὲ κρύφα, λανθάνειν ἐπιχειρῶν φωρὸς τρόπον, αἰδῶ προκάλυμμα ποιούμενος τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων [τὸ σκότος],<sup>1</sup> ἰδίᾳ κολαζέσθω μόνον ὡν ὑπόδικος ὡν ἐπεχείρησε βλάπτειν καὶ κατατιθέτω διπλοῦν τὸ φώριον, ἄδικον ὠφέλειαν 3 ἐξιώμενος βλάβῃ δικαιοσύνη. ἐὰν δὲ ἄπορος ὡν ἐκτίνειν ἀδυνατῇ τό γε ἐπιτίμιον, πιπρασκέσθω—θέμις γὰρ ἐλευθερίας στέρεσθαι τὸν ὑπομείναντα κέρδους παρανομωτάτου δούλον εἶναι—, ἵνα μηδ' ὁ πεπονθὼς κακῶς ἀπαρηγόρητος ἀφελθεῖς διὰ τὴν τοῦ κεκλοφότος ἀχρηματίαν ὀλιγωρεῖ-
 4 σθαι δοκῇ. ἀλλὰ μηδεὶς ἀπανθρωπίαν καταγνώτω τοῦ διατάγματος· ὁ γὰρπραθεὶς οὐκ εἰς ἅπαν εἶται δούλος, ἀλλ' ἐντὸς ἑπταετίας ἀπαλλάττεται κοινῶ

<sup>1</sup> So Heinemann. Mangey <καὶ> τὸ σκότος. Cohn <δι'> αἰδῶ. As the thief does not necessarily steal in the dark, τὸ σκότος is absurd, and the insertion may be easily accounted for from § 7. As it is here printed, the phrase, as Heinemann points out, is exactly the same as Spec. Leg. iii. 54, of the guilty wife who confesses her sin and thus avoids the culminating guilt of ἀναίσχυντία.

<sup>a</sup> Philo could hardly have justified this from Ex. xxii., unless perhaps he argues that the permission to kill the housebreaker shows that the law took a severer view of violence. For analogies in Roman and other law see App. p. 425.

<sup>b</sup> This I think must be the meaning, though it gives the phrase a somewhat different sense from what it bears in § 7. Heinemann has merely “veils his crime in shame”; Goodenough “making a veil of shame for his sin.”

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 2-4

defiance of the law.<sup>a</sup> But if he does it secretly and tries to avoid observation like a thief, since his ashamedness serves to palliate his misdeeds,<sup>b</sup> he must be punished in his private capacity, and, as he is liable only for the damage which he has attempted to work, he must repay the stolen goods twofold<sup>c</sup> and thus by the damage which he most justly suffers make full amends for the injustice of his gains. If his lack of means makes<sup>3</sup> the payment of this penalty impossible he must be sold,<sup>d</sup> since it is only right that one who has allowed himself to become a slave to profit-making of an utterly lawless kind should be deprived of his liberty. And in this way the injured party also will not be turned away without a solatium or seem to have his interest neglected through the impecuniosity of the thief. No one should denounce this sentence as<sup>4</sup> inhuman, for the person sold is not left a slave for all time but he is released at or before the seventh year<sup>e</sup> under the general proclamation as I have shown <sup>c</sup> Ex. xxii. 4. LXX "if the thing stolen be left and found in his hand, from an ass to a sheep alive, he shall repay them double." Philo's generalization is supported by v. 7, where it says of goods stolen from a neighbour to whom they have been given to keep "if the thief is found, he shall repay double." So also v. 9. See also App. p. 425.

<sup>d</sup> Ex. xxii. 3, though this properly applies to the house-breaker.

<sup>e</sup> Heinemann translates "at the beginning of the seventh year," which will make better sense if ἐντός can mean this. I have understood it to mean that he is to be released at the sabbatical year, whether he has served a full six or not. But this involves a contradiction of Ex. xxi. 2, and of Philo's own statement in Spec. Leg. ii. 122, where liberation independent of the time served only applies to the Jubile, not to the sabbatical year.

PHILO

- κηρύγματι, καθάπερ ἐν τοῖς περὶ ἑβδομῆς<sup>1</sup> ἐδήλωσα.
- 5 καὶ ἀγαπάτω διπλοῦν ἐκτίνων τὸ φῶριον ἢ καὶ πιπρασκόμενος, ἀδικῶν οὐκ ὀλίγα· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι τοῖς οὖσιν οὐκ ἀρκούμενος περιττοτέρων ὀρέγεται, πλεονεξίαν, ἐπίβουλον καὶ δυσίατον πάθος, ἐπιτε-χίζων· δεύτερον δ' ὅτι τοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις προσοφθαλμιῶν καὶ ἐπικεχηνῶς τὰς ἐπὶ νοσφισμῶ πάγας τίθεται, τοὺς κυρίους ὧν ἔχουσιν ἀφαιρούμενος· τρίτον δ' ὅτι καὶ λανθάνειν ἐπιτηδεύων τὰς<sup>2</sup> μὲν ἐκ τοῦ πράγματος ὠφελείας μόνος ἔστιν ὅτε καρποῦται, τὰ δ' ἐγκλήματα τρέπει πρὸς τοὺς ἀναιτίους, τυφλὴν ἀπεργαζόμενος τὴν ἔρευναν τῆς ἀληθείας.
- 6 ἔοικε δέ πως καὶ αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ κατηγορεῖν, ὑπὸ τοῦ συνειδότος ἐλεγχόμενος ἐν οἷς ὑφαιρεῖται λάθρα, πάντως αἰσχυρόμενος ἢ εὐλαβούμενος, ὧν τὸ μὲν ἔστι σημεῖον τοῦ τὴν πράξιν αἰσχυρὰν ὑπειληφέναι —τὰ γὰρ αἰσχυρὰ αἰσχύνην ἐπιφέρει—τὸ δὲ τοῦ κολάσεως ἄξιον νομίζεσθαι, δέος γὰρ ἐμποιοῦσιν αἱ κολάσεις.
- 7 II. Ἐάν τις ἔρωτι τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἐπιμανεῖς κλέπτειν ἐπιχειρῇ καὶ μὴ δυνάμενος εὐπετῶς ὑφαι-ρεῖσθαι τοιχωρυχῇ νύκτωρ, προκάλυμμα ποιούμενος ὧν ἀδικεῖ τὸ σκότος, ἀλοῦς μὲν ἐπ' αὐτοφῶρῳ, πρὶν ἤλιον ἀνίσχειν, ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ διορύγματι πρὸς τοῦ δεσπότης τῆς οἰκίας ἀναιρείσθω,

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey and Cohn for mss. ἑβδομάδος. But see note on De Dec. 158 (vol. vii. p. 613) on the interchange of the two words.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐπιτηδεύοντας.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 5-7

in the treatise on the seventh day.<sup>a</sup> Nor 5 need he complain because he has to repay twice the value of the stolen goods, or even if he is sold. For he is guilty in several ways. First because dissatisfied with what he has he desires a greater abundance and thus fortifies the malignant and well-nigh deadly passion of coveteousness.
Secondly because it is the property of others which he eyes so avidly and sets his snares to secure for himself and deprive the owners of their possession.
Thirdly because the concealment which he also practises, while it secures him the profits of the business often for his sole enjoyment, leads him to divert the charge in each case to innocent persons and so blindfold the quest for the truth. It would 6 seem too that he is his own accuser, since his conscience convicts him when he filches in this stealthy way, for he must be actuated by shame or fear.
Shame is a sign that he feels his conduct to be disgraceful, for only disgraceful actions are followed by shame. Fear would show that he considers himself to deserve punishment, for it is the thought of punishment which produces terror.

II. If anyone crazed with a passion for other 7 people's property sets himself to take it by theft and, because he cannot easily manage it by stealth, breaks into a house during the night, using the darkness to cloak his criminal doings, he may, if caught in the act before sunrise, be slain by the householder in the very place where he has broken

<sup>a</sup> See Spec. Leg. ii. 122. The general proclamation apparently refers to that mentioned in Lev. xxv. 10, though that also applies only to the year of Jubile, and not to the ordinary sabbatical year. But see App. p. 426.

PHILO

[337] τὸ μὲν προηγούμενον | ἔργον ἔλαττον ἐξεργαζόμενος, κλοπὴν, τὸ δ' ἐπόμενον μείζον, ἀνδροφονίαν, <διανοούμενος, εἰ> διακωλύοι τις, ὀρυκτῆρσιν οἷς ἐπιφέρεται σιδηροῖς καὶ ἐτέροις ὄπλοις ἀμύνεσθαι παρεσκευασμένος· εἰ δ' ἥλιος ἀνάσχοι, μηκέθ' ὁμοίως αὐτοχειρία κτεινέσθω, πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ἄρχοντας καὶ δικαστὰς ἀγέσθω δώσων δίκας, ἃς ἂν
 8 ἐπικελεύωσιν οὗτοι. νύκτωρ μὲν <γὰρ> οἴκοι διατριβόντων καὶ τετραμμένων πρὸς ἀνάπαυλαν ἀρχόντων ὁμοῦ καὶ ἰδιωτῶν, οὐδεμία τῷ πλημμελουμένῳ καταφυγὴ πρὸς βοήθειαν, ὅθεν αὐτὸς ἔστω κύριος τῆς τιμωρίας, ὑπὸ τοῦ καιροῦ κατα-
 9 σταθεῖς ἄρχων καὶ δικαστής. μεθ' ἡμέραν μέντοι ἀναπέπταται δικαστήρια καὶ βουλευτήρια, ἐπλήθυνε δὲ τῶν συλληψομένων ἢ πόλις, ὧν οἱ μὲν φύλακες τῶν νόμων κεχειροτόνηνται, οἱ δ' ἄνευ χειροτονίας μισοπονήρῳ πάθει τὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἡδικημένων αὐτοκέλευστοι τάξιν αἰροῦνται· πρὸς οὓς τὸν κλέπτην ἀκτέον· οὕτως γὰρ τὰς ἐπ' αὐθαδείᾳ καὶ προπετεῖᾳ φεύγων αἰτίας δημοκρατικώτερον αὐτῷ 10 δόξει βοηθεῖν. ἐὰν ὑπὲρ γῆν ὄντος ἡλίου τὸν φῶρὰ τις αὐτοχειρία κτείνῃ πρὸ δίκης, ἔνοχος ἔστω, θυμὸν λογισμοῦ προτιμήσας καὶ τοὺς νόμους τῆς ἰδίας ἐπιθυμίας ἐν ὑστέρω θεί. μὴ γάρ, ἐπειδὴ νύκτωρ ἡδίκησαι, φαίην ἂν, ὦ οὗτος, ὑπὸ κλέπτου,

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "in the very act of breaking in." See Ex. xxii. 2, where the LXX has, as here, ἐὰν ἐν τῷ διορύγματι εὑρεθῆ (E.V. "found breaking in"). Josephus, Ant. iv. 271, has κἂν ἢ πρὸς διορύγματι τειχίου and understands it to mean "even though he has got no farther than the breach." So possibly also Philo by his αὐτῷ. On the exact meaning of διορύγμα and illustrations of the law on this point see App. p. 426.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 7-10

in.<sup>a</sup> Though actually engaged on the primary but minor crime of theft he is intending the major though secondary crime of murder, since he is prepared if prevented by anyone to defend himself with the iron burglar's tools which he carries and other weapons. But if the sun has risen the case is different; he must not be killed off hand<sup>b</sup> but taken before magistrates and judges to pay such penalties as they prescribe. For in the night time when 8 rulers and ordinary citizens alike are settled down at home and retiring to rest, the aggrieved person cannot seek out any one to succour him, and therefore he must take the punishment into his own hands, as the occasion appoints him to be magistrate and judge. In the day time however law courts 9 and council chambers stand wide open and there are plenty of people to help him in the city, some of them elected to maintain the laws, others who without such election are so moved by their hatred of evil that they need none to bid them to take the rôle of championing the injured. Before these must the thief be brought, for in this way the owner will escape the charges of wilfulness and recklessness and show that he protects himself in the spirit of true democracy. And if the sun is above the 10 horizon he must be held guilty if he anticipates justice by killing him off hand. He has preferred angry passion to reason and subordinated the law to his personal desire for vengeance. "My friend," I would say to him, "do not because you have been <sup>b</sup> Or "with his own hand," which is the only meaning admitted by the lexicon, but see note on Spec. Leg. iii. 91, where the meaning of "offhand" or "on the spot" seems required by the sense.

PHILO

διὰ τοῦτο μεθ' ἡμέραν κλοπὴν αὐτὸς ἀπεργάζου χαλεπωτέραν, οὐ τὴν ἐν χρήμασιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐν τοῖς δικαίοις, καθ' ἃ συμβαίνει τὴν πολιτείαν διατετάχθαι.

- 11 III. Τὰ μὲν οὖν ἄλλα φώρια τετίμηται διπλῆ καταθέσει. βουὴν δὲ ἢ πρόβατον εἴ τις ὑφέλοιτο, μείζονος ἡξίωσε δίκης προνομίαν διδοὺς ζώοις, ἃ καλλιστεύει τῶν ἐν ταῖς ἡμέροις ἀγέλαις οὐ μόνον εὐμορφία σώματος ἀλλὰ καὶ ταῖς περὶ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον ὠφελείαις. ἥς χάριν αἰτίας οὐδ' ἐπ' ἀμφοῖν τὴν ποσότητα τῶν ἐπιτιμιῶν ἴσην ὤρισεν, ἀλλὰ τὰς χρείας διαριθμησάμενος, ἃς ἐκάτερον παρέχεται τῶν εἰρημένων, ἀνάλογον καὶ τὴν ἔκτισιν
- 12 ἐνομοθέτησε. κελεύει γὰρ τέτταρα μὲν πρόβατα ἀποτίνειν βουῆς δὲ πέντε τὸν κλέπτην ἀνθ' ἐνὸς τοῦ ὑφαιρεθέντος, ἐπειδὴ πρόβατον μὲν φέρει δασμοὺς τέτταρας, γάλα καὶ τυρὸν καὶ ἔρια καὶ ἐτησίους ἄρνας, ὁ δὲ βουῆς πέντε, τρεῖς μὲν τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἐν γάλακτι καὶ τυρῷ καὶ γεννήμασι, δύο δ' ἐξαιρέτους, ἄροτον γῆς καὶ ἀλοητόν, ὧν ὁ μὲν ἐστὶν ἀρχὴ
- [338] σπορᾶς καρπῶν, | ὁ δὲ τέλος εἰς κάθαρσιν τῶν συγκομισθέντων πρὸς ἐτοιμοτέραν τροφῆς χρήσιν.
- 13 IV. Κλέπτῃς δὲ τίς ἐστὶ καὶ ὁ ἀνδραποδιστῆς, ἀλλὰ τοῦ πάντων ἀρίστου, ὅσα ἐπὶ γῆς εἶναι συμβέβηκεν. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἀψυχα καὶ τῶν ζώων ἃ μὴ μεγάλας ὠφελείας παρέχεται τῷ βίῳ διπλᾶ προσ-

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxii. 1. Philo, as also Jos. Ant. iv. 272, ignores the fact that the additional payment only applies if the animal has been killed or sold.

<sup>b</sup> For the supposed connexion of this explanation with Stoic doctrine see App. p. 426.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 10-13

wronged by a thief in the night time commit in daylight a more grievous theft, in which the spoil is not money but the principles of justice, on which the ordering of the commonwealth is based."

III. Other stolen goods then are to be paid for <sup>11</sup> at twice their value, but if the thief has taken a sheep or an ox the law estimates them worthy of a larger penalty, thus giving precedence to the animals which excel all the other domesticated kinds not only in comeliness of body but in the benefits they bring to human life.<sup>a</sup> This was the reason why he made a difference even between the two just named in the amount of the penalty to be paid. He reckoned up the services which each of them renders and ordained that the compensation should correspond thereto. The thief has <sup>12</sup> to pay four sheep but five oxen for the one that he has stolen because the sheep renders four contributions, milk, cheese, wool and the lambs which are born every year, while the ox makes five, three the same as the sheep, of milk, cheese and offspring, and two peculiar to itself, ploughing and threshing, the first of them being the beginning of the sowing of the crops, the second their end, serving to purge them when harvested and make them more ready to be used as food.<sup>b</sup>

IV. The kidnapper <sup>c</sup> too is a kind of thief who <sup>13</sup> steals the best of all the things that exist on the earth. In the case of lifeless articles and such animals as do not render high benefits to life, the <sup>c</sup> See Ex. xxi. 16, Deut. xxiv. 7. In Exodus the death penalty is decreed for manstealing in general according to the Hebrew, but in the LXX only if the person stolen is an Israelite. In Deuteronomy both versions limit it to Israelites. See App. p. 427 on this and § 19.

PHILO

τέταχεν ἀποδίδοσθαι παρὰ τῶν ὑφελομένων τοῖς κυρίοις, ὡς ἐλέχθη πρότερον, καὶ πάλιν τετραπλά-σια καὶ πενταπλάσια ἐν ταῖς ἡμερωτάταις ἀγέλαις 14 βοῶν τε καὶ προβάτων. ἄνθρωπος δέ, ὡς ἔοικε, τὸν καλλιστεύοντα κλῆρον ἔλαχεν ἐν ζώοις, ἀγχι-σπορος ὢν θεοῦ καὶ συγγενῆς κατὰ τὴν πρὸς λόγον κοινωνίαν, ὃς αὐτὸν καίτοι θνητὸν εἶναι δοκοῦντα ἀπαθανατίζει. διὸ καὶ πᾶς, ὅτῳ ζῆλος ἀρετῆς εἰσέρχεται, τραχὺς ἐστὶ τὴν ὀργὴν καὶ παντελῶς ἀμείλικτος κατὰ ἀνδραποδιστῶν, οἳ δουλείαν ἔνεκα κέρδους ἀδικωτάτου τοῖς γένει μὲν ἐλευθέροις φύσεως δὲ μετέχουσι τῆς αὐτῆς ἐπάγειν τολμῶ-15 σιν. εἰ γὰρ ἐπαινετὸν πρᾶγμα δεσπότηι ποιοῦσιν οἰκότριβας καὶ ἀργυρωνήτους, πολλάκις οὐκ ἐν μεγάλοις ὀνήσαντας, τῆς κατεχούσης δουλείας ἀπαλλάττοντες ἔνεκα φιλανθρωπίας ἢ κέχρηται, πόσης ἄξιοι κατηγορίας τυγχάνειν εἰσὶν οἱ τὸ πάντων ἄριστον κτῆμα, τὴν ἐλευθερίαν, ἀφαιρούμενοι τοὺς ἔχοντας, ὑπὲρ ἧς ἀποθνήσκειν καλὸν 16 τοῖς γεννηθεῖσιν εὖ καὶ τραφεῖσιν; ἤδη τινὲς τὴν σύμφυτον μοχθηρίαν προσαύξοντες καὶ τὸ ἐπίβουλον ἦθος αὐτῶν τρέποντες εἰς τὸ ἄσπονδον οὐκ [ἐπ'] ἀλλοδαποῖς μόνον καὶ ἀλλογενέσιν ἀνδραποδισμὸν κατεσκεύασαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἔθνους, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ δημόταις καὶ φυλέ-ταις, ἀλογήσαντες κοινωνίας νόμων τε καὶ ἐθῶν, οἷς ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐνετράφησαν, ἅπερ βεβαιο-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Plato, Rep. iii. 391 E, and note to Mos. i. 279.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 13-16

value by order of the law has to be repaid twofold to the owner by the purloiners, as I have said above, and again fourfold and fivefold in the case of the most domesticated kinds of livestock, sheep and oxen. But it is the lot of man, as we see, to occupy 14 the place of highest excellence among living creatures because his stock is near akin to God,<sup>a</sup> sprung from the same source in virtue of his participation in reason which gives him immortality, mortal though he seems to be. And therefore everyone who is inspired with a zeal for virtue is severe of temper and absolutely implacable against men-stealers, who for the sake of a most unrighteous profit do not shrink from reducing to slavery those who not only are freemen by birth but are of the same nature as themselves. If it is a praiseworthy 15 action when masters in the humaneness of their hearts release from the yoke of servitude their home-bred or purchased slaves, though often they have brought them no great profit, how great a condemnation do they deserve who rob those who enjoy liberty of that most precious of all possessions for which men of noble birth and breeding feel that it is an honour to die.

Indeed we 16 have known of some who improve on their inborn depravity and developing the malice of their disposition to complete heartlessness have directed their man-stealing operations, not only against men of other countries and other races but also against those of their own nation, sometimes their fellow wardsmen or tribesmen. They disregard their partnership in the laws and customs in which they have been bred from their earliest years, customs which stamp the sense of benevolence so firmly on

PHILO

- 17 τάτην ταῖς ψυχαῖς εὖνοιαν ἐνσφραγίζεται τῶν μὴ λίαν ἀτιθάσων καὶ μὴ ἐπιτηδευόντων ὠμότητα· οἱ χάριν κέρδους ἐκνομωτάτου πιπράσκουσιν ἀνδρα-ποδοκαπήλοις καὶ οἷς ἂν τύχη δουλεύσοντας ἐπὶ ξένης ἀνεπανάκτους, μηδ' ὄναρ τὸ τῆς πατρίδος ἔδαφος ἔτι προσκυνήσοντας ἢ χρηστῆς ἀπογευσομένους ἐλπίδος. ἦττον γὰρ ἂν ἠδίκουν ὑπηρετούμενοι πρὸς τῶν ἀνδραποδισθέντων· νυνὶ δὲ διπλάσιον ἀδίκημα δρῶσιν ἀπεμπολοῦντες, ἀνθ' ἐνὸς δύο δεσπότης καὶ διττὰς δουλείας ἐπιτειχί-18 ζοντες ἐφέδρους. αὐτοὶ μὲν γὰρ ἐπιστάμενοι τὴν παλαιὰν εὐτυχίαν τῶν ὑπηγμένων ἴσως ἂν μετα-[339] νοήσαιεν ὀψὲ λαβόντες οἶκτον τῶν ἐπταικότων, | τὸ τῆς τύχης<sup>1</sup> ἄδηλον καὶ ἀτέκμαρτον καταιδεσθέντες· οἱ δὲ πριάμενοι δι' ἄγνοιαν τοῦ γένους ὡς ἐκ πατέρων καὶ προπάππων οἰκετῶν ὀλιγωρήσουσιν, οὐδὲν ἀγωγὸν ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἔχοντες εἰς ἡμερότητα καὶ φιλανθρωπίαν, ἣν εἰκὸς ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐλευθέροις 19 σῶζεσθαι φύσει. δίκη δ' ἔστω κατὰ μὲν τῶν ἑτεροεθνεῖς ἀνδραποδισαμένων, ἣν ἂν τιμήση-ται τὸ δικαστήριον, κατὰ δὲ τῶν τοὺς ὁμοφύλους πρὸς τῷ ἀνδραποδίσασθαι καὶ πεπρακότων θάνατος ἀπαραίτητος· ἤδη γὰρ οὗτοί γε συγγενεῖς εἰσιν οὐ πόρρω τῶν ἀφ' αἵματος κατὰ<sup>2</sup> μείζονα περιγραφὴν γειννῶντες.
- 20 V. “Καὶ ἐν ἀγρῶ” καθάπερ εἶπέ τις τῶν πάλαι “φύονται δίκαι,” ἐπειδὴ πλεονεξίαι καὶ ὁ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἡμερος οὐκ ἐν ἄστει μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἔξω πόλεως ἐστίν, ἄτε μὴ τόπων διαφοραῖς ἀλλὰ δια-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ψυχῆς.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. καὶ τὰ.

<sup>a</sup> Source unknown.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 16-20

the souls of all who are not exceedingly barbarous nor make a practice of cruelty. For the sake of an 17 utterly unlawful profit they sell their captives to slave dealers or any chance comers to live in slavery in a foreign land never to return, never even to dream of again saluting the soil of their native country or to know the taste of comforting hope. Their iniquity would be less if they themselves retained the services of their captives. As it is, their guilt is doubled when they barter them away and raise up to menace them two masters instead of one and two successive servitudes. For they 18 themselves, as they know the former prosperity of those who are now in their power, might perhaps come to a better mind and feel a belated pity for their fallen state, remembering with awe how uncertain and incalculable fortune is, while the purchasers knowing nothing of their origin and supposing them to have generations of servitude behind them will despise them, and have nothing in their souls to incline them to that natural gentleness and humanity which they may be expected to maintain in dealing with the free born. The 19 punishment for kidnapping, if the captives belong to foreign nations, should be such as is adjudged by the court ; if they are fellow nationals whom they have not only kidnapped but sold, it is death without hope of reprieve. Yes indeed, for such persons are kinsfolk, bound by a tie closely bordering on blood relationship though with a wider compass.

V. "In the country also lawsuits spring up," says 20 one of the ancients.<sup>a</sup> Examples of greed and the desire for other people's property are found not only in the town but also outside its walls, since

PHILO

νοίαις ἀκορέστων <καὶ> φιλαπεχθημόνων ἀνδρῶν 21 ἐνιδρυμένους. ἀφ' οὗ καὶ τῶν πόλεων αἱ εὐνομώταται διττοὺς ἐπιμελητὰς καὶ ἄρχοντας αἰροῦνται τῆς κοινῆς εὐκοσμίας καὶ ἀσφαλείας, τοὺς μὲν ἐντὸς τοῦ τείχους, οὓς ἀστυνόμους προσαγορεύουσι, τοὺς δ' ἐκτὸς, οἷς ὄνομα οἰκείον τίθενται, καλοῦσι γὰρ αὐτοὺς ἀγρονόμους· ἀγρονόμων δὲ τίς ἂν ἦν χρεῖα τὸ πᾶν, εἰ μὴ καὶ τοῖς χωρίοις ἦσάν τινες ἐπὶ λύμη 22 τῶν πλησίον ζῶντες; εἰάν οὖν τις ποιμῆν ἢ αἰπόλος ἢ βουκόλος ἢ συνόλως ἀγελάρχης ἀγρὸν ἐτέρου βόσκη καὶ κατανέμη φειδῶ μηδεμίαν ποιούμενος μήτε καρπῶν μήτε δένδρων, ὅμοιον ἀποτινέτω 23 κτῆμα<sup>1</sup> προσόδου τῆς ἴσης. καὶ ἀγαπάτω τοῦθ' ὑπομένων, ἐπιεικοῦς καὶ σφόδρα συγγνώμονος τυ-χῶν τοῦ νόμου, ὃς αὐτὸν τὰ πολεμίων ἀσπόνδων ἐργασάμενον, οἷς τὰς ἀρούρας δηοῦν ἔθος καὶ φυτὰ ἡμερα διαφθείρειν, οὐχ ὡς κοινὸν ἐχθρὸν ἐτιμωρήσατο θάνατον ἢ φυγῆν ἢ τὸ γοῦν τελευταῖον, ἀπάσης στέρησιν τῆς οὐσίας, ὀρίσας, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ μόνον δικαίως ἐπανορθώσασθαι τὸ βλάβος τῷ 24 κυρίῳ. προφάσεις γὰρ αἰεὶ ζητῶν, αἷς ἐπελαφριεῖ τὰ ἀτυχήματα, δι' ὑπερβάλλουσιν ἡμερότητα καὶ

<sup>1</sup> So mss. Possibly τμήμα or τίμημα.

<sup>a</sup> For what is known about this official title see App. p. 427.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxii. 5. E.V. "of the best of his own field and of the best of his own vineyards shall he make restitution." The LXX has "he shall repay from his field according to its produce," a vague expression which might mean (or Philo might take it to mean) either that he made compensation with a piece of land or with the fruits. Heinemann, supposing that Philo meant the former, adopted Cohn's suggestion of τμήμα

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 20-24

that desire is based not on differences of situation but on the thoughts of insatiable and quarrelsome men. And therefore the most law-abiding states 21 elect two kinds of superintendents and magistrates to maintain the general safety and good order, one kind to act within the walls called "town warden," the other outside them bearing the appropriate name of "country warden,"<sup>a</sup> and what need could there be of the last if there were not people in the landed estates also who lived to do harm to their neighbours? So if anyone in charge of sheep or goats or a herd 22 of any kind feeds and pastures his beasts in the fields of another and does nothing to spare the fruits or the trees, he must recoup the owner in kind by property of equal value.<sup>b</sup> And he must suffer this without 23 complaining. The law has shown itself reasonable and exceedingly forgiving in its treatment of him. Though his actions are such as are committed in internecine war, where it is customary to lay waste arable fields and destroy the cultivated plants, it has not punished him as a public enemy by sentencing him to death or banishment, or at the very least <sup>c</sup> to forfeiture of his whole property, but merely called upon him to make good the damage to the owner. For since it always seeks pretexts for 24 alleviating the state of the unfortunate, so vast is

"a slice" for κτήμα. κτήματα (plural)=landed possessions, De Virt. 90, 100, and elsewhere, but κτήμα (singular) is a strange word for a piece of land. Philo possibly uses it because he feels uncertain between the two alternatives. If emendation is needed τίμημα might be worth considering. I take ὁμοιον to mean that the compensation is not paid in money.

<sup>c</sup> τὸ τελευταῖον, "the extreme of clemency," cf. De Ios. 249 and my note.

PHILO

τὴν ἐκ φύσεως καὶ μελέτης φιλανθρωπίαν, εὖρεν ἀπολογίαὺν οὐκ ἀπωδὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ νομέως, τὴν φύσιν τῶν θρεμμάτων ἄλογον οὖσαν καὶ ἀπειθῆ, καὶ 25 μάλισθ' ὅταν ὀρέγηται τροφῆς. ἔστω μὲν οὖν ὑπόδικος, ὅτι τὴν ἀρχὴν ἤλασε τὴν ἀγέλην εἰς ἀνεπιτήδειον χωρίον· μὴ πάντων δὲ τῶν συμβεβηκότων ἐχέτω τὰς αἰτίας, εἰκὸς γὰρ αὐτὸν μὲν τοῦ κακοῦ
 [340] | λαβόντα τὴν αἴσθησιν ἐξελαύνειν ἐπιχειρεῖν τάχιστα, τὴν δ' ἅτε χλοηφαγοῦσαν, ἀπαλῶν τε<sup>1</sup> καρπῶν καὶ βλαστῶν ἐμφορουμένην, ἀντιφιλονεικεῖν.

26 VI. Βλάπτουσι δ' οὐ μόνον κατανέμοντες βοσκήμασιν ἀλλοτρίας κτήσεις, ἀλλὰ καὶ πῦρ ἀπερισκέπτως καὶ ἀπροοράτως ἀναφλέγοντες. ἡ γὰρ τοῦ πυρὸς δύναμις ὕλης λαβομένη πανταχόσε ἄπτουσα νέμεται τε καὶ χεῖται, καὶ ἐπειδὰν ἅπαξ κρατήσῃ, σβεστηρίων ὅσα ἂν ἐπιφέρῃ τις ἀλογεῖ καταχρωμένη καὶ τούτοις ἀντὶ τροφῆς εἰς συναύξησιν, ἕως ἂν πάντα ἐξαναλώσασα αὐτὴ δαπανηθῇ πρὸς αὐτῆς.
 27 προσήκει δὲ μήτ' ἐν οἰκίαις μήτ' ἐπαύλεσιν ἀφύλακτον πῦρ εἶναι, ἐπισταμένους ὅτι σπινθηρ ἐντυφόμενος εἰς πολλάκις ἀνερριπίσθη καὶ μεγάλας ἐνέπηρσε πόλεις, καὶ μάλιστα ἐπιφόρῳ πνεύματι 28 ρυείσῃς τῆς φλογός. ἐν γοῦν τοῖς ἀσυμβάτοις πολέμοις ἡ πρώτη καὶ μέση καὶ τελευταία δύναμις ἐστὶ διὰ πυρός, ἢ πιστεύουσι μᾶλλον ἢ ταῖς πεζῶν καὶ ἰππέων καὶ ναυμάχων τάξεσι καὶ ταῖς ὀπλῶν καὶ μηχανημάτων<sup>2</sup> ἀφθόνοις παρασκευαῖς· πυρφόρον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἅτε.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ναυμαχητῶν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 24-28

the gentleness and humanity which it owes to nature and practice, it discovered a well-sounding plea to defend the grazier in the irrational and refractory nature of cattle, particularly when they hanker for food. The trespasser must therefore be held re- 25 sponsible to justice for originally driving the herd into a field where they ought not to be, but should not bear the guilt of all its results, for it may well be that when he perceived the harm they were doing he tried to drive them out as fast as he could, but they as they were browsing on the herbage and taking their fill of tender fruits and plants resisted his efforts.

VI. But people do damage not merely by grazing 26 their cattle on the property of others but also by starting a fire without circumspection or foresight.<sup>a</sup> For the force of fire when it has caught hold of the inflammable stuff shoots out in every direction and spreads itself abroad, and when it has once got the mastery it takes no account of any extinguishers applied to it and indeed makes full use of them as fuel to foster its growth until it has consumed them all and dies out from self-exhaustion. Now no one 27 should ever leave a fire unguarded either in house or outbuilding as he knows that a single smouldering spark is often fanned into a blaze and sets fire to great cities, particularly when the flame streams along under a carrying wind. Thus in bitterly con- 28 tested wars the chief instrument of efficiency first intermediate and final is fire, and on this combatants rely more than on their squadrons of infantry and cavalry and marines and their lavishly provided equipments of arms and engines. For a conflagra-

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxii. 6.

PHILO

- γάρ τις οἰστὸν βαλὼν καιρίως εἰς πολὺν νηῶν στόλον αὐτοῖς ἐπιβάταις κατέφλεξεν ἢ στρατόπεδα πολυάνθρωπα μετὰ τῶν παρασκευῶν, ἐφ' αἷς ἐπ-29 ἐποίητο τὰς τοῦ νικᾶν ἐλπίδας, ἐξανάλωσεν. εἰάν οὖν εἰς ἀκανθώδη φορυτὸν πῦρ ἐμβάλῃ τις, ὁ δ' ἀναφλεχθεὶς προσεμπρήσῃ ἄλλω πυρῶν ἢ κριθῶν ἢ ὀρόβων ἢ δράγματα ἀσταχύων συγκεκομισμένα ἢ βαθύγειον πεδιάδα χλοηφοροῦσαν, ἀποτινύτω τὸ βλάβος ὁ τὸ πῦρ ἐμβαλὼν, ἵν' ἐκ τοῦ παθεῖν μάθῃ τὰς πρώτας τῶν πραγμάτων ἐνστάσεις εὖ μάλα φυλάττεσθαι καὶ μὴ δύναμιν ἀήττητον καὶ φύσει φθοροποιὸν ἀνακινῆ καὶ ἀνεγείρῃ δυναμένην ἡρεμεῖν.
- 30 VII. Ἰερώτατον παρακαταθήκη τῶν ἐν κοινωσίᾳ πραγμάτων ἐστίν, ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ λαβόντος κειμένη πίστει. δάνεια μὲν γὰρ ἐλέγχεται διὰ συμβολαίων καὶ γραμμάτων, τὰ δ' ἄνευ δανείων ἐν χρήσει φανερώς διδόμενα τοὺς θεασαμένους ἔχει μάρτυρας.
 31 παρακαταθηκῶν δ' οὐχ οὗτος ὁ τρόπος, ἀλλὰ μόνος τις αὐτὸς δίδωσι μόνῳ κρύφα, περιβλεπόμενος τὸν τόπον, μηδ' ἀνδράποδον ἕνεκα τοῦ διακομίσει προσπαραλαβῶν, εἰ καὶ τύχοι φιλοδέσποτον· εἰς γὰρ τὸ ἀναπόδεικτον ἐκάτερος σπεύδειν ἔοικεν, ὁ μὲν ἵνα λάθῃ δούς, ὁ δὲ ἵνα ἀγνοῆται λαβῶν. ἀόρατῶ
 [341] δὲ πράγματι | πάντως ἀόρατος μεσιτεύει θεός, ὃν

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxii. 6, "If fire having gone forth finds thorns." The thorns were set as a hedge round the field (Driver).

<sup>b</sup> Editors quote Jos. Ant. iv. 285 παρακαταθήκην ὡς περ ἱερόν τι καὶ θεῖον χρῆμα (cf. § 33 below) ὁ παραλαβῶν φυλακῆς ἀξιούτω. Josephus goes on to emphasize the testimony of God.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 28-31

tion caused by a man shooting a fire-bearing arrow at the right place into a great fleet of ships has been known to consume it with the troops on board or to annihilate armies of considerable strength with the equipments on which they had rested their hopes of victory. Accordingly if a single 29 person sets a heap of thorns <sup>a</sup> alight and they burst into a flame which goes on to ignite a threshing floor full of wheat or barley or vetch or stacked sheaves of corn in the ear or rich soiled meadow land where herbage is growing, the person who lighted the fire must pay for the damage and thus learn by experience to guard carefully against the first beginnings of things and to refrain from stirring up and setting in action an invincible and naturally destructive force which might otherwise remain in quiescence.

VII. The most sacred of all the dealings between 30 man and man is the deposit on trust,<sup>b</sup> as it is founded on the good faith of the person who accepts it. Formal loans are guaranteed by contracts and written documents, and articles lent openly without such formality have the testimony of the eye-witnesses. But that is not the method of deposits. 31 There a man gives something with his own hands secretly to another when both are alone. He looks carefully all round him and does not even bring a slave, however loyal, with him to act as carrier, for the object which both of them evidently pursue is that it should be impossible to show what has happened. The one wishes that nobody should observe his gift, the other that no one should know of his acceptance. And this unseen transaction has assuredly the unseen God as its intermediary, εἰκὸς ὑπ<sup>1</sup> ἀμφοῖν μάρτυρα καλεῖσθαι, τοῦ μὲν ὡς ἀποδώσοντος ὅταν ἀπαιτῆται, τοῦ δ' ἐν καιρῷ 32 κομιουμένου. μέγιστον οὖν ἀδίκημα δρῶν ὁ παρακαταθήκην ἀρνούμενος μὴ ἀγνοεῖτω, ψεύσας μὲν ἐλπίδος τὸν ἐπιτρέψαντα, μοχθηρὰ δ' ἦθη κατασκεπάσας<sup>2</sup> λόγοις ἐπεικέσιν, ἀπιστίαν δὲ καθυποκρινάμενος νόθην πίστιν, ἀσυμβάτους ἀποφήνας δεξιὰς καὶ ἀτελεῖς ὄρκους· ὡς ἀνθρωπείων τε καὶ θείων ὀλιγωρηκένας καὶ διττὰς ἀρνεῖσθαι παρακαταθήκας, τὴν μὲν τοῦ τὰ οἰκεία ἐπιτρέψαντος, τὴν δὲ τοῦ ἀψευδεστάτου μάρτυρος, ὃς τὰ πάντων ἐφορᾷ καὶ τὰ πάντων ἐπακούει καὶ προαιρουμένων

PHILO

 33 καὶ μὴ θελόντων. ἐὰν δ' ὁ μὲν λαβὼν ὡς ἱερὸν χρῆμα παρακαταθήκην ἄψαυστον οἴηται δεῖν φυλάττειν, σέβων ἀλήθειάν τε καὶ πίστιν, οἱ δὲ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἔφεδροι βαλαντιοτόμοι καὶ τοιχωρύχοι παρεισφθαρέντες ὑφέλωνται, συλληφθέντες ἐκτινέτωσαν ἐπιτίμια διπλᾶ [τὰ κλεπτῶν εὐρεθέντα].<sup>3</sup>
 34 εἰ δὲ μὴ συλληφθεῖεν οὗτοι, προσίτω<sup>4</sup> γνώμη ἐκουσίῳ ὁ λαβὼν εἰς τὸ θεῖον δικαστήριον καὶ ἀνατείνας τὰς χεῖρας εἰς οὐρανὸν ὀμνύτω κατ'

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπ'.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κατασκευάσας.

<sup>3</sup> These words are expelled as a gloss by Cohn following Mangey. But what did the supposed gloss mean? Mangey himself suggested as an alternative τὰ κατὰ κλεπτῶν ὀρισθέντα (cf. §§ 2 and 11 above), which I should be inclined to adopt.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. προεῖτω or προίτω.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. whether their actions and words are genuine or not. This no doubt gives a rather strained meaning to τῶν μὴ θελόντων. Perhaps as Mangey "cum voluntarie tum involuntarie agentium." But this, though an antithesis constantly recurring in Philo, seems irrelevant here. Heinemann, "whether they wish (to be seen and heard) or not," "mag es to whom both naturally appeal as their witness, one that he will restore the property when demanded, the other that he will recover it at the proper time. So then he who repudiates a deposit 32 must be assured that he acts most wrongfully. He deceives the hopes of the friend who confided his goods to him. He has disguised under fair words the vileness of his character. In the faithlessness of his heart he has assumed the mask of a bastard faithfulness. The assurance of the hands given and taken is rendered null and void, the oaths are unfulfilled. Thus he has set at nought both the human and the divine and repudiated two trusts, one that of him who consigned his property, the other that of the most veracious of witnesses who sees and hears all whether they intend or do not wish to do what they say.<sup>a</sup> But if the deposit, which 33 the receiver accepts as something sacred and feels bound to keep unharmed because of his reverence for truth and good faith, is purloined by stealthy mischievous intruders, cutpurses and burglars on the watch to take what does not belong to them, the offenders if caught must pay a fine of double the value.<sup>b</sup> If they are not caught the receiver of 34 the trust must go of his own freewill to the court of God<sup>c</sup> and with hands stretched out to heaven ihnen lieb oder unlieb sein," also seems pointless and besides misses the sense of intention in προαιρουμένων.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 31-34

<sup>b</sup> See Ex. xxii. 7.

<sup>c</sup> Ex. xxii. 8 "come near unto God," v. 9 "before God." LXX in both places ἐνώπιον θεοῦ, a phrase which, whatever it may have meant in the original, is interpreted by Philo as appealing to the judgement of God. The phrase δικαστήριον θεῶν frequently appears in Philo; see in this volume De Virt. 171, De Praem. 69.

PHILO

ἐξωλείας ἑαυτοῦ, μήτε τι μέρος τῆς παρακαταθήκης νοσφίσασθαι μήτε ἑτέρω κοινοπραγήσαι μήτε ὅλως συνεπιψεύσασθαι κλοπῆν οὐ γενομένην· ἄτοπον γὰρ ἢ τὸν μηδὲν ἡδικηκότα ζημιοῦν ἢ τὸν συνδραμόντα εἰς φίλου πίστιν ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἀδικηθέντα βλάβης αἴτιον ἐκείνῳ γενέσθαι.

- 35 Παρακαταθήκαι δ' οὐ μόνον ἐν ἀψύχοις εἰσίν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ζώοις, ὧν διττὸς ὁ κίνδυνος, ὁ μὲν πρὸς τὰ ἄψυχα κοινὸς διὰ κλοπῆς, ὁ δὲ ἴδιος καὶ ἐξαίρετος διὰ θανάτου. λέλεκται μὲν οὖν περὶ τοῦ προτέρου, χρῆ δὲ καὶ περὶ τοῦ δευτέρου προσνομο-36 θετεῖν. εἰάν οὖν (ἐν) παρακαταθήκῃ θρέμματα τελευτήσῃ, μεταπεμφάσθω τὸν ἐπιτρέψαντα ὁ λαβῶν καὶ ἐπιδεικνύτω, φαύλης ὑπονοίας ῥυόμενος ἑαυτόν· εἰ δὲ ἔκδημος ὧν τυγχάνοι, καλεῖν μὲν

<sup>a</sup> A phrase borrowed from Demosthenes. See examples in lexicon.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxii. 8. E.V. "to see whether he have not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods." LXX "that he has not acted wickedly about the whole (i.e. any part, Philo τι μέρος) of the deposit." Philo gives a very reasonable expansion of the oath.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. if he is not allowed to exculpate himself by an oath.

<sup>d</sup> The translation is an attempt to retain something of the curious double ἢ. The two things mentioned are not alternatives, but would both result if the depositor had to make good the theft.

<sup>e</sup> For this section see Ex. xxii. 9-13. Philo's explanation is a simplification of what, particularly in the LXX, is a confusing passage. In v. 9 it is stated that in the case of any loss, animals included, the disputants will appear "before God" and the person convicted will pay compensation. The verse, which may be out of place, does not seem to refer particularly to deposits, but coming where it does, Philo would naturally conclude that it did so refer, and sup-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 34-36

swear under pain of his own perdition<sup>a</sup> that he has not embezzled any part of the deposit nor abetted another in so doing nor joined at all in inventing a theft which never took place.<sup>b</sup> Otherwise<sup>c</sup> an innocent party would be mulcted and the person who ran to avail himself of the good faith of a friend would on account of the wrong he has suffered from others cause injury to that friend, and either of these is preposterous.<sup>d</sup>

But deposits include not only inanimate things<sup>35</sup> but living animals who are liable to be endangered in two ways: one by theft which they share with the inanimate, the other by death which is peculiar to themselves. The first of these has been dealt with above and we must proceed to lay down laws for the second. <sup>e</sup>So if any animal left in trust dies<sup>36</sup> the person who has accepted the trust must send for the consigner and show him the dead body, thus shielding himself against any suspicion of dishonesty. If the consigner is absent from home, it would not be right for the caretaker to summon pose that it means that the oath, unless shown to be false, would clear the depositary. Verses 10-12 state that if an animal deposited in trust has been wounded or dies or has been carried away captive, "and no one knows it," the oath will clear him, but adds that if it is stolen, the depositary must make it good. Verse 13 says that if it has been torn by wild beasts, he must take the owner to the fragments of the corpse (ἀξει ἐπὶ τὴν θήραν) and so clear himself. Philo ignores the difficulty in v. 12, "if it has been stolen he shall pay compensation," and falls back upon the general principle that the oath is to be trusted. Also from the statement that the fragments of the torn animal are sufficient evidence, he seems to argue that the same must hold good of any dead animal if the owner is accessible, and that therefore the oath in this case is not needed.

PHILO

- έτέρους οὐχ ἀρμόττον, οὓς λανθάνειν ἐσπούδασεν ἴσως ὁ πιστεύσας, ὀμνύναι δ' ἀναγκαῖον ἐπανήκοντι περὶ τοῦ μὴ ἐπισκιάζειν ἐψευσμένῳ θανάτῳ νο-* 37 σφισμὸν ἄδικον. ἔαν δὲ λάβῃ τις μὴ ὡς παρα- καταθήκην ἀλλ' ἔνεκα τοῦ χρήσασθαι δεόμενος σκεῦος ἢ ζῶον, ἔπειτα [εἰ τὰ]<sup>1</sup> ἀμφότερα κλαπῆ ἢ τὸ ζῶον ἀποθάνῃ, συνδιατρίβοντος μὲν τοῦ χρή- σαντος ὁ λαβὼν ὑπόδικος οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο, τοῦ μὴ σκήπτεσθαι μάρτυρι χρώμενος ἐκείνῳ, μὴ συν- 38 διατρίβοντος δὲ ἀποτινύτω. διὰ τί; ὅτι ἐνδέχεται μὴ παρόντος τοῦ κυρίου τὸν χρώμενον ἢ πόνους ἀποτρῦσαι συνεχέσι τὸ ζῶον, ὡς ἀποκτεῖναι, ἢ [342] παρarrῦψαι | τὸ σκεῦος ὀλιγωρήσαντα τοῦ ἄλλο- τρίου, ταμιεύειν δέον καὶ μὴ παρέχειν εὐμάρειαν εἰς ὑφαίρεσιν κλέπταις.
 39 Ἄκολουθίαν δ' εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος δεινὸς ὢν θεάσα- σθαι πραγμάτων ἀπαγορεύσεις ἐπαλλήλους ἐξῆς νομοθετεῖ, στοχαζόμενος εἰρμοῦ καὶ συνωδὰ τοῖς προτέροις τὰ ἐπόμενα συνυφαίνων. τὴν δὲ τῶν λέγεσθαι μελλόντων ἀρμονίαν χρησμῶ θεσπισθῆναί

<sup>1</sup> The ungrammatical εἰ τὰ with the subjunctive, which Cohn brackets, would easily slip in after ἔπειτα. Mangey retaining it has κλαπεῖη and ἀποθάνοι without ms. authority. Wendland suggested ἢ τὰ with fair probability. Stephanus states that ἀμφότερα preceded by the article is only found in N.T. and later writers. But see ταῖς ἀμφοτέραις, § 129.

<sup>a</sup> For this section see Ex. xxii. 14, 15. lxx "If anyone ask from his neighbour and it is wounded (or broken) or die or is carried away captive, and the owner is not with it, he shall make compensation. But if the owner is with it, he shall not make compensation." Philo interprets the request (or borrowing) to apply to other things besides animals, and other people from whom the depositor may have wished to keep the matter secret, but when he has come home he must swear to him to show that he is not using a fictitious death to cloak an embezzlement. <sup>a</sup> But if any utensil or any animal has <sup>37</sup> been received not as a trust but for his use in response to a request and then either <sup>b</sup> of these is stolen, or the animal dies, the borrower will not be responsible if the lender is living on the spot, since he can call him to witness that there is no pretence. If he is not living on the spot the borrower must make good the loss. Why is this? <sup>38</sup> Because in the absence of the owner the borrower may either have worn out the animal by constantly overworking it and so have caused its death, or may have risked <sup>c</sup> the loss of the utensil out of carelessness for what is another man's property, whereas he is bound to keep it carefully and not provide thieves with facilities for carrying it off.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 36-39

The lawgiver with his unsurpassed power of discerning how things follow each other gives a series of successive prohibitions in which he aims at logical connexion, and makes a harmonious combination of the subsequent with the preceding. He tells us that this accordance between each thing said and “carried away captive” (αἰχμάλωτον γένηται) to include stealing, and “be with it,” which presumably means that he is present when the mishap occurs, to mean as above, “be accessible.” The last half of the verse, which is very obscure, he leaves alone.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. “both,” meaning that both are liable to be stolen, but not to die.

<sup>c</sup> Heinemann “thrown aside.” Mangey “temere projecisse.” The meaning given above, which is a quite common use of παρρηπίπτω, seems to me more suitable to the context.

PHILO

φησιν ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ θεοῦ τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· “οὐ κλέψετε καὶ οὐ ψεύσεσθε καὶ οὐ συκοφαντή-σετε τοὺς πλησίον ὑμῶν· καὶ οὐκ ὀμείσθε τῷ ὀνόματί μου ἐπ’ ἀδίκῳ καὶ τὸ ἐμὸν ὄνομα οὐ βεβηλώσετε”· παγκάλως καὶ σφόδρα παιδευτικῶς· 40 ὃ τε γὰρ κλέπτῃς ὑπὸ τοῦ συνειδότος ἐλεγχόμενος ἀρνεῖται καὶ ψεύδεται, δεδιὼς τὰς ἐκ τοῦ ὁμολογή-σαι τιμωρίας, ὃ τε ἀρνούμενος ἐτέρῳ σπουδάζων προσβάλλειν τὸ ἔγκλημα συκοφαντεῖ καὶ τέχνας ἐπινοεῖ, δι’ ὧν εὐλογον εἶναι δόξει τὸ συκοφάντημα, πᾶς τε συκοφάντης εὐθύς ἐστιν ἐπίορκος, ὀλίγα φροντίζων εὐσεβείας· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ<sup>1</sup> ἐλέγχων ἀπορεῖ δικαίων, ἐπὶ τὴν ἄτεχνον λεγομένην πίστιν καταφεύγει, τὴν δι’ ὄρκων, οἰόμενος κατακλήσει θεοῦ πίστιν ἐργάζεσθαι τοῖς ἀκούουσιν. ἀνίερος δ’ ὁ τοιοὔτος ὧν καὶ βέβηλος ἴστω, μιαίνων τὸ ἀμίαντον φύσει ἀγαθὸν καὶ<sup>2</sup> θεῖον ὄνομα.

Οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις<sup>3</sup>

41 VIII. Ἐνατον μὲν ἐστὶ τουτὶ τῶν δέκα κεφαλαίων, τῶν δὲ ἐν τῇ δευτέρᾳ στήλῃ τὸ τέταρτον ἀριθμῶ, μυρία δὲ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον ὀνήσαι δυνά-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπειδήπερ.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn rejects ἀγαθὸν καὶ, on the grounds that ἀγαθὸν is an unsuitable epithet, and Mangey’s proposal of ἅγιον or ἀγαστὸν because of the hiatus after φύσει. See App. p. 428.

<sup>3</sup> This heading stands on quite a different footing from the rest, as the allusion to it in τουτὶ below shows it to be indispensable. Possibly it should be printed in line with ἔνατον rather than as a heading.

<sup>a</sup> Or simply as Heinemann and Mangey, “what is about to be said,” or “has to be said.” The translation given above is based on a feeling that as τῶν μελλόντων so taken

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 39-41

each thing still to be said <sup>a</sup> is proclaimed in an oracle spoken by God in his own person in the following terms "Ye shall not steal and ye shall not lie and ye shall not bring false accusations against your neighbours and ye shall not swear in my name to an injustice and ye shall not profane my name."<sup>b</sup> Excellent indeed and full of instructions, for the 40 thief convicted by his conscience disowns the deed and lies through fear of the punishment which confession entails. Then he who disowns his deed in his eagerness to fasten the charge on someone else brings a false accusation and devises schemes to make the accusation seem probable. And every such accuser is necessarily a perjurer with little regard for piety, for since he lacks just arguments he takes refuge in the unscientific <sup>c</sup> method of proof, as it is called, namely that of oaths, because he thinks that by appeal to God he makes his hearers believe him. Such a one may be assured that he is unholy and profane, since he pollutes the good name which is by nature unpolluted, the name of God.

VIII. "Thou shalt not bear false witness." This 41 is the ninth of the ten heads but the fourth in number of those on the second table. Numberless are the blessings which it can bring to human life if kept, is somewhat pointless, Philo may be carrying on the thought of the previous sentence that each clause is the precursor of the next and leads up to it as its natural consequence. See App. p. 427.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xix. 11, 12.

<sup>c</sup> Or inartistic, inartificial. See note on De Plant. 173, and reference to Aristot. Rhet. i. 15. 2. The five inartistic proofs are laws, witnesses, contracts and documents, torture, oaths. See further App. p. 428.

PHILO

μενον, εἰ φυλάττοιτο, ὡς καὶ τούναντίον ἀμελού-42 μενον βλάψαι. ψεκτὸς μὲν γὰρ ὁ συκοφάντης, ὁ δὲ τὰ ψευδῆ μαρτυρῶν μᾶλλον ὑπαίτιος· ὁ μὲν γὰρ αὐτῷ βοηθῶν, ὁ δ' ἄλλω συμπράττων πονηρός 43 ἄμαρτάνων τοῦ δι' ἕτερον ἦττον ἄδικος. καὶ τὸν μὲν κατήγορον ὑποβλέπεται πᾶς δικαστῆς ὡς ὀλίγα φροντίζοντα τῆς ἀληθείας ἔνεκα τοῦ περιγενέσθαι, διὸ καὶ προοιμίῳν ἐδέησεν εἰς προσοχὴν ἀκροατοῦ τῷ λέγοντι· τοῦ δὲ μαρτυροῦντος μηδὲν ἐπ' αὐτῷ προπεπονθῶς ὑπουλον ἐλευθέρα γνώμη καὶ ἀναπεπταμένοις ὡσὶν ἀνέχεται, πίστιν καὶ ἀλήθειαν ὑποδουομένου, [τὸ] πραγμάτων μὲν ὠφελιμωτάτων τὰ ὀνόματα, ὀνομάτων δὲ προσαγωγότατα,<sup>1</sup> <οἷς> καθἀπερ δελείασιν ἐπὶ θήρα χρῆται ὧν ὀρέγεται καὶ 44 ποθεῖ. διὸ πολλαχοῦ παραινεί τῆς νο-μοθεσίας ἀδίκῳ μηδενὶ συναινεῖν, μήτε ἀνθρώπῳ μήτε πράγματι· προκαλεῖται γὰρ ἢ συναίνεσις ἐφ' ὑγιεῖ μὴ γενομένη τὰ ψευδῆ μαρτυρεῖν, ἐπεὶ καὶ [343] πᾶς, | ὅτῳ πρόσαντες καὶ ἐχθρὸν τὸ ἄδικον, ἀλη-
 45 θεία φίλος. ἐνὶ μὲν οὖν μοχθηρῷ μὴ συναπονη-θῆναι θαυμαστὸν οὐδὲν εἰς τὰ ὅμοια προκαλουμένῳ, πλήθει δὲ ἐπὶ παρανομίαν<sup>2</sup> οἷα κατὰ πρανοῦς ἀθρόα ῥύμη φερομένῳ μὴ συνενεχθῆναι γενναίας ψυχῆς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προσαγωγότατος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. παρανομία (= -α).

---

<sup>a</sup> As this only applies to consenting to injustice many examples no doubt could be found, e.g. Ex. xxiii. 7 "thou shalt keep away from every unjust word," Lev. xix. 15, Deut. xvi. 19, 20. The further thought that consenting to an injustice involves supporting what we know to be false and therefore is a breach of the ninth commandment has its source in Ex. xxiii. 1, 2, where "thou shalt not join with the numberless on the other hand the injuries which it causes if disregarded ; for reprehensible as is the 42 false accuser his guilt is less than that of the bearer of false witness. The former acts as his own champion, the latter as the accomplice of another, and if we compare one bad man with another the iniquity of one who sins for his own sake is less than his who sins for the sake of another. The 43 judge looks with disfavour on the accuser as a person who cares little for truth in his eagerness to win his case, and this is the reason why introductory addresses are required to secure the attention of the hearer to the speaker. But the judge starts with no lurking feelings of hostility to the witness and therefore he listens with a free judgement and open ears, while the other assumes the mask of good faith and truth, names indeed of the most valuable realities, but the most seductive of names when used as baits to capture something which is earnestly desired.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 41-45

And therefore in 44 many places <sup>a</sup> of the Law Book he exhorts us not to consent to an unjust man or unjust action, for consent, if not rendered on honest grounds, is an inducement to testify to falsehoods, just as everyone to whom injustice gives a feeling of pain and hostility is a friend of truth. Now when a single 45 man of bad character invites us to do as he does there is nothing remarkable in a refusal to share his wicked folly, but when a multitude is carried away in a rushing mass as down a steep slope to lawlessness, it needs a noble soul and a spirit trained unjust to be an unjust witness," is followed at once by "thou shalt not be with a multitude for evil." This last is evidently the text expounded in the next sentence.

PHILO

ἔστι καὶ φρονήματος ἀνδρεία συγκεκροτημένου.
46 ἔνιοι γὰρ τὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς δοκοῦντα, κἄν παρα-νομώτατα ἦ, νόμιμα καὶ δίκαια εἶναι νομίζουσι, κρίναντες οὐκ εὖ· φύσει γὰρ ἔπessθαι καλόν, ἀκο-47 λουθία φύσεως δ' ἀντίπαλον ὄχλου φορά. ἔαν οὖν κατὰ θιάσους καὶ πολυανθρώπους ὀμίλους ἀγειρό-μενοί τινες νεωτερίζωσι, τούτοις οὐ συναινετέον ὡς τὸ ἀρχαῖον καὶ δόκιμον τῆς πολιτείας νόμισμα παρακόπτουσι·

σοφὸν γὰρ ἐν βούλευμα τὰς πολλὰς χέρας νικᾷ, σὺν ὄχλῳ δ' ἀμαθία μείζον κακόν.

48 Ἄλλὰ τοσαύτη τινὲς ὑπερβολῇ χρῶνται μοχθηρίας, ὥστ' οὐ μόνον ἀνθρώπων ἀγένητα κατηγοροῦσιν, ἀλλ' ἐπιμένοντες τῇ μοχθηρίᾳ διαίρουσι καὶ τεί-νουσι τὸ ψεῦδος ἄχρι οὐρανοῦ, τῆς μακαρίας καὶ εὐδαίμονος θεοῦ φύσεως καταμαρτυροῦντες· εἰσὶ δ' οὗτοι τερατοσκόποι καὶ οἰωνοσκόποι καὶ θύται καὶ ὄσοι ἄλλοι μαντικὴν ἐκπονοῦσι τὴν σὺν τέχνη κακοτεχνίαν, εἰ δεῖ τάληθῆς εἰπεῖν, ἐπιτηδεύοντες, παρακόμματα τῆς ἐνθέου κατοκωχῆς καὶ προφητείας.
49 προφήτης μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲν ἴδιον ἀποφαίνεται τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἑρμηνεὺς ὑποβάλλοντος ἑτέρου πάνθ' ὅσα προφέρεται, καθ' ὃν χρόνον ἐνθουσιᾷ γεγονῶς ἐν ἀγνοίᾳ, μετανισταμένου μὲν τοῦ λογισμοῦ καὶ παρακεχωρηκότος τὴν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀκρόπολιν, ἐπιπεφοιτηκότος δὲ καὶ ἐνωκκηκότος τοῦ θείου πνεύματος καὶ πᾶσαν τῆς φωνῆς ὄργανο-

---

<sup>a</sup> Lines from a fragment of Euripides quoted by many to manliness to keep from being carried with them. Some people suppose that what the many think 46 right is lawful and just, though it be the height of lawlessness. But they do not judge well, for it is good to follow nature, and the headlong course of the multitude runs counter to what nature's leading would have us do. So if some people collect in 47 groups or crowded assemblages to give trouble, we must not consent to their debasing of the long established and sterling coinage of civic life.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 45-49

Better than many hands is one wise thought,
A multitude of fools makes folly worse.<sup>a</sup>

But some show such an excess of wickedness that 48 they not only lay to the charge of men things which have never occurred but persisting in their wickedness exalt and extend the falsehood to heaven and bear testimony against the blessed and ever happy nature of God.<sup>b</sup> These are the interpreters of portents and auguries and of sacrificial entrails, and all the other proficients in divination who practise an art which is in reality a corruption of art, a counterfeit of the divine and prophetic possession. For no pronouncement of a prophet is ever his 49 own; he is an interpreter prompted by Another in all his utterances, when knowing not what he does he is filled with inspiration, as the reason withdraws and surrenders the citadel of the soul to a new visitor and tenant, the Divine Spirit which writers and stated to come from the tragedy Antiope. See Nauck, Fr. of Eur. 220.

<sup>b</sup> This condemnation of divination as a breach of the ninth commandment because it constitutes false witness against God is very strained. In the parallel passage, i. 59-63, it has been connected with the first.

PHILO

ποιίαν κρούοντός τε<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐνηχοῦντος εἰς ἐναργῆ 50 δῆλωσιν ὧν προθεσπίζει. τῶν δὲ τὴν παράσημον καὶ βωμολόχον μαντικὴν ζηλούντων ἕκαστος ταῖς εἰκασίαις καὶ στοχασμοῖς ἀνοίκειον τάξιν παρα-τίθησι τὴν τῆς ἀληθείας καὶ τοὺς ἀβεβαίους τὸ ἦθος ὑπαγόμενος ῥαδίως καθάπερ ἀνερμάτιστα σκάφη πολὺς ἀντιπνεύσας<sup>2</sup> ἀνωθεὶ καὶ ἀνατρέπει, διακωλύων ὑποδρόμοις ἀσφαλῆσι προσσχεῖν εὐσεβείας· τὰ γὰρ τοπασθέντα προλέγειν οἴεται δεῖν ὡς οὐκ αὐτὸς εὐρών, ἀλλ' ὡς ἀφανῶς αὐτῷ μόνῳ χρησθέντα θεία λόγια, πρὸς βεβαιοτέραν πίστιν 51 ἀπάτης μεγάλων καὶ πολυανθρώπων ὁμίλων. τὸν τοιοῦτον εὐθυβόλῳ ὀνόματι ψευδοπροφήτην προσ-[344] αγορεύει, κιβδηλεύοντα τὴν | ἀληθῆ προφητείαν καὶ τὰ γνήσια νόθοις εὐρήμασιν ἐπισκιάζοντα.
 χρόνῳ δὲ παντάπασιν ὀλίγῳ διακαλύπτεται τὰ τοιαῦτα στρατηγήματα, τῆς φύσεως οὐκ αἰεὶ κρύ-πτεσθαι φιλοῦσης, ἀλλ' ὁπότεν καιρὸς ἢ τὸ ἴδιον 52 κάλλος ἀναφαινούσης ἀηττήτοις δυνάμεσιν. ὡς γὰρ ἐν ταῖς ἡλιακαῖς ἐκλείψειςιν αἱ ἀκτῖνες πρὸς βραχύτατον ἀμαυρωθεῖσαι μικρὸν ὕστερον ἀναλάμπουσιν ἄσκιον καὶ τηλαυγῆς ἐπιδεικνύμεναι φέγ-

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps omit τε, and so Mangey, but without ms. authority. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn following Mangey inserts ἀνεμος after ἀντιπνεύσας.
 It seems to me unnecessary. The metaphorical application of wind-terms by the simple verb is common in Philo. See Index s.v. πνέω, e.g. λαμπρὸν πνέουσι De Cong. 159.

<sup>a</sup> Or "makes sounds on," "raises sounds from" it, i.e. the vocal organism. This must be the sense if τε is retained, though to understand the dative from the preceding accusative seems awkward. Mangey translates "formante," and I presume Heinemann means much the same by "bringt

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 49-52

plays upon the vocal organism and dictates words <sup>a</sup> which clearly express its prophetic message. Now 50 everyone who pursues the spurious scurvy trade of divination ranks his surmises and conjectures with truth, a position ill-suited to them, and easily gets the unstable of character into his power; then with a mighty counterblast as it were he pushes about and upsets their unballasted barks and prevents them from coming to port in the sure roadsteads of piety. For he thinks he must proclaim the results of his guessing to be not his own discovery but divine oracles, secretly vouchsafed to him alone, and thus confirm the great multitudes which gather around him in their acceptance of the fraud. Such 51 a person receives from the lawgiver the appropriate name of false prophet,<sup>b</sup> for he adulterates the true prophecy and with his spurious inventions throws the genuine into the shade. But in quite a short time such manoeuvres are exposed, for it is not nature's way to be concealed for ever but when the right time comes she uses her invincible powers to unveil the beauty which is hers alone. For as 52 in eclipses of the sun the rays are dimmed for a very short time but soon shine again spreading a light unshadowed and far-reaching, when the sun is den ganzen Stimmapparat zum Schallen und Tönen," but I do not see how the word can mean this. For Philo's regular use of ἐνηχείν to express reiteration and insistence in speech see note on De Mut. 57 (vol. v. p. 588). For the sense of this sentence cf. i. 65, Quis Rerum 266. Heinemann compares Plato, Ion 534. See App. p. 429.

<sup>b</sup> The word ψευδοπροφήτης is not used of diviners in the Pentateuch nor indeed used at all. It is however found elsewhere in the LXX, and is associated with divination, Jer. xxxiv. (E.V. xxvii.) 9, xxxvi. (E.V. xxix.) 8.

PHILO

γος, μηδενὸς ἐπιπροσθοῦντος ἡλίω τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐν αἰθρία καθαρᾷ ὀλοστόν ἀναφαίνοντι,<sup>1</sup> οὕτως κἂν χρησμολογῶσί τινες μαντικὴν μὲν ἐπειψευσμένην τεχνάζοντες, ὑποδύομενοι δ' εὐπρεπὲς ὄνομα τὸ προφητείας, ἐνθουσιάζεις καταψευδόμενοι θεοῦ, διελεγχθήσονται ραδίως· ἤξει γὰρ πάλιν ἡ ἀλήθεια καὶ ἀναλάμψει φῶς ἀστράπτουσα τηλαυγέστατον, ὡς τό γε ἐπισκιάσαν ψεῦδος ἀφανισθῆναι.

- 53 Πάγκαλον μέντοι κάκεινο προσδιετάξατο κελεύσας ἐνὸς μαρτυρίαν μὴ προσίεσθαι· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι ἐνδέχεται ἓνα καὶ παριδεῖν τι καὶ παρακοῦσαι καὶ παρενθυμηθῆναι καὶ ἀπατηθῆναι, δόξαι γὰρ αἱ ψευδεῖς μυρίαὶ καὶ ἀπὸ μυρίων εἰώθασι προσπίπτειν· δευτέρον δὲ ὅτι κατὰ πλείονων ἢ καὶ καθ' ἐνὸς ἀδικιώτατον (ἐνὶ) χρῆσθαι μάρτυρι, τῶν<sup>2</sup> μὲν ὅτι δὴ πρὸς πίστιν ἀξιονικότεροι ἐνός, τοῦ δ' ἐπειδὴ κατ' ἀριθμὸν οὐ προφέρει, τὸ δ' ἴσον πλεονεξίας ἀλλότριον· τί γὰρ μᾶλλον τῷ μάρτυρι καθ' ἑτέρου διεξιόντι ἢ τῷ κατηγορουμένῳ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ λέγοντι συναινετέον; ἄριστον δ' ὡς ἔοικεν ἐπέχειν, ἔνθα μηδὲν ἐνδεί μὴδὲ ὑπερβάλλει.

<sup>1</sup> Cohn brackets the words ἀλλ' ὡς . . . ἀναφαίνοντι, but his arguments (see Hermes, 1908, p. 208) do not seem to me very conclusive. They are (1) the words cannot be explained grammatically, for it is not clear to what ἀναφαίνοντι refers. (It surely agrees with ἡλίω, and the construction, though very awkward, is not ungrammatical.) (2) ὀλοστός is only known from a gloss of Hesychius. (Mangey's proposal of ὄλωσ αὐτόν or αὐτόν (?) might overcome this.) (3) The hiatus καθαρᾷ ὀλοστόν is intolerable. (On this see note in App. to § 40.) My own further difficulty is that I do not see the meaning of ὡς. But altogether the clause, though certainly not obscured at all by any intervening object but displays its whole surface in clear open sky, just so though some oracle-mongers may ply their false art of divination, masked under the specious name of prophecy, and palm off their ecstatic utterances upon the Godhead, they will easily be detected. Truth will come back and shine again, illuminating the far distance with its radiance, and the lie which overshadowed it will vanish away.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 52-54

He added another excellent injunction when he 53 forbade them to accept the evidence of a single person,<sup>a</sup> first because the single person may see or hear imperfectly or misunderstand and be deceived, since false opinions are numberless and numberless too the sources from which they spring to attack us. Secondly because it is most unjust to accept a single 54 witness against more than one or even against one : against more than one, because their number makes them more worthy of credence than the one : against one, because the witness has not got preponderance of number, and equality is incompatible with predominance. For why should the statement of a witness made in accusation of another be accepted in preference to the words of the accused spoken in his own defence? Where there is neither deficiency nor excess it is clearly best to suspend judgement.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Num. xxxv. 30, Deut. xvii. 6 (of death sentences), Deut. xix. 15 (of all offences).

<sup>b</sup> Heinemann "where no one is behind or has an advantage," but the neuter μηδέν points rather to a general maxim. See App. p. 430.

---

open to suspicion, does not seem to me impossible. On δλοστός see further App. p. 430.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τὸν ἢ τὸ.

PHILO

55 IX. <sup>1</sup>Οἴεται δεῖν ὁ νόμος ἅπαντας μὲν τοὺς συμφερομένους τῇ κατὰ Μωυσέα ἱερᾷ πολιτεία παντὸς ἀλόγου πάθους καὶ πάσης κακίας ἀμετόχους εἶναι μᾶλλον ἢ τοὺς τοῖς ἄλλοις νόμοις χρωμένους, δια-φερόντως δὲ τοὺς λαχόντας ἢ χειροτονηθέντας δικάζειν. ἄτοπον γὰρ ἁμαρτήμασιν ἐνόχους εἶναι [345] | τοὺς τοῖς ἄλλοις τὰ δίκαια βραβεύειν ἀξιούντας, οἷς ἀναγκαῖον καθάπερ ἀπ' ἀρχετύπου γραφῆς ἀπο-56 μάττεσθαι τὰ φύσεως ἔργα πρὸς μίμησιν. ὡς γὰρ ἡ τοῦ πυρὸς δύναμις ἀλεαίνουσα ὧν ἂν προσἄψηται θερμὴ πολὺ πρότερον αὐτῇ καθέστηκεν ἐξ αὐτῆς καὶ κατὰ τοῦναντίον ἢ τῆς χιόνος τῷ κατεψύχθαι καὶ τᾶλλα ἐπιψύχει, οὕτως ὀφείλει καὶ δικαστῆς ἀνάπλεως εἶναι δικαιοσύνης ἀκραιφνοῦς, εἴ γε μέλλει τὰ δίκαια τοῖς ἐντευξομένοις ἐπάρδειν, ἕν' ὥσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς γλυκείας φέρεται νᾶμα πό-57 τιμον τοῖς διψῶσιν εὐνομίαις. τουτὶ δὲ συμβήσεται, εἴαν τις δικάζειν εἰσιῶν ἐν ταυτῷ νομίση κρίνειν τε καὶ κρίνεσθαι καὶ ἀναλαμβάνη ἅμα τῇ ψήφῳ σύνεσιν μὲν εἰς τὸ μὴ ἀπατᾶσθαι, δικαιοσύνην δὲ εἰς τὴν τῶν κατ' ἀξίαν ἐπιβαλλόντων ἐκάστοις ἀπονομήν, ἀνδρείαν δὲ εἰς τὸ ἀνένδοτον πρὸς ἰκε-58 ρίας. ὁ τούτων ἐπιμελούμενος τῶν ἀρετῶν κοινὸς εὐεργέτης εἰκότως ἂν νομίζοιτο, κυβερνήτου τρόπον

<sup>1</sup> Here the mss. have a heading Τὰ πρὸς δικαστὴν, and Cohn begins a new numeration of chapters. But though these sections, 41-78, might perhaps have come more appropriately in the latter half of the book on δικαιοσύνη, Philo clearly regards them as belonging to the ninth commandment (§ 78).

<sup>a</sup> Heinemann objects that no judges were chosen by lot in Israel, cf. § 157, but Philo of course means that however they

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 54-58

IX. The law holds that all who conform to the 55 sacred constitution laid down by Moses must be exempt from every unreasoning passion and every vice in a higher degree than those who are governed by other laws, and that this particularly applies to those who are appointed to act as judges by lot <sup>a</sup> or election. For it is against all reason that those who claim to dispense justice to others should themselves have offences to answer for. On the contrary it is necessary that they should bear the impress of the operations of nature, as from an original design, and thus imitate them.<sup>b</sup> Consider 56 the power exerted by fire and snow. Fire warms all it touches but its heat primarily resides in itself, snow its opposite through its own coldness chills other things. So too the judge must be permeated by pure justice if he is to foster with the water of justice those who will come before him, and thus as from a sweet fountain there may issue a stream fit to refresh the lips of those who thirst for true and lawful dealings. And this will come to pass if 57 a man when he enters upon his duties as judge considers that when he tries a case he is himself on his trial, and with his voting tablet <sup>c</sup> takes also good sense to make him proof against deceit, justice to assign to each according to his deserts, courage to remain unmoved by supplication and lamentation over the punishments of the convicted. He who 58 studies to possess these virtues will properly be considered a public benefactor. Like a good pilot were elected the law would demand a higher standard from them than from the Gentile.

<sup>b</sup> So rather than as Goodenough, "to be imitated by others."

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "pebble."

PHILO

ἀγαθοῦ τοὺς χειμῶνας τῶν πραγμάτων ἐξευδιάζων ἕνεκα σωτηρίας καὶ ἀσφαλείας τῶν τὰ οἰκεία ἐπι-τετροφότων αὐτῶ.

- 59 X. Κελεύει δὴ πρῶτον ὁ νόμος τῷ δικαστῇ μὴ παραδέχασθαι ἀκοὴν ματαίαν. τί δὲ τοῦτ' ἐστίν; ἔστω, φησίν, ὦ οὔτος, τὰ ὠτά σου κεκαθαρμένα· καθαρθήσεται δέ, ἐὰν νάμασι σπουδαίων λόγων συνεχῶς ἐπαντλήται, τὰς ματαίους καὶ πεπατη-μένας καὶ χλεύης ἀξίας μυθογράφων ἢ μιμολόγων ἢ τυφοπλαστών τὰ μηδενὸς ἄξια σεμνοποιούντων 60 μακρὰς ῥήσεις μὴ προσιέμενα. δηλοῦται δ' ἐκ τοῦ μὴ παραδέχασθαι ματαίαν ἀκοὴν καὶ ἕτερόν τι τῷ προτέρῳ συνᾶδον· τοῖς ἀκοὴν μαρτυροῦσι, φησίν, ὁ προσέχων ματαίως καὶ οὐχ ὑγιῶς προσέξει· διὰ τί; ὅτι ὀφθαλμοὶ μὲν αὐτοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσι τοῖς γινο-μένοις, ἐφαπτόμενοι τρόπον τινὰ τῶν πραγμάτων καὶ ὅλα δι' ὅλων καταλαμβάνοντες, φωτὸς συνεργοῦντος, ὧ πάντα αὐγάζεται τε καὶ διελέγχεται, ὠτα δ', ὡς ἔφη τις οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τῶν προτέρων, ὀφθαλμῶν ἀπιστότερα, πράγμασι μὲν οὐκ ἐντυγχάνοντα, ἐρμηνεύσι δὲ πραγμάτων λόγοις οὐκ αἰεὶ 61 πεφυκόσιν ἀληθεύειν περιελκόμενα. διὸ καὶ τῶν παρ' Ἑλλήσιν ἔνιοι νομοθετῶν μεταγράψαντες ἐκ τῶν ἱερωτάτων Μωυσέως στηλῶν εὖ διατάξασθαι

<sup>a</sup> Or "tranquillizing," which is the natural meaning of the word, but a pilot does not do this.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxiii. 1. E.V. "Thou shalt not take up a false report." LXX as quoted here.

<sup>c</sup> Goodenough supposes that these expositions or harangues refer to the sophistry of advocates, cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 121, but this is not borne out by the sequel, mythmakers, etc. Philo seems to have slipped into a general denunciation of "idle hearings," and particularly of the μυθικὰ πλάσματα against

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 58-61

he steers a prosperous voyage<sup>a</sup> through the storms of business to secure the preservation and security of those who have entrusted their interests to him.

X. The first instruction that the law gives to the 59 judge is that he should not accept idle hearing.<sup>b</sup> What is this? "Let your ears, my friend," he says, "be purged" and purged they will be if streams of worthy thoughts and words are constantly poured into them and if they refuse to admit the long-winded expositions,<sup>c</sup> the idle hackneyed<sup>d</sup> absurdities of the makers of myths and farces and of vain inventions with their glorification of the worthless. And the phrase "not accept idle hear- 60 ing" has another signification consistent with that just mentioned. If men listen to hearsay given as evidence their listening will be idle and unsound. Why so? Because the eyes are conversant with the actual events; they are in a sense in contact with the facts and grasp them in their completeness through the co-operation of the light which reveals and tests everything. But ears, as one of the ancients has aptly said, are less trustworthy than eyes<sup>e</sup>; they are not conversant with facts, but are distracted by words which interpret the facts but are not necessarily always veracious. And therefore it 61 seems that some Grecian legislators did well when they copied from the most sacred tables of Moses which he so often inveighs, e.g. De Virt. 102. Cf. the longer digression in §§ 68, 69.

<sup>d</sup> Goodenough "worthy of rejection," and so Mangey "proculcatas," but the usage for "much trodden," "trite," is well established.

<sup>e</sup> Quoted almost verbatim from Herodotus i. 8. Polybius xii. 27. 1 ascribes it in a slightly different form (ὀφθαλμοὶ τῶν ὄτων ἀκριβέστεροι μάρτυρες) to Heracleitus.

δοκοῦσι, μὴ μαρτυρεῖν ἀκοήν,<sup>1</sup> ὡς δέον, ἃ μὲν εἰδέ 62 τις, πιστὰ κρίνειν, ἃ δὲ ἤκουσε, μὴ πάντως βέβαια.

[346] XI. | Δεύτερον παράγγελμα κριτῆ δῶρα μὴ λαμβάνειν· τὰ γὰρ δῶρα, φησὶν ὁ νόμος, πηροὶ μὲν ὀφθαλμοὺς βλέποντας, τὰ δὲ δίκαια λυμαίνεται, τὴν 63 δὲ διάνοιαν οὐκ ἔᾶ διὰ λεωφόρου βαίνειν ἐπ' εὐ-θείας. καὶ τὸ μὲν δωροδοκεῖν ἐπ' ἀδίκους παμπονή-ρων ἐστὶν ἀνθρώπων ἔργον, τὸ δ' ἐπὶ δικαίοις ἐφ' ἡμισεία πονηρευομένων· εἰσὶ γὰρ εὐπάρυφοί τινες ἡμιμόχθηροι, δικαιάδικοι, τὴν ὑπὲρ<sup>2</sup> τῶν πεπλημμελημένων τεταγμένοι τάξιν κατὰ τῶν πλημμελησάντων, προῖκα δ' οὐκ ἀξιοῦντες νικῶντας γράφειν 64 ἔμμισθον ἀποφαίνοντες. εἶτα ἐπειδὴν τις αἰτιᾶται, φασὶ μὴ παρατρέψαι τὸ δίκαιον—ἡττηθῆναι μὲν γὰρ οὐς ἀρμόττον ἦν ἡττᾶσθαι, νενικηκέναι δ' οὐς ἐχρῆν περιγίνεσθαι—, κακῶς ἀπολογούμενοι· δύο γὰρ δεῖ προσφέρεσθαι τὸν ἀγαθὸν δικαστήν, νομικω-τάτην γνῶσιν καὶ τὸ ἀδέκαστον· ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ δῶροις βραβεύτης τοῦ δικαίου καλὸν φύσει πρᾶγμα λέ-65 ληθεν αἰσχύνων. ἐπεξαμαρτάνει δὲ καὶ δύο ἕτερα, τὸ μὲν ἐθίζων ἑαυτὸν εἶναι φιλοχρήματον, ὅπερ ὀρμητήριον τῶν μεγίστων παρανομημάτων ἐστί, τὸ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀκοη (= ἀκοῆ). See note a.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. περὶ (or παρά).

<sup>a</sup> A clear reference to Attic law. See note on De Conf. 141 (vol. iv. pp. 556, 557), where reference is given to the Dict. of Ant. article "Akoēn Marturein," and passages in the orators.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxiii. 8. The end "perverteth the words of the righteous" (LXX "just words") suggests that ῥήματα may have fallen out.

<sup>c</sup> From Plato, Rep. 352 c.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 61-65

the enactment that hearing is not accepted as evidence,<sup>a</sup> meaning that what a man has seen is to be judged trustworthy, but what he has heard is not entirely reliable.

XI. The second instruction to the judge is not to <sup>62</sup> take gifts, for gifts, says the law, blind the eyes <sup>b</sup> which see and corrupt the things that are just, while they prevent the mind from pursuing its course straight along the high road. And while receiving <sup>63</sup> bribes to do injustice is the act of the utterly depraved, to receive them to do justice shows a half depravity. For there are some magistrates half way in wickedness,<sup>c</sup> mixtures of justice and injustice, who having been appointed to the duty of supporting the wronged against the wrongdoers think themselves justified in refusing without a consideration to record a victory to the necessarily victorious party and so make their verdict a thing purchased and paid for.<sup>d</sup> Then when they are attacked they <sup>64</sup> plead that they did not pervert justice, since those who ought to lose did lose and those who deserved to win were successful. This is a bad defence, for two things are demanded from the good judge, a verdict absolutely according to law and a refusal to be bribed. But the awarder<sup>e</sup> of justice who has taken gifts for it has unconsciously disfigured what nature has made beautiful. Apart from this <sup>65</sup> he offends in two other ways; he is habituating himself to be covetous of money, and that vice is the source from which the greatest iniquities spring,

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 430.

<sup>e</sup> Or "umpire." For the phrase βραβευτής τοῦ δικαίου Heinemann quotes Aristot. Rhet. i. 15. 24 τοῦ δικαίου βραβευ- τῆς ὁ δικαστής. See App. p. 431.

PHILO

δὲ βλάπτων ὃν ἄξιον ἦν ὠφελεῖν τιμὴν τοῦ δικαίου 66 κατατιθέντα. διὸ σφόδρα παιδευτικῶς Μωυσῆς δικαίως τὸ δίκαιον προστάττει μεταδιώκειν, αἰ-νιττόμενος ὅτι καὶ ἀδίκως ἔνεστι, διὰ τοὺς ἐπὶ δώροις τοῦ δικαίου βραβευτάς, οὐ μόνον ἐν δικα-στηρίοις, ἀλλὰ πανταχοῦ κατὰ τε γῆν καὶ θάλατταν καὶ ἐν ἅπασιν ὀλίγου δέω φάναι τοῖς τοῦ βίου 67 πράγμασιν. ἤδη γοῦν ὀλιγοχρημάτων τις παρα-καταθήκην λαβὼν ἀπέδωκεν, ἐπ' ἐνέδρα μᾶλλον τοῦ λαμβάνοντος ἢ ὠφελεία, ἵνα τὴν ἐν ὀλίγοις πίστιν δέλεαρ καθεῖς ἀγκιστρεύσῃται τὴν ἐν μεί-ζοσιν πίστιν,<sup>1</sup> ὅπερ οὐδὲν ἦν ἕτερον ἢ τὸ δίκαιον μὴ δικαίως ἐπιτελεῖν· δίκαιον μὲν γὰρ ἢ τῶν ἄλλοτρίων ἀπόδοσις, οὐ δικαίως δ' ἐγένετο, παρόσον ἐπὶ 68 θήρα πλειόνων. αἴτιον δὲ τῶν τοιούτων ἀμαρτημάτων ἐστὶν ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα ἢ πρὸς τὸ ψεῦδος οἰκείωσις, ὅπερ ἐκ πρώτης γενέσεως καὶ σπαργάνων αὐτῶν τίθεται καὶ μητέρες καὶ ὁ ἄλλος τῶν κατ' οἰκίαν ἀνδραπόδων καὶ ἐλευθέρων ὄμιλος ἔργοις καὶ λόγοις ἀεὶ σύντροφον κατασκευάζουσιν, ἀρμοζόμενοι καὶ ἐνοῦντες αὐτὸ τῇ ψυχῇ ὡς μέρος ἐκ φύσεως ἀναγκαῖον, ὅπερ, εἰ καὶ τῷ ὄντι φύσει συνεγεγέννητο, ὧφειλεν ἐπιτηδεύσει τῶν καλῶν ἐκ-69 τετμηθῆσαι. τί δ' οὕτως ἐν βίῳ καλὸν ὡς ἀλήθεια; ἦν ὁ πάνσοφος ἐστηλίτευσεν ἐν ἱερωτάτῳ χωρίῳ,

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey, quoting De Plant. 101 μηδὲ τὴν ἐν ὀλίγοις πίστιν φύλασσε ἐπὶ θήρα τῆς ἐν πλείοσι πίστewς. MSS. ἀπιστίαν (or ἀδικίαν).

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xvi. 20. E.V. "that which is altogether just shalt thou follow." Cf. De Cher. 15, where it is quoted with the

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 65-69

and he is injuring one who deserves to be benefited when that person has to pay a price for justice. And therefore Moses gives us a very instructive 66 command, when he bids us pursue justice justly,<sup>a</sup> implying that it is possible to do so unjustly. He refers to those who give a just award for lucre, not only in law courts but everywhere on land and sea and one may almost say in all the affairs of life. Thus we have heard of a person 67 accepting a deposit of little value and repaying it with a view to ensnare rather than to benefit the person to whom he gives it.<sup>b</sup> His object was by baiting his hook with trustworthiness in small matters to secure trustfulness in greater things, and this is nothing else than executing justice unjustly, for while repayment of what is due to others is a just deed, it was not done justly being done in pursuit of further gains.

Now the principal cause 68 of such misdeeds is familiarity with falsehood which grows up with the children right from their birth and from the cradle, the work of nurses and mothers and the rest of the company, slaves and free, who belong to the household. By word and deed they are perpetually welding and uniting falsehood to the soul as though it were a necessary part inherent in its nature, though if nature had really made it congenital it ought to have been eradicated by habituation to things excellent. And what has life 69 to show so excellent as truth, which the man of perfect wisdom set as a monument on the robe of same application as here, and Quod. Det. 18, where it is cited as forbidding mistaken asceticism and ritual.

<sup>b</sup> For this confidence trick see De Plant. 103, De Cher. 14 also in connexion with Deut. l.c., and perhaps De Dec. 172.

PHILO

[347] κατὰ τὴν τοῦ ἀρχιερέως στολήν, | ἔνθα τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ἡγεμονικόν, ἀναθημάτων τῷ καλλίστῳ καὶ διαπρεπεστάτῳ βουλευθεὶς αὐτὸν ἐπικοσμήσαι, συγγενῇ δὲ δύνάμιν ἀληθείᾳ παριδρύσατο, ἣν ἐκάλεσε δῆλωσιν, ἀμφοτέρων τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν λόγων εἰκόνας, ἐνδιαθέτου τε καὶ προφορικοῦ· δεῖται γὰρ ὁ μὲν προφορικὸς δηλώσεως, ἢ τὰ ἀφανῆ τῶν<sup>1</sup> καθ' ἕκαστον ἡμῶν ἐνθύμια γνωρίζεται τῷ πέλας, ὁ δ' ἐνδιάθετος ἀληθείας, εἰς τελειότητα βίου καὶ πράξεων δι' ὧν<sup>2</sup> ἢ ἐπ' εὐδαιμονίαν ὁδὸς ἀνευρίσκεται.

- 70 XII. Τρίτον παράγγελμα τῷ δικαστῇ τὰ πράγματα πρὸ τῶν κρινομένων ἐξετάζειν καὶ πειρᾶσθαι πάντα τρόπον ἀφέλκειν αὐτὸν τῆς τῶν δικαζομένων φαντασίας, εἰς ἄγνοιαν καὶ λήθην βιαζόμενον ὧν ἐπιστήμην εἶχε καὶ μνήμην, οἰκείων, φίλων, πολιτῶν, καὶ πάλιν ἀλλοτρίων, ἐχθρῶν, ξένων, ἵνα μήτε εὖνοια μήτε μῖσος ἐπισκιάσῃ τῶν δικαίων τὴν γνῶσιν· ἀνάγκη γὰρ οἶα τυφλὸν δίχα βάκτρον προερχόμενον καὶ τοὺς ποδηγετήσοντας οὐκ ἔχοντα οἷς
71 βεβαίως ἐπερείσεται πταίειν. ὅθεν προσήκει τὸν ἀγαθὸν δικαστὴν τοὺς μὲν κρινομένους, οἷτινες ἂν ὦσι, παρακαλύπτεισθαι, τὴν δὲ φύσιν τῶν πραγμάτων ἄπλαστον καὶ γυμνὴν ὄραν, μὴ πρὸς δόξας ἀλλὰ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν μέλλοντα κρίνειν καὶ τοιαύτην

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps omit τῶν. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> Heinemann wishes to read δι' ἧς on the ground that τελειότης not πράξεις leads to happiness. But as translated the text seems to present no difficulty.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 69-71

the high priest in the most sacred place where the dominant part of the soul resides, when he wished to deck him with a sacred ornament of special beauty and magnificence? And beside truth he set a kindred quality which he called "clear showing," the two representing both aspects of the reason we possess, the inward and the outward. For the outward requires clear showing by which the invisible thoughts in each of us<sup>a</sup> are made known to our neighbours. The inward requires truth to bring to perfection the conduct of life and the actions by which the way to happiness is discovered.

XII. A third instruction to the judge is that he<sup>70</sup> should scrutinize the facts rather than the litigants and should try in every way to withdraw himself from the contemplation of those whom he is trying.<sup>b</sup> He must force himself to ignore and forget those whom he has known and remembered, relations, friends and fellow citizens and on the other hand strangers, enemies, foreigners so that neither kind feeling nor hatred may becloud his decision of what is just. Otherwise he must stumble like a blind man proceeding without a staff or others to guide his feet on whom he can lean with security; and<sup>71</sup> therefore the good judge must draw a veil over the disputants, whoever they are, and keep in view the nature of the facts in their naked simplicity. He must come with the intention of judging according to truth and not according to the opinions of well as above, is retained, the meaning will be "such of our thoughts as are invisible." But surely all thoughts are invisible till expressed.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. i. 17 (xvi. 19) "Thou shalt not respect persons in judgement." LXX οὐκ ἐπιγνώσῃ πρόσωπον ("recognize a face"), a form which Philo is clearly expounding in the sequel.

PHILO

ἔννοιαν λαβόντα, ὅτι “ ἡ μὲν κρίσις τοῦ θεοῦ ἐστίν,” ὁ δὲ δικαστὴς ἐπίτροπος τῆς κρίσεως· ἐπιτρόπῳ δ’ οὐκ ἐφέϊται τὰ τοῦ κυρίου χαρίζεσθαι, παρακαταθήκην εἰληφότι τὴν πάντων τῶν κατὰ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον ἀρίστην παρὰ τοῦ πάντων ἀρίστου.
 72 XIII. Πρὸς δὲ τοῖς λεχθεῖσιν ἤδη καὶ ἄλλο σοφὸν εἰσηγεῖται· κελεύει (γὰρ) πένητα ἐν κρίσει μὴ ἐλεεῖν ὁ πᾶσαν σχεδὸν τι τὴν νομοθεσίαν πεπληρωκῶς τῶν εἰς ἔλεον καὶ φιλανθρωπίαν διαταγμάτων καὶ μεγάλας μὲν ἀπειλὰς ἐπανατεινόμενος ὑπερόπταις καὶ ἀλαζόσι, μεγάλα δὲ προθεῖς ἄθλα τοῖς τὰ ἀτυχήματα τῶν πέλας εἰς ἐπανόρθωσιν ἄγειν ἀξιοῦσι καὶ τὰς περιουσίας οὐκ ἴδια κτήματα 73 νομίζουσιν ἀλλὰ κοινὰ τῶν ἐν ἐνδείαις. ὁ γὰρ ἔφη τις οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τῶν πρότερον, ἀληθὲς ἐστίν, ὅτι παραπλήσιον οὐδὲν ἄνθρωποι θεῷ δρῶσιν ἢ χαριζόμενοι. τί δ’ ἂν εἶη κρεῖττον ἀγαθὸν ἢ μι-74 μείσθαι θεὸν γενητοῖς τὸν αἰδίων; μῆτ’ οὖν ὁ πλούσιος ἄργυρον καὶ χρυσὸν οἴκοι συναγαγὼν ἄφθονον θησαυροφυλακείτω, προφερέτω δ’ εἰς μέσον, ἵνα τὸ σκληροδίατον τῶν ἀπόρων ἰλαραῖς μεταδόσεισι λιπαίνῃ, μῆτ’ εἴ τις ἐνδοξος, ὑψηλὸν αἴρων αὐτὸν αὐχέϊτῳ φρυαπτόμενος, ἀλλ’ ἰσότητα τιμήσας [348] μεταδιδότω παρρησίας τοῖς ἀδόξοις· | ὁ τε ῥώμη κεκρημένος σώματος ἔρεισμα τῶν ἀσθενεστέρων ἔστω καὶ μὴ καθάπερ ἐν τοῖς γυμνικοῖς ἀγῶσι καταπαγκρατιαζέτω τοὺς ἐλάττους ταῖς δυνάμεσιν,

<sup>a</sup> Deut. i. 17.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxiii. 3. E.V. “Neither shalt thou favour a poor man in his cause.” LXX as quoted here. Philo is evidently struck by the absence of the corresponding injunction not to favour the rich either, which is given in Lev. xix. 15.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 71-74

men, and with the thought before him that "judgement is God's"<sup>a</sup> and the judge is the steward of judgement. As a steward he is not permitted to give away his master's goods, for the best of all things in human life is the trust he has received from the hands of One who is Himself the best of all.

XIII. He adds to those already mentioned another <sup>72</sup> wise precept, not to show pity to the poor man in giving judgement.<sup>b</sup> And this comes from one who has filled practically his whole legislation with injunctions to show pity and kindness, who issues severe threats against the haughty and arrogant and offers great rewards to those who feel it a duty to redress the misfortunes of their neighbours and to look upon abundant wealth not as their personal possession but as something to be shared by those who are in need. For what one of the men of old <sup>c</sup> <sup>73</sup> aptly said is true, that in no other action does man so much resemble God as in showing kindness, and what greater good can there be than that they should imitate God, they the created Him the eternal? So then let not the rich man collect great <sup>74</sup> store of gold and silver and hoard it at his house, but bring it out for general use that he may soften the hard lot of the needy with the unction of his cheerfully given liberality. If he has high position, let him not show himself uplifted with boastful and insolent airs, but honour equality and allow a frank exchange of speech to those of low estate. If he possesses bodily vigour, let him be the support of the weaker and not as men do in athletic contest take every means of battering down the less powerful,

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 431.

PHILO

ἀλλὰ φιλοτιμείσθω τῆς ἰδίας ἰσχύος μεταδιδόναι 75 τοῖς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν ἀπειρηκόσιν. ὅσοι μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ πηγῶν ἠρύσαντο τῶν σοφίας, φθόνον ὑπερόριον τῆς διανοίας ἐληλακότες ἄνευ προτροπῆς αὐτοκέλευστοι ταῖς τῶν πλησίον ὠφελείαις ἐπαποδύονται, τὰ λόγων νάματα ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἐκείνων δι' ὧτων ἐπαντλοῦντες εἰς μετουσίαν τῆς ὁμοίας ἐπιστήμης· καὶ ἐπειδὰν ἴδωσιν ὥσπερ εὐβλαστα καὶ εὐγενῆ μοσχεύματα νέους εὐφνεῖς, γεγήθασιν οἰόμενοι κληρονόμους ἀνευρηκέναι τοῦ ψυχικοῦ πλούτου, ὃς μόνος ἀληθεία πλοῦτός ἐστι, καὶ παραλαβόντες γεωργοῦσι τὰς ψυχὰς δόγμασι καὶ θεωρήμασι, μέχρις ἂν στελεχωθεῖσαι καρπὸν τὸν καλοκάγαθίας ἐνέγκωσι.

76 τοιαῦτα τοῖς νόμοις ἀγάλματα συνύφανται καὶ πεποίκιλται πρὸς εὐπορίαν ἀπόρων, οὓς ἐπὶ μόνῃς κρίσεως ἐλεεῖν οὐ θεμιτόν· ἔλεος γὰρ ἐπ' ἀτυχήμασιν, ὃ δ' ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ πονηρευόμενος 77 οὐκ ἀτυχῆς, ἀλλ' ἄδικος. τιμωρία δ' ἐπ' ἀδίκους ὡς ἐπὶ δικαίοις τιμαὶ βεβαιούσθωσαν· ὥστε μηδεὶς μοχθηρὸς ἄπορος ὑπείλλων καὶ ὑποστέλλων ἀχρηματίας οἴκτω τὸ δίκην δοῦναι παρακρονέσθω, δεδρακῶς οὐκ ἐλέου—πόθεν;—ἀλλ' ὀργῆς ἄξια. καὶ ὃ δικάζειν εἰσιὼν καθάπερ ἀργυραμοιβὸς ἀγαθὸς διαιρεῖτω καὶ διακρινέτω τὰς φύσεις τῶν πραγμάτων, ἵνα μὴ φύρηται συγχεόμενα τοῖς παρασῆ-78 μοις τὰ δόκιμα. πολλὰ μὲν οὖν ἄλλα πρὸς τε ψευδομάρτυρας καὶ δικαστὰς ἔνεστι λέγειν· ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ μὴ μακρηγορεῖν ἰτέον ἐπὶ τὸ τελευταῖον τῶν

---

<sup>a</sup> For the application of ἀγάλματα to beautiful thoughts and qualities cf. De Sob. 38 (and possibly 3) and § 238 of this treatise, also θεοῦ μνημῆν ἀγαλματοφορεῖν De Virt. 165.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 74-78

but make it his ambition to share the advantage of his strength with those who have none of their own left to brace them. All who have drawn water <sup>75</sup> from wisdom's wells banish a grudging spirit from the confines of the mind and needing no bidding save their own spontaneous instinct gird themselves up to benefit their neighbours and pour into their souls through the channel of their ears the word-stream which may make them partakers of their own knowledge. And when they see young people gifted by nature like fine thriving plants, they rejoice to think that they have found some to inherit the spiritual wealth which is the only true wealth. They take them in hand and till their souls with the husbandry of principles and doctrines until on their full grown stems they bear the fruit of noble living.

Such gems <sup>a</sup> of varied beauty are inter- <sup>76</sup> woven in the laws, bidding us give wealth to the poor, and it is only on the judgement seat that we are forbidden to show them compassion. Compassion is for misfortunes, and he who acts wickedly of his own free will is not unfortunate but unjust. Let punishment be meted to the unjust as surely as <sup>77</sup> honours to the just. And therefore let no cowering, cringing rogue of a poor man evade his punishment by exciting pity for his penniless condition. His actions do not deserve compassion, far from it, but anger. And therefore one who undertakes to act as judge must be a good money changer, sifting with discrimination the nature of each of the facts before him, so that genuine and spurious may not be jumbled together in confusion. There is much <sup>78</sup> else which might be said about false witnesses and judges, but to avoid prolixity we must proceed to δέκα λογίων, ὃ κεφαλαιώδει τύπῳ καθάπερ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἕκαστον κεχρησμώδηται, τοῦτο δ' ἐστίν· “ οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις.”

PHILO

- 79 XIV. <sup>1</sup> Πᾶν μὲν πάθος ἐπίληπτον, ἐπεὶ καὶ πᾶσα ἄμετρος καὶ πλεονάζουσα ὀρμὴ καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς ἢ ἄλογος καὶ παρὰ φύσιν κίνησις ὑπαίτιος· ἐκότερον γὰρ τούτων <τί> ἐστὶν ἕτερον ἢ παλαιὸν πάθος ἐξηπλωμένον; εἴ τις οὖν μὴ μέτρα ταῖς ὀρμαῖς ὀρίζει μηδὲ χαλινὸν ὡσπερ τοῖς ἀφηνιασταῖς ἵπποις ἐντίθησι, πάθει χρῆται δυσιάτῳ, κᾶπειτα λήσεται διὰ τὸν ἀφηνιασμόν ἐξενεχθεὶς οἷα ὑπὸ ἀρμάτων ἠνίοχος εἰς φάραγγας ἢ βάραθρα δυσαναπόρευτα,
- 80 ἐξ ὧν μόλις ἔστι σώζεσθαι. τῶν δὲ παθῶν οὕτως οὐδὲν ἀργαλέον ὡς ἐπιθυμία τῶν ἀπόντων ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν ἀγαθῶν, πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐκ ὄντων, χαλεποὺς
- [349] καὶ ἀνηνύτους | ἔρωτας ἐντίκτουσα· ἐπιτείνει γὰρ καὶ ἐπελαύνει μέχρι πορρωτάτῳ τὴν ψυχὴν εἰς τὸ ἄπειρον,<sup>2</sup> φεύγοντος ἔστιν ὅτε τοῦ διωκομένου κατα-
- 81 φρονητικῶς οὐκ ἐπὶ νῶτα ἀλλ' ἀντικρῦ. ὅταν γὰρ ἐπιτρέχουσαν αἰσθηται μετὰ σπουδῆς τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, ἠρεμήσαν ἐπ' ὀλίγον ὑπὲρ τοῦ δελεάσαι καὶ ἐλπίδα συλλήψεως τῆς [καθ<sup>2</sup>] αὐτοῦ παρασχεῖν, ἐξαναχωρεῖ μακροτέροις διαστήμασι κατακερτομοῦν· ἢ δὲ ἀπολειπομένη καὶ ὑστερίζουσα σφαδάζει Ταντάλειον τιμωρίαν ἐπιφέρονσα κακοδαίμονι ψυχῇ· καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνον λόγος ἔχει ποτὸν μὲν ἀρύσασθαι βουλόμενον ἀδυνατεῖν, ὑποφεύγοντος ὕδατος, εἰ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> The title Οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις is not required, having been expressed above. Cohn here begins a fresh numeration of chapters. <sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀπορον.

<sup>a</sup> For Philo's conception of ἐπιθυμία see note to De Dec. 142, and General Introduction to this Volume, p. x.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 78-81

the last of the ten Great Words. This, which like each of the rest was delivered in the form of a summary, is "Thou shalt not covet."<sup>a</sup>

XIV. Every passion is blameworthy. This follows 79 from the censure due to every "inordinate and excessive impulse" and to "irrational and unnatural movements" of the soul,<sup>b</sup> for both these are nothing else than the opening out of a long-standing passion. So if a man does not set bounds to his impulses and bridle them like horses which defy the reins he is the victim of a wellnigh fatal passion, and that defiance will cause him to be carried away before he knows it like a driver borne by his team into ravines or impassable abysses whence it is hardly possible to escape. But none of the passions is so 80 troublesome as covetousness or desire of what we have not, things which seem good, though they are not truly good. Such desire breeds fierce and endless yearnings; it urges and drives the soul ever so far into the boundless distance while the object of the chase often flies insolently before it, with its face not its back turned to the pursuer.<sup>c</sup> For when it 81 perceives the desire eagerly racing after it it stands still for a while to entice it and provide a hope of its capture, then it is off and away, mocking and railing as the interval between them grows longer and longer. Meanwhile the desire outdistanced and losing ground is in sore distress and inflicts on the wretched soul the punishment of Tantalus,<sup>d</sup> who, as the story goes, when he would get him something to drink could not because the water slipt away, <sup>b</sup> Both these phrases are Stoic definitions of πάθος. See S. V. F. index s. v. πάθος.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. De Dec. 146.

<sup>d</sup> Cf. De Dec. 149.

PHILO

καρπὸν ἐθελήσειε δρέψασθαι, πάντας ἀφανίζεσθαι, 82 στερουμένης τῆς περὶ τὰ δένδρα εὐφορίας. ὡς γὰρ αἱ ἀμείλικτοι καὶ ἀπαρηγόρητοι δέσπουναι τοῦ σώ-ματος, δίψα <καὶ> πείνα, κατατείνουσιν αὐτὸ μᾶλ-λον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον τῶν ἐκ βασανιστοῦ τροχιζομένων ἄχρι θανάτου πολλάκις, εἰ μὴ τις αὐτὰς ἐξηγριωμένας τιθασεύσει ποτοῖς καὶ σιτίοις, οὕτως ἡ ἐπι-θυμία κενὴν ἀποδείξασα τὴν ψυχὴν λήθη μὲν τῶν παρόντων, μνήμη δὲ τῶν μακρὰν ἀφεστηκότων οἴστρον καὶ μανίαν ἀκάθεκτον ἐγκατασκευάσασα, βαρυτέρας μὲν τῶν πρότερον δεσποινῶν ὁμωνύμους δ' ἐκείναις ἀπειργάσατο, δίψαν τε καὶ πείναν, οὐ τῶν περὶ γαστρὸς ἀπόλαυσιν, ἀλλὰ χρημάτων, δόξης, ἡγεμονιῶν, εὐμορφίας, ἄλλων ἀμυθῆτων ὅσα κατὰ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον ζηλωτὰ καὶ περιμάχητα 83 εἶναι δοκεῖ. καὶ καθάπερ ἡ λεγομένη παρὰ τοῖς ἰατροῖς ἐρπηνώδης νόσος οὐκ ἐφ' ἐνὸς ἴσταται χωρίου, κινεῖται δὲ καὶ περιθεῖ καί, ὡς αὐτὸ που δηλοῖ τοῦνομα, διέρπει πάντῃ σκιδναμένη καὶ χρο-μένη, πᾶσαν τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν τοῦ σώματος μερῶν ἀπὸ κεφαλῆς ἄκρας ἄχρι ποδῶν συλλαμβά-νουσα καὶ συναίρουσα,<sup>1</sup> τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἡ ἐπιθυμία δι' ὅλης ἄπτουσα τῆς ψυχῆς οὐδὲν οὐδὲ τὸ βραχύτατον ἀπαθὲς αὐτῆς ἐᾷ, μιμουμένη τὴν ἐν ἀφθόνῳ ὕλη πυρὸς δύναμιν· ἐξάπτει γὰρ καὶ ἀνα-φλέγει, μέχρις ἂν διαφαγοῦσα πᾶσαν αὐτὴν ἐξ-84 αναλώσῃ. XV. τοσοῦτον ἄρα καὶ οὕτως κακὸν ὑπερβάλλον ἐστὶν ἐπιθυμία, μᾶλλον δ', εἰ δεῖ

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey for mss. συνείρουσα, which would mean

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 81-84

and when he wished to pluck fruit it all vanished and the rich produce of the trees was turned into barrenness. For just as those unmerciful and 82 relentless mistresses of the body, hunger and thirst, rack it with pains as great as, or greater than, those of the sufferers on the tormentor's wheel, and often bring it to the point of death unless their savagery is assuaged by food and drink, so it is with the soul. Desire makes it empty through oblivion of what is present, and then through memory of what is far away it produces fierce and uncontrollable madness, and thus creates mistresses harsher than those just mentioned though bearing the same name, hunger and thirst, in this case, not for what gives gratification to the belly, but for money, reputation, government, beautiful women<sup>a</sup> and all the innumerable objects which are held in human life to be enviable and worthy of a struggle. And 83 just as the creeping sickness, as physicians call it, does not stand still in one place but moves about and courses round and round and justifies its name by creeping about, spreading in all directions, and gripping and seizing all parts of the body's system from the crown of the head to the sole of the feet, so does desire dart through the whole soul and leave not the smallest bit of it uninjured.<sup>b</sup> In this it imitates the force of fire working on an abundance of fuel which it kindles into a blaze and devours until it has utterly consumed it. XV. So great then 84 and transcendent an evil is desire, or rather it may be

<sup>a</sup> εὐμορφία, beauty in others, not in oneself, as § 89 shows.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Dec. 150.

---

“stringing together”—a sense which does not suit this description of the “creeping sickness.”

PHILO

τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἀπάντων πηγῇ τῶν κακῶν· σῦλα γὰρ καὶ ἀρπαγαὶ καὶ χρεωκοπίαὶ συκοφανταί τε καὶ αἰκίαὶ καὶ προσέτι φθοραὶ καὶ μοιχεῖαι καὶ ἀνδροφονίαι καὶ πάνθ' ὅσα ἰδιωτικὰ ἢ δημόσια ἢ 85 ἱερά ἢ βέβηλα ἀδικήματα πόθεν ἄλλοθεν ἐρρῦν; τὸ γὰρ ἀψευδῶς ἂν λεχθὲν ἀρχέκακον πάθος ἐστὶν ἐπιθυμία, ἧς ἐν τῷ βραχύτατον ἔγγονον, ἔρως, οὐχ ἅπαξ ἀλλ' ἤδη πολλάκις ἀμυθῆτων κατέπλησε τὴν οἰκουμένην συμφορῶν, ἃς οὐδ' ὁ σύμπας τῆς γῆς [350] κύκλος ἐχώρησεν, | ἀλλὰ διὰ πλῆθος ὥσπερ ὑπὸ χειμάρρου φορᾶς εἰς θάλατταν εἰσέπεσον, καὶ παν-ταχοῦ πάντα πελάγη πολεμίων κατεπλήσθη νηῶν καὶ ὅσα καινουργοῦσιν οἱ ναυτικοὶ πόλεμοι συνη-νέχθη καὶ ἐπιπεσόντα ἀθρόα πάλιν εἰς νήσους καὶ ἠπείρους ὑπεσύρη, διαυλοδρομήσαντα καθάπερ ἐν 86 ταῖς παλιρροίαις ἀφ' ὧν ἤρξατο φέρεσθαι. τρανοτέραν δὲ τοῦ πάθους ἐνάργειαν<sup>1</sup> ληψόμεθα τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· ὅσων ἂν ἐπιθυμία προσάφηται, μεταβολὴν ἀπεργάζεται τὴν πρὸς τὸ χεῖρον, οἶα τὰ ἰοβόλα ζῶα καὶ τὰ θανάσιμα τῶν φαρμάκων.
 87 τί δ' ἐστὶν ὃ λέγω; εἰ πρὸς χρήματα γένοιτο, κλέπτας ἀποτελεῖ καὶ βαλαντιοτόμους καὶ λωπο-δύτας καὶ τοιχωρύχους χρεωκοπίασι τε καὶ παρακαταθηκῶν ἀρνήσεσι καὶ δωροδοκίαισι καὶ ἱεροσυλίας καὶ τοῖς ὁμοιοτρόποις ἅπασιν ἐνόχους.
 88 εἰ δὲ πρὸς δόξαν, ἀλαζόνας, ὑπερόπτας, ἀβεβαίους καὶ ἀνιδρύτους τὸ ἦθος, φωναῖς τὰ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐνέργειαν.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 431.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 84-88

truly said, the fountain of all evils. For plunderings and robberies and repudiations of debts and false accusations and outrages, also seductions, adulteries, murders and all wrongful actions, whether private or public, whether in things sacred or things profane, from what other source do they flow? For the 85 passion to which the name of originator of evil can truly be given is desire, of which one and that the smallest fruit the passion of love <sup>a</sup> has not only once but often in the past filled the whole world with countless calamities, which, too numerous to be contained by the whole compass of the land, have consequently poured into the sea as though driven by a torrent, and everywhere the wide waters have been filled with hostile ships and all the fresh terrors created by maritime war have come into being, then fallen with all their mass on islands and continents, swept along backwards and forwards from their original home as in the ebb and flow of the tides.<sup>b</sup> But we shall gain a clearer insight into the 86 passion in the following way. Desire, like venomous animals or deadly poisons, produces a change for the worse in all which it attacks. What do I mean by this? If the desire is directed to money it 87 makes men thieves and cut-purses, footpads, burglars, guilty of defaulting to their creditors, repudiating deposits, receiving bribes, robbing temples and of all similar actions. If its aim is reputa- 88 tion they become arrogant, haughty, inconstant and unstable in temperament, their ears blockaded <sup>b</sup> Philo is no doubt thinking primarily of Helen and the Trojan war, and also, one may well believe, of the wars caused by Antony's passion for Cleopatra. But he writes with much the same exaggeration as in Spec. Leg. iii. 16.

PHILO

ὧτα πεφρακότας, ταπεινουμένους ἐν ταυτῷ καὶ πρὸς ὕψος ἐπαιρομένους διὰ τὰς τῶν πληθῶν ἀνωμαλίας ἐπαιούντων καὶ ψεγόντων ἀκρίτῳ φορᾶ, πρὸς ἔχθραν καὶ φιλίαν ἀνεξετάστους, ὡς ῥαδίως ἐκάτερον ἀνθυπαλλάττεσθαι, καὶ τᾶλλ' ὅσα τούτοις ἀδελφὰ καὶ 89 συγγενῇ. πρὸς δὲ ἀρχὴν εἰ γένοιτο ἐπιθυμία, στασιώδεις, ἀνίσους, τυραννικούς τὰς φύσεις, ὠμοθύμους, ἐχθροὺς τῶν πατρίδων, ἀσθενεστέροις<sup>1</sup> δεσπότας ἀμειλίκτους, τὴν ἰσχὺν ἴσοις ἀσυμβάτους πολεμίους, δυνατωτέρων κόλακας εἰς τὴν δι' ἀπάτης ἐπίθεσιν. εἰ δὲ πρὸς σώματος κάλλος, φθορεῖς, μοιχοὺς, παιδεραστάς, ἀκολασίας καὶ λαγνείας ζηλωτάς, μεγίστων κακῶν ὡς εὐδαι- 90 μονικωτάτων ἀγαθῶν. ἤδη δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ γλῶτταν φθάσασα μυρία ἐνεωτέρισεν· ἔνιοι γὰρ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν ἢ τὰ λεκτέα σιωπᾶν ἢ τὰ ἡσυχαστέα λέγειν, καὶ ἀναφθεγγομένοις<sup>2</sup> ἔπεται τιμωρὸς δίκη 91 καὶ ἔχεμυθοῦσι [καὶ] τοῦναντίον. ἀψαμένη δὲ τῶν περὶ γαστέρα παρέχεται γαστριμάργους, ἀκορέστους, ἀσώτους, ὑγροῦ καὶ διαρρέοντος<sup>3</sup> ζηλωτάς βίου, χαίροντας οἰνοφλυγίαις, ὀψοφαγίαις, ἀκράτου καὶ ἰχθύων καὶ ἐδεσμάτων [καὶ] κακοὺς δούλους, περὶ συμπόσια καὶ τραπέζας ἰλυσπωμένους λίχνων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀσθενεστέρους.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀναφαινομένοις.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ὑγροὺς διαρρέοντας.

---

<sup>a</sup> Heinemann translates "die ihr Ohr (leerem) Gerede leihen." πεφρακότες can come either from φράσσω or φράζω, but neither verb, so far as I know, can bear any sense which combined with οὖς would mean "to lend an ear." The same 62

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 88-91

by the voices they hear,<sup>a</sup> deaf to all else, at once humbled to the ground and uplifted on high by the inconsistencies of the multitude who deal out praise and blame in an indiscriminate stream. They form friendships and enmities recklessly so that they easily change each for the other, and show every other quality of the same family and kinship as these.

If the desire is directed 89 to office, they are factious, inequitable, tyrannical in nature, cruel-hearted, foes of their country, merciless masters to those who are weaker, irreconcilable enemies of their equals in strength and flatterers of their superiors in power as a preparation for their treacherous attack.

If the object is bodily beauty they are seducers, adulterers, pederasts, cultivators of incontinence and lewdness, as though these worst of evils were the best of blessings.

We have known desire to 90 make its way to the tongue and cause an infinity of troubles, for some desire to keep unspoken what should be told or to tell what should be left unsaid, and avenging justice attends on utterance in the one case and silence in the opposite.

And when it takes hold of the region of the belly, it 91 produces gourmands, insatiable, debauched, eagerly pursuing a loose and dissolute life, delighting in wine bibbing and gluttonous feeding, base slaves to strong drink and fish and dainty cates, sneaking may be said of Mangey's "ex aurium iudicio pendent." I understand it to mean that the idle talk they listen to serves as a fence to exclude other advice. Philo has several times used ἐπιφάρρειν ὄτα for blocking or closing the ears from hearing something, e.g. De Mig. 191. An easier sense would perhaps be given by "close their ears to voices," but the dative can hardly mean this.

PHILO

- τρόπον κυνιδίων, ἐξ ὧν τὴν ἀθλίαν καὶ ἐπάρατον συμβαίνει ζωὴν ἀποτελεῖσθαι, παντὸς ἀργαλεω-92 τέραν θανάτου. ταύτης ἕνεκα τῆς αἰτίας οἱ μὴ χεῖλεσιν ἄκροισ γευσάμενοι φιλοσοφίας, ἀλλὰ τῶν ὀρθῶν δογμάτων αὐτῆς ἐπὶ πλέον ἐστιαθέντες, διερευνησάμενοι φύσιν ψυχῆς καὶ τριττὸν<sup>1</sup> εἶδος ἐνιδόντες αὐτῇ,<sup>2</sup> τὸ μὲν λόγου, τὸ δὲ θυμοῦ, τὸ δ' ἐπιθυμίας, λόγῳ μὲν ὡς ἡγεμόνι τὴν ἄκραν ἀπ-[351] ἐνειμαν οἰκειότατον ἐνδιαίτημα κεφαλῆν, ἔνθα καὶ | τῶν αἰσθήσεων αἰ τοῦ νοῦ<sup>3</sup> καθάπερ βασιλέως 93 δορυφόροι τάξεις παρίδρυνται, θυμῷ δὲ τὰ στέρνα, τῇ μὲν ἵνα στρατιώτου τρόπον θώρακα ἀμπεχό-μενος, εἰ καὶ μὴ ἀπαθῆς ἐν πάσιν, ἀλλὰ τοι δυσάλωτος ἦ, τῇ δ' ἵνα καὶ πλησίον τοῦ νοῦ<sup>4</sup> παρωκισμένος ὑπὸ τοῦ γείτονος ὠφελῆται, κατἐπάδοντος αὐτὸν φρονήσει καὶ πραῦπαθῆ κατα-σκευάζοντος, ἐπιθυμία δὲ τὸν περὶ τὸν ὀμφαλὸν καὶ 94 τὸ καλούμενον διάφραγμα χῶρον· ἔδει γὰρ αὐτὴν ἦκιστα μετέχουσιν λογισμοῦ πορρωτάτω τῶν βα-σιλείων αὐτοῦ διωκίσθαι, μόνον οὐκ ἐπ' ἐσχατιαῖς, καὶ πάντων ἀπληστότατον καὶ ἀκολαστότατον οὖσαν θρεμμάτων ἐμβόσκεισθαι τόποις,<sup>5</sup> ἐν οἷς τροφαί τε καὶ ὀχεῖται.
- 95 XVI. Πρὸς ἃ μοι δοκεῖ πάντα ἀπιδὼν ὁ ἱερώ-τατος Μωυσῆς ἐκδύσασθαι τὸ πάθος καὶ μυσά-ξάμενος ὡς αἰσχιστον καὶ τῶν αἰσχίστων αἴτιον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τρίτον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. αὐτῆς.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. αἰ τοῦ νόμου.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. νόμου.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. τροποῖς (sic).

---

<sup>a</sup> The Platonic division of the soul into λόγος, θυμός and ἐπιθυμία and their location respectively in the head, chest,

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 91-95

like greedy little dogs round banqueting halls and tables, all this finally resulting in an unhappy and accursed life which is more painful than any death.

It was this which led those who had 92 taken no mere sip of philosophy but had feasted abundantly on its sound doctrines to the theory which they laid down. They had made researches into the nature of the soul and observed that its components were threefold, reason, high spirit and desire.<sup>a</sup> To reason as sovereign they assigned for its citadel the head as its most suitable residence, where also are set the stations of the senses like bodyguards to their king, the mind. To the spirited 93 part they gave the chest, partly that soldier-like clad with a breast-plate it would if not altogether scatheless be scarcely vanquished finally; partly that lying close to the mind it should be helped by its neighbour who would use good sense to charm it into gentleness. But to desire they gave the space round the navel and what is called the diaphragm. For it was right that desire so lacking 94 in reasoning power should be lodged as far as might be from reason's royal seat, almost at the outermost boundary, and that being above all others an animal<sup>b</sup> insatiable and incontinent it should be pastured in the region where food-taking and copulation dwell.

XVI. All these it seems the most holy Moses 95 observed and therefore discarded passion in general and detesting it, as most vile in itself and in its and round the navel or diaphragm (Timaeus 69 E f., and elsewhere) has been frequently mentioned by Philo, e.g. Leg. All. i. 70-73, iii. 115.

<sup>b</sup> An allusion to Plato, Timaeus 70 E, where desire is called "a wild beast" (θρέμμα ἄγριον), whose manger (φάρτη) is the belly. See Spec. Leg. i. 148 and note.

PHILO

ἀπέειπεν ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ὡς τινα τῆς ψυχῆς ἐλέποιν, ἧς ἀναιρεθείσης ἢ πειθαρχούσης κυβερνήτῃ λογισμῶ πάντα διὰ πάντων εἰρήνης, εὐνομίας, ἀγαθῶν τελείων, ἀναπεπλήσεται πρὸς 96 εὐδαίμονος βίου παντέλειαν. φιλοσύντομος δ' ὢν καὶ εἰωθὼς ἐπιτέμνειν τὰ ἀπερίγραφα τῷ πλήθει παραδειγματικῇ διδασκαλίᾳ μίαν τὴν περὶ γαστέρα πραγματευομένην ἐπιθυμίαν ἄρχεται νουθετεῖν τε καὶ παιδεύειν, ὑπολαμβάνων καὶ τὰς ἄλλας οὐκέθ' ὁμοίως ἀφηγιάσειν, ἀλλὰ σταλήσεσθαι τῷ τὴν πρεσβυτάτην καὶ ὡς ἡγεμονίδα μεμαθηκέναι τοῖς 97 σωφροσύνης νόμοις πειθαρχεῖν. τίς οὖν ἡ διδασκαλία τῆς ἀρχῆς; συνεκτικώτατα δύο ἐστίν, ἔδωδῆ καὶ πόσις. ἐκάτερον αὐτῶν οὐκ ἀνῆκεν, ἀλλ' ἐπεστόμισε διατάγμασι καὶ πρὸς ἐγκράτειαν καὶ πρὸς φιλανθρωπίαν καὶ—τὸ μέγιστον—πρὸς 98 εὐσέβειαν ἀγωγοτάτοις. ἀπάρχεσθαι γὰρ ἀπό τε σίτου καὶ οἴνου καὶ ἐλαίου καὶ θρεμμάτων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων κελεύει καὶ τὰς ἀπαρχὰς διανέμειν εἰς τε θυσίας καὶ τοὺς ἱερωμένους, τὰς μὲν ἔνεκα εὐ-χαριστίας τῆς πρὸς θεὸν ὑπὲρ εὐγονίας καὶ εὐφορίας ἀπάντων, τοὺς δ' ἔνεκα τῆς περὶ τὸ ἱερόν ἀγιοστείας, μισθὸν ληψομένους τῶν περὶ τὰς ἱεουργίας 99 ὑπηρεσιῶν. ἐφίεται δὲ τὸ παράπαν οὐδενὶ γεύσασθαί τινος ἢ μεταλαβεῖν, πρὶν διακρῖναι τὰς

---

<sup>a</sup> Heinemann takes ἀρχή to mean the first of the desires. I understand it as carrying on ἀρχεται of the section before. Moses wishes to restrain ἐπιθυμία as a whole, but begins with “the appetite of the belly.” He now proceeds to describe the teaching given in this beginning (ἀρχεται however may simply = “proceed”).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 95-99

effects, denounced especially desire as a battery of destruction to the soul, which must be done away with or brought into obedience to the governance of reason, and then all things will be permeated through and through with peace and good order, those perfect forms of the good which bring the full perfection of happy living. And being a lover 96 of conciseness and wont to abridge subjects of unlimited number by using an example as a lesson he takes one form of desire, that one whose field of activity is the belly, and admonishes and disciplines it as the first step, holding that the other forms will cease to run riot as before and will be restrained by having learnt that their senior and as it were the leader of their company is obedient to the laws of temperance.

What then 97 is the lesson which he takes as his first step? <sup>a</sup> Two things stand out in importance, food and drink; to neither of these did he give full liberty but bridled them with ordinances most conducive to self-restraint and humanity and what is chief of all, piety. For he bids them to take samples of their 98 corn, wine,<sup>b</sup> oil and live-stock and the rest as first fruits, and apportion them for sacrifices and for gifts to the officiating priests: for sacrifices, to give thanks for the fertility of their flocks and fields; to the priests, in recognition of the ministry of the temple that they may receive a reward for their services in the holy rites.<sup>c</sup> No one is per- 99 mitted in any way to taste or take any part of his fruits until he has set apart the first fruits, a rule

<sup>b</sup> This is the only way in which restraint in drinking is enjoined throughout these sections.

<sup>c</sup> See Deut. xviii. 4 and elsewhere. Cf. i. 132 ff.

PHILO

ἀπαρχάς, ἅμα καὶ πρὸς ἄσκησιν τῆς βιωφελεστάτης ἐγκρατείας· ὁ γὰρ ταῖς περιουσίαις, αἷς ἤνεγκαν αἱ τοῦ ἔτους ὥραι, μαθὼν μὴ ἐντρέχειν,<sup>1</sup> ἀλλ' ἀναμένων, ἄχρισ ἂν αἱ ἀπαρχαὶ καθοσιωθῶσι, τὸν ἀφηνιασμὸν τῶν ὀρμῶν ἔοικεν ἀναχαιτίζειν ἐξευμαρίζων τὸ πάθος.

- 100 XVII. | Οὐ μὴν οὐδὲ τὴν τῶν ἄλλων μετουσίαν
 [352] ἐφῆκε καὶ χρῆσιν ἀδεᾶ τοῖς κοινωνοῦσι τῆς ἱερᾶς πολιτείας, ἀλλ' ὅσα τῶν χερσαίων ἢ ἐνύδρων ἢ πτηνῶν ἐστὶν εὐσαρκότατα καὶ πιότατα, γαργαλίζοντα καὶ ἐρεθίζοντα τὴν ἐπίβουλον ἡδονήν, πάντα ἀνὰ κράτος ἀπέειπεν, εἰδὼς ὅτι τὴν ἀνδραποδωδεστάτην τῶν αἰσθήσεων δελεάσαντα γεῦσιν ἀπληστίαν ἐργάσεται, δυσίατον κακὸν ψυχαῖς τε καὶ σώμασιν· ἀπληστία γὰρ τικτεῖ δυσπεψίαν, ἣτις ἐστὶ νοσημάτων καὶ ἀρρωστημάτων ἀρχή τε καὶ
 101 πηγὴ. χερσαίων μὲν οὖν τὸ συνῶν γένος ἡδιστον ἀνωμολόγηται παρὰ τοῖς χρωμένοις, ἐνύδρων δὲ τὰ γένη τῶν ἀλεπίδων. . . .<sup>2</sup> πρὸς γὰρ ἐγκράτειαν, εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος, ἱκανὸς ὢν ἀλείψαι τοὺς εὐφυῶς ἔχοντας πρὸς ἄσκησιν ἀρετῆς δι' ὀλιγοδείας καὶ εὐκολίας γυμνάζει καὶ συγκροτεῖ, πειρώμενος
 102 ἀφελεῖν πολυτέλειαν· οὔτε σκληραγωγίαν, ὡς ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος νομοθέτης, ἀποδεξάμενος οὔτε τὸ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. συντρέχειν.

<sup>2</sup> For the supposed lacuna see note b.

---

<sup>a</sup> In this and the following sections the prohibition of certain kinds of beasts, fishes, and birds is based on the supposition that they are the most appetizing and to abstain from them encourages self-control. It will be seen that from § 106 onwards a totally different line of argument is adopted, viz. that philosophical and moral lessons are intended by the distinctions.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 99-102

which also serves to give practice in the self-restraint which is most profitable to life. For he who has learnt not to rush to seize the abundant gifts which the seasons of the year have brought, but waits till the first fruits have been consecrated, clearly allays passion and thus curbs the restiveness of the appetites.

XVII. At the same time he also denied to the 100 members of the sacred Commonwealth unrestricted liberty to use and partake of the other kinds of food. All the animals of land, sea or air whose flesh is the finest and fattest, thus titillating and exciting the malignant foe pleasure, he sternly forbade them to eat, knowing that they set a trap for the most slavish of the senses, the taste, and produce gluttony, an evil very dangerous both to soul and body. For gluttony begets indigestion which is the source and origin of all distempers and infirmities.<sup>a</sup> Now among the different kinds 101 of land animals there is none whose flesh is so delicious as the pig's, as all who eat it agree, and among the aquatic animals the same may be said of such species as are scaleless.<sup>b</sup> . . . Having special gifts for inciting to self-control those who have a natural tendency to virtue, he trains and drills them by frugality and simple contentedness and endeavours to get rid of extravagance. He approved neither of rigorous austerity like 102 the Spartan legislator, nor of dainty living, like <sup>b</sup> Cohn supposes that some words have fallen out as "these therefore Moses forbade to be eaten." It would certainly explain the γάρ that follows, which otherwise must refer back to § 100. Otherwise it does not seem very conclusive. If there is a lacuna, it may perhaps have begun with καὶ ἀπτερύγων ("and finless").

PHILO

- ἀβροδίαιτον, ὡς ὁ τοῖς Ἰωσι καὶ Συβαρίταις τὰ περὶ θρύψιν καὶ χλιδὴν εἰσηγησάμενος, ἀλλὰ μέσσην ἀτραπὸν ἀμφὸν ἀνατεμὼν τὸ μὲν σφοδρὸν ἐχάλασε, τὸ δ' ἀνειμένον ἐπέτεινε, τὰς ἐφ' ἑκατέρων τῶν ἄκρων ὑπερβολὰς ὡς ἐν ὀργάνῳ μουσικῶ κερασάμενος τῇ μέσῃ, πρὸς ἁρμονίαν βίου καὶ συμφωνίαν ἀνεπίληπτον· ὅθεν οὐκ ἀμελῶς ἀλλὰ καὶ πάνυ πεφροντισμένως οἷς χρηστέον ἢ τούναντίον διετά-103 ξατο. θηρία ὅσα σαρκῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἄπτεται τάχα μὲν ἂν τις ὑπολάβοι δίκαιον εἶναι τὰ αὐτὰ πρὸς ἀνθρώπων πάσχειν οἷς διατίθησι· Μωυσῆ δὲ τῆς τούτων ἀπολαύσεως ἀνέχειν δοκεῖ, <εἰ> καὶ προσηνεστάτην καὶ ἡδίστην εὐωχίαν παρασκευάζει, λογιζόμενος τὸ πρέπον ἡμέρῳ ψυχῇ· καὶ γὰρ εἰ τοῖς διατιθεῖσιν ἁρμόττει τὰ παραπλήσια παθεῖν, ἀλλ' οὐχὶ τοῖς παθοῦσιν ἀντιδιατιθέσθαι, μὴ λάθωσιν ὑπ' ὀργῆς, ἀγρίου πάθους, θηριωθέντες.
- 104 καὶ τοσαύτη χρῆται προφυλακῇ τοῦ πράγματος, ὥστε μακρόθεν ἀνεῖρξαι βουλόμενος τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ λεχθέντα ὄρμην ἀπαγορεῦσαι καὶ τῆς τῶν ἄλλων σαρκοβόρων ἀνὰ κράτος χρήσεως, τὰ ποηφάγα διακρίνας εἰς ἡμέρους ἀγέλας, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὴν φύσιν ἐστὶ τιθασά, τροφαῖς ἡμέροις αἷς ἀναδίδωσι γῆ 105 χρώμενα καὶ μηδὲν εἰς ἐπιβουλήν πραγματευόμενα.
- [353] XVIII. | δέκα δ' ἐστὶν ἀριθμῶ· μόσχος, ἀμνός, χίμαρος, ἔλαφος, δορκάς, βούβαλος, τραγέλαφος, πύγαργος, ὄρυξ, καμηλοπάρδαλις. αἰεὶ γὰρ τῆς ἀριθμητικῆς θεωρίας περιεχόμενος, ἦν ἀκριβῶς

<sup>a</sup> Or "tendency to such vindictiveness." For μακρόθεν see App. p. 432.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xiv. 4 f. The correctness of the English equivalents must be regarded as uncertain.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 102-105

him who introduced the Ionians and Sybarites to luxurious and voluptuous practices. Instead he opened up a path midway between the two. He relaxed the overstrained and tightened the lax, and as on an instrument of music blended the very high and the very low at each end of the scale with the middle chord, thus producing a life of harmony and concord which none can blame. Consequently he neglected nothing, but drew up very careful rules as to what they should or should not take as food.

Possibly it might be thought just <sup>103</sup> that all wild beasts that feed on human flesh should suffer from men what men have suffered from them. But Moses would have us abstain from the enjoyment of such, even though they provide a very appetizing and delectable repast. He was considering what is suitable to a gentle-mannered soul, for though it is fitting enough that one should suffer for what one has done, it is not fitting conduct for the sufferers to retaliate it on the wrongdoers, lest the savage passion of anger should turn them unawares into beasts. So careful is he against this <sup>104</sup> danger that wishing to restrain by implication the appetite for the food just mentioned,<sup>a</sup> he also strictly forbade them to eat the other carnivorous animals. He distinguished between them and the graminivorous which he grouped with the gentle kind since indeed they are naturally tame and live on the gentle fruits which the earth produces and do nothing by way of attempting the life of others. XVIII. They are the calf, the lamb, the kid, the <sup>105</sup> hart, the gazelle, the buffalo, the wild goat, the pygarg, the antelope, and the giraffe, ten in all.<sup>b</sup> For as he always adhered to the principles of κατανενόηκεν ὅτι πλείστον ἐν τοῖς οὐσι δύναται, οὐδὲν οὐ μικρὸν οὐ μέγα νομοθετεῖ μὴ προσπαραλαβὼν καὶ ὡσπερ ἐφαρμόσας τὸν οἰκείον τοῖς νομοθετουμένοις (ἀριθμόν). ἀριθμῶν δὲ τῶν ἀπὸ μονάδος τελειότατος ἢ δεκάς καί, ὡς φησι Μωυσῆς, ἱερώτατός τε καὶ ἅγιος, ᾧ τὰ γένη τῶν καθαρῶν ζώων ἐπισφραγίζεται, βουλευθεὶς τὴν τούτων χρῆσιν ἀπονεῖμαι τοῖς μετέχουσι τῆς κατ' αὐτὸν πολιτείας.

PHILO

- 106 βάσανον δὲ καὶ δοκιμασίαν τῶν δέκα ζώων ὑπογράφεται κοινῇ κατὰ διττὰ σημεῖα, τό τε διχηλεῖν καὶ τὸ μηρυκᾶσθαι· οἷς γὰρ ἢ μηδέτερον ἢ θάτερον αὐτὸ μόνον πρόσσεστιν, ἀκάθαρτα. ταυτὶ δὲ τὰ σημεῖα ἀμφότερα σύμβολα διδασκαλίας καὶ μαθήσεως ἐπιστημονικωτάτης ἐστίν, ἧ πρὸς τὸ ἀσύγχυτον τὰ βελτίω τῶν ἐναντίων διακρίνεται.
- 107 καθάπερ γὰρ τὸ μηρυκώμενον ζῶον, ὅταν διατεμὸν τὴν τροφήν ἐναπερείσῃται τῇ φάρυγγι, πάλιν ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ὀλίγον ἀνιμᾶται καὶ ἐπιλαίνει καὶ μετὰ ταῦτ' εἰς κοιλίαν διαπέμπεται, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ὁ παιδευόμενος, δεξάμενος δι' ὥτων τὰ σοφίας δόγματα καὶ θεωρήματα παρὰ τοῦ διδάσκοντος, ἐπὶ πλεόν ἔχει τὴν μάθησιν οὐχ οἷός τε ὢν εὐθύς συλλαβέσθαι καὶ περιδράξασθαι κραταιότερον, ἄχρις ἂν ἕκαστον ὢν ἤκουσεν ἀναπολῶν μνήμη συνεχέσι μελέταις—αἱ δ' εἰσὶ κόλλα νοημάτων—ἐνσφραγίσῃται τῇ ψυχῇ βεβαίως τὸν τύπον. ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ὡς ἔοικεν ὄφελος ἢ τῶν νοημάτων βεβαία κατάληψις, εἰ μὴ προσγένοιτο διαστολή τούτων καὶ διαίρεσις εἰς τε αἴρεσιν ὢν χρῆ καὶ φυγὴν τῶν

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xi. 3 f., Deut. xiv. 6 f. For the allegorical inter-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 105-108

numerical science, which he knew by close observance to be a paramount factor in all that exists, he never enacted any law great or small without calling to his aid and as it were accommodating to his enactment its appropriate number. But of all the numbers from the unit upwards ten is the most perfect, and, as Moses says, most holy and sacred, and with this he seals his list of the clean kinds of animals when he wishes to appoint them for the use of the members of his commonwealth.

He adds a general method for proving 106 and testing the ten kinds, based on two signs, the parted hoof and the chewing of the cud.<sup>a</sup> Any kind which lacks both or one of these is unclean. Now both these two are symbols to teacher and learner of the method best suited for acquiring knowledge, the method by which the better is distinguished from the worse, and thus confusion is avoided. For just as a cud-chewing animal after 107 biting through the food keeps it at rest in the gullet, again after a bit draws it up and masticates it and then passes it on to the belly, so the pupil after receiving from the teacher through his ears the principles and lore of wisdom prolongs the process of learning, as he cannot at once apprehend and grasp them securely, till by using memory to call up each thing that he has heard by constant exercises which act as the cement of conceptions, he stamps a firm impression of them on his soul. But the firm 108 apprehension of conceptions is clearly useless unless we discriminate and distinguish them so that we can choose what we should choose and avoid the pretation of "dividing the hoof" and "chewing the cud" cf. De Agr. 131-145, and see App. p. 434.

PHILO

- ἐναντίων, ἧς τὸ διχηλοῦν σύμβολον· ἐπεὶ τοῦ βίου διττὴ ὁδός, ἢ μὲν ἐπὶ κακίαν, ἢ δ' ἐπ' ἀρετὴν ἄγουσα, καὶ δεῖ τὴν μὲν ἀποστρέφεισθαι, τῆς δὲ
- 109 μὴδέποτε ἀπολείπεισθαι. XIX. διὰ τοῦθ' ὅσα ἢ μονώνυχχα ἢ πολύχηλα τὰ μὲν ἀκάθαρτα, ὅτι αἰνίττεται μίαν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν φύσιν ἀγαθοῦ τε καὶ κακοῦ, καθάπερ κοίλου καὶ περιφεροῦς καὶ ἀνάντους ὁδοῦ καὶ κατάντους, τὰ δ' ὅτι πολλὰς
- [354] ὁδοὺς μᾶλλον δ' ἀνοδίας ἐμφαίνει τῷ | βίῳ πρὸς ἀπάτην· οὐ γὰρ ῥάδιον ἐν πλήθει τὴν ἀνυσιμωτάτην καὶ ἀρίστην ἀτραπὸν καταλαβεῖν.
- 110 XX. Τούτους ἐπὶ τῶν χερσαίων τοὺς ὄρους θεὸς ἄρχεται καὶ τῶν ἐνύδρων τὰ πρὸς ἐδωδὴν καθαρὰ διαγράφειν, σημειωσάμενος καὶ ταῦτα διττοῖς χαρακτῆρσι, πτέρυξι καὶ λεπίσι· τὰ γὰρ ἢ μὴδέτερον ἢ θάτερον ἔχοντα παραπέμπει καὶ παραιτεῖται. τὸ δ' αἴτιον οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ λεκτέον.
- 111 ὅσα μὲν ἢ ἀμφοῖν ἀμέτοχα ἢ τοῦ ἑτέρου, κατασύρεται πρὸς τοῦ ῥοώδους ἀντέχειν ἀδυνατοῦντα τῇ βίᾳ τῆς φορᾶς· οἷς δ' ἑκάτερον πρόσσεστιν, ἀποστρέφει (καὶ) μετωπηδὸν ἀνθίσταται καὶ φιλονεικοῦντα πρὸς τὸν ἀντίπαλον προθυμίαις καὶ τόλμαις ἀηττήτοις γυμνάζεται, ὡς ὠθούμενά τε ἀντωθεῖν καὶ διωκόμενα ἀντεπιτρέχειν, ὁδοὺς ἐν δυσοδοίαις ἀναστέλλοντα εὐρείας πρὸς διεξόδους
- 112 εὐμαρεῖς. σύμβολα δὲ καὶ ταῦτ' ἐστί, τὰ μὲν

<sup>a</sup> That πολύχηλα is not a mere casual addition is shown by the interpretation given of it in the next words. But there is no foundation for it in Leviticus or Deuteronomy, nor in Philo's discussion of διχηλεῖν in De Agr. Nor am I clear what zoologically it means ("many-toed"?). Heinemann translates "Vielhufer"; Mangey "quae plures ungulas habent." All I can suggest is that Philo supposes that, as the stress is contrary, and this distinguishing is symbolized by the parted hoof. For the way of life is twofold, one branch leading to vice, the other to virtue and we must turn away from the one and never forsake the other. XIX. Therefore all creatures whose hooves are uniform or multiform<sup>a</sup> are unclean, the one because they signify the idea that good and bad have one and the same nature, which is like confusing concave and convex or uphill and downhill in a road; the multiform because they set before our life many roads, which are rather no roads, to cheat us, for where there is a multitude to choose from it is not easy to find the best and most serviceable path.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 108-112

XX. After laying down these limitations for the land animals he proceeds to describe such creatures of the water as are clean for eating. These too he indicates by two distinguishing marks, fins and scales; all that lack either or both he dismisses and repudiates.<sup>b</sup> I must state the reason for this which is appropriate enough. Any that fail to possess both or one of these marks are swept away by the current unable to resist the force of the stream; those who possess both throw it aside, front and stem it and pertinaciously exercise themselves against the antagonist with an invincible ardour and audacity. When they are pushed they push back, when pursued they hasten to assail, where their passage is hampered they open up broad roads and obtain easy thoroughfares. These two kinds of fish are symbolical, the first of a pleasure-laid upon the "two" in διχηλεῖν, if there are animals πολύχηλα they will be unclean also. See also App. p. 434.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xi. 9 ff., Deut. xiv. 9 f.

PHILO

πρότερα φιληδόνου ψυχῆς, τὰ δ' ὕστερα καρτερίαν καὶ ἐγκράτειαν ποθούσης· ἡ μὲν γὰρ ἐφ' ἡδονὴν ἄγουσα κατάντης ἐστὶ καὶ ῥάστη, συρμὸν ἀπεργαζομένη μᾶλλον ἢ περίπατον, ἀνάντης δὲ ἡ πρὸς ἐγκράτειαν, ἐπίπονός μὲν, ἐν δὲ τοῖς μάλιστα ὠφέλιμος· καὶ ἡ μὲν ὑποφέρει καὶ ὑπονοστεῖν ἀναγκάζει τῷ πρανεῖ κατάγουσα, μέχρις ἂν εἰς τὰ τῆς ἐσχατιᾶς ἀποβράσῃ, ἡ δ' εἰς οὐρανὸν ἄγει τοὺς μὴ προκαμόντας ἀθανατίζουσα, τὸ τραχὺ καὶ δυσαναπόρευτον αὐτῆς ἰσχύσαντας ὑπομεῖναι.

- 113 XXI. Τῆς δ' αὐτῆς ἰδέας ἐχόμενος τῶν ἐρπετῶν ὅσα ἢ ἄποδα ἢ<sup>1</sup> συρμῷ τῆς γαστρὸς ἰλυσπώμενα ἢ τετρασκελῆ καὶ πολὺποδα φησὶν εἶναι πρὸς ἐδωδὴν οὐ καθαρὰ, πάλιν αἰνιττόμενος διὰ μὲν ἐρπετῶν τοὺς ἐπὶ κοιλίαις<sup>2</sup> τὸν αἰθυίης τρόπον ἐμφορουμένους καὶ γαστρὶ τῇ ταλαίνῃ δασμοὺς ἀπαύστως εἰσφέροντας ἀκράτου, πεμμάτων, ἰχθύων, συνόλως ὅσα σιτοπόνων καὶ ὀψαρτυτῶν τετεχνιτευμένα περιεργαίαι μετὰ παντοίων ἐδεσμάτων δημιουργοῦσιν ἀναρριπίζουσαι καὶ προσαναφλέγουσαι τὰς ἀπλήστους καὶ ἀκορέστους ἐπιθυμίας, διὰ δὲ τῶν τετρασκελῶν καὶ πολυπόδων τοὺς μὴ ἐνὸς πάθους, ἐπιθυμίας, ἀλλὰ συμπάντων κακοῦς δού-

<sup>1</sup> As the ἄποδα are presumably the same as the συρμῷ κτλ. Heinemann would substitute καὶ. Perhaps omit ἢ.

<sup>2</sup> See note b.

---

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xi. 42. E.V. "Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four or whatsoever hath many feet." LXX πᾶς ὁ πορευόμενος ἐπὶ τέσσαρα διὰ παντός, ὁ πολυπληθεὶ ποσίν, which would naturally mean that the four-loving soul, the latter of one to which endurance and self-control are dear. For the road that leads to pleasure is downhill and very easy, with the result that one does not walk but is dragged along; the other which leads to self-control is uphill, toilsome no doubt but profitable exceedingly. The one carries us away, forced lower and lower as it drives us down its steep incline, till it flings us off on to the level ground at its foot; the other leads heavenwards the immortal who have not fainted on the way and have had the strength to endure the roughness of the hard ascent.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 112-113

XXI. Holding to the same method he declares 113 that all reptiles which have not feet but wriggle along by trailing their belly, or are four-legged and many footed are unclean for eating.<sup>a</sup> Here again he has a further meaning: by the reptiles he signifies persons who devote themselves to their bellies<sup>b</sup> and fill themselves like a cormorant,<sup>c</sup> paying to the miserable stomach constant tributes of strong drink, bake-meats, fishes and in general all the delicacies produced with every kind of viand by the elaborate skill of cooks and confectioners, thereby fanning and fostering the flame of the insatiable ever-greedy desires. By the four-legged and many footed he means the base slaves not of one passion only, desire, legged and the many footed form a single class, and so Philo treats them in the interpretation that follows. The slaves of the four main passions are also slaves to the many specific passions into which these four are subdivided. For the same interpretation of the "four-legged" cf. Leg. All. iii. 139.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "those upon bellies," certainly a strange phrase. Cohn would correct to τῶν ἐπὶ κοιλίαις <πορευόμενων, τοὺς>. See Hermes, 1908, p. 209.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 434.

PHILO

- λους, ἃ γένοι μὲν ἔστιν ἀριθμῶ τέτταρα, μυρία δὲ τοῖς εἶδεσιν. χαλεπή μὲν οὖν καὶ ἡ ἐνὸς δεσποτεία, βαρυτάτη δὲ καὶ ἀφόρητος, ὡς εἰκός, ἢ πλειόνων.
- 114 οἷς δὲ τῶν ἐρπετῶν ὑπεράνω σκέλη τῶν ποδῶν ἔστιν, ὥστε πηδᾶν ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς δύνασθαι, ταυτ' [355] ἐν | καθαροῖς ἀναγράφει, καθάπερ τὰ τῶν ἀκρίδων γένη καὶ τὸν ὄφιομάχην καλούμενον, πάλιν διὰ συμβόλων ἦθη καὶ τρόπους λογικῆς ψυχῆς διερευνώμενος· ἡ μὲν γὰρ τοῦ σώματος ὀλκὴ φύσει βρίθουσα τοὺς ὀλιγόφρονας συνεφέλκεται τῷ πλήθει
- 115 τῶν σαρκῶν ἀυχενίζουσα καὶ πιέζουσα· μακάριοι δ' οἷς ἐξεγένετο κραταιότερα δυνάμει πρὸς τὴν ῥοπήν τῆς ὀλκῆς ἀντιβιάσασθαι,<sup>1</sup> παιδείας κανόσιν ὀρθῆς ἄνω πηδᾶν δεδιδαγμένοις ἀπὸ γῆς καὶ τῶν χαμαιζήλων εἰς αἰθέρα καὶ τὰς οὐρανοῦ περιόδους, ὧν ἡ θεὰ ζηλωτὴ καὶ περιμάχητος τοῖς ἐκουσίως ἀλλὰ μὴ παρέργως ἤκουσιν.
- 116 XXII. Ἐπεληλυθῶς οὖν τῷ λόγῳ τὰς τε τῶν χερσαίων καὶ τὰς τῶν ἐνύδρων ζώων ιδέας καὶ νόμοις αὐτὰς ὡς ἐνήν ἄριστα διακρίνας ἄρχεται καὶ τὴν λοιπὴν φύσιν τῶν ἐν ἀέρι προσεξετάζειν, μυρία γένη τῶν πτηνῶν ἀποδοκιμάσας ὅσα ἢ κατ' ἄλλων<sup>2</sup> ἢ κατ' ἀνθρώπων φονᾶ, σαρκοβόρα καὶ ἰοβόλα καὶ συνόλως ἐπιβούλοις κεχρημένα ταῖς
- 117 δυνάμεσι. φάττας δὲ καὶ περιστερὰς καὶ τρυγόνας

<sup>1</sup> Cohn places the comma after ὀρθῆς.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn suggests ἀλόγων, and so probably Heinemann who translates "Tieren."

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xi. 21. The "snake-fighter" is the LXX translation of the Hebrew word given in R.V. as "cricket."

<sup>b</sup> Or "straight"; the creatures have to straighten their legs to leap. κανών is perhaps used in its original sense of a ruler to keep lines straight, in which sense it is often associated

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 113-117

but of all. For the passions fall under four main heads but have a multitude of species, and while the tyranny of one is cruel the tyranny of many cannot but be most harsh and intolerable. Creeping 114 things which have legs above their feet, so that they can leap from the ground, he classes among the clean<sup>a</sup> as for instance the different kinds of grasshoppers and the snake-fighter as it is called ; and here again by symbols he searches into the temperaments and ways of a reasonable soul. For the natural gravitation of the body pulls down with it those of little mind, strangling and overwhelming them with the multitude of the fleshly elements. Blessed are they 115 to whom it is given to resist with superior strength the weight that would pull them down, taught by the guiding lines of right<sup>b</sup> instruction to leap upward from earth and earth-bound things into the ether and the revolving heavens, that sight so much desired, so worthy a prize in the eyes of those who come to it with a will and not half-heartedly.

XXII. Having discoursed on the subject of the 116 different kinds of animals on land and in the water and laid down the best possible laws for distinguishing between them, he proceeds to examine also the remaining parts of the animal creation, the inhabitants of the air. Of these he disqualified a vast number of kinds, in fact all that prey on other fowls or on men, creatures which are carnivorous and venomous and in general use their strength to attack others.<sup>c</sup> But doves, pigeons, turtledoves, and 117 with ὀρθός. Cf. De Fug. 152 παιδείας κανὼν ὀρθῆς, preceded (§ 150) by ὀρθὴν καὶ ἀκλινῆ παιδείαν.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xi. 13 ff., Deut. xiv. 12 ff. The "clean" species are not mentioned. See App. p. 434.

PHILO

- καὶ τὰς γεράνων καὶ χηνῶν καὶ ὁμοιοτρόπων ἀγέλας ἐν τῇ τιθασῶ καὶ ἡμέρῳ τάξει καταριθμεῖ παρέχων τοῖς βουλομένοις τὴν τούτων χρήσιν
- 118 ἀδεᾶ. οὕτως ἐφ' ἐκάστου τῶν τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν, γῆς ὕδατος ἀέρος, γένη παντοίων ζώων, χερσαῖα καὶ ἔνυδρα καὶ πτηνά, τῆς ἡμετέρας χρήσεως ὑφαιρῶν, καθάπερ ὕλην πυρός, σβέσιν τῆς ἐπιθυμίας ἀπεργάζεται.
- 119 XXIII. Κελεύει μέντοι μήτε θνησιμαίων μήτε θηριάλων προσίεσθαι, τὸ μὲν ὡς οὐ δέον κοινωνεῖν τραπέζης ἀνθρωπῶν<sup>1</sup> ἀτιθάσις θηρίοις, μόνον οὐ συνευωχούμενον ταῖς σαρκοφαγίαις, τὸ δ' ὡς τάχα μὲν βλαβερὸν καὶ νοσῶδες, ἐναποτεθηκότος τοῦ ἰχώρος μετὰ τοῦ αἵματος, τάχα δ' ἐπεὶ καὶ τελευτῇ προκατεσχημένον ἀρμόττον ἦν ἄψαυστον διαφυλάττειν, αἰδουμένους τὰς φύσεως ἀνάγκας αἷς
- 120 προκατελήφθη. τοὺς περὶ τὰ κυνηγέσια δεινούς καὶ βάλλειν θήρας εὐσκόπως ἐπισταμένους, ἥκιστα διαμαρτάνοντας, καὶ ἐπ' εὐθήροις ἄγραις ὑψαυχενούοντας καὶ μάλισθ' ὅταν σὺν τοῖς κυνηγοῖς ἀνδράσιν ὁμοῦ καὶ σκύλαξι διανέμωσι τὰ μέρη τῶν ἐαλωκότων, ἐπαινοῦσι μὲν οἱ πολλοὶ τῶν παρ'

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀνθρώπων.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "take for food," and so Heinemann "geniessen," Mangey "edere." But the word does not itself carry this sense, though Philo assumes in the sequel that such bodies would only be touched in order to use them as food. He uses the vaguer word, I think, because the LXX in Lev. v. 2, differing from the Hebrew, forbids or might be understood to forbid touching such bodies, ἐὰν ἀψηται παντὸς πράγματος ἀκαθάρτου, ἢ θνησιμαίου ἢ θηριαλώτου ἀκαθάρτου. Eating θνησιμαῖα is forbidden in Deut. xiv. 21, θηριάλωτα in Ex. xxii. 31, and both in Lev. xxii. 8 (not mentioned by Cohn or Heinemann).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 117-120

the tribes of cranes, geese and the like he reckons as belonging to the tame and gentle class and gives to any who wish full liberty to make use of them as food. Thus in each element of the universe, 118 earth, water, air he withdrew from our use various kinds of each sort, land creatures, water creatures, flying fowls, and by this as by the withdrawal of fuel from a fire he creates an extinguisher to desire.

XXIII. Further he forbade them to have any- 119 thing to do with<sup>a</sup> bodies of animals that have died of themselves or have been torn by wild beasts, the latter because a man ought not to be table mate with savage brutes and one might almost say share with them the enjoyment of their feasts of flesh ; the former perhaps because it is a noxious and insanitary practice since the body contains dead serum as well as blood ; also it may be because the fitness of things bids us keep untouched what we find deceased, and respect the fate which the compulsion of nature has already imposed. Skilful 120 hunters who know how to hit their quarry with an aim that rarely misses the mark and preen themselves on their success in this sport, particularly when they share<sup>b</sup> the pieces of their prey with the other huntsmen as well as with the hounds, are extolled by most legislators among Greeks and <sup>b</sup> If this is right (and κοινωνικούς below suggests that they keep some for themselves), it is a use of διανέμειν for which I can find no authority. The wording would be more natural if τά was omitted, but even then σύν is strange. The κοινωνικόν so praised lies in giving them to the huntsmen, and it is this which Philo thinks undesirable. "They distribute pieces to the huntsmen as well as to the dogs" is the sense required.

PHILO

Ἑλλησι καὶ βαρβάροις νομοθετῶν ὡς οὐκ ἀνδρείους [356] μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ κοινωνικοὺς τὸ ἦθος, | μέμψαιτο δ' ἄν [τις] εἰκότως ὁ τῆς ἱερᾶς εἰσηγητῆς πολιτείας, ἄντικρυς ἀπειρηκῶς θησιμαίων καὶ θηριαλώτων 121 ἀπόλαυσιν διὰ τὰς εἰρημένας αἰτίας. εἰ δέ τις τῶν ἀσκητῶν φιλογυμναστῆς γένοιτο καὶ φιλό-θηρος, μελέτας καὶ προάγωνας ὑπολαμβάνων εἶναι πολέμων καὶ κινδύνων τῶν πρὸς ἐχθρούς, ὅποτε χρήσαιτο εὐτυχία τῇ περὶ ἄγραν, [καὶ] τοὺς ἐαλωκότητας θῆρας προτιθέτω κυσὶν εὐωχίαν, μισθὸν ἢ γέρας εὐτολμίας καὶ ἀνυπαιτίου συμμαχίας, αὐτὸς δὲ μὴ ψανέτω προδιδασκόμενος ἐν ἀλόγοις ζώοις, ἃ χρὴ καὶ περὶ ἐχθρῶν φρονεῖν, οἷς πολεμητέον οὐ διὰ κέρδος ἄδικον λωποδυτούντων πράξεις <μιμου-μένοις>,<sup>1</sup> ἀλλ' ἦτοι διὰ πείραν<sup>2</sup> κακῶν ὧν προπεπόνθασιν ἀμυνομένοις<sup>3</sup> ἢ δι' ἃ προσδοκῶσι πείσεσθαι.

<sup>1</sup> Some insertion is required, but κατὰ after ἄδικον would serve equally well and be perhaps easier. See also note 3.

<sup>2</sup> Of the two mss. available here one omits πείραν, possibly rightly. πέιρα does not seem to be used like the English "experience" for something suffered, though it may be used in such phrases as πέιραν λαμβάνειν = "to gain experience in." To omit it involves taking δι' ὧν of causes in the past, and δι' ἃ of prospects in the future, but this, I think, could be paralleled from Philo.

<sup>3</sup> So mss. Cohn corrects to ἀμυνομένους. But the accusative and dative are both used to express the agent of the verbal in -τέον. See Goodwin, Moods and Tenses, p. 369, where the dative is said to be the commoner of the two. The same rule will apply to the insertion of μιμουμένοις above, where Cohn prints -ους.

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "would probably blame them." Heinemann

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 120-121

Barbarians, not only for their courage, but also for their liberality. But the author of the holy commonwealth might rightly blame them<sup>a</sup> since for the reasons stated he definitely forbade the enjoyment of bodies which died a natural death or were torn by wild beasts. If anyone of the devotees<sup>121</sup> of hard training who is a lover of gymnastic exercises becomes a lover of the chase also,<sup>b</sup> because he considers that it gives a preliminary practice for war and for the dangers incurred in facing the enemy, he should when he meets with success in the chase throw the fallen beasts to feast the hounds as a wage or prize for their courage and faithful assistance. He himself should not touch these carcasses, thus learning from his dealing with irrational animals what he should feel with regard to human enemies, who should be combated not for wrongful gain as foot-pads do, but in self-defence, either to avenge the injuries which he has suffered already or to guard against those which he expects to suffer in the future.

“has rightly blamed them,” which apart from the inaccuracy gives, I believe, a wrong sense. Philo does not speak dogmatically, but thinks that what he urges here may be fairly inferred from the prohibitions mentioned above. Indeed how could the seven species of “clean” game (§ 105) be obtained except by hunting?

<sup>b</sup> Or, as Heinemann and Mangey, “if a practiser (of virtue) should become a lover of gymnastics and hunting.” The version given above (taking καί = “also”) is based on the belief that ἀσκητής is not used absolutely in this way. It means “a practiser” and a practiser of what is indicated by the context, and that the body rather than virtue is being practised is indicated by φιλογυμναστής. Hunting is a special form of bodily exercise and while the φιλόθηρος must be a φιλογυμναστής the converse is not necessarily the case. For the motive here ascribed cf. De Ios. 3 and Mos. i. 60.

PHILO

- 122 Ἐνιοι δὲ Σαρδανάπαλλοι τὴν ἀκρασίαν τὴν ἄγαν<sup>1</sup> ἀβροδίαιτον αὐτῶν χανδὸν πρὸς τὸ ἀόριστον καὶ ἀτελεΰτητον ἀποτείνοντες, καινὰς<sup>2</sup> ἐπινοοῦντες ἡδονάς, ἄθυτα παρασκευάζουσιν, ἄγχοντες καὶ ἀποπνίγοντες, καὶ τὴν οὐσίαν τῆς ψυχῆς, ἣν ἐλεύθερον καὶ ἄφeton ἐχρῆν ἔαν, τυμβεύοντες τῷ σώματι τὸ αἷμα· σαρκῶν γὰρ αὐτὸ μόνον ἀπολαύειν αὐταρκες ἦν, μηδενὸς ἐφαπτομένους τῶν συγγένειαν
- 123 πρὸς ψυχὴν ἐχόντων. ὅθεν ἐν ἐτέροις τίθησι νόμον περὶ αἵματος, μήθ' αἷμα μήτε στέαρ προσφέρεσθαι· τὸ μὲν αἷμα δι' ἣν εἶπον αἰτίαν ὅτι οὐσία ψυχῆς ἐστίν—οὐχὶ τῆς νοερᾶς καὶ λογικῆς ἀλλὰ τῆς αἰσθητικῆς, καθ' ἣν ἡμῖν τε καὶ τοῖς ἀλόγοις κοινὸν τὸ ζῆν συμβέβηκεν. XXIV. ἐκείνης γὰρ οὐσία πνεῦμα θεῖον καὶ μάλιστα κατὰ Μωυσῆν, ὃς ἐν τῇ κοσμοποιίᾳ φησὶν ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ πρώτῳ καὶ ἀρχηγέτῃ τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν ἐμφυσησάμενος πνοὴν ζωῆς τὸν θεὸν εἰς τὸ τοῦ σώματος ἡγεμονικώτατον, τὸ πρόσωπον, ἔνθα αἱ δορυφόροι τοῦ νοῦ καθάπερ μεγάλου βασιλέως αἰσθήσεις παρίδρυνται· τὸ δ' ἐμφυσώμενον δῆλον ὡς αἰθέριον ἦν πνεῦμα καὶ εἰ δὴ τι αἰθερίου πνεύματος κρεῖσσον, ἅτε τῆς μακαρίας καὶ τρισμακαρίας φύσεως ἀπαύγασμα—
- 124 τὸ δὲ στέαρ, διότι πιότατον, πάλιν εἰς διδασκαλίαν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀρὰν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κενὰς.

---

<sup>a</sup> Heinemann apparently takes ἄγχοντες καὶ ἀποπνίγοντες as governing τὴν οὐσίαν τῆς ψυχῆς. (καί="even.") But the essence of the soul is clearly the blood and this is not strangled. I understand the participles to govern ζῶα, understood out of ἄθυτα. Strangling is not forbidden in so many words, but cf. Acts xv. 29 ἀπέχεσθαι . . . αἵματος καὶ πνικτῶν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 122-124

But some of the type of Sardanapalus greedily extend their unrestrained and excessive luxury beyond all bounds and limits. They devise novel kinds of pleasure and prepare meat unfit for the altar by strangling and throttling the animals,<sup>a</sup> and entomb in the carcase the blood which is the essence of the soul<sup>b</sup> and should be allowed to run freely away. For they should be fully contented with enjoying the flesh only and not lay hold on what is akin to the soul; and therefore elsewhere<sup>c</sup> he legislates on the subject of blood that no one should put either it or the fat to his mouth. Blood is prohibited for the reason which I have mentioned that it is the essence of the soul, not of the intelligent and reasonable soul, but of that which operates through the senses, the soul that gives the life which we and the irrational animals possess in common. XXIV. For the essence or substance of that other soul is divine spirit, a truth vouched for by Moses especially, who in his story of the creation says that God breathed a breath of life upon the first man, the founder of our race, into the lordliest part of his body, the face,<sup>d</sup> where the senses are stationed like bodyguards to the great king, the mind. And clearly what was then thus breathed was ethereal spirit, or something if such there be better than ethereal spirit, even an effulgence of the blessed, thrice blessed nature of the Godhead. The fat is prohibited because it is the richest part

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xvii. 11 and 14. LXX ἡ γὰρ ψυχὴ πάσης σαρκὸς αἷμα αὐτοῦ ἐστὶ. Cf. Deut. xii. 23.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. iii. 17. As the law deals with fat and blood Heinemann suspects περὶ αἵματος as a gloss, but the law is quoted for blood and not for fat.

<sup>d</sup> Gen. ii. 7. E.V. "into his nostrils." LXX "face."

PHILO

- ἐγκρατείας καὶ ζῆλον αὐστηροῦ βίου, τὰ μὲν ῥᾶστα καὶ κατὰ χειρὸς μεθιεμένου, φροντίδας δὲ καὶ πόνους ἐθέλοντι ἔνεκα κτήσεως ἀρετῆς ὑπο-125 μένοντος. ἧς χάριν αἰτίας ἀπὸ παντὸς ἱερείου δύο ταῦτα ἐξαίρετα ὀλοκαυτοῦται, ὥσπερ τινὲς ἀπαρ-[357] χαί, στέαρ τε καὶ αἷμα, τὸ | μὲν ὡς σπονδὴ τῷ βωμῷ προσχεόμενον, τὸ δ' ὡς ὕλη φλογὸς ἐπι-φερόμενον ἀντ' ἐλαίου διὰ τὴν πιότητα τῷ καθ-ωσιωμένῳ καὶ ἱερῷ πυρί.
- 126 Μέμφεταιί τινες τῶν καθ' αὐτὸν γεγονότων ὡς γαστριμάργους καὶ τὸ καθηδυπαθεῖν ὡς εὐδαιμο-νικὸν ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα εἶναι ὑπολαμβάνοντας, οἷς οὐκ ἀπέχρη κατὰ πόλεις αὐτὸ μόνον τρυφᾶν, ἐν αἷς αἰ χορηγίαι καὶ παρασκευαὶ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἄ-φθονοί, ἀλλὰ καὶ <ἐν> ἐρημίαις ἀβάτοις καὶ ἀτριβέσιν, ἀξιούντες ἐν ταύταις ἀγορὰς ἔχειν ἰχθύων 127 καὶ κρεῶν καὶ τῶν ἐν εὐετηρία πάντων. εἶτ' ἐπειδὴ σπάνις ἦν, συνιστάμενοι κατεβύων καὶ κατηγοροῦν καὶ ἐδυσώπουν ἀναισχύντῳ θράσει τὸν ἄρχοντα καὶ οὐ πρότερον ἐπαύσαντο νεωτερίζοντες ἢ τυχεῖν μὲν ὦν ὠρέγοντο, τυχεῖν δὲ ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ, δυοῖν ἔνεκα· τοῦ τ' ἐπιδείξασθαι, ὅτι πάντα θεῷ δυνατὰ πόρον ἐξ ἀμηχάνων καὶ ἀπόρων ἀνευρίσκοντι, καὶ τοῦ τιμωρῆσασθαι τοὺς γαστρὸς ἀκρά-128 τος καὶ ἀφηνιαστὰς ὀσιότητος. ἀπὸ γὰρ τῆς θαλάττης ἀρθὲν ὀρτυγομήτρας νέφος ἐκχεῖται περὶ τὴν ἕω καὶ τὸ μὲν στρατόπεδον καὶ τὰ πέριξ ἐφ' ἡμερήσιον ἀνδρὸς εὐζώνου πανταχόθεν ἐν κύκλῳ

<sup>a</sup> Lev. iv. 7-10, and elsewhere.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 124-128

and here again he teaches us to practise self-restraint and foster the aspiration for the life of austerity which relinquishes what is easiest and lies ready to hand, but willingly endures anxiety and toils in order to acquire virtue. It is for this reason 125 that with every victim these two, the blood and the fat, are set apart as a sort of first fruits and consumed in their entirety. The blood is poured upon the altar as a libation, the fat because of its richness serves as fuel in place of oil and is carried to the holy and consecrated fire.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>b</sup> Moses censures some of his own day as gluttons 126 who suppose that wanton self-indulgence is the height of happiness, who not contented to confine luxurious living to cities where their requirements would be unstintedly supplied and catered for, demanded the same in wild and trackless deserts and expected to have fish, flesh and all the accompaniments of plenty exposed there for sale. Then, 127 when there was a scarcity, they joined together to accuse and reproach and brow-beat their ruler with shameless effrontery and did not cease from giving trouble until their desire was granted though it was to their undoing. It was granted for two reasons, first to show that all things are possible to God who finds a way out of impassable difficulties, secondly to punish those who let their belly go uncontrolled and rebelled against holiness. Rising 128 up from the sea in the early dawn there poured forth a cloud of quails whereby the camp and its environs were all round on every side darkened for a distance which an active <sup>c</sup> man might cover in a

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 126-131 see Num. xi., especially vv. 31-34.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 435.

PHILO

συνεσκίαστο, τὸ δὲ ὕψος τῆς τῶν ζώων πτήσεως ὡσεὶ διπήχει<sup>1</sup> συναριθμουμένῳ διαστήματι τῆς γῆς 129 ἀφειστήκει πρὸς εὐμαρῆ σύλληψιν. εἰκὸς μὲν οὖν τὸ τεράστιον τοῦ μεγαλουργηθέντος καταπλαγέντας ἀρκεσθῆναι τῇ θείᾳ καὶ γεμισθέντας εὐσεβείας καὶ<sup>2</sup> ταύτῃ τραφέντας ἀποσχέσθαι κρεωφαγίας· οἱ δὲ μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον ἐπιθυμίαν ἐγείραντες ὡς ἐπὶ μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν ἴεντο καὶ τὰ ζῶα ταῖς ἀμφοτέραις χερσὶν ἐφελκόμενοι τοὺς κόλπους ἐπλήρουν, εἰτ' ἐναποτιθέμενοι ταῖς σκηναῖς ἐφ' ἑτέρων σύλληψιν ἐξήεσαν<sup>3</sup>—αἱ γὰρ ἄγαν πλεονεξίαι μέτρον οὐκ ἔχουσι —καὶ σκευάζοντες πᾶσαν ἰδέαν ἀπλήστως ἐνεφο-ροῦντο, μέλλοντες οἱ κενοὶ φρενῶν ὑπὸ τῆς πλη-130 σμονῆς ἀπόλλυσθαι. καὶ δῆτα οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν καθ-ἄρσειι χολῆς ἐφθάρησαν, ὡς καὶ τὸ χωρίον ἀπὸ τοῦ περὶ αὐτοὺς πάθους τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν λαβεῖν· ἐκλήθη γὰρ “Μνήματα τῆς ἐπιθυμίας,” ἧς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ψυχῇ, καθάπερ ἐδίδαξεν ὁ λόγος, μεῖζον κακόν.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εἶδει πῆχεως or εἰ δίπηχυ.

<sup>2</sup> So MSS. Cohn κᾶν. Mangey καὶ ταύτῃ <ἐν>τραφέντας.
See note b.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐξίεσαν.

---

<sup>a</sup> In E.V. (v. 31) “the wind let them fall about two cubits.”
The LXX ἐπέβαλεν does not bring this out so clearly and Philo seems to suppose that the whole of their flight was at this height.

<sup>b</sup> Cohn and Mangey’s readings (see note 2) evidently mean that having been bred in piety they would have abstained. I greatly prefer the more forcible reading of the mss., which is by no means an absurd exaggeration. A state of great religious excitement does produce an independence of food. Compare the description in De Vit. Cont. 35 of the Therapeutae who “feasting on the rich banquet of doctrines” abstained from food for three or even six days.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 128-130

day, while the height of their flight<sup>a</sup> might be reckoned at about two cubits above the ground so as to make them easy to capture. It might have 129 been expected that awestruck by the marvel of this mighty work they would have been satisfied with this spectacle, and filled with piety and having it for their sustenance,<sup>b</sup> would have abstained from fleshly food. Instead they spurred on their lusts more than before and hastened to grasp what seemed so great a boon. With both hands they pulled in the creatures and filled their laps with them, then put them away in their tents, and, since excessive avidity knows no bounds, went out to catch others, and after dressing them in any way<sup>c</sup> they could devoured them greedily, doomed in their senselessness to be destroyed by the surfeit. Indeed they shortly perished through discharges 130 of bile,<sup>d</sup> so that the place also received its name from the disaster which befell them, for it was called "Monuments of Lust"<sup>e</sup>—lust than which no greater evil can exist in the soul as the story shows.

<sup>c</sup> If this is right, it is an odd extension of the cognate accusative; otherwise "dressing every kind (of quail)." But there is no reason to suppose that there were different kinds of quails. In the E.V. the quails are "spread abroad," i.e. cured by drying in the sun, which is rendered in the LXX by ἔψυξαν ἑαυτοῖς ψυγμούς "they dried for themselves dryings," a phrase which may have puzzled Philo. Heinemann and Mangey ignore ἰδέαν.

<sup>d</sup> Cf. v. 20. E.V. "until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathsome unto you." Here the LXX for "loathsome" has εἰς χολέραν="nausea." But "discharges of bile" would be a possible equivalent, and probably the idea was assisted by "come out at your nostrils."

<sup>e</sup> E.V. Kibroth-hattaavah. Marg. that is "The graves of lust."

- 131 διὸ παγκάλως ἐν ταῖς παραινέσεσι Μωυσῆς φησιν· “ οὐ ποιήσει ἕκαστος τὸ ἀρεστὸν ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ ” τὸ δ’ ἐστὶν ἴσον τῷ “ μηδεὶς τῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ τῇ αὐτοῦ χαριζέσθω ”· εὐαρεστείτω γάρ τις θεῷ, κόσμῳ, φύσει, νόμοις, σοφοῖς ἀνδράσι, φιλαυτίαν παραιτούμενος, εἰ μέλλει καλὸς καγαθὸς γενήσεσθαι.
- 132 XXV. Τοσαῦτα καὶ <περὶ> τῶν εἰς ἐπιθυμίαν ἀναφερομένων ἀποχρώντως κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν εἴρηται πρὸς συμπλήρωσιν τῶν δέκα λογίων καὶ τῶν [358] τούτοις ὑποστελλόντων· | εἰ γὰρ δεῖ τὰ μὲν φωνῇ θείᾳ χρησμοδηθέντα κεφάλαια γένη νόμων ἀποδείξαι, τοὺς δὲ κατὰ μέρος πάντας οὓς διηρμήνευσε Μωυσῆς ὑποστέλλοντα<sup>1</sup> εἶδη, πρὸς τὸ ἀσύγχυτον τῆς ἀκριβοῦς καταλήψεως φιλοτεχνίας ἐδέησεν, ἥ χρησάμενος ἑκάστῳ τῶν γενῶν ἐξ ἀπάσης τῆς νομοθεσίας τὰ οἰκεῖα προσένειμα καὶ προσέφυσα.
- 133 Τούτων μὲν δὴ ἄλλῃς. οὐ δεῖ δ’ ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι ὡσπερ ἰδίᾳ ἑκάστῳ τῶν δέκα συγγενῇ τινα τῶν ἐπὶ μέρους ἐστίν, ἃ πρὸς ἕτερον γένος οὐδεμίαν ἔχει κοινωσίαν, οὕτως ἕνια κοινὰ πάντων συμβέβηκεν, οὐχ ἐνὶ ἡ δυσί, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, τοῖς <δὲ> δέκα λογίοις
- 134 ἐφαρμόττοντα. ταῦτα δ’ εἰσὶν αἱ κοινωφελεῖς ἀρεταί· καὶ γὰρ ἕκαστος ἰδίᾳ τῶν δέκα χρησμῶν

<sup>1</sup> My correction for ὑποστέλλων τὰ (which Cohn retains). The change from ὑποστέλλοντα intransitive verb to transitive verb seems unnatural and awkward.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xii. 8. For παραινέσεις as a name for Deuteronomy = the more usual προτρεπτικοί (sc. λόγοι), cf. De Agr. 84.

<sup>b</sup> Not (as Heinemann) some laws, but the virtues, as ταῦτα below shows.

<sup>c</sup> Here as in ii. 63, where see note, I see no reason to depart from the established rule that ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν does not

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 131-134

And therefore most excellent are these words of 131 Moses in his Exhortations, "Each man shall not do what is pleasing in his own sight,"<sup>a</sup> which is as much as to say "let no one indulge his own lust. Let a man be well pleasing to God, to the universe, to nature, to laws, to wise men and discard self love.
So only will he attain true excellence."

XXV. In these remarks we have discussed the 132 matters relating to desire or lust as adequately as our abilities allow, and thus completed our survey of the ten oracles, and the laws which are dependent on them. For if we are right in describing the main heads delivered by the voice of God as generic laws, and all particular laws of which Moses was the spokesman as dependent species, for accurate apprehension free from confusion scientific study was needed, with the aid of which I have assigned and attached to each of the heads what was appropriate to them throughout the whole legislation.

Enough then of this. But we must not fail to 133 know that, just as each of the ten separately has some particular laws akin to it having nothing in common with any other, there are some things<sup>b</sup> common to all which fit in not with some particular number<sup>c</sup> such as one or two but with all the ten Great Words. These are the virtues of universal 134 value. For each of the ten pronouncements separ introduce a metaphor but a general or rough statement, particularly of numbers. "One or two" are examples; any law might conceivably fit in to three or four or any other number short of ten. Heinemann here as there translates "so zu sagen," but unless the phrase connotes something different from the English "so to speak," I can see no point in it.

PHILO

- καὶ κοινῇ πάντες ἐπὶ φρόνησιν καὶ δικαιοσύνην καὶ θεοσέβειαν καὶ τὸν ἄλλον χορὸν τῶν ἀρετῶν ἀλείφουσι καὶ προτρέπουσι, βουλαῖς μὲν ἀγαθαῖς ὑγιαίνοντας λόγους, λόγοις δὲ σπουδαίας πράξεις συνείροντες, ἵνα τὸ ψυχῆς ὄργανον εὐαρμόστως ὅλον δι' ὅλων συνηχῆ πρὸς ἐμμέλειαν βίου καὶ
- 135 συμφωνίαν ἀνεπίληπτον. περὶ μὲν οὖν τῆς ἡγεμονίδος τῶν ἀρετῶν, εὐσεβείας καὶ οἰσιότητος, ἔτι δὲ καὶ φρονήσεως καὶ σωφροσύνης εἴρηται πρότερον, νυνὶ δὲ περὶ τῆς ἐπιτηδεύουσης ἀδελφὰ καὶ συγγενῆ ταύταις δικαιοσύνης λεκτέον.
- 136 XXVI. <sup>1</sup>Ἐν τὸ δικαιοσύνης οὐ βραχὺ μέρος ἦν τὸ πρὸς δικαστήρια καὶ δικαστάς, οὐ πρότερον ἐποισάμην ὑπόμνησιν, ἥνικα τὰ τῶν μαρτυρίων ἐπὶ πλεον ἀπομηκύνων διεξῆειν ἔνεκα τοῦ μηδὲν παραλειθῆναι τῶν ἐμφερομένων. οὐκ εἰωθὼς δὲ παλιλλογεῖν, εἰ μὴ πού τις ἀνάγκη γένοιτο βιαζομένων τῶν καιρῶν, ἐκεῖνο μὲν ἔασω, πρὸς δὲ τὰ
- 137 ἄλλα μέρη τρέψομαι τοσοῦτον προειπῶν. τὰ δίκαια, φησὶν ὁ νόμος, ἐντιθέναί δεῖ τῇ καρδίᾳ καὶ ἐξάπτειν εἰς σημεῖον ἐπὶ τῆς χειρὸς καὶ εἶναι σειόμενα πρὸ ὀφθαλμῶν, αἰνιττόμενος διὰ τοῦ προτέρου, ὅτι χρὴ μὴ ὡσὶν ἀπίστοις παρακατατίθε-

<sup>1</sup> The mss. here have the heading Περὶ δικαιοσύνης, and Cohn begins a fresh numeration of chapters. Though the insertion of a heading would otherwise be justified by the important break at this point, it is unnecessary in view of the concluding words of the last section.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. §§ 55-78.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. vi. 6, 8 (also xi. 18). E.V. "These words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart . . . and thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes." In both places the word translated "frontlets" (whence the (head) phylacteries of

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 134-137

ately and all in common incite and exhort us to wisdom and justice and godliness and the rest of the company of virtues, with good thoughts and intentions combining wholesome words, and with words actions of true worth, that so the soul with every part of its being attuned may be an instrument making harmonious music so that life becomes a melody and a concert in which there is no faulty note. Of the queen of the virtues, piety or holiness, we have spoken earlier and also of wisdom and temperance. Our theme must now be she whose ways are close akin to them, that is justice. 135

XXVI. One and by no means an inconsiderable part of justice is that which is concerned with law courts and judges. This I have already<sup>a</sup> mentioned, when I dealt at length with the question of testimony in order to omit nothing of the points involved. As it is not my custom to repeat myself unless forced to do so by the pressure of the particular occasion I will say no more about it and with only so much preface address myself to the other parts of the subject. The law tells us that we must set the rules of justice in the heart and fasten them for a sign upon the hand and have them shaking before the eyes.<sup>b</sup> The first of these is a parable indicating that the rules of justice must not be committed to 137

Matt. xxiii. 5) is given in the LXX by ἀσάλευτον "unshaken." The sequel shows that Philo read σαλευτόν. See App. p. 435.

Actually these words prescribe obedience to God's law, and so belong rather to εὐσέβεια. Heinemann suggests that the description of them as δικαιώματα in v. 3 may have led him to dwell upon them here. Perhaps it is enough to say that as the Deuteronomic code, which he mostly quotes in the sequel, is largely concerned with δικαιοσύνη, they may be fairly quoted here, though they have other applications also.

PHILO

σθαι τὰ δίκαια—πίστις γὰρ ἀκοαῖς οὐκ ἔνεστιν—, [359] ἀλλὰ τῷ ἡγεμονικωτάτῳ <τὰ> πάντων ἄριστα | μα-θημάτων<sup>1</sup> <ἐν>τυποῦν καὶ ταῦτα χαράττοντα σφρα-138 γίσι δοκίμοις· διὰ δὲ τοῦ δευτέρου τὸ μὴ μόνον ἐννοίας λαμβάνειν τῶν καλῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ δόξαντα πράττειν ἀνυπερθέτως—ἢ γὰρ χεὶρ πράξεως σύμβολον, ἧς ἐξάπτειν καὶ ἐξαρτᾶν τὰ δίκαια προστάττει, σημεῖον ἔσσεσθαι τοῦτο φάσκων, καὶ τίνος ἀντικρυς οὐ διείρηκε, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἑνός,<sup>2</sup> ὡς γέ μοι δοκεῖ, πολλῶν δὲ γενέσθαι καὶ σχεδὸν ἀπάντων ἐν 139 οἷς ὁ ἀνθρώπινος βίος—· διὰ δὲ τοῦ τρίτου τὸ αἰεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ φαντασιοῦσθαι τὰ δίκαια καθάπερ ἐγγυὺς ὄντα ὀφθαλμῶν· σάλον δ' ἐχέτω ταῦτα κινούμενα, φησὶν, οὐχ ἴν' ἀβέβαια καὶ ἀνίδρυτα<sup>3</sup> <ἦ>, ἀλλ' ἵνα τῇ κινήσει τὴν ὄψιν ἐκκαλῆ πρὸς ἀρίδηλον θέαν· ὁράσεως γὰρ ἐπαγωγὸν κίνησις ἐξερεθίζουσα καὶ ἀνεγείρουσα μᾶλλον δ' ἀκοιμή-140 τούς καὶ ἐργηγορότας κατασκευάζουσα ὀφθαλμούς. ὅτῳ δ' ἐξεγένετο τυπώσασθαι ἐν<sup>4</sup> τῷ τῆς ψυχῆς ὀμματι μὴ ἡσυχάζοντα ἀλλὰ κινούμενα καὶ ταῖς κατὰ φύσιν ἐνεργείαις χρώμενα, τέλειος ἀνὴρ ἀναγεγράφθω, μηκέτι ἐν τοῖς γνωρίμοις καὶ μαθηταῖς ἐξεταζόμενος, ἀλλ' ἐν διδασκάλοις καὶ ὑφηγηταῖς, καὶ παρεχέτω τοῖς ἐθέλουσιν ἀρύεσθαι τῶν νέων ὥσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς τῶν λόγων καὶ δογμάτων ἄφθονον νᾶμα· κἂν τῶν ἀτολμοτέρων τις

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀναθημάτων. In the words that follow καὶ ταῦτα is Cohn's correction for ταῦτα καὶ of S (καὶ omitted in M). I think of the four corrections made by Cohn in this sentence μαθημάτων and ἐντυποῦν should stand, but thus corrected the text of M is satisfactory, i.e. ἀλλὰ τῷ ἡγεμονικωτάτῳ πάντων ἄριστα μαθημάτων ἐντυποῦν ταῦτα, χαράττοντα κτλ.

<sup>2</sup> mss. μηδέος.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 137-140

untrustworthy ears since no trust can be placed in the sense of hearing but that these best of all lessons must be impressed upon our lordliest part, stamped too with genuine seals. The second <sup>138</sup> shows that we must not only receive conceptions of the good but express our approval of them in unhesitating action, for the hand is the symbol of action, and on this the law bids us fasten and hang the rules of justice for a sign. Of what it is a sign he has not definitely stated because, I believe, they are a sign not of one thing but of many, practically of all the factors in human life. The third means that <sup>139</sup> always and everywhere we must have the vision of them as it were close to our eyes. And they must have vibration and movement, it continues, not to make them unstable and unsettled, but that by their motion they may provoke the sight to gain a clear discernment of them. For motion induces the use of the faculty of sight by stimulating and arousing the eyes, or rather by making them un-sleepful and wakeful.

He to whom it is <sup>140</sup> given to set their image in the eye of the soul, not at rest but in motion and engaged in their natural activities, must be placed on record as a perfect man. No longer must he be ranked among the disciples and pupils but among the teachers and instructors, and he should provide as from a fountain to the young who are willing to draw therefrom a plenteous stream of discourses and doctrines. And

---

<sup>3</sup> Mangey's text here, σάλον δ' ἐχέτω ταῦτα κινούμενον, φησίν, οὐχ ἵν' ἀβέβαιον καὶ ἀνίδρυτον, ἀλλ' ἵνα κτλ., is with a few slight variations the text of the mss., but the neuter singulars are ungrammatical.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. μὲν.

PHILO

- ὑπ' αἰδοῦς μέλλη καὶ βραδύνη προσέρχεσθαι μαθησόμενος, αὐτὸς ἰὼν ἐπαντλείτω καὶ ἐποχετευέτω ταῖς ἀκοαῖς ἀθρόας ὑφηγήσεις, ἄχρις ἂν αἱ δεξα-141 μεναὶ τῆς ψυχῆς γεμισθῶσι. προδιδασκέτω δὴ τὰ δίκαια συγγενεῖς καὶ φίλους καὶ πάντας νέους οἴκοι καὶ ἐν ὁδῶ καὶ πρὸς κοίτην ἰόντας καὶ ἀνισταμένους, ἵν' ἐν πάσαις μὲν σχέσεσι καὶ κινήσειν, ἐν πᾶσι δὲ χωρίοις ἰδίοις τε καὶ δημοσίοις, μὴ μόνον ἐγγηγορότες ἀλλὰ καὶ κοιμώνενοι, φαντασίαις τῶν δικαίων ἐνευφραίνωνται· τέρψις γὰρ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡδίων ἢ τὴν ψυχὴν ὅλην δι' ὅλων πεπληρῶσθαι δικαιοσύνης, ἐμμελετώσαν αὐτῆς τοῖς αἰδίοις δόγμασι καὶ θεωρήμασιν, οὐκ ἔχουσαν 142 ἔρημον τόπον, εἰς ὃν ἀδικία παρελεύσεται. κελεύει δὲ καὶ γράψαντας αὐτὰ πρόσθεν τῶν φλιῶν<sup>1</sup> οἰκίας ἐκάστης προτιθέναι καὶ πυλῶν τῶν ἐν τοῖς τείχεσιν, ἵν' οἱ μὲν ἐκδημοῦντες καὶ ἐνδημοῦντες,<sup>2</sup> ἄστοι καὶ ξένοι, τοῖς πρὸ τῶν πυλῶν γράμμασιν ἐστηλιτευμένοις ἐντυγχάνοντες ἄληκτον ἔχωσι τὴν τῶν λεκτέων καὶ πρακτέων μνήμην, ἐκατέρου φροντίζοντες τοῦ μήτε ἀδικεῖν μήτε ἀδικεῖσθαι, εἰς δὲ τὰς οἰκίας εἰσιόντες καὶ πάλιν ἐξιόντες, ἄνδρες [360] ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναῖκες καὶ τέκνα καὶ θεραπεία, | τὰ ἀρμόττοντα καὶ ἐπιβάλλοντα δρῶσιν<sup>3</sup> ὑπὲρ τε ἄλλων καὶ ὑπὲρ ἑαυτῶν.
- 143 XXVII. Θαυμασιώτατον δὲ κάκεινο διαγορεύει

<sup>1</sup> MSS. φίλων.

<sup>2</sup> Or should we read ἐπιδημοῦντες "returning home" corresponding to εἰσιόντες and ἐξιόντες below? It is when they pass in and out that they would see the inscriptions on the gate.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps, as Mangey suggests, ὁρῶσιν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 140-143

if some less courageous spirit hesitates through modesty and is slow to come near to learn, that teacher should go himself and pour into his ears as into a conduit a continuous flood of instruction until the cisterns of the soul are filled. Indeed he 141 must be forward to teach the principles of justice to kinsfolk and friends and all the young people at home and in the street, both when they go to their beds and when they arise, so that in every posture and every motion, in every place both private and public, not only when they are awake but when they are asleep, they may be gladdened by visions of the just.<sup>a</sup> For there is no sweeter delight than that the soul should be charged through and through with justice, exercising itself in her eternal principles and doctrines and leaving no vacant place into which injustice can make its way. He bids 142 them also write and set them forth in front of the door posts of each house and the gates in their walls,<sup>b</sup> so that those who leave or remain at home, citizens and strangers alike, may read the inscriptions engraved on the face of the gates and keep in perpetual memory what they should say and do, careful alike to do and to allow no injustice, and when they enter their houses and again when they go forth men and women and children and servants alike may act as is due and fitting both for others and for themselves.

XXVII. Another most admirable injunction is 143

<sup>a</sup> Deut. vi. 7 (xi. 19) "thou shalt teach them to thy sons, and shalt talk of them, sitting in the house, and walking in the way and lying down and rising up."

<sup>b</sup> Deut. vi. 9 "And ye shall write them on the doorposts of your houses and your gates."

PHILO

- τὸ μηδὲν προστιθέναι καὶ ἀφαιρεῖν, ἀλλ' ἐν ἴσῳ καὶ ὁμοίῳ διαφυλάττειν ἀκίνητα τὰ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὀρισθέντα νόμιμα· συμβαίνει γάρ, ὡς ἔοικε, τὴν μὲν πρόσθεσιν τῶν ἀδίκων, (τὴν δ' ἀφαίρεσιν γίνεσθαι τῶν δικαίων)· οὐδὲν γάρ ἐστὶν ὁ παρα-144 λείπεται τῷ σοφῷ νομοθέτῃ πρὸς ὀλοκλήρου καὶ παντελοῦς μετουσίαν δικαιοσύνης. αἰνίττεται μέν-τοι καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις ἀρεταῖς ἀκρότητας· ἐκάστη γὰρ αὐτῶν ἀνελλιπῆς ἐστὶ καὶ πλήρης, τὸ ἐντελὲς ἔχουσα ἐξ αὐτῆς, ὡς, εἰ γένοιτο προσθήκη τις καὶ ἀφαίρεσις, ὅλην δι' ὅλων<sup>2</sup> τρέπεσθαι καὶ μετα-145 βάλλεσθαι πρὸς τὴν ἐναντίαν ἕξιν. ὁ δὲ λέγω, τοιοῦτόν ἐστι· τὴν ἀνδρείαν, ἀρετὴν περὶ τὰ δεινὰ πραγματευομένην, ἴσασιν οἱ μὴ παντελῶς ἄμουσοι καὶ ἀχόρευτοι, κἂν ἐπὶ βραχὺ παιδείας προσάψωνται, τῶν ὑπομενετέων οὔσαν ἐπιστήμην.
 146 ἀλλ' ἐάν τις εἶξας ἀμαθία τῇ δι' ἀλαζονείαν, ὡς δὴ περιττὸς καὶ ἰκανὸς ἐπανορθοῦσθαι τὰ ἀνεπιδεᾶ, προστιθέναι ἢ ἀφαιρεῖν τι τολμᾶ, σύμπασαν ἀλλάσσει τὴν εἰκόνα μετατυπώσας αἰσχρὸν ἀντικαλοῦ χαρακτήρος· ἀπεργάσεται γὰρ τῇ μὲν προσθέσει θρασύτητα, τῇ δ' ἀφαιρέσει<sup>3</sup> δειλίαν, μηδ' ὄνομα τῆς βιωφελεστάτης ἀνδρείας καταλιπών.
 147 τὸν αὐτὸν μὲν τρόπον κἂν τῇ βασιλίδι

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Cohn suggests, κἂν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὅλου.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀφαιρήσει.

---

<sup>a</sup> Deut. iv. 2, xii. 32 "ye shall not add to the word which I command you, and ye shall not take from it" (E.V. "diminish").

<sup>b</sup> Or "finality."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 143-147

that nothing should be added or taken away,<sup>a</sup> but all the laws originally ordained should be kept unaltered just as they were. For what actually happens, as we clearly see, is that it is the unjust which is added and the just which is taken away, for the wise legislator has omitted nothing which can give possession of justice whole and complete. Further he suggests also that the summit of perfec- 144 tion<sup>b</sup> has been reached in each of the other virtues. For each of them is defective in nothing, complete in its self-wrought consummateness, so that if there be any adding or taking away, its whole being is changed and transformed into the opposite condition.

<sup>c</sup> Here is an example of what I 145
mean. That courage, the virtue whose field of action is what causes terror, is the knowledge of what ought to be endured,<sup>d</sup> is known to all who are not completely devoid of learning and culture, even if their contact with education has been but small. But if anyone, indulging the ignorance 146 which comes from arrogance and believing himself to be a superior person capable of correcting what stands in no such need, ventures to add to or take from courage, he changes its likeness altogether and stamps upon it a form in which ugliness replaces beauty, for by adding he will make rashness and by taking away he will make cowardice, not leaving even the name of the courage so highly profitable to life.

In the same way too if one 147

<sup>c</sup> The same point is made and illustrated by the same two virtues in Quod Deus 163.

<sup>d</sup> The Stoic definition quoted more completely in Leg. All. i. 68 ἐπιστήμη ὑπομενετέων καὶ οὐχ ὑπομενετέων καὶ οὐδετέρων; see S.V.F. i. 262 ff.

PHILO

τῶν ἀρετῶν, εὐσεβεία, προσθῆ τις ὁτιοῦν μικρὸν ἢ μέγα ἢ τοῦναντίον ἀφέλη, καθ' ἑκάτερον ἐπαλλάξει καὶ μεταμορφώσει τὸ εἶδος· γεννήσει γὰρ ἡ μὲν πρόσθεσις δεισιδαιμονίαν, ἡ δ' ἀφαίρεσις ἀσεβείαν, ἀφανισθείσης αὖ τῆς εὐσεβείας, ἣν ἀνίσχεν καὶ ἐπιλάμπειν εὐκταῖον ἀγαθόν, ἐπειδὴ τοῦ μεγίστου τῶν ἀγαθῶν αἰτία καθέστηκεν, ἐπιστήμην ἐμποιοῦσα θεραπείας θεοῦ, ἣν πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἡγεμονίας ἀρχικωτέραν καὶ βασιλικω-148 τέραν εἶναι νομιστέον. παραπλήσια δὲ τοῖς εἰρη-μένοις καὶ περὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν ἐκάστης ἔστι λέγειν· ἀλλὰ ἐπιτέμνειν εἰωθῶς τὰ μήκη τῶν λόγων ἀρκεσθήσομαι τοῖς εἰρημένοις, ἃ καὶ τῶν ἡσυχάζομένων ἱκανὰ μηνύματα γένοιτ' ἂν.

149 XXVIII. Ἐτι καὶ τοῦτο προσδιατέτακται κοινω-φελὲς παράγγελμα, “ μὴ μετακινεῖν ὄρια τοῦ πλησίον, ἃ ἔστησαν οἱ πρότεροί σου.” τοῦτο δ', ὡς ἔοικεν, οὐ περὶ κλήρων αὐτὸ μόνον καὶ γῆς ὄρων νομοθετεῖται πρὸς πλεονεξίας ἀποκοπήν, [361] ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς | φυλακὴν τῶν ἀρχαίων ἐθνῶν· ἔθνη γὰρ ἄγραφοι νόμοι, δόγματα παλαιῶν ἀνδρῶν οὐ στήλαις ἐγκεχαραγμένα καὶ χαρτιδίοις ὑπὸ σπητῶν ἀναλισκομένοις, ἀλλὰ ψυχαῖς τῶν μετειληφότων 150 τῆς αὐτῆς πολιτείας. ὀφείλουσι γὰρ παῖδες παρὰ γονέων <δίχα> τῶν οὐσιῶν κληρονομεῖν ἔθνη πάτρια, οἷς ἐνεγράφησαν καὶ ἐξ αὐτῶν σπαργάνων συνεβίωσαν, καὶ μὴ καταφρονεῖν, παρόσον ἄγραφος αὐτῶν ἡ παράδοσις· ὁ μὲν γὰρ τοῖς ἀναγραφείσει νόμοις πειθαρχῶν οὐκ ἂν δεόντως ἐπαινοῖτο,

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xix. 14. It is difficult to see why this passage is introduced here. The text is clearly quoted not for its literal meaning, but for its application to the customs which are adds anything small or great to the queen of virtues piety or on the other hand takes something from it, in either case he will change and transform its nature. Addition will beget superstition and subtraction will beget impiety, and so piety too is lost to sight, that sun whose rising and shining is a blessing we may well pray for, because it is the source of the greatest of blessings, since it gives the knowledge of the service of God, which we must hold as lordlier than any lordship, more royal than any sovereignty. Much the same may be said 148 of the other virtues, but as it is my habit to avoid lengthy discussions by abridgement I will content myself with the aforesaid examples which will sufficiently indicate what is left unsaid.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 147-150

XXVIII. Another commandment of general value 149 is "Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmarks which thy forerunners have set up."<sup>a</sup> Now this law, we may consider, applies not merely to allotments and boundaries of land in order to eliminate covetousness but also to the safeguarding of ancient customs. For customs are unwritten laws, the decisions approved by men of old, not inscribed on monuments nor on leaves of paper which the moth destroys, but on the souls of those who are partners in the same citizenship. For 150 children ought to inherit from their parents, besides their property, ancestral customs which they were reared in and have lived with even from the cradle, and not despise them because they have been handed down without written record. Praise cannot be duly given to one who obeys the written unwritten laws. But the laws which have been and are still to be discussed are not unwritten.

PHILO

- νουθετούμενος ἀνάγκη καὶ φόβῳ κολάσεως, ὁ δὲ τοῖς ἀγράφοις ἐμμένων, ἐκούσιον ἐπιδεικνύμενος τὴν ἀρετὴν, ἐγκωμίων ἄξιος.
- 151 XXIX. <sup>1</sup> Ἐνιοὶ τὰς κληρωτὰς εἰσηγήσαντο ἀρχάς, ἀλυσιτελῶς τοῖς πλήθεσιν· εὐτυχίαν γὰρ ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀρετὴν ὁ κλῆρος ἐμφαίνει. πολλοὶ γοῦν πολλάκις τῶν ἀναξίων ἔλαχον, οὓς ἀνὴρ ἀγαθὸς λαβόμενος ἡγεμονίας ἀποδοκιμάσαι ἂν καὶ ἐν ὑπηκόοις ἐξετά-
- 152 ζεσθαι. καὶ γὰρ οἱ μικροὶ λεγόμενοι παρά τισιν ἀρχοντες, οὓς δεσπότης ὀνομάζουσιν, οὐ πάντας ὅσους ἂν οἰοί τε ὦσιν οἰκότριβας ἢ ἀργυρωνήτους ὑπάγονται, μόνους δὲ τοὺς καταπειθεῖς γινομένους, ἀγγεληδὸν ἔστιν ὅτε πιπράσκοντες τοὺς ἀνιάτως ἔχοντας τὸ ἦθος ὡς καὶ δουλεύειν ἀγαθοῖς ἀνδράσιν
- 153 ἀναξίους ὄντας. ἔτι τοίνυν<sup>2</sup> προσήκει δεσπότης καὶ ἡγεμόνας ὄλων πόλεων καὶ ἔθνῶν ἀποφαίνει τοὺς κλῆρῳ λαχόντας, ὀλίσθῳ τινὶ τύχης, ἀβεβαίου καὶ ἀνιδρύτου πράγματος; ἀλλ' εἰς μὲν τὴν τῶν καμνόντων ἐπιμέλειαν κλῆρος τὸ μηδέν· ἰατροὶ γὰρ οὐ κλῆρῳ λαγχάνουσιν, ἀλλ' ἐν πείρᾳ δοκιμάζονται.
- 154 καὶ πρὸς εὐπλοίαν καὶ σωτηρίαν τῶν θαλαττευόντων οὐχ ὁ λαχὼν κυβερνᾶν εὐθὺς ἐπὶ πρύμναν παραπέμπεται, δι' ἀνεπιστημοσύνης ἐργασόμενος ἐν εὐδία καὶ γαλήνῃ χειροποίητα ναύαγια, ἀλλ' ὅστις ἂν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας τὴν κυβερνητικὴν τέχνην ἐπι-

<sup>1</sup> Here the mss. have the heading Κατάστασις ἀρχόντων ("De constitutione principum"). The title is not only unnecessary but misleading. As no further heading is given it may be supposed to cover the rest of the treatise, but the appointment of the ruler only occupies the sections down to § 159, and his character and duties only to § 192. Cohn however begins here a fresh numeration of chapters.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἔτι νῦν οἱ οὐ τοίνυν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 150-154

laws, since he acts under the admonition of restraint and the fear of punishment. But he who faithfully observes the unwritten deserves commendation, since the virtue which he displays is freely willed.<sup>a</sup>

XXIX. Some legislators have introduced the 151 system of filling magistracies by lot, to the detriment of their peoples, for the lot shows good luck, not merit. In fact the lot often falls to many of the unworthy whom a good man, if he obtained command, would reject as unfit to be classed even among his subjects. For those "minor rulers," as 152 some phrase it, whom we call "masters" do not retain in their service all they might whether home-bred or purchased, but only those who prove amenable: the incorrigible they sometimes sell in a mass as unworthy to be slaves of men of merit. And can 153 it then be right to make masters and rulers of whole cities and nations out of persons chosen by lot, by what we may call a blunder of fortune,<sup>b</sup> the uncertain and unstable? In the matter of tending the sick lot has no place, for physicians do not gain their posts by lot, but are approved by the test of experience. And to secure a successful voyage and the safety of 154 travellers on the sea we do not choose by lot and send straight away to the helm a steersman who through his ignorance will produce in fine weather and calm water shipwrecks in which Nature has no part.<sup>c</sup> Instead we send one whom we know to have

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 435.

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps better "a random act of fortune." Fortune's steps are uncertain, but not always blunders. "Freak" might perhaps cover the meaning. Cf. ii. 231 (of the same subject).

<sup>c</sup> Or "home-made," "man-made."

PHILO

μελῶς φαίνεται δεδιδασκόμενος· οὗτος δ' ἐστὶν ὁ πολλάκις μὲν πεπλευκῶς, τὰ δὲ σύμπαντα ἢ πλείστα πελάγη περαιωσάμενος, ἐμπόρια δὲ καὶ λιμένας καὶ ὑφόρμους καὶ ὑποδρόμους τοὺς ἔν τε [362] νήσοις καὶ ἡπείροις | ἐπιμελῶς ἐξήτακῶς καὶ μᾶλ-λον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον τῶν κατὰ γῆν ὁδῶν τὰς κατὰ θάλατταν ἀτραποὺς ἐπιστάμενος ἐκ τῆς ἀκριβοῦς 155 θέας τῶν οὐρανίων· παρατηρήσας γὰρ τὰς χορείας τῶν ἀστέρων καὶ ἐπακολουθήσας αὐτῶν ταῖς τεταγμέναις κινήσεσιν ἐν ἀνοδίαις ἴσχυσεν ἀπλανεῖς καὶ λεωφόρους ὁδοὺς ἀνατεμεῖν, ἵνα—τὸ πάντων ἀπιστότατον πραγμάτων—ἡ χερσαία φύσις διὰ 156 πλωτῆς οἶα τε ἦ περαιουῖσθαι. πόλεις δέ τις μεγάλας καὶ πολυανθρώπους, μεστὰς οἰκητόρων, καὶ πολιτείας ἐγχειρίζεσθαι μέλλων καὶ πραγμάτων ἰδιωτικῶν τε καὶ δημοσίων καὶ ἱερῶν ἐπιμέλειαν, ἣν οὐκ ἂν ἀμάρτοι τις εἰπὼν τέχνην τεχνῶν εἶναι καὶ ἐπιστήμην ἐπιστημῶν, πρὸς ἄστατον κλήρου φορὰν ταλαντεύσει τὴν ἀκριβῆ βάσανον τῆς ἀληθείας φυγῶν; ἀληθείας δὲ βάσανος αἰ σὺν λόγῳ 157 πίστεις. XXX. ταῦτ' οὖν τῇ ψυχῇ θεασάμενος ὁ πάνσοφος Μωυσῆς κληρωτῆς μὲν ἀρχῆς οὐδὲ μέ-μνηται, τὰς δὲ χειροτονητὰς εἰσηγείσθαι διανοήθη. φησὶ γοῦν· καταστήσεις ἐπὶ σεαυτὸν ἄρχοντα οὐκ ἀλλότριον, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῶν σῶν ἀδελφῶν, δηλῶν ἐθελούσιον αἵρεσιν καὶ δοκιμασίαν ἀνεπίληπτον ἄρχοντος, ἣν σύμπασα ἢ πληθὺς ὁμογνωμονοῦσα ποιήσει. προσεπιψηφιεῖται δὲ τὴν αἵρεσιν ἐπι-

<sup>a</sup> ἵνα, as often in Philo, is consecutive.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "the land-nature is able to pass through navigable nature." See Spec. Leg. i. 335 and note.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xvii. 15 "thou shalt surely set over thyself a ruler,

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 154-157

been carefully trained from his earliest years in the art of steersmanship. Such a one will have made many a voyage, crossed all or most seas, carefully studied the trading ports, harbours and anchorages and roadsteads, both in the islands and the mainland, and know the sea routes as well as, if not better than, the roads on land, through accurately watching the heavenly bodies. For by observing the courses of 155 the stars and following their ordered movements he has been able to open up in the pathless waste high-roads where none can err, with this incredible result,<sup>a</sup> that the creature whose element is land can float his way through the element of water.<sup>b</sup> And shall one 156 who is to have in his hands great and populous cities with all their inhabitants, and the constitutions of the cities and the management of matters private, public and sacred, a task which we might well call an art of arts and a science of sciences, be the sport of the unstable oscillation of the lot and escape the strict test of truth, which can only be tested by proofs founded on reason? XXX. These things Moses, 157 wise here as ever, considered in his soul and does not even mention appointment of rulers by lot, but determines to institute appointment by election. Thus he says "thou shalt establish a ruler over thyself, not a foreigner but from thy brethren," hereby indicating that there should be a free choice and an unimpeachable scrutiny of the ruler made by the whole people with the same mind.<sup>c</sup> And the choice will receive the further vote and seal of ratification whomsoever the Lord thy God shall choose. From thy brethren thou shalt set a ruler over thyself. Thou shalt not be able to set over thyself a man that is a stranger, because he is not thy brother."

PHILO

σφραγιζόμενος καὶ ὁ τῶν κοινωφελῶν ἀπάντων βεβαιωτῆς θεός, ἐκλογὴν τινα τοῦ γένους ὑπολαβῶν εἶναι τὸν ἄνθρωπον<sup>1</sup> ὡς ὄψιν ἐν σώματι.

158 XXXI. τὰς δ' αἰτίας τοῦ μὴ δεῖν ἀλλότριον αἰρεῖσθαι πρὸς ἀρχὴν διττὰς ὑπογράφει, τὴν μὲν ἵνα μὴ πλήθος ἀργυρίου καὶ χρυσίου καὶ θρεμμάτων συναγάγῃ πολὺν πλοῦτον καὶ πάντα ἄδικον ἐκ τῆς πενίας τῶν ὑπηκόων θησαυρισάμενος, τὴν δ' ἵνα μὴ τὸ ἔθνος ἐκ τῆς οἰκείας χώρας ἀναστήσας ἕνεκα τῶν ἰδίων πλεονεξιῶν ἀναγκάζῃ μετανίστασθαι (κατὰ)<sup>2</sup> πλάνον ἀνήνυτον ὧδε κἀκέισε φορούμενον, ὑποβαλὼν ἀτελεῖς ἐλπίδας μειζόνων ἀγαθῶν κτήσεως, εἰς ἀφαίρεσιν ὧν ἤδη βεβαίως ἐκαρπούτο.

159 προὔπελαβε γάρ, ὡς εἰκός, τὸν ὁμόφυλον καὶ συγγενῆ μετέχοντα τῆς πρὸς τὴν ἀνωτάτῳ συγγένειαν οἰκειότητος—ἡ δ' ἀνωτάτῳ συγγένειά ἐστι πολιτεία μία καὶ νόμος ὁ αὐτὸς καὶ εἰς θεός, ᾧ πάντες οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους προσκεκλήρωνται,—μηδέποτε τὰ παραπλήσια τοῖς προλεχθείσι διαμαρτεῖν, ἀλλ' ἔμπαλιν ἀντὶ μὲν τοῦ μεθορμίζειν τοὺς οἰκήτορας καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Cohn suggested αἰρεθέντα, which Heinemann translates. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> A doubtful insertion. πλάνον may be cogn. acc.

---

<sup>a</sup> The words are obscure. If the text is right, the meaning may be that the choice of one particular man shows him to be the “eye of the body,” and that God accepts this and confirms it. Philo is clearly trying to reconcile the free choice which he thinks is implied in the words “thou shalt set” with the limitation “whomsoever the Lord thy God shall choose.” But no authority is quoted for the use of ἐκλογή = “the chosen,” nor yet for “the choicest” or the “pick,” which Cohn’s correction of ἄνθρωπον to αἰρεθέντα demands.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xvii. 16, 17. E.V. “only he shall not multiply

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 157-159

from Him who confirms all things that promote the common weal, even God who holds that the man may be called the chosen from the race, in which he is what the eye is in the body.<sup>a</sup> XXXI. The 158 reasons subjoined to show why a foreigner should not be selected are two. First to prevent him from amassing a great quantity of gold and silver and cattle and storing up great wealth all unjustly wrung from the poverty of his subjects.<sup>b</sup> Secondly that he should not to gratify his own greedy desires evict the natives from the land and compel them to emigrate borne hither and thither in endless wandering, or by inspiring in them futile hopes of increased prosperity succeed in taking from them what ere now they enjoyed in security.<sup>c</sup> For he assumed with good 159 reason that one who was their fellow-tribesman and fellow-kinsman related to them by the tie which brings the highest kinship, the kinship of having one citizenship and the same law and one God who has taken all members of the nation for His portion, would never sin in the way just mentioned. He knew that such a one on the contrary, instead of horses to himself . . . neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold." This is not a reason for not choosing a foreigner, but conditions to be observed by the native king. The LXX however has "because he shall not multiply," etc., and this Philo follows.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xvii. 17 (2nd half) "he shall not turn away (E.V. cause to return) the people to Egypt, that he may not multiply horses to himself." According to the commentators the meaning is that he should not seek alliance with Egypt and so procure a strong force of horses. Philo, perhaps thinking of Egypt as the natural refuge of the exiles from Palestine, takes it to mean expatriation in general, which the foreign king would practise in order to confiscate the people's wealth. The passage is allegorized in De Agr. 84 ff. See App. p. 435.

PHILO

τοῖς ἐν τῇ ξένη σποράσιν ἀσφαλῆ κάθοδον παρέξειν, ἀντὶ δὲ τοῦ τὰ τῶν ἄλλων ἀφαιρεῖσθαι χρήματα προσεπιδώσειν τοῖς δεομένοις τὴν ἰδίαν οὐσίαν ἀποφύγαντα κοινήν.

- 160 [363] XXXII. | Ἄφ' ἧς δ' ἂν ἡμέρας παρέλθῃ τις ἐπὶ τὴν ἀρχήν, κελεύει τὴν Ἐπινομίδα αὐτοχειρία γράψαι κεφαλαιώδη τύπον περιέχουσαν ἀπάντων τῶν νόμων, βουλόμενος ἔγκολλα τῇ ψυχῇ τὰ διαταγαγμένα γενέσθαι· τοῦ μὲν γὰρ ἀναγινώσκοντος ὑπορρεῖ τὰ νοήματα τῇ φορᾷ παρασυρόμενα, τῷ δὲ γράφοντι κατὰ σχολὴν ἐνσφραγίζεται καὶ ἐνιδρύνεται, τῆς διανοίας ἐνευκαιρούσης ἐκάστω καὶ ἐπερειδούσης ἑαυτὴν καὶ μὴ μετιούσης ἐφ' ἕτερον, πρὶν 161 ἢ περιδράξασθαι τοῦ προτέρου βεβαίως. ὅταν μέντοι γράψῃ, πειράσθω καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἐντυγχάνειν καὶ ἀναγινώσκειν, ὑπὲρ τε συνεχοῦς καὶ ἀδιαστάτου μνήμης καλῶν καὶ συμφερόντων ἅπασι διαταγμάτων καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ βέβαιον ἔρωτα καὶ πόθον αὐτῶν ἐγγενέσθαι, τῆς ψυχῆς αἰὲν διδασκομένης καὶ ἐξεθιζομένης ἐνομιλεῖν νόμοις ἱεροῖς· αἱ γὰρ μακροχρόνιοι συνήθειαι φιλίαν ἄδολον καὶ καθαρὰν οὐ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς ἰδέας ἀξιεράστους γραμμάτων ἀποτελοῦσι.
162 τουτὶ δὲ συμβήσεται, ἐὰν μὴ ἑτέρου γράμμασι καὶ ὑπομνήμασιν ὁ ἀρχῶν ἀλλ' οἷς αὐτὸς ἔγραψεν ἐντυγχάνῃ· τὰ γὰρ ἰδιά πῶς ἐκάστοις γνωριμώτερα
163 καὶ πρὸς ἀναλήψεις ἑτοιμώτερα. καὶ ἄλλως ἀνα-

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xvii. 18-20. For "sequel" perhaps "appendix." E.V. "he shall write him a copy of this book" (more liter-108

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 159-162

sending the inhabitants adrift, would provide a safe return for those who are scattered on foreign soil, and instead of taking the wealth of others would give liberally to the needy by making his private substance common to all.

XXXII. From the day that he enters upon his office the lawgiver bids him write out with his own hand this sequel to the laws which embraces them all in the form of a summary.<sup>a</sup> He wishes hereby to have the ordinance cemented to the soul. For the thoughts swept away by the current ebb away from the mere reader, but are implanted and set fast in one who writes them out at leisure. For the mind can dwell at its ease on each point and fix itself upon it, and does not pass on to something else until it has securely grasped what goes before. Still after writing he must endeavour every day to read and familiarize himself with what he has written,<sup>b</sup> so that he may have a constant and unbroken memory of ordinances so good and profitable to all, and thus conceive an unswerving love and yearning for them by perpetually training and habituating his soul to companionship with holy laws. For prolonged associations produce a pure and sincere affection not only for men but for <sup>c</sup> writings of such kinds as are worthy of our love. And this will be the case if the ruler studies not the writings and notes of another but the work of his own pen, for everyone is more familiar with his own writing and takes in its meaning more readily. ally "duplicate," Adam Smith). The LXX has δευτερονόμιον ("repetition of the law"), whence the accepted name. On Ἐπινομίδα see also App. p. 436.

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. "he shall read in it all the days of his life."

<sup>c</sup> Heinemann translates "thoughts worthy of affection transmitted in writing"; but ιδέας cannot mean "thoughts."

PHILO

γινώσκων ἅμα λογισμὸν ἕξει τοιοῦτον· “ ἐγὼ ταυτ’ ἔγραψα ὁ τοιοῦτος ἄρχων, μὴ ἐτέρῳ προσχρησά-μενος ὑπηρετῶν<sup>1</sup> μυρίων ὄντων· ἄρ’ ὅπως βιβλίον ἀποπληρώσω, καθάπερ οἱ μισθοῦ γράφοντες ἢ οἱ γυμνάζοντες ὀφθαλμούς τε καὶ χεῖρας, τοὺς μὲν εἰς ὀξύωπιαν, τὰς δ’ ἵνα ὦσιν ὀξυγράφοι;—πόθεν; οὐκ ἔστιν—ἀλλ’ ὅπως αὐτὰ ἐν βιβλίῳ γράφων εὐθύς εἰς τὴν ψυχὴν μεταγράφω καὶ ἐναπομάττωμαι τῇ δια-164 νοίᾳ θειοτέρους καὶ ἀνεκπλύτους χαρακτηῆρας. οἱ μὲν οὖν ἄλλοι βασιλεῖς βακτηρίας ἔχοντες σκηπ-τροφοροῦσιν, ἐμοὶ δὲ τὸ σκῆπτρόν ἐστιν ἡ βίβλος τῆς Ἐπινομίδος, καύχημα καὶ κλέος ἀνανταγώνιστον, παράσημον ἡγεμονίας ἀνεπιλήπτου πρὸς ἀρχέτυπον τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ βασιλείαν ἀπεικονισθείσης.
 165 αἰεὶ δ’ ἐπερειδόμενος καὶ σκηριπτόμενος τοῖς ἱεροῖς νόμοις κτήσομαι δύο τὰ πάντων ἄριστα· ἐν μὲν ἰσότητι, ἧς μείζον ἀγαθὸν οὐκ ἔστιν εὔρεῖν· ἀλαζονεία γὰρ καὶ τὸ ὑπέραυχον ὀλιγό-166 φρονος ψυχῆς τὸ μέλλον οὐ προορωμένης. ἰσότης μὲν οὖν τὴν ἐκ τῶν ὑπηκόων εὐνοίαν καὶ ἀσφάλειαν ἀμοιβὰς δικαίας ἀντεκτινόντων ἀπεργάσεται, τὸ δ’ ἄνισον κινδύνους σφαλερωτάτους. τούτους μὲν ἀποδράσομαι μισήσας τὴν χορηγὸν σκότους καὶ πολέμων ἀνισότητα, βίον δ’ ἀνεπιβούλευτον ἕξω τὴν ἀστασίαστον ἰσότητα τιμήσας, ἣ γεννᾶ φῶς καὶ 167 εὐστάθειαν. ἕτερον δὲ περιποιήσομαι τὸ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑπηρέτη et al.

<sup>a</sup> The seven sections which follow are a meditation on Deut. xvii. 19, 20, the first part of which is put into the king or ruler’s mouth.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 163-167

Further when he reads he will reason thus with him- 163 self. <sup>a</sup> "I have written these words, I, a ruler of such eminence, without employing another though I have a host of servants. Have I done it to fill the pages of a book like those who write for hire or to train their eyes and hands, the first to sharpen the sight, the second to make themselves swift writers? No, surely not. I write them in a book in order to rewrite them straightway in my soul, and receive in my mind the imprints of a script more divine and ineffaceable. Now other kings carry rods in their 164 hands as sceptres but my sceptre is the book of the Sequel to the law, my pride and my glory, which nothing can rival, an ensign of sovereignty which none can impeach, formed in the image of its archetype the kingship of God.

<sup>b</sup> And if I ever 165 keep the holy laws for my staff and support I shall win two things better than all else. <sup>c</sup> One is the spirit of equality, and no greater good can be found than this, for arrogance and insolence belong to a soul of mean capacity which does not foresee the future.
Equality will earn its just reward, repaid in the good- 166 will and safety of my subjects, while inequality will create the gravest perils and pitfalls. These I shall escape if I hate inequality, the bestower of darkness and wars, while I shall have a life proof against the malice of enemies if I honour equality who eschews sedition and is the mother of light and settled order.

<sup>d</sup> The other thing that I shall win is that 167

<sup>b</sup> Verse 19 "to keep all the words of this law and the statutes."

<sup>c</sup> Verse 20 "that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren."

<sup>d</sup> Ibid. "that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand or to the left."

PHILO

- [364] | μὴ ἐπὶ θάτερα καθάπερ ἐπὶ τρυτάνης ἀντιρρέπειν ἐκτρέπων καὶ πλαγιάζων τὰ διατεταγμένα· πειράσομαι δ' ἄγειν αὐτὰ διὰ λεωφόρου τῆς μέσης ὀρθαῖς καὶ ἀρτίαις βάσεισι χρησάμενος πρὸς μετουσίαν 168 ἀπταιστοῦ βίου." βασιλικὴν δ' εἴωθε Μωυσῆς ὀνομάζειν ὁδὸν τὴν μέσην, ὑπερβολῆς καὶ ἐλλείψεως οὖσαν μεθόριον, καὶ ἄλλως ἐπειδὴ τὸ μέσον ἐν τριάδι τὴν ἡγεμονίδα τάξιν εἴληχεν, ἀρμοζόμενον τὰ παρ' ἑκάτερα εἰς ἔνωσιν ἀδιαλύτῳ δεσμῷ, ὑφ' 169 ὧν καὶ δορυφορεῖται τρόπον βασιλέως. νομίμου δ' ἄρχοντος ἰσότητα τιμῶντος, ἀδεκάστου, τὰ δίκαια κρίνοντος δικαίως, ἐμμελετῶντος αἰεὶ τοῖς νόμοις, ἄθλον εἶναί φησι τὴν μακροχρόνιον ἡγεμονίαν, οὐχ ἵνα πολυετῇ ζωῇ αὐτῷ χαρίσῃται μετὰ τοῦ τὰ κοινὰ πρυτανεύειν, ἀλλ' ἵνα ἀναδιδάξῃ τοὺς ἀγνοοῦντας, ὅτι ὁ νόμιμος ἄρχων, κἄν τελευτήσῃ, βίον ζῆ μακραίωνα διὰ τῶν πράξεων, ἃς ἀθανάτους ἀπολέλοιπε μνημεῖα καλοκάγαθίας ἀκαθαίρετα.
- 170 XXXIII. Προσῆκει δὲ τῷ τῆς ἀνωτάτω καὶ μεγίστης ἀρχῆς ἀξιοθέντι αἰρεῖσθαι διαδόχους, οἱ συνάροξοσι καὶ συνδικάσουσι καὶ τᾶλλα ὅσα κοινω-

<sup>a</sup> In this section Philo digresses to bring his text into connexion with Num. xx. 17 (cf. xxi. 22) "We will go along the king's high way (LXX ὁδὸς βασιλική), we will not turn aside to the right hand nor to the left," on which he has commented elsewhere, particularly in Quod Deus 162 ff. Here the stress is laid on the phrase "royal road," and the inference drawn, as I understand it, is that Moses in giving this name to the central road between (as he says in Quod Deus) deficiency and excess suggests that it is the fitting road for a king. While hitherto he has chiefly followed the LXX in using ἄρχων, not βασιλεύς, he here shows his perception that a king is intended (cf. § 164).

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. "that he may prolong his days in his rule." For

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 167-170

I shall not sway to either side as on a balance, deflecting the ordinances and turning them awry, but I shall try to take them along the central highway marching with firm straightforward steps to ensure a life that never stumbles.” <sup>a</sup> Now the name of “royal” 168 which Moses is wont to give to the central road which lies midway between excess and deficiency, is also given because in a set of three the midmost holds the leading place, joining in union with itself by an indissoluble bond those on either side of it, which also serve as bodyguards to it as to a king. <sup>b</sup> A law- 169 abiding ruler who honours equality, who is impervious <sup>c</sup> to bribes and gives just judgements justly and ever exercises himself in the laws has, he tells us, for his reward that the days of his government shall be long, not meaning that he grants him long years of life spent in presiding over the State, but to teach the ignorant that the law-abiding ruler, even when deceased, lives an age-long life through the actions which he leaves behind him never to die, monuments of high excellence which can never be destroyed.

XXXIII. <sup>d</sup> The person who has been judged worthy 170 to fill the highest and most important office should choose lieutenants to share with him the duties of governing, giving judgement, and managing all the the spiritual interpretation of the boon of long life promised in the scriptures compare the treatment of the fifth commandment in ii. 262, and Quis Rerum 290, that the goodly old age promised to Abraham is not the life of long duration, but the life of wisdom.

<sup>c</sup> For “impervious to bribes” cf. the qualities of the judge, §§ 62 f., and for “gives just judgements justly” §§ 66 f.

<sup>d</sup> For what follows Philo has no direct pronouncements in the law, but takes the story of Jethro’s advice to Moses in Ex. xviii. described below.

PHILO

- φελῆ συνδιοικήσουσιν. εἰς γὰρ οὐκ ἂν ἐξαρκέσαι, κὰν προθυμότητος ἢ καὶ πάντων ἔρρωμενέστατος ἐκάτερον, σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, πρὸς τὰ μεγέθη καὶ πλήθη τῶν πραγμάτων, ἀπειρηκῶς τῇ φορᾷ τῶν ἐπιχειομένων καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἀλλαχόθεν ἄλλων, εἰ μὴ τοὺς συλληψομένους ἔχοι, πάντας ἀριστίνδην ἐπιλελεγμένους φρονήσει, δυνάμει, δικαιοσύνῃ, θεοσεβείᾳ, τῷ μὴ ἐκτρέπεσθαι μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ μισεῖν ὡς ἐχθρὸν καὶ μέγιστον κακὸν
- 171 ἀλαζονεῖαν. βοηθοὶ γὰρ οὗτοι καὶ παραστάται γένοιντ' ἂν ἀνδρὶ καλῷ κἀγαθῷ τὰ κοινὰ ἐπηχθισμένῳ συνεπικουφίζειν καὶ ἐπελαφρίζειν ἐπιτηδειότατοι. καὶ ἄλλως, ἐπειδὴ τῶν ὑποθέσεων αἱ μὲν εἰσι μείζους, αἱ δὲ βραχύτεραι, τὰς μὲν ἐλάττους, ἵνα μὴ περὶ μικρὰ τρίβηται, τοῖς ὑπάρχοις ἐνδίκως ἂν ἐπιτρέψαι, τῶν δὲ μειζόνων ἀναγκαίως αὐτὸς
- 172 ἂν γένοιτο ἐξεταστής ἀκριβέστατος. μεγάλας δ' ὑποληπτέον ὑποθέσεις οὐχ ἅς οἴονταί τινες, ὅταν ἔνδοξοι πρὸς ἐνδόξους διαφέρωνται καὶ πλούσιοι πρὸς πλουσίους καὶ ἡγεμόνες πρὸς ἡγεμόνας, ἀλλ' ἔμπαλιν ὅταν ἰδιῶται καὶ ἄποροι καὶ ἄδοξοι πρὸς δυνατωτέρους, οἷς πρὸς τὸ μηδὲν ἀνήκεστον παθεῖν μία ἐλπίς ὁ δικαστής.
- 173 Ἐκατέρου δὲ τῶν εἰρημένων σαφῆ παραδείγματα εὐρεῖν ἔστιν ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς νόμοις, ἃ μιμῆσθαι καλόν. ἦν γὰρ ποτε χρόνος, ἐν ᾧ μόνος αὐτὸς ἐβράβευε τὰ περὶ δίκας Μωυσῆς ἔωθεν εἰς νύκτα
- [365] πονούμενος· ἀλλ' | αὐθις ἀφικόμενος ὁ πενθερὸς καὶ

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xviii. 21. E.V. "Able men (LXX δυνατοῦς), such

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 170-173

other matters which concern the public welfare. For a single person even though possessed of unique strength both in body and soul would not be capable of coping with the magnitude and multitude of affairs, be he ever so zealous, but would collapse under their force as they pour in upon him daily from different sides, unless he had helpers all of the best chosen for their good sense, ability, justice and godliness, and because they not only keep clear of arrogance but hate it as a thing pernicious and utterly evil. <sup>a</sup> In such persons the man of high excellence 171 burdened with state affairs will find assistants and supporters well fitted to join in relieving him and to lighten his task. Further, since the questions which arise are sometimes greater and sometimes less, to prevent his wearing himself out in petty matters he will do rightly in entrusting the smaller to his subordinates, while the greater he will be bound to scrutinize himself with the utmost care. And great 172 questions must not be understood, as some think, to mean cases where both the disputants are distinguished or rich or men in high office but rather where the commoner or the poor or the obscure are disputing with others more powerful, and where their one hope of escaping a fatal disaster lies in the judge.

Both these statements may be justified by clear 173 examples to be found in the sacred laws, examples which we do well to copy. For there was a time when Moses himself arbitrated questions of justice, labouring from morning till night, but afterwards when his father-in-law arrived and observed the vast as fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain" (LXX ὑπερηφάνῳ = "arrogance").

PHILO

- συνιδὼν ὅσω βάρει πιέζεται πραγμάτων, ἐπισυρρεόντων αἰεὶ τῶν τὰς ἀμφισβητήσεις ἐχόντων, ἄριστα συνεβούλευσεν ἐλέσθαι διαδόχους, ἵν' οἱ μὲν τὰ βραχύτερα κρίνωσιν, αὐτὸς δ' ἐφεδρεύῃ τοῖς 174 μείζοσι καιροῦς εἰς ἀνάπαυλαν αὐτῷ διδοῦς. πει-σθεῖς δὲ τοῖς λεγομένοις—καὶ γὰρ ἦν συμφέροντα—τοὺς δοκιμωτάτους ἐξ ἅπαντος τοῦ πλήθους ἐλόμενος ὑπάρχους ἅμα καὶ δικαστὰς καθίστησι, κελεύσας τὰς μείζους κρίσεις ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἀνάγειν.
 175 ταύτην τὴν πράξιν<sup>1</sup> ἀνάγραφτον αἱ ἱεραὶ βίβλοι περιέχουσιν εἰς τὴν τῶν καθ' ἐκάστην γενεὰν ἀρχόντων διδασκαλίαν, ἵνα πρῶτον μὲν μὴ ἀποδοκιμάζωσι συμβούλους ὡς ἱκανοὶ πάντα περιαθρεῖν, Μωυσέως οὐκ ἀποδοκιμάσαντος τοῦ πανσόφου καὶ θεοφιλοῦς, ἔπειτα δὲ ἵνα δευτέρους καὶ τρίτους ἡγεμόνας αἰρῶνται, φροντίζοντες τοῦ μὴ περὶ μικρὰ τριβόμενοι τῶν ἀναγκαιοτέρων ἀμελεῖν· ἀμήχανον γὰρ ἐφ' ἅπαντα φθάνειν φύσιν ἀνθρω-176 πίνην. XXXIV. Ἐν μὲν δὴ τῶν παραδειγμάτων μεμῆνυται· τοῦ δὲ δευτέρου τὴν πίστιν ἐφαρμοστέον. μεγάλας ἔφην εἶναι δίκας τὰς τῶν ταπεινοτέρων· ἀσθενὲς δὲ καὶ ταπεινὸν χήρα καὶ ὄρφανὸς καὶ ἐπῆλυτος· τούτοις χρῆ δικάζειν τὸν ἀνωτάτω βασιλέα καὶ τὴν ἐφ' ἅπασιν ἀναψάμενον<sup>2</sup> ἀρχήν, ἐπεὶ κατὰ Μωυσέα καὶ ὁ τῶν ὄλων ἡγεμὼν θεὸς οὐκ ἐσκοράκισεν αὐτοὺς τῆς ἀφ' αὐτοῦ δι-177 καινονομίας. ὑμνήσας γὰρ τὰς τοῦ ὄντος ἀρετὰς ὁ ἱεροφάντης τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· “ ὁ θεὸς ὁ μέγας

<sup>1</sup> So M. Other mss. κρίσιν or τάξιν. Cohn prints πρόσταξιν, but Jethro's advice could hardly be called this, and the point is not what he advised, but what Moses did.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἐφαιψάμενον or ἐναψάμενον (-ην).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 173-177

burden of affairs which oppressed him through the perpetual flood of persons who had questions to settle, he gave the excellent advice that Moses should choose delegates to judge the smaller matters and keep himself in reserve for the greater and thus allow himself time to rest. Moses listened to 174 this truly valuable advice and chose out of the multitude the men of highest repute whom he appointed as subordinate governors and also as judges, bidding them refer the more important suits to himself. A record of the course thus 175 taken is included in the sacred books as a lesson to each generation of rulers, first that they should not, under the impression that they are capable of surveying everything, reject the help of councillors which Moses the supremely wise and beloved of God did not reject; next that they should choose officers to act as second and third to themselves and so take care that they did not by wearing themselves out over petty matters neglect the more vital. For human nature cannot possibly reach everything.

XXXIV. I have 176 stated one of the two examples and must add the evidence for the second. I said that the great cases were those of the lowlier. Lowliness and weakness are attributes of the widow, the orphan and the incomer. It is to these that the supreme king who is invested with the government of all should administer justice, because according to Moses God also the ruler of the Universe has not spurned them from His jurisdiction. For when 177 the Revealer has hymned the excellences of the Self-existent in this manner<sup>a</sup> "God the great and

<sup>a</sup> Deut. x. 17, 18.

καὶ κραταίος, ὅστις οὐ θαυμάζει πρόσωπον οὐδὲ μὴ λάβη δῶρον ποιῶν κρίσιν," ἐπιλέγει τίσιν ἢ κρίσις.<sup>1</sup> οὐ σατράπαις καὶ τυράννοις καὶ γῆς καὶ θαλάττης ἀναψαμένοις τὸ κράτος, ἀλλ' " ἐπηλύτω 178 καὶ ὀρφανῶ καὶ χήρα "· τῷ μὲν ὅτι τοὺς συγγενεῖς, οὓς μόνους εἰκὸς ἔχειν συναγωνιστάς, ἐχθροὺς ἀσυμβάτους εἰργάσατο ἑαυτῷ μεταναστὰς εἰς ἀλήθειαν καὶ τὴν τοῦ ἐνὸς τιμίου τιμὴν ἀπὸ μυθικῶν πλασμάτων καὶ πολυαρχίας, ἃ γονεῖς καὶ πάπποι καὶ πρόγονοι καὶ πάντες οἱ ἀφ' αἵματος τοῦ στειλαμένου τὴν καλὴν ἀποικίαν ταύτην ἐξετί-μησαν· τῷ δ' ἐπειδὴ πατρὸς καὶ μητρὸς τῶν ἐκ φύσεως βοηθῶν καὶ ὑπερμάχων ἐστέρηται δυνάμειος τῆς μόνης εἰς συμμαχίαν ἀναγκαίας ἐρημωθεῖς· τῇ δ' ὅτι τὸν διαδεξάμενον ἄνδρα τὴν τῶν γονέων ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν ἀφήρηται· γυναικὶ γὰρ ἀνὴρ εἰς κηδεμονίαν ὅπερ<sup>2</sup> γονεῖς 179 παρθένῳ· σχεδὸν δὲ καὶ τὸ σύμπαν Ἰουδαίων ἔθνος ὀρφανοῦ λόγον ἔχει συγκρινόμενον τοῖς ἀπανταχοῦ πᾶσι· τὰ μὲν γάρ, ὅποτε μὴ θεή-[366] λατοὶ κατασκήπτοιεν συμφοραί, διὰ | τὰς ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ἐπιμξίας οὐκ ἀπορεῖ βοηθῶν κοινοπρα-γούντων,<sup>3</sup> τῷ δ' ἠκιστὰ τις συναγωνίζεται νόμοις ἐξαιρέτοις χρωμένῳ· σεμνοὶ δ' εἰσὶν ἐξ ἀνάγκης,

<sup>1</sup> Printed by Cohn ἐπιλέγει—τίσιν ἢ κρίσις ;

<sup>2</sup> Cohn corrects to ὥσπερ. This seems to me not only unnecessary but to involve a difficult construction, viz. that εἰς κηδεμονίαν is used like the Latin predicative dative "vir custodiae est mulieri" = "custos mulieris." Cohn may perhaps have thought that τοῦτο would be supplied before ὅπερ as in § 186.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. κοινοπραγούντα.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 177-179

powerful, who has no respect to persons, will receive no gifts and executes judgement," he proceeds to say for whom the judgement is executed—not for satraps and despots and men invested with power by land and sea, but for the "incomer,<sup>a</sup> for orphan and widow."

For the incomer, 178 because he has turned his kinsfolk, who in the ordinary course of things would be his sole confederates, into mortal enemies, by coming as a pilgrim to truth and the honouring of One who alone is worthy of honour, and by leaving the mythical fables and multiplicity of sovereigns, so highly honoured by the parents and grand-parents and ancestors and blood relations of this immigrant to a better home.

For the orphan, because he has been bereft of his father and mother his natural helpers and champions, deserted by the sole force which was bound to take up his cause. For the widow because she has been deprived of her husband who took over from the parents the charge of guarding and watching over her, since for the purpose of giving protection the husband is to the wife what the parents are to the maiden.

One may say that the whole Jewish race is in the 179 position of an orphan compared with all the nations on every side. They when misfortunes fall upon them which are not by the direct intervention of heaven are never, owing to international intercourse, unprovided with helpers who join sides with them. But the Jewish nation has none to take its part, as it lives under exceptional laws which are necessarily grave and severe, because they inculcate the highest <sup>a</sup> E.V. "stranger." LXX προσηλύτω. Philo, as regularly elsewhere, assumes that he is a proselyte to Judaism.

PHILO

- ἄτε πρὸς τὴν ἄκραν ἀρετὴν ἀλείφοντες· τὸ δὲ σεμνὸν αὐστηρόν, τοῦτο δ' ὁ πολὺς ὄμιλος ἀνθρώ-180 πων ἀποστρέφεται διὰ τὴν ἡδονῆς ἀποδοχὴν. ἀλλ' ὅμως τῆς ὀρφανίας αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐρημίας ἔλεον καὶ οἰκτόν φησι Μωυσῆς αἰεὶ λαμβάνειν τὸν ἡγεμόνα τῶν ὄλων ᾧ προσκεκλήρωται, διότι τοῦ σύμπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους ἀπενεμήθη οἶά τις ἀπαρχὴ τῷ 181 ποιητῇ καὶ πατρί. τὸ δ' αἴτιον αἱ τῶν ἀρχηγῶν τοῦ ἔθνους περιμάχητοι δικαιοσύναι καὶ ἀρεταί, αἱ καθάπερ φυτὰ ἀθάνατα διαμένουσιν ἀειθαλέα καρπὸν φέρουσαι τοῖς ἀπογόνους σωτήριον καὶ πρὸς πάντα ὠφέλιμον, κἂν αὐτοὶ τύχῃσι διαμαρτάνοντες 182 ἰάσιμα ἀλλὰ μὴ παντελῶς ἀνίατα. μὴ μέντοι νομίσας τις ἀγαθὸν εἶναι τέλειον τὴν εὐ-γένειαν ὀλιγωρεῖτω καλῶν πράξεων, λογιζόμενος ὅτι μείζονος ὀργῆς ἄξιος τυγχάνειν ἐστὶν ὁ γεννη-θεὶς μὲν ἐκ τῶν ἀρίστων, αἰσχύνην δ' ἐπιφέρων τοῖς γεννήσασιν διὰ τὴν τῶν τρόπων κακίαν· ἔχων γὰρ οἰκεία παραδείγματα καλοκαγαθίας ἃ μιμήσεται καὶ μηδὲν ἀποματτόμενος εἰς ὑγιαίνοντος βίου κατόρθωσιν ἐπίληπτος.
- 183 XXXV. Ἀπαγορεύει δ' ὁ νόμος τῷ τὴν προστασίαν καὶ ἐπιμέλειαν τῶν κοινῶν ἀνειληφότεν δικαιοτάτην ἀπαγόρευσιν, μὴ πορευέσθαι δόλῳ ἐν τῷ ἔθνει· ψυχῆς γὰρ ἀνελευθέρου καὶ σφόδρα δου-λοπρεποῦς ἐπίβουλα ἦθη συσκιαζούσης ὑποκρίσει 184 τὸ ἔργον. τὸν γὰρ ἄρχοντα οὕτως χρῆ προεστάναι

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Praem. 166 and note.

<sup>b</sup> So LXX, Lev. xix. 16. E.V. "Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people." Both in the standard of virtue. But gravity is austere, and austerity is held in aversion by the great mass of men because they favour pleasure. Nevertheless as 180 Moses tells us the orphan-like desolate state of his people is always an object of pity and compassion to the Ruler of the Universe whose portion it is, because it has been set apart out of the whole human race as a kind of first fruits to the Maker and Father. And 181 the cause of this was the precious signs of righteousness and virtue shown by the founders of the race, signs which survive like imperishable plants, bearing fruit that never decays for their descendants, fruit salutary and profitable in every way, even though these descendants themselves be sinners, so long as the sins be curable and not altogether unto death.<sup>a</sup>

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 179-184

Yet let no one think that good lineage 182 is a perfect blessing and then neglect noble actions, but reflect that greater anger is due to one who while his parentage is of the best brings shame upon his parents by the wickedness of his ways. Guilty is he who, having for his own models of true excellence to copy, reproduces nothing that serves to direct his life aright and keep it sound and healthy.

XXXV. The law lays upon anyone who has under- 183 taken to superintend and preside over public affairs a very just prohibition when it forbids him "to walk with fraud among the people,"<sup>b</sup> for such conduct shows an illiberal and thoroughly slavish soul which disguises its malignant ways with hypocrisy. The 184 ruler should preside over his subjects as a father over Hebrew and in the LXX it is no doubt a general precept, but as it is preceded by "in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour," Philo might allege some reason for applying it to a person in authority.

PHILO

τῶν ὑπηκόων ὡς πατέρα παίδων, ἵνα καὶ αὐτὸς ὡς ὑπὸ γνησίων υἱῶν ἀντιτιμᾶται· διὸ κοινοὶ πόλεων καὶ ἔθνων γονεῖς, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἄρχοντές εἰσιν οἱ ἀγαθοί, τὴν ἴσην, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ περιττοτέραν εὐνοίαν ἐπιδεικνύμενοι· τοὺς δ' ἐπὶ λύμῃ καὶ ζημίᾳ τῶν ὑπηκόων μεγάλας περιβαλλομένους 185 δυναστείας οὐκ ἄρχοντας ἀλλ' ἐχθροὺς προσαγορευτέον, τὰ πολεμίων ἀσυμβάτων δρῶντας. οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ δολερῶς ἀδικοῦντες πονηρότεροι τῶν φανερώς ἐναντιουμένων εἰσίν, εἴ γε τοὺς μὲν ἔνεστι ραδίως ἀμύνασθαι γυμνὴν ἀπαμπίσχοντας τὴν δυσμένειαν, τῶν δ' ἐστὶ δύσληπτος καὶ δυσθήρατος ἢ μοχθηρία καθάπερ ἐν θεάτρῳ σκευὴν ἀλλοτρίαν ἀναλαμβάνοντων εἰς ἀπόκριψιν ἀληθοῦς 186 ὄψεως. φθάνει δὲ τὸ τῆς ἀρχῆς εἶδος καὶ διαδέδυκεν, ὀλίγου δέω φάναι, πρὸς ἅπαντα τὰ τοῦ βίου μέρη, διαφέρον αὐτὸ μόνον μεγέθει καὶ τῷ ποσῷ. ὅπερ γὰρ πόλεως βασιλεύς, τοῦτο καὶ κώμης ὁ πρῶτος καὶ οἰκίας δεσπότης καὶ νοσοῦν-[367] των ἰατρός, καὶ | στρατοπέδου μὲν στρατηγός, ναύαρχος δ' ἐπιβατικοῦ καὶ πληρωμάτων, καὶ πάλιν φορτίδων μὲν καὶ ὀλκάδων ναύκληρος, κυβερνήτης δὲ πλωτήρων· οἱ πάντες δύνανται μὲν ἄμφω τό τε εὖ καὶ τὸ χεῖρον, βούλεσθαι δ' ὀφεί-λουσι τὸ ἄμεινον· τὸ ἄμεινον δ' ἐστὶν ὠφελεῖν 187 ἀλλὰ μὴ βλάπτειν ὅσους ἂν οἶόν τε ᾗ. τὸ γὰρ ἔπεσθαι θεῷ τοῦτ' ἐστίν, ἐπεὶ κακείνῳ δύναμις μὲν ἐστὶ δρᾶν ἐκάτερα, βούλεται δὲ μόνον τὰγαθά. μηνύει δὲ ἡ τοῦ κόσμου γένεσις τε καὶ διοικήσεις· τὰ γὰρ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι τάξιν ἐξ

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for MSS. διότι. The correction seems to me uncertain. See note a.

his children so that he himself may be honoured in return as by true-born sons, and therefore <sup>a</sup> good rulers may be truly called the parents of states and nations in common, since they show a fatherly and sometimes more than fatherly affection. But those who assume 185 great power to destroy and injure their subjects should be called not rulers but enemies acting like foemen in bitter war, though indeed those who do wrong craftily are more wicked than open adversaries. These last show their hostility stripped naked and it is easy to make defence against them; the villainy of the others is hard to catch or trace since they assume a strange garb as in a theatre to hide their true appearance. Now "rule" or "com- 186 mand" is a category which extends and intrudes itself, I might almost say, into every branch of life, differing only in magnitude and amount. For the relation of a king to a state is the same as that of a headman to a village, of a householder to a house, of a physician to his patients, of a general to an army, of an admiral to the marines and crews, or again of a skipper to merchant and cargo vessels or of a pilot to the seamen. All these have power both for good and for worse, but they ought to will the better, and the better is to benefit instead of injuring as many as they possibly can. For this is to follow 187 God since He too can do both but wills the good only. This was shown both in the creation and in the ordering of the world. He called the non-existent into existence and produced order from disorder, <sup>a</sup> "Therefore" is perhaps more logical than the "because" of the mss. (see note 1). But Philo is not incapable of saying "good rulers are the parents of their subjects and therefore a ruler must behave as such."

PHILO

ἀταξίας καὶ ἐξ ἀποίων ποιότητος καὶ ἐξ ἀνομοίων ὁμοιότητος καὶ ἐξ ἑτεροιοτήτων ταυτότητας καὶ ἐξ ἀκοινωνήτων καὶ ἀναρμόστων κοινωνίας καὶ ἁρμονίας καὶ ἐκ μὲν ἀνισότητος ἰσότητα ἐκ δὲ σκότους φῶς ἐργασάμενος· αἰὲ γάρ ἐστιν ἐπιμελὲς αὐτῷ καὶ ταῖς εὐεργέτισιν αὐτοῦ δυνάμεσι τὸ πλημμελὲς τῆς χείρονος οὐσίας μεταποιεῖν καὶ 188 μεθαρμόζεσθαι πρὸς τὴν ἀμείνω. XXXVI. ταῦτα μιμῆσθαι προσήκει τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς ἄρχοντας, εἴ γέ τις αὐτοῖς φροντίς ἐστιν ἐξομοιώσεως τῆς πρὸς θεόν.

Ἐπεὶ δὲ ὑπορρεῖ μυρία καὶ λανθάνει τὸν ἀνθρώ-πινον νοῦν, ἅτ' ἐνδεδεμένον αἰσθήσεων ὄχλω τοσοῦτῳ παραγαγεῖν καὶ ἀπατήσαι ψευδέσι δόξαις ἱκανωτάτῳ, μᾶλλον δ' ἐντετυμβευμένον θνητῷ σώματι, ὃ κυρίως ἂν τις σῆμα καλέσειε, μηδεὶς αἰδεῖσθω δικαστῆς ὁμολογῶν ἀγνοεῖν ὅπερ ἀγνοεῖ.
 189 πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ ὁ ψευδόμενος αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ γενή-σεται χείρων, ἀλήθειαν ὑπερόριον τῆς ψυχῆς πεφυγαδευκώς· ἔπειτα δὲ μυρία βλάψει τοὺς κρινομένους, τυφλὴν γνῶσιν ἀποφαινόμενος τῷ μὴ 190 βλέπειν τὰ δίκαια. ὅταν οὖν ἀμαυρὰν ποιῆται<sup>1</sup> τὴν ἀντίληψιν τῶν πραγμάτων ἀσάφειαν καὶ πολὺ σκότος ἀπεργαζομένων, παραιτείσθω τὰς κρίσεις

<sup>1</sup> Cohn in his footnote and still more strongly in a note to Heinemann's translation condemns ποιῆται and suggests οἶηται or ἡγήται. But examples of ποιείσθαι τι coupled with

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 187-190

qualities from things devoid of quality, similarities from dissimilars, identities from the totally different, fellowship and harmony from the dissociated and discordant, equality from inequality and light from darkness. For He and His beneficent powers ever make it their business to transmute the faultiness of the worse wherever it exists and convert it to the better. XXXVI. These things good rulers must imitate if they have any aspiration to be assimilated to God.<sup>a</sup> 188

But since a vast number of circumstances slip away from or are unnoticed by the human mind, imprisoned as it is amid all the thronging press of the senses, so competent to seduce and deceive it with false opinions, or rather entombed in a mortal body which may be quite properly called a sepulchre,<sup>b</sup> let no judge be ashamed, when he is ignorant of anything, to confess his ignorance. Otherwise in the first place the false pretender will himself deteriorate as he has banished truth from the confines of the soul, and secondly he will do immense harm to the suitors if through failing to see what is just he pronounces a blind decision. So then if the facts create a sense of uncertainty and great obscurity, and he feels that his apprehension of them is but dim, he should 189 190

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 436.

<sup>b</sup> Σῆμα σώμα—a well-known play of words, Plato, Cratylus 400 B, Gorgias 493 A. See App. p. 436.

---

an adjective or adjectival phrase in the sense of "consider" are fairly common, and though perhaps none quoted are quite analogous to this "considers his apprehension to be dim," they come near enough to it to forbid dogmatism. On the other hand is οἶεσθαι followed by the adjective, without an expressed infinitive, in ordinary Greek?

PHILO

- καὶ ἀναπεμπέτω πρὸς ἀκριβεστέρους δικαστάς· οὗτοι δὲ τίνες ἂν εἶεν ἢ ἱερεῖς καὶ ὁ τῶν ἱερέων
- 191 ἕξαρχος καὶ ἡγεμών; οἱ γὰρ λειτουργοὶ θεοῦ γνήσιοι τὴν διάνοιαν ἐπιμελῶς ἠκόνηται, τὸ παρὰ μικρὸν οὐ μικρὸν σφάλμα ἠγούμενοι, διὰ τὰς ἐν ἅπασιν ὑπερβολὰς τοῦ θεραπευομένου βασιλέως —διὸ καὶ προστέτακται πᾶσι τοῖς ἱερωμένοις νηφάλια<sup>1</sup> θύειν, ἵνα μηδὲν τοῦ παραπαίειν καὶ παραληρεῖν φάρμακον ὑπείσθλων τοὺς τῆς διανοίας
- 192 ὀφθαλμοὺς ἀμαυρώσῃ—, τάχα δ' ἐπειδὴ καὶ ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἱερεὺς εὐθύς ἐστὶ προφήτης, οὐ γένοι
- [368] μᾶλλον ἢ ἀρετῇ παρεληλυθὼς ἐπὶ | τὴν τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος θεραπείαν, προφήτῃ δ' οὐδὲν ἄγνωστον, ἔχοντι νοητὸν ἥλιον ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἀσκίους αὐγὰς, εἰς ἐναργεστάτην κατάληψιν τῶν αἰσθήσει μὲν ἀοράτων διανοία δὲ καταληπτῶν.
- 193 XXXVII. Πάλιν οἱ σταθμῖα καὶ ζυγὰ καὶ μέτρα διαχειρίζοντες ἔμποροι καὶ κάπηλοι καὶ ἀγοραῖοι καὶ ὅσοι ἄλλοι τὰ πρὸς τὸ ζῆν ὄνια πιπράσκουσι ξηρά τε καὶ ὑγρά τάττονται μὲν ὑπ' ἀγορανόμοις, ὀφείλουσι δ' αὐτοὶ ἑαυτῶν, ἐὰν σωφρονῶσιν, <sup>1</sup> So mss. except one νηφαλίον. Cohn, who corrects to νηφαλίους here and in i. 100, must have failed to observe, as I did also there, that νηφάλια θύειν is found in exactly the same connexion in De Ebr. 126 and probably ibid. 140. So also in De Vit. Cont. 74 νηφάλια γὰρ ὡς τοῖς ἱερέεσσι θύειν καὶ τούτοις (i.e. the Therapeutae) βιοῦν ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος ὑφηγεῖται. See App. p. 436.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 190-193

decline to judge the cases and send them up to more discerning judges.<sup>a</sup> And who should these be but the priests, and the head and leader of the priests? For 191 the genuine ministers of God have taken all care to sharpen their understanding and count the slightest error to be no slight error, because the surpassing greatness of the King whom they serve is seen in every matter; and therefore all officiating priests are commanded to abstain from strong drink when they sacrifice, that no poison to derange<sup>b</sup> the mind and the tongue should steal in and dim the eyes of the understanding. Another possible reason for sending such 192 cases to the priests is that the true priest is necessarily a prophet, advanced to the service of the truly Existent by virtue rather than by birth, and to a prophet nothing is unknown since he has within him a spiritual sun and unclouded rays to give him a full and clear apprehension of things unseen by sense but apprehended by the understanding.<sup>c</sup>

XXXVII. Again those who handle weights and 193 scales and measures, merchants, pedlars and retailers and all others who sell goods to sustain life, solid or liquid, are no doubt subject to market-controllers,<sup>d</sup> but ought, if they have sound sense, to be their own thee in judgement . . . thou shalt come unto the priests, the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days." Philo understands "the judge" to be the high priest. See App. p. 436.

<sup>b</sup> I understand παρπαλεῖν to indicate insanity in general, and παρληρεῖν as shown in speech. They may, however, be mere synonyms.

<sup>c</sup> Here or perhaps at § 188, since the next sections apply to the judge rather than to the ruler, ends all that can fall under the head of "appointment of a ruler," and the rest of the treatise is taken up with miscellaneous matters of justice.

<sup>d</sup> See App. p. 437.

PHILO

- ἄρχοντες εἶναι, μὴ φόβῳ τὰ δίκαια δρῶντες ἀλλ' ἔκουσῶ γνώμῃ· τοῦ γὰρ μετ' ἀνάγκης τὸ αὐτο-194 κέλευστον κατόρθωμα τιμιώτερον πανταχοῦ. διὸ προστάττει τοῖς καπήλοις καὶ ἐμπόροις καὶ εἴ τινες ἄλλοι τὴν τοιαύτην προαίρεσιν ἐπανήρηνται τοῦ βίου ζυγὰ δίκαια καὶ σταθμῖα καὶ μέτρα παρασκευάζεσθαι, μηδὲν ἐπὶ βλάβῃ τῶν ὠνουμένων κακοτεχνουήσας, ἀλλ' ἀπ' ἐλευθέρως καὶ ἀδόλου ψυχῆς ἕκαστα καὶ λέγειν καὶ πράττειν ἐκείνο λογιζομένους, ὅτι τὰ μὲν ἄδικα κέρδη βλαβερώτατα, ὁ δὲ μετὰ δικαιοσύνης πλοῦτος ἀναφαίρετος.
- 195 Ἐπεὶ δὲ φιλεργίας ἄθλα μισθοὶ πρόκεινται τοῖς δημιουργοῖς, δημιουργοῦσι δὲ οἱ ἐν ἐνδείαις, ἀλλ' οὐχ οἷς ἀφθονοὶ περιουσίαι, κελεύει μὴ ὑπερτίθεσθαι τὰς δόσεις, ἀλλ' αὐτῇ παρέχειν ἡμέρα τὸν διομολογηθέντα μισθόν. ἄτοπον γὰρ τὰ μὲν ἐκ τῆς τῶν πενήτων ὑπηρεσίας ἀπειληφέναι τοὺς εὐπόρους, τὰς δ' ἀντὶ τούτων ἀμοιβὰς μὴ ἀντι-196 παρασχεῖν ἀπόροις εὐθὺς περιουσίᾳ ζῶντας. ἄρ' οὐκ ἐναργῆ δείγματα ταῦτ' ἐστὶ προφυλακῆς μειζόνων ἀδικημάτων; ὁ γὰρ μηδὲ μισθὸν τὸν πάντως ἀποδοθησόμενον ἐὼν ἐκπρόθεσμον γενέσθαι, προθεσμίαν ὀρίσας ἐσπέραν, ἐν ἣ δεήσει τὸν δημιουργὸν ἀπαλλαττόμενον οἴκαδε κομίσασθαι τὴν ἀμοιβήν, οὗτος οὐ πολὺ πρότερον ἀρπαγῆν 128

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 193-196

rulers and do what is just not through fear but of their own free will, for a right action if self-prompted is everywhere held in higher honour than if done under compulsion.<sup>a</sup> And therefore he commands 194 tradesmen, merchants and all who have taken up such a line of life to provide themselves with just scales and weights and measures, and eschew dishonest plots to injure their customers, and rather let every word and deed spring from a liberal and guileless spirit, considering that unjust gains are utterly pernicious but wealth which comes of justice can never be taken away.<sup>b</sup>

Since workmen or labourers are offered wages as a 195 reward for their industry and the persons so employed are the needy and not those who have abundance of resources to spare, he orders the employer not to postpone his payment but to render the stipulated wages on that very day.<sup>c</sup> For it is against all reason that the well-to-do, with their ample means of livelihood should after receiving the services of the poor fail to render at once to the needy the recompense for their services. Have we not here clearly indicated a 196 warning against worse iniquities? He who having appointed the evening<sup>d</sup> as the time in which a labourer should receive his recompense when he leaves for home, and does not even permit the wage though its final payment is assured to be delayed beyond the agreed hour—how much more does he forbid robbery

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xix. 35, 36, Deut. xxv. 13-15.

<sup>b</sup> I understand this to mean not, as Heinemann, justly earned wealth, which Philo could hardly suppose to be absolutely secure, but the spiritual wealth which the possession of justice entails, cf. e.g. De Virt. 8.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xix. 13, Deut. xxiv. 15.

<sup>d</sup> "The sun shall not go down upon it," Deut. l.c.

PHILO

ἀπαγορεύει καὶ κλοπὴν καὶ χρεωκοπίαν καὶ ὅσα τούτοις ὁμοιότροπα, διαπλάττων καὶ διαμορφῶν τὴν ψυχὴν πρὸς δόκιμον εἶδος τὸ καλοκάγαθίας αὐτῆς;

- 197 XXXVIII. Εὖ μέντοι κάκεινο διείρηται, ὅπως μηδεὶς μηδένα βλασφημῆ καὶ κακηγορῆ, καὶ μάλιστα κωφὸν οὔτε αἴσθησιν ὧν ἀδικεῖται δυνάμενον λαβεῖν οὔτε ἐν τοῖς ἴσοις αὐτὸ τοῦτο<sup>1</sup> ἀμύνασθαι. μάχη γὰρ πασῶν ἐκνομωτάτη, καθ' ἣν τὸ μὲν ἕτερον μέρος ἐν τῷ δρᾶν ἐξετάζεται, τὸ δ' 198 ἕτερον ἐν τῷ μόνον πάσχειν. τοῖς δὲ κακηγοροῦσι τοὺς ἀναύδους καὶ τὰ ὦτα βεβλαμμένους ὅμοιον ἀδίκημα δρῶσιν οἱ τυφλοῖς ὀλίσθους ἐμποιοῦντες καὶ ἕτερ' ἅττα<sup>2</sup> ἐν ποσὶ τιθέντες· ἀνάγκη γάρ, οὐχ οἴους τε ὄντας ὑπερβαίνειν δι' ἄγνοιαν, περιπταίοντας ἀμφότερα καὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ διαμαρτάνειν 199 καὶ τὰς βάσεις βλάπτεισθαι. τοῖς δὲ τῶν τοιούτων ἐργάταις τε καὶ ζηλωταῖς ἐπανατείνεται θεοῦ [369] φόβον ὁ νόμος, εἰκότως καὶ | προσηκόντως, ἐπειδὴ μόνος οὗτος τὴν χεῖρα ὑπερέχει καὶ προασπίζει τῶν αὐτοῖς βοηθεῖν ἀδυνατούντων· καὶ μόνον οὐκ 200 ἀντικρὺς φησι τοῖς ἀδικοπραγοῦσι· “ τοὺς μὲν

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 196-200

and theft and repudiation of debts and other things of the same kind, and thus mould and shape the soul into the approved standard, into the form of true goodness itself.

XXXVIII. Another excellent injunction is that no 197 one is to revile or abuse any other, particularly a deaf-mute<sup>a</sup> who can neither perceive the wrong he suffers nor retaliate in the same way, nor on an equal footing. For no kind of fighting is so utterly unfair as that where activity is the part assigned to one side and only passivity to the other. This offence of reviling 198 those who have lost the power of speech and the use of their ears is paralleled by those who cause the blind to slip or put some other obstacles in their way.<sup>b</sup> For since in their ignorance they cannot surmount them, they needs must stumble about so that they both miss the right path and damage their feet.<sup>c</sup> Those who carry out or have a zest for such tricks 199 are menaced by the law with the terrors of God's wrath; this is right and reasonable, since it is God alone whose arm is extended to shield those who are unable to help themselves. And his words are little less than a plain declaration to the workers of iniquity "Ye senseless fools, you expect to go un- 200

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xix. 14. E.V. "thou shalt not curse the deaf." LXX "thou shalt not speak ill of the deaf." The sequel shows that Philo understands κωφόν to include dumbness.

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. "nor put a stumbling-block before the blind."

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Deut. xxvii. 18 "cursed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way."

---

<sup>1</sup> Some MSS. παρ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο = "for this very reason," i.e. that they are κωφοί. The αὐτὸ τοῦτο alone somewhat strains the use of the cognate accusative.

<sup>2</sup> Mangey with some MSS. ἐνεδρα = "traps."

PHILO

πλημμελουμένους, ὧ κενοὶ φρενῶν,<sup>1</sup> λήσεσθαι νομίζετε γέλωτα ἡγούμενοι τὰς ἐκείνων συμφορὰς καὶ εἰς ταῦτα ἔξαμαρτάνοντες, περὶ ἃ συμβέβηκεν ἀτυχεῖν αὐτοῖς, ὧτα μὲν διὰ κακηγοριῶν, ὀφθαλμοὺς δὲ διὰ τῶν ἐν ποσὶν ὀλίσθων· τὸν δὲ πάντων ἔφορον καὶ δίοπον θεὸν οὐδέποτε λήσεσθε κακοπραγίαις ἀθλίων ἀνθρώπων ἐπεμβαίνοντες, ὡς τὰς ὁμοίας κήρας οὐκ ἐνδεξόμενοι, σῶμα μὲν πάσαις ἀλωτὸν νόσοις περιφέροντες, αἰσθήσεις δ' ἐπικήρως ἐχούσας, αἱ μικρὰς ἔνεκα καὶ τῆς τυχούσης προφάσεως οὐκ ἀμαυροῦνται μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ 201 ἀνιάτους ὑπομένουσι πηρώσεις." τοὺς οὖν ἐπιληλησμένους μὲν ἑαυτῶν, ἐπικυδεστέροισι δ' οἰομένους εἶναι τῆς φυσικῆς ἀνθρώπων ἀσθενείας, ἐκπεφευγέναι δὲ τὰς ἀδήλους καὶ ἀτεκμάρτους τῆς τύχης ἐπιβουλὰς, ἣ πολλάκις αἰφνιδίους σκηπτοὺς ἐπέρριψε καὶ εὐπλοία βίου χρωμένους μόνον οὐκ ἐν αὐτοῖς λιμέσιν εὐδαιμονίας κατέκλυσε, τί δεῖ μεγαλαυχεῖν καὶ ἐπεμβαίνειν συμφοραῖς ἐτέρων, μηδὲ τὴν πάρεδρον δίκην τοῦ πάντων ἡγεμόνος

<sup>1</sup> The punctuation here should be specially noted. All other editions have φησι τοῖς ἀδικοπραγοῦσι τοὺς μὲν πεπλημμελημένους· "ὧ κενοὶ φρενῶν," κτλ. Mangey, Cohn, and Heinemann all take this punctuation for granted. Mangey strangely translates "videtur affari insontes laedentibus." Cohn pronounced τοὺς μὲν πεπλημμελημένους to be corrupt (see his discussion in Hermes, 1908, p. 210). The μὲν, as he says, has no δὲ or other antithesis, and πεπλημμελημένους, which he unnecessarily thinks intended to = "the disabled," cannot have that meaning. (If however it is taken in the ordinary sense of "the wronged," it is merely otiose after ἀδικοπραγοῦσι.) Accordingly he proposed τοὺς μέρος τι πεπηρωμένους and Heinemann follows him.

With the changed punctuation all difficulty, I believe, is removed. τοὺς μὲν πλημμελουμένους is in its right place as an detected by those whom you wrong when you count their calamities a laughing matter and work your wickedness against those parts in which misfortune has befallen them, against their ears by your reviling, against their eyes by the pitfalls which you set in their way. But you will never go undetected by God who surveys and controls all things, when you trample on the misfortunes of stricken men, as if you could never fall into like disasters, though the body which you have always with you can become the prey of every disease and your senses are perishable, liable through some trifling and quite ordinary occasion, not merely to be dulled and darkened but also to suffer incurable disablement." These persons have 201 lost the knowledge of their real selves; they think that distinction raises them above the natural weakness of mankind and that they have escaped the uncertainties and caprices of fortune's hostility, fortune who often launches her sudden blasts on those who are sailing prosperously through life and sends them foundering when almost in the very harbour of felicity. What right have they to vaunt themselves and trample on the misfortunes of others without respect for the assessor of the ruler of all, justice, antithesis to τὸν δὲ . . . θεὸν, and the sense is improved, as the tricksters of course are right in thinking that they will go undetected by their victims. I do not think any objection can be raised by the transference of the vocative from the beginning of the clause to a later place. Such a position, if not general, is certainly found, e.g. in i. 320, iii. 66. The general use of ἀδικοπραγεῖν intransitively also supports my view. See App. p. 437.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 200-201

---

Between πλημμελουμένων and πεπλημμελημένων the MSS. are divided. I have a very slight preference for the present, as the authors of the outrage are undetected at the time.

PHILO

αἰδουμένους, ἢ θέμις ἀκοιμήτοις καὶ ὄξυωπεστάτοις ὄμμασι καὶ τὰ ἐν μυχοῖς ὡς ἐν ἡλίῳ καθαρῷ 202 περιαθρεῖν; οὗτοί μοι δοκοῦσι μηδ' ἂν τετελευτηκότων ἀποσχέσθαι δι' ὑπερβολὴν ὠμότητος, ἀλλὰ (τὸ λεγόμενον δὴ τοῦτο παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς) μὴ ἂν ὀκνήσαι νεκροὺς ἐπισφάττειν, ἐπεὶ καὶ μέρεσι τοῖς τρόπον τινὰ προτεθνηκόσιν ἐναλύειν καὶ ἐνυβρίζειν ἀξιοῦσιν—ὄφθαλμοὶ τε γὰρ μὴ βλέποντες νεκροὶ καὶ ὦτα μὴ ἀκούοντα—, ὥστ' εἰ καὶ οὐ μέρη ταῦτ' ἐστὶν ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἀφανισθείη, τὸ ἀνηλεές καὶ ἀσύμβατον ἐπιδείξονται, μηδὲν ἀνθρώπινον καὶ συμπαθὲς δράσαντες, ἃ τετελευτηκόσι καὶ πρὸς ἐχθρῶν ἐν ἀκηρύκτοις πολέμοις σῶζεται. ταῦτα μὲν ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον.

203 XXXIX. Ἀρμονίαν δέ τινα στοιχηδὸν ἐξῆς τίθησιν ὁμοιοτρόπων παραγγελμάτων, φάσκων τὰ κτήνη μὴ ὀχεύειν ἑτεροζύγοις, τὸν ἀμπελῶνα μὴ κατασπείρειν δίφορον,<sup>1</sup> ἱμάτιον ἐκ δυοῖν ὑφασμένον, κίβδηλον ἔργον, μὴ ἀμπέχεσθαι. λέλεκται δὲ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἐν τοῖς κατὰ μοιχῶν, πρὸς ἔμφασιν
 [370] τρανοτέραν τοῦ μὴ δεῖν ἀλλοτρίοις γάμοις | ἐφ-εδρεύειν, φθείροντας μὲν ἦθη γυναικῶν, φθείροντας δὲ καὶ τὰς ἐπὶ τέκνων σπορᾷ γνησίων χρηστὰς ἐλπίδας· ὁ γὰρ τὰς ἐν ἀλόγοις ζώοις ἑτερογενῶν

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. διάφορον and in § 208. The same variation is found in the corresponding passages of the mss. of the LXX.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. ii. 94 f.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xix. 19, Deut. xxii. 9-11. Both passages include the rule of the vineyard and the mixed garment. But in Leviticus the different species are not to mate, in Deuteronomy not to plough together. Philo in the main follows Leviticus, whose right and duty it is with the surpassing keenness of her never-sleeping eyes to survey the secrets of the corner as though they were in bright sunlight. These men, it seems to me, would in their exceeding 202 cruelty not spare the dead<sup>a</sup> but would without a qualm reslay the slain, to use the popular phrase, since they shrink not to vent their outrageous fury on parts in a sense already dead, eyes which seeing not and ears which hearing not are just corpses. And therefore if he to whom these parts belong should be removed from amongst men, they will show their implacable ruthlessness and grant him none of that human and sympathetic treatment which is maintained towards the fallen even by enemies in the bitterest warfare. So much for this part of the subject.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 201-203

XXXIX. <sup>b</sup> He also lays down an ordered series of 203 injunctions all on the same lines by forbidding them to mate their cattle with those of a different species, or to sow the vineyards for two kinds of fruit, or to wear a garment adulterated<sup>c</sup> by weaving it from two materials. The first of these prohibitions has been mentioned in our denunciation of adulterers<sup>d</sup> to suggest still more clearly the wickedness of conspiring against the wedlock of other people, thereby ruining the morals of the wives as well as any honest hopes of begetting a legitimate family. For by prohibiting the crossing of irrational animals with different species but takes account in §§ 205 f. of Deuteronomy, treating it as an illustration. In E.V. Leviticus has "field" of the second injunction, Deuteronomy "vineyard." But the LXX has "vineyard" in both.

<sup>c</sup> E.V. "mingled together." The LXX κίβδηλον, which Philo quotes, probably meant the same, but he could easily read into it the sense of adulterated.

<sup>d</sup> See iii. 46 ff.

PHILO

- 204 ὀχείας ἀπηγορευκῶς ἔοικε πόρρωθεν ἀνακοπήν μοιχῶν ἐργάζεσθαι. λεκτέον δὲ καὶ νῦν ἐν τοῖς περὶ δικαιοσύνης· τὸ γὰρ αὐτὸ πλείοσιν ἐφαρμότ-τειν, εἰ δύναιτό πως, οὐ παρετόν. ἔστιν οὖν δίκαιον εἰς ταυτὸν ἄγειν τὰ δυνάμενα κοινωνεῖν· τὰ δ' ὁμογενῆ πέφυκεν εἰς κοινωνίαν, ἐπεὶ καὶ ὅσα ἕτερογενῆ κατὰ τὸναντίον ἄμικτα καὶ ἀκοινωνήτα, οἷς ὁ μηχανώμενος ἐκθέστους ὁμιλίας ἄδικος, 205 νόμον φύσεως ἀναιρῶν. ὁ δ' ὄντως ἱερός νόμος τοσαύτῃ προμηθείᾳ κέχρηται τοῦ δικαίου, ὥστ' οὐδ' ἄροτον γῆς ἐπιτρέπει ποιεῖσθαι διὰ τῶν τὴν ἰσχὺν ἀνίσων, ἀλλ' ἐν ταυτῷ καταζεύξαντας ὄνον τε καὶ μόσχον ἀροτριᾶν ἐκώλυσεν, ἵνα μὴ περιττῇ δυνάμει τοῦ μᾶλλον ἐρρωμένου τὸ ἀσθενέστερον 206 ἀμιλλᾶσθαι βιασθὲν ἀπείπη καὶ προκάμη. καίτοι τὸ μὲν ἐρρωμενέστερον, ὁ ταῦρος, ἐν τῇ τάξει τῶν καθαρῶν ζώων ἀναγράφεται, τὸ δ' ἀσθενέστερον, ὁ ὄνος, ἐν τῇ τῶν μὴ καθαρῶν. ἀλλ' ὅμως καὶ τοῖς χείροσιν εἶναι δοκοῦσιν οὐκ ἐφθόνησεν ὠφελείας τῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ δικαίου, πρὸς ἀναγκαιοτάτην μάθησιν, ὡς γ' οἶμαι, δικαστῶν, ἵνα μηδὲν ἐν ταῖς κρίσεσιν ἐλαττώσι τοὺς δυσγενεῖς ἐν οἷς οὐ γένους ἀλλ' ἀρετῆς ἢ κακίας ἐστὶν ἐξέτασις.
 207 ἐμπερές ἐστὶ τούτοις διάταγμα καὶ τὸ τελευταῖον τῶν ἐν τῇ συζυγίᾳ, τὸ μὴ συνυφαίνειν τὰς ἕτεροι-δεῖς οὐσίας, ἔρια καὶ λῖνα· καὶ γὰρ ἐπὶ τούτων οὐ μόνον ἡ διαφορότης ἀκοινωνήτων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ ἐπικράτεια θατέρου ῥῆξιν ἀπεργαζομένη<sup>1</sup> μᾶλλον ἢ ἔνωσιν, ὅταν δέη χρῆσθαι.
- 208 XL. Μέσον ἦν τῆς ἐν συζυγίᾳ τριάδος τὸ μὴ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπεργαζόμενον -σόμενον -σάμενον.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 203-208

he appears to be indirectly working towards the prevention of adultery. But the law should be mentioned 204 also here, where the theme is justice, for we must not neglect the opportunity where possible of using the same point to bring out more than one moral. Now it is just to join together things which can associate, and the homogeneous are made for association just as the heterogeneous on the other hand cannot be blended or associated, and one who plans to bring them into abnormal companionship is unjust because he upsets a law of nature. But the law in its essential 205 holiness shows such thoughtfulness for what is just that it does not even allow the land to be ploughed by animals of unequal strength and forbids the ass and the young bull to be yoked together for this purpose, lest the weaker partner, forced to compete with the extra power of the stronger, should break down and faint on the way. It is true indeed that 206 the stronger, the bull, is named in the list of clean animals while the weaker, the ass, belongs to the unclean. Nevertheless the law did not grudge the help of justice to the seemingly inferior, in order, I believe, to teach judges a most indispensable lesson that they should not in their judgements set the meanly born at a disadvantage, when the point under examination is not concerned with birth but with good and bad conduct.

Also similar to these two 207 is the last enactment in the group, which forbids wool and linen, substances differing in kind, to be woven together, for in this case not only does the difference forbid association, but also the superior strength of the one will produce a rupture rather than unification when they have to be worn.

XL. Midway in the group of the three comes the 208

PHILO

- κατασπείρειν ἀμπελῶνα δίφορον. πρῶτον μὲν, ἵνα μὴ φύρηται συγχεόμενα τὰ γένους ὄντα ἑτέρου· σπαρτὰ γὰρ δένδροις καὶ δένδρα σπαρτοῖς ἀνοί- κεια. παρὸ καὶ ἡ φύσις οὐ τὴν αὐτὴν προθεσμίαν ἀμφοτέροις ὤρισεν εἰς τὴν τῶν ἑτησίων καρπῶν γένεσιν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν εἰς ἄμητον ὥραν ἀπένειμε τὸ ἔαρ, τοῖς δ' εἰς συγκομιδὴν ἀκροδρύων λῆγον
- 209 θέρους. συμβαίνει γοῦν κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον τὰ μὲν ἀφαναίνεσθαι προανθήσαντα, τὰ δὲ βλαστά- νειν προαφαναυθέντα· χειμῶνι μὲν γὰρ φυλλορρο- ούντων δένδρων τὰ σπαρτὰ ἀνθεῖ, ἔαρι δὲ κατὰ τοῦναντίον αὐαινομένων ὅσα σπαρτὰ βλαστάνουσι αἱ δένδρων ἡμέρων τε καὶ ἀγρίων ὕλαι· καὶ σχεδὸν ὁ αὐτὸς ὄρος ἐστίν, ἐν ᾧ οἱ μὲν τῶν σπαρτῶν καρποὶ τελειοῦνται, οἱ δὲ τῶν δένδρων ἀρχὴν
- 210 γενέσεως λαμβάνουσι. εἰκότως οὖν τὰ τοσοῦτον [371] ἀλλήλων | διηρημένα καὶ ταῖς φύσεσι καὶ ταῖς ἀνθήσεσι καὶ τοῖς εἰς τὸ γεννᾶν τὰ οἰκεία καιροῖς δι- ἔξυξε καὶ διώκισε τάξιν ἐξ ἀταξίας εἰσηγούμενος· τάξει μὲν γὰρ συγγενὲς κόσμος, ἀταξία δὲ τὸ
- 211 ἄκοσμον. δεύτερον δέ, ἵνα μὴ ἑκάτερα τὰ εἶδη βλάβηται τε καὶ ἀντιβλάβηται, τὴν τρο- φὴν τὰ ἕτερα τῶν ἑτέρων παρασπώμενα, ἧς κατα- κερματιζομένης, οἷα ἐν λιμῶ καὶ σπάνει, ἀναγκαίως τὰ φυτὰ πάντα διὰ πάντων ἐξασθενήσῃ καὶ ἡ στεί- ρωσιν ἐνδέξεται πρὸς τὸ παντελὲς ἀφορήσαντα ἢ

<sup>a</sup> ὕλη is here a collective noun embracing a genus or variety of trees or vegetation. So below § 229 and i. 74 τῆς ἀγρίας ὕλης. This sense is not given in L. & S.

<sup>b</sup> This word is very inadequate as a translation for κόσμος here, but I doubt whether any equivalent to it exists in English. It is something higher than mere τάξις, and thus order not to sow the vineyard for bearing two kinds of fruit. The first reason for this is to keep things of a different kind from being mixed and confused. For sown crops have no relation to trees nor trees to sown crops and therefore nature has not appointed the same date to both for producing their annual fruits, but has assigned spring to the one for reaping the corn harvest and the end of summer to the other for gathering the fruits. Thus we find that the sown 209 plants after their flowering wither at the same time as the trees sprout after withering. For the sown plants flower in the winter when the trees shed their leaves while on the contrary in the spring when all the sown plants are withering the trees of both types<sup>a</sup> the cultivated and the wild are sprouting, and practically it is at the same time that the crops reach their fullness and the fruits begin to grow. These two so greatly differing in their natures, their 210 flowerings and their seasons for gendering their own particular products he rightly put asunder and set at a distance from each other, thus reducing disorder to order. For order is akin to seemliness<sup>b</sup> and disorder to unseemliness.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 208-211

The second reason 211 was to prevent each of the two species from hurting and being hurt in return by abstracting the nourishment from each other. For if this nourishment is divided up, as it is in times of famine and dearth, all the plants will necessarily lose all their strength and either become sterilized and completely unproductive or else bear nothing but poor fruit as a consequence can be used to signify good behaviour and adornment and the perfection of the cosmic system (cf. § 237). Perhaps "harmony" might come nearest to it. Heinemann gives "regularity" and "order" ("Regelmässigkeit" and "Ordnung").

PHILO

- εὐγενεῖς καρποὺς οὐδέποτε οἶσει προεξασθενήσαντα 212 ταῖς ἐνδείαις. τρίτον δέ, ὅπως ἀρετῶσα γῆ μὴ πιέζηται βαρυτάτοις ἄχθεσι, τοῦτο μὲν ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν σπειρομένων ἐν ταύτῳ καὶ φυομένων συνεχοῦς καὶ ἐπαλλήλου πυκνότητος, τοῦτο δ' ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν καρπῶν διπλασιαζομένης φορᾶς. ἀπόχρη γὰρ ἐξ ἑνὸς χωρίου λαμβάνειν ἓνα δασμὸν ἐτήσιον τῷ κεκτημένῳ, καθάπερ ἐκ πόλεως βασιλεῖ· τὸ δὲ φόρους ἐπιχειρεῖν πλείους ἐκλέγειν φιλοχρηματίας ὑπερβαλλούσης ἔργον ἐστίν, ἧ καὶ τὰ φύσεως 213 ἀνατρέπεται νόμιμα. διὸ φαίη ἂν ὁ νόμος τοῖς ἐγνωκόσι τοὺς ἀμπελῶνας ἕνεκα πλεονεξίας κατασπείρειν· “ μὴ χείρους γίνεσθε τῶν ὄπλοις καὶ στρατείαις πόλεις καὶ χώρας ὑπηγμένων βασιλέων, οἱ προνοία τοῦ μέλλοντος καὶ ἅμα φειδοῖ τῶν ὑπηκόων ἓνα δασμὸν ἐτήσιον ἐκλέγειν ἀξιούσι, στοχαζόμενοι τοῦ μὴ βραχεῖ καιρῷ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς εἰς ἐσχάτην ἀπορίαν αὐτοὺς ἀγαγεῖν.
 214 ἡμεῖς δ' εἰάν ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐδάφους ἕαρι μὲν τοὺς κριθῶν καὶ πυρῶν φόρους ἀναπράττητε, θέρει δὲ τοὺς τῶν ἀκροδρύων, διπλασίους αὐτὸ δασμοῖς ἐκτραχηλιεῖτε· ἀπαγορεύσει γὰρ κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς ἀθλητοῦ τρόπον οὐκ ἐωμένον διαπνεῖν καὶ συλ-215 λέγεσθαι δύναμιν εἰς ἑτέρας ἀγωνίας ἀρχήν. ἀλλ' εἰκόκατε ῥαδίως ὦν διαταξάμην κοινωφελῶν ἐκλανθάνεσθαι· εἰ γοῦν ἐμέμνησθε τῆς περὶ τοῦ ἐβδόμου ἔτους εἰσηγήσεως, καθ' ἣν ἐδικαίωσα τὴν ἱερὰν χώραν ἐξανίσθαι μηδενὶ τῶν κατὰ γεωργίαν ἔργων ἀποτρυχομένην ἕνεκα τῶν ἐν ἐξαετία πόνων, οὓς ὑπέστη καρποφοροῦσα ταῖς

---

<sup>a</sup> This use of καιρός for a space of time is strange. Pos-140

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 211-215

of the debility caused by their lack of nourishment.

The third reason was that good soil 212 should not suffer from the pressure of two very heavy burdens, one the close unbroken density of the plants which are sown and grow on the same spot, the other the task of bearing a double crop of fruit. A single yearly tribute from a single piece of ground is enough for the owner to receive, as the same from a city is enough for a king. To attempt to levy more than one toll shows excessive avarice, and that is a vice which upsets the laws of nature. And therefore the 213 law would say to those who are minded to gratify their covetousness by laying down seed in their vineyard "do not show yourselves inferior to kings who have subdued cities and countries by arms and military expeditions. They with an eye to the future and at the same time wishing to spare their subjects deem it best to levy one yearly tribute in order to avoid reducing them in a short space of time<sup>a</sup> to the utmost depths of poverty. But you if you 214 exact from the same plot in the spring its contributions of wheat and barley and in the summer the same from the fruit trees will wring the life out of it by the double taxation. For it will naturally become exhausted like an athlete who is not allowed a breathing space and a chance of rallying his forces to begin another contest. But you appear to forget 215 too easily the injunctions which I gave for the common weal.<sup>b</sup> If only you had remembered my instruction as to the seventh year, in which I laid it down that the holy land should be left at liberty in consideration of its six-years labours, which it under-sensibly he means "with (i.e. for) a small advantage." See Dictionary.

<sup>b</sup> See ii. 87-93.

PHILO

ἐτησίους ὥραις κατὰ τοὺς τῆς φύσεως θεσμούς, οὐκ ἂν ἐπινεανιευόμενοι καὶ ἐπιχειρονομοῦντες ταῖς πλεονεξίαις καινοὺς σπόρους ἐπενοεῖτε τὴν δενδρί-τιδα γῆν καὶ μάλιστα τὴν ἀμπελόφυτον κατασπείροντες, ἵνα διτταῖς προσόδοις καθ' ἕκαστον ἐνιαυτὸν ἀμφοτέραις ἀδίκοις αὐξήτε τὰς οὐσίας ὑπὸ φιλοχρηματίας, ἐκνόμου ἐπιθυμίας,<sup>1</sup> ἀργυρο-216 λογοῦντες. οὐ γὰρ ἂν ὑπομείναι ὁ αὐτὸς ἔτει τε ἐβδόμῳ τὰ οἰκεία χωρία ἀνιέναι μὴ προσοδεύομενος, ὑπὲρ τοῦ τὴν γῆν ἀνακτήσασθαι πονηθεῖσαν, καὶ βαρύνειν αὐτὴν καὶ πιέζειν διττοῖς ἄχθεσιν.
 217 ἀναγκαίως οὖν ἀπεφηνάμην τῶν τοιούτων κτημά-
 [372] των ἀνίερων εἶναι καὶ ἀναγνον | τό τε τῆς ὀπώρας γέννημα καὶ τὸν τοῦ σπόρου καρπὸν, διότι ἀυχενίζεται τρόπον τινὰ καὶ ἄγχεται πνεῦμα ζωοφυτοῦν ἐν ἀρετώσῃ γῇ καὶ ὅτι ταῖς τοῦ θεοῦ δωρεαῖς ὁ κεκτημένος ἐναλύει καὶ ἐνσπαθᾷ προσαναρρηγνὺς τὰς ἀδίκους ἐπιθυμίας αὐτοῦ, μέτροις αὐτὰς μὴ 218 περιορίζων." ἄρ' οὐκ ἄξιον ἐρασθῆναι τῶν τοιού-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐκνόμοις ἐπιθυμίας.

<sup>a</sup> This double phrase ἐπινεανιευόμενοι καὶ ἐπιχειρονομοῦντες has been used in Quod Deus 170, where the translation "with swaggering air and gestures of pride" suits the contents.
 Here any reading that retains the literal sense of "gesticulating" seems out of place, and the phrase may be regarded as a familiar expression for "taking pride in." L. & S. (revised) refer to this passage and suppose that ἐπιχειρονομοῦντες means "grasping at." But this does not fit ταῖς πλεονεξίαις. ἐπιχειρονομοῦν is not quoted from any other writer.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxii. 9. R.V. "lest the whole fruit be forfeited, the seed which thou hast sown, and the increase of the vineyard." In margin for "forfeited," Heb. "consecrated."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 215-218

went in bearing fruit at the annual season prescribed by the laws of nature, and not be worn out by any of the husbandman's operations, you would not, recklessly and triumphantly giving full play<sup>a</sup> to your covetous feelings, have planned strange forms of tillage by laying down seed in land fitted for the culture of trees and particularly the vine, just to gain every year two separate revenues both unjustly earned and thus increase your property with the levy which the lawless passion of avarice has led you to exact. For he who can bring himself to let his 216 own farms go free in the seventh year and draw no income from them in order to give the land fresh life after its labours is not the man to overload and oppress them with a double burden. And therefore 217 of necessity I pronounced on such acquisitions that both the autumn harvest and the fruit of the sown crops were unholy and impure,<sup>b</sup> because the life-creating spirit-force in the rich soil is so to speak throttled and strangled, and because the owner vents his wild wastefulness<sup>c</sup> on the gifts of God in an outburst of unjust desires which he does not confine within moderate bounds." Should not our passionate 218 affection go out to such enactments as these which

The A.V. has "defiled." The explanation of this word seems to be that "it is separated to Jehovah and his sanctuary like things under the ban" (Adam Smith) and so shown to be a religious offence. The LXX has ἵνα μὴ ἀγιασθῆ which Philo, taking ἵνα as often to be consecutive, makes = "so that it is not sanctified."

<sup>c</sup> Heinemann's translation of these words "mishandles and mutilates" (or "mangles"), seems to me to miss their force. Mangey's "insultat et illudit" is better. The general meaning of σπαθᾶω is "to spend wastefully," though since wastefulness is not a very obvious characteristic of the action here, "wantonness" might be better.

PHILO

των ὑψηγήσεων, αἱ μακρόθεν τῶν ἐπ' ἀνθρώποις πλεονεξιῶν τὴν λύσσαν ἀνείργουσι καὶ ἀνακόπτουσι; ὁ γὰρ ἀπομαθῶν ἐν φυτοῖς ἰδιώτης κέρδος ἄδικον, εἰ λαβόμενος μειζόνων πραγμάτων γένοιτο βασιλεύς, χρήσεται τῷ ἔθει πρὸς ἄνδρας ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναῖκας οὐ διττοὺς φόρους ἀναπράττων οὐδὲ<sup>1</sup> δασμοῖς τοὺς ὑπηκόους ἐκτραχηλίζων· ἱκανὸν γὰρ τὸ σύντροφον ἔθος μαλάξαι σκληρὰ ἦθη καὶ τρόπον τινὰ παιδαγωγῆσαι καὶ διαπλάσαι πρὸς βελτίονας τύπους· τύποι δ' ἀμείνους εἰσίν, οὓς ἐνσφραγίζεται ψυχῇ δικαιοσύνη.

- 219 XLI. Ταῦτα μὲν ἐνὶ ἐκάστῳ νομοθετεῖ. καθολικώτεροι δὲ προστάξεις εἰσὶν ἕτεραι, ἃς ἅπαντι τῷ ἔθνει κοινῇ διαγορεύει, παραινῶν ὡς προσενεκτέον οὐ φίλοις καὶ συμμαχοῖς αὐτὸ μόνον ἀλλὰ 220 καὶ τοῖς τῆς συμμαχίας ἀφισταμένοις. ἔαν γάρ, φησὶν, εἴσω τειχῶν κατακλείσαντες αὐτοὺς ἀπαυχενίζωσιν, ἢ ὑμετέρα νεότης εὐοπλοῦσα μετὰ τῶν εἰς πόλεμον παρασκευῶν ἐπίτω καὶ στρατόπεδον ἐν κύκλῳ βαλλομένη παραδοκείτω μηδὲν ὄργῃ πρὸ λογισμοῦ χαριζομένη, βεβαιότερον ὅπως καὶ στα-221 θερώτερον ἐγχειρῇ τοῖς πρακτέοις. εὐθύς οὖν πεμπέτω κήρυκας τοὺς προκαλεσομένους εἰς συμβάσεις καὶ ἅμα τὸ ἀξιόμαχον τῆς παριδρυμένης δυνάμεως δηλώσοντας· καὶ ἔαν μὲν ἐφ' οἷς ἐνεω-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn inserts διττοῖς before δασμοῖς. It does not seem to me necessary.

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "covetous actions directed against men" (as opposed to those directed against plants).

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xx. 10 ff., which describe the proper conduct of

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 218-221

by implication restrain and shackle the mad covetous desires which beset mankind?<sup>a</sup> For he who as a commoner has learned to shun unjust gains in the treatment of his plants will, if he becomes a king with greater matters in his charge, follow his acquired habit when he comes to deal with men and also women. He will not exact a double tribute nor wring the life out of his subjects with his imposts. For long familiar habit has the power to soften harsh temperaments and in a sense to tutor and mould them to better forms, and the better forms are those which justice imprints on the soul.

XLI. These laws he gives to each single person 219 but there are other more general commands which he addresses to the whole nation in common, advising them how to behave not only to friends and allies but also to those who renounce their alliance.<sup>b</sup> For 220 if these revolt, he tells us, and shut themselves up within their walls your well-armed fighting force should advance with its armaments and encamp around them, then wait for a time, not letting anger have free play at the expense of reason, in order that they may take in hand what they have to do in a firmer and steadier spirit. They must therefore 221 at once send heralds to propose terms of agreement and at the same time point out the military efficiency of the besieging power. And if their opponents repent of their rebellious conduct and give way and war against distant nations, as opposed to the heathen Canaanites, who are to be exterminated. The curious way in which Philo here limits this to war against those who revolt from an alliance, which might perhaps be taken to include breaking treaties in general, can only be explained, I think, as expressing a conviction that the Law could never have intended to sanction wars of conquest or aggression.

PHILO

τέρισαν μετανοήσαντες ὑπέικωσι πρὸς τὸ εἰρηναῖον τραπόμενοι, δεχέσθωσαν ἄσμενοι τὰς σπονδάς· εἰρήνη γάρ, κὰν ἦ σφόδρα ἐπιζήμιος, λυσιτε-222 λεστέρα πολέμου. εἰ δὲ πρὸς ἀπόνοιαν ἀποτεί-νωνται θρασυόμενοι, ῥωσθέντες ταῖς προθυμίαις, ἔχοντες καὶ τὴν τοῦ δικαίου συμμαχίαν ἀήττητον, ἐφορμάτωσαν τὰς ἐλεπόλεις τοῖς τείχεσιν ἐφιστάντες, εἶτα μέρη τούτων παραρρήξαντες ἐπεισχέ-σθωσαν ἀθρόοι καὶ βάλλοντες μὲν τοῖς δορατίοις εὐστόχως ἐπιστροφάδην δὲ τοῖς ξίφεσιν ἀναιροῦντες ἀφειδῶς ἀμυνέσθωσαν, ἃ παθεῖν ἐμέλλησαν διατιθέντες, ἄχρις ἂν τὸν ἀντιτεταγμένον ἅπαντα 223 στρατὸν ἠβηδὸν καταστορέσωσιν. ἄργυρον δὲ καὶ χρυσὸν καὶ τὴν ἄλλην λείαν λαβόντες [καὶ] τὴν πόλιν ἐμπρησάτωσαν πῦρ προσαγαγόντες, ἔνεκα τοῦ μηδ' αὐθίς ποτε δυνηθῆναι τὴν αὐτὴν πόλιν διαπνεύσασαν ἐγερθῆναι καὶ στασιάσαι καὶ ὑπὲρ [373] τοῦ νουθετῆσαι φόβῳ τοὺς ὁμόρους, | ἐπειδὴ τοῖς ἐτέρων πάθεσιν ἄνθρωποι διδάσκονται σωφρονεῖν· παρθένους δὲ καὶ γυναῖκας μεθέσθωσαν, μηδὲν τῶν ὅσα νεωτερίζει πόλεμος ἐξ αὐτῶν πείσεσθαι προσδοκῶντες ἔνεκα φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας 224 τετιμημένων ἀστρατεία. ἐξ οὗ δῆλον ὅτι τὸ Ἰουdaίων ἔθνος ἔνσπονδον μὲν καὶ φίλον πᾶσι τοῖς

<sup>a</sup> Verse 11 "they shall become tributary and serve thee," which Philo much softens down.

<sup>b</sup> Verse 13. Again much softened down from "thou shalt smite every male thereof," i.e. in the city, not merely the opposing force. On the other hand, burning the city is not show an inclination to peace, the others must accept and welcome the treaty,<sup>a</sup> for peace, even if it involves great sacrifices, is more advantageous than war. But if the adversaries persist in their rashness to the point of madness, they must proceed to the attack invigorated by enthusiasm and having in the justice of their cause an invincible ally. They will plant their engines to command the walls and when they have made breaches in some parts of them pour in altogether and with well-aimed volleys of javelins and with swords which deal death all around them wreak their vengeance without stint, doing to their enemies as the enemies would have done to them, until they have laid the whole opposing army low in a general slaughter.<sup>b</sup> Then after taking the silver and gold and the rest of the spoil they must set fire to the city and burn it up, in order that the same city may not after a breathing space rise up and renew its sedition, and also to intimidate and so admonish the neighbouring peoples, for men learn to behave wisely from the sufferings of others. But they must spare the women,<sup>c</sup> married and unmarried, since these do not expect to experience at their hands any of the shocks of war as in virtue of their natural weakness they have the privilege of exemption from war service. All this shows clearly that the Jewish nation is ready for agreement and suggested, except in the case of those who have apostatized from the religion of Jehovah, and then the spoil also is accursed and burnt (Deut. xiii. 16).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 221-224

<sup>c</sup> Here though the Hebrew (v. 14) includes the women in the booty, Philo has some authority for his more merciful interpretation in the LXX, which has "thou shalt smite every male, except the women and the stuff (ἀποσκεύη)," and then goes on to describe the booty.

PHILO

ὁμογνώμοσι καὶ τὴν προαίρεσιν εἰρηνικοῖς ἔστιν, οὐ μὴν εὐκαταφρόνητον, ὡς τοῖς ἄρχουσι χειρῶν ἀδίκων ὑπ' ἀνανδρίας ἐνδιδόναι, διακρίνει δ', ὅποτε πρὸς ἄμυναν ἴοι, τοὺς ἐπιβούλως ζῶντας καὶ τοῦ-225 ναντίον· τὸ γὰρ κατὰ πάντων καὶ τῶν ἐλάχιστα ἢ μηδὲν ἡμαρτηκότων φονᾶν εἶποιμ' ἂν ἀνημέρου καὶ ἀτιθάσου ψυχῆς καὶ τὸ προσθήκην ἀνδρῶν πόλεμον κατασκευασάντων ποιείσθαι γυναῖκας, ὧν ὁ βίος 226 εἰρηνικὸς φύσει καὶ κατοικίδιος. τοσοῦτον δ' ἔρωτα δικαιοσύνης ἐνεργάζεται τοῖς κατ' αὐτὸν πολιτευομένοις, ὥστ' οὐδὲ πόλεως ἐχθρᾶς τὴν ἀρετῶσαν γῆν ἐφήησι λυμαίνεσθαι δηοῦντας ἢ 227 δενδροτομοῦντας ἐπὶ φθορᾷ καρπῶν. "τί" γάρ φησι "τοῖς ἀψύχοις μὲν τὴν δὲ φύσιν ἡμέροις καὶ ἡμέρους καρποὺς ἀπογεννῶσι μνησικακεῖς; μὴ γάρ, ὦ οὗτος, ἀνθρώπου πολεμίου δυσμένειαν ἐπιδεικνυται δένδρον, ὡς ἀνθ' ὧν διατίθησιν ἢ διατιθέναι παρεσκευάσται ρίζαις αὐταῖς ἀνα-228 σπᾶσθαι; τοῦναντίον δὲ ὠφελεῖ παρέχον τοῖς νενικηκόσιν ἀφθονίαν τῶν ἀναγκαίων καὶ τῶν πρὸς ἀβροδίατον βίον· οὐ γὰρ ἄνθρωποι μόνον δασμοὺς φέρουσι τοῖς κυρίοις, ἀλλὰ καὶ φυτὰ τοὺς ὠφελιμωτέρους κατὰ τὰς ἐτησίους ὥρας, ὧν ἄνευ ζῆν οὐκ 229 ἔστιν." ἀγόνων δὲ καὶ ἔστερωμένων καὶ τῶν ὄσα<sup>1</sup> τῆς ἀγρίας ὕλης ἔστω μηδεμία φειδῶ τοῖς ἐθέλουσι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὄσα τῶν et alia.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xx. 19 f.

<sup>b</sup> Verse 20 "Is the tree of the field man, that it should be besieged of thee?" The LXX in the last part has εἰσελθεῖν ἀπὸ προσώπου σου εἰς τὸν χάρακα ("enter before thee into siege-work"), which may mean like the Hebrew "to be besieged," but might easily be taken to mean "besiege," whence Philo's "show ill will."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 224-229

friendship with all like-minded nations whose intentions are peaceful, yet is not of the contemptible kind which surrenders through cowardice to wrongful aggression. When it takes up arms it distinguishes between those whose life is one of hostility and the reverse. For to breathe slaughter against all, even those who have done very little or nothing amiss, shows what I should call a savage and brutal soul, and the same may be said of counting women, whose life is naturally peaceful and domestic, to be accessories to men who have brought about the war.

Indeed so great a love for justice does the law instil into those who live under its constitution that it does not even permit the fertile soil of a hostile city to be outraged by devastation or by cutting down trees to destroy the fruits.<sup>a</sup> "For why," it says, "do you bear a grudge against things which though lifeless are kindly in nature and produce kindly fruits? Does a tree, I ask you, show ill will to the human enemy that it should be pulled up roots and all, to punish it for ill which it has done or is ready to do to you?"<sup>b</sup> On the contrary it benefits you by providing the victors with abundance both of necessities<sup>c</sup> and of the comforts which ensure a life of luxury. For not only men but plants also pay tributes to their lords as the seasons come round, and theirs are the more profitable since without them life is impossible. But as to the trees which had or have lost the power to bear fruit and all the wild type there should be no stinting in cutting them <sup>a</sup> As the trees include vines and olives, they provide necessities. The other fruits give the comfortable life (cf. De Praem. 107).

PHILO

τέμνειν εἰς χαρακώματα καὶ σταυροὺς καὶ σκόλοπας τάφροις<sup>1</sup> καί, ὅποτε δέοι, κλιμάκων καὶ πύργων ξυλίνων κατασκευάς· εἰς γὰρ ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις ὅμοια γένοιτ' ἂν αὐτῶν χρεία προσήκουσα.

- 230 XLII. Τὰ μὲν οὖν εἰς δικαιοσύνην ἀναφερόμενα εἴρηται. δικαιοσύνην δ' αὐτὴν τίς ἂν ἀξίως ποιητῆς ἢ λογογράφος ὑμνήσαι δύναίτο παντὸς ἐπαίνου καὶ παντὸς ἐγκωμίου κρείττονα καθεστῶσαν; ἔν γοῦν τὸ πρεσβύτατον ἀγαθὸν αὐτῆς, ἡ εὐγένεια, κἂν τᾶλλα τις παραλιπὼν ἡσυχάζῃ,
- 231 γένοιτ' ἂν αὐταρκέστατος ἔπαινος. ἔστι γὰρ ἰσότης, ὡς οἱ τὰ φύσεως ἀκριβοῦντες ἡμῖν παρέδοσαν, μήτηρ δικαιοσύνης. ἰσότης δὲ φῶς ἄσκιον, ἡλιος, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, νοητός, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τοῦναντίον ἀνισότης, ἐν ἧ<sup>2</sup> τό τε ὑπερέχον καὶ τὸ
- 232 ὑπερεχόμενον, σκότους ἀρχή τε καὶ πηγῆ. πάντα ἰσότης τὰ τε κατ' οὐρανὸν καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ γῆς εὖ διατάξατο νόμοις καὶ θεσμοῖς ἀκινήτοις. τίς γὰρ
- [374] ἀγνοεῖ τοῦθ', ὅτι | ἡλίῳ μεμέτρηται πρὸς νύκτας ἡμέραι καὶ πρὸς ἡμέρας νύκτες ἰσότητι διαστημάτων ἀναλογούντων; τὰς μὲν καθ' ἕκαστον ἐνιαυτὸν ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος προσαγορευομένας ἰσημερίας, ἔαρινήν τε καὶ μετοπωρινήν, οὕτως ἡ φύσις ἐτράνωσεν, ὡς καὶ τοὺς ἀμουσοτάτους αἰσθάνεσθαι τῆς ἐν τοῖς μεγέθεσιν ἡμερῶν πρὸς
- 234 νύκτας ἰσότητος. τί δέ, σελήνης περίοδοι διαυλοδρομούσης ἀπὸ συνόδου μέχρι πλησιφαοῦς καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. καὶ τάφρους. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἐν ᾧ (= φ).

down at will for siege works and stakes and pales for entrenchment<sup>a</sup> and when necessary for constructing ladders and wooden towers. For these and similar purposes will be a fitting use to which to put them.

XLII. So much then for the rules which come 230 under the head of justice. But as for justice itself what writer in verse or prose could worthily sing its praise, standing as it does superior to all that eulogy or panegyric can say? Indeed one, and that the most august, of its glories, its high lineage, would be a self-sufficient matter for praise if all the rest were left untold. For the mother of justice is equality,<sup>b</sup> as 231 the masters of natural philosophy<sup>c</sup> have handed down to us, and equality is light unclouded, a spiritual sun we may truly call it, just as its opposite, inequality, in which one thing exceeds or is exceeded by another is the source and fountain of darkness. All things in heaven and earth have been ordered 232 aright by equality under immovable laws and statutes, for who does not know that the relation of days to nights and nights to days is regulated by the sun according to intervals of proportional equality? The 233 dates in spring and autumn every year, whose name of equinoxes is derived from the facts observed, are so clearly marked out by nature that even the least learned perceive the equality of length in the days and nights. Again are not the cycles of the moon, 234 as she runs her course backwards and forwards from

<sup>a</sup> I can hardly think that Philo would use the dative in this way. But the other reading καὶ τάφρους is not very suitable. Perhaps ἐπὶ τάφρους.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Plant. 122 δικαιοσύνην δὲ ἰσότης ἔτεκε; Quis Rerum 163 ἰσότητα τὴν δικαιοσύνης τροφόν.

<sup>c</sup> Presumably the Pythagoreans. See App. p. 437.

PHILO

ἀπὸ τελείας ἐπὶ σύνοδον ἄρ' οὐ διαστημάτων ἰσότητι μεμέτρηνται; καθ' ὅσα γὰρ καὶ ἡλίκα αἱ συναυξήσεις, κατὰ τοσαῦτα καὶ τηλικαῦτα αἱ μειώσεις ἐπ' ἀμφοτέραις ἰδέαις τοῦ ποσοῦ, τῇ τε 235 κατὰ πλήθος καὶ τῇ κατὰ μέγεθος. ὥς γε μὴν ἐν τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ τῆς οὐσίας, οὐρανῷ, διαφερόντως ἰσότης τετίμηται, οὕτως καὶ ἐν τῷ γείτονι ἀέρι· τετραχῆ γὰρ τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ διαιρεθέντος εἰς τὰς καλουμένας ἐτησίους ὥρας, τρέπεσθαι καὶ μεταβάλλειν ὁ ἀήρ πέφυκεν ἐν ταῖς τροπαῖς καὶ μετα-βολαῖς ἄλεκτον ἐπιδεικνύμενος ἐν ἀταξία τάξιν· ἰσαριθμοῖς γὰρ μηνσὶ διακρινόμενος εἰς τε χειμῶνα καὶ ἔαρ θέρος τε καὶ μετόπωρον, τρισὶν εἰς ἐκάστην ὥραν, ἐκπληροῖ τὸν ἐνιαυτόν, ὅς, καθάπερ<sup>1</sup> αὐτὸ μὲνύει τοῦνομα, αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτῷ πάντα περιέχει συμπεραιούμενος, ἐτέρως οὐκ ἂν τοῦτ' ἐργάσασθαι δυνηθείς, εἰ μὴ ταῖς ἐτησίαις ὥραις αὐτὸν ἐπ-236 ἔχρησεν. ἰσότης <δ> ἀπὸ τῶν οὐρανίων καὶ μεταρσίων καὶ πρὸς τὰπίγεια τέταται,<sup>2</sup> τὴν μὲν ἀκραιφνή φύσιν ἑαυτῆς αἰθέρος οὐσαν ἀγχίσπορον ἄνω μετέωρον διαίρουσα, τὴν δ' ὥσπερ αὐγὴν ἡλίου τρόπον <ἐπὶ γῆν><sup>3</sup> ἀποστέλλουσα, δεύτερον 237 φέγγος. ὅσα γὰρ πλημμυλεῖ μὲν τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν, ἀνισότης, ὅσα δὲ τάξιν ἔχει τὴν προσήκουσαν, ἰσότης ἀπειργάσατο, ἥτις ἐν μὲν τῇ τοῦ παντὸς οὐσίᾳ, κυριώτατα φάναι, κόσμος ἐστίν, ἐν δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὡς καθάπερ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τέτακται.

<sup>3</sup> This insertion of Cohn's is perhaps hardly necessary, if ποστέλλουσα = "sending away."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 234-237

the conjunction to the full orb and from her consummation to the conjunction, regulated on the principle of equal intervals? The sum total of her phases and their sizes are exactly the same in her waxing and waning, and so correspond in both forms of quantity, namely number and magnitude. And as equality has 235 received special honour in heaven, the purest part of all that exists, so has it also in heaven's neighbour, the air. The fourfold partition of the year into what we call the annual seasons involves changes and alternations in the air and in these changes and alternations it shows a marvellous order in disorder. For as it is divided by an equal number of months into winter, spring, summer and autumn, three for each season, it carries the year to its fulfilment and the year, as the name ἐνιαυτός<sup>a</sup> indicates, contains as it runs to its completion everything in itself, which it would not have been able to do if it had not accepted the law<sup>b</sup> of the annual seasons. But equality stretches 236 down from the celestial and aerial regions to the terrestrial too. The pure part of its being which is akin to ether it raises into the heights, but another part sun-like it sends earth-wards as a ray, a secondary brightness. For all that goes amiss in our life is the 237 work of inequality, and all that keeps its due order is of equality, which in the universe as a whole is most properly called the cosmos,<sup>c</sup> in cities and states is

<sup>a</sup> Plato, Cratylus 410 D.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "lent it itself," "put itself at the service of." Both Mangey and Heinemann seem to suppose that it means "helped itself with" or "made use of." But no such usage is recorded of the active verb, either in this compound or the uncompounded χράω.

<sup>c</sup> Or "cosmic system." See on § 210.

PHILO

ἄστεσιν ἢ εὐνομωτάτη καὶ πολιτειῶν ἀρίστη δημοκρατία, ἔν τε αὖ σώμασιν ὑγεία καὶ ἐν ψυχαῖς καλοκάγαθία· καὶ γὰρ τὸ ἄνισον ἔμπαλιν νόσων 238 καὶ κακιῶν αἴτιον. ἐπιλείψει καὶ τὸν μακροβιώ-τατον ὁ χρόνος, εἰ πάντας ἐθελήσειε τοὺς ἐπαίνους ἰσότητος καὶ δικαιοσύνης ἣν ἐγέννησε διεξιέναι· παρό μοι δοκεῖ βέλτιον εἶναι τοῖς λεχθεῖσιν ἀρκεσθέντα, τοῦ διακινήσαι χάριν τὴν τῶν φιλεπι-στημόνων μνήμην, τὰ λοιπὰ ἐν ταῖς ἐκείνων ἀνάγραπτα ψυχαῖς καταλιπεῖν, ἱερωτάτῳ χωρίῳ θεῖα ἀγάλματα.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, IV. 237-238

democracy,<sup>a</sup> the most law-abiding and best of constitutions, in bodies is health and in souls virtuous conduct. For inequality on the other hand is the cause of sicknesses and vices. But since if one should wish to tell in full all the praises of equality and her offspring justice the time will fail him, be his life of the longest, it seems better to me to content myself with what has been said to awake the memory in the lovers of knowledge, and to leave the rest to be recorded in their souls, the holiest dwelling place for the jewels<sup>b</sup> of God.

<sup>a</sup> See note on Quod Deus 176 (vol. iii. p. 489) and further App. p. 437.

<sup>b</sup> See on § 76.

ON THE VIRTUES
(DE VIRTUTIBUS)

INTRODUCTION TO DE VIRTUTIBUS

Courage or Manliness

True courage is knowledge, not the savage passions so often exhibited in war but the courage shown by persons who in spite of bodily infirmities exercise their minds for the benefit of others (1-4). There are many circumstances which call out this courage: poverty is combated by contentment with the simple wealth which nature supplies (5-7), though there is also the higher wealth of wisdom (8-9); obscurity or insignificance is not of any importance if we have the esteem of the wise (10-11), nor disability of the senses if we have the sight of the mind (12), nor disease if the soul is healthy (13-14). Courage is the quality which enables us to despise all these (15-17). How essential this virtue of courage or manliness is is suggested by the law when it even forbids a man to assume a woman's dress (18-21).

Courage in peace time is inculcated everywhere in the law, but we must see what it says about courage in war (22). Observe that the cowardly are not to be enrolled in the army (23-26), nor yet those who would naturally be just entering on some new undertaking which would distract their interest (27-31). The warriors that Moses looks for are men of sound and active body and having the gallantry which prefers a glorious death to a life of dishonour (32-33). Such must have been the twelve thousand selected for the war with Midian, and Philo now tells the story of that war from its beginning: the seduction of many Israelites by means of the Midianite women (34-40) and the punishment which deterred the rest from following their example (41), and how the small army enlisted by Moses to avenge the sin of the seducers won a complete victory over vastly greater numbers without losing a man (42-44). This victory due to the support of God agrees with the promise given in Deuteronomy that obedience to the law will secure success in war (45-50).

ON THE VIRTUES

Humanity

Humanity or kindness is the twin of piety, and the life and legislation of Moses is the best illustration it can have, but before going on to the latter we may mention incidents at the close of his career which were not noted in the two books which told the story of his life (51-52). Philo now proceeds to show how Moses knowing his end was near would not bequeath the succession to his family or even to his friend and lieutenant Joshua without consulting God (53-65), and how when the choice of Joshua had been divinely approved he charged him before the congregation (66-69), thereby showing how every ruler should train and encourage his successor (70-71), and then broke into the Great Song (72-75) followed by the Blessing of the Tribes (76-79). He now passes on to give some examples of the humanity of the Mosaic law (80-81). Loans are to be made to Israelites without exacting interest (82-87), wages are to be paid on the same day (88), the creditor is not to enter the debtor's house to seize a pledge (89), the gleaning of the harvest of corn, grapes and olives is to be left to the poor (90-94), the first fruits of the crops and herds are to be set aside (95), a straying animal is to be kept and restored to its owner (96), the produce in the sabbatical year is to be free to the poor (97-98) and landed possessions are to be restored to the original owner in the year of Jubile (99-100). These are only specimens of the kindness to be shown to brother Israelites (101). Next we have the humanity to be shown, as inculcated throughout the law, to strangers who are assumed to be proselytes to the faith (102-104) and to the settlers who enter without this recommendation (105-108). Also to enemies there is the injunction not to make war without attempting reconciliation (109), and to treat women captives with respect (110-115) and in private life to extend the duty of protecting or restoring animals to enemies and thereby possibly ending a feud (116-118); all these show how the great purpose of the Mosaic Law is to increase peace and brotherhood (119-120).

So far the persons to whom this kindness is to be rendered are free men, but slaves also should have the same. A person reduced to that condition by poverty is to be liberated in the seventh year (121-123) and even those born in slavery are not to be rejected if they come as suppliants to another (124).

PHILO

Kindness to animals is enjoined by the ordinance that the offspring is to be left with its mother for seven days, which coupled with Nature's provision of milk for the new born creature should make the infanticides reflect on the wickedness of their conduct (125-133). The same lesson is given by the law that mother and offspring are not to be killed on the same day, an action against which all decent feeling revolts (134-136), and it is a corollary of this law that no animal should be killed while pregnant (137-138). On the same principle some legislators have forbidden pregnant women condemned to death to be executed till the child is born, and Moses by extending this mercifulness to animals implies that a fortiori consideration in every way is due to our fellow men. He thus convicts the libellers who accuse the Jews of misanthropy (139-141). A still more striking example of this mercifulness is the prohibition against seething the lamb in its mother's milk (142-144), also the laws against muzzling the ox while treading out the corn (145) and against yoking animals of unequal strength together (146-147).

Finally there is kindness to plants, shown by prohibiting devastation of crops in general and even those of enemies in war (148-154), and careful nursing of the young plants till the fourth year, before which the fruit may not be picked (155-159). Plants, animals, men—from consideration of the lowest we rise to consideration for the highest (160).

All these injunctions are levelled against the vice of pride or arrogance (161-164) which Moses denounces when he bids us use all gifts "to make power," that is to promote the same powers in others (165-170), and also tells us that God is "provoked by the presumptuousness" which thinks itself divine, ascribes to itself all virtues and gifts and denies them to all others (171-174).

Repentance

In this short sermon the value of repentance as the "second best" is insisted on, as shown primarily in those who are converted from idolatry and must be treated with all friendli-

ON THE VIRTUES

ness (175-179) and in general by passing from disobedience to obedience to the law which is not far off but in our "mouth, hand and heart" (180-184), and by "choosing" God, a choice which makes each single man his people (185-186).

Nobility

The first part of this treatise is a discussion of the theme that the truly well-born or noble is the wise man, and the truly ignoble or ill-born the fool, as shown by the fact that the possession of gifted and virtuous ancestors does not benefit us if we do not inherit those gifts or follow those virtues (187-197). This is illustrated from Genesis, first, by degenerate sons of good parents. Adam was nobly born yet begat Cain (198-200); Noah begat Ham (201-202), indeed Adam himself was the son of God but fell (203-205). These belong to mankind in general. In Jewish history we find that Abraham's sons except Isaac were of little worth (206-207), and Esau was the son of Isaac (208-210). Secondly, by good children of bad or inferior parentage. Abraham's parents were astrologers and idolaters; yet how wonderful was his life and personality (211-219); and so with women also. Tamar who came from a heathen family lived an honourable life (220-222), and the concubines of Jacob, though originally slave girls, were promoted to honour and their children ranked with those of lawful wives (223-225). In fact the only sound doctrine is that everyone is to be judged by his conduct and not by his descent (226-227).

ΦΙΛΩΝΟΣ

ΠΕΡΙ ΑΡΕΤΩΝ ΑΣ ΣΥΝ ΑΛΛΑΙΣ ΑΝΕ- ΓΡΑΨΕ ΜΩΥΣΗΣ ΗΤΟΙ ΠΕΡΙ ΑΝ- ΔΡΕΙΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΕΥΣΕΒΕΙΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΦΙΛΑΝ- ΘΡΩΠΙΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΜΕΤΑΝΟΙΑΣ

Περὶ ἀνδρείας

- <sup>1</sup>
[375] I. Περὶ δικαιοσύνης καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὴν ὅσα καίρια πρότερον εἰπὼν μέτειμι τῶν ἐξῆς ἐπ' ἀνδρείαν, οὐχ ἦν οἱ πολλοὶ νομίζουσι τὴν ἀρειμάνιον λύτταν ὀργῇ συμβούλῳ χρωμένῃ, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐπι-<sup>2</sup>στήμην. θράσει μὲν γὰρ ἐπαιρόμενοί τινες, συμπρατούσης σωματικῆς ἰσχύος, ταχθέντες κατὰ πόλεμον ἐν ταῖς παντευχίαις ἠβηδὸν μυρίους ὅσους τῶν ἀντιπάλων κατέβαλον, ἀνοίκειον μὲν εὐφημον δ' ἀριστείας ὄνομα καρπωσάμενοι, διαφερόντως ὑπὸ [376] τῶν τὰ τοιαῦτα | κρινόντων εὐκλεεῖς νίκη νομισθέντες, ἄγριοι καὶ θηριώδεις ἐκ φύσεως καὶ μελέτης γεγονότες, αἵματος ἀνθρωπείου δεδιμη<sup>3</sup>κότες. εἰσὶ δ' οἱ καὶ ἐν οἰκίᾳ διατρί-βοντες, τῶν σωμάτων αὐτοῖς ἢ μακραῖς νόσοις ἢ ἐπιπόνῳ γήρᾳ κατεσκελετευμένων, ὑγιαίνοντες καὶ 162

ON THE VIRTUES

ON VIRTUES WHICH TOGETHER WITH OTHERS WERE DESCRIBED BY MOSES OR ON COURAGE AND PIETY AND HUMANITY AND REPENTANCE<sup>a</sup>

On Courage

I. The subject of justice and all the relevant points 1 which the occasion requires have already been discussed, and I will take courage next in the sequence.
By courage I mean, not what most people understand, namely the rabid war fever which takes anger for its counsellor, but the courage which is knowledge.<sup>b</sup> For some under the stimulus of reckless daring, sup- 2 ported by bodily strength and marshalled in full armour for war, lay low multitudes of antagonists in a general slaughter and win the well-sounding but little deserved name of noble achievement, yet though their victory makes them exceedingly glorious in the eyes of those who pass judgement on such matters, nature and practice have combined to make them savage and bestial in their thirst for human blood.

But there are others who live on in 3 their homes with their bodies worn to a thread by long sickness or the burden of old age, yet healthy

<sup>a</sup> On this title see App. p. 440.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Spec. Leg. iv. 145.

PHILO

- νεάζοντες τῷ κρείττονι μέρει τῆς ψυχῆς<sup>1</sup> μεστοί τε φρονήματος καὶ θαρραλεωτάτης γέμοντες εὐτολμίας, ἀμυντηρίων ὀπλων μηδ' ὄναρ ψαύοντες, βουλευμάτων ἀγαθῶν κοινωφελεστάταις εἰσηγήσεσι τὰ τε ἴδια ἐκάστων καὶ τὰ κοινὰ τῶν πατρίδων πεσόντα πολλάκις ἀνώρθωσαν, ἀνενδότοις καὶ ἀκαμπέσι χρησάμενοι τοῖς περὶ τοῦ συμφέροντος 4 λογισμοῖς. οὗτοι μὲν οὖν τὴν ἀληθῆ διαπονοῦσιν ἀνδρείαν ἀσκηταὶ σοφίας ὄντες, ἐκείνοι δὲ τὴν ψευδώνυμον ἀμαθία,<sup>2</sup> νόσω δυσθεραπεύτῳ, βιοῦντες, ἦν θρασύτητα κυρίως ἂν τις προσαγορεύσειεν, ὥσπερ φασὶν ἐν τοῖς νομίσμασι τὸ παράσημον ἐμφέρειαν τῆς ἀληθοῦς εἰκόνας.<sup>3</sup>
- 5 II. Οὐκ ὀλίγα μέντοι καὶ ἄλλα δυσυπομόνητα τῶν κατὰ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον ὠμολόγηται, πενία καὶ ἀδοξία καὶ πῆρωσις καὶ νόσων ἰδέαι πολύτροποι, πρὸς αἷς οἱ μὲν ὀλιγόφρονες μαλακίζονται, μηδ' ὅσον ὑπ' ἀτολμίας ἐγερθῆναι δυνάμενοι, ὅσοι δὲ φρονήσεως ὑπόπλεω καὶ γενναιότητος ἐπαποδύονται καρτερῶς καὶ σφόδρα ἐρρωμένως ἀντιφιλονεικοῦντες, τὰς ἀπειλὰς καὶ ἐπανατάσεις αὐτῶν πολὺν

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps τῇ ψυχῇ, see note a.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἀμαθίαν.

<sup>3</sup> I can hardly think that the text of these two lines is right. φασὶν cannot = καλοῦσι, and εἶναι is required. This, which could easily fall out after ἐμφέρειαν, might be supplied, but the question would still remain whether the abstract noun ἐμφέρεια can be used for the corresponding concrete as the English "likeness" is. I should like to read and punctuate ἦν θρασύτητα κυρίως ἂν προσαγορεύσειεν, ὥσπερ φασὶν ἐν τοῖς νομίσμασι, τὸ παράσημον <ἔχον> ἐμφέρειαν τῆς ἀληθοῦς εἰκόνας. See note b.

ON THE VIRTUES, 3-5

and youthful in the better part of the soul,<sup>a</sup> brimful of highmindedness and staunchest valour. They never even dream of touching weapons of defence, but render the highest service to the commonwealth by the excellent advice which they put forward, and guided by unflinching and unswerving consideration of what is profitable, restore what had broken down in the personal life of each individual and in the public life of their country. These then <sup>4</sup> who train themselves in wisdom cultivate the true courage. The courage of those others, whose life is distempered by an ignorance that resists all treatment, is falsely so named and should properly be called reckless daring, as in the case of coins where we say that the counterfeit is a likeness of the true type.<sup>b</sup>

II. Further there are many other conditions in <sup>5</sup> human life admittedly hard to bear, poverty and disrepute and disablement and sickness in its manifold forms, in the face of which those of little wit all grow craven-hearted, lacking the valour even to raise themselves. But those who are full of wisdom and highmindedness gallantly gird themselves for the struggle and resist the foe with all their strength, counting his <sup>a</sup> Or if  $\tau\eta\ \psiυ\chi\eta$  is read, "the better part, the soul." Cohn in his translation definitely adopts this, cf. § 30. The antithesis to  $\sigma\acute{\omega}\mu\alpha$  no doubt points to this, but it must be remembered that the idea that the mind or understanding is the better part of the  $\psiυ\chi\eta$  constantly recurs in Philo, and is emphasized below in § 187, cf. also § 85. Here it is particularly appropriate because the courage we are discussing belongs to  $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota\sigma\tau\acute{\eta}\mu\eta$ . I am inclined to retain the genitive.

<sup>b</sup> Or if the reading and punctuation in note 3 is adopted, "reckless daring," the counterfeit (to use the term which we apply to coins) of the true type whose semblance it bears.

PHILO

γέλωτα καὶ χλεύην τιθέμενοι, πενία μὲν πλοῦτον ἀντιτάττοντες, οὐ τὸν τυφλὸν ἀλλὰ τὸν ὀξὺ καθορώωντα, οὐ τὰ ἀγάλματα καὶ κειμήλια ψυχὴ πέφυκε 6 ταμιεύειν. μυρίους γὰρ πενία κατεπάλαισεν, οἱ τρόπον ἀθλητῶν ἀπειρηκότων ὑπ' ἀνανδρίας κατ-έπεσον μαλακισθέντες· ἐνδεῆς δὲ παρ' ἀληθεία δικαζούση τὸ παράπαν οὐδὲ εἰς ἔστι χορηγὸν ἔχων τὸν τῆς φύσεως ἀκαθαίρετον πλοῦτον· ἀέρα μὲν, τὴν πρώτην καὶ ἀναγκαιοτάτην καὶ συνεχῆ τροφήν, ἀδιαστάτως μεθ' ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτωρ ἀναπνεό-μενον, ἔπειτα δὲ πηγὰς ἀφθόνους καὶ ποταμῶν οὐ χειμάρρων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐθιγενῶν ρεῖθρα ἀέναα πρὸς ποτοῦ χρήσιν, ἔπειτα εἰς ἔδωδὴν φορὰς παντοίων καρπῶν καὶ δένδρων ἰδέας, αἱ τὰς ἐτησίους ὀπώρας αἰεὶ φέρουσι· τούτων γὰρ ἄπορος οὐδεὶς, ἀλλὰ πάντες οἱ πανταχοῦ πολλὴν ἄγουσι 7 περιουσίαν. εἰ δέ τινες τὸν τῆς φύσεως πλοῦτον παρ' οὐδὲν θέμενοι τὸν τῶν κενῶν δοξῶν διώκουσι, τυφλῶ πρὸ βλέποντος σκηριπτόμενοι καὶ ἡγεμόνι τῆς ὁδοῦ χρώμενοι πεπηρωμένῳ, πίπτειν ἐξ ἀνάγκης ὀφείλουσιν.

8 III. Ὁ μὲν δὴ σώματος δορυφόρος πλοῦτος φύσεως εὖρημα καὶ δῶρον ὧν ἤδη λέλεκται. τὸν δὲ σεμνότερον, ὃς οὐ πᾶσιν ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἀληθῶς σεμνοῖς καὶ θεσπεσίοις ἀνδράσι πρόσεστι, μηνυτέον.

<sup>a</sup> Plato, Laws 631 c. See note on Spec. Leg. i. 25, vol. vii. p. 615.

<sup>b</sup> The "wealth of nature," which is to be distinguished from the spiritual wealth of wisdom (see § 8), is described again in De Praem. 99, cf. De Som. i. 124 ff., where it is identified with the "bread and raiment" for which Jacob prayed.

ON THE VIRTUES, 5-8

threats and menaces a matter for much scorn and derision. Against poverty they pit riches, not the blind but the keen-sighted riches,<sup>a</sup> whose jewels and treasures have their natural store-house in the soul. For under the grip of poverty multitudes have been 6 laid low, and like exhausted athletes have fallen to the ground enfeebled by lack of manliness. Yet in the judgement of truth not a single one is in want, for his needs are supplied by the wealth of nature,<sup>b</sup> which cannot be taken from him ; the air, the first, the most vital, the perpetual source of sustenance, which we inhale continually night and day ; then the fountains in their profusion and the rivers spring-fed as well as winter brooks ever flowing to provide us with drink ; then again for our meat, the harvest of crops of every sort, and the different kinds of trees, which never fail to bear their annual autumn fruitage. These no one lacks, but everybody everywhere has an ample and more than ample sufficiency.

But some making no account of the 7 wealth of nature pursue the wealth of vain opinions. They choose to lean on one who lacks rather than one who has the gift of sight, and with this defective guidance to their steps must of necessity fall.

III. So much for the wealth that is the guardsman 8 of the body, the happy gift of nature,<sup>c</sup> but we must mention also the higher, nobler wealth, which does not belong to all, but to truly noble and divinely

Here Philo seems to allow it a place in the "seeing wealth" (see § 7), though elsewhere that is an epithet reserved for spiritual wealth. It guards the body against poverty, but not against the other bodily ills enumerated in §§ 10-15.

<sup>c</sup> The translation takes εὐρημα in the common sense of "godsend" or "prize." Otherwise "the thing which nature discovers and gives."

[377] τοῦτον τὸν πλοῦτον | σοφία χορηγεῖ διὰ λογικῶν καὶ ἠθικῶν καὶ φυσικῶν δογμάτων καὶ θεωρημάτων, ἐξ ὧν φύεσθαι τὰς ἀρετὰς συμβέβηκεν, αἱ τῆς ψυχῆς ὑποτέμνονται τὴν πολυτέλειαν εὐκολίας καὶ ὀλιγοδείας ἔρωτας ἐντίκτουσαι κατὰ τὴν πρὸς 9 θεὸν ἐξομοίωσιν. ἔστι γὰρ ὁ μὲν θεὸς ἀνεπίδεής, οὐδενὸς χρεῖος ὧν, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς ἀνταρκέστατος ἑαυτῷ· ὁ δὲ φαῦλος πολυδεής, αἰεὶ διψῶν τῶν ἀπόντων ἀπλήστου καὶ ἀκορέστου χάριν ἐπιθυμίας, ἣν πυρὸς τρόπον ἀναρριπίζων καὶ ἀναφλέγων ἐπὶ πάντα μικρά τε αὖ καὶ μεγάλα τείνει· ὁ δὲ σπουδαῖος ὀλιγοδεής, ἀθανάτου καὶ θνητῆς φύσεως μεθόριος, τὸ μὲν ἐπιδεὲς ἔχων διὰ σῶμα θνητόν, τὸ δὲ μὴ πολυδεὲς διὰ ψυχὴν ἐφιεμένην ἀθανασίας.

10 οὕτως μὲν πενία πλοῦτον ἀντιτάττουσιν· ἀδοξία δὲ εὐκλειαν· ὁ γὰρ ἔπαινος ὀρμητήριον ἔχων καλοκαγαθίαν καὶ ὡσπερ ἀπὸ ἀεναίου πηγῆς ἐκείθεν ῥέων ἀνεξετάστων ἀνθρώπων οὐκ ἐνομιλεῖ πλήθει τὰς τῆς ψυχῆς ἀνωμαλίας ἀβεβαίους φωναῖς ἀπογυμνοῦν εἰωθότων, ἃς ἔστιν ὅτε λημμάτων αἰσχυρῶν ἐπευνίζοντες οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσιν κατὰ τῶν ἀριστίνδην ἐπιλεγομένων. ὀλίγος δὲ τούτων ἀριθμὸς ἐστίν· ἀρετὴ γὰρ οὐ πολύχουν ἐν 11 θνητῷ γένοι. πηρώσει γε μὴν αἰσθή-σεων, ἧ συζῶντες ἔτι μυριοὶ προαπέθανον τῷ μηδέν

<sup>a</sup> For the triple division of philosophy see note on Spec. Leg. i. 336 and the references there given.

<sup>b</sup> Or "as befits its assimilation," i.e. it is part of the process which the sage goes through in his endeavour to resemble God. Cf. Spec. Leg. iv. 188 and § 168 below.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps a stronger word as "glory," i.e. in the eyes of the wise, not a glory which implies celebrity. On the contrary, the multitude are more likely to abuse such people.

ON THE VIRTUES, 8-11

gifted men. This wealth is bestowed by wisdom through the doctrines and principles of ethic, logic and physic,<sup>a</sup> and from these spring the virtues, which rid the soul of its proneness to extravagance, and engender the love of contentment and frugality, which will assimilate it to God.<sup>b</sup> For God has no 9 wants, He needs nothing, being in Himself all-sufficient to Himself, while the fool has many wants, ever thirsting for what is not there, longing to gratify his greedy and insatiable desire, which he fans into a blaze like a fire and brings both great and small within its reach. But the man of worth has few wants, standing midway between mortality and immortality. Some wants he has because his body is mortal, many he has not in virtue of his soul, which desires immortality. This is the way in which the wise 10 pit riches against poverty. Against disrepute they pit good fame,<sup>c</sup> for the praise which has its fountain head in noble conduct, flowing thence as from a perennial spring, has no currency among the unthinking masses, whose habit is to expose the inconsistencies of their souls by random talk, often in order to purchase some shameful reward unblushingly directed against these men of choicest merit.<sup>d</sup> But the number of these is small, for virtue is not widespread among mortal kind. Again there 11 is disablement of the senses. To live with this has

So in De Sob. 57 the sage is not ἔνδοξος but εὐκλεής, where perhaps the translation "not merely of high report" may have missed the sense.

<sup>a</sup> More literally "picked out as the best," an odd phrase here, since usually it refers to actual selection, cf. e.g. § 42. That it does not mean this here nor imply that the multitude are apt to speak evil of dignities, but refers to the wise εὐκλεεῖς, is shown by τούτων κτλ. in the next sentence.

ἀλεξίκακον εὐρεῖν δύνασθαι φάρμακον, ἀντικάθηται φρόνησις, τὸ κρατιστεῦον τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν, ἐνομματοῦσα διάνοιαν, ἢ πρὸς ὄξυωπίαν τῶν σώματος ὀφθαλμῶν

12 ὅλω, φασί, καὶ τῷ παντὶ διενήνοχεν. οἱ μὲν γὰρ τὰς ἐπιφανείας τῶν ὀρατῶν καταθεῶνται, ἅμα δεόμενοι φωτὸς ἔξωθεν, ἢ δὲ καὶ διὰ βάθους χωρεῖ τῶν σωμαίων, ὅλα δι' ὅλων καθ' ἕκαστα τῶν μερῶν ἀκριβοῦσα καὶ περιαθροῦσα καὶ τὰς τῶν ἀσωμάτων φύσεις, ἃς ἐπισκοπεῖν αἴσθησις ἀδυνατεῖ· σχεδὸν γὰρ πᾶσαν ὄξυωπίαν ὀφθαλμοῦ καταλαμβάνει, μὴ προσδεομένη νόθου φωτός, ἀστῆρ οὔσα αὐτῇ καὶ σχεδόν τι τῶν ἐπουρανίων ἀπεικό-
 13 νισμα καὶ μίμημα. νόσοι γε μὴν σωμαίων ὑγιαινούσης ψυχῆς ἤκιστα βλάπτουσι· ὑγεία δὲ ψυχῆς εὐκρασία δυνάμεών ἐστι τῆς τε κατὰ τὸν θυμὸν καὶ τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν καὶ τὸν λόγον, ἐπικρατούσης τῆς λογικῆς καὶ ὡσπερ ἀφηνιαστὰς ἵππους
 14 ἡνιοχούσης ἑκατέρας. ὄνομα ταύτης ἴδιον τῆς [378] ὑγείας ἐστὶ σωφροσύνη, σωτηρίαν τῷ | φρονοῦντι τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀπεργαζομένη· κινδυνεῦον γὰρ αὐτὸ πολλάκις ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν παθῶν φορᾶς κατακλύζεσθαι ὑποβρύχιον οὐκ ἐᾷ χωρεῖν, ἀλλὰ ἀνέλκει καὶ μετέωρον ἐξαίρει ψυχοῦσα καὶ ζωογονοῦσα καὶ τρόπον τινὰ ἀπαθανατίζουσα.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "excels by the whole and all." The addition of φασί suggests that the phrase is colloquial.

<sup>b</sup> For the triple division of the soul cf. Spec. Leg. iv. 92 and note. In the "restive horses" there is an allusion to the parable in Plato, Phaedrus 253 D, where the charioteer is to be

ON THE VIRTUES, 11-14

been premature death to thousands, because they can find no medicine to protect them against its ills. Its opponent is wisdom, the best quality we have, which plants eyes in the mind, and the mind in keenness of vision excels the eyes of the body so that they, as people say, are a "mere nothing"<sup>a</sup> in comparison. The body's eyes observe the surfaces of things visible 12 and need the external help of light, but the mind penetrates through the depth of material things, accurately observing their whole contents and their several parts, surveying also the nature of things immaterial, which sense is unable to descry. For we may say that it achieves all the keenness of vision, which an eye can have, without needing any adventitious light, itself a star and, we may say, a copy and likeness of the heavenly company. Again 13 diseases of the body, if the soul is healthy, do very little harm. And the health of the soul is to have its faculties, reason, high spirit and desire happily tempered, with the reason in command and reining in both the other two, like restive horses.<sup>b</sup> The 14 special name of this health is temperance, that is σωφροσύνη or "thought-preserving,"<sup>c</sup> for it creates a preservation of one of our powers, namely, that of wise-thinking. For often when that power is in danger of being submerged by the tide of the passions, this spiritual health prevents it from being lost in the depths and pulls it up and lifts it on high, vitalizing and quickening it, and giving it a kind of immortality.

interpreted as reason, and the two horses as high spirit and desire, a parable interpreted in the same sense also by Philo, Leg. All. i. 72 f.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Plato, Cratylus 411 ε σωφροσύνη δὲ σωτηρία . . . φρονήσεως.

PHILO

- 15 Πάντα δὲ τὰ εἰρημένα ὑφηγήσεις εἰσὶ καὶ διδασκαλῖαι πολλαχοῦ τῆς νομοθεσίας ἐστηλιτευμένοι, τοὺς μὲν εὐπειθεῖς μαλακώτερον ἀναπειθουσαι τοὺς δὲ ἀπειθεστέρους ἐμβριθέστερον καταφρονεῖν τῶν περὶ σῶμα καὶ ἔκτος, ἔν μὲν τέλος ἡγουμένους τὸ κατ' ἀρετὴν βιοῦν, ζηλοῦντας δὲ καὶ
- 16 τᾶλλα ὅσα ἀγωγὰ πρὸς τοῦτο. καὶ εἴ γε μὴ διὰ τῶν προτέρων ἐτύγχανον ἕκαστα διεξεληλυθῶς τῶν εἰς ἀτυφίαν, ἐπειρώμην ἂν ἀπομηκύνειν ἐν τῷ παρόντι συνυφαίνων καὶ συνείρων τὰ δοκοῦντα σποράδην κείσθαι ἐν τόποις διαφέρουσιν· εἰρηκῶς
- 17 δ' ὅσα καιρὸς παλιλλογεῖν οὐ δικαίῳ.<sup>1</sup> τοὺς μέντοι μὴ ἀποκοῦντας ἀλλὰ διὰ σπουδῆς τιθεμένους ἐντυγχάνειν ταῖς πρὸ τούτων βίβλοις δεῖ νοῆσαι, ὅτι πάντα τὰ περὶ ἀτυφίας λεχθέντα σχεδόν ἐστι περὶ ἀνδρείας, ἐπειδὴ περ εὐτόνου καὶ γενναίας καὶ σφόδρα νενευρωμένης ψυχῆς ἐστι καταφρονῆσαι πάντων ὅσα τύφος εἴωθε σεμνοποιεῖν ἐπὶ διαφθορᾷ τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν βίου.
- 18 IV. Τοσαύτη δὲ τίς ἐστι τῷ νόμῳ σπουδὴ καὶ φιλοτιμία περὶ τοῦ γυμνάσαι καὶ συγκροτῆσαι ψυχὴν πρὸς ἀνδρείαν, ὥστε καὶ περὶ ἐσθημάτων ὅποια ἐχρῆν ἀμπέχεσθαι διετάξατο ἀπειπῶν ἀνὰ κράτος ἀνδρὶ γυναικὸς ἀμπεχόνην ἀναλαμβάνειν, ἔνεκα τοῦ μηδὲν ἴχνος ἢ σκιὰν αὐτὸ μόνον τοῦ θήλεος ἐπὶ λύμη τῆς ἄρσενος γενεᾶς προσάφασθαι· βούλεται γὰρ ἐπόμενος ἀεὶ τῇ φύσει τὰ οἰκεία καὶ συνωδὰ ἀλλήλοις ἄχρι τῶν ἐσχάτων καὶ δι' εὐτέλειαν
- 19 ἀφανεστέρων εἶναι δοκοῦντων νομοθετεῖν. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τύπους σωματίων ἑώρα καθάπερ ἐπὶ πλάτους

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δικαίων οἱ δίκαιον.

ON THE VIRTUES, 15-19

All the above are lessons and instructions, which stand recorded in many places of the law, urging the tractable in gentle, the intractable in sterner terms to despise the bodily and external goods, holding the life of virtue to be the one sole end and pursuing after everything else that is conducive to it. And if I had not in my earlier writings dealt fully with each of the rules which promote simplicity, I would attempt to dilate on them at this point, and embrace in a collected list the scattered precepts which appear in different places. But as I have said all that occasion required, I think it better not to repeat myself. Still those who do not shrink from the task but are at pains to study the books which precede these, ought to perceive that practically everything there said about simplicity<sup>a</sup> includes the thought of courage, since it is the mark of a soul, vigorous, gallant and full of mettle, that it despises everything which vanity is wont to glorify to the destruction of life in any true sense.

IV. So earnestly and carefully does the law desire to train and exercise the soul to manly courage that it lays down rules even about the kind of garment which should be worn. It strictly forbids a man to assume a woman's garb, in order that no trace, no merest shadow of the female, should attach to him to spoil his masculinity.<sup>b</sup> For as it always follows nature, its will is to lay down rules suitable and consistent with each other, even down to the very smallest matters, whose commonplace nature seems to set them in the background. For since it saw as clearly, as if they were outlines on a flat surface, <sup>a</sup> On ἀνυφία and τῦφος see App. p. 440.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxii. 5.

PHILO

χαραχθέντας ἀνομοίους ἀνδρός τε αὐ καὶ γυναικὸς καὶ βίον ἑκατέρω τῶν εἰδῶν οὐ τὸν αὐτὸν ἀπονεμηθέντα—τῷ μὲν γὰρ ὁ κατοικίδιος, τῷ δ' ὁ πολιτικὸς προσκεκλήρωται—, κἀν<sup>1</sup> τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα μὴ φύσεως μὲν ἔργα ἦν, φύσει δὲ ἀκόλουθα γνώμης ἀγαθῆς εὐρήματα, συμφέρον ἔκρινε διατάξασθαι· ταῦτα δ' ἦν τὰ περὶ δίαιταν καὶ ἀμπεχόνην καὶ εἴ τι ὁμοιό-

20 τροπον. ἡρρενώσθαι γὰρ τόν γε πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἄνδρα κἀν τούτοις ἠξίωσε καὶ μάλιστα ἐν ἐσθήμασιν, ἃ ἐπιφερόμενος αἰεὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτωρ ὀφείλει μηδὲν ἔχειν ἀνανδρίας ὑπόμνημα.

21 κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ μέντοι καὶ τὴν γυναικὰ ἀσκήσας τοῖς
379] ἀρμόττουσι κόσμοις | ἐκώλυσεν ἀναλαμβάνειν ἀνδρὸς ἐσθήτα, πόρρωθεν ὡς ἀνδρογύνους οὕτως καὶ γυνάνδρους φυλαξάμενος· ἐνὸς γάρ, καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς οἰκοδομίαις, ὑφαιρεθέντος ἤδει καὶ τᾶλλα μενούντα οὐκ ἐν ὁμοίῳ.

22 V. "Ἐτι τοίνυν τῶν ἀνθρωπέων πραγμάτων δυσὶ καιροῖς ἐμφερομένων, εἰρήνην τε καὶ πολέμῳ, τὰς ἀρετὰς ἔστιν ἰδεῖν ἐν ἀμφοτέροις ἐξεταζομένας. περὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν ἄλλων λέλεκται πρότερον καὶ αὐθις, εἰ γένοιτό τις χρεία, λεχθήσεται· τὰ δὲ νῦν ἀνδρείαν οὐ παρέργως ἐξεταστέον, ἧς τὰ μὲν κατ' εἰρήνην ἔργα πολλαχοῦ τῆς νομοθεσίας ὑμνησεν αἰεὶ τῶν καιρῶν στοχαζόμενος, περὶ ὧν ἐν τοῖς οἰκείοις

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καί.

---

<sup>a</sup> It is difficult to see to what Philo refers (cf. De Praem. 3). Peace is of course the ordinary sphere of all the virtues except ἀνδρεία, and nearly every event or law would come

ON THE VIRTUES, 19-22

how unlike the bodily shapes of man and woman are, and that each of the two has a different life assigned to it, to the one a domestic, to the other a civic life, it judged it well in other matters too to prescribe rules all of which though not directly made by nature were the outcome of wise reflection and in accordance with nature. These were such as dealt with habits of life and dress and any similar matters. It considered that in such matters the true 20 man should maintain his masculinity, particularly in his clothes, which as he always wears them by day and night ought to have nothing to suggest unmanliness. In the same way he trained the woman to 21 decency of adornment and forbade her to assume the dress of a man, with the further object of guarding against the mannish-woman as much as the womanish-man. He knew that as in buildings, if one of the foundation stones is removed, the rest will not remain as they were.

V. To proceed, since the time in which human 22 events occur may be divided into war-time and peacetime, we may observe the place taken by the virtues in both. In regard to the others this has been discussed already<sup>a</sup> and will be again if need arise, but courage at this point calls for a close examination. The effects it produces in peace are extolled by him in many places of the law book, and he is always ready to seize opportunity for so doing. These have been under this head. He has dealt with δικαιοσύνη in war in Spec. Leg. iv. 219-222, and εὐσέβεια, which is quite as prominent as ἀνδρεία in the coming story of the Midianite war, might be found in the earlier account of that war in Mos. i. 305 ff., or that against Amalek, ibid. 215 ff. So too Abraham's conduct of the war against the four kings is ascribed to φιλανθρωπία, De Abr. 232.

PHILO

τόποις ὑπεμνήσαμεν, τῶν δὲ κατὰ πόλεμον ἐνθένδε 23 ποιησόμεθα τὴν ἀρχήν, ἐκείνο προειπόντες. ὅταν ποιῆται τὸν στρατιωτικὸν κατάλογον, οὐχ ἅπασαν τὴν νεότητα καλεῖν οἴεται δεῖν, ἀλλ' ἔστιν οὖς παραιτεῖται προστιθεῖς αἰτίας εὐλόγους τῆς ἀστρα-τείας· αὐτίκα τοὺς κατεπτηχότας καὶ δειλοὺς, μελλήσοντας ὑπὸ τῆς ἐμφύτου μαλακίας ἀλίσκεσθαι 24 καὶ δέος τοῖς ἄλλοις συμμάχοις ἐμποιεῖν. τὸ γὰρ ἑτέρου κακὸν εὖ πως ὁ πλησίον ἀναμάττεσθαι φιλεῖ, καὶ μάλιστ' ἐν πολέμῳ, τοῦ λογισμοῦ διὰ τὴν ἀγωνίαν συγκεχυμένου καὶ τὰς τῶν πραγμάτων ἀντιλήψεις ἀκριβοῦν ἀδυνατοῦντος· τότε γὰρ εὐλά-βειαν μὲν τὴν δειλίαν, τὸ δὲ φοβεῖσθαι προμηθές, ἀσφάλειαν δὲ τὴν ἀνανδρίαν εἰώθασι καλεῖν, αἰσχιστα ἔργα εὐπρεπέσι καὶ σεμναῖς κλήσεσιν 25 ἐπαμπύσχοντες. ὅπως οὖν μὴ τὰ μὲν οἰκεία βλάβηται διὰ τῆς τῶν εἰς τὸν πόλεμον ἰόντων ἀνανδρίας, ἐπικυδέστερα δὲ γίνηται τὰ τῶν ἐχθρῶν αἰρούντων καταφρονητικῶς τοὺς ἀγεννεῖς, ὅχλον ἀργὸν εἰδὼς οὐκ ὠφέλιμον ἀλλ' ἐμπόδιον εἰς κατ-ὄρθωμα, ἀνεῖρξε τοὺς ἀτόλμους καὶ ἀναπίπτοντας δειλία, καθάπερ, οἶμαι, καὶ τοῖς τὰ σώματα νοσοῦσι

<sup>a</sup> Here again the reference is vague. As ἀνδρεία in peace has just been equated to ἀτυφία, we should expect Philo to say that he has just discussed it, but the reference to Moses' frequent insistence on it suggests something different.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xx. 8 "What man is there who fears and is cowardly in his heart? let him go and return to his house, lest he make the heart of his brother cowardly as is his own." Actually this is spoken on the battlefield by the "officers" (E.V.), for which the LXX has γραμματεῖς ("scribes"), a word which may have influenced Philo in connecting the exemption with drawing up the roll.

ON THE VIRTUES, 22-25

noted in their proper places<sup>a</sup> and we will now begin to describe its feats in war. One prefatory remark, however, must be made. He considers that in drawing up the roll of soldiers, the summons should not include all those of military age, but he would have some excluded, reasonable excuses being added for their exemption from service. These are in the first instance the cravens and cowards who are sure to be the victims of their ingrained feebleness and create fear in the other combatants.<sup>b</sup> For the evil in one man is often well reproduced<sup>c</sup> in his neighbour, particularly in war, where trepidation<sup>d</sup> has confused the reasoning faculty and rendered it incapable of nicely estimating facts. People are then accustomed to call cowardice caution and timidity foresight and unmanliness safety-seeking, and so invest the basest actions with grand and fair-sounding titles. And, therefore, unwilling that his own cause should be injured by the cowardice of those who are to take the field and that of the enemy glorified by an easy victory over a contemptible<sup>e</sup> body of degenerates and knowing that a crowd of idlers is no help but an impediment to success, he excludes the timid and faint-hearted cowards on the same principle, I think, that a general does not enforce war-service on persons

<sup>a</sup> Or "makes a powerful impression on." The metaphor, as in other compounds of μάττομαι, is taken from the copy produced by stamping wax. Perhaps "infect," though a different metaphor, will give the sense more vividly in English.

<sup>b</sup> A somewhat inadequate translation for ἀγωνία, which is defined by Diogenes Laertius as φόβος ἀδήλου πράγματος. See note on De Dec. 145 (vol. vii. p. 612).

<sup>c</sup> καταφρονητικῶς here denotes scorn for the feebleness of the enemy. Elsewhere, as in § 43 below, scorn of danger, cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 126.

PHILO

- στρατηγός<sup>1</sup> οὐδείς ἀνάγκην ἐπιτίθησι πολεμῆν, ὑπο-26 παραιτουμένης ἀσθενείας. νόσος δέ τις καὶ ἡ δειλία, βαρυτέρα τῶν κατὰ τὸ σῶμα, τὰς ψυχῆς δυνάμεις καθαιροῦσα· τῶν μὲν γὰρ βραχὺν εἶναι συμβαίνει τὸν χρόνον τῆς ἀκμῆς, ἢ δ' ἐστὶ κακὸν σύντροφον, μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον τῶν ἡνωμένων μερῶν προσπεφυκὸς ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἄχρι πανυστατοῦ γήρωσ, εἰ μὴ τύχοι θεὸς ἰώμενος· πάντα γὰρ θεῶ δυνατά.
- 27 Καὶ μὴν οὐδ' ἅπαντας τοὺς εὐτολμοτάτους καλεῖ, καὶ σφόδρα ἐρρωμένοι καθ' ἑκάτερον σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν προαγωνίζεσθαι καὶ προκινδυνεύειν ἐθέλωσιν. ἀλλὰ τῆς γνώμης αὐτοὺς ἐπαιέσας, ὅτι κοινωνικὸν καὶ πρόθυμον καὶ ἀκατάπληκτον ἦθος ἐπιδείκνυνται, διερευνᾷ μὴ τισιν ἀναγκαίαις αἰτίαις ἐνδέ-28 δονται, ὧν ὄλκός ἢ δύναμις. εἰ γὰρ τις, φησί, [380] νεωστὶ δειμάμενος | οἰκίαν οὐκ ἔφθη εἰσοικίσασθαι ἢ ἀμπελῶνα φυτεύσας νεόφυτον, αὐτὸς εἰς γῆν τὰ κλήματα καθείς, μήπω τῆς ἐπικαρπίας καιρὸν ἔσχεν ἢ παρθένον ἐγγνησάμενος οὐκ ἔγημεν, ἀφείσθω πάσης στρατείας, φιλανθρωπία νόμου<sup>2</sup> τὴν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. στρατηγοῖς (-οῦς).

<sup>2</sup> All MSS. φιλανθρωπίαν ὁμοῦ except A which has φιλανθρώ-πως ὁμοῦ. Cohn, adopting a suggestion of Wendland's, prints φιλανθρώπως ὁμοῦ <καὶ στρατηγικῶς>. This is based on the paraphrase in Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 18, who after mentioning the circumstances which entitle to exemption goes on τούτους ἀφείσθαι τῆς στρατείας ὁ φιλόφρωνος κελεύει νόμος στρατηγικῶς μὲν (then follows a précis of the reasons mentioned in § 31), φιλανθρώπως δὲ (then the reasons mentioned in § 29). The text thus emended seems to me in itself unsatisfactory. If εὐρισκόμενος agrees with the subject of ἀφείσθω, the adverbs are unnatural. It is the law, not the man, who acts φιλανθρώπως καὶ στρατηγικῶς. If with the subject of φησί, the participle has an unnatural sense. The law does not "win"

ON THE VIRTUES, 25-28

who are diseased in body and are, therefore, excused by their infirmity. But cowardice, too, is a disease, 26 graver than any that affects the body since it destroys the faculties of the soul. Diseases of the body flourish but for a short time, but cowardice is an inbred evil, as closely inherent or more so than any part of the bodily system from the earliest years to extreme old age, unless it is healed by God. For all things are possible to Him.

Furthermore, he does not even enlist all the most 27 courageous, be they ever so robust both in body and soul, and willing to fight and face danger in the forefront. While He praises them for their resolution and for the public-spirited, zealous and undaunted temper which they show, he carefully inquires whether they are in bondage to any cogent considerations, whose force leads them where it will. If, he says, a man has 28 lately built a house, but has not yet had time to occupy it, or just planted a vineyard, setting the shoots in the ground with his own hand, and yet has had no opportunity to enjoy the fruits, or has betrothed himself to a maiden, but has not married her, he is to be exempted from all war service, and so gain security through the humaneness of the law.<sup>a</sup> And this for or "discover" ἀδεια. I think that Cohn and Wendland must have failed to observe that φιλανθρωπίαν ὁμοῦ may be a misdivision of φιλανθρωπία (= -α) νόμου, and that it actually is so is strongly supported by Spec. Leg. ii. 183, where M, the one existing ms., has τὴν μετουσίαν ἔλαβον φιλανθρωπίαν ὁμοῦ δοθεῖσαν, which editors have corrected as an obvious error to φιλανθρωπία νόμου. I do not think Clement's phrase can outweigh this. See App. p. 442.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xx. 5-7. For a comparison of the treatment of these verses here given with that of De Agr. 148 ff. see App. p. 441.

---

- 29 ἄδειαν εὐρισκόμενος,<sup>1</sup> ἔνεκα δυοῖν· ἐνὸς μὲν ἵνα, ἐπειδὴ τὰ κατὰ πολέμους ἄδηλα, μὴ τὰ τῶν πονησάντων ἀταλαιπώρως ἄλλοι λαμβάνωσι· χαλεπὸν γὰρ ἔδοξεν εἶναι, τῶν ἰδίων τινὰ μὴ ἀπόνασθαι δυνηθῆναι, ἀλλ' οἰκοδομεῖν μὲν ἕτερον, ἐνοικεῖν δὲ ἄλλον, καὶ φυτεύειν μὲν τινα, τὸν δὲ μὴ φυτεύσαντα καρποῦσθαι, καὶ μνάσθαι μὲν ἄλλον, γαμῆν δὲ τὸν μὴ μνώμενον, ὡς οὐ δεῖν<sup>2</sup> ἀτελεῖς τὰς ἐλπίδας κατασκευάζειν τοῖς χρηστὰ τὰ<sup>3</sup> κατὰ τὸν βίον προσ-
- 30 δοκήσασιν· ἐτέρου δὲ ἵνα μὴ σώματι στρατευόμενοι ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὑστερίζωσιν· ἀνάγκη γὰρ αὐτῶν τὴν διάνοιαν ἐκεῖ τετάσθαι πόθῳ τῆς ἀπολαύσεως ὧν ἀφειλκύνθησαν· ὡς γὰρ οἱ πεινῶντες ἢ διψῶντες, ὅταν σιτίον ἢ ποτόν ποῦ παραφανῆ, διώκουσι καὶ ἐπιτρέχουσιν ἀμεταστρεπτὶ γλιχόμενοι μεταλαβεῖν, οὕτως οἱ περὶ νομίμου γυναικὸς ἢ οἰκίας ἢ χωρίου κτήσεως πονηθέντες καὶ ὅσον οὕτω τῇ ἐλπίδι νομίζοντες εἰς τὸν ἐκάστου τῆς χρήσεως ἀφίχθαι καιρὸν, ὅταν ἀφαιρεθῶσι τὴν ἀπολαυσιν, σφαδάζουσιν, ὡς παρόντας μὴ παρεῖναι τῷ κρείττονι μέρει, ψυχῇ,<sup>4</sup> δι' οὗ συμβαίνει κατορθοῦν
- 31 ἢ τούναντίον. VI. τούτους οὖν καὶ τοὺς ὁμοίους οὐκ οἶεται δεῖν εἰς τὸν στρατιωτικὸν ἄγειν κατάλογον, ἀλλ' οἷς οὐδὲν προενεληλυθὸς ὑποικουρεῖ<sup>5</sup> πάθος, ὅπως ἐλευθέροις καὶ ἀφέτοις ὀρμαῖς ἀπρο-

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀνευρισκόμενος.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps, as Mangey, οὐ δέον. See App. p. 442.

<sup>3</sup> All mss. except A have τῶν κατὰ. Perhaps, since ἔσεσθαι is to be expected with χρηστὰ as predicate, read χρῆσιν τῶν.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. § 3. Whereas there the mss. have τῆς ψυχῆς, here they vary between ψυχῆς and ψυχῇ (= -ῆ). See note a.

<sup>5</sup> mss. οἰκουρεῖ.

<sup>a</sup> Or if ψυχῆς is read (see note 4), "the better part of the two reasons. One is that, since the issues of war 29 are uncertain, others should not take without toil or trouble the property of those who have laboured to get it. For it seems cruel that a man should not be able to enjoy his own, and that one should build a house and another live in it, or should plant a vineyard and another who did not plant it should reap the fruit, or should pledge himself to a maiden and another not so pledged should marry her, and, therefore, it was not right to render futile the hopes of those who expected to find themselves living under happy 30 conditions.

ON THE VIRTUES, 29-31

Another object was that when 30 their bodies were fighting their souls should not play the laggard. In such circumstances, their minds must needs be feeling the strain of yearning for the joys from which they have been torn. Just as hungry or thirsty people, when some food or drink presents itself, race in pursuit of it without a backward glance in their eagerness to partake of it, so those who have laboured to gain a lawful wife or a house or a farm, and hopefully think that a time for using it is on the point of arriving, are distressed when they are robbed of its enjoyment, and thus though present in the body, are absent in the better part, the soul,<sup>a</sup> which is the determining factor of success or failure. VI. So 31 then he did not think that the military enlistment should include these or others like them, but rather persons into whom no passion has found an entry and there made its home, in order that with free and unfettered alacrity they might gird themselves to soul." There is certainly a presumption in favour of consistency between § 3 and here, but perhaps it is of some weight that there the quality indicated is λογισμός; here it is rather θυμός, which is or may be part of the lower soul.

φασίστως τοῖς δεινοῖς ἐπαποδύονται. καθάπερ γὰρ παντευχίας οὐδέν ὄφελος ἀσθενεῖ σώματι ἢ λελωβημένῳ, ἣν ἀδυνατοῦν ἀπορρίψει, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ἐρρωμένον σῶμα φθереῖ τι κηρανούσης 32 πάθος ψυχῆς<sup>1</sup> μὴ συνᾶδον τοῖς παροῦσιν. εἰς ἅπερ ἀπιδῶν οὐ μόνον λοχαγούς καὶ στρατηγούς καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους τῆς στρατιᾶς ἡγεμόνας ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν στρατιωτῶν ἕκαστον ἐπικρίνει, δοκιμάζων πῶς ἔχει πρὸς τε σώματος εὐεξίαν καὶ πρὸς εὐστάθειαν λογισμοῦ, σῶμα μὲν ἐξετάζων, εἰ ὀλόκληρον, εἰ ὑγιαῖνον ὅλον δι' ὅλων, εἰ τοῖς μέρεσι καὶ μέλεσι πᾶσιν εὖ ἡρμοσμένον πρὸς τὰς ἐπιβαλλούσας ἐκάστῳ σχέσεις τε καὶ κινήσεις, ψυχὴν δέ, εἰ θαρραλεότητος καὶ εὐτολμίας ἀνάπλεως, εἰ ἀκατά-[381] πληκτος καὶ μεστή φρονήσεως | εὐγενοῦς, εἰ φιλό-τιμος καὶ ζωῆς ἀδόξου τὸν σὺν εὐκλείᾳ θάνατον 33 προκρίνουσα. τούτων γὰρ ἕκαστον ἰδίᾳ καθ' αὐτό, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, δύναμις ἐστίν· ἀθρόα δ' εἰ συνέλθοιεν, ῥώμην ἄμαχόν τινα καὶ ἀνανταγώνι-στον ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος ἐπιδείξονται, κρατοῦντες ἀναιμωτὶ τῶν πολεμίων.

<sup>1</sup> The text here is very uncertain. The majority of mss. have φέρει τι κηρανούση πάθος ψυχῆ (= -ῆ). Some however have εἰ φέρει, or εἰ φέροι, or φέρειν. While I have printed and translated Cohn's correction of φθереῖ for φέρει, and κηρανούσης ψυχῆς for the dative of the mss., I do not think it satisfactory. φθереῖ is not an appropriate word for the effect of the diseased soul upon the body, nor a proper analogy to the preceding clause. I think the key to the sentence may be found in understanding οὐκ ὄφελος from the preceding clause. οὐκ ὄφελος can be used indifferently with the nominative and genitive, and if the change of cases from παντευχίας to σῶμα is an objection, παντευχία might be read for παντευχίας. As-

ON THE VIRTUES, 31-33

face danger without evasion. For just as a body which suffers from sickness or injuries has no use for a full suit of armour and will discard it as beyond its feeble strength, so a robust body will be ruined if the soul is afflicted with a passion which does not accord with the task before it. With these 32 considerations before him he selects not only his captains and generals, and other officers, but also each soldier, by testing him to see how far his body is in good condition, and his thinking sound. Of the body he inquires if it is without defect, healthy through and through, with all its parts and limbs well adjusted for the postures and movements required of each : of the soul, whether it is charged with valour and enterprise, whether it is proof against panic and full of generous sagacity, whether it cherishes honour and prefers death with renown to inglorious life ? Each of these qualities separately in itself is in very 33 truth a power ; if they all meet and combine, those who possess them will display a strength sufficient and more than sufficient to defy all combatants and opponents, and will win a bloodless victory over their enemies.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> These two sections have no reference to the text of Deuteronomy, which does not suggest any such selection, but are based on the selection mentioned below in § 42. For the principles of that selection Philo draws on his imagination.

---

suming this, I suggest εἰ φέρει τι κηραίνουσα πάθος ψυχῇ or περὶ τι κηραινοῦση πάθος ψυχῆς. This last does not so well account for the persistence of φέρει in the mss., but otherwise fits in admirably with Philo's use of κηραίνω. Cf. De Praem. 121 κηραίνοντα περὶ μηδὲν πάθος; Spec. Leg. i. 260 ἵνα περὶ μηδὲν πάθος κηραίνωσι, and other examples of κηραίνειν περὶ. In fact with the exception of changing φέρει to περὶ it follows the mss. exactly. Ὁν ἦν ἀδυνατοῦν ἀπορρίψει see App. p. 443.

- 34 VII. Τῶν δὲ λεχθέντων σαφειστάτην πίστιν αἰ ἱεραὶ βίβλοι περιέχουσιν. ἔθνος πολυανθρωπότατόν ἐστὶν Ἄραβες, οἷς ὄνομα παλαιὸν ἦν Μαδιθηναῖοι. οὗτοι πρὸς Ἑβραίους φιλαπεχθημόνως ἔχοντες, οὐδενὸς ἕνεκα ἑτέρου μᾶλλον ἢ ὅτι τὸ ἀνωτάτω καὶ πρεσβύτατον αἴτιον σέβουσι καὶ τιμῶσι τῷ ποιητῇ καὶ πατρὶ τῶν ὄλων προσκεκληρωμένοι, καὶ πάσας μὲν μηχανὰς τεχνάζοντες, πάσας δὲ πείρας καθιέντες, ἵνα ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ ἐνὸς καὶ ὄντως ὄντος τιμῆς αὐτοὺς ἀποστήσωσι καὶ μεθαρμόσωνται πρὸς ἀσέ-βειαν ἐξ ὀσιότητος—οὕτως γὰρ περιέσεσθαι ῥαδίως ὑπελάμβανον—, ἐπειδὴ μυρία καὶ λέγοντες καὶ δρῶντες ἀπειρήκεσαν, ὥσπερ οἱ θανατῶντες ἐφ' ὧν ἀπόγνωσι(ς)<sup>1</sup> σωτηρίας, καὶ τι τοιοῦτον ἐπινο-35 οῦσι στρατήγημα. γυναικῶν τὰς περικαλλεστάτας μεταπεμψάμενοί φασιν αὐταῖς· “ ὁράτε, ὡς ἀπερίληπτὸς ἐστὶν ἡ τῶν Ἑβραίων πληθὺς. τῆς δὲ πληθύος ἐστὶν ἀργαλεώτερον ἐπιτείχισμα ἢ ὁμόνοια καὶ συμφωνία τούτων· αἴτιον δὲ τῆς ὁμονοίας τὸ ἀνωτάτω καὶ μέγιστον ἢ περὶ τοῦ ἐνὸς θεοῦ δόξα, ἀφ' ἧς οἷα πηγῆς ἐνωτικῆ καὶ ἀδιαλύτῃ φιλία 36 κέχρηται πρὸς ἀλλήλους. ἡδονῇ δ' ἀλωτὸν ἀνθρωπος, καὶ μάλιστα συνουσία τῇ πρὸς γυναῖκα.

<sup>1</sup> My correction. Cohn prints ἐφ' ὧν ἀπογνώσι, which is quite impossible. Some mss. have ἐπειδὴν for ἐφ' ὧν, which will give a grammatical construction. But Philo does not seem to use ἀπογινώσκω with the genitive. I see no difficulty in the text as printed above: ἐφ' ὧν = ἐπὶ τούτων ἐφ' ὧν, i.e. in circumstances in which there is no hope of salvation.

<sup>a</sup> For the narrative which follows see Num. xxv. 1-18 and xxxi. 1-18 and compare the parallel account in Mos. i. 295-311. There the seduction by the women is equally prominent, but the details are given in the form of advice tendered

ON THE VIRTUES, 34-36

VII. A very clear proof of these statements is 34 included in the sacred books.<sup>a</sup> The Arabians, whose name in old times was Midianites, are a very populous nation. They were disposed to be hostile to the Hebrews, the main reason being the reverence and honour which that people, dedicated to the Maker and Father of all, pays to the supreme and primal Cause. Accordingly they contrived all possible devices and made all possible attempts<sup>b</sup> to turn them away from honouring the One, the truly Existent, and to change their religion to impiety. For if they succeeded in this, they thought they would make an easy conquest. But when after countless efforts of word and deed they were utterly exhausted, like men in peril of death,<sup>c</sup> where there is no hope of salvation, they as a last resource devised a scheme of the following kind. They sent for the most 35 exquisitely beautiful among their women and said to them, "You see how unlimited is the number of the Hebrews, but their number is not so dangerous and menacing a weapon as their unanimity and mutual attachment. And the highest and greatest source of this unanimity is their creed of a single God, through which, as from a fountain, they feel a love for each other, uniting them in an indissoluble bond. Now man is easily led captive by pleasure, and par- 36 ticularly by the pleasure of intercourse with women.

by Balaam to Balak, against whom the war is waged, the Midianites not being mentioned. Here Balaam is not mentioned, nor is Phinehas. For the relation of Philo's account to the biblical see App. p. 443.

<sup>b</sup> Or "laid down snares." See App. p. 444.

<sup>c</sup> For this use of θανατάω, as against the accepted meaning of "desire to die," see note on Spec. Leg. iii. 102 (vol. vii. p. 636).

PHILO

- διαπρεπέσταται δ' ἐστέ· καὶ φύσει μὲν ἀγωγὸν τὸ 37 κάλλος, ἢ δὲ νεότης εἰς ἀκρασίαν εὐόλισθον. ἑται-ρήσεως ἢ μοιχείας ὀνόματα μὴ δείσητε ὡς αἰσχύνην ἐποίσοντα, τὰς ἐκ τοῦ πράγματος ὠφελείας ἀντι-τιθεῖσαι, δι' ἃς τὰς ἐφ' ἡμέραν ἀδοξίας μεθαρμό-σεσθε εἰς ἀγήρω καὶ ἀτελεύτητον εὐκλειαν, τὰ μὲν σώματα ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν προέμεναι, σόφισμα κατ' ἐχθρῶν καὶ στρατήγημα, παρθένους δὲ τὰς ψυχὰς διαφυλάττουσαι, αἷς καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸ μέλλον ἀγνεῖαν 38 ἐπισφραγιεῖσθε. καὶ καινότατον ὁ πόλεμος οὗτος ἕξει κλέος διὰ γυναικῶν ἀλλ' οὐ δι' ἀνδρῶν κατορθωθείς· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἡμέτερον, ὁμολογοῦμεν, γένος οὐ γενήσεται ἦττα, διὰ τὸ πᾶσι τοῖς εἰς μάχην τοὺς ἀντιπάλους ἐπικυδεστέρους εἶναι, τὸ δ' ὑμέτερον παντελῶς τὴν νίκην πέρα δ' οἴσει<sup>1</sup> καί, τὸ μέγιστον ἀγαθόν, τὰς δίχα κινδύνων ἀριστείας· ἀναιμωτὶ γάρ, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἀκονιτί, κατὰ τὴν πρώτην φαντασίαν αὐτὸ μόνον ὀφθεῖσαι περιέσεσθε." 39 Ταῦτ' ἀκούσασαι, καθαροῦ βίου μηδ' ὄναρ ἡσθη-μέναι, παιδείας ὀρθῆς ἄγευστοι, συναινοῦσιν, ἅτε [382] πεπλασμένον ἦθος σωφροσύνης | τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον καθυποκρινάμεναι, καὶ πολυτελέσιν ἐσθῆσι καὶ ὄρμοις καὶ οἷς ἄλλοις εἴωθε διακοσμεῖσθαι γυνή πᾶσιν ἀσκηθεῖσαι καὶ τὸ ἐκ φύσεως κάλλος εὐμορφότερον ταῖς ἐπιμελείαις ἀπεργασάμεναι—τὸ

<sup>1</sup> My correction for mss. περιοῦσαι or περαιώσει. Cohn, who prints τὴν νίκην οἴσει, admits (Hermes, 1908, p. 212) that he prints it merely to have an intelligible text, and that neither it nor the suggestions of περιποιήσει or περιοίσει are satisfactory. I think that, as the point indicated is something over and

ON THE VIRTUES, 36-39

You are exceedingly comely ; beauty is naturally seductive, and youth easily lapses into incontinence. Do not fear the names of harlotry or adultery as 37 likely to bring disgrace, but set against them the benefits arising from your action—benefits which will enable you to convert the transient disrepute into a renown which knows no old age or death. For though in outward appearance you prostitute your bodies, to outwit and out-general our enemies, you will keep your souls virgin, and crown them with a chastity which will last into the future. And this 38 war will have a glory without precedent in that it was brought to a successful conclusion by women and not by men, for it is our sex, we confess, which will suffer defeat, because our opponents are more distinguished in all warlike qualities, while yours will be completely victorious, and in addition to victory will have also the high excellence that your exploits have entailed no dangers. For you have merely to be seen, and at that first appearance, without bloodshed or rather without an effort, the day will be yours."

When they heard these words, the women, who had 39 never dreamt of such a thing as purity of life, nor had a taste of sound education, gave their consent. For their hitherto assumed modesty of character was mere hypocrisy. They decked themselves with costly garments and necklaces, and with everything else with which women are accustomed to bedizen themselves and took great pains to make their natural beauty still more comely. For the prize they aimed above victory, πέρα is very probable, but other arrangements are possible, as τὴν νίκην <νίκης δὲ> πέρα οἶσαι. πέρα (preposition) often follows its case.

---

PHILO

γὰρ ἀγώνισμα οὐ μικρὸν ἦν, θήρα νέων ἀθηρά-40 των—εἰς τοῦμφανές προέρχονται. καὶ πλησίον γενόμεναι βλέμμασιν ἑταιρικοῖς καὶ στωμυλία λόγων καὶ σχέσεσι καὶ κινήσεσιν ἀκολάστοις δελεάζουσι τῆς νεότητος τὴν ὀλιγόφρονα μοῖραν, ἀνερμάτιστα καὶ ἀνίδρυτα ἦθη· καὶ διὰ τῆς τῶν σωμάτων αἰσχύνης ἀγκιστρευσάμεναι τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν συνελθόντων, ἐπὶ θυσίας ἀθύτους καὶ σπονδὰς ἀσυμβάτους καλέσασαι τῶν χειροκμήτων, ἀλλο-τριοῦσι τῆς τοῦ ἐνὸς καὶ ὄντως ὄντος θεραπείας 41 θεοῦ. τοῦτο διαπραξάμεναι τοῖς ἀνδράσιν εὐαγ-γελίζονται· καὶ ἔμελλον ἂν καὶ ἄλλους ἐπισπᾶσθαι τῶν μὴ σφόδρα βεβαίων, εἰ μὴ τοῦ πάθους λαβῶν οἰκτονὸν ὁ εὐεργέτης καὶ ἰλεως θεὸς ἀνπερθέτῳ κολάσει τῶν ἀπονοηθέντων—ἦσαν δὲ τέσ-σαρρες πρὸς ταῖς εἴκοσι χιλιάδες—ὥσπερ ὑπὸ χειμάρρου κατακλυσθῆναι κινδυνεύσαντας ἀνεχαίτισε 42 φόβῳ νοουητήσας. ὁ δὲ τοῦ ἔθνους ἡγεμῶν ἐπαντλῶν τοῖς ὡσὶ τὰ ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας δόγματα καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν ὑπηκόων τούτοις ἐπάγων<sup>1</sup> ἐκ φυλῆς ἐκάστης χιλίους ἀνδρας ἀριστίνδην ἐπιλέξας καταλέγει, δίκας ἀναπράξων τῆς ἐνέδρας, ἦν ἐμηχανή-

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for mss. ἐπάδων = ἐπάδων. Wendland ἐπαίρων.
 As all mss. except S omit ἐπαντλῶν, several have ταῖς ψυχαῖς, and some of these omit τούτοις, the simple form of text τοῖς ὡσὶ τὰ ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας δόγματα καὶ ταῖς ψυχαῖς τῶν ὑπηκόων ἐπάδων may be worth considering. Cf. Plato, Phaedo 114 D χρῆ τὰ τοιαῦτα ἐπάδειν ἑαυτῷ.

<sup>a</sup> Though here the libations are of a ritual kind, the word is so bound up with the idea of a truce that the antithesis is at was of no small magnitude, the capture of the youths who had hitherto been uncaptured. They 40 then openly presented themselves, and when they were near at hand, with meretricious glances and wheedling talk and lewd attitudes and movements, they set their bait before the weaker-minded part of the younger men, whose character had no ballast or stability. And when by the shameful use of their bodies they had got the souls of their lovers on their hook, they summoned them to join in offering to the works of men's hands, sacrifices which were no sacrifices, and libations which brought no peace.<sup>a</sup> Thus they estranged them from the service of the One, the truly existing God, and having effected this, reported the good news to the men. And they would have 41 enticed others also of the less stable kind had not God the beneficent and merciful, taking pity for their sad condition, lost no time in punishing the mad folly of the offenders, 24,000<sup>b</sup> in number, and restrained those who were like to be overwhelmed as by a torrent, but were brought by Him to their senses through fear. The leader of the nation pouring into the ears 42 of his subjects the truths that uphold piety, and with them persuading their souls,<sup>c</sup> selected and enlisted a thousand of the best from each tribe, in order to exact retribution for the snare which the enemy had contrived with the women for their instru-a natural one. Cf. ἐν σπονδαῖς ἄσπονδα ἔπαθον, Spec. Leg. iii. 96 and note.

<sup>b</sup> Num. xxv. 9. Philo, who in Mos. i. 303 f. took the "plague" of the Hebrew (LXX πλῆγη) to be a slaughter, does not commit himself here to either view. See note on Mos. i. 304, and in App. (vol. vi. pp. 603 f.).

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps "persuading them to follow these" (if ἐπάγων is read).

PHILO

σαντο διὰ τῶν γυναικῶν, ἐλπίσαντες μὲν ἅπασαν τὴν πληθὺν ἄνωθεν ἐξ ἄκρας ὀσιότητος καταβαλόντες διαφθεῖραι, μόνους δὲ τοὺς λεχθέντας 43 δυνηθέντες. VIII. οἱ δὲ πρὸς πολλὰς μυριάδας ὀλίγος ἀριθμὸς ἀντιταχθέντες, ἐμπειρίαις ἅμα καὶ εὐτολμίαις χρώμενοι, καθάπερ αὐτὸς τις ἕκαστος ὄμιλος ὢν, καταφρονητικῶς πυκναῖς ἐπιτρέχοντες ταῖς φάλαγγι καὶ τοὺς ἐν ποσὶν ἀναιροῦντες ἡρήμονι τὰ βύζην συνεστηκότα στίφη καὶ ὅσα ἐφ-ἤδρευε πρὸς ἀναπλήρωσιν τῶν κενουμένων τάξεων, ὡς αὐτοβοεῖ πολλὰς μυριάδας καταστορέσαι καὶ μηδένα τῆς ἀντιταχθείσης νεότητος ἀπολιπέσθαι· κτείνουσι δὲ καὶ γυναῖκας τὰς συνεπιγραψαμένας ἀνδρῶν γνώμαις ἀνοσίοις, ζωγρήσαντες παρθένους, 44 ἄκακον ἡλικίαν οἰκτισάμενοι. καὶ τοσοῦτον πόλεμον κατορθώσαντες οὐδένα τῶν ἰδίων ἀπέβαλον, ἀλλ' ὅποσοι καὶ ὅποιοι προῆλθον εἰς τὴν μάχην ἐπανήεσαν ἄτρωτοι καὶ ὀλόκληροι, μᾶλλον δέ, εἰ χρὴ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, μετὰ διπλασίου ῥώμης· ἢ γὰρ ἐκ τοῦ νικῆσαι χαρὰ τῆς προτέρας οὐκ ἐλάττονα τὴν
 45 ἰσχὺν ἀπειργάσατο. αἴτιον δὲ οὐδὲν ἦν τούτων
 [383] ἕτερον ἢ | τὸ σπουδάσαι φιλοκινδύνως τὸν ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας ἀγῶνα ἄρασθαι, ἐν ᾧ<sup>1</sup> καὶ προαγωνίζεται θεός, ἀήττητος ἐπικουρία, βουλὰς μὲν ἀγαθὰς ταῖς διανοαῖς ὑφηγούμενος, ἀλκὴν δὲ τοῖς σώμασι κρα-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐν ἧ.

---

<sup>a</sup> In Mos. i. 311 the boys also are spared, contrary to Num. xxxi. 17, "slay every male" (though the LXX does not add as the Hebrew "among the little ones"). Philo does not here contradict his statement in the earlier book, nor

190

ON THE VIRTUES, 42-45

ment, and by which they hoped to dash the whole multitude down to destruction from the high pinnacle of holiness, though they were only able to succeed with those mentioned above. VIII. The small army 43 arrayed against many myriads, with skill and daring combined, each man as it were a company in himself, scorning all thoughts of danger, flew at their close-packed ranks, slaughtered all those who stood in their way and made a clean sweep of the solid masses of troops and of all the reserves who came to fill the gaps in the lines, so that by the mere onset they laid low many myriads and left none of the enemy's fighting force alive. They slew also the women, who had been confederates in the unholy designs of the men, but gave quarter to the maidens in pity for their innocent youthfulness.<sup>a</sup> And great as was the war 44 thus successfully conducted, they lost none of their own people, but returned in the same numbers and condition as they had gone forth to fight, unwounded and unscathed,<sup>b</sup> or rather it may truly be said with redoubled vigour. For the strength produced by the joy of victory was no less than what they had had at the first. And the sole source of all this 45 was the zeal which met danger bravely and led them to champion the cause of piety in a fight where God was the foremost combatant, an invincible auxiliary, inspiring their minds with wise counsels and enduing indeed even suggest that the men outside the fighting force were put to death.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Mos. i. 309. The statement is based on Num. xxxi. 49 "and there lacketh not one of us," which does not imply that none of them were wounded. He says the same in De Mut. 109, where he quotes the LXX οὐ διαπεφώνηκεν ἀπ' αὐτῶν οὐδὲ εἰς, and he may be right in giving this meaning to διαφωνεῖν. See App. p. 444.

PHILO

46 ταιοτάτην ἐντιθείς. πίστις δὲ τῆς ἐκ θεοῦ συμμαχίας τό τε ὑπ' ὀλίγων πολλὰς μυριάδας ἀλῶναι καὶ τὸ μηδένα μὲν τῶν ἐχθρῶν διαφυγεῖν, μηδένα δὲ τῶν φίλων ἀναιρεθῆναι μήτε ἀριθμὸν μήτε
 47 σώματος δύναμιν ἐλαττωθέντων.<sup>1</sup> ὅθεν ἐν τοῖς προτρεπτικοῖς φησιν· ἐὰν δικαιοσύνην καὶ ὁσιότητα καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀρετὰς ἐπιτηδεύης, βίον ἀπόλεμον βιώσῃ καὶ εἰς ἅπαν εἰρηνικόν, ἢ ἐνστάτος πολέμου ῥαδίως τῶν ἐχθρῶν περικρατήσεις, θεοῦ στραταρχοῦντος ἀοράτως, ᾧ δι' ἐπιμελείας ἐστὶ τοὺς ἀγα-
 48 θοὺς σώζειν ἀνὰ κράτος. μήτ' οὖν ἐὰν πολλαῖς μυριάσιν ἐπιτρέχωσιν ὁ πεζὸς ὁμοῦ καὶ ἰππότης στρατὸς εὐοπλοῦντες μήτε ἐὰν ἐρυμνὰ καὶ ἐπίμαχα προκαταλαβόμενοι χωρία τοποκρατῶσι μήτε ἐὰν ἀφθόνοις παρασκευαῖς χορηγῶνται, καταπλαγεῖς δείσης, κἂν ἀπάντων ἀπορῆς ὧν ἄγουσι περιουσίαν ἐκείνοι, συμμάχων, ὄπλων, τόπων εὐκαιρίας, παρα-49 σκευῶν· ἐκείνα γὰρ ὥσπερ ὀλκάδα πεπληρωμένην παντοίων ἀγαθῶν πολλακίς ἐπιπεσῶν ἄνεμος ἐξ-αίφνης ἀνέτρεψε καὶ κατέλυσε, τοῖς δ' εὐτελέσι καὶ λυπροῖς ὥσπερ ἀστάχυσιν ἤδη μεμυκόσιν ἐξ αὐχμοῦ καὶ ἀνομβρίας ἐπιψεκάζων καὶ ἐπινίφων ὁ θεὸς τὰς σωτηρίους δυνάμεις ἐμπαρέσχεν ἀνεγερθῆναί τε καὶ
 50 τελειογονῆσαι. ἐξ οὗ δῆλον, ὅτι δεῖ τοῦ δικαίου καὶ ὀσίου περιέχεσθαι<sup>2</sup>. οἷς μὲν γὰρ τὸ θεῖον ἔνσπονδον, <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐλαττωθέντες, -θέντος, -θείσαν, -θῆναι. The last is the form accepted by Mangey, but this would perhaps require μηδὲ for μήτε, and Cohn's correction best satisfies grammar.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. αἰί . . . περιέχεται.

<sup>a</sup> Presumably intended as a definite name for Deuteronomy, though see De Fug. 170. For the variant παραυέσεις see their bodies with irresistible doughtiness. The proof 46 that God was their ally is that so many myriads were routed at the hands of a few and that none of the enemy escaped, while none of their friends were slain and neither their number nor their bodily force was diminished. Therefore, he says in his Exhortations <sup>a</sup> 47 “ If thou pursuest justice and holiness and the other virtues, thou shalt live a life free from war and in unbroken peace, or if war arises, thou shalt easily overcome the foe under the invisible generalship of God, who makes it His care mightily to save the good. So then if a well-armed host of foot and horse 48 of many myriads pour in upon thee, or if they seize in advance the strong positions and such as are liable to be attacked,<sup>b</sup> and so become masters of the situation or are amply supplied with abundance of equipments, be not panic-stricken and fearful, though thou lackest all of which they have abundance, allies, arms, suitable positions, equipments.” All those, like a mer- 49 chantman laden with all manner of valuables, are often suddenly upset and wrecked by a squall of wind ; but where they are mean and poor, God sends His saving powers like rain or snow showers on ears of corn shrivelled through drought and want of moisture, and gives them power to awake to fresh life and bring their fruit to its fullness. Thence it is clear that 50 we must cling to what is just and holy. For we are

ON THE VIRTUES, 46-50

Spec. Leg. iv. 131. The next two sections are a loose paraphrase of Deut. xxviii. 1, 2, and 7, though the promise of peace belongs rather to Lev. xxvi. 5. Cf. De Praem. 93.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. and therefore naturally seized by the invader where possible—so, I think, rather than the ordinary meaning of the word “easily assailed,” which Cohn gives. Mangey’s translation “nec facile oppugnanda” cannot of course be got out of the word.

PHILO

ἄκρως εὐδαίμονες, οἷς δὲ ἐχθρόν, ἐσχάτως κακο-δαίμονες. τοσαῦτα καὶ περὶ ἀνδρείας εἰς τὸ παρὸν ἀποχρώντως λελέχθω.<sup>1</sup>

Περὶ φιλανθρωπίας

- 51 IX. Τὴν δ' εὐσεβείας συγγενεστάτην καὶ ἀδελφὴν καὶ δίδυμον ὄντως ἐξῆς ἐπισκεπτέον φιλανθρωπίαν, ἧς ἐρασθεὶς ὡς οὐκ οἶδ' εἴ τις ἕτερος ὁ προφήτης τῶν νόμων—ὁδὸν γὰρ οἶα λεωφόρον ἄγουσαν ἐφ' ὁσιότητα ταύτην ἠπίστατο—τοὺς ὑπ' αὐτὸν ἅπαντας ἤλειφε καὶ συνεκρότει πρὸς κοινωμίαν, παράδειγμα καλὸν ὥσπερ γραφὴν ἀρχέτυπον στη-52 λιτεύσας τὸν ἴδιον βίον. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἄχρι γήρως εἰς ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ κηδεμονίαν ἐνὸς ἐκάστου καὶ πάντων ἀνθρώπων πεπραγμένα [384] αὐτῷ δεδήλωται πρότερον ἐν δυσι | συντάξεσιν, ἃς ἀνέγραψα περὶ τοῦ βίου Μωυσέως. ἐνὸς δὲ ἢ δυοῖν ἄν ἐπὶ τελευτῇ κατώρθωσεν ἄξιόν ἐστιν ἐπιμνησθῆναι· δείγματα γὰρ ἐστὶ τῆς συνεχοῦς καὶ ἀδιαστάτου καλοκαγαθίας, ἣν ἀσύγχυτον ἐνεσφραγίσατο 53 τῇ ψυχῇ χαρακτῆρι θείῳ τυπωθείσῃ. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἡ προθεσμία τῆς θνητῆς ζωῆς ἔμελλεν αὐτῷ περα-τοῦσθαι<sup>2</sup> καὶ λογίοις ἀριδῆλοις ἔγνω τὴν ἐνθένδε μετανάστασιν, οὐδένα τῶν ἄλλων ἢ βασιλέων ἢ ἰδιωτῶν ἐμμύησατο, οἷς μία σπουδὴ τε καὶ εὐχὴ

<sup>1</sup> Cohn at this point prints asterisks to indicate that the treatise Περὶ εὐσεβείας originally stood here. See General Introduction p. x.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. περαιούσθαι.

<sup>a</sup> This seems to be the best word to describe the virtue in general, though there is of course a multitude of cases where supremely happy if the Godhead is our friend, utterly miserable if He is our enemy.

ON THE VIRTUES, 50-53

We have now said enough on the subject of courage and that too must be left for the present.

On Humanity <sup>a</sup>

IX. The next subject to be examined is humanity, <sup>51</sup> the virtue closest akin to piety, its sister and its twin.<sup>b</sup> The prophetic legislator who perhaps loved her more than anyone else has done, since he knew that she was a high road leading to holiness, used to incite and train all his subjects to fellowship, setting before them the monument of his own life like an original design to be their beautiful model. Now the actions which <sup>52</sup> he performed from his earliest years to old age for the care and protection of each single man and of them all have been set forth already in two treatises in which I wrote about the life of Moses.<sup>c</sup> But there are one or two achievements at the end of his life, which deserve to be mentioned as proofs of the constant and unbroken nobleness of life which he impressed as a final sealing, clear and distinct, on a soul which had taken shape under the graving of God. When the appointed limit of his mortal life was about <sup>53</sup> to be reached and he knew by unmistakable warnings that he must depart hence, he did not imitate any of the other kings and commoners, whose one eager the action described would be said to show benevolence or kindness or charity rather than what we should call humanity.

<sup>b</sup> For the kinship of εὐσέβεια and φιλανθρωπία cf. De Abr. 208 and § 95 below.

<sup>c</sup> On Philo's reason for inserting these sections here see General Introduction p. xiv.

PHILO

κληρονόμους παῖδας καταλιπεῖν, ἀλλὰ καίτοι πατήρ γεγονῶς δυοῖν υἱοῖν οὐδετέρῳ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπέλιπεν ἡττηθεὶς εὐνοίας συγγενικῆς<sup>1</sup> καὶ πάθους φιλοικείου· καίτοι, εἰ καὶ τὰ τῶν τέκνων δι' ὑποψιῶν ἦν, ἀλλ' ἀδελφιδῶν γοῦν οὐκ ἠπόρει καλῶν κάγαθῶν, οἱ 54 γέρας ἀρετῆς ἔσχον τὴν ἀνωτάτω ἱερωσύνην. ἀλλ' ἴσως ἢ μετέλκειν αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ τῆς θείας λειτουργίας οὐκ ἔδοκίμασεν ἢ καὶ ὅπερ εἰκὸς ἐνενόησεν, ὅτι ἀμήχανον τοὺς αὐτοὺς δύνασθαι καλῶς ἀμφοῖν ἐπι-τροπεύειν, ἱερωσύνης τε καὶ βασιλείας, ὧν ἡ μὲν ἐπαγγέλλεται θεοῦ θεραπείαν, ἡ δ' ἀνθρώπων ἐπι-μέλειαν. ἴσως δὲ καὶ κριτὴν αὐτὸν οὐκ ἠξίωσε γενέσθαι πράγματος μεγάλου· μέγιστον δ' ἐστὶ τὸν εὖ πεφυκότα πρὸς ἀρχὴν δοκιμάσαι καὶ σχεδὸν θείας δυνάμεως, ἣ μόνη καθορᾶν ἡθὸς ἀνθρώπου 55 ῥάδιον. X. πίστις δὲ σαφεστάτη τοῦ δη-λουμένου γένοιτ' ἂν ἦδε. φίλος ἦν αὐτῷ καὶ γνώριμος σχεδὸν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας γενόμενος, Ἰησοῦς ὄνομα, οὗ τὴν φιλίαν προὔξενησεν οὐδὲν τῶν παρὰ τοῖς ἄλλοις εἰωθότων, ἀλλ' ἔρως ὁ οὐράνιος καὶ ἀκήρατος καὶ θεῖος ὄντως, ἐξ οὗ πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν φύεσθαι συμβέβηκεν· οὗτος ὁμωρόφιος καὶ ὁμοδίαιτος ἦν αὐτῷ, πλὴν ὅποτε ἐπιθειάσαντι καὶ χρησμοδουμένῳ προσταχθεῖν μόνωσις· ὑπηρέτει μέντοι καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ὑπηρεσίας αἰεὶ διαφερόντως τῷ πλήθει, μόνον οὐχ ὑπαρχος ὧν καὶ τὰ τῆς 56 ἡγεμονίας συνδιοικῶν. ἀλλὰ καίτοι βάσανον ἀκριβῆ λαβῶν ἐκ μακρῶν χρόνων τῆς ἔν τε λόγοις καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εὐνοίας συγγενείας OR εὐνοία (= -α) συγγενικῆ (= -ῆ).

desire and prayer is to leave behind them sons as heirs ; but although he was the father of two, he did not bequeath the leadership to either. Nor did he let himself be governed by family affection and favouritism to his own connexions, though even if the claims of his sons were under suspicion he had nephews at any rate of great excellence who held the highest priesthood as a reward for their virtue. But perhaps he did not think fit to withdraw them from the service of God, or reasonably enough considered that it was impossible for the same persons to do justice to both offices, the priesthood and sovereignty, one of which professes the service of God, the other the guardianship of men. Perhaps, too, he did not think it well to constitute himself the judge of a great matter, and no matter is so great as the task of testing and selecting the person best fitted by nature for command, a task which almost demands the divine power that alone can see with ease into the character of a man.

X. The clearest proof I can give of this statement is as follows. He had a friend whom he had known well almost from his earliest years, Joshua by name. This friendship had not been effected in any of the ways that other friends are usually made, but by the rapturous love, which is of heaven, all pure, and truly from God, from which in fact all virtue springs. This Joshua had shared his home and board, except when solitude was prescribed to him, that is when he was under inspiration and receiving the oracles. All other services he rendered him on a different footing from the multitude and was almost his lieutenant, associated with him in the duties of government. Yet although Moses had so long carefully tested his excellence in word and deed, and, ἔργοις καλοκάγαθίας αὐτοῦ καὶ—τὸ ἀναγκαιότατον —εὐνοίας τῆς πρὸς τὸ ἔθνος, οὐδὲ τοῦτον ᾤηθη χρῆναι καταλιπεῖν διάδοχον, δεδιὼς μὴ ποτε ψευδοδοξῆ νομίζων ἀγαθὸν τὸν οὐκ ὄντα πρὸς ἀλήθειαν, ἐπειδὴ τὰ κριτήρια τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης γνώμης 57 ἀμυδρὰ καὶ ἀβέβαιά πως εἶναι πέφυκεν. ὅθεν οὐ προπιστεύων ἑαυτῷ ποτνιαῖται καὶ καθικετεύει τὸν ἀοράτου ψυχῆς ἔφορον θεόν, ᾧ μόνῳ διάνοιαν [385] ἔξεστιν ἀκριβῶς θεωρεῖν, | ἀριστίνδην ἐλέσθαι τὸν ἐπιτηδειότατον εἰς ἡγεμονίαν, ὃς οἶα πατὴρ ἐπιμελήσεται τῶν ὑπηκόων· καὶ τὰς καθαρὰς καὶ ὡς ἂν εἴποι τις τροπικώτερον παρθένους χεῖρας ἀνα-58 τείνας εἰς οὐρανὸν φησιν· “ἐπισκεψάσθω κύριος ὁ θεὸς τῶν πνευμάτων καὶ πάσης σαρκὸς ἀνθρωπων ἐπὶ τῆς πληθύος, εἰς ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν ποιμένα ὃς<sup>1</sup> ἀνυπαίτως ἀφηγήσεται, ἵνα μὴ γένηται σαθρὸν τὸ ἔθνος οἶα ποίμνη σποράδην<sup>2</sup> ἀγελάρχην 59 οὐκ ἔχουσα.” καίτοι τίς οὐκ ἂν κατεπλάγη τῶν τότε τῆς εὐχῆς ἀκούσας, “τί φῆς” εἰπὼν “ὦ δέσποτα; οὐκ εἰσὶ μὲν σοι γνήσιοι παῖδες, οὐκ εἰσὶ δ’ ἀδελφίδοι; μάλιστα μὲν τοῖς υἱοῖς—κληρονόμοι γὰρ οὗτοι φύσει πρῶτοι—κατάλιπε τὴν ἀρχὴν, εἰ 60 δ’ ἀποδοκιμάζεις, τοῖς γοῦν ἀδελφίδοις. εἰ δὲ καὶ τούτους ἀνεπιτηδείους ὑπέιληφας τὸ ἔθνος προκρίνων τῶν συγγενεστάτων καὶ οἰκειοτάτων, ἀλλ’

PHILO

<sup>1</sup> mss. ποιμένος or ποιούμενος.

<sup>2</sup> So all mss. except S, which has ἐπ’ ὄρους. Cohn in his edition corrected to σποράς, considering that ποίμνη σποράδην was an impossible combination and that ἐπ’ ὄρους was a corruption of σποράς. In his translation he declares for σποράς ἐπ’ ὄρους. He observes that “on a mountain” is a reminiscence of 1 Kings xxii. 17 “I saw all Israel scattered

ON THE VIRTUES, 56-60

what was most vital of all, his loyal affection for the nation, he did not think he should leave the succession even to him. He feared that he might be deceived in thinking him a good man when he was not really so, since the standards of human judgement are such as to be vague and uncertain. And therefore, slow 57 to trust in himself, he besought and entreated God, who surveys the invisible soul and to whom alone it is given to discern the secrets of the mind, to choose on his merits the man most fitted to command, who would care for his subjects as a father. And stretching up to heaven his pure, and, as it might be put figuratively, his virgin hands he said, <sup>a</sup> "Let the God 58 of spirits and all flesh <sup>b</sup> look to find a man to set over the multitude to guard and protect it, a shepherd who shall lead it blamelessly that the nation may not decay <sup>c</sup> like a flock scattered about without one to guide it." Yet who of those who heard this prayer 59 would not have been astounded? "Master," he would say, "what do you mean, have you not lawful sons, have you not nephews? Bequeath the sovereignty to your sons as the first choice, for they naturally take precedence as heirs, or if you reject them, at least to your nephews, or if you count them also unsuitable 60 and prefer the people at large to your nearest and

<sup>a</sup> Num. xxvii. 16, 17.

<sup>b</sup> So LXX. E.V. "spirits of all flesh."

<sup>c</sup> Or "waste away."

---

on the mountains, as a flock which has no shepherd." No doubt this is so, but whether the reminiscence is more likely to be Philo's or of the scribe of S, I do not feel capable of deciding. In any case I see no reason for substituting σποράς for σποράδην, which as an adverb qualifying ἀγελάρχη οὐκ ἔχουσα seems to me quite unobjectionable.

PHILO

ἔστι γέ σοι φίλος ἄμεμπτος βάσανον ἀρετῆς τελείας δεδωκώς σοι τῷ πανσόφῳ· τί δὴ τοῦτον, εἰ μὴ γένους ἀλλὰ καλοκαγαθίας ἢ αἴρεσίς ἐστιν, οὐκ 61 ἀξιούς δοκιμάζειν;” ἀλλ’ ἀποφανεῖται ὅτι “ πάντων μὲν κριτὴν ποιεῖσθαι θέμις θεόν, διαφερόντως δὲ τῶν μεγάλων, ἐν οἷς τὸ εἶ γε ἢ χεῖρον μυρίους ὄσους εἰς εὐδαιμονίαν ἤγαγεν ἢ τούναντίον εἰς κακοδαιμονίαν. μείζον δ’ οὐδὲν ἀρχῆς, ἢ τὰ πόλεων καὶ χωρῶν ὅσα κατὰ πόλεμον ἢ κατ’ εἰρήνην ἐπιτέτραπται· ὡς γὰρ πρὸς εὐπλοίαν ἀγα-θοῦ καὶ τὴν γνώμην καὶ τὴν ἐπιστήμην δεῖ κυβερ-νήτου, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ πρὸς εὐνομίαν ὑπηκόων τῶν ἐκασταχοῦ χρεῖα πανσόφου τινὸς 62 ἡγεμόνος. σοφίαν δὲ πρεσβυτέραν οὐ μόνον τῆς ἐμῆς γενέσεως ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου παντός οὔσαν οὔτε θέμις οὔτε δυνατὸν ἄλλῳ τῷ κρίνειν ἀλλ’ ἢ τῷ θεῷ καὶ τοῖς ἀδόλως καὶ καθαρῶς καὶ 63 γνησίως αὐτῆς ἐρώσιν. ἐδιδάχθη δ’ ἀπ’ ἑμαυτοῦ μηδ’ ἄλλον τινὰ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων εἶναι δοκούντων εἰς ἀρχὴν δοκιμάσαι. τὴν γοῦν ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν τῶν κοινῶν οὔτ’ αὐτὸς ἐθελοντῆς εἰλόμην οὔθ’ ὑπ’ ἄλλου τινὸς ἀνθρώπων χειροτονηθεὶς ἔλαβον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ θεοῦ χρησμοῖς ἐναργέσι καὶ λογίοις ἀριδύλοις ἐμφανῶς θεσπίζοντας καὶ προσ-τάπτοντος ἄρχειν ἀνεδύομην ἱκετεῦων καὶ ποτινώμενος, εἰς τὸ μέγεθος ἀφορῶν τοῦ πράγματος, ἕως, ἐπειδὴ πολλάκις ἐκέλευε, δείσας ἐπειθάρχησα.
 64 πῶς οὖν οὐκ ἄτοπὸν ἐστὶ μὴ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἴχνεσιν

<sup>a</sup> An allusion to Wisdom’s speech in Prov. viii. 22-30
 “The Lord . . . established me from eternity (πρὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος), in the beginning before He made the earth,” etc., part of which Philo has quoted in De Ebr. 31.

ON THE VIRTUES, 60-64

closest, you have a blameless friend who has given proof of perfect virtue to your unerring wisdom. Why do you not think fit to approve of him, if the choice is not to rest on birth but on high excellence of life." He will say in reply, " It is very right that we should 61 take God for our Judge in all things and particularly in great matters, where a decision for good or ill brings happiness, or, contrariwise, misery to countless multitudes. No matter is greater than sovereignty, to which is committed the charge of all the affairs of cities and countries in war and peace. For just as successful navigation demands a pilot of good judgement and knowledge, so, too, a governor of all-round wisdom is needed to secure for his subjects in every place a happy and orderly life. Now wisdom's years 62 are from of old, ere not only I, but the whole universe was born,<sup>a</sup> and it is not lawful or possible that any other should judge her save God, and those who love her with a love that is guileless and pure and genuine. I have learnt from my own history not to choose any- 63 one else from among those who seem to be suitable and approve him for government. I did not of my own free-will choose to superintend and preside over public affairs, nor did I receive the office through appointment by some other of mankind, but when God by plain oracles and manifest declarations made clear to me His will and bade me take command, considering the greatness of the task I held back with prayers and supplications, until, when He many times repeated the command, I trembled but obeyed. With this example before me,<sup>b</sup> surely 64 reason requires that I should follow in the same <sup>b</sup> See γούν in previous section, suggesting that the following words illustrate the general sense of the paragraph.

PHILO

ἐπακολουθηῆσαι καὶ χρησάμενον ὅτ' ἔμελλον ἄρχειν δοκιμασθῆ θεῷ πάλιν ἐπ' αὐτῷ μόνῳ θέσθαι τὴν [386] χειροτονίαν τοῦ διαδόχου, μὴ | συνεφασπαμένης ἀνθρωπίνης γνώμης, ἥ τὸ εἰκὸς συγγενέστερόν ἐστι τοῦ ἀληθοῦς, ἄλλως τε καὶ τῆς προστασίας οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ τυχόντι ἔθνει γενησομένης, ἀλλὰ πολυανθρωπο-τάτῳ μὲν τῶν ἀπανταχοῦ πάντων, ἐπάγγελμα δὲ ἐπαγγελλομένῳ μέγιστον, ἰκεσίαν τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος, 65 ὅς ἐστι ποιητῆς τῶν ὄλων καὶ πατήρ; ὅπερ γὰρ ἐκ φιλοσοφίας τῆς δοκιμωτάτης περιγίνεται τοῖς ὁμιληταῖς αὐτῆς, τοῦτο διὰ νόμων καὶ ἔθων Ἰουδαίοις, ἐπιστήμη τοῦ ἀνωτάτου καὶ πρεσβυτάτου πάντων αἰτίου, τὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς γενητοῖς θεοῖς πλάνον ἀπωσαμένους· γενητὸς γὰρ οὐδεὶς ἀληθεία θεός, ἀλλὰ δόξῃ μόνον, τὸ ἀναγκαιότατον ἀφηρημένος, αἰδιότητα.”

66 XI. Τοῦτο μὲν δὴ πρῶτον ἐναργέστατον δεῖγμα τῆς πρὸς ἅπαν τὸ ὁμόφυλον αὐτοῦ φιλανθρωπίας καὶ πίστεως· ἕτερον δὲ τοῦ λεχθέντος οὐκ ἀποδέον. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἀριστίδην ὁ φοιτητῆς αὐτοῦ καὶ μι-μητῆς τῶν ἀξιεράστων ἡθῶν Ἰησοῦς ἄρχων ἐδοκι-μάσθη κριτηρίοις θείοις, οὐχ ὥσπερ ἂν ἕτερος ἐπὶ τῷ μὴ τοὺς υἱοὺς ἢ τοὺς ἀδελφιδοῦς αἰρεθῆναι 67 κατήφησεν, ἀλλὰ ὑποπλησθεὶς ἀλέκτου χαρᾶς, ὅτι μελλήσοι τὸ ἔθνος ἐπιτρόπῳ χρῆσθαι τὰ πάντα ἀρίστῳ—καλὸν γὰρ κἀγαθὸν ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἦδει τὸν εὐάρεστον θεῷ—λαβόμενος τῆς τούτου δεξιᾶς καὶ παραγαῶν αὐτὸν εἰς ἡθροισμένον τὸ πλῆθος, μηδὲν περὶ τῆς αὐτοῦ τελευτῆς εὐλαβηθεὶς, ἀλλὰ ταῖς ἀρχαίαις εὐφροσύναις νέας ἐτέρας προσειληφῶς οὐ

<sup>a</sup> Num. xxvii. 22, 23.

ON THE VIRTUES, 64-67

steps, and, after having had God for my approver when I was about to take command, should give the election of my successor to Him alone without the participation of human judgement, which is nearer akin to the seeming than to the true. It is a special reason for so doing that the person appointed will preside not over some ordinary nation, but over the most populous of all the nations upon earth, one which makes the greatest of all professions that it is a suppliant of Him who truly exists and is the Maker and Father of all. For what the disciples of the most excellent philosophy gain from its teaching, the Jews gain from their customs and laws, that is to know the highest, the most ancient Cause of all things and reject the delusion of created gods. For no created being is God in reality, but only in men's fancies, bereft as it is of the essential attribute of eternity."

XI. Here we have the first proof of the kindness and faithfulness, which he showed to all his compatriots, but there is another not inferior to it. When his disciple, Joshua, who modelled himself on his master's characteristics with the love which they deserved, had been approved by divine judgement as best fitted to command, Moses was not depressed as another might have been because the choice had not fallen on his sons or nephews, but was filled with intense joy, to think that the nation would be in the charge of one excelling in every way, since he knew that one in whom God is well pleased must needs be of a noble character. So taking Joshua by the right hand he brought him forward to where the multitude was congregated.<sup>a</sup> He had no tremors at the thought of his own end, but had added other new joys to μόνον διὰ μνήμην τῶν πρότερον εὐπαθειῶν, αἷς κατακόρως διὰ παντὸς εἴδους ἀρετῆς ἐνετρήφησεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα τοῦ μέλλειν ἀθανατίζεσθαι μεταβαλὼν ἐκ φθαρτοῦ βίου εἰς ἄφθαρτον, ἰλαραῖς ὄψεσιν ἐκ τῆς κατὰ ψυχὴν εὐθυμίας φαιδρὸς καὶ 68 γεγηθῶς φησιν· “ ἐμοὶ μὲν ἀπαλλάττεσθαι καιρὸς ἤδη τῆς ἐν σώματι ζωῆς· ὁ δὲ τῆς ὑμετέρας ἐπιτροπῆς διάδοχος οὗτός ἐστιν αἰρεθεὶς ὑπὸ θεοῦ”· καὶ τὰ χρησθέντα λόγια τῆς δοκιμασίας εὐθύς

PHILO

 69 ἐπέειπεν, οἷς ἐπίστευσαν. καὶ πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἀποβλέψας ἀνδραγαθίζεσθαι παραινεῖ καὶ σφόδρα ἰσχύειν ἐν ταῖς εὐβουλίαις, ἀγαθὰς μὲν γνώμας εἰσηγούμενον, ἀνευδότοις δὲ καὶ ἐρρωμένοις λογισμοῖς τὰ γνωσθέντα καλῶς τελειοῦντα. καὶ ταῦτ’ ἔλεγεν ἴσως οὐ δεομένῳ παραινέσεως, ἀλλὰ τὸ φιλάλληλον καὶ φιλοεθνὲς πάθος οὐ στέγων, ὑφ’ οὗ τρόπον τινὰ κεντριζόμενος ἃ συνοίσειν ἐνόμιζεν
 70 ἀπεγύμνου. ἦν δὲ καὶ χρησμός αὐτῷ παρακαλέσαι τὸν διάδοχον καὶ εὐθαρσέστατον ἀπεργάσασθαι πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ἔθνους ἐπιμέλειαν, τὸ βᾶρος μὴ καταδείσαντα τῆς ἀρχῆς, ἵνα τοῖς ἔπειτα γένηται κανὼν
 [387] καὶ νόμος | ἅπασιν ἡγεμόσι πρὸς ἀρχέτυπον παράδειγμα Μωυσῆν ἀποβλέπουσι καὶ μηδεὶς φθονῆ βουλευμάτων ἀγαθῶν τοῖς διαδόχοις, ἀλλ’ ὑποθήκαις καὶ παραινέσεσι τὰς ψυχὰς αὐτῶν ἀλείφωσι

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxxi. 7 and 23.

<sup>b</sup> τὸ φιλάλληλον = “mutual affection,” when applied to one person signifies an affection which is strengthened by the knowledge that it is returned.

ON THE VIRTUES, 67-70

the old, for he had not only the memory of earlier felicities, which every kind of virtue had given him, filling him to overflowing with delight, but also the hope of coming immortality as he passed from the corruptible life to the incorruptible. Thus with a face beaming with the gladness of his soul, he said brightly and cheerfully, "The time has come for me to depart 68 from the life of the body, but here is a successor to take charge of you, chosen by God," and he at once proceeded to recite the messages declaring God's approval, to which they gave credence; then turning 69 his eyes on Joshua he bade him<sup>a</sup> be of good courage and mighty in wise policy, initiate good plans of action and carry out his decisions with strong and resolute thinking to a happy conclusion. For though he to whom he addressed these words did not perhaps need the exhortation, Moses would not keep hidden the personal friendship<sup>b</sup> and patriotism which urged him like a spur to lay bare what he thought would be profitable. Also he had received the divine com- 70 mand<sup>c</sup> that he should exhort his successor and create in him the spirit to undertake the charge of the nation with a high courage, and not to fear the burden of sovereignty. Thus all future rulers would find a law to guide them right<sup>d</sup> by looking to Moses as their archetype and model, and none would grudge to give good advice to their successors, but all would train and school their souls with admonitions and

<sup>c</sup> Num. xxvii. 19 "Thou shalt give him a charge before all the congregation."

<sup>d</sup> Cohn takes κανὼν καὶ νόμος as predicate, "he should become a law." Who then is "he"? Not Joshua, for Moses, who advises his successor, is the model. Not Moses, for Philo would have said αὐτὸν ἀποβλέπουσι. I take the words as subject to γένηται.

PHILO

- 71 καὶ συγκροτῶσι. δύναται γὰρ ἀνδρὸς ἀγαθοῦ παραίνεσις ἀναπεπτωκότας ταῖς γνώμαις ἐγείραι καὶ διάρασα εἰς ὕψος ἐπάνω τῶν καιρῶν καὶ τῶν πραγμάτων ιδρύσασθαι φρόνημα γενναῖον καὶ ἀκατάπληκτον ἐνθεῖσα.
- 72 Τὰ δὲ ἀρμόττοντα τοῖς τε ὑπηκόοις καὶ τῷ κληρονόμῳ τῆς ἡγεμονίας διαλεχθεὶς ἀρχεται τὸν θεὸν ὑμνεῖν μετ' ὠδῆς, τελευταίαν αὐτῷ βίου τοῦ μετὰ σώματος εὐχαριστίαν ἀποδιδούς, ἀνθ' ὧν ἀπὸ γενέσεως ἄχρι γήρωσ καιναῖς καὶ οὐ ταῖς ἐν ἔθει
- 73 χάρισιν εὐηργετέιτο· καὶ συναγαγὼν ἄθροισμα θεῖον, τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ παντὸς καὶ τὰ συνεκτικώτατα μέρη τοῦ κόσμου, γῆν τε καὶ οὐρανόν, τὴν μὲν θνητῶν ἐστίαν, τὸν δὲ ἀθανάτων οἶκον, ἐν μέσοις τὰς ὑμνωδίας ἐποιεῖτο διὰ παντὸς ἀρμονίας καὶ συμφωνίας εἶδους, ἵνα κατακούσωσιν ἀνθρωποὶ τε καὶ
- 74 ἄγγελοι λειτουργοί, οἱ μὲν ὡς γνώριμοι, πρὸς τὴν τῆς ὁμοίας εὐχαρίστου διαθέσεως διδασκαλίαν, οἱ δ' ὡς ἔφοροι θεασάμενοι κατὰ τὴν σφῶν ἐμπειρίαν, μὴ τι τῆς ὠδῆς ἐκμελές, καὶ ἅμα διαπιστοῦντες, εἴ τις ἀνθρωπος ὢν ἐνδεδεμένος σώματι φθαρτῷ δύναται τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ἡλίῳ καὶ σελήνῃ καὶ τῷ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων πανιέρῳ χορῷ μεμουςῶσθαι τὴν ψυχὴν πρὸς τὸ θεῖον ὄργανον, τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὸν
- 75 σύμπαντα κόσμον, ἀρμοσάμενος. ταχθεὶς δ' ἐν τοῖς κατὰ τὸν αἰθέρα χορευταῖς ὁ ἱεροφάντης ἀνεκεράσατο ταῖς πρὸς θεὸν εὐχαρίστοις ὑμνωδίαις τὰ γνήσια πάθη τῆς πρὸς τὸ ἔθνος εὐνοίας, ἐν οἷς ἦσαν ἔλεγχοι<sup>1</sup> παλαιῶν ἀμαρτημάτων, αἱ πρὸς τὸν παρ-

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps ἔλεγχοι <οἱ> to balance the articles with the corresponding nouns that follow.

ON THE VIRTUES, 71-75

exhortations. For a good man's exhortation can 71 raise the disheartened, lift them on high and establish them superior to occasions and circumstances, and inspire them with a gallant and dauntless spirit.

Having discoursed thus suitably to his subjects and 72 the heir of his headship, he proceeded to hymn God in a song<sup>a</sup> in which he rendered the final thanksgiving of his bodily life for the rare and extraordinary gifts with which he had been blest from his birth to his old age. He convoked a divine assemblage of the 73 elements of all existence and the chiefest parts of the universe, earth and heaven, one the home of mortals, the other the house of immortals. With these around him he sang his canticles with every kind of harmony and sweet music in the ears of both mankind and ministering angels<sup>b</sup>: of men that as disciples they 74 should learn from him the lesson of like thankfulness of heart: of angels as watchers, observing, as themselves masters of melody,<sup>c</sup> whether the song had any discordant note, and scarce able to credit that any man imprisoned in a corruptible body could like the sun and moon and the most sacred choir of the other stars attune his soul to harmony with God's instrument, the heaven and the whole universe. Thus in 75 his post amid the ethereal choristers the great Re-vealer blended with the strains of thankfulness to God his own true feelings of affection to the nation, therein joining with his arraignment of them for past sins his admonitions for the present occasion

<sup>a</sup> For the song of Moses see Deut. xxxii. 1-43.

<sup>b</sup> Verse 43 (in LXX only) "Rejoice ye heavens with Him, and let all the angels of God worship Him."

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "in accordance with their own skill (in music)."

PHILO

όντα καιρὸν νουθεσίαι καὶ σωφρονισμοί, παραινέσεις αἱ πρὸς τὰ μέλλοντα διὰ χρηστῶν ἐλπίδων, αἷς ἐπακολουθεῖν ἀναγκαῖον αἷσια τέλη.

- 76 XII. Ὡς δ' ἐτέλεσε τὰς χορείας ὀσιότητι καὶ φιλανθρωπία τρόπον τινὰ συνυφασμένας, ἤρξατο μεταβάλλειν ἐκ θνητῆς ζωῆς εἰς ἀθάνατον βίον κακ τοῦ κατ' ὀλίγον συνησθάνετο τῆς τῶν<sup>1</sup> ἐξ ὧν συνεκέκρατο διαζεύξεως, τοῦ μὲν σώματος ὀστρέου [388] | δίκην <περιπεφυκότος><sup>2</sup> περιαιρουμένου, τῆς δὲ ψυχῆς ἀπογυμνουμένης καὶ τὴν κατὰ φύσιν ἐν-
77 θένδε ποθούσης μετανάστασιν. εἰθ' ἔτοιμασάμενος τὰ πρὸς ἕξοδον οὐ πρότερον ἐστείλατο τὴν ἀποικίαν ἢ τὰς τοῦ ἔθνους φυλὰς ἀπάσας εὐχαῖς ἐναρμονίοις [ἀριθμῶ δώδεκα] γεῤῥαι διὰ τῆς τῶν φυλαρχῶν κατακλήσεως· ἃς ὅτι τελεσφορηθήσονται πιστευτέον· ὃ τε γὰρ εὐξάμενος θεοφιλῆς ὃ τε θεὸς φιλάνθρωπος ὑπὲρ ὧν τε αἱ αἰτήσεις εὐπατρίδαι καὶ εὐγενεῖς τὴν ἀνωτάτω τεταγμένοι τάξιν, ὑπὸ 78 στρατάρχη τῷ ποιητῇ πάντων καὶ πατρί. [αἰτήσεις δ' ἦσαν αἱ τῶν ἀληθινῶν ἀγαθῶν, οὐ μόνον ἐν τῷ θνητῷ ὅπως ὑπάρχωσιν αὐτοῖς βίῳ, ἀλλὰ πολὺ μᾶλλον ἐπὶ ἀνετος τοῦ τῆς σαρκὸς δεσμοῦ
79 γένηται ἢ ψυχῆ.]<sup>3</sup> μόνος γὰρ Μωυσῆς τὴν πρὸς τὰ θεῖα, ὡς ἔοικεν, ἐξ ἀρχῆς τὸ σύμπαν ἔθνος

<sup>1</sup> mss. τῆς ἐξ or τῶν ἐξ.

<sup>2</sup> Added by Cohn on the analogy of De Ios. 71. A likely but not certain emendation.

<sup>3</sup> Cohn considers this section spurious, probably rightly. See App. p. 445.

ON THE VIRTUES, 75-79

and calls to a sounder mind, and his exhortations for the future expressed in hopeful words of comfort which needs must be followed by their happy fulfilment.<sup>a</sup>

XII. When he had ended his anthems, a blend we 76 may call them of religion and humanity, he began to pass over from mortal existence to life immortal and gradually became conscious of the disuniting of the elements of which he was composed. The body, the shell-like growth which encased him, was being stripped away and the soul laid bare and yearning for its natural removal hence. Then after accomplishing 77 the preparations for his departure he did not set out for his new home until he had honoured all the tribes of his nation with the concert of his benedictions, mentioning the founders of the tribes by name.<sup>b</sup> That these benedictions will be fulfilled we must believe, for he who gave them was beloved of God the lover of men and they for whom he asked were of noble lineage and held the highest rank in the army led by the Maker and Father of all. [The prayers were re- 78 quests for true goods, not only that they should have them in this mortal life but much more when the soul is set free from the bonds of the flesh.] For Moses 79 alone, it is plain, had grasped the thought that the

<sup>a</sup> The song, according to Deut. xxxi. 28, was intended to be a witness against Israel, and certainly the "arraignments" are the most prominent feature. On the other hand "the poem strikes its keynote (xxxii. 21) of mercy and hope, and emphatically concludes on this keynote" (34-43)—Adam Smith.

<sup>b</sup> For the blessing of Moses see Deut. xxxiii. Philo has before, in Mos. ii. 288, expressed his conviction that these blessings, though partially fulfilled already, would be finally completely fulfilled.

PHILO

ὑπολαβὼν ἔχει ἀναγκαιοτάτην συγγένειαν, πολὺ γνησιωτέραν τῆς ἀφ' αἵματος, πάντων ἀγαθῶν ὧν δὴ ἀνθρωπίνη φύσις χωρεῖ κληρονόμον ἀπέφηνεν, ἃ μὲν αὐτὸς εἶχεν, ἐξ ἐτοίμου διδούς, ἃ δὲ μὴ κέκτητο, τὸν θεὸν ἱκετεύων παρασχεῖν, εἰδὼς τὰς τῶν χαρίτων αὐτοῦ πηγὰς ἀενάους μὲν οὔσας, οὐ πᾶσι δ' ἀνειμένας, ἀλλὰ μόνοις ἱκέταις· ἱκέται δ' εἰσὶν οἱ καλοκάγαθίας ἐρῶντες, οἷς ἀρύτεσθαι θέμις ἀπὸ τῶν ἱερωτάτων πηγῶν διψῶσι σοφίας.

80 XIII. Τὰ μὲν οὖν δείγματα τῆς τοῦ νομοθέτου φιλανθρωπίας καὶ κοινωνίας, ἧ ἔχρησато καὶ δι' εὐμοιρίαν φύσεως ἀγαθῆς κακ τῆς τῶν ἱερῶν λογίων ὑφήγησεως, μεμήνυται. λεκτέον δὲ ἃ καὶ τοῖς ἔπειτα διετάξατο, εἰ καὶ μὴ πάντα—οὐ γὰρ ῥάδιον—, τὰ γοῦν ἀγχίσπορα καὶ ἐγγυτάτω τῶν 81 ἐκείνου βουλευμάτων. τὸ γὰρ ἐπιεικὲς καὶ ἡμερον οὐκ ἐν ταῖς πρὸς ἀνθρώπους αὐτὸ μόνον ἰδρύεται κοινωνίαις, ἀλλ' ἐπιδαψιλευόμενος ἀναχεῖ πλουσίως αὐτὸ καὶ τείνει πρὸς τε τὰς τῶν ἀλόγων ζῶων φύσεις καὶ πρὸς τὰς τῶν ἡμέρων δένδρων ιδέας. ἃ δὲ περὶ ἐκάστων ἐνομοθέτησε, λεκτέον ἐν μέρει τὴν ἀρχὴν ποιησάμενον ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων.

82 XIV. Ἀπαγορεύει τοίνυν ἀδελφῷ δανεῖζειν, ἀδελφὸν ὀνομάζων οὐ μόνον τὸν ἐκ τῶν αὐτῶν φύντα γονέων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὃς ἂν ἀστὸς καὶ ὁμόφυλος ᾗ, τόκους ἐπὶ χρήμασι οὐ δικαίων ἐκλέγειν ὡς whole nation from the very first was akin to things divine, a kinship most vital and a far more genuine tie than that of blood, and, therefore, he declared it the heir of all good things that human nature can contain. What he had himself he gave them ready for their use, what he did not possess he supplicated God to grant them, knowing that though the fountains of His grace are perennial they are not free for all, but only to suppliants. And suppliants are all those who love a virtuous life, to whom it is permitted to quench their thirst for wisdom with water drawn from the fountains of true holiness.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xxii. 25, Lev. xxv. 36, 37, Deut. xxiii. 19. Cf. Spec. Leg. ii. 74 ff.

ON THE VIRTUES, 79-82

XIII. We have stated the proofs of the legislator's 80 humanity and fellow feeling, a quality which he possessed through a happy gift of natural goodness, and also as the outcome of the lessons which he learnt from the holy oracles. But we must also speak of the ordinances which he gave to posterity, if not all of them, which would be difficult, at least those which are closest akin to his way of thinking. He did not 81 set up consideration and gentleness as fundamental to the relations of men to their fellows only, but poured it out richly with a lavish hand on animals of irrational nature and the various kinds of cultivated trees. We must mention the laws which he gave on each of these, taking them in turn and beginning with mankind.

XIV. He forbids anyone to lend money on interest 82 to a brother, meaning by this name not merely a child of the same parents, but anyone of the same citizenship or nation.<sup>a</sup> For he does not think it just to amass money bred from money<sup>b</sup> as their yeanlings <sup>b</sup> Or simply "interest on money"; but there is obviously an allusion to the original meaning of τόκος.

PHILO

- 83 ἀπὸ θρεμμάτων ἔγγονα. καὶ προτρέπει μὴ διὰ τοῦτ' ἀναδύεσθαι καὶ συμβάλλειν ὀκηρότερον, ἀλλ' ἀνειμένας χερσὶ καὶ γνώμαις μάλιστα μὲν χαρίζεσθαι τοῖς δεομένοις, λογιζομένους ὅτι καὶ ἡ χάρις τρόπον τινὰ δάνειόν ἐστιν, ἀποδοθησόμενον [389] ἐν καιρῷ βελτίονι (ἄνευ) ἀνάγκης | ἐκουσίῳ διαθέσει τοῦ λαβόντος, εἰ δὲ μὴ βούλονται δωρεῖσθαι, κυχράναι γοῦν ἐτοιμότατα καὶ προθυμότατα, μηδὲν
- 84 ἔξω τῶν ἀρχαίων ἀποληψομένους. οὕτως γὰρ οὐθ' οἱ πένητες ἔμελλον ἀπορώτεροι γίνεσθαι, πλείονα ὦν ἔλαβον εἰσφέρειν ἀναγκαζόμενοι, οὐθ' οἱ συμβάλλοντες ἀδικεῖσθαι, ἃ προήκαντο μόνον κομιζόμενοι· καίτοι γε οὐ μόνον· σὺν γὰρ τοῖς ἀρχαίοις ἀντὶ τόκων οὐς λαβεῖν οὐκ ἠξίωσαν ἐπεισφέρονται τὰ κάλλιστα καὶ τιμιώτατα τῶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις, ἡμερότητα, κοινωνίαν, χρηστότητα, μεγαλόνοιαν, εὐφημίαν, εὐκλειαν· οἷς τίς κτήσις ἐφάμιλλος;
- 85 ἀπορώτατος μὲν οὖν καὶ ὁ μέγας βασιλεὺς ἀναφανεῖται κατὰ σύγκρισιν μιᾶς ἀρετῆς· τοῦ μὲν γὰρ ὁ πλοῦτος ἄψυχος ἐν ταμείοις καὶ μυχοῖς γῆς κατορωρυγμένος, ἀρετῆς δ' ἐν ψυχῆς τῷ ἡγεμονικῷ μεταποιεῖται δὲ αὐτοῦ καὶ τὸ καθαρώτατον τῆς οὐσίας, οὐρανός, καὶ ὁ γεννητὴς τῶν συμπάντων θεός. ἔτι τοίνυν τὴν ὀβολοστατῶν καὶ τοκογλύφων εὐπορον ἀπορίαν ἐν λόγῳ θετέον τῶν πολυχρύσων δοκούντων εἶναι βασιλέων οὐδ' ὄναρ ἐωρακῶτων

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo may have extracted an injunction to give in preference to lending even without interest from Lev. xxv. 35, 212

ON THE VIRTUES, 83-85

are from cattle. And he bids them not take this as 83 a ground for holding back or showing unwillingness to contribute, but without restriction of hand and heart to give free gifts to those who need, reflecting that a free gift is in a sense a loan that will be repaid by the recipient, when times are better, without compulsion and with a willing heart.<sup>a</sup> This is the best course, but, if they are unwilling to give, they should at least lend with all readiness and alacrity, not with the prospect of receiving back anything except the principal. For in this way the poor would 84 not become more helpless, by being forced to pay more than they received, and the contributors would not be wronged though they recovered only what they spent. Yet not "only." For with the capital in place of the interest which they determine not to accept they receive a further bonus of the fairest and most precious things that human life has to give, mercy, neighbourliness, charity, magnanimity, a good report and good fame. And what acquisition can rival these? Nay, even the Great King will appear as the 85 poorest of men if compared with a single virtue. For his wealth is soulless, buried deep in store-houses and recesses of the earth, but the wealth of virtue lies in the sovereign part of the soul, and the purest part of existence, that is heaven, and God the parent of all claim it as their own. And can we then hold the poverty-in-wealth of the money-grubbing usurers to be of any account? They may seem to be kings with purses full of gold, but they never even in their dreams have had a glimpse of the wealth that has where "thou shalt help" thy poor brother precedes the prohibition of interest, or Deut. xv. 10 "thou shalt surely give to him and thou shalt lend."

PHILO

- 86 τὸν βλέποντα πλοῦτον; εἰσὶ δ' οἱ τοσ-αύτη κέχρηται μοχθηρίας ὑπερβολῇ, ὥστε οὐκ ἔχοντες ἀργύριον τροφὰς δανείζουσιν ὡς πλείους ἂν ἔδοσαν αὐθις κομιζόμενοι. ταχύ γ' ἂν οὗτοι μεταιτοῦσιν ἔρανον παράσχοιεν λιμὸν ἐν εὐθηνία καὶ εὐετηρία κατασκευάζοντες καὶ τὴν ἀθλίων ἀνθρώπων γαστρὸς ἔνδειαν προσοδευόμενοι καὶ μόνον οὐκ ἐπὶ τρυτάνης ἰστάντες σιτία καὶ ποτά, 87 μὴ καθέλκη ῥοπή. τοῖς οὖν μεθέξουσι τῆς καθ' αὐτὸν ἱεράς πολιτείας ἀναγκαίως παραγγέλλει τὰς ἰδέας τῶν τοιούτων πόρων ἐκτρέπεσθαι· δουλοπρεποῦς γὰρ καὶ σφόδρα ἀνελευθέρου ψυχῆς τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα μεταβεβληκυίας εἰς ἀγριότητα καὶ θηρίων φύσιν.
- 88 XV. Ἐν τι τῶν εἰς φιλανθρωπίαν τεινόντων παράγγελμα κάκεῖνο διατάττεται, μισθὸν πένητος αὐθημερὸν ἀποδιδόναι, οὐ μόνον ὅτι τὴν χρεῖαν ἐφ' ἦν παρελήφθη παρασχόντα δίκαιον ἦν τὸν ἐπὶ τῇ ὑπηρεσίᾳ μισθὸν ἀνυπερθέτως ἀπολαβεῖν, ἀλλ' ὅτι

---

<sup>a</sup> The translation takes τῶν πολυχρύσων . . . βασιλέων in apposition with ὀβολοστατῶν καὶ τοκογλύφων. So also Mangey. Cohn, on the other hand, takes them as dependent on ἐν λόγῳ, and understands the passage "we must regard the usurers as on a par with the kings (such as the Great King), who are no real kings." But this ignores the ironical use of the interrogation ἐτι τοίνυν as a triumphant way of stating that something can no longer be held, e.g. § 141, and which Cohn himself seems to have recognized by printing the sentence as a question. For the absolute use of ἐν λόγῳ cf. οὗτ' ἐν λόγῳ, De Praem. 111. A slightly different way of taking the passage would be to treat τῶν . . . βασιλέων as genitive absolute, "can the usurers be of any account, when the richest kings are shown to have no true wealth?"

<sup>b</sup> This censure is based on Lev. xxv. 37 "nor give (A.V. lend) him thy victuals for increase." LXX ἐπὶ πλεονασμῶ.

ON THE VIRTUES, 86-88

eyes to see.<sup>a</sup> But there are some who 86 have reached such a pitch of depravity that, when they have no money, they supply food on loan on condition that they receive in return a greater quantity than they gave.<sup>b</sup> It would be long before <sup>c</sup> these people would give a free meal to beggars if they create famine when they have plenty and abundance and draw a revenue out of the wretches' empty stomachs and as good as measure out food and drink on a balance to make sure that they do not overweight the scale. So then he absolutely commands those 87 who shall be members of his holy commonwealth to discard such methods of profit-making, for these practices show the marks of a slavish and utterly illiberal soul transformed into savagery and the nature of wild beasts.

XV. The following also is one of the command- 88 ments promoting humanity.<sup>d</sup> The wages of the poor man are to be paid on the same day, not only because it was felt to be just that one who has rendered the service for which he was engaged should receive in full and without delay the reward for his employment, <sup>c</sup> Or as we might say colloquially "you won't catch these people giving away to beggars." Cohn, who translates ταχύ γ' by "vielleicht," and supposes the words to mean "perhaps they would give to beggars so as to get profit from them," misses the meaning of ταχύ γ'. It is here used like σπουδῆ γε in an ironical way, which, though ignored by L. & S., is well illustrated in Stephanus, who gives several references to the orators, e.g. Dem. 798. 20 ὅς γὰρ οἷς ὁ δῆμος ἅπας . . . νουθετεῖ μηδεπώποθ' ὑπέϊξε . . . ταχύ γ' ἂν φροντίσειε τοῦ παρ' ἐνὸς λόγου.

<sup>d</sup> Lev. xix. 13, Deut. xxiv. 14, 15, cf. Spec. Leg. iv. 195.
 Philo considers that this and other repetitions are covered by the defence given in ibid. 204, and it is true that in his earlier notice of the law he did not dwell on the effect on the worker.

PHILO

καί, ὡς εἶπόν τινες, ἐφημερόβιος<sup>1</sup> ὢν ὁ χειροτέχνης ἢ ἀχθοφόρος, ὄλω τῷ σώματι κακοπαθῶν ὑποζυγίου τρόπον, ἐπὶ τῷ μισθῷ τέθειται τὴν ἐλπίδα· ὃν εἰ μὲν εὐθὺς κομίσαιτο, γήθει καὶ ῥώννυται πρὸς τὴν ἐπιούσαν προθυμία διπλασίονι ἐργασόμενος, εἰ δὲ μὴ κομίσαιτο, πρὸς τῷ σφόδρα ἀχθεσθαι καὶ τοὺς τόνους ὑπὸ λύπης ἐκλυθεὶς ἀναπέπτωκεν, ὡς ἀδυνατεῖν πρὸς τὰ ἐν ἔθει τῶν ἔργων ἀπαντᾶν.

[390] 89 XVI. | Ἔτι φησί· δανειστῆς μὴ ἐπεισίτω χρεωστῶν οἰκίαις ἐνέχυρόν τι καὶ ῥύσιον ἐπὶ τῷ δανείῳ μετὰ βίας ληψόμενος, ἀλλ' ἐν προθύροις ἕξω παρεστῶς ἀναμενέτω κελεύων ἡσυχῇ προφέρειν. οἱ δέ, ἂν ἔχωσι, μὴ ἀναδνέσθωσαν, εἰ γε ἀρμόττει τὸν μὲν μὴ τῷ δύνασθαι καταχρῆσθαι πρὸς τὸ αὐθαδέστερον ἐφ' ὕβρει τῶν δανεισαμένων, τοὺς δὲ πρὸς ὑπόμνησιν τῆς τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἀποδόσεως ἄξια παρέχειν ἐνέχυρα.

90 XVII. Τίς γε μὴν οὐκ ἂν ἀγάσαιτο τοῦ περὶ τοὺς θερισταῖς ἢ τρυγηταῖς διατάγματος; κελεύει γὰρ ἐν μὲν τῷ ἀμῆτῳ μῆτε τὰ ἀποπίπτοντα τῶν δραγμάτων ἀναιρεῖσθαι μῆτε πάντα τὸν σπόρον κείρειν, ἀλλ' ὑπολείπεσθαι τι τοῦ κλήρου μέρος ἄτμητον, ἅμα μὲν τοὺς εὐπόρους μεγαλόφρονας καὶ κοινωνικούς κατασκευάζων ἐκ τοῦ τι προϊέναι τῶν ἰδίων καὶ μὴ πᾶσι προσκέχνηναι καὶ πάντα συμφορεῖν καὶ συγκομίζειν οἴκαδε θησαυροφυλακήσοντας, ἅμα

<sup>1</sup> So S. Other mss. ἐφήμερος. See note a.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "as some persons (i.e. writers) have said." The singular ὡς εἶπέ τις generally, if not always, in Philo indicates a quotation. Mangey "ut quidem docent," referring it apparently to the view that a manual worker is like a beast of burden. If ἐφήμερος is read instead of the otherwise un-

216

ON THE VIRTUES, 88-90

but also because the manual worker or load carrier, who toils painfully with his whole body like a beast of burden, "lives from day to day," as the phrase goes,<sup>a</sup> and his hopes rest upon his payment. If he gets it at once, he is glad and is braced up for the morrow to work with redoubled willingness. If he does not get it, besides the great trouble that this gives him, his nervous system is unstrung by his sorrow and renders him incapable to meet the routine of his task.

XVI. Again, he says, a creditor must not enter the 89 houses of his debtors, to take with violence a pledge or surety for the loan, but must stand outside in the porch and quietly bid them bring it out.<sup>b</sup> They, if they have it, must not hold it back, since the right course is that, while the creditor must not abuse his power to deal inconsiderately and insolently with the borrowers, the latter must render the proper surety as a reminder to repay what belongs to another.

XVII. Again who could fail to admire the ordin- 90 ance about reapers or grape-pickers? <sup>c</sup> He bids them at harvest time not take up what drops from the sheaves, nor put in the sickle to the whole crop, but leave part of the field uncut. In this way he makes the well-to-do high-minded and liberal by sacrificing something of their own property instead of casting greedy eyes on the whole crop, and stacking and carting it all home to be kept like a treasure. At known ἐφημερόβιος, I should suspect a play on the poetic use of the word (e.g. Aesch. Prom. 83) for mankind in general as "creatures of a day." The manual worker is "for a day" in the literal sense.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxiv. 10, 11.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xix. 9, xxiii. 22. E.V. "Thou shalt not reap the corners of the field." LXX "Ye shall not complete the reaping."

PHILO

δὲ τοὺς πένητας εὐθυμοτέρους ἀπεργαζόμενος· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ κτημάτων ἰδίων ἀποροῦσιν, ἐφίησιν αὐτοῖς εἰς τὰ τῶν ὁμοφύλων εἰσιέναι καὶ τῶν 91 ὑπολειφθέντων ὡς οἰκείων ἀμᾶν. ἐν δὲ καιρῷ τῆς ὀπώρας πάλιν δρεπομένοις κληρούχοις προστάττει μήτε ῥώγας ἀποπιπτούσας συλλέγειν μήτε ἐπ-ανατρυγᾶν ἀμπελώνας. τὰ δ' αὐτὰ καὶ τοῖς ἐλαιο-λογοῦσι διατάττεται, καθάπερ φιλοστοργότατος καὶ δικαιοτάτος πατήρ οὐχὶ ταῖς αὐταῖς εὐπραγίαις κεκρημένων παιδῶν, ἀλλὰ τῶν μὲν ἐν περιουσίᾳ ζώντων, τῶν δ' εἰς ἀπορίαν ἐσχάτην περιηκόντων, οὓς ἐλεῶν καὶ οἰκτεῖρων ἐπὶ τὰ κτήματα τῶν ἀδελφῶν καλεῖ μεθέξοντας ὡς ἰδίων τῶν ἀλλοτρίων, οὐκ ἀναισχύντως ἀλλ' εἰς ἐπανόρθωσιν ἐνδείας, καὶ οὐ μόνον καρποῦ μετουσίας ἀλλὰ καὶ κτημάτων 92 ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν. εἰσὶ δ' οἱ οὕτως ῥυπῶσι τὰς διανοίας προστετηκότες ἀργυρισμῷ καὶ δυσθανα-τῶντες περὶ πᾶσαν ἰδέαν κέρδους, τὸ πόθεν ἂν γένοιτο μὴ σκεπτόμενοι, ὥστε ἐπανατρυγῶσι μὲν τοὺς ἀμπελώνας καὶ ἐλαιῶνας, τὴν δὲ κριθοφόρον καὶ σιτοφόρον γῆν ἀναθερίζουσι, τὴν δουλοπρεπῆ καὶ ἀνελεύθερον μικροψυχίαν αὐτῶν ἐλέγχοντες καὶ 93 ἅμα ἀσεβοῦντες. ὀλίγα μὲν γὰρ αὐτοῖ τῶν εἰς γεωργίαν παρέσχον, τὰ δὲ πλεῖστα καὶ ἀναγκαιότατα τῶν εἰς καρποφορίαν καὶ εὐγονίαν ἢ φύσις, καιρίους ὑετούς, ἀέρος εὐκρασίας, τὰς τιθηνοὺς

---

* Lev. xix. 10 (cf. Deut. xxiv. 21) "Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather the fallen fruit of thy vineyard." The LXX for "fallen fruit" has ῥώγας, which in itself only means "grapes" or "berries." Philo explains it by adding ἀποπιπτούσας. Josephus, Ant. iv. 231 gives for it τὰς ἐπιφυλλίδας (small grapes?).

ON THE VIRTUES, 90-93

the same time he gives fresh courage to the poor, for since they themselves own no landed property he permits them to enter the estates of their fellow-countrymen and reap a harvest from what is still left as if it were their own. Again in the autumn when the 91 owners have the fruit picked he forbids them to collect the grapes that fall or to glean the vineyards.<sup>a</sup> He gives the same order to the olive pickers,<sup>b</sup> acting like a very loving and very just father of children who have not prospered alike, some of them living in abundance, others sunk into the deepest poverty. These last in his pity and compassion he invites into the possession of their brethren to partake of what belongs to others as though it were their own, not in any shameless fashion, but to redress their privations and to make them partners, not only in the fruits but to all appearance in the estates also. But there are 92 some so corrupted in mind, so engrossed in money-getting and every kind of profiteering as though it were a matter of life and death,<sup>c</sup> never considering what its source can be, that they glean the olive-yards and vineyards and give a second reaping to the barley fields and wheat fields, thus convicting themselves of a slavish and illiberal meanness and of impiety to boot. For they themselves have contributed but 93 little to the husbandry. The most numerous and most indispensable parts of all that goes to produce fruit-bearing and fertility are due to nature—the seasonable rains, the happily tempered states of

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxiv. 20.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps "wearing themselves out to death." Philo has used this word which in other writers seems to mean "struggle against death" of the craze for the theatre, Mos. ii. 211, and the despair of the Israelites pursued by Pharaoh, ibid. 250.

PHILO

- τῶν φυομένων συνεχεῖς καὶ μαλακὰς δρόσους, ζωτικωτάτας αὔρας, ὥρων τῶν ἐτησίων ἀζημίους
 [391] γενέσεις, ὡς | μήτε θέρος περιφλέγοι μήτε κρυμὸς περιψύχοι μήτ' ἔαρος καὶ μετοπώρου τροπαὶ
 94 βλάπτοιεν τὰ γεννώμενα. καὶ ταῦτ' εἰδότες καὶ ὀρῶντες ἀεὶ τὴν φύσιν τελεσιουργοῦσαν καὶ πλουσῖαις χάρισι δωρουμένην ὅμως τὰς ἐκείνης εὐεργεσίας σφετερίζεσθαι τολμῶσι καὶ ὡς αὐτοὶ πάντων αἴτιοι μεταδιδόασιν οὐδενὸς οὐδενί, μισανθρωπίαν ὁμοῦ καὶ ἀσέβειαν ἀσκούντες. οὗς, ἐπειδὴ γνώμαις ἐκουσίους ἀρετὴν οὐ διεπόνησαν, ἄκοντας νουθετεῖ καὶ σωφρονίζει νόμοις ἱεροῖς, οἷς ὁ μὲν σπουδαῖος ἐθελοντῆς, ὁ δὲ μοχθηρὸς ἄκων πειθαρχεῖ.
- 95 XVIII. Κελεύουσιν οἱ νόμοι δεκάτας μὲν ἀπὸ τε σίτου καὶ οἴνου καὶ ἐλαίου καὶ θρεμμάτων ἡμέρων καὶ ἐρίων ἀπάρχεσθαι τοῖς ἱερωμένοις, ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς κατ' ἀγροὺς ὀπώρας καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀκροδρύων κατὰ τὸ ἀνάλογον τῆς κτήσεως ἐν ταλάροις πλήρεσι κομίζειν σὺν ὕδαϊς εἰς τὸν θεὸν πεποιημέναις, ἃς ἀναγράφτους στηλιτεύουσιν αἱ ἱερώταται βίβλοι, καὶ προσέτι βοῶν καὶ προβάτων καὶ αἰγῶν τὰ πρωτότοκα μὴ ὥσπερ ἴδια κατατάττειν ἐν ταῖς ἀγέλαις, ἀλλὰ καὶ ταῦτα νομίζειν ἀπαρχάς, ὅπως ἐξεθιζόμενοι τῇ μὲν τιμᾷ τὸ θεῖον τῇ δὲ μὴ πάντα κερδαίνειν εὐσεβεία καὶ φιλανθρωπία ταῖς ἀρετῶν ἡγεμονίῃσιν ἐπικοσμώνται.

---

<sup>a</sup> The law of first fruits has been given in full in Spec. Leg. i. 132 ff. Philo's motive in bringing it in here is that it 220

ON THE VIRTUES, 93-95

the air, the gentle dews, those constant nurses of the growing plants, the truly life-giving breezes, the seasons benignly brought about so that neither the summer should over-scorch, nor frost over-chill, nor the transitions of spring and autumn injure the produce. And though they know these things and see 94 that it is nature who ever brings the accomplishment and bestows these rich boons upon them, they nevertheless dare to appropriate her benefactions, and, as though they themselves caused everything, refuse to share anything with anybody. Their practice shows inhumanity and impiety as well, and, since they have not of their own free will laboured to get virtue, he deals with them against their will admonishing and calling them to wisdom with holy laws which the good obey voluntarily and the bad unwillingly.

XVIII. The laws bid us give as first fruits to the 95 officiating priests tithes of corn <sup>a</sup> and wine and oil and domestic animals and wool and bring from the autumn produce of the fields and the other tree fruits offerings proportional to their gains in full baskets with hymns composed in honour of God. These hymns are preserved in written records in the sacred books.<sup>b</sup> Further the first-born of oxen and sheep and goats are not to be ranked among the herds as personal property, but they are to be regarded as first fruits, that thus accustomed on the one hand to honour the Godhead, and on the other to refrain from taking all things as gain, they may have the ornament of those queens of the virtues, piety and humanity.

inculcates φιλανθρωπία, whereas there he was enumerating the privileges of the priests. See also Spec. Leg. iv. 99, where it is treated as a lesson in self-denial.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxvi. 1-11. Cf. Spec. Leg. ii. 215-220.

PHILO

- 96 Πάλιν ἐὰν ἴδῃς, φησί, τινὸς τῶν οἰκείων ἢ φίλων ἢ συνόλως ὧν οἶδας ἀνθρώπων ὑποζύγιον ἐν ἐρημίᾳ πλανώμενον, ἀπαγαγὼν ἀπόδος· καὶ ἄρα τύχη μακρὰν ἀφεστὼς ὁ δεσπότης, μετὰ τῶν σαυτοῦ διαφύλαξον, ἄχρις ἂν ἐπανελθὼν κομίσηται παρακαταθήκην ἣν οὐκ ἔδωκεν, ἀλλ' ἦν αὐτὸς ἐξευρῶν ἔνεκα φυσικῆς κοινωνίας ἀποδίδως.
- 97 XIX. Τὰ δὲ περὶ τοῦ ἐβδόμου ἔτους νομοθετηθέντα, καθ' ὃ δεῖ τὴν μὲν χώραν ἀνίσθαι πᾶσαν ἀργὴν ἀφιεμένην, τοὺς δὲ πένητας ἀδεῶς τοῖς τῶν πλουσίων χωρίοις ἐπιβατεύειν δρεψομένους τὸν ἀπαυτοματισθέντα καρπὸν, δώρημα φύσεως, ἀρ' 98 οὐ χρηστὰ καὶ φιλόανθρωπα; ἔξαετίαν, φησίν, ἀπολαύετῶσαν οἱ κτήτορες ἀνθ' ὧν ἐκτήσαντο καὶ ἐγεωπόνησαν, ἕνα δὲ ἐνιαυτὸν ἔβδομον οἱ ἀκτήμονες καὶ ἀχρήματοι, μηδενὸς τῶν κατὰ γεωργίαν ἐπιτελεσθέντος· ἄδικον γὰρ ἦν, ἑτέρους μὲν πονεῖν, ἑτέρους δὲ καρποῦσθαι· ἀλλ' ἵνα τρόπον τινὰ τῶν χωρίων ἀδεσπότην ἐαθέντων, μὴ συνεφαψαμένης γεωργίας, ἄρτιαι καὶ πλήρεις αἱ χάριτες ἐκ θεοῦ 99 μόνου γίνωνται προαπαντῶσαι<sup>1</sup> τοῖς δεομένοις.
- [392] τί δ' ὅσα | περὶ τοῦ πεντηκοστοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ διατέτακται, οὐχὶ πᾶσαν ὑπερβάλλει φιλανθρωπίαν; καὶ τίς οὐκ ἂν εἴποι τῶν μὴ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προσαπαντῶσαι.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxii. 1. LXX "When thou seest the calf of thy brother or his sheep wandering in the way, do not overlook them; thou shalt surely turn them back to thy brother and restore them."

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. xxii. 2 "And if thy brother do not come nigh to thee and thou dost not know him, thou shalt bring it to thy

222

ON THE VIRTUES, 96-99

Again he says, if you see a beast belonging to one 96 of your relations or friends, or in general to a person you know, straying in the wilderness, take it away and restore it<sup>a</sup>; and if the owner is away at a distance, keep it carefully with your own, until on his return he can receive it as a deposit which he did not give, but which you, the finder, yourself restore through natural neighbourly feeling.<sup>b</sup>

XIX. Then there is the legislation on the seventh 97 year, which enacts that all the land should be left during that year to stand idle, and that the poor may resort securely to the estates of the rich to gather the gift of nature, the fruit which springs without cultivation.<sup>c</sup> Does not this show charity and humanity?
For six years, says the law, the owners should have 98 the enjoyment in virtue of their ownership and labour on the land. But during one year, the seventh, when nothing in the way of cultivation has been performed, that enjoyment goes to those who have no landed possessions nor money. For it was felt to be unjust that some persons should labour and others have the produce. What is intended is that since the estates have been left, in a sense, without masters, and husbandry has had no hand in the work, the free gifts which come from God alone should come full and complete anticipating the wants of the needy.
Again, in all the rules prescribed for the fiftieth year, 99 do we not find the utmost height of humanity? Who house, and they shall be with thee until thy brother seek for them and thou shalt restore them to him."

<sup>c</sup> Ex. xxiii. 10, 11, Lev. xxv. 3 ff. The subject has been treated very fully in Spec. Leg. ii. 86-109, and the last six of these sections dwell on the same aspect of the law, on which he insists here. We can here find less excuse than usual for the repetition.

PHILO

- χείλεσιν ἄκροισ ἀπογευσαμένων τῆς νομοθεσίας, ἄλλ' ἐπὶ πλέον ἐστιαθέντων καὶ ἐντρυφησάντων
- 100 ἡδίστοις ἅμα καὶ καλλίστοις δόγμασιν; ἐπιτελείται μὲν γὰρ ἅ καὶ τῷ ἐβδόμῳ, προσείληφε δὲ ἔτι μείζονα, ἀνάληψιν τῶν ἰδίων κτημάτων, ἃ διὰ καιροὺς ἀβουλήτους παρεχώρησαν ἑτέροις· οὔτε γὰρ παγκτησίαν ἔχειν τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἐφήησι, τὰς εἰς πλεονεξίαν ἐπιφράττων ὁδοὺς ἕνεκα τοῦ στείλαι τὴν ἐπίβουλον καὶ πάντων κακῶν αἰτίαν ἐπιθυμίαν, οὔτε τοὺς κληρούχους εἰς ἅπαν ῥήθη χρῆναι τῶν οἰκείων ἀποστερεῖσθαι, πενίας<sup>1</sup> διδόντας δίκας, ἣν κολάζεσθαι μὲν οὐ θέμις, ἐλεεῖσθαι δὲ ἀναγκαῖον.
- 101 ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἄλλα μυρία τῶν ἐν μέρει διατεταγμένων πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοεθνεῖς χρηστὰ καὶ φιλόανθρωπα, ὧν ἀποχρώντως ἐν ταῖς προτέραις συντάξεσιν ἐπιμνησθεῖς ἀρκεσθήσομαι τοῖς ἀρτίως εἰρημένοις, ἃ δείγματος ἕνεκα καιρίως προσπαρέλαβον.
- 102 XX. Νομοθετήσας δὲ περὶ τῶν ὁμοεθνῶν καὶ τοὺς ἐπηλύτας οἶεται δεῖν προνομίας τῆς πάσης ἀξιούσθαι, γενεὰν μὲν τὴν ἀφ' αἵματος καὶ πατρίδα καὶ ἔθνη καὶ ἱερὰ καὶ ἀφιδρύματα θεῶν γέρα τε καὶ τιμὰς ἀπολελοιπότας, καλὴν δ' ἀποικίαν στείλαμένους τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν μυθικῶν πλασμάτων πρὸς τὴν ἀληθείας ἐνάργειαν καὶ τὸν σεβασμὸν τοῦ ἑνὸς
- 103 καὶ ὄντως ὄντος θεοῦ. κελεύει δὴ τοῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους ἀγαπᾶν τοὺς ἐπηλύτας, μὴ μόνον ὡς φίλους

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey for mss. πενία. This, though retained by Cohn, is hardly compatible with οὐ θέμις κολάζεσθαι. The punishment cannot be punished. The poverty here spoken of is not that to come if their property is not restored, but that which they have undergone. Cohn while printing πενία would like to add μακρᾶ from the paraphrase of Clement, which I think he misunderstands. See App. p. 445.

ON THE VIRTUES, 99-103

would not agree to this, if he belongs to the company which has not just tasted and sipped the contents of the law, but has feasted abundantly and revelled in its most sweet and lovely principles? The measures 100 taken in the seventh year are repeated, but he adds others even greater, by which possessions ceded to others through untoward circumstances are returned to the original owners.<sup>a</sup> He does not allow the purchasers to have absolute possession of what belongs to others, thus barring the roads to covetousness, in order to curb that insidious foe and source of all evils, desire. And also he did not think it right that the original holders should be deprived of their own for ever, and so pay a penalty for their poverty, which cannot justly be visited with punishment, but must on every ground receive compassion. The particular 101 enactments include a host of others bearing on conduct to fellow-countrymen, but as I have sufficiently noted them in my former treatises, I will content myself with those just mentioned, which I have added as examples suitable to prove my point.

XX. Having laid down laws for members of the 102 same nation, he holds that the incomers too should be accorded every favour and consideration as their due, because abandoning their kinsfolk by blood, their country, their customs and the temples and images of their gods, and the tributes and honours paid to them, they have taken the journey to a better home, from idle fables to the clear vision of truth and the worship of the one and truly existing God. <sup>b</sup> He 103 commands all members of the nation to love the incomers, not only as friends and kinsfolk but as them-

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxv. 8 ff. Cf. Spec. Leg. ii. 111 ff.

<sup>b</sup> See Spec. Leg. iv. 178.

PHILO

- καὶ συγγενεῖς ἀλλὰ καὶ ὡς ἑαυτούς, κατὰ τε σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, <κατὰ μὲν σῶμα> ὡς οἶόν τε κοινοπραγοῦντας, κατὰ δὲ τὴν διάνοιαν τὰ αὐτὰ λυπομένους τε καὶ χαίροντας, ὡς ἐν διαιρετοῖς μέρεσιν ἐν εἶναι ζῶον δοκεῖν, ἀρμοζομένης καὶ συμφυεῖς<sup>1</sup>
- 104 ἀπεργαζομένης τῆς κατ' αὐτὸ κοινωνίας. οὐκ ἐστ' ἂν εἴποιμι περὶ σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν καὶ ἐσθῆτος καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα περὶ δίαιταν καὶ τὰς ἀναγκαίας χρείας, ἃ τοῖς ἐπηλύτοις δίδωσιν ὁ νόμος παρὰ τῶν αὐτοχθόνων· ἔπεται γὰρ ταῦτα πάντα θεσμοῖς τοῖς τῆς εὐνοίας τοῦ στέργοντος ὁμοίως [ἀγαπῶντος] τὸν ἐπήλυτον ὡς ἑαυτόν.
- 105 XXI. Ἔτι τοίνυν ἐπιτείνων καὶ ἐπελαύνων ὀλκὸν φύσει πρᾶγμα, φιλανθρωπίαν, διατάττεται καὶ περὶ μετοίκων, ἀξίων τοὺς μετανάστας ἐν καιροῖς γενομένους ἀπονέμειν τινὰ τοῖς ὑποδεξαμένοις τιμὴν, εὖ μὲν πεποικηκόσι καὶ φιλοξένως προσενεχθεῖσι [393] πᾶσαν, | εἰ δὲ μηδὲν ἔξω τῆς ὑποδοχῆς παράσχοιεν, μετριωτέραν· τὸ γὰρ ἐνορμίσασθαι πόλει μηδὲν προσηκούση, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ τὸ ἐπιβῆναι ἐδάφους αὐτὸ μόνον ἀλλοτρίου καθ' αὐτὸ δωρεὰ τίς ἐστιν

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read συμφυεῖς. See note b.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xix. 33, 34. LXX "The stranger (προσῆλυτος) that comes to you shall be as the native (αὐτόχθων) among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself, because you were strangers (προσῆλυτοι) in the land of Egypt." Philo ignores the obvious fact that the last clause shows that proselytes in his sense are not intended. Cf. Deut. x. 19.

<sup>b</sup> The translation accepts the mss. συμφυεῖς, but I should prefer to read συμφυεῖς, "united in a common nature." It is they, not the ζῶον, which are rendered συμφυεῖς by the fellowship.

ON THE VIRTUES, 103-105

selves both in body and soul<sup>a</sup> : in bodily matters, by acting as far as may be for their common interest ; in mental by having the same griefs and joys, so that they may seem to be the separate parts of a single living being which is compacted and unified by their fellowship in it.<sup>b</sup> I will not go on to speak of the food 104 and drink and raiment and all the rights concerning daily life and necessary needs, which the law assigns to incomers as due from the native born, for all these follow the statutes, which speak of the friendliness shown by him who loves the incomer even as himself.<sup>c</sup>

XXI. Again he extends the influence which 105 humanity naturally exerts and carries it farther afield in his instructions about settlers.<sup>d</sup> He would have those who have immigrated under stress of circumstances, pay some honour to the people which has accepted them, in every possible way if the admission is accompanied by kind and hospitable treatment, in a more moderate degree if it is confined to mere acceptance. For the grant of a harbour in an alien state, or rather the mere permission to set foot on foreign soil is in itself a sufficient boon for <sup>c</sup> Philo may be alluding to the laws which give the stranger (1) enjoyment of the sabbath (fourth commandment), (2) right to eat the passover if circumcised (Ex. xii. 48), (3) share in the cities of refuge (Num. xxxv. 15), (4) in offering sacrifices (Num. xv. 14-16). They are included in the covenant (Deut. xxix. 11), in reading the law (Deut. xxxi. 12), in the gleaning left to the poor (Lev. xix. 10), and the "meat" provided by the sabbatical year (Lev. xxv. 6).

<sup>d</sup> Philo here distinguishes between the "incomers" or "proselytes," and the μέτοικοι, who are not at any rate in the first instance co-religionists. Apparently this is based on the different tone in Deut. xxiii., from which he quotes lower down, excluding some races from the congregation altogether and admitting others only in a later generation.

PHILO

- 106 ἀποχρῶσα τοῖς μὴ δυναμένοις τὴν ἰδίαν οἰκεῖν. ὁ δέ γε προσυπερβάλλων τοὺς ἐπιεικειάς ὄρους αὐτῆς οἶται δεῖν καὶ τοῖς κακῶς πεποιηκόσι τῶν ξενοδόχων μὴ μνησικακεῖν, εἰ καὶ μὴ τὰς πράξεις, ὄνομα γοῦν ἔχουσι φιλάνθρωπον. ἄντικρυς γοῦν φησιν· “οὐ βδελύξῃ Αἰγύπτιον, ὅτι πάροικος
- 107 ἐγένου κατ’ Αἴγυπτον.” καίτοι τί κακὸν παρέλιπον οἱ Αἰγύπτιοι, ὃ μὴ τῷ ἔθνει προσετρίψαντο, νέα παλαιοῖς συνυφαίνοντες αἰεὶ κεκαινουργημέναις ἐπινοίαις εἰς ὠμότητα; ἀλλ’ ὅμως ἐπειδὴ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐδέξαντο τὰς πόλεις οὐκ ἀποκλείσαντες οὐδὲ τὴν χώραν ἄβατον τοῖς ἤκουσι παρασκευάσαντες, ἐχέτωσαν προνομίαν, φησί, τῆς ὑποδοχῆς τὸ ἔνσπονδον·
- 108 κἂν εἴ τις ἐθελήσειαν αὐτῶν μεταλλάξασθαι πρὸς τὴν Ἰουδαίων πολιτείαν, οὐχ ὡς ἐχθρῶν παῖδας ἀσυμβάτως σκορακιστέον, ἀλλ’ οὕτως προσεκτέον, ὡς τρίτην γενεὰν καλεῖν τε εἰς ἐκκλησίαν καὶ μεταδιδόναι λόγων θείων, οἷς θέμις καὶ τοὺς αὐτόχθονας καὶ εὐπατρίδας ἱεροφαντεῖσθαι.
- 109 XXII. Ταῦτα μὲν ὑπὲρ τῶν ὑποδεξαμένων [πρὸς] τοὺς μετοίκους νομοθετεῖ· χρηστὰ δ’ ἕτερα καὶ μεστὰ ἡμερότητος ὑπὲρ πολεμίων. ἀξιοὶ γὰρ αὐτούς, κἂν ἐπὶ θύραις ὦσιν ἤδη τοῖς τείχεσιν ἐφεστῶτες ἐν ταῖς πανοπλίαις καὶ τὰς ἐλεπόλεις ἐφιστάντες, μήπω νομίζεσθαι πολεμίους, ἄχρῃς ἂν αὐτούς ἐπικηρυκευσάμενοι προκαλέσωνται πρὸς εἰρήνην, ἢν εἰ μὲν ἐνδοίεν, τὸ μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν εὐροίεν, φιλίαν, εἰ δὲ ἀπειθέστερον ἐναντιοῖντο, συμμαχίαν τὴν τοῦ δικαίου προσειληφότες ἐλπίδι

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxiii. 7.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xx. 10 ff. This section merely repeats what has been said in Spec. Leg. iv. 219-222.

ON THE VIRTUES, 106-109

those who are unable to dwell in their own. Mere 106 fairness itself demands thus much, but he goes beyond its limits, when he considers that no malice should be borne to those whose hospitality to strangers is followed by maltreatment, for nominally they are humane though their actions are not. Thus he says without reservation, "Thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian because thou wast a sojourner in Egypt" <sup>a</sup> ; and yet what maltreatment did the Egyptians spare 107 to inflict on the nation, ever combining old and new outrages in their ingenious devices for wreaking their cruelty? Still since originally they received the nation and did not close their cities against them, nor make their country inaccessible to the newcomers, they should, he says, in recognition of this acceptance be admitted as a privilege to terms of amity. And 108 if any of them should wish to pass over into the Jewish community, they must not be spurned with an unconditional refusal as children of enemies, but be so far favoured that the third generation is invited to the congregation and made partakers in the divine revelations, to which also the native born, whose lineage is beyond reproach, are rightfully admitted.

XXII. These are the laws which he lays down on 109 the conduct to be observed in accepting settlers, but there are other charitable and very merciful regulations as to the treatment of enemies in wartime.<sup>b</sup>
They must not he declares be yet regarded as enemies, even if they are at the gates or stationed beside the walls in full array and planting their engines, until envoys have been sent with invitations to peace, so that if they yield they may obtain the supreme boon of friendship, but if they refuse to listen and continue their opposition, you may with justice to reinforce

PHILO

- 110 νίκης ἐπίωσι πρὸς ἄμυναν. ἦν μέντοι καὶ ἐκ προνομῆς εὐμόρφου γυναικὸς εἰς ἐπιθυμίαν ἔλθης, μὴ ὡς αἰχμαλώτῳ, φησὶν, ἐναπερύγῃς τὸ πάθος, ἀλλ' ἡμερώτερον οἰκτισάμενος τῆς μεταβολῆς ἐπικούφισον τὴν συμφορὰν, μεθαρμοσάμενος πάντα πρὸς
- 111 τὸ βέλτιον. ἐπικουφιεῖς δὲ τὰς μὲν τῆς κεφαλῆς τρίχας ἀποκείρας, περιελὼν δὲ ὄνυχας, ἀπαμφιάσας δὲ τὴν ἐσθῆτα ἦν ἔχουσα ἐζωγρήθη, τριάκοντα δὲ ἡμέρας ἀνεῖς καὶ ἐπιτρέψας αὐτῇ πενθήσαι καὶ ἀποδακρῦσαι μετὰ ἀδείας πατέρα καὶ μητέρα καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους οἰκείους, ὧν ἀπεξεύχθη τεθνεώτων ἢ θανάτου χείρους ὑπομενόντων τὰς ἐν δουλείᾳ συμφορὰς· μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα ὡς γαμετῇ νόμῳ συνέρχου.
- [394] 112 τὴν γὰρ μέλλουσαν εὐνῆς ἀνδρὸς ἐπιβήσεσθαι, μὴ κατὰ μισθαρνίαν ὡς ἑταίραν τὸ τῆς ὥρας ἄνθος καπηλεύουσαν ἀλλ' ἢ δι' ἔρωτα τοῦ συνιόντος ἢ διὰ τέκνων γένεσιν, ὅσιον θεσμῶν τῶν ἐπὶ τελείους
- 113 γάμοις ἀξιουῖσθαι. πάννυ καλῶς διαταξάμενος ἕκαστα· πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ οὐκ εἶασεν ἀχάλινον φέρεσθαι τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ἀπαυχενίζουσαν, ἀλλ' ἐστείλατο τὸ σφοδρὸν αὐτῆς ἡμέρας τριάκοντα χαλάσας. δεῦτερον δὲ τὸν ἔρωτα βασανίζει, πότερον ἐπιμανῆς καὶ ἀψίκορος καὶ ὄλος τοῦ πάθους ἐστὶν ἢ μετέχει τῆς καθαρωτέρας ἰδέας, ἀνακεκραμένου λογισμοῦ· λογισμὸς γὰρ πεδήσει τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν οὐδὲν ὑβριστικὸν εἶσας αὐτὴν ἐξεργάσασθαι,
- 114 ἀλλὰ τὴν μηνιαίαν προθεσμίαν ἐπισχεῖν. τρίτον δὲ ἐλεεῖ τὴν αἰχμάλωτον, εἰ μὲν παρθένος ἐστίν, ὅτι γονεῖς οὐκ ἐγγυῶσι τὴν εὐκταιοτάτην ἀρμοζόμενοι σύνοδον, εἰ δὲ χήρα, διότι τοῦ κουριδίου

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxi. 10-13.

ON THE VIRTUES, 109-114

you advance to defend yourselves in the hope of victory. Further,<sup>a</sup> he says, if you find among the 110 booty a comely woman for whom you feel a desire, do not treat her as a captive, and vent your passion on her, but in a gentler spirit pity her for her change of lot and alleviate her misfortunes by changing her condition for the better in every way. And you will 111 give this alleviation if you shave the hair of her head and pare her nails<sup>b</sup> and take off the garment which she wore when captured, leave her alone for thirty days, and allow her without fear of disturbance to mourn and weep for her father and mother and the rest of her family, from whom she had been parted either through their death or because they are suffering the pains of slavery, which are worse than death. After this, live with her as your lawful wife, 112 because holiness requires that she who is to enter a husband's bed, not as a hired harlot, trafficking her youthful bloom, but either for love of her mate or for the birth of children, should be admitted to the rights of full wedlock as her due. Each of these regulations 113 is quite admirable. First he did not allow rebellious desire to go unbridled, but curbed its violence by the thirty days grant of liberty. Secondly, he tests whether the man's love is wild and giddy and wholly inspired by passion, or contains an element of reason and so has something of the purer kind. For reason will fetter desire and, instead of allowing it to commit an outrage, compel it to wait for the appointed period of a month. Thirdly, he shows pity for the captive, 114 if she is a maiden, because there are no parents to plight her and make fast the union which they have so longed to see, if she is a widow, because bereft of

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 446.

PHILO

- στερομένη πείραν ἑτέρου μελλήσει λαβεῖν, καὶ ταῦτ' ἐπανατειναμένου τὸν δεσποτικὸν φόβον, κἄν ἰσότητα ἐπιτηδεύῃ· τὸ γὰρ ὑπακοῦον αἰεὶ τὴν τοῦ κρατοῦντος, κἄν ἡμερώτερον ἦ, δέδιεν ἰσχύν.
- 115 ἔαν δέ τις τῆς ἐπιθυμίας ἀποπληρωθεὶς καὶ διακορῆς γενόμενος μηκέτι κοινωεῖν ὀμίλιας ἀξιοὶ τῆς πρὸς τὴν αἰχμάλωτον, οὐ ζημιοῖ μάλλον αὐτὸν ἢ νουθετεῖ καὶ σωφρονίζει πρὸς βελτίωσιν ἡθῶν· κελεύει γὰρ μήτε πιπράσκειν μήτ' ἔτι δούλην ἔχειν, ἀλλὰ χαρίζεσθαι μὲν ἐλευθερίαν αὐτῇ, χαρίζεσθαι δὲ καὶ τὴν ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας ἀπαλλαγὴν ἀδεᾶ, ὡς μὴ γυναικὸς ἑτέρας ἐπεισελθούσης ἐξ ἔριδος, οἷα φιλεῖ, κατὰ ζηλοτυπίαν πάθη τι τῶν ἀνηκέστων, ἅμα καὶ τοῦ δεσπότου καινοτέροις φίλτροις ὑπηγμένου καὶ τῶν παλαιότερων ἀλογοῦντος.
- 116 XXIII. Ἔτερα δ' ἐφ' ἑτέροις ἐπαντλῶν ὡσὶ φιληκόοις εἰς ἡμερότητα προστάττει, κἄν ἐχθρῶν ὑποζύγια ἀχθοφοροῦντα τῷ βάρει πιεσθέντα προπέση, μὴ παρελθεῖν, ἀλλὰ συνεπικουφίσαι καὶ συνεγείραι, πόρρωθεν ἀναδιδάσκων τὸ μὴ τοῖς ἀβουλήτοις τῶν ἐχθρανάντων ἐφήδεσθαι, βαρῦμνη πάθος ἐπιχαιρεκακίαν εἰδώς, ἀδελφὸν ὁμοῦ καὶ ἀντίπαλον φθόνου, συγγενὲς μὲν ὅτι ἐκ πάθους ἐκάτερον καὶ γένοιτ' ἂν ἄμφω περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν προσερχόμενα καὶ μόνον οὐ κατακολουθοῦντα ἀλλήλοις, ἀντίπαλον δὲ ὅτι ὁ μὲν ἐπὶ τοῖς τοῦ πέλας

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxi. 14. F.V. "Thou shalt not deal with her as a slave." LXX οὐκ ἀθετήσεις αὐτήν. See App. p. 446.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxiii. 5. Cf. Deut. xxii. 4.

<sup>c</sup> It is to be regretted that English has not a single word for this like the German "Schadenfreude."

<sup>d</sup> Lit. "coming upon us about the same things," i.e. the

ON THE VIRTUES, 114-116

her wedded mate, she is about to make trial of another, menaced too by the dread of a master, even if he deals with her as an equal; for the subject condition always fears the might of the superior even though it be tempered with gentleness.

And if anyone, having satisfied his desire to the full<sup>115</sup> and surfeited therewith, is no longer minded to continue his association with the captive, the law imposes what is not so much a loss of property as an admonition and correction leading him to improve his ways.<sup>a</sup> For it bids him not sell her, nor yet keep her as a slave, but grant her freedom, and grant her, too, the right to depart in security from the house, lest if another wife comes in to supersede her, and quarrels ensue as they often do, this jealousy, with the master too under the sway of the charms of a new love and neglectful of the old, may bring her some fatal disaster.

XXIII. In another fresh list of injunctions to kindness, which he pours into docile ears, he commands that if beasts of burden fall under the oppression of the weight they bear, we should not pass them by, even if they belong to our enemies, but help to relieve and raise them.<sup>b</sup> By this he implies a further lesson, that one should not take pleasure in the adversities of those who have shown him hatred. He knew that this malignant joy<sup>c</sup> was a savagely rancorous passion, closely akin, and at the same time, opposite to envy; akin, because each of them comes under the head of passion, and in their action upon us cover the same field,<sup>d</sup> and are almost sure to follow each other; opposites, because grief at our neighbours' fortunes of our neighbours. Cohn takes τῶν αὐτῶν as masculine.

PHILO

- ἀγαθοῖς λύπην, ἣ δὲ ἐπὶ τοῖς τοῦ πλησίον κακοῖς 117 ἡδονὴν ἀπεργάζεται. κὰν πλανώμενον μέντοι, [395] φησίν, ἐχθροῦ τινος | ἴδης ὑποζύγιον, τὰ τῆς δια-φορᾶς παραλιπὼν ὑπεκκαύματα βαρυτέροις ἤθεσιν ἀπαγαγὼν ἀπόδος. οὐ γὰρ ἐκείνον μᾶλλον ὄνησεις ἢ σεαυτόν, ἐπειδὴ τῷ μὲν ἄλογον ζῶον καὶ οὐδενὸς ἴσως ἄξιον περιγίνεται, σοὶ δὲ τὸ μέγιστον καὶ 118 τιμιώτατον τῶν ἐν τῇ φύσει, καλοκάγαθία. ἔπεται δὲ κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον ὡσπερ σκιά σώματι καὶ <ταύτη> τῆς ἐχθρας διάλυσις· ὁ τε γὰρ εὖ πεπονθὼς ἄκων ἄγεται πρὸς τὸ ἔνσπονδον χάριτι δουλωθεὶς, ὁ τε ὠφελικῶς συμβούλῳ χρώμενος καλῇ πράξει σχεδὸν ἤδη πρὸς καταλλαγὰς τὴν διάνοιαν τέτραπ-119 ται. τοῦτο δὲ μάλιστα βούλεται διὰ πάσης τῆς νομοθεσίας ὁ ἱερώτατος προφήτης κατασκευάζειν, ὁμόνοιαν, κοινωνίαν, ὁμοφροσύνην, κρᾶσιν ἡθῶν, ἐξ ὧν οἰκίαι καὶ πόλεις ἔθνη τε καὶ χῶραι καὶ τὸ σύμπαν ἀνθρώπων γένος εἰς τὴν ἀνωτάτω προέλθοιεν 120 εὐδαιμονίαν. ἀλλ' ἄχρι μὲν τοῦ παρόντος ταῦτ' εἰσὶν εὐχαί· γενήσεται δέ, ὡς γε ἑμαυτὸν πείθω, καὶ ἔργα ἀψευδέστατα, τοῦ θεοῦ παρασχόντος ὡσπερ ἔτησίους καρποὺς εὐφορίαν ἀρεταῖς, ὧν μὴ ἀμοιρήσασιν οἱ τὸν πόθον αὐτῶν σχεδὸν ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡλικίας περιφέροντες.
- 121 XXIV. Ἄ μὲν οὖν ἐπ' ἐλευθέρους ἔγνω, ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις ἐστὶ παραπλήσια. συνῶδὰ δ' ὡς ἔοικε καὶ περὶ δούλων νομοθετεῖ, πάλιν τῶν συντει-νόντων εἰς ἡμερότητα καὶ φιλανθρωπίαν καὶ τούτοις

ON THE VIRTUES, 116-121

bour's good things is the effect of the one, pleasure at his evil things of the other. Again, if you see an enemy's beast straying, leave the points on which you quarrel to serve as incentives for other more vindictive dispositions, and lead the animal away and restore it.<sup>a</sup> You will benefit yourself more than him: he gains an irrational and possibly worthless animal, you the greatest and most precious treasure in the whole world, true goodness. And this, as surely as the shadow follows the body, will be followed by a termination of the feud. He, the receiver of a benefit which he has not willed, is drawn towards amity by the kindness which holds him in bondage. You, his helper, with a good action to assist your counsels, are predisposed to thoughts of reconciliation. This is what our most holy prophet through all his regulations especially desires to create, unanimity, neighbourliness, fellowship, reciprocity of feeling, whereby houses and cities and nations and countries and the whole human race may advance to supreme happiness. Hitherto, indeed, these things live only in our prayers, but they will, I am convinced, become facts beyond all dispute, if God, even as He gives us the yearly fruits, grants that the virtues should bear abundantly. And may some share in them be given to us, who from well-nigh our earliest days have carried with us the yearning to possess them.

XXIV. These and others similar to these are his judgements as applied to the free. In the same strain, as is evident, he legislates for slaves as well, and allows them also to benefit by measures conceived in a spirit <sup>a</sup> Ex. xxiii. 4. Philo rightly distinguishes this law from that of Deut. xxii. 1, which is concerned with a "brother's" animal, and has been treated in § 96.

PHILO

- 122 μεταδιδούς. θήτας μὲν οὖν ἔνεκα χρείας τῶν ἀναγκαίων ὑποβεβληκότας ἑαυτοὺς ἄλλων ὑπηρεσίαις οἶεται δεῖν ἀνάξιον μηδὲν ὑπομένειν τῆς ἐκ γένους ἐλευθερίας, παραινῶν τοῖς τυγχάνουσι τῆς διακονίας εἰς τὸ τῆς τύχης ἀτέκμαρτον ἀφορᾶν καὶ λαμβάνειν αἰδῶ τῆς μεταβολῆς· τοὺς δ' ἐξ ἑφημερινῶν δανείων χρεώστας τὸ τῆς προσβολῆς<sup>1</sup> ὄνομα καὶ πάθος ὑποδύντας ἢ καὶ τοὺς ἀνάγκη βιαστικωτέρᾳ γενομένους ἐξ ἐλευθέρων δούλους οὐκ εἰς ἅπαν κακοπραγεῖν ἐᾶ διδοὺς ἐκεχειρίαν τούτοις
- 123 τὴν εἰς ἅπαν ἐνιαυτῷ ἐβδόμῳ. τοῖς μὲν γὰρ δανεισταῖς οὐ κομισαμένοις τὸ χρέος ἢ τρόπον<sup>2</sup> ἕτερον κτησαμένοις τοὺς πρότερον ἐλευθέρους ἐξαρκεῖ, φησί, χρόνος εἰς ὑπηρεσίαν ἐξαετία· οἱ δὲ μὴ γένει δούλοι χρηστῆς ἐλπίδος μὴ εἰς ἅπαν ἀμοιρείωσαν, ἀλλ' ἴτωσαν ἐπὶ τὴν παλαιὰν ἄδειαν, ἧς
- 124 διὰ καιροὺς ἀβουλήτους ἐστέρηντο. κἂν ἐκ τρι-
[396] γονίας μὲν, | φησί, δούλος ἐτέρου φόβῳ δεσποτικῶν

<sup>1</sup> The mss. vary between this and προβολῆς, περιβολῆς, παραβολῆς, and one has δουλείας. See note c.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn after S. Other mss. πρὸ τῶν, πρὸς τὸν (in both cases omitting ἢ), and ἢ τοῖς τρόπον. This last seems to me to be preferable to that of S. The persons who acquired slaves in some other way than as payment of a debt are not creditors.

---

<sup>a</sup> These no doubt are the same as those mentioned in Spec. Leg. ii. 79, who according to the command in Lev. xxv. 39, 40 (which Philo there has in mind, rather than as stated in the footnote Deut. xv. 12) are to be regarded as μισθωτοί. But the relations of these to the debtors next mentioned are

236

ON THE VIRTUES, 122-124

of kindness and humanity. The serfs <sup>a</sup> who through 122 the lack of the necessaries of life have subjected themselves to servitude to others ought not he holds to suffer anything unworthy of the freedom to which they were born, and he exhorts those who obtain their services to consider how incalculable is fortune and to respect their changed condition. As for the debtors, who through temporary loans <sup>b</sup> have sunk into bearing both the name and the painfulness which their cruel situation <sup>c</sup> entails, and those whom a more imperious compulsion has brought from freedom into slavery, he would not allow them to remain for ever in their evil plight, but gave them total remission in the seventh year. For creditors who have not re- 123 covered the debt, or have gained possession in some other way of those who were formerly free should be content, he says, with six years as a time for their service, and those who were not born to slavery should not be altogether deprived of comforting hope, but should pass back to the old independence of which they were deprived through adverse circumstances. And if another man's slave, it may be 124 with two generations of slavery behind him, takes puzzling. For a discussion of this and some other points, or perhaps rather a statement of the questions that arise, see App. p. 446.

<sup>b</sup> If this is right, and the reference is to loans which the borrower expects and promises to pay shortly, it is an unusual sense for the word, though it is applied to brief and shortlived men and things.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "the attack" or "visitation," again a strange use.
All that can be said is that it is even less possible to give a satisfactory meaning to the variants mentioned in note 1.
What the "name" and "painfulness" are that are entailed by it is also obscure. Possibly δοῦλος and δουλεία. See also App. p. 446.

PHILO

ἀπειλῶν ἢ συνειδήσει τινῶν ἀμαρτημάτων ἢ μηδὲν ἡδικηκῶς, ἀμειλίκτω καὶ ὠμοθύμῳ χρώμενος ἄλλως δεσπότη, πρὸς <σέ> καταφύγη τευξόμενος ἐπικουρίας, μὴ περιιῆης· ἐκδιδόναι γὰρ ἰκέτας οὐχ ὄσιον, ἰκέτης δὲ καὶ ὁ δοῦλος ὥσπερ εἰς ἱερὸν τὴν σὴν ἐστίαν καταπεφευγῶς, ἐν ἧ δίκαιόν ἐστιν ἀσυλίας τυγχάνειν, μάλιστα μὲν εἰς ἀδόλους ἐλθὼν καταλλαγὰς τὰς χωρὶς ἐνέδρας, εἰ δὲ μή, τὸ γοῦν πανύστατον πραθεῖς· ἀλλαγαὶ γὰρ αἱ τῶν δεσποτῶν ἄδηλον ὅπου τὴν ῥοπήν ἔξουσι, τοῦ δ' ὁμολογουμένου κουφότερον τὸ ἄδηλον κακόν.

- 125 XXV. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν περὶ οἰκείων καὶ ἀλλοτρίων καὶ φίλων καὶ ἐχθρῶν καὶ δούλων καὶ ἐλευθέρων καὶ συνόλως ἀνθρώπων νομοθετεῖ. τὸ δὲ ἐπιεικὲς καὶ ἡμερον καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ἀλόγων ζώων φύσιν ἄγει μεταδιδούς καὶ τούτοις, ὥσπερ ἀπὸ
 126 πηγῆς εὐμενοῦς<sup>1</sup> ἀρύσασθαί τι χρηστόν.<sup>2</sup> κελεύει γὰρ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέροις ἀγέλαις, κατὰ τε ποιίμνας καὶ αἰπόλια καὶ βουκόλια, τῆς παραχρῆμα τῶν γεννωμένων ἀπολαύσεως ἀπέχεσθαι, μήτε πρὸς ἐδωδὴν

<sup>1</sup> Mangey wished to read ἀενάου, and Cohn in his translation approved. But εὐμενής applied to things is common enough, e.g. to air, plants, and even to the water of a river (Aeschylus). See examples in Stephanus.

<sup>2</sup> So one ms. The others τινος χρηστοῦ, which Cohn retained, but in his translation accepted τι χρηστόν. The genitive of the thing drawn as opposed to the source from which it is drawn seems hardly possible.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxiii. 15, 16 "Thou shalt not deliver to his master a servant who coming (E.V. which is escaped) from his

ON THE VIRTUES, 124-126

refuge with you to obtain protection in fear of his master's threats or through consciousness of some misdeed, or because without having committed any offence, he has found his master generally cruel and merciless, do not disregard his plea.<sup>a</sup> For it is a sacrilegious act to surrender a suppliant and the slave is a suppliant who has fled to your hearth as to a temple, where he has a right to obtain sanctuary, and protected from treachery may preferably come to an honest and open agreement, or if that is not possible, be sold as a last resort. For though in changing masters there is no certainty which way the scale will turn, the uncertain evil is not so grave as the acknowledged.

XXV. This is his legislation about compatriots and 125 foreigners, about friends and enemies, about slaves and free and mankind in general. But he carries on the idea of moderation and gentleness to the sphere of irrational animals, and grants them, too, a draught of goodness, as from a sweet and grateful spring. He 126 bids them in dealing with the domestic kinds, sheep, goats and oxen, to abstain from availing themselves of their young, by taking them at once either for food master has joined himself to thee. He shall dwell with thee, he shall dwell among you, wherever it pleaseth him. Thou shalt not afflict him." Philo interprets this ordinance, which is supposed to apply to a slave escaping from a foreign master, in accordance with Attic law. See App. p. 447.

By ἐκ τριγωνίας he does not mean, as Heinemann, Bildung, p. 344, seems to suppose, to limit this privilege to slaves of the third generation. Hitherto the ordinances he mentions have applied to others who are born free (οἱ μὴ γένει δοῦλοι, § 123). This privilege extends to those who have no such claim. The μέν is in antithesis to a suppressed statement that a fortiori those who are not born in slavery would be entitled to the same.

PHILO

μήτε ἐπὶ προφάσει θυσιῶν λαμβάνοντας. ὡμῆς γὰρ ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι ψυχῆς, ἐφεδρεύειν ἀποκνύσκομένοις εἰς ἀνυπέρθετον διάζευξιν ἐγγόνων τε αὐ καὶ μητέρων ἔνεκα γαστρὸς ἡδονῆς, μᾶλλον δὲ ἀηδίας ἐκτόπου τινὸς ψυχῆς<sup>1</sup> καὶ παρηλλαγμένης.

127 φησὶν οὖν τῷ βιωσομένῳ κατὰ τὴν ἱερωτάτην αὐτοῦ πολιτείαν· “ὦ γενναῖε, πολλή τίς ἐστὶν ἀφθονία σοι τῶν πρὸς ἀπόλαυσιν, οἷς μέμψις οὐ παρέπεται· συγγνωστὸν γὰρ ἂν ἦν ἴσως, ἐπειδὴ πολλὰ τῶν ἀβουλήτων ἢ ἀπορία καὶ σπάνις δρᾶν ἀναγκάζει. σὺ δὲ καὶ διαφέρεις εἰς ἐγκράτειαν καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀρετὰς ὀφείλεις τὴν καλλίστην τεταγμένος τάξιν, ὑπὸ ταξιάρχῃ τῷ τῆς φύσεως ὀρθῷ λόγῳ, δι’ ὃν ἡμερώσθαι σε δεῖ μηδὲν σκαιὸν τῇ διανοίᾳ παρα-

128 δεχόμενον.” τί δ’ ἂν εἴη σκαιότερον ἢ ταῖς περὶ τὴν ἀποκύησιν ὠδίσις ἐπιφέρειν ἕξωθεν ἐτέρας ἐκ τῆς παραχρήμα τῶν γεννωμένων διαζεύξεως; ἀνάγκη γὰρ σφαδάζειν ἀποσπωμένων, διὰ τινα φυσικὴν μητέρων πρὸς ἕγγονα φιλοστοργίαν, καὶ μάλιστα ὑπὸ τὸν τῆς κνήσεως καιρὸν, ἐπειδὴ πηγάζοντες οἱ μαστοὶ σπάνει τοῦ θηλάζοντος, ἀνα-κοπὴν τῆς ἐπιρροίας λαμβανούσης, σκιρροῦνται τε καὶ κατατεινόμενοι τῷ βάρει παγέντος εἴσω τοῦ γά-

129 λακτος ἀλγηδόσι πιέζονται. “χάρισαι δὴ,” φησί, “τῇ μητρὶ τὸ ἕγγονον, εἰ καὶ μὴ τὸν σύμπαντα
 [397] χρόνον, | ἑπτὰ γοῦν τὰς πρώτας ἡμέρας γαλακτο-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn following Mangey brackets ψυχῆς, but though the double genitives are awkward, it seems wanted as an antithesis to γαστρὸς. The expression anyhow is confused, as it is not the ἀηδία but the meal which causes it which is ἐκτοπος and παρηλλαγμένη.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxii. 27 “A calf or sheep or goat, whenever it is

ON THE VIRTUES, 126-129

or on the grounds of offering them for sacrifice.<sup>a</sup> For he considered that it showed a cruel soul to be lying in wait for the newly born in order to separate instantly mothers and offspring, just to please the belly but still more displease and horrify the soul by so unnatural a meal. He says then to him, whose 127 life would conform to his most holy commonwealth, "Good Sir, food for your enjoyment to which no blame can attach you have in abundance. Otherwise such an action might perhaps be pardonable, since poverty and dearth compel us to do many things which we would not. But your duty is to excel in self-restraint and the other virtues, stationed as you are in the most honourable of posts, captained by nature's right reason, for whose sake you must learn gentleness and admit no brutality into your mind." And what could be more brutal than to bring in from 128 outside other pangs to add to the pangs of travail by separating the mothers straightway from their offspring. For if they are snatched away, the mothers are bound to be in great distress, because of the maternal affection natural to them, particularly at the time of motherhood, when the breasts, whose flowing fountain is obstructed through lack of its suckling, grow indurated and strained by the weight of the milk coagulated within them and suffer a painful oppression. "Make a present," he continues, "of 129 the child to its mother, if not for all time, to be suckled, at least, for the seven first days and do not born, it shall be seven days under its dam, and on the eighth day and beyond it shall be accepted for gifts, for a burnt offering unto the Lord." Ex. xxii. 30 is to the same effect, though only of the firstborn. Assuming that it is humanity which excludes from the altar, Philo might fairly argue that still more would it prohibit them for ordinary eating.

PHILO

- τροφήσαι, καὶ μὴ ἀνωφελεῖς ἄς ἡ φύσις ὤμβρησε πηγὰς ἐν μαστοῖς ἐργάση, τὰς δευτέρας αὐτῆς χάριτας ἀνελών, ἄς ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ προμηθοῦς ἡτοιμάσατο τὰκόλουθον μακρόθεν αἰωνίῳ καὶ τε-
- 130 λεία φρονήσει κατιδοῦσα.<sup>1</sup> προτέρα μὲν γὰρ δωρεὰ γένεσις, δι' ἧς τὸ μὴ ὄν ἄγεται πρὸς τὸ εἶναι, δευτέρα δὲ γάλακτος ἐπίρροια, τροφή καιρίως μαλακωτάτη, πᾶν ἀπαλόνηχον ἄρδουσα, ὃ ποτόν ἐστιν ὁμοῦ καὶ σιτίον.—ὅσον μὲν γὰρ ὑδατῶδες τοῦ γάλακτος, ποτόν, ὅσον δ' ὑποπαχύνεται, σιτίον—προνοία τοῦ μὴ κακοπαθεῖν τὸ ἀρτίγονον, ἐφεδρευούσης αἰεὶ χρόνοις διαφέρουσιν ἐνδείας, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ μίαν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν προσφορὰν ἐκατέρας τροφῆς ἤδη τὰς πικρὰς δεσποίνας, δίψαν τε καὶ πείναν,
- 131 ἐκφεύγειν.” τοῦτον ἀναγνόντες τὸν νόμον, οἱ χρηστοὶ καὶ περιμάχητοι γονεῖς, ἐγκαλύψασθε, οἱ ἐπὶ τοῖς βρέφεσιν αἰεὶ φονῶντες, οἱ κακὴν ἐφεδρεύοντες ἐφεδρείαν τοῖς ἀποκυομένοις εἰς ἔκθεσιν, οἱ τοῦ σύμπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους ἄσπονδοι
- 132 πολέμιοι. τίνι γὰρ δι' εὐνοίας ἀφίξεσθε, γενόμενοι τῶν ἰδίων τέκνων αὐτόχειρες; οἱ τὰς πόλεις τό γ' ἐφ' ὑμῖν ἦκον μέρος ἐρημοῦντες, ἀπὸ τῶν ἐγγυτάτω γένους ἀρξάμενοι τῆς ἀπωλείας, οἱ τοὺς τῆς φύσεως θεσμοὺς ἀνατρέποντες καὶ ὅσα ἂν οἰκοδομῇ καθαιροῦντες, δι' ἀνημέρου καὶ ἀτιθάσου ψυχῆς ὠμό-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn punctuates with προτέρα to the second σιτίον as a parenthesis, thus making προνοία follow on ἡτοιμάσατο, an unnecessarily unwieldy parenthesis. προνοία easily follows on ἄρδουσα with equally good sense.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. “is always lying in wait at different times,” a confused expression which may mean as translated above, or 242

ON THE VIRTUES, 129-132

render useless the fountain which nature has rained into the breasts by destroying the second of the boons which her grace distributes, boons prepared by the profound forethought in which with everlasting and consummate wisdom she looks into the distant sequence of events. Her first gift was birth, through 130 which the non-existent is brought into existence, and the second is the efflux of milk, the happily timed aliment which flows so gently fostering the tender growth of every creature. It is at once food and drink, for the watery part of milk is drink, and its denser part food, both provided that the newly born should not suffer from the need, which, never far off, seizes it at different times,<sup>a</sup> but with both kinds of nourishment applied in the same single form should at once escape those bitter mistresses, hunger and thirst.” <sup>b</sup> Read this law, you good and 131 highly prized parents, and hide your faces for shame, you who ever breathe slaughter against your infants, who mount your wicked watch over them as they leave the womb, waiting to cast them away, you deadly enemies of the whole human race. For to 132 whom will you have any feeling of kindness, you the murderers of your own children, who do what you can to make a desolation of cities and begin the destruction with your own flesh and blood, who overturn the statutes of nature and demolish all that she builds, who in the cruelty of your savage and ferocious that it sometimes takes the form of hunger and sometimes of thirst.

<sup>b</sup> For these three sections cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 108 ff. As there, in the absence of any direct prohibition of infanticide, Philo argues its wickedness from the criminality ascribed to causing a miscarriage, so here from the mercy shown by the law to new-born animals.

PHILO

- τητα γενέσει φθορὰν καὶ ζωῆ θάνατον ἐπιτειχίζοντες.
- 133 ἢ οὐχ ὄρατε, ὅτι τῷ πάντα ἀρίστῳ νομοθέτῃ δι' ἐπιμελείας ἐγένετο μηδὲ τῶν ἀλόγων τὰ ἔγγονα διαζευχθῆναι τῆς τεκούσης, ἄχρις ἂν γαλακτοτροφηθῆ; τὸ πλεον, ὦ γενναῖοι, δι' ὑμᾶς, ἴν', εἰ καὶ μὴ τῇ φύσει, μαθήσει γοῦν ἀναδιδάσκησθε τὸ φιλοοῖκειον, εἰς ἄρνας καὶ ἐρίφους ἀποβλέποντες, οἳ ἐν ἀφθόνοις χορηγίαις τῶν ἀναγκαίων τρυφᾶν οὐ κεκῶλυνται, τῆς φύσεως μὲν τοιαῦτα παρασκευασαμένης ἐν ἐπιτηδειοτάτοις χωρίοις, ἐξ ὧν εὐμαρεῖς τοῖς δεησομένοις αἱ ἀπολαύσεις γενήσονται, νομοθέτου δὲ μετὰ πολλῆς προμηθείας ἐφορῶντος, ἵνα μηδεὶς ἐμποδίξῃ τὰς εὐεργέτιδας καὶ σωτηρίους τοῦ θεοῦ δωρεάς.
- 134 XXVI. Βουλόμενος δὲ πολυτρόποις ἰδέαις τὰ ἡμερότητος καὶ ἐπιεικείας σπέρματα ταῖς διανοίαις ἐγκατασπείρειν ἄλλο τίθησι διάταγμα συγγενὲς τοῖς [398] προτέροις, ἀπαγορεύων ἡμέρα τῇ αὐτῇ | συγκαταθύειν μητέρα καὶ ἔγγονον· καὶ γὰρ εἰ θυτέον, ἀλλ' οὖν ἐν χρόνοις γε διαφέρουσιν· ὑπερβολὴ γὰρ ἀγριότητος τὴν αἰτίαν τῆς γενέσεως μετὰ τοῦ ζωογονηθέντος ἡμέρα μιᾷ κτείνειν. καὶ τοῦτο τοῦ χάριν; ἢ γὰρ ἐπὶ προφάσει θυσιῶν ἢ διὰ γαστροδὸς ἀπολαυσιν· εἰ μὲν οὖν ἔνεκα θυσιῶν, ἐπέψυσται καὶ τοῦνομα· τὰ γὰρ τοιαῦτα σφάγια, οὐ θυσία. τίς δὲ δὴ καὶ θεοῦ βωμὸς οὕτως ἀνίερα ἱερεῖα προσδέξεται; ποῖον δὲ πῦρ οὐκ ἂν δίχα τμηθὲν ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ διασταίῃ φεῦγον τὴν ἐξ ἀμίκτου πράγματος ἔνωσιν; οἶμαι ἂν αὐτὸ μηδὲ πρὸς βραχύτατον ὑπομῆναι

ON THE VIRTUES, 132-135

souls arm dissolution to fight against generation and death against life? Can you not see that our all-<sup>133</sup> excellent lawgiver was at pains to insure that even in the case of irrational animals, the offspring should not be separated from their mother so long as it is being suckled? Still more for your sake, good sirs, was that order given, that if nature does not, instruction may teach you the duty of family love. Learn it from the sight of lambs and kids, who are not hindered from feasting on abundant supplies of what they need. Nature has provided this abundance in places best suited for the purpose, where those who require it will easily find means of enjoyment, while the lawgiver greatly careful for the future looks to see that none interferes with the gifts of God, which bring welfare and safety.

XXVI. So desirous is he to sow in divers forms the<sup>134</sup> seeds of gentleness and moderation in their minds, that he lays down another enactment of the same nature as the preceding. He forbids them to sacrifice the mother and its offspring on the same day,<sup>a</sup> for if they must be sacrificed, at any rate let it be at different times. It is the height of savagery to slay on the same day the generating cause and the living creature generated. And why does anyone do so? It must<sup>135</sup> either be on the ground of sacrificing or to gratify the belly. If sacrifice is the reason, it gives the lie to the name, for such actions are slaughters, not sacrifices. Which of God's altars will accept oblations so unhallowed; what fire would not fly asunder divided into two, shrinking from union with a thing so ill to blend with? Indeed, I think, it could not last for any time, however short, but would straight-

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxii. 28.

PHILO

χρόνον, ἀλλ' αὐτίκα σβεσθῆναι προνοία τινὶ τοῦ μὴ τὸν ἀέρα καὶ τὴν ἱερωτάτην πνεύματος φύσιν ὑπὸ 136 τῆς αἰρομένης φλογὸς μαινεσθαι. εἰ δὲ μὴ θυσιῶν χάριν ἀλλὰ θοίνης, τίς οὐκ ἂν τῆς ὑπερφουοῦς γασ-τριμαργίας ὀρέξεις προβάλλοιτο καινὰς καὶ παρηλλαγμένας; ἐκτόπους μὲν γὰρ ἡδονὰς οἱ τοιοῦτοι μεταδιώκουσι. τίς δὲ ἡδονὴ κρεωφαγοῦσι, γεύσα-σθαι σαρκῶν ἐν ταυτῷ μητέρων καὶ ἐγγόνων; ὧν εἰ τὰ μέλη τις ἀναμίξει θελήσειεν ἀναπείρων ὀβελοῖς, ἢ ὀπτῶν ἐμφορήσαιο, οὐκ ἂν μοι δοκεῖ διατελεῖν ἡσυχᾶ, ῥήξειεν δὲ φωνὴν σχετλιάσαντα δι' ὑπερβολὴν τοῦ καινουργηθέντος πάθους καὶ μυρία λοιδορήσεσθαι τῆς λαίμαργίας τοῖς εὐτρεπίζουσιν 137 ἄσιτον εὐωχίαν. ἀλλ' ὃ γε νόμος ἔξω τῶν περιρραντηρίων ἐλαύνει καὶ ὅσα τῶν ζώων κυοφορεῖ, μὴ ἐπιτρέπων ἄχρις ἂν ἀποτέκη σφαγιάζεσθαι, τὰ κατὰ γαστρὸς ἐν ἴσῳ τοῖς ἀποκυηθείσιν ἤδη λογι-σάμενος, οὐκ ἐπειδὴ τὴν ἴσην ἔλαχε τάξιν ἢ μηδ' εἰς φῶς πω προῆλθεν, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ μακρόθεν ἐπισχεῖν τὴν εὐχέρειαν τῶν εἰωθότων πάντα φύρειν.
 138 εἰ γὰρ τὰ φυτῶν τρόπον ἔτι παραυξανόμενα καὶ μέρη νομιζόμενα τῶν κύνων, νυνὶ μὲν ἠνωμένα, μηνῶν δὲ περιόδοις αὖθις ἀποσπασθησόμενα τῆς

---

<sup>a</sup> As there is no such prohibition in the law, Philo must mean that it follows logically from the law against killing mother and offspring at the same time. According to Heinemann, Bildung, p. 37, the Rabbis had no such rule, but may it not have been an accepted or at least a widely acknowledged principle in Philo's time?

<sup>b</sup> The argument in this and the next sections seem to be—the unborn child is only potentially a separate creature. This is a scientific principle (cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 117 f. and note, vol. vii. p. 637), but Moses by forbidding it to be killed, as 246

ON THE VIRTUES, 135-138

way die out, providing as it were that the air and sacred element of breath should not be defiled by the rising flame. If the object is not to sacrifice but to feast thereon, who would not spurn the strange and unnatural craving of this monstrous gluttony? For pleasure in abnormal forms is what such persons pursue, but though they have flesh to eat, what pleasure can they have, when the flesh which they taste is that of mother and offspring together? Indeed, if one should mix the limbs of the two and fix them on the spits to eat of the roast, these limbs, I think, would not remain mute, but break out into speech, indignant at the enormity of the unexampled treatment which they suffer, and hurl a host of invectives against the greediness of those who prepare these meats, fitter for a fast than for a feast. But observe that the law also banishes from the sacred precincts all pregnant animals and does not permit them to be sacrificed until they have been delivered,<sup>a</sup> thus counting what is still in the depths of the womb as on the same footing as what has already been brought to the birth, not because creatures not yet advanced into the light rank equally with the others, but by implication to restrain the licence of those whose way is to bring everything to disorder.<sup>b</sup> For if the life which is still growing like a plant and reckoned as part of the parent which carries it and now is at one with it, but in the course of months it would be if animals were killed when pregnant, teaches us that it is still more sacred when born. In this way he is restraining the licence, primarily of those who practise infanticide, but also (§ 140) of all who disregard the rights and interests of others. It is difficult, however, to see the point of the sentence πάντων γὰρ . . . κτείνεω. I should like to think that it is the interpolation of a glossator.

PHILO

συμφυίας, διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα τοῦ γενήσεσθαι ζῶα φυλάττεται τῷ περὶ τὰς μητέρας ἀνεπιβουλεύτῳ, χάριν τοῦ μὴ τὸ λεχθὲν μίασμα συμβῆναι, πῶς οὐχὶ μᾶλλον τὰ ἀποτεχθέντα καὶ καθ' αὐτὰ ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος μεμοιραμένα; πάντων γὰρ ἀνοσιώτατον ἐνὶ καιρῷ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ μιᾷ ἔγγονον ὁμοῦ καὶ μητέρα 139 κτείνειν. ἐνθένδε μοι δοκοῦσιν ὀρμηθέντες ἔνιοι τῶν νομοθετῶν τὸν ἐπὶ ταῖς κατακρίτοις γυναιξίν εἰσηγήσασθαι νόμον, ὃς κελεύει τὰς ἐγκύους, εἰάν ἄξια θανάτου δράσωσιν, φυλάττεσθαι μέχρις ἂν ἀπο-140 τέκωσιν, ἵνα μὴ ἀναιρουμένων συναπόληται τὰ [399] κατὰ γαστρός. ἀλλ' οὗτοι μὲν ἐπ' ἀνθρώπων | ταῦτα ἔγνωσαν· ὁ δὲ καὶ προσυπερβάλλων ἔτι ἄχρι καὶ τῶν ἀλόγων ζώων τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ἀπέτεινεν, ἵν' ἐν τοῖς ἀνομοιογενέσιν ἀσκήσαντες πολλῇ τιμῇ περιουσία χρώμεθα φιλανθρωπίας (ἐν τοῖς ὁμογενέσι),<sup>1</sup> τοῦ μὲν λυπεῖν καὶ ἀντιλυπεῖν ἀλλήλους ἀπεχόμενοι, τὰ δ' οἰκεία ἀγαθὰ μὴ θησαυροφυλακοῦντες, ἀλλ' εἰς μέσον προφέροντες καθάπερ συγγενέσι καὶ ἐκ 141 φύσεως ἀδελφοῖς τοῖς πανταχοῦ πᾶσιν. ἔτι τοίνυν τὸ μὲν ἔθνος ἐπὶ μισανθρωπία διαβαλλέτωσαν, τοὺς δὲ νόμους ὡς ἄμικτα καὶ ἀκοινώνητα παραγέλλοντας αἰτιάσθωσαν οἱ δεινοὶ συκοφάνται, φανερώς οὕτως τῶν μὲν νόμων ἐλέου μεταδιδόντων καὶ ταῖς τῶν θρεμμάτων ἀγέλαις, τοῦ δὲ ἔθνους ταῖς ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας νομίμοις ὑφηγήσεσιν ὅσον ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἀπειθὲς μεθαρμοζομένου πρὸς τὸ τιθασόν.
 142 ἐπαποδύεται δὲ αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ καὶ ἐπ-

<sup>1</sup> Inserted by Cohn from Clement, who repeats this clause almost verbatim. (Possibly, however, an addition by Clement; Philo may have thought that φιλανθρωπία in itself expressed the antithesis.)

ON THE VIRTUES, 138-142

will be severed from the common organism, is, in the hope that it will become a living animal, safeguarded by the invulnerability of the mother, to prevent the occurrence of the above said defilement, how much more is this the case with the creatures already brought to the birth and endued with a body and soul of their own? For it is the very height of unholiness to kill mother and offspring on the same occasion and on the same day. It was on this principle, I think, that some 139 legislators introduced the law that condemned women who commit deeds worthy of death should, if pregnant, be kept in custody until the child is born, lest their execution should carry with it the destruction of the life within the womb.<sup>a</sup> These 140 decrees of theirs apply to human beings, but Moses rising to a further height extended the duty of fair treatment even to irrational animals, so that by practising on creatures of dissimilar kind we may show humanity in a far fuller measure to beings of like kind to ourselves, abstaining from strokes and counter-strokes to vex each other, and not hoarding our personal good things as treasures, but throwing them into the common stock for all in every place, as for kinsmen and brothers by nature. After 141 this let those clever libellers continue, if they can, to accuse the nation of misanthropy and charge the laws with enjoining unsociable and unfriendly practices, when these laws so clearly extend their compassion to flocks and herds, and our people through the instructions of the law learn from their earliest years to correct any wilfulness of souls to gentle behaviour.

But so prolific is he in virtue and 142

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 447.

PHILO

αγωνίζεται πολύγονος ὢν ἀρετῆς καί τινι εὐτροπία χρώμενος πρὸς τὰς καλὰς ὑφηγήσεις· κελεύσας γάρ, πρὶν ἀποτίθων γενέσθαι, μὴ ἀποσπᾶν τῆς τεκούσης μήτε ἄρνα μήτε ἔριφον μήτε ἄλλο τι τῶν ἐν ταῖς ἀγέλαις, καὶ προσδιαταξάμενος μηδὲ τῇ αὐτῇ ἡμέρᾳ κτείνειν μητέρα καὶ ἔγγονον, ἐπιδαψιλεύεται φάσκων· “οὐχ ἐψήσεις ἄρνα ἐν γάλακτι μητρός.”

- 143 πάνυ γὰρ ἄτοπον ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι τὴν τροφήν ζῶντος ἡδυσμα γενέσθαι καὶ παράρτυσιν ἀναιρεθέντος καὶ τὴν μὲν φύσιν ἐπιμεληθεῖσαν αὐτοῦ τῆς διαμονῆς ὀμβρῆσαι γάλα, ὃ διὰ μαστῶν τῆς τεκούσης οἶα δεξαμενῶν φέρεσθαι διετάξατο, τὴν δὲ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀκρασίαν τοσοῦτον ἐπιβῆναι, ὡς τῷ τῆς ζωῆς αἰτίῳ καταχρήσασθαι καὶ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὑπολοίπου
- 144 σώματος ἀνάλωσιν. εἰ δὴ τις<sup>1</sup> ἐν γάλακτι κρέα συνέψειν ἀξιοῖ, μὴ σὺν ὠμότητι, χωρὶς δὲ ἀσεβείας ἐψέτω· μυρίαί θρεμμάτων εἰσὶν ἀγέλαι πανταχοῦ καὶ καθ’ ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἀμελγόμεναι διὰ βουκόλων αἰπόλων ποιμένων, οἷς κτηνοτροφοῦσιν ἡ μεγίστη πρόσοδός ἐστι γάλα, τῇ μὲν κεχυμένον, τῇ δὲ συνεσταλμένον τε καὶ πηγνύμενον εἰς τυρόν· ὥστε ἀφθονίας ὑπαρχούσης τὸν<sup>2</sup> ἄρνων ἢ ἐρίφων ἢ τινος ἑτέρου γάλακτι μητρώῳ κρέα συνέψοντα χαλεπὴν ἐπιδείκνυσθαι τρόπων σκαιότητα, τὸ ἀναγ-καιότατον καὶ συγγενέστατον λογικῇ ψυχῇ πάθος ἐκτετμημένον, τὸν ἔλεον.

- 145 XXVII. Ἄγαμαι δὲ κάκεῖνον τὸν νόμον, ὃς καθάπερ ἐν χορῷ παναρμονίῳ συνάδων τοῖς προ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εἰ δὴ τὰ οἱ ἐπειδὴ τὰ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τῶν.

ON THE VIRTUES, 142-145

versatile in giving admirable lessons, that not content with his own prowess, he challenges it to a further contest. He has forbidden any lamb or kid or other like kind of livestock to be snatched away from its mother before it is weaned. He has also forbidden the killing of the mother and offspring on the same day. He now crowns his bounty with the words "Thou shalt not seethe a lamb in his mother's milk."<sup>a</sup> For he held that it was grossly improper that the 143 substance which fed the living animal should be used to season and flavour the same after its death, and that while nature provided for its conservation by creating the stream of milk and ordaining that it should pass through the mother's breasts as through conduits, the licence of man should rise to such a height as to misuse what had sustained its life to destroy also the body which remains in existence. If indeed anyone thinks good to boil flesh in milk, 144 let him do so without cruelty and keeping clear of impiety. Everywhere there are herds of cattle innumerable, which are milked every day by cowherds, goat-herds and shepherds, whose chief source of income as cattle rearers is milk, sometimes liquid and sometimes condensed and coagulated into cheese; and since milk is so abundant, the person who boils the flesh of lambs or kids or any other young animal in their mother's milk, shows himself cruelly brutal in character and gelded of compassion, that most vital of emotions and most nearly akin to the rational soul.

XXVII. I also admire another law attuned to the 145 harmonious choir of those above mentioned. This <sup>a</sup> Ex. xxiii. 19, xxxiv. 26, Deut. xiv. 21; in LXX "lamb" in every case.

PHILO

- τέροις διαγορεύει, βούν ἀλοῶντα μὴ φιμοῦν. οὗτος
 [400] γάρ | ἔστιν ὁ πρὸ μὲν τῆς σπορᾶς [οὔσης] τῆς βαθυγείου πεδιάδος ἀνατέμνων τὰς αὐλακας καὶ προετοιμασάμενος οὐρανῶ καὶ γεωπόνῳ τὰς ἀρούρας, τῷ μὲν ἵνα καιρίως κατασπείρη, τῷ δ' ἵνα κόλποι βαθεῖς ὑποδεξάμενοι τὰς διὰ τῶν ὑετῶν χάριτας ταμιεύσιν καὶ χορηγῶσιν ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ὀλίγον τῷ σπόρῳ τροφὰς πίονας, ἄχρισ ἂν σταχυηφορήσας τελειογονήσῃ τὸν ἐτήσιον καρπὸν· μετὰ δὲ τὴν τελείωσιν πάλιν βούς ἐστι πρὸς ἑτέραν ὑπηρεσίαν ἀναγκαῖος, κάθαρσιν δραγμάτων καὶ διάκρισιν σκυβάλων ἀπὸ τοῦ γνησίου καὶ χρησίμου.
- 146 Ἄλλ' ἐπειδὴ τὴν <ἐπὶ> τοῖς [γῆν] ἀλοῶσιν βουσίην ἡμερον καὶ χρηστὴν πρόσταξιν εἶπον, καὶ τὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς <γῆν> ἀροῦσι θρέμμασι τεθέντα νόμον ἐξῆς δίδεμι τῆς αὐτῆς ὄντα συγγενείας. ἀπαγορεύει γάρ ἐν ταύτῳ καταξενγνύει πρὸς ἄροτον γῆς βούν καὶ ὄνον, οὐ μόνον τοῦ περὶ τὰ ζῶα ἀνοικείου στοχασάμενος, διότι τὸ μὲν ἐστὶ καθαρὸν, ὄνος δὲ τῶν οὐ καθαρῶν, τὰ δὲ οὕτως ἡλλοτριωμένα συνάγειν οὐ πρέπει, ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὴν ἰσχύν ἐστὶν ἄνισα, προμηθεῖται δὲ τῶν ἀσθενεστέρων, ὡς μὴ πρὸς δυνατωτέρας βίας θλίβηται καὶ προσπιέζεται· καίτοι τὸ μὲν ἀσθενέστερον, ὄνος, ἔξω περιρραντηρίων ἐλαύνεται, τὸ δὲ ἔρρωμενέστερον, βούν, ἐν ταῖς
- 147 τελειοτάταις θυσίαις νόμος ἱερουργεῖν. ἀλλ' ὅμως οὔτε τῆς τῶν ἀκαθάρτων ἀσθενείας ὠλιγώρησεν οὔτε τοῖς καθαροῖς ἐφήκεν ἰσχύϊ πρὸ δίκης χρῆσθαι,

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxv. 4.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxii. 10, cf. Spec. Leg. iv. 205, 206. The treatment here is the same and the moral also, with the difference that law forbids muzzling the ox when it treads out the corn.<sup>a</sup> It is the ox who, before the deep soiled lowlands receive the seed, cleaves the furrows and sets the fields ready for heaven and the husbandman ; for the husbandman that he may sow the seed in due season, for heaven that its kindly gifts of rain may be received in the deep hollows which store them up and deal them out part by part as rich nourishment to the crop, until it brings forth first the ear and then the consummation of the yearly fruit. And after that consummation the ox is again necessary for another service, to purge the sheaves and sift the refuse from the genuine and useful material.

ON THE VIRTUES, 145-147

But since I have mentioned the kindly and bene- 146 volent injunction on behalf of the oxen when treading the corn, I will cite next the law enacted in behalf of cattle which plough the land.<sup>b</sup> This is a law of the same family. It forbids the yoking together of an ox and an ass for ploughing the land, and has in view not merely the incongruity of the animals, since the ox is clean and the ass belongs to the unclean, and it is not fitting to put together creatures so alien in status, but also their disparity of strength. It takes thought for the weaker, and would not have them suffer discomfort or oppression from superior force, and although the weaker, the ass, is banished from the sacred precincts and the stronger, the ox, is accepted by the law as a victim in sacrifices where perfection is most required, it did not despise the 147 weakness of the unclean, nor permit the clean to there the judge is admonished to do justice to the low-born, here all are encouraged to show kindness to men of other nations, meaning mainly no doubt the proselytes, consideration for whom figures so much throughout this treatise.

PHILO

μόνον οὐκ ἄντικρυς βοῶν καὶ κεκραγῶς τοῖς ὦτα ἔχουσιν ἐν ψυχῇ, μηδένα τῶν ἑτεροεθνῶν ἀδικεῖν, οὐδὲν ἔχοντας αἰτιάσασθαι ὅτι μὴ τὸ ἄλλογενές. ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀναίτιον· ὅσα γὰρ μῆτε κακία μῆτε ἀπὸ κακιῶν ἔξω παντὸς ἐγκλήματος ἴσταται.

- 148 XXVIII. Ἐπιδαφιλευόμενος δὲ τὸ ἐπιεικὲς πάλιν πλουσίως αὐτῷ καὶ κατακόρως χρῆται, μετιῶν ἀπὸ μὲν τῶν λογικῶν ἐπὶ τὰ ἄλογα, ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν ἀλόγων ἐπὶ τὰ φυτά, περὶ ὧν αὐτίκα λεκτέον, ἐπειδὴ περὶ τῶν προτέρων, ἀνθρώπων τε καὶ τῶν 149 ὅσα ψυχῆς μεμοίραται, λέλεκται. διείρηκε τοίνυν ἄντικρυς μῆτε δενδροτομεῖν ὅσα τῆς ἡμέρου ὕλης μῆτε κείρειν ἐπὶ λύμῃ πρὸ καιροῦ σταχυηφοροῦσαν πεδιάδα μῆτε συνόλως καρπὸν διαφθείρειν, ἵνα περιουσία μὲν τροφῶν ἀφθόνων χορηγῆται τὸ ἀνθρώπων γένος, περιουσιάζῃ δὲ<sup>1</sup> μὴ μόνον τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν πρὸς τὸν ἀβροδίατον βίον. ἀναγκαῖον μὲν γὰρ ὁ τοῦ σίτου καρπὸς εἰς τροφήν ἀνθρώπων ἀποκριθεῖς, πρὸς δὲ τὸν ἀβροδίατον βίον αἱ τῶν ἀκροδρύων ἀμύθητοι ποικιλίαι γίνονται δὲ ἐν ἐνδείαις αὐταὶ πολλάκις καὶ τροφαὶ
 150 δεύτεραι. XXIX. | καὶ προσυπερβάλλων οὐδὲ τὴν
 [401]

<sup>1</sup> Cohn writes περιουσία ζῆ δὲ—a strange position for δὲ. On the other hand περιουσιάζω seems to be constructed with the dative. Most mss. have simply ζῆ. Perhaps read ζῆ δὲ μὴ μόνον <ἀπὸ> τῶν ἀναγκαίων.

<sup>a</sup> The argument in these sections, 149-154, is very involved. They are all based on Deut. xx. 19, which forbids cutting down the fruit trees in an enemy's country (cf. Spec. Leg. iv. 226 f.). The verse "Is the tree a man that it should be besieged by thee?" (i.e. trees are innocent things) applies to fruit trees under all circumstances and therefore forbids employ strength rather than justice. Those whose souls have ears can almost hear it speaking plainly in a voice loud and insistent that we should do no wrongs to men of other nations, if we can accuse them of nothing save difference of race, which is no matter for accusation, since nothing which is neither vice nor springs from vice is liable to any impeachment.

ON THE VIRTUES, 147-150

XXVIII. So generously does he bestow his mercy 148 that he shows it further in all its richness and profusion by passing, first from rational beings to the irrational, and from the irrational to plants and vegetation. I must proceed at once to these last, as we have treated the first two classes, mankind and those who are endued with animal life. <sup>a</sup> On this 149 third subject he gives the plain direction that no trees of the cultivated type are to be cut down, nor the lowland fields mischievously mown in the ear-bearing stage before the proper time, and in general no fruit is to be destroyed, in order that the human race may be well supplied with a rich stock of abundant kinds of food, and that this rich stock may consist, not only of necessaries, but also of things which make life comfortable. For the fruit of the corn-field is set apart as a necessary for the sustenance of men, but the numberless varieties of tree-fruits provide the comfortable life, and often in times of dearth a second line of sustenance. XXIX. Rising to a still higher pitch he for- 150 mischievous maltreatment of them (§ 149). This applies even to trees in an enemy's country, where if anywhere it might be thought justifiable (§ 150), and here besides the general argument of the innocence of plants (§ 150 and again § 154) there is a further reason, which has nothing to do with the main point, viz. that when peace is restored we shall regret that such a devastation leaves a feeling of resentment (§§ 151-153).

PHILO

τῶν πολεμίων χώραν τέμνειν ἔᾱ, παραγγέλλει δ' ἀνέχειν δεινδροτομιῶν καὶ δηώσεων, ἄτοπον ὑπολαβῶν εἶναι τὴν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ὀργὴν ἀποσκή-151 πτειν εἰς τὰ μηδενὸς αἴτια κακοῦ. ἔπειτα δὲ ἀξιοῖ μὴ μόνον τὸ παρὸν βλέπειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ μέλλον ὥσπερ ἀπὸ σκοπῆς μακρόθεν ὄξυωπία λογισμοῦ καθορᾶσθαι, μηδενὸς ἐν ὁμοίῳ μένοντος ἀλλὰ πάντων τροπαῖς καὶ μεταβολαῖς χρωμένων, ὡς εἰκὸς εἶναι τοὺς τέως δυσμενεῖς ἐπικηρυκευσαμένους καὶ συμβατηρίων ἄρξαντας ἐνσπόνδους αὐτίκα γενέ-
 152 σθαι. φίλους δὲ τροφῶν ἀναγκαίων ἀποστρεῖν χαλεπόν, μηδὲν ταμειυσαμένους τῶν ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ διὰ τὴν τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀδηλόγητα. πάνυ γὰρ ἐκείνο καλῶς εἴρηται τοῖς παλαιοῖς, ὅτι καὶ φιλίας κοινωγητέον μὴ ἀπογινώσκοντας ἔχθραν καὶ προσκρουστέον ὡς φιλίας ἐσομένης, ἵνα ἕκαστος ἐν τῇ ἑαυτοῦ φύσει ταμιεύηται τι τῶν εἰς ἀσφάλειαν καὶ μὴ ἀπογυμνωθεῖς ἐν ἔργοις καὶ λόγοις μετανοῇ, τῆς ἄγαν εὐχερείας, ὅτ' οὐδὲν ὄφελος, αἰτιώμενος ἑαυ-153 τόν. τὸ λόγιον τοῦτο χρή φυλάττειν καὶ τὰς πόλεις, ἐν μὲν εἰρήνῃ προνοουμένας τῶν κατὰ πόλεμον, ἐν δὲ πολέμῳ τῶν κατ' εἰρήνην, καὶ μήτε τοῖς συμ-

---

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "a sad pity," "a painful thing," i.e. to ourselves, which will agree better with the interpretation of ταμειυσαμένους given in the next note.

<sup>b</sup> Prima facie the natural way of taking ταμειυσαμένους is in agreement with φίλους, "to deprive our (potential) friends of necessaries, who thereby lay nothing by," etc. So Cohn and Mangey, and no doubt this makes good sense in itself. But it has no bearing on the sequel, which repeating the verb ταμιεύομαι dwells on the need of providing for the time when we should be on friendly terms and regret if we have done anything which could prevent this. Grammatically ταμειυ-

ON THE VIRTUES, 150-153

bids them to devastate the land even of their enemies and enjoins them to abstain from cutting down trees and other forms of ravaging, holding it to be against all reason that indignation against men should be visited on things which are not guilty of any misdeed. But further, he calls upon them to look not only to the present, but, as though from some far-off height, with the keen-sighted vision of reason to consider the future also. For no one continues in the same stay, but all things are subject to vicissitudes and mutations, so that it may be expected that our enemies for the time may send ambassadors to initiate negotiations and straightway come to amicable terms. Now as friends it would be a great hardship <sup>a</sup> to deprive them of the necessities of life and by so doing lay nothing by <sup>b</sup> which may be of service to meet the uncertainty of the future. It is a very admirable saying of the ancients <sup>c</sup> that in joining friendship we should not ignore the possibility of enmity, and conduct our quarrels with future friendship in view, so that every one in his own nature <sup>d</sup> lays by something to ensure his safety, and does not, through having neither deeds nor words to clothe his nakedness, repent the past and blame himself when it is no use, for his overcarelessness. This maxim should also be observed by states, who in peace should provide for the needs of war and in war for the needs of peace and be slow to trust σαμένους can agree just as well with the subject of ἀποστερεῖν as with φίλους. By conducting war humanely we lay up something to serve us in time of peace—a fine and sagacious thought.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 448.

<sup>d</sup> Or “which becomes part of himself.” The meaning as I understand it is that actions of kindness affect a man’s nature and give him something to fall back upon.

PHILO

μάχοις ἀνέδην προπιστεύειν ὡς οὐ χρησομένοις μεταβολῇ πρὸς τὸ ἀντίπαλον μήτε τοῖς πολεμίοις εἰς ἅπαν ἀπιστεῖν ὡς οὐ δυνησομένοις ποτέ μεθορ-154 μίσασθαι πρὸς τὸ ἔνσπονδον. εἰ μέντοι καὶ μηδὲν ὑπὲρ ἐχθροῦ πρακτέον δι' ἐλπίδα καταλλαγῶν, οὐδὲν ἐχθρὸν φυτόν, ἀλλ' ἔνσπονδα πάντα καὶ ὠφέλιμα, τὰ δ' ἡμερα καὶ διαφερόντως ἀναγκαῖα, ὧν ὁ καρπὸς ἢ τροφή ἐστὶν ἢ ἰσότημον τροφῆ κτῆμα. τί δὴ δεῖ πεπολεμῶσθαι πρὸς τὰ μὴ πολέμια τέμνοντας ἢ καίοντας ἢ ρίζαις αὐταῖς ἀνασπῶντας, ἅπερ αὐτῇ ἢ φύσιν ὑδάτων ἐπιρροαῖς καὶ εὐκρασίαις ἀέρων ἐτελειογόνησε, δασμοὺς ἐτησίους οἷσοντα ἀνθρώποις οἷα βασιλεῦσιν;

155 Ἐμέλησε δ' αὐτῷ καθάπερ ἀγαθῷ προστάτῃ τὴν ἀλειπτικὴν<sup>1</sup> μὴ μόνον ζώοις ἀλλὰ καὶ φυτοῖς ἰσχύν τε καὶ ῥώμην ἀπεργάσασθαι, καὶ μάλιστα τοῖς ἡμέροις, ἐπειδὴ καὶ πλείονος ἄξια φροντίδος ἐστὶ καὶ οὐχ ὁμοίως τοῖς ἀγρίοις εὐτονα, γεωργικῆς ἐπιστήμης δεόμενα πρὸς κραταιότεραν δύναμιν.
 156 [402] κελεύει γὰρ τὰ νεόφυτα τῶν δένδρων ἐπὶ | τριετίαν ἐξῆς τιθηνεῖσθαι τὰς τε περιττὰς ἐπιφύσεις ἀποτέμνοντας, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ βαρυνόμενα πιέζεσθαι καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ κατακερματιζομένης τῆς τροφῆς δι' ἔνδειαν ἐξασθενεῖν, γυροῦν τε καὶ περισκάπτειν, ἵνα

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn from S ἀληπτικὴν. The other mss. ἀληπτον γῆν. Mangey proposed ἀθητικὴν.

<sup>a</sup> Or "as means of sustenance," meaning presumably as in § 149 that the fruits become necessities in times of dearth, but are delicacies at other times.

<sup>b</sup> If the text is right the meaning may be as translated, or perhaps as Cohn "the strength which trains or equips." But it is also possible to take τὴν ἀλειπτικὴν (sc. τέχνην) as accusative of respect after ἀγαθῷ = "good at training."

ON THE VIRTUES, 153-156

their allies too freely, assuming that they will never change and become opponents, nor yet absolutely distrust their enemies as though they could never pass over into amity. But even if we need not do 154 anything to help an enemy in hope of reconciliation, no plant is our enemy, but they are all pacific and serviceable, while the cultivated kind are particularly necessary, as their fruit is either food in the full sense<sup>a</sup> or a possession as valuable as food. Why then should we carry on hostilities against trees which are not hostile, by cutting them down or burning them or pulling them up by the roots—these trees, which nature itself has brought to their fullness with the waters which it showers and the breezes which it tempers so happily, that they may pay their yearly tributes to mankind as subjects to a king?

Like a good guardian he was also concerned to 155 produce the strength and robustness which training gives,<sup>b</sup> not only in animals but in plants, particularly in the cultivated kind, since they deserve more care and have not the same vigour as the wild species, but need the husbandman's science to give them greater force and power. He bids them nurse the newly 156 planted trees for three successive years,<sup>c</sup> both by cutting off their superfluous overgrowths, to save them from being oppressed by the weight and starved into exhaustion through the subdivision of the nutriment, and also by digging rings and trenches around <sup>a</sup> Lev. xix. 23 (for the allegorical treatment cf. De Plant. 95). E.V. "Ye shall count the fruit thereof as their uncircumcision." But LXX "Ye shall purge away its uncleanness," which vague hint Philo develops into the horticultural operations which follow. His main point, however, that the fruit is not to be plucked till the fourth year, is scriptural.

PHILO

μηδὲν τῶν ἐπὶ ζημία παραναβλαστάνη τὴν αὔξησιν κωλύον· τὸν τε καρπὸν οὐκ ἔα δρέπεσθαι κατὰ μετουσίαν ἀπολαύσεως, οὐ μόνον ἐπειδὴ ἀτελῆς ἐξ ἀτελῶν ἔμελλεν ἔσεσθαι—καὶ γὰρ τῶν ζώων ὅσα μὴ τέλεια οὐ τελειογονεῖ—, ἀλλὰ καὶ διότι βλάπτεσθαι τὰ νεόφυτα καὶ τρόπον τινὰ χαμαίζηλα<sup>1</sup> ἔμελλε 157 κωλυόμενα ἐρνοῦσθαι. πολλοὶ γοῦν τῶν γεωπόνων ἕαρος ὥρας ἐπιτηροῦσι τὰ νέα τῶν δένδρων, ἵνα ὄν ἂν τέκη καρπὸν εὐθύς ἀποθλίβωσι, πρὶν ἐπίδοσιν καὶ συναύξησιν λαβεῖν, φόβῳ τῆς τῶν τεκόντων ἀσθενείας. συμβαίνει γάρ, εἰ μὴ προφυλάξαιτό τις, ὅτε χρὴ τελειωθέντα καρπὸν φέρειν, ἀγονεῖν ἢ ἀμβλίσκειν ἐξασθενήσαντα τῷ πρὸ καιροῦ πονηθῆναι φοραῖς, ἃς αἱ πάλαι κληματίδες ἐπηχθισμέναι 158 ρίζαις αὐταῖς ἐκτρύχουσι τὰ στελέχη. μετὰ δὲ τριετίαν, ὅταν αἱ μὲν ρίζαι βαθύνωσι προσεχόμεναι τῷ ἐδάφει κραταιότερον, τὸ δὲ στέλεχος ὡσπερ ἀκλινέσι θεμελίους ἐπερηρισμένον αὐξήσῃ σὺν εὐτονία, δυνήσεται τελειογονεῖν ἔτει τετάρτῳ κατὰ 159 τέλειον ἀριθμὸν τετράδα. τετράδι δὲ κελεύει μὴ δρέπεσθαι τὸν καρπὸν πρὸς ἀπόλαυσιν, ἀλλ' ὅλον

<sup>1</sup> Cohn (in translation) wished to insert ἔσεσθαι. Mangey proposed χθαμαλοῦσθαι for χαμαίζηλα. See note a.

<sup>a</sup> Cohn translates “because the young plants injured thereby and prevented from growing up would rise too little above the ground,” thus taking βλάπτεσθαι as a participle, and χαμαίζηλα = χαμαίζηλα ἔσεσθαι. Mangey seems also to connect χαμαίζηλα with ἔμελλεν by his χθαμαλοῦσθαι. But the version given above, which takes βλάπτεσθαι with ἔμελλε, seems to present no difficulty. Why picking the fruit should have this result remains unexplained in either version. The next section suggests that he means that the fruit should not be

them, so that nothing mischievous may spring up at their side and hinder their growth. Also he does not permit them to pick the fruit to get enjoyment, not only because from the incomplete plant only incomplete fruit could come, just as animals not fully grown are not fully ripe for breeding, but also because of the damage it would do to the young plants, which are still, so to speak, lying low just above the ground, by preventing them from shooting.<sup>a</sup> Thus many 157 farmers during the spring season watch the young trees to squeeze off at once any fruit they bear before they advance in quality and size, for fear of weakening the parent plants. For, if these precautions are not taken, the result is that when they should bear fully ripened fruit they bring forth either nothing at all or abortions nipped in the bud, exhausted as they are by the labour of prematurely bearing the crops which lay such a weight upon the branches that at last they wear out the trunk and roots as well. But 158 after three years when the roots have sunk deep<sup>b</sup> in and are more firmly attached to the soil, and the trunk supported as it were on immovable foundations has grown and acquired vigour, it will be able to bear fully in the fourth year in harmony with the perfect number four.<sup>c</sup> But in this fourth year he commands 159 them not to pluck the fruit for their own enjoyment allowed to grow to a stage in which it could be picked for enjoyment.

<sup>b</sup> βαθύω here intransitive as in De Post. 118. This use is not noted in Stephanus, and in L. & S. revised quoted only from Philo.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xix. 24 "In the fourth year all this fruit shall be holy for praise (αἰνετός) to the Lord." For the perfections of four cf. De Op. 47-54. They are connected with this particular text in De Abr. 13, De Plant. 117.

PHILO

- αὐτὸν καθιεροῦν ἀπαρχὴν τῷ θεῷ, τῇ μὲν τῶν προγεγονότων χαριστήριον, τῇ δὲ ἐλπίδα τῆς εἰς τὸ μέλλον εὐκαρπίας καὶ τοῦ μετὰ τοῦτο προσοδοῦ-
- 160 εσθαι. ὄρας ὅσον τὸ ἴλεων καὶ χρηστὸν ἐπιδείκνυται καὶ ὡς ἀνακέχυκεν αὐτὸ πρὸς πᾶσαν ἰδέαν ἀνθρώπων τὸ πρῶτον, κἂν ἀλλόφυλός τις ἢ ἐχθρὸς ᾗ, εἶτα ζώων ἀλόγων, κἂν μὴ τυγχάνη καθαρὰ, ἐπὶ δὲ πᾶσι σπαρτῶν ὁμοῦ καὶ δένδρων. ὃ τε γὰρ ἐν ταῖς ἀφαντάστοις φύσεσι προμαθῶν ἐπιείκειαν εἰς οὐδὲν ἂν τῶν ψυχῆς μεμοιραμένων ἐξαμάρτοι, ὃ τε μὴ ἐπιχειρῶν νεωτερίζειν περὶ τὰ ἔμψυχα πόρρωθεν ἀναδιδάσκεται τῶν λογικῶν ἐπιμελεῖσθαι.
- 161 XXX. Τοιαύταις ὑφήγησεν τὰς διανοίας τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν πολιτευομένων ἐξημερώσας ὑπεροψίας καὶ ἀλαζονείας, ἀργαλεωτάτων καὶ ἐπαχθεστάτων κακῶν, διέξευξεν, ὧν ὡς μεγίστων ἀγαθῶν οἱ πολλοὶ περιέχονται, καὶ μάλιστα ὅταν πλοῦτοι καὶ δόξαι καὶ ἡγεμονίαι περιουσίας ἀφθόνοους χορη-
- 162 γῶσιν. ἀλαζονεῖα γὰρ φύεται καὶ ἐν ἡμελημένοις καὶ ἀφανέσιν ἀνθρώποις, ὡς καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἕκαστον ψυχῆς παθῶν τε καὶ νοσημάτων καὶ ἀρρωστημάτων,
- [403] τὴν δ' ἐπὶ πλέον παραύξησιν οὐ | λαμβάνει, ἀλλ' οἷα πυρὸς οὐσία διὰ σπᾶνιν ὕλης ἀμαυροῦται· περιφαίνεται δ' ἐν τοῖς μεγάλοις χορηγοῦς ὡς ἔφην ἔχουσι τούτου τοῦ κακοῦ πλούτους καὶ δόξας καὶ ἡγεμονίας, ὧν ὑποπλησθέντες καθάπερ οἱ πολὺν ἄκρατον ἐμφορησάμενοι μεθύουσι καὶ ἐμ-

<sup>a</sup> Or as Cohn "in after years."

<sup>b</sup> Incapable of receiving impressions (φαντασίαι). For the conception see particularly Quod Deus 43 f.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "the essence of fire." Cohn translates οὐσία by

ON THE VIRTUES, 159-162

but to dedicate the whole of it as a first fruit to God, partly as a thank-offering for the past, partly in hope of fertility to come and the acquisition of wealth to which this will lead.<sup>a</sup> You see how great is the kindness and graciousness which he shows, and how liberally he has spread it on every kind, first of men, even though it be an alien or an enemy, then of irrational animals, even though they be unclean, and last of all of sown crops and also trees. For he who has first learnt the lesson of fairness in dealing with the unconscious<sup>b</sup> forms of existence will not offend against any that are endued with animal life, and he who does not set himself to molest the animal creation is trained by implication to extend his care to reasonable beings.

XXX. With such instructions he tamed and softened the minds of the citizens of his commonwealth and set them out of the reach of pride and arrogance, evil qualities, grievous and noxious in the highest degree, though embraced as most excellent by the majority of men, particularly when riches and distinctions and high offices bestow their gifts in unstinted superabundance. For arrogance springs up in the insignificant and obscure, as does each of the other passions and diseases and distempers of the soul, though it does not increase to any extent and grows dull as fire<sup>c</sup> does for want of its essential fuel. But it is conspicuous in the great, who as I have said are amply provided with the evil thing by riches and distinctions and high offices and so charged with these, like men who have drunk deep of strong wine, become intoxicated and vent their sottish rage on "element," but the idea is rather that it is the essence of fire to require fuel.

PHILO

- παροινούσι δούλοις ὁμοῦ καὶ ἐλευθέροις, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ ὄλαις πόλεσι· “τίκτει γὰρ κόρος ὕβριν,” 163 ὡς ὁ τῶν παλαιῶν λόγος. διὸ παγκάλως Μωυσεῖς ἱεροφαντῶν παραινεῖ πάντων μὲν ἁμαρτημάτων ἀπέχεσθαι, διαφερόντως δὲ ὑπεροψίας. εἴθ' ὑπόμνησιν ποιεῖται τῶν μὲν ἀναφλέγειν τὸ πάθος εἰωθότων, πλησμονῆς γαστρὸς ἀμέτρου καὶ οἰκιῶν καὶ κτημάτων καὶ θρεμμάτων ἀφθόνου περιουσίας· γίνονται γὰρ εὐθύς αὐτῶν ἀκράτορες, διαιρόμενοι καὶ φυσώμενοι, οἷς μία θεραπείας ἐλπίς τὸ μη-
 164 δέποτε ἐκλανθάνεσθαι τοῦ θεοῦ. καθάπερ γὰρ ἀνατειλαντος ἡλίου τὸ μὲν σκότος ἀφανίζεται, φῶτος δὲ πληροῦται τὰ πάντα, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ὅταν θεός, ὁ νοητὸς ἡλῖος, ἀνάσχη καὶ ἐπιλάμψη ψυχῇ, ὁ μὲν τῶν παθῶν καὶ κακιῶν ζόφος ἀνασκιδναται, τῆς δ' αὐγοειδεστάτης ἀρετῆς τὸ καθαρώτατον καὶ ἀξιέραστον εἶδος ἐπιφαίνεται.
 165 XXXI. στέλλειν δ' ἔτι μᾶλλον καὶ καθαιρεῖν ὑπεροψίαν ἀξιῶν τὰς αἰτίας ἐπιλέγει, δι' ἧς ἄληστον ἐχρῆν τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ μνήμην ἀγαλματοφορεῖν. “οὗτος γὰρ σοι” φησὶ “δίδωσιν ἰσχὺν ποιῆσαι δύναμιν”· ἄγαν παιδευτικῶς· ὁ γὰρ ἀκριβῶς ἀναδιδαχθεὶς, ὅτι δῶρον εἴληφε παρὰ θεοῦ τὸ εὐτονον καὶ ῥωμαλέον, τὴν ἰδίαν ἀσθένειαν ἐκλογιζόμενος, ἣν πρὶν ἀπολαῦσαι τῆς δωρεᾶς εἶχε, τὸ ὑψηλὸν καὶ ὑπέραυχον φρόνημα διώσεται καὶ εὐχαριστήσῃ τῷ τῆς κρείττονος αἰτίῳ μεταβολῆς.

<sup>a</sup> A proverbial phrase often used in slightly different forms by Philo, but here only noted as a quotation. The earliest writers in whom it is found are Solon and Theognis.

<sup>b</sup> From this section to the end we have a homily on Deut. viii. 11 ff.

ON THE VIRTUES, 162-165

slave and free alike and sometimes on whole cities. For "satiety begets insolence,"<sup>a</sup> as the ancients have said. <sup>b</sup> And therefore Moses in his work as Revealer <sup>163</sup> admirably exhorts them to abstain from all sins, but especially from pride. Then he reminds them of the causes which are wont to inflame this passion, unlimited means of satisfying the belly and unstinted superabundance of houses and land and cattle. For men at once lose their self-mastery, and are elated and puffed up, and the one hope of their cure is that they should never lose the remembrance of God.<sup>c</sup> For as when the sun has risen the darkness disappears, <sup>164</sup> and all things are filled with light, so when God, the spiritual sun, rises and shines upon the soul, the gloomy night of passions and vices is scattered, and virtue reveals the peerless brightness of her form in all its purity and loveliness. XXXI. And <sup>165</sup> judging it well still further to repress and destroy pride, he recites the reasons why they should keep the memory of God, as an image enshrined, never to be forgotten. "For He," he says, "gives thee strength to make power"<sup>d</sup>—words full of instruction, for he who has been carefully taught that his vigour and robustness is a gift received from God will take account of his own natural weakness, the weakness which was his before he enjoyed the gift of God, and will thrust aside the spirit of lofty arrogance and give thanks to Him who brought about the happy change. And

<sup>c</sup> Verses 12-14 "Lest when thou hast eaten . . . thy heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God."

<sup>d</sup> Verse 18. E.V. "He giveth thee power to make wealth." Philo has elsewhere (De Sac. 56, De Agr. 172) quoted the LXX form "strength to make power," as meaning the same as E.V. The fine turn he gives to it here is an example of his utilizing any valuable sense of which the words are capable.

PHILO

- ψυχὴ δὲ εὐχάριστος ἀλαζονεία πολέμιος, ἐπεὶ καὶ 166 τοῦναντίον ἀχαριστία συγγενὲς ὑπεροψία. εἰάν δέ, φησὶν, εὐρωσθῆ σοι τὰ πράγματα, λαβὼν καὶ κτησάμενος ἰσχύν, ἣν ἴσως οὐ προσεδόκησας, ποιεῖ δύναμιν. τί δὲ τοῦτ' ἐστίν, ἀκριβωτέον τοῖς μὴ πάνυ συνορῶσι τὸ δηλούμενον. πολλοὶ τὰ ἐναντία ὧν εὖ πεπόνθασι δρᾶν ἐπιχειροῦσιν· ἢ γὰρ πλουτή-σαντες πενίαν ἄλλοις κατασκευάζουσιν ἢ δόξης καὶ τιμῆς ἐπὶ μέγα μετασχόντες ἀδοξίας καὶ 167 ἀτιμίας ἐτέροις αἴτιοι γίνονται. χρὴ δὲ καὶ τὸν φρόνιμον ἀγχινοῦς, ὡς ἐνὶ μάλιστα, τοὺς πλησιάζ-οντας κατασκευάζειν καὶ τὸν σώφρονα ἐγκρατεῖς καὶ γενναίους τὸν ἀνδρείον καὶ τὸν δίκαιον δικαίους καὶ συνόλως ἀγαθοὺς τὸν ἀγαθόν. ταῦτα γὰρ ὡς ἔοικε δυνάμεις, ὧν ὁ γε ἀστείος ὡς οἰκειοτάτων [404] περιέξεται· ἀδυναμία δὲ καὶ ἀσθένεια, τὰ ἐναντία, 168 σπουδαίων ἀλλότρια ἡθῶν. ἄλλως τε καὶ μάθημα ἀναδιδάσκει τῇ λογικῇ φύσει προπεωδέστατον, μιμῆσθαι θεὸν καθ' ὅσον οἶόν τε, μηδὲν παραλιπόντα τῶν εἰς τὴν ἐνδεχομένην ἐξομοίωσιν.
 XXXII. ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν, φησὶν, ἔλαβες ἰσχύν παρὰ τοῦ δυνατωτάτου, μετάδος ἄλλοις ἰσχύος διαθεῖς ὁ ἔπαθες, ἵνα μιμήσῃ θεὸν τῷ παραπλήσια χαρί-169 ζεσθαι. κοινωφελεῖς γὰρ αἱ τοῦ πρώτου ἡγεμόνος δωρεαί, ἃς δίδωσιν ἐνίοις, οὐχ ἵν' ἐκείνοι λαβόντες ἀποκρύψωσιν ἢ καταχρήσωνται πρὸς ζημίαν ἐτέρων, ἀλλ' ἵν' εἰς μέσον προενεγκόντες ὥσπερ ἐν

<sup>a</sup> i.e. "at producing them in others." περιέχομαι in the sense of "aim at" is found, though not very commonly, and

ON THE VIRTUES, 165-169

the thankful soul is the enemy of arrogance, just as conversely unthankfulness is akin to pride. What 166 he means to say is "if thy fortunes are thriving and lusty, if thou hast received and gained possession of strength, which perhaps thou didst not expect, make power." What this signifies must be clearly explained to those who fail to discern the full meaning. Many persons try to do to others the opposite of the good which they have experienced. They become rich and make others poor, or having received a great measure of glory and honour they bring about ingloriousness and dishonour to others. Rather 167 should the wise man, as far as possible, impart to his neighbours his sagacity, the continent his temperance, the valiant his gallantry, the just his justice, and in general the good his goodness. For these are evidently powers, and the man of worth will aim at<sup>a</sup> these as most akin to himself, while impotence and weakness, their opposites, are alien to upright character. Especially does he give this lesson as most 168 suitable to the rational nature that a man should imitate God as much as may be and leave nothing undone that may promote such assimilation as is possible.<sup>b</sup> XXXII. "When then," he says, "you have received strength from the most powerful, give of your strength to others and do to them as has been done to you, that you may imitate God by bestowing freely boons of the same kind. For the gifts of the 169 Chief Ruler are of universal benefit, given to some, not to be hidden by them when received, nor misused to harm others, but thrown into the common stock this best suits the general sense. Otherwise "will cling to them as his most cherished possessions."

<sup>b</sup> See note on Spec. Leg. iv. 188 (App. p. 436).

PHILO

- δημοθουσία πάντας ὅσους οἶόν τε καλέσωσιν ἐπὶ 170 τὴν χρῆσιν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν αὐτῶν. λέγομεν οὖν καὶ τῷ πολυχρημάτῳ καὶ ἐνδόξῳ καὶ εὐέκτη καὶ ἐπιστήμονι, πλουσίους καὶ ἐνδόξους εὐέκτας τε καὶ ἐπιστήμονας καὶ συνόλως ἀγαθοὺς ἀπεργάζεσθαι τοὺς ἐντυγχάνοντας, ἀλλὰ μὴ φθόνον καὶ βασκανίαν ἀρετῆς προτιμήσαντα τοῖς εὖ πράττειν 171 δυναμένοις ἀντιβαίνειν. τοὺς δὲ μέγα πνέοντας ἐπιτάσει<sup>1</sup> τῆς ἀλαζονείας ἀθεραπεύτως εἰς ἅπαν ἔχοντας ὁ νόμος παγκάλως οὐκ ἤγαγεν εἰς κρίσιν ἀνθρωπίνην, ἀλλὰ μόνῳ τῷ θεῷ παρέδωκε δικαστηρίῳ. φησὶ γάρ· ὃς ἂν ἐγχειρῇ τι πράττειν μεθ’ 172 ὑπερηφανίας, “ τὸν θεὸν παροξύνει.” διὰ τί; ὅτι πρῶτον μὲν ἀλαζονεία ψυχῆς ἐστὶ κακία, ψυχὴ δὲ ἀόρατος ὅτι μὴ θεῷ, κολαστῆς δὲ ὁ μὲν τυφλὸς ἐπίμεμπτος, ἀγνοίαν κατήγορον ἔχων, ὁ δὲ βλέπων ἐπαινετός, ἐπιστήμη πάντα δρῶν· ἔπειτα δὲ ὅτι φρονήματος ὑπόπλεως ἀλόγου γενόμενος πᾶς ἀλαζῶν “ οὔτε ἄνδρα οὔτε ἡμίθεον ἀλλ’ ὄλον δαίμονα ” κατὰ τὸν Πίνδαρον ὑπολαμβάνει ἑαυτόν, ὑπὲρ τοὺς ὄρους τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεως βαίνειν 173 ἀξιῶν. ἔστι δ’ αὐτῷ καθάπερ ἡ ψυχὴ καὶ τὸ σῶμα ἐπίληπτον κατὰ τε τὰς σχέσεις καὶ κινήσεις ἀπάσας· ἀκροβατεῖ γὰρ καὶ τὸν αὐχένα μετέωρον

<sup>1</sup> The mss. here are exceedingly confused, and Cohn's reconstruction here given is doubtful. He also inserts ὡς before ἀθεραπεύτως, necessarily perhaps if ἐπιτάσει is to be taken with πνέοντας. The translation takes it as causal with ἀθεραπεύτως ἔχοντας. μέγα or μέγала πνεῖν is often used absolutely, sometimes to express influence, sometimes pride. Cf. Mos. i. 30, Flacc. 124, 152.

<sup>a</sup> Num. xv. 30. E.V “ But the soul that doeth aught with

ON THE VIRTUES, 169-173

so that as in a public banquet they may invite as many as they possibly can to use and enjoy them. We say then to him who has much wealth or reputation or soundness of body or knowledge, that he should make those whom he meets rich, highly reputed, well-conditioned in body, and full of knowledge, and in general good, instead of preferring jealousy and envy to virtue and setting himself in opposition to those who might thrive in these ways. But with the men of windy pride, whose intensified arrogance sets them quite beyond cure, the law deals admirably in not bringing them to be judged by men but handing them over to the divine tribunal only, for it says, "Whosoever sets his hand to do anything with presumptuousness provokes God."<sup>a</sup> Why is this? First, because arrogance is a vice of the soul and the soul is invisible save only to God. Chastisement is not for the blind to give but for him who can see; in the one it deserves censure, because his ignorance bears witness against him, in the other it is laudable, because he acts throughout with knowledge.<sup>b</sup> Secondly, the arrogant man is always filled with the spirit of unreason, holding himself, as Pindar says, to be neither man nor demigod, but wholly divine, and claiming to overstep the limits of human nature. His body like his soul is at fault in every posture and movement. With haughty airs and perked up neck a high hand (LXX ἐν χειρὶ ὑπερηφανίας), the same blasphemeth (LXX παροξύνει) the Lord."

<sup>b</sup> Cohn considers the whole description of the arrogant man to be an obvious allusion to the emperor Gaius. Cf. Leg. ad Gaium 75 "he claimed to remain no more within the limits of human nature, but soared above them desiring to be thought a god." It seems to me rather unnecessary even if it can be verified chronologically.

PHILO

ἐξαίρει φρουαττόμενος καὶ πλέον τῆς φύσεως ἐπῆρται καὶ πεφύσηται καὶ ὄρων παραβλέπει πλαγίαις ὄψεσι καὶ ἀκούων παρακούει, κέχρηται δὲ τοῖς μὲν οἰκέταις ὡς θρέμμασι, τοῖς δὲ ἐλευθέροις ὡς οἰκέταις, καὶ τοῖς μὲν συγγενέσιν ὡς ἄλλοτρίοις, τοῖς δὲ φίλοις ὡς κόλαξι, τοῖς δ' ἄστοις ὡς ξένοις·

174 πάντων τε οἶεται εἶναι πλουσιώτατος, ἐντιμώτατος, κάλλιστος, ἰσχυρότατος, φρονιμώτατος, σωφρονέστατος, δικαιοτάτος, λογιώτατος, ἐπιστημονικώτατος· εἶτα τοὺς ἄλλους ὑπολαμβάνει πένητας, [405] | ἀδόξους, ἀτίμους, ἄφρονας, ἀδίκους, ἀνεπιστήμονας, καθάρματα, τὸ μηδέν. εἰκότως οὖν ὁ τοιοῦτος ἀντιδίκῳ καὶ κολαστῇ χρήσαιτ' ἂν, ὡς φησιν ὁ ἱεροφάντης, θεῶ.

Περὶ μετανοίας

175 XXXIII. Φιλάρετος καὶ φιλόκαλος καὶ διαφερόντως φιλάνθρωπος ὢν ὁ ἱερώτατος Μωυσῆς προτρέπει τοὺς πανταχοῦ πάντας εὐσεβείας καὶ δικαιοσύνης εἶναι ζηλωτάς, ἄθλα προτιθεὶς ὡς νικηφόροις μεγάλα τοῖς μετανοοῦσι πολιτείας κοινωνίαν τῆς ἀρίστης καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὴν ἀπόλαυσιν μικρῶν 176 τε καὶ μεγάλων. ἀγαθὰ γὰρ προηγούμενα ἐν μὲν σώμασιν ἢ ἄνοσος ὑγεία, ἐν δὲ ναυσὶν ἢ ἀκίνδυνος εὐπλοια, ἐν δὲ ψυχαῖς ἢ ἄληστος μνήμη τῶν ἀξίων μνημονεύεσθαι· δεύτερα δὲ τὰ κατ' ἐπανάρθωσιν συνιστάμενα, ἧ τε ἐκ νόσων ἀνάληψις καὶ ἡ ἐκ τῶν κατὰ πλοῦν κινδύνων εὐκταιοτάτη σωτηρία καὶ ἡ λήθης ἐκγυνομένη<sup>1</sup> ἀνάμνησις, ἧς ἀδελφὸν καὶ συγγενέστατον τὸ μετανοεῖν ἐστίν, οὐκ ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ καὶ ἀνωτάτῳ τεταγμένον τάξει τῶν ἀγαθῶν, ἀλλ' ἐν τῇ

ON THE VIRTUES, 173-176

he struts about rising above his natural stature, puffs himself out, sees only by looking out of the side of his eyes, and hears only to misunderstand. Slaves he treats as cattle, the free as slaves, kinsfolk as strangers, friends as parasites, fellow-citizens as foreigners. He considers himself superior to all in riches, 174 estimation, beauty, strength, wisdom, temperance, justice, eloquence, knowledge; while everyone else he regards as poor, disesteemed, unhonoured, foolish, unjust, ignorant, outcast, in fact good-for-nothing. Naturally such a person will, as the Revealer tells us, have God for his accuser and avenger.

On Repentance

XXXIII. Our most holy Moses, who so dearly 175 loved virtue and goodness and especially his fellow-men, exhorts everyone everywhere to pursue piety and justice, and offers to the repentant in honour of their victory the high rewards of membership in the best of commonwealths and of the felicities both great and small which that membership confers. For in 176 the scale of values the primary place is taken in bodies by health free from disease, in ships by travelling happily free from danger and in souls by memory of things worth remembering without lapse into forgetfulness. But second to these stands rectification in its various forms, recovery from disease, deliverance so earnestly desired from the dangers of the voyage, and recollection supervening on forgetfulness. This last has for its brother and close kinsman repentance, which though it does not stand in the first and highest rank of values has its

---

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐγγενομένη οἱ ἐγγυνομένη.

PHILO

- 177 μετὰ ταύτην φερόμενον δευτερεία. τὸ μὲν γὰρ μηδὲν συνόλως ἀμαρτεῖν ἴδιον θεοῦ τάχα δὲ καὶ θείου ἀνδρός, τὸ δὲ ἀμαρτόντα μεταβαλεῖν πρὸς ἀνυπαίτιον ζῶν φρονίμου καὶ τὸ συμφέρον εἰς ἅπαν
- 178 οὐκ ἀγνοήσαντος. ὅθεν τοὺς τοιούτους συνάγων καὶ μυσταγωγῶν προσκαλεῖται τὰς συμβατηρίους καὶ φιλικὰς προτείνων ὑψηγήσεις, αἱ παραινοῦσιν ἀψεύδειαν ἀσκεῖν καὶ τύφον προβεβλήσθαι καὶ ἀληθείας καὶ ἀτυφίας ὡς ἀναγκαιοτάτων καὶ εὐδαιμονίας αἰτίων περιέχεσθαι μυθικῶν πλασμάτων κατεξαναστάντας, ἅπερ ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἀπαλαῖς ἔτι ψυχαῖς γονεῖς καὶ τίτθαι καὶ παιδαγωγοὶ καὶ μυριοὶ ἄλλοι τῶν συνήθων ἐνεχάραξαν πλάνον ἀνήνυτον περὶ τῆς τοῦ ἀρίστου γνώσεως ἀπεργασά-
- 179 μενοι. τί δ' ἂν εἴη τῶν ὄντων ἄριστον ἢ θεός; οὐ τὰς τιμὰς προσένειμαν τοῖς οὐ θεοῖς ἐκείνους μὲν ἀποσεμνύνοντες πλέον τοῦ μετρίου, τοῦ δὲ εἰς ἅπαν οἱ κενοὶ φρενῶν ἐκλαθόμενοι. πάντας οὖν, ὅσοι τὸν κτίστην καὶ πατέρα τοῦ παντός εἰ καὶ μὴ ἐξ ἀρχῆς σέβειν ἠξίωσαν ἀλλ' ὕστερον μοναρχίαν ἀντὶ πολυαρχίας ἀσπασάμενοι, φιλτάτους καὶ συγγενεστάτους ὑποληπτέον, τὸ μέγιστον εἰς φιλίαν καὶ
- [406] οἰκειότητα | παρασχομένους θεοφιλὲς ἦθος, οἷς χρῆ καὶ συνήδουσαι, καθάπερ ἂν εἰ καὶ τυφλοὶ πρότερον ὄντες ἀνέβλεψαν ἐκ βαθυτάτου σκότους αὐγοειδέστατον φῶς ἰδόντες.
- 180 XXXIV. Τὸ μὲν οὖν πρῶτον καὶ ἀναγκαιοτάτον τῶν εἰς μετάνοιαν εἴρηται. μετανοεῖτω δέ τις μὴ

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "the character which God loves." But here perhaps, as elsewhere, θεοφιλής, though primarily distinguished as in 272 place in the class next to this and takes the second prize. For absolute sinlessness belongs to God alone, 177 or possibly to a divine man ; conversion from sin to a blameless life shows a man of wisdom who has not been utterly ignorant of what is for his good. And, 178 therefore, when Moses convokes such people and would initiate them into his mysteries, he invites them with conciliatory and amicable offers of instruction, exhorting them to practise sincerity and reject vanity, to embrace truth and simplicity as vital necessities and the sources of happiness, and to rise in rebellion against the mythical fables impressed on their yet tender souls from their earliest years by parents and nurses and tutors and the multitude of other familiars, who have caused them to go endlessly astray in their search for the knowledge of the best. And what is the best of all that is but God, whose 179 honours they have assigned to those who were no gods and glorified them beyond measure, while Him in their senseless folly they forgot ? So therefore all these who did not at the first acknowledge their duty to reverence the Founder and Father of all, yet afterwards embraced the creed of one instead of a multiplicity of sovereigns, must be held to be our dearest friends and closest kinsmen. They have shown the godliness of heart <sup>a</sup> which above all leads up to friendship and affinity, and we must rejoice with them, as if, though blind at the first they had recovered their sight and had come from the deepest darkness to behold the most radiant light.

ON THE VIRTUES, 176-180

XXXIV. We have described the first and most 180 essential form of repentance, but a man should show

§ 184 from φιλόθεος, carries with it some idea of reciprocation, "friendship with God."

PHILO

- μόνον ἐφ' οἷς ἠπατήθη πολὺν χρόνον τὰ γενητὰ πρὸ τοῦ ἀγενήτου καὶ ποιητοῦ θαυμάσας, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα περὶ βίον ἀναγκαῖα, μετιὼν ὥσπερ ἐκ τῆς φαυλοτάτης τῶν κακοπολιτειῶν, ὀχλοκρατίας, εἰς τὴν εὐνομωτάτην πολιτείαν, δημοκρατίαν, τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶν ἐξ ἀμαθίας εἰς ἐπιστήμην ὧν ἡ ἄγνοια αἰσχρὸν, ἐξ ἀφροσύνης εἰς φρόνησιν, ἐξ ἀκρατείας εἰς ἐγκράτειαν, ἐξ ἀδικίας εἰς δικαιοσύνην, ἐξ ἀτολμίας εἰς θαρραλεότητα. πάγκαλον γὰρ καὶ συμφέρον αὐτομολεῖν ἀμεταστρεπτί πρὸς ἀρετὴν κακίαν, ἐπίβουλον δέσποιναν, ἀπολιπόντας· ἅμα δ' ἀναγκαῖον ἔπεσθαι, ὡς ἐν ἡλίῳ σκιὰν σώματι, καὶ τῇ τοῦ ὄντος θεοῦ τιμῇ πᾶσαν τὴν τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν κοινωνίαν. γίνονται γὰρ, εὐθύς οἱ ἐπηλύται σώφρονες, ἐγκρατεῖς, αἰδήμονες, ἡμεροί, χρηστοί, φιλάνθρωποι, σεμνοί, δίκαιοι, μεγαλόφρονες, ἀληθείας ἐρασταί, κρείττους χρημάτων καὶ ἡδονῆς· ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸναντίον τοὺς τῶν ἱερῶν νόμων ἀποστάντας ἰδεῖν ἔστιν ἀκολάστους, ἀναισχύντους, ἀδίκους, ἀσέμνους, ὀλιγόφρονας, φιλαπεχθήμονας, ψευδολογίας ἐταίρους καὶ ψευδορκίας, τὴν ἐλευθερίαν πεπρακότας ὄψου καὶ ἀκράτου καὶ πεμμάτων καὶ εὐμορφίας εἰς τε τὰς γαστροὺς ἀπολαύσεις καὶ τῶν μετὰ γαστέρα, ὧν τὰ τέλη βαρύταται ζημίαι σώματός τε καὶ ψυχῆς εἰσι. παγκάλους μέντοι καὶ τὰς εἰς μετάνοιαν ὑψηγήσεις ποιεῖται, αἷς διδασκόμεθα μεθαρμόζεσθαι τὸν βίον ἐξ ἀναρμοστίας εἰς τὴν ἀμείνω μεταβολήν· φησὶ γάρ, ὅτι τουτὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα οὐχ ὑπέρογκόν ἐστιν οὐδὲ μα-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 437 (i.e. note on Spec. Leg. iv. 237).

<sup>b</sup> χρηστός coming here might bear this sense, which it sometimes certainly has. Cohn gives "brav" = "honest" (?).

ON THE VIRTUES, 180-183

repentance not only for the delusions under which he long laboured in revering things created before the Creator and Maker, but also in the other fundamental concerns of life, by passing, as it were, from mob-rule, which is the vilest of misgovernments, into democracy,<sup>a</sup> the government in which good order is best observed. This means passing from ignorance to knowledge of things which it is disgraceful not to know, from senselessness to good sense, from incontinence to continence, from injustice to justice, from timidity to boldness. For it is excellent and profitable to desert 181 without a backward glance to the ranks of virtue and abandon vice that malignant mistress; and where honour is rendered to the God who is, the whole company of the other virtues must follow in its train as surely as in the sunshine the shadow follows the body. The proselytes become at once temperate, 182 continent, modest, gentle, kind,<sup>b</sup> humane, serious,<sup>c</sup> just, high-minded, truth-lovers, superior to the desire for money and pleasure, just as conversely the rebels from the holy laws are seen to be incontinent, shameless, unjust, frivolous, petty-minded, quarrelsome, friends of falsehood and perjury, who have sold their freedom for dainties and strong liquor and cates and the enjoyment of another's beauty,<sup>d</sup> thus ministering to the delights of the belly and the organs below it—delights which end in the gravest injuries both to body and soul. Admirable indeed 183 too are the admonitions to repentance, in which we are taught to refit our life from its present misfit into a better and changed condition. He tells us<sup>e</sup> that the thing is not overgreat nor very distant, neither in the

<sup>a</sup> Perhaps "reverent," in which case ἀσεμνος = "irreverent."

<sup>d</sup> See on Spec. Leg. iv. 82.

<sup>e</sup> Deut. xxx. 11-14.

PHILO

κρὰν ἀφεστός, οὔτε κατὰ τὸν αἰθέρα ἀνωτάτω κὰν<sup>1</sup> ἔσχατιαῖς (γῆς οὔτε πέραν)<sup>2</sup> τῆς μεγάλης θαλάττης, ὡς ἀδυνατῆσαι λαβεῖν, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἐγγυτάτω, τρισὶ μέρεσι τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς ἐνδιαιτώμενον, στό-ματι καὶ καρδία καὶ χερσί, διὰ συμβόλων λόγοις καὶ βουλαῖς καὶ πράξεσι· λόγου μὲν (γὰρ) στόμα σύμβολον, καρδία δὲ βουλευμάτων, πράξεων δὲ 184 χεῖρες, ἐν οἷς τὸ εὐδαιμονεῖν ἔστιν. ὅταν μὲν γὰρ οἶος ὁ λόγος τοιάδε ἢ γνώμη καὶ οἶον τὸ βούλευμα τοιάδε ἢ πρᾶξις, ἐπαινετὸς καὶ τέλειος ὁ βίος, ὅταν δὲ στασιάξῃ ταῦτα ἐν ἀλλήλοις, ἀτελής τε καὶ ψεκτός. εἰ μὴ τις τῆς ἀρμονίας ταύτης ἐπιλάθοιτο, εὐαρεστήσει θεῷ γενόμενος ὁμοῦ θεοφιλῆς καὶ [407] φιλόθεος. ὅθεν εἶ και | συμφώνως τοῖς εἰρημένους ἐχρήσθη τὸ λόγιον ἐκείνο· “ τὸν θεὸν εἴλου σήμερον εἶναί σοι θεόν, καὶ κύριος εἶλατό σε σήμερον γενέ-185 σθαι λαὸν αὐτῷ.” παγκάλῃ γε τῆς αἰρέσεως ἢ ἀντίδοσις, σπεύδοντος ἀνθρώπου μὲν θεραπεύειν τὸ ὄν, θεοῦ δὲ ἀνυπερθέτως ἐξοικειοῦσθαι τὸν ἰκέτην καὶ προαπαντᾶν τῷ βουλήματι τοῦ γνησίως καὶ ἀνόθως ἰόντος ἐπὶ τὴν θεραπείαν αὐτοῦ. ὁ δ' ἀληθῆς θεραπευτῆς τε καὶ ἰκέτης, κὰν εἰς ὧν ἀνὴρ ἀριθμῷ τυγχάνῃ, δυνάμει, καθάπερ αὐτὸς αἰρεῖται,<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καὶ.

<sup>2</sup> This insertion is borne out by the form in which the same text is quoted in De Mut. 237 and De Praem. 80. Deuteronomy itself has only “heaven and beyond the sea.”

<sup>3</sup> Cohn declares αὐτὸς αἰρεῖται to be corrupt and in his translation follows the correction ἄλλοθι εἴρηται “as has been said elsewhere,” i.e. in De Dec. 37, where Philo explains the use of the second person singular in the commandment as intended to show that one good person is equal in worth to a

ON THE VIRTUES, 183-185

ether far above nor at the ends of the earth, nor beyond the great sea, that we should be unable to receive it, but very near, residing in three parts of our being, mouth, heart and hands, thus symbolizing words and thoughts and actions, for the mouth is a symbol of speech, the heart of thoughts and intentions, the hand of action, and in these three lies happiness. For when thoughts correspond to words 184 and actions correspond to intentions, life is praiseworthy and perfect,<sup>a</sup> but when they are at strife with each other, it is imperfect and a matter for reproach. If a man does not forget to keep this harmony, he will be well-pleasing to God, thus becoming at once God-loving and God-beloved. And so in full accordance with these words there was given from above the good saying, "Thou hast chosen to-day God to be God to thee, and the Lord has chosen thee to-day to be a people to Him."<sup>b</sup> Glorious is this reciprocation of 185 choice, when man hastens to serve the Existent, and God delays not to take the suppliant to Himself and anticipates the will of him who honestly and sincerely comes to do Him service. And that true servant and suppliant, even though in actual number he be but one, is in real value, what God's own choice makes him,<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Philo forgets to say that the correspondence must be one for good. In De Mut. 237 f., where he gives the same exposition of the text, he brings this out clearly.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxvi. 17, 18. E.V. for "chosen" has "avouched."

<sup>c</sup> See note 3.

---

whole nation. But this lesson can equally be drawn from the text he is quoting here "He hath chosen thee to be a people," and I believe that αἰρεῖται at any rate is right. The phrase as it stands is an obscure, though perhaps not impossible, way of expressing what I have translated it by, but the change of καθάπερ into καθ' ὅπερ would make it feasible. For other possible emendations see App. p. 448.

PHILO

σύμπας ἐστὶν ὁ λεώς, ἰσότημος ὅλων ἔθνει γεγονώς.
 186 καὶ πέφυκεν οὕτως ἔχειν· ὡς γὰρ ἐν νηὶ μὲν κυβερνήτης πᾶσι τοῖς ναύταις ἀντίρροπος, ἐν δὲ στρατοπέδῳ στρατηγὸς ἅπασιν τοῖς στρατιώταις—διαφθαρέντος γοῦν ἠττάσθαι συμβαίνει, καθάπερ ἂν εἰ καὶ πᾶσα δύναμις ἠβηδὸν ἐάλω—, τὸν αὐτὸν τρό-πον καὶ ὁ σοφὸς ὅλου ἔθνους ἀξιώματι ἀμιλλᾶται τείχει πεφραγμένους ἀκαθαιρέτω, θεοσεβείᾳ.

Περὶ εὐγενείας

187 | XXXV. Διὸ καὶ<sup>1</sup> τοῖς ὑμνοῦσι τὴν εὐγένειαν ὡς [437] μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν καὶ μεγάλων ἀγαθῶν αἴτιον οὐ μετρίως ἐπιτιμητέον, εἰ πρῶτον μὲν οἴονται τοὺς ἐκ παλαιοπλοῦτων καὶ παλαιενδόξων εὐγενεῖς, μηδὲ τῶν προγόνων, ἀφ' ὧν αὐχοῦσι γενέσθαι, διὰ τὰς ἀφθότους περιουσίας εὐδαιμονησάντων, ἐπειδὴ τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀγαθὸν οὐδενὶ τῶν ἐκτός, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τῶν περὶ σῶμα, μᾶλλον δὲ οὐδὲ παντὶ μέρει ψυχῆς, ἀλλὰ μόνῳ τῷ ἡγεμονικῷ πέφυκεν ἐνδαιτιᾶσθαι.
 188 βουλευθεῖς γὰρ ὁ θεὸς δι' ἡμερότητα καὶ φιλἀνθρωπίαν καὶ παρ' ἡμῖν τοῦθ' ἰδρύσασθαι, νεῶν ἀξιοπρεπέστερον οὐχ εὔρεν ἐπὶ γῆς λογισμοῦ· κρείττων γὰρ <ὧν> μόνος ἀγαλματοφορεῖ τὰγαθόν, καὶ ἀπιστῶσί τινες τῶν ἢ μὴ γευσασμένων σοφίας ἢ χεῖλεσιν ἄκροισι. ἄργυρος γὰρ καὶ χρυσοὶ τιμαὶ
 [438] τε καὶ ἀρχαὶ καὶ σώματος | εὐεξία μετ' εὐμορφίας

<sup>1</sup> So one ms. S has καὶ τοῖς, the others τοῖς δὲ. The point has some bearing on the connexion of these two treatises. See Gen. Introd. p. xvii.

<sup>a</sup> εἰ is here used causally, as often with words expressing indignation, etc. Philo does not state what is to come in the 278

ON THE VIRTUES, 185-188

the whole people, in worth equal to a complete nation. And, indeed, this is true to nature. In a ship the 186 pilot is worth as much as all the crew, and in an army the general as much as all the soldiers, since if he fall, defeat results as certainly as it would if the whole force were annihilated. So, too, against the worth of a whole nation the wise man can hold his own, protected by the impregnable wall of godliness.

On Nobleness of Birth

XXXV. This shows also that those who hymn 187 nobility of birth as the greatest of good gifts and the source too of other great gifts deserve no moderate censure, because in the first place<sup>a</sup> they think that those who have many generations of wealth and distinction behind them are noble, though neither did the ancestors from whom they boast descent find happiness in the superabundance of their possessions. For the true good cannot find its home in anything external, nor yet in things of the body, and further not even in every part of the soul, but only in its sovereign part. When in His mercy and loving 188 kindness God willed to establish the good among us also, He found no worthier temple on earth than the reasoning faculty, for in this alone as the more excellent part the good is enshrined, even though some may disbelieve, who have never tasted or only just sipped wisdom. For silver and gold and honour and offices and good condition and beauty of body are like men set in com-second place. The thought is perhaps that this in itself is sufficient, in which case translate "if only because."

PHILO

εοίκασι τοῖς ἐν ταῖς ἡγεμονίαις ἐπὶ χρεῶν τεταγμένοις πρὸς τὴν οἶα βασιλίδος ἀρετῆς ὑπηρεσίαν 189 αὐγοειδέστατον φῶς μὴ ἰδόντες.<sup>1</sup> ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ἡ εὐγένεια κεκαθαρμένης διανοίας καθαρσίοις τελείοις κλῆρος οἰκείος, χρῆ μόνους λέγειν εὐγενεῖς τοὺς σῶφρονας καὶ δικαίους, κἂν τύχωσιν ἐξ οἰκοτρίβων ἢ ἀργυρωνήτων γεγονότες· τοῖς δὲ ἐξ ἀγαθῶν 190 πονηροῖς γεγονόσιν ἄβατον ἔστω τὸ εὐγενείας χωρίον. ἄοικος γὰρ καὶ ἄπολις ὁ φαῦλος, ἐκ πατρίδος ἀρετῆς ἐληλαμένος, ἢ καὶ τῷ ὄντι σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν ἔστι πατρίς· τούτῳ κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον ἔπεται δυσγένεια, κἂν εἰ πάππων ἢ προγόνων γένοιτο τοὺς βίους ἀνεπιλήπτων, ἀλλοτριώσιν ἐπιτηδεύοντι καὶ πορρωτάτῳ τῆς εὐγενείας δια-191 ζευγνύντι ἑαυτὸν ἐν τε λόγοις καὶ ἔργοις. ἀλλὰ γὰρ πρὸς τῷ μὴ πεφυκέναι τοὺς πονηροὺς εὐγενεῖς ἔτι καὶ πάντας αὐτοὺς ὀρώ πολεμίους ἀσυμβάτους εὐγενεῖα καθαιροῦντας τὸ προγονικὸν ἀξίωμα καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Cohn regards this sentence as corrupt and inserts ἐξαρκεῖν after εὐμορφίας. He treats ἀργυρος . . . ὑπηρεσίαν as a parenthesis, and marks a lacuna before αὐγοειδέστατον . . . ἰδόντες. He translates "Silver and gold, etc. seem to rulers appointed to the service of queenly virtue to be sufficient . . . they do not see the radiant light." In the text the parenthetical arrangement suggests that he takes ἰδόντες as agreeing with τινες, but there is no sign of this in the translation. In a note to his version he justly remarks that it makes no sense, and the interpolation of ἐξαρκεῖν, or, as suggested in the translation, ζηλωτῶ (? ζηλωτὰ εἶναι), seems pointless. See note a.

<sup>a</sup> The first part of this sentence down to "virtue" as here translated seems grammatically unimpeachable, and, I believe, gives a perfectly Philonic thought. Though the actual figure by which bodily and external goods are compared to officers

280

ON THE VIRTUES, 188-191

mand for ordinary purposes compared with service to queenly virtue<sup>a</sup> and have never seen the light in its full radiance. Since then nobility is the peculiar 189 portion of a mind purged clean of every spot, we must give the name of noble only to the temperate and just,<sup>b</sup> even though their parents were slaves, home-bred or purchased; but to the evil children of good parents that portion<sup>c</sup> must be closed ground. For 190 the fool has no home and no city; he is expatriated from virtue, and virtue is in very truth the native land of the wise. With the fool inevitably comes ignobleness, even though his grandfather or ancestors be men of blameless life, for he habitually treats nobility as a stranger and sets a wide gulf between himself and her both in words and deeds. But not 191 only do the wicked fail to be noble, but they are actually, I see well, all mortal enemies of nobility, since they destroy ancestral prestige and dim and servicing practical needs as opposed to service in the court of virtue herself does not occur elsewhere, similar ideas are often to be found in Philo. Compare particularly the disquisition in De Fuga 25-37, where the proper use of these things as a preliminary to the higher life of contemplation is enjoined. Remarks to the same effect appear in De Sob. 61, De Conf. 18, Quis Rerum 285. There is more to be said for supposing a lacuna before ἀγνοειδέστατον. The four words may be spurious, as they are omitted in S. Assuming that they are genuine, the abrupt change of metaphor and perhaps their application to the "goods" themselves, instead of their possessors, is strange. It would not be surprising if some words had fallen out explaining that while these were not "blind wealth," they were not "seeing wealth" in the fullest sense. See further for Mangey's version App. p. 449.

<sup>b</sup> For Stoic and other illustrations of this thought see App. p. 449.

<sup>c</sup> Or simply "place." But the common sense of "estate" corresponds well to κλήρος.

PHILO

- ὅσον ἐν τῷ γένει λαμπρὸν ἕξαμαυροῦντάς τε καὶ 192 σβεννύντας. XXXVI. διό μοι δοκοῦσι φιλο-στοργότατοι πατέρες ἀπορρήσεις χρηματίζειν καθ' υἱῶν ἀποσχοινίζοντες αὐτοὺς τῆς οἰκίας καὶ συγγενείας, ὅταν τὴν ἐκ φύσεως ἐν τοῖς γεννήσασι περιττὴν καὶ ὑπερβάλλουσαν εὐνοίαν ἢ ἐν ἐκείνοις 193 μοχθηρία κατακρατήσῃ. τὸ δ' ἀληθὲς τοῦ λόγου ῥάδιον καὶ ἀφ' ἑτέρων διαγνῶναι. τί τῷ τὰς ὄψεις πεπηρωμένῳ γένοιτ' ἂν εἰς τὸ βλέπειν ὄφελος ὀξυωπία προγονική; ἢ πρὸς ἑρμηνείαν τῷ παρειμένῳ γλῶτταν τὸ γονεῖς ἢ πάππους γενέσθαι μεγαλοφώνους; τί δ' ὀνίνησι πρὸς εὐτονίαν τὸν ἐκ μακρᾶς καὶ φθινάδος νόσου κατεσκελετευμένον, εἰάν οἱ τοῦ γένους ἀρχηγέται δι' ἀθλητικὴν ῥώμην ἐν Ὀλυμπιονίκαις ἢ περιοδονίκαις γράφωνται; μένουσι γὰρ οὐδὲν ἡττόν αἱ τοῦ σώματος κῆρες ἐν ὁμοίῳ βελτίωσιν οὐκ ἐνδεχόμεναι διὰ τὰς τῶν 194 οἰκείων εὐπραγίας. τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ τρόπον οὔτε τοῖς ἀδίκους δίκαιοι γονεῖς οὔτε ἀκολάστοις σώφρονες οὔτε συνόλως ἀγαθοὶ πονηροῖς ὄφελος· οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ νόμοι τοῖς παρανομοῦσιν, ὧν εἰσιν αὐτοὶ κολασταί· νόμοι δέ τινες ἄγραφοι καὶ οἱ βίοι τῶν 195 ζηλωσάντων τὴν ἀρετὴν. ὅθεν οἶμαι τὴν εὐγένειαν, εἰ θεὸς αὐτὴν εἰς ἀνθρωπόμορφον ἰδέαν ἐτύπωσε, σταῶσαν πρὸς τοὺς ἀφηνιαστὰς ἀπογόνους ταῦτα ἂν εἰπεῖν· “ τὸ συγγενὲς οὐχ αἵματι μετρεῖται μόνον, πρυτανευούσης ἀληθείας, ἀλλὰ πράξεων

<sup>a</sup> For χρηματίζειν cf. De Cher. 115 χρηματίζειν ἀπόλειψιν πρὸς τὸν ἀρχοντα, and note, vol. ii. p. 486. This use is noted in L. & S. revised, referring to this passage under the head

ON THE VIRTUES, 191-195

finally quench all the glory which illumines the family. XXXVI. That is the reason, I think, why 192 fathers of the most affectionate kind formally disinherit<sup>a</sup> their sons and debar them from their home and kinship, when the depravity which they show overcomes the peculiar and intense affection implanted in parents by nature. The truth of what I 193 say can easily be recognized from other examples. If a man has lost the use of his eyes, will the keen-sightedness of his ancestors help him to see? If his tongue is paralysed, will he express himself better because his parents or grandparents possessed strong voices? If he is worn to a thread by a long and wasting sickness, will it profit for restoring him to vigour that the athletic prowess of the founders of the family has placed them in the list of victors at the Olympic or all the other great games? Their bodily debilities remain just as they were and cannot be improved by the better luck of their relations. In the same way, 194 just parents are no help to the unjust, nor temperate parents to the intemperate, nor, in general, good parents to the wicked, any more than the laws to law-breakers, whom they exist to punish, and the lives of those who have earnestly followed virtue may be called unwritten laws.<sup>b</sup> And, there- 195 fore, I think, that if God had so formed nobility as to take a human shape, she would stand to face the rebellious descendants and address them thus. "In the court where truth presides, kinship is not measured only by blood, but by similarity of conduct and pur-of "issuing ordinances, etc." But the use in Philo points rather to taking proceedings.

<sup>b</sup> For this idea, which inspires all the biographies translated in vol. vi., see particularly De Abr. 4 ff. and 276.

PHILO

- ὁμοιότητι καὶ θήρα τῶν αὐτῶν. ὑμεῖς δὲ τάναντία ἐπετηδεύσατε, τὰ μὲν ἐμοὶ φίλα νομίσαντες ἐχθρά, [439] τὰ δὲ | δυσμενῆ φίλα· παρ' ἐμοὶ μὲν γὰρ αἰδῶς καὶ ἀλήθεια μετριοπάθειά τε καὶ ἀτυφία καὶ ἀκακία τίμα, παρ' ὑμῖν δὲ ἄτιμα· κάμοι μὲν ἐχθρὰ τὸ ἀναίσχυντον, τὸ ψεῦδος, ἢ ἀμετρία τῶν παθῶν, 196 ὁ τῦφος, αἱ κακίαι, ὑμῖν δὲ οἰκειότατα. τί δὴ μελετήσαντες ἀλλοτρίωσιν τὴν δι' ἔργων τὴν ἐν λόγῳ συγγένειαν εὐπρεπὲς ὄνομα ὑποδύομενοι καθυποκρίνεσθε; παραγωγὰς γὰρ καὶ κεκομφευ-μένας ἀπάτας οὐκ ἀνέχομαι, διότι ῥάδιον μὲν καὶ τῷ τυχόντι εὐπροσώπους λόγους εὔρειν, ἦθη δ' 197 ὑπαλλάξασθαι πονηρὰ χρηστοῖς οὐ ῥάδιον. εἰς ἄπερ ἀφορῶσα καὶ νῦν ἐχθροὺς νομίζω καὶ αὐθις ἠγγήσομαι τοὺς τὰ τῆς ἐχθρας ὑπεκκαύματα ζωπυρήσαντας καὶ μᾶλλον τῶν εἰς δυσγένειαν ὄνειδι-ζομένων ὑποβλέψομαι· τούτοις μὲν γὰρ ἀπολογία τὸ μηδὲν οἰκεῖον ἔχειν (παράδειγμα)<sup>1</sup> καλοκαγαθίας, ὑπόδικοι δ' ὑμεῖς οἱ ἐκ μεγάλων φύντες οἴκων, οἷς αὔχημα καὶ κλέος τὰ λαμπρὰ γένη· παριδρυμένων γὰρ καὶ τρόπον τινὰ συμπεφυκότων ἀρχετύπων ἀγαθῶν οὐδὲν ἀπομάξασθαι καλὸν διανοήθητε." 198 "Ὅτι δὲ ἐν ἀρετῆς κτήσει τίθεται τὸ εὐγενὲς καὶ τὸν ἔχοντα ταύτην εὐγενῆ μόνον ὑπείληφεν, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὅστις ἂν καλῶν καὶ ἀγαθῶν γένηται γονέων, 199 δῆλον ἐκ πολλῶν. XXXVII. αὐτίκα τοὺς ἐκ τοῦ γηγενοῦς φύντας τίς οὐκ ἂν εὐπατρίδας εἴποι καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Added by Cohn on the analogy of Spec. Leg. iv. 182. A partitive genitive after μηδὲν is doubtful Greek.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "Having practised the estrangement that comes by actions, why by assuming a specious name do you counterfeit the kinship of words?"

ON THE VIRTUES, 195-199

suit of the same objects. But your practice has been the opposite. What I hold dear you regard as hostile and my enemies you love. In my sight, modesty and truth and control of the passions and simplicity and innocence are honourable, in your eyes dishonourable. Shamelessness, falsehood, passion uncontrolled, vanity, vices are my enemies, but to you they are the closest of friends. You have done your best 196 by your actions to make yourselves strangers, why do you hypocritically assume a specious name and call yourselves kinsmen?<sup>a</sup> Seductive arts and clever wiles I cannot away with. It is easy for anybody to devise prettily-sounding words, but it is not easy to change bad morals to good. With these things before my 197 eyes, I count now as enemies and hereafter shall hold as such, those who have kindled the fuel of enmity into a flame,<sup>b</sup> and I shall frown on them, more than on those whose reproach is their ignoble birth. They may plead in defence that they have no pattern of high excellence for their own, but you stand accused, you who spring from great houses, which boast and glory in the splendour of their race. For though you have good models at your side, almost, indeed, your birth fellows, you have never been minded to reproduce any of their excellence."

That he held nobility to depend on the acquisition 198 of virtue and considered that the possessor of virtue and not anyone born of highly excellent parents is noble can be shown from many examples. XXXVII. 199 For instance, who would deny that the sons of the Earth-born were of high birth and progenitors of

<sup>b</sup> These stilted phrases, in keeping with the rest of the speech, apparently mean nothing more than "I shall never forgive you."

PHILO

- εὐπατριδῶν ἀρχηγέτας; οἱ γένος ἐξαίρετον ἔλαχον παρὰ τοὺς ἔπειτα, βλαστήσαντες ἐκ τῶν πρώτων νυμφίων ἀνδρός τε καὶ γυναικὸς τότε πρῶτον εἰς ὁμίλιαν κοινήν ἐπὶ σπορᾷ τοῦ ὁμοίου συνελθόντων. ἀλλ' ὅμως δυοῖν γενομένων ὁ πρεσβύτερος ὑπέμεινε τὸν νεώτερον δολοφονῆσαι καὶ τὸ μέγιστον ἄγος, ἀδελφοκτονίαν, ἐργασάμενος πρῶτος αἵματι ἀνθρω-200 πίνῳ τὴν γῆν ἐμίανε. τί δὴ τοῦτον ὤνησεν ἢ εὐγένεια τὴν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ δυσγένειαν ἐπιδειξάμενον; ἦν καὶ ὁ τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων πραγμάτων ἔφορος θεὸς ἰδὼν. ἐστύγησε καὶ προβαλλόμενος ὤρισε τιμωρίας, οὐκ εὐθύς ἀνελὼν, ὅπως ἀναισθήτως ἔχη συμφορῶν, ἀλλὰ μυρίου ἐπικρεμάσας τοὺς ἐν αἰσθήσει θανά-τους λύπαις καὶ φόβοις ἐπαλλήλοις εἰς κακῶν ὀδυνηροτάτων ἀντίληψιν.
- 201 Ἐγένετο δέ τις τῶν μετὰ ταῦτα σφόδρα δοκίμων ἀνὴρ ὀσιώτατος, οὗ τὴν εὐσέβειαν ἀνάγραφτον ἠξίωσεν (εἶναι) ἐν ἱεραῖς βίβλοις ὁ τοὺς νόμους διαταξάμενος· ὃς ἐν τῷ μεγάλῳ κατακλυσμῷ, τῶν πόλεων ἀφανιζομένων πανωλεθρία—καὶ γὰρ τῶν [440] ὄρων τὰ ὑψηλότατα | τῇ συναυξήσει καὶ ἐπιτάσει τῆς περὶ τὴν φορὰν πλημμύρας κατεπίνετο—, μόνος μετὰ τῶν οἰκείων διασώζεται τῆς καλο-κάγαθίας ἄθλον ἀράμενος, οὗ μείζον οὐκ ἔστιν 202 εὐρεῖν. ἀλλὰ καὶ τούτῳ τριῶν γενομένων παίδων καὶ συναπολελευκότων τῆς πατρῴας δωρεᾶς εἰς ἐτόλμησε τὸν αἴτιον τῆς σωτηρίας πατέρα κατα-κερτομεῖν γέλωτα καὶ χλεύην, εἴ τι παρεσφάλῃ μὴ καθ' ἐκούσιον γνώμην, τιθέμενος καὶ τοῖς μὴ εἰδόσι ἀπογυμνῶν ἃ κρύπτειν θέμις ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Praem. 72 f. and note.

ON THE VIRTUES, 199-202

high-born children? Their lot was to be born under circumstances which distinguished them above their posterity, sprung as they were from the first bridal pair, the man and woman who then first came together in mutual intercourse to procreate their like. Nevertheless, of the sons thus born the elder did not shrink from treacherously murdering the younger, and by committing the most accursed of crimes, fratricide, was the first to pollute the earth with human blood. What profit was noble birth to him, 200 who displayed in his soul an ignobleness, which God, the Overseer of human affairs, saw and abhorred and cast him forth to pay the penalty. And that penalty was this. He did not slay him at once and so make him insensible to his sufferings, but held suspended over him a multitude of deaths—deaths which made themselves felt in a constant succession of griefs and fears, carrying with them full apprehension of the miseries of his most evil plight.<sup>a</sup>

Among the worthiest men of later time was one of 201 special holiness, whose piety the framer of the code held worthy to be recorded in the sacred books. In the great deluge when cities were submerged and annihilated, since even the highest mountains were swallowed up by the increasing magnitude and force of the mass of water which the flood produced, he alone was saved with his family, so receiving for his high excellence a reward of unsurpassed value. Yet 202 of the three sons born to him, who shared in the boon bestowed on their father, one ventured to pour reproach upon the author of his preservation. He held up to scorn and laughter some lapse into which his father had fallen involuntarily, and laid bare what should have been hidden to those who knew it γεννήσαντος αἰσχύνῃ. τοιγαροῦν οὐκ ὤνατο τῆς λαμπρᾶς εὐγενείας ἐπάρατος γενόμενος καὶ τοῖς μετ' αὐτὸν ἀρχὴ κακοδαιμονίας· ὦν ἄξιον ἦν τυγχάνειν τὸν ἡμεληκότα γονέων τιμῆς.

PHILO

- 203 Ἄλλὰ τί τούτων μεμνήσθαι προσήκεν ἀφέμενον τοῦ πρώτου καὶ γηγενοῦς; ὃς ἔνεκα εὐγενείας οὐδενὶ θνητῷ σύγκριτος, χερσὶ μὲν θείαις (εἰς) ἀνδριάντα τὸν σωματοειδῆ τυπωθεὶς ἀκρότητι τεχνῆς πλαστικῆς, ψυχῆς δὲ ἀξιωθεὶς ἀπ' οὐδενὸς ἔτι τῶν εἰς γένεσιν ἠκόντων, ἐμπνεύσαντος θεοῦ τῆς ἰδίας δυνάμεως ὅσον ἐδύνατο δέξασθαι θνητῆ φύσιν, ἄρ' οὐχ ὑπερβολὴ τις εὐγενείας μηδεμιᾶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσαι διωνομάσθησαν<sup>1</sup> εἰς σύγκρισιν ἐλθεῖν δυναμένη;
- 204 τῶν μὲν γὰρ τὸ κλέος ἐκ προγόνων εὐτυχίας— ἄνθρωποι δὲ οἱ πρόγονοι, ζῶα ἐπικήρα καὶ φθαρτά, καὶ αἱ τούτων ἀβέβαιοι καὶ ἐφήμεροι τὰ πολλὰ εὐπραγίαι—, τοῦ δὲ πατῆρ [μὲν] θνητὸς οὐδεὶς, ὁ δὲ
- 205 αἰδίδιος θεός· οὗ τρόπον τινὰ γενόμενος εἰκῶν κατὰ τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν ἐν ψυχῇ, δέον ἀκηλίδωτον τὴν εἰκόνα φυλάξει καθ' ὅσον οἶόν τε ἦν ἐπακολουθήσαντα ταῖς τοῦ γεννήσαντος ἀρεταῖς, προτεθέντων εἰς αἰρέσεις καὶ φυγὰς τῶν ἐναντίων, ἀγαθοῦ καὶ κακοῦ καὶ καλοῦ καὶ αἰσχροῦ καὶ ἀληθοῦς καὶ ψευδοῦς, τὰ μὲν ψευδῆ καὶ αἰσχροὰ καὶ κακὰ προθύμως εἴλετο, τῶν δὲ ἀγαθῶν καὶ καλῶν καὶ ἀληθῶν ἠλόγησεν· ἐφ' οἷς εἰκότως θνητὸν ἀθανάτου βίον ἀνθυπηλλάξατο μακαριότητος καὶ εὐδαιμονίας σφαλεῖς καὶ ῥᾶστα μετέβαλεν εἰς ἐπίπονον καὶ κακοδαίμονα ζωὴν.

206 XXXVIII. Ἄλλ' οὗτοι μὲν ἔστωσαν κοινοὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὅσα διωνομάσθη (S) or αἰδίδιων ὀνομασθεῖσαν.

ON THE VIRTUES, 202-206

not, casting shame on him who begat him. He then had no profit from the glories of his birth, laid under a curse and a source of misery to his successors, a worthy fate for one who had no thought for the honour due to parents.<sup>a</sup>

Yet why should we mention these and leave out of 203 sight the first and earth-born man, who for nobility of birth stands beyond comparison with all other mortals, moulded with consummate skill into the figure of the human body by the hand of God, the Master Sculptor, and judged worthy to receive his soul not from any other thing already created, but through the breath of God imparting of His own power such measure as mortal nature could receive? Have we not here a transcendence of noble birth, which cannot be brought into comparison with any of the other examples known to fame? For their renown rests on the good 204 fortune of their ancestors, who were men, creatures which lived only to decay and perish, and their happier experiences are mostly uncertain and short-lived. But his father was no mortal but the eternal God, whose image he was in a sense in virtue of the ruling mind within the soul. Yet though he should have 205 kept that image undefiled and followed as far as he could in the steps of his Parent's virtues, when the opposites were set before him to choose or avoid, good and evil, honourable and base, true and false, he was quick to choose the false, the base and the evil and spurn the good and honourable and true, with the natural consequence that he exchanged mortality for immortality, forfeited his blessedness and happiness and found an easy passage to a life of toil and misery.

XXXVIII. These examples may serve as land- 206

<sup>a</sup> Gen. ix. 20-25.

PHILO

- πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις ὄροι τοῦ μὴ ἐπὶ μεγάλοις γένεσι σεμνύεσθαι τοὺς καλοκάγαθίας ἀμοιροῦντας· Ἰουδαίοις δὲ καὶ ἕτεροι δίχα τῶν κοινῶν ἐξαίρετοι. τῶν γὰρ τοῦ γένους ἀρχηγετῶν<sup>1</sup> εἰσιν οὓς αἱ τῶν προγόνων ἀρεταὶ συνόλως οὐδὲν ὤνησαν <ἐπ’> ἐπι-[441] λήπτοις καὶ | ὑπαιτίοις πράξεσιν ἀλόντας, εἰ καὶ πρὸς ἑτέρου μηδενὸς ἐλεγχθέντας, ἀλλ’ οὖν ὑπὸ τοῦ συνειδότος, ὃ μόνον ἐξ ἀπάντων δικαστήριον τέχ-207 ναις λόγων οὐ παράγεται. πολῦπαις ἦν ὁ πρῶτος ἐκ τριῶν παιδοποιησάμενος γυναικῶν, οὐ δι’ ἡδονῆς ἀπόλαυσιν, ἀλλὰ δι’ ἐλπίδα τοῦ πληθύναι τὸ γένος· ἀλλ’ ἐκ πολλῶν εἰς μόνος ἀπεδείχθη κληρονόμος τῶν πατρῶων ἀγαθῶν, οἱ δ’ ἄλλοι πάντες γνώμης ὑγιοῦς σφαλέντες καὶ μηδὲν τῶν τοῦ γεννήσαντος ἀπομαζάμενοι διωκίσθησαν ἀλλοτριωθέντες τῆς αἰοιδίμου εὐγενείας.
 208 Πάλιν ἐκ τοῦ δοκιμασθέντος κληρονόμου δύο δί-δυμοὶ γεννῶνται μηδὲν [ὅτι μὴ χεῖρας καὶ ταύτας ἔνεκά τινος οἰκονομίας] ὅμοιον ἐπιφερόμενοι, μήτε τοῖς σώμασι μήτε ταῖς γνώμαις· ὁ μὲν γὰρ νεώτερος καταπειθῆς ἀμφοτέροις τοῖς γονεῦσιν ἦν καὶ οὕτως εὐάρεστος, ὡς καὶ θεοῦ τυχεῖν ἐπαιέτου, ὁ δὲ μείζων ἀπειθῆς, [ἐκ] τῶν γαστρὸς καὶ τῶν μετὰ*

<sup>1</sup> Cohn in translation suggests that παίδων or ἀπογόνων has fallen out after ἀρχηγετῶν, since Ishmael, Esau, etc. could not be called the founders of the race. Loosely, I think, he might call them this, as belonging to the family. If not, perhaps τῶν τοῦ γένους <τῶν> ἀρχηγετῶν (γένος as often = “family”). For ἀρχηγέτης used absolutely cf. De Praem. 60.

<sup>a</sup> Founded on Gen. xxv. 5, 6 “Abraham gave all that he had to Isaac. But to the sons of his concubines Abraham

ON THE VIRTUES, 206-208

marks common to all mankind to remind them that those who have no true excellence of character should not pride themselves on the greatness of their race. But besides these common examples, the Jews have others peculiar to themselves. For among the founders of the race, there are some who profited nothing by the virtues of their ancestors, proved to be guilty of highly reprehensible conduct, convicted, if not by any other judge, at any rate by their conscience, the one and only court which is never misled by oratorical artifices. The first was the father of 207 many children, begotten on three wives, not for indulgence in pleasure but in the hope of multiplying the race. But of his many sons, only one was appointed to inherit the patrimony. All the rest failed to show sound judgement and as they reproduced nothing of their father's qualities, were excluded from the home and denied any part in the grandeur of their noble birth.<sup>a</sup>

Again, the one who was approved as heir begat 208 two twins, who had no resemblance to each other, either in body or disposition [except in the hands, and in these only for a particular act of policy].<sup>b</sup> For the younger was obedient to both his parents and won such favour that God, too, joined in praising him, but the elder was disobedient, indulging without restraint in the pleasures of the belly and the lower gave gifts, and sent them away from Isaac his son." Cf. De Mig. 94 and note, vol. iv. p. 563.

<sup>b</sup> I agree with Cohn that this addition is incredibly silly, and probably an interpolation, though it is true that Philo is not at his best throughout this treatise. (The words refer of course to Jacob's disguising his hands with goat-skins, Gen. xxvii. 16 and 23.) But on this and on the meaning of οἰκονομία see App. p. 449.

PHILO

- γαστέρα ἡδονῶν ἀκρατῶς ἔχων, ὕφ' ὧν ἀνεπίεσθη καὶ πρεσβείων ἐξίστασθαι τῷ μετ' αὐτὸν καὶ μετανοεῖν εὐθὺς ἐφ' οἷς ἐξέστη καὶ φονᾶν κατὰ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ καὶ μηδὲν ἕτερον ἢ δι' ὧν λυπήσει τοὺς 209 γονεῖς πραγματεῦσθαι. τοιγαροῦν τῷ μὲν εὐχὰς τίθενται τὰς ἀνωτάτω, βεβαιούντος ἀπάσας θεοῦ καὶ μηδεμίαν ἀξιώσαντος ἀτελῆ καταλιπεῖν, τῷ δὲ κατ' ἔλεον χαρίζονται τὴν ὑπήκοον τάξιν, ἵνα δου-λεύῃ τῷ ἀδελφῷ, νομίζοντες, ὅπερ ἐστίν, ἀγαθὸν 210 εἶναι τῷ φαύλῳ τὸ μὴ αὐτεξούσιον. καὶ εἴ γε ὑπέμεινε τὴν δουλείαν ἄσμενος, δευτερείων ἂν ἠξιοῦτο ὡς ἐν ἄθλοις ἀρετῆς· νυνὶ δὲ ἀπαυθαδιόμενος<sup>1</sup> καὶ δραπετεύσας τῆς καλῆς ἐπιστασίας αὐτῷ τε καὶ τοῖς ἀπογόνοις μεγάλων αἴτιος ὄνειδῶν ἐγένετο, ὡς τὸν ἀβίωτον αὐτοῦ βίον ἐστηλιτεῦσθαι πρὸς σαφέστατον ἔλεγχον τοῦ μηδὲν τὴν εὐγένειαν ὠφελεῖν τοὺς ἀναξίους εὐγενείας.
 211 XXXIX. Οὗτοι μὲν οὖν εἰσι τῆς ἐπιλήπτου τάξεως, οὓς ἐξ ἀγαθῶν πονηροὺς γενομένους ὤνησαν μὲν οὐδὲν αἱ πατέρων ἀρεταί, αἱ δ' ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ κακίαι μυρία ἔβλαψαν. ἔχω δ' εἰπεῖν ἑτέρους τὴν ἐξ ἐναντίας ἀμείνω τεταγμένους τάξιν, οἷς πρόγονοι μὲν ὑπαίτιοι, ζηλωτὸς δὲ καὶ ἀνάπλεως εὐφημίας 212 ὁ βίος. τοῦ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἔθνους ὁ πρεσβύτατος γένος<sup>2</sup> μὲν ἦν Χαλδαῖος, πατὴρ δὲ ἀστρονομικοῦ τῶν περὶ τὰ μαθήματα διατριβόντων, οἱ τοὺς ἀστέ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀυθαδησάμενος (S) or ἀπαυθαδίσας.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. γένει or γένους.

---

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xxvii. 27-29 and 39, 40. Of course to ascribe these prayers to Rebecca as well as Isaac is a complete perversion of the story.

lying parts. Influenced by these he surrendered his birth-right to his junior, then, at once, repenting of the surrender, sought his brother's life, and all his concern was to act in such a way as would cause grief to his parents. Therefore, for the younger they 209 prayed that he should be blessed above all others, all which prayers God confirmed and would not that any of them should be left unfulfilled. But to the elder in compassion they granted an inferior station to serve his brother, rightly thinking that it is not good for the fool to be his own master.<sup>a</sup> And if, indeed, he had 210 endured his servitude contentedly, he would have been awarded the second prize for prowess in the arena of virtue. As it was, by his wilfulness, a runagate from the excellent rule set over him, he brought heavy reproaches upon himself and his descendants, so that his life so little worth living stands recorded as the clearest proof that to those who are unworthy of nobility, nobility is of no value.

XXXIX. Now these belong to the erring class, evil 211 children of good parents, who gained no profit from the virtues of their fathers, but suffered countless injuries from the vices of their minds. But I can cite others of the opposite and better class, whose ancestors were men of guilt, but their own lives were worthy of emulation and full of good report. The most 212 ancient member of the Jewish nation was a Chaldaean by birth, the son of an astrologer, one of those who study the lore of that science,<sup>b</sup> and think that the <sup>b</sup> μαθήματα, though often "mathematics" in Philo, is here definitely restricted to astrology; cf. De Mut. 71 "The student of the nature of heaven, whom some call the μαθηματικός," a passage which also illustrates Philo's regular assumption that Abraham before his call believed in Chaldaean astrology; cf. De Abr. 69 ff.

PHILO

- [442] ras θεοὺς νομίζουσι καὶ τὸν | σύμπαντα οὐρανόν τε καὶ κόσμον, παρ' οὓς τό τε εὖ καὶ τὸ χεῖρον ἐκάστοις φασὶν ἀποβαίνειν, οὐδὲν ἕξω τῶν αἰσθη-213 τῶν αἴτιον ὑπολαμβάνοντες εἶναι. τούτου δὲ τί ἂν εἴη χαλεπώτερον ἢ μᾶλλον ἀπελέγξαι τὴν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ δυσγένειαν δυνάμενον δι' ἐπιστήμης τῶν πολλῶν καὶ δευτέρων καὶ γενητῶν εἰς ἀνεπιστη-μοσύνην ἰούση τοῦ ἐνὸς καὶ πρεσβυτάτου καὶ ἀγενήτου καὶ ποιητοῦ τῶν ὄλων καὶ διὰ τε ταῦτα ἀρίστου καὶ διὰ μυρία ἄλλα, ἃ διὰ μέγεθος ἀνθρώ-214 πινος λογισμὸς οὐ χωρεῖ; ὧν ἔννοιαν λαβὼν καὶ ἐπιθειάσας καταλείπει μὲν πατρίδα καὶ γενεὰν καὶ πατρῶον οἶκον, εἰδὼς ὅτι μένοντος μὲν αἰ τῆς πολυθέου δόξης ἐγκαταμενοῦσιν ἀπάται ἀνήνυτον κατασκευάζουσαι τὴν τοῦ ἐνὸς εὕρεσιν, ὅς ἐστιν αἰδιος μόνος καὶ ὄλων πατὴρ νοητῶν τε αὖ καὶ αἰσθητῶν, εἰ δὲ μετανασταίη, μεταναστήσεται καὶ τῆς διανοίας ἢ ἀπάτη μεθαρμοσαμένης τὴν ψευδῆ 215 δόξαν εἰς ἀλήθειαν. ἅμα δὲ καὶ τὸν πόθον ὃν ἐπόθει γινῶναι τὸ ὃν προσανερρίπισε λόγια χρησθέντα, οἷς ποδηγετούμενος ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ ἐνὸς ἀοκνοτάτη σπουδῇ ζήτησιν ἦει· καὶ οὐ πρότερον ἀνήκεν ἢ τρανοτέρας λαβεῖν φαντασίας, οὐχὶ τῆς οὐσίας—τούτο γὰρ ἀμήχανον—, ἀλλὰ τῆς ὑπάρξεως 216 αὐτοῦ καὶ προνοίας. διὸ καὶ πιστεῦσαι λέγεται τῷ θεῷ πρῶτος, ἐπειδὴ καὶ πρῶτος ἀκλινῆ καὶ βεβαίαν ἔσχεν ὑπόληψιν, ὡς ἔστιν ἐν αἴτιον τὸ ἀνωτάτω καὶ προνοεῖ τοῦ τε κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ. κτησάμενος δὲ πίστιν,<sup>1</sup> τὴν τῶν ἀρετῶν βεβαιοτάτην,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιστήμην.

ON THE VIRTUES, 212-216

stars and the whole heaven and universe are gods, the authors, they say, of the events which befall each man for good or for ill, and hold that there is no originating cause outside the things we perceive by our senses. What could be more grievous or more 213 capable of proving the total absence of nobility in the soul than this, that its knowledge of the many, the secondary, the created, only leads it to ignore the One, the Primal, the Uncreated and Maker of all, whose supreme excellence is established by these and countless other attributes of such magnitude that no human reason can contain them? Percep- 214 tion of these truths and divine inspiration induced him to leave his native country, his race and paternal home, knowing that if he stayed the delusions of the polytheistic creed would stay within him and render it impossible for him to discover the One, who alone is eternal and the Father of all things, conceptual and sensible, whereas if he removed, the delusion would also remove from his mind and its false creed be replaced by the truth. At the same time, also, 215 the fire of yearning, which possessed him to know the Existent, was fanned by the divine warnings vouchsafed to him. With these to guide his steps, he went forth never faltering in his ardour to seek for the One, nor did he pause until he received clearer visions, not of His essence, for that is impossible, but of His existence and providence. And, therefore, he is the first 216 person spoken of as believing in God,<sup>a</sup> since he first grasped a firm and unswerving conception of the truth that there is one Cause above all, and that it provides for the world and all that there is therein. And having gained faith, the most sure and certain <sup>a</sup> Gen. xv. 6.

PHILO

συνεκτᾶτο καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀπάσας, ὡς παρὰ τοῖς ὑποδεξαμένοις νομίζεσθαι βασιλεύς, οὐχὶ ταῖς παρασκευαῖς—ιδιώτης γὰρ ἦν—, ἀλλὰ τῷ περὶ τὴν ψυχὴν 217 μεγέθει, φρονήματος ὧν βασιλικοῦ.<sup>1</sup> καὶ δῆτα θεραπεύοντες αὐτὸν διετέλουν ὡς ἄρχοντα ὑπήκοοι τὸ περὶ πάντα μεγαλείον τῆς φύσεως αὐτοῦ καταπληττόμενοι τελειότερας οὔσης ἢ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον· οὐδὲ γὰρ ὁμιλίαις ἐχρῆτο ταῖς αὐταῖς, ἀλλ' ἐπι-θειάζων τὰ πολλὰ σεμνοτέραις· ὅποτε γοῦν κατασχεθείη, μετέβαλλε πάντα πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον, τὰς ὄψεις, τὴν χροάν, τὸ μέγεθος, τὰς σχέσεις, τὰς κινήσεις, τὴν φωνήν, τοῦ θείου πνεύματος, ὅπερ ἄνωθεν καταπνευσθὲν εἰσωκίσαστο τῇ ψυχῇ, περι-
 [443] τιθέντος τῷ μὲν | σώματι κάλλος ἐξαιρετον, τοῖς 218 δὲ λόγοις πειθῶ, τοῖς δ' ἀκούουσι σύνεσιν. ἄρ' οὐκ ἂν εἴποις τὸν μετανάστην τουτονί, τὸν πάντων ἔρημον οἰκείων καὶ φίλων, εὐγενέστατον εἶναι, τῆς πρὸς θεὸν συγγενείας ὄρεχθέντα καὶ σπουδάσαντα μηχανῇ πάσῃ γνώριμον αὐτῷ γενέσθαι καὶ ταχ-θέντα μὲν τάξιν ἀρίστην τὴν ἐν προφήταις, πιστεύσαντα δὲ μηδενὶ τῶν ἐν γενέσει πρὸ τοῦ ἀγενήτου καὶ πάντων πατρός, καὶ βασιλέα δέ, ὡς ἔφην, παρὰ τοῖς ὑποδεξαμένοις νομισθέντα, μήθ' ὄπλοις μήτε στρατιωτικαῖς δυνάμεσιν, ὡς ἐνίοις ἔθος, λαβόντα τὴν ἀρχήν, ἀλλὰ χειροτονία θεοῦ τοῦ φιλαρέτου τοὺς εὐσεβείας ἐραστὰς αὐτοκρατέσιν ἐξουσίαις γεραίροντος ἐπ' ὠφελεία τῶν συντυγχανόντων; 219 οὗτος ἅπασιν ἐπηλύταις εὐγενείας ἐστὶ κανὼν, δυσ-

<sup>1</sup> The genitive of quality is unusual, if not impossible, in Greek. Mangey suggested μεσὸς or ὑπόπλεως ὧν. Perhaps λαχῶν.

ON THE VIRTUES, 216-219

of the virtues, he gained with it all the other virtues, so that by those among whom he settled he was regarded as a king,<sup>a</sup> not because of the outward state which surrounded him, mere commoner that he was, but because of his greatness of soul, for his spirit was the spirit of a king. Indeed, they continued to 217 treat him with a respect which subjects pay to a ruler, being awe-struck at the all-embracing greatness of his nature and its more than human perfection. For the society also which he sought was not the same as they sought, but oftener under inspiration another more august. Thus whenever he was possessed, everything in him changed to something better, eyes, complexion, stature, carriage, movements, voice. For the divine spirit which was breathed upon him from on high made its lodging in his soul, and invested his body with singular beauty, his voice with persuasiveness, and his hearers with understanding. Would you not say that this lone wan- 218 derer without relatives or friends was of the highest nobility, he who craved for kinship with God and strove by every means to live in familiarity with Him, he who while ranked among the prophets, a post of such high excellence, put his trust in nothing created rather than in the Uncreated and Father of all, he who as I have said was regarded as a king by those in whose midst he settled, a sovereignty gained not with weapons, nor with mighty armies, as is the way of some, but by the election of God, the friend of virtue, who rewards the lovers of piety with imperial powers to benefit those around them? He is the stan- 219 dard of nobility for all proselytes, who, abandoning

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xxiii. 6. E.V. "Thou art a mighty prince among us." LXX βασιλεύς.

PHILO

- γένειαν μὲν τὴν ἐξ ἀλλοκότων νόμων καὶ ἐκθέσμων ἐθῶν, ἃ λίθοις καὶ ξύλοις καὶ συνόλως ἀψύχοις ἰσοθέοις ἀπένειμε τιμὰς, καταλιποῦσι, καλὴν δ' ἀποικίαν στείλαμένοις πρὸς ἔμφυχον τῷ ὄντι καὶ ζῶσαν πολιτείαν, ἧς ἔφορος καὶ ἐπίσκοπος ἀλήθεια.
- 220 XL. Ταύτην τὴν εὐγένειαν οὐ μόνον θεοφιλεῖς ἄνδρες ἀλλὰ καὶ γυναῖκες ἐζήλωσαν, ἀπομαθοῦσαι μὲν ἀμαθίαν τὴν σύντροφον περὶ τιμῆς τῶν χειροκμητῶν, παιδευθεῖσαι δὲ τὴν περὶ μοναρχίας ἐπι
- 221 στήμην, ἣ μοναρχεῖται ὁ κόσμος. Θάμαρ ἦν τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς Παλαιστίνης Συρίας γύναιον, ἐν οἰκίᾳ καὶ πόλει τραφὲν πολυθέῳ γεμουσῆι ξοάνων καὶ ἀγαλμάτων καὶ συνόλως ἀφιδρυμάτων. ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ καθάπερ ἐκ σκότους βαθέος ἐδυνήθη βραχεῖαν αὐγὴν ἀληθείας ἰδεῖν, θανάτου κινδύνῳ πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ἠτόμολησεν ὀλίγα φροντίσασα τοῦ ζῆν, εἰ μὴ μέλλοι καλῶς ζῆν· τὸ δὲ καλῶς ἀνέφερεν ἐπ' οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἢ τὴν θεραπείαν καὶ ἱκεσίαν τοῦ ἐνὸς
- 222 αἰτίου. καίτοι δυσὶν ἀδελφοῖς ἀμφοτέροις πονηροῖς ἐν μέρει γημαμένη, κουριδίῳ μὲν τῷ προτέρῳ, τῷ δ' ὑστέρῳ κατ' ἐπιδικασίας νόμον,<sup>1</sup> γενεὰν τοῦ προτέρου μὴ καταλιπόντος, ἀλλ' ὅμως ἀκηλίδωτον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κατ' ἐπιδικασίαν νόμου (S) et al.

<sup>a</sup> Unless there is some independent tradition of Tamar's lineage, about which nothing is said in Gen. xxxviii. 6 ff., we must suppose that Philo assumes that, since she is not said like Rebekah and Rachel and Leah to come of the line of the patriarchs, she belonged to the idolatrous people around. On Tamar see App. p. 450.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the husband of her youth, him to whom her virginity was given. κουριδίος, which in § 114 was used in the ordinary sense of a wedded or lawful mate, cannot mean this here, as the ignobility of strange laws and monstrous customs which assigned divine honours to stocks and stones and soulless things in general, have come to settle in a better land, in a commonwealth full of true life and vitality, with truth as its director and president.

XL. To this nobility not only did men beloved of 220 God aspire, but women also, who unlearnt the errors of their breeding, the ignorance which led them to honour the works of men's hands, and became schooled in the knowledge of the monarchical principle by which the world is governed. Tamar was 221 a woman from Palestinian Syria, bred in a house and city which acknowledged a multitude of gods and was full of images and wooden busts and idols in general.<sup>a</sup> But when passing, as it were, from profound darkness she was able to glimpse a little ray of truth, she deserted to the camp of piety at the risk of her life, caring little for its preservation, if it were not to be a good life. This good life she held to mean nothing else than to be the servant and suppliant of the one great Cause. Although she was married 222 to two brothers in turn, both of them wicked, to the elder as her husband in the usual way,<sup>b</sup> to the younger under the law of the duties of the next of kin,<sup>c</sup> as the elder had left no issue, she nevertheless kept her own the second marriage was as lawful as the first. The meaning which it appears to have here is also found in Odyssey xv. 22, and is noted in Stephanus, though not in L. & S.

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xxxviii. 7 f. "At Athens when a woman was left an heiress (ἐπίκληρος), without having a male κύριος, or guardian, the next of kin might claim her in marriage. This claim was called ἐπίδικασία" (Dict. of Ant.). Though this law is very different from the Hebrew law that the deceased husband's brother should marry the childless widow, they have this in common, that they deal with the right possessed by the next of kin to the woman's hand.

PHILO

διαφυλάξασα τὸν ἑαυτῆς βίον ἴσχυσε καὶ τῆς προσηκούσης τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς εὐφημίας ἐπιλαχεῖν καὶ τοῖς μετ' αὐτὴν ἅπασιν εὐγενείας ἀφορμὴ γενέσθαι.

ἄλλ' αὕτη μὲν, εἰ καὶ ἀλλόφυλος, ἀλλ' οὖν γε ἐλευθέρα καὶ ἐξ ἐλευθέρων καὶ οὐκ ἀσήμενων 223 ἴσως. θεράπαινοι δὲ τῶν ὑπὲρ Εὐφράτην ἐν ἐσχατιαῖς τῆς Βαβυλῶνος γεννηθεῖσαι προικίδιαι μὲν ἐδόθησαν γαμουμέναις ταῖς τροφίμαις, ἄξια δὲ [444] κριθεῖσαι | παρελθεῖν εἰς εὐνήν ἀνδρὸς σοφοῦ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἐκ παλλακίδων εἰς γαμετῶν ὄνομα καὶ σχῆμα παρήλθον καὶ ἀντὶ θεραπαινίδων ἰσότημοι ταῖς δεσποίαις ὀλίγου δέω φάναι κατέστησαν ὑπ' ἐκείνων, ὅπερ ἦν ἀπιστότατον, πρὸς τὸ αὐτὸ ἀξίωμα παραπεμφθεῖσαι· φθόνος γὰρ οὐκ εἰσοικί-ζεται σοφῶν ψυχαῖς, οὐ μὴ παρόντος κοινοπραγοῦσι 224 τῶν ἀγαθῶν. οἱ δ' ἐκ τούτων νόθοι παῖδες γνησίων οὐδὲν διήνεγκαν, οὐ μόνον παρὰ τῷ γεννήσαντι—θαυμαστὸν γὰρ οὐδέν, εἰ τοῖς μὴ ὁμογαστρίοις ὁ πάντων κοινὸς πατήρ τὴν αὐτὴν εὐνοίαν παρεῖχεν—, ἀλλὰ καὶ παρὰ ταῖς μητρυαῖς· αἱ μὲν γὰρ τὸ <πρὸς> προγονοὺς μῖσος ἀναιρούμεναι εἰς ἄλεκτον 225 μεθηρμόσαντο κηδεμονίαν· οἱ δὲ προγονοὶ τῇ κατ' ἀντίδοσιν εὐνοίᾳ τὰς μητρυαῖς ὡς φύσει μητέρας ἐξετίμησαν· ἀδελφοὶ τε μέρει ἡμίσει<sup>1</sup> τοῦ γένους

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μέρει ἡμισυ (S) or μέρει τῇ μίξει et al.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in the house of Laban, Mesopotamia (Gen. xxiv. 10).

<sup>b</sup> Gen. xxix. 24 "Laban gave Zilpah his handmaiden unto

ON THE VIRTUES, 222-225

life stainless and was able to win the good report which belongs to the good and to become the original source to which the nobility of all who followed her can be traced. But she, though a foreigner, was, at any rate, a free woman, of free lineage, and that perhaps of no little note. There 223 were women born beyond the Euphrates,<sup>a</sup> in the extreme parts of Babylonia, who were handmaids and were given as dowry <sup>b</sup> to the ladies of the house at their marriage. But when they had been judged worthy to pass on to the wise man's bed, the first consequence was that they passed on from mere concubinage to the name and position of wedded wives, and were treated no longer as handmaids, but as almost equal in rank to their mistresses, who, indeed, incredible as it seems, promoted them to the same dignity as themselves.<sup>c</sup> For jealousy finds no home in the souls of the wise and free from its presence they share their good things with others. Secondly, the base-born sons of the handmaids re- 224 ceived the same treatment as the legitimate, not only from the father, who might fairly be expected to show the same kindness to the children of different mothers, since his paternity extends to all alike, but also from the stepmothers. They rid themselves of hatred for the step-children and replaced it by an extraordinary regard for their interests, while the 225 step-children returned their goodwill and honoured their stepmothers as fully as if they were their natural mothers. The brothers, though reckoned as half-Leah his daughter for a hand maid to her," and so Bilhah to Rachel, v. 29.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps "recommended them for promotion," which the ordinary sense of παραπέμπω = "escort" rather suggests. See Gen. xxx. 3 and 9.

PHILO

νομισθέντες οὐκ ἐφ' ἡμισείᾳ στέργειν<sup>1</sup> ἀλλήλους ἠξίωσαν, ἀλλ' εἰς τὸ διπλάσιον τὸ τοῦ φιλεῖν καὶ ἀντιφιλεῖσθαι πάθος συναυξήσαντες καὶ τὸ δοκοῦν ὑστερίζειν προσανεπλήρωσαν τοῖς ἐξ ἀμφοῖν γεγονόσιν εἰς ἀρμονίαν καὶ κρᾶσιν ἡθῶν συνδραμεῖν σπουδάσαντες.

226 XLI. "Ἐτι τοίνυν μεταδοτέον αὐτοῦ<sup>2</sup> τοῖς ὡς ἴδιον ἀγαθὸν τὸ ἀλλότριον, εὐγένειαν, ὑποδουμένοις; οἱ δίχα τῶν εἰρημένων ἐχθροὶ δικαίως <ἂν> νομισθεῖεν καὶ τοῦ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἔθλους καὶ τῶν πανταχοῦ πάντων, τοῦ μὲν ὅτι διδόασι τοῖς ὁμοφύλοις ἐκχειρίαν ὀλιγωρεῖν ὑγιαίνοντος <βίου καὶ> βεβαίου πεποιθήσει προγονικῆς ἀρετῆς, τῶν δ' ὅτι, κἂν ἐπ' αὐτὴν φθάσωσιν ἀκρότητα καλοκαγαθίας, οὐδὲν ὠφελήθησονται διὰ τὸ μὴ τυχεῖν γονέων καὶ πάπ-
227 πων ἀνεπιλήπτων. ἦς οὐκ οἶδ' εἴ τις βλαβερωτέρα γένοιτ' ἂν εἰσήγησις, εἰ μήτε τοῖς ἐξ ἀγαθῶν

<sup>1</sup> At this point the important ms. F is mutilated; its reading for the remaining sections are supplied by Cohn from the ms. which he believes to be a copy of it, and indeed its twin (gemellus), known as Vaticanus 379.

<sup>2</sup> So or μεταδοτέον αὐτοῖς τοῖς in all mss. except the twin of F just mentioned, which has τί τοίνυν μεταδοτέον τοῖς, and this Cohn adopts and translates "what have we to do (or share "teilen") with those who," etc. But apart from the question whether the ms. evidence is weighty, this implies a use of μεταδίδωμι which I have never noted in Philo, who regularly follows it with the genitive. Cohn and others seem to have found a difficulty in αὐτοῦ, for which λόγου has been proposed.

ON THE VIRTUES, 225-227

brothers by blood, did not think it enough to give a half affection to each other, but showed a twofold increase of tenderness in the love which they gave and received in return ; and the seeming defectiveness in their relationship they made good by the eagerness with which they hastened to unite both families in harmony and reciprocity of feeling.

XLI. Must we not then absolutely reject the 226 claims of those who assume as their own precious possession the nobility which belongs to others, who, different <sup>a</sup> from those just mentioned, might well be considered enemies of the Jewish nation and of every person in every place? Enemies of our nation, because they give their compatriots licence to put their trust in the virtue of their ancestors and despise the thought of living a sound and stedfast life. Enemies of people in general, who even if they reach the very summit of moral excellence, will not benefit thereby, if their parents and grandparents were not beyond reproach. I doubt indeed if any more mischievous 227 doctrine could be propounded than this, that avenging justice will not follow the children of good parents <sup>a</sup> Mangey gives for δίχα "his exceptis," and so Cohn. But "Those who claim to be εὐγενεῖς because of their descent, when their conduct was not εὐγενής except those whose conduct was εὐγενής, though their descent was not, are enemies," etc., is not sense. I have not found examples in prose for the sense required here, but Aesch. Prom. 927 ὅσον τό τ' ἄρχειν καὶ τὸ δουλεύειν δίχα is much the same.

---

If the sentence had been written as a statement in the reverse form τοῖς . . . τὸ ἀλλότριον, εὐγένειαν, ὑποδνομένοις οὐ μεταδοτέον αὐτοῦ, it would be perfectly natural, and the form here by which αὐτοῦ anticipates instead of follows the noun to which it refers does not create a serious difficulty. ἔτι τοῖνυν as in § 85 and § 141 = "can we after this?"

PHILO

πονηρευομένοις ἐπακολουθήσει τιμωρὸς δίκη μήτε τοῖς ἐκ πονηρῶν ἀγαθοῖς ἔψεται τιμή, τοῦ νόμου δοκιμάζοντος ἕκαστον αὐτὸν ἐφ' ἑαυτοῦ καὶ μὴ συγγενῶν ἀρεταῖς ἢ κακίαις ἐπαινοῦντος ἢ κολάζοντος.

ON THE VIRTUES, 227

if they turn to wickedness, and that honour will not be the reward of the good children of the wicked, thus contradicting the law, which assesses each person on his own merits and does not take into account the virtues or vices of his kinsmen in awarding praise or punishment.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS
(DE PRAEMIIS ET POENIS)

INTRODUCTION TO DE PRAEMIIS ET POENIS

The treatise begins with some remarks on the scheme on which Moses constructed his law book (1-3) and how it was observed by some and disregarded by others (4-6). Coming to the main subject of the rewards for obedience and punishments for disobedience he notes that those described in the history may be classified under individuals, houses or groups, cities, countries and nations, and larger regions (7). We take the rewards to individuals and start with the less perfect Trinity, Enos, Enoch and Noah, who exemplify respectively hopefulness, repentance and justice. Hope is the motive of all human effort and hope in God is its only true form (8-13). Enos the hoper was rewarded with a name which means that he is a true man (14). Enoch's repentance is rewarded by his "transference" away from the common herd to the isolation which the converted need (15-21). Noah the just was saved from the flood and made the founder of renewed mankind (22-23). The second Trinity, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, represent the true religion which despises vanity (24-27). Abraham the Taught learnt to believe in God and his reward was faith (28-30). Isaac the Self-taught instinctively rejoiced in all God's dispensations and his reward was joy (31-35). Jacob the Practiser sought to see God, not merely to infer him from his works, and his reward was the vision indicated by his name of Israel (36-46) and also the spiritual qualities signified in the "numbing of the broad part" (47-48). These lessons are recapitulated (49-51). But we must not forget Moses and his fourfold reward of kingship, lawgiving, prophecy and priesthood (52-56).

We pass on to rewards to "houses." Abraham and Isaac had families which contained some unworthy members: Jacob's children alone as a body were qualified for the reward, namely the privilege of founding the twelve tribes which expanded into a great nation (57-62 and 66); incidentally we may draw a philosophical lesson from the three families as types of the children or qualities shown by the three types of soul (61-65).

PHILO

We then turn to the punishments of which only two examples are given in what has come down to us. First, for individuals we have Cain, whose punishment was to be ever dying, never dead, carrying on an existence from which joy and pleasure have been eliminated and in which not only permanent grief but fear of what is coming are perpetually present (67-73). For houses we have the revolt of the Levites under Korah. Their offence is described, but the story of their punishment is lost by a break in the manuscripts (74-78); for the possibilities at this point see App. p. 455.

When the discourse, as we have it, is resumed we have come to the blessings promised in the law to the righteous. The first is victory over enemies, but before discussing who these enemies are he urges the necessity of not merely hearing but carrying out the law (79-84). The enemies are of two kinds, wild beasts and men; when men become what they should be, the beasts will also be tamed and men will eschew war with each other (85-92). War will either never come or if some still are mad enough to attack, they will be routed at once, and good government will be established (93-97). The second blessing is wealth, and many passages are cited which describe the abundance that is to be (98-107). The third is long life, and to this is appended the thought that the true long life is the good life, to which God may recall the human soul even as he promises to recall the repentant exiles (108-117). These four are external blessings; for the body there is promised the exemption from disease in which the good mind can rest and think (118-126).

He then turns to punishment or curses, all of which closely follow Leviticus and Deuteronomy. The first is famine, drought and destruction of every kind of crop by nature if not by enemy (127-133), followed by all the horrors of cannibalism (134), miseries which they will be unable to escape by suicide (135-136); enslavement with all its miseries (137-140); a curse resting not only on the land and fruits but on all undertakings (141-142); bodily diseases of every kind (143-146); the terrors of war, panic, wild beasts, destruction of cities and finally utter despair (147-151). Meanwhile the proselytes will prosper, thus teaching the lesson that it is not race but obedience which brings salvation (152). He then descants on the sabbaths which according to Leviticus the desolate land will enjoy. It had been wronged by the neglect of the sabbatical years, and will now take its rest and then after a while may produce a better race (153-158). This reminds him of the text "She that is desolate hath many children," a saying which can be applied allegorically to the converted soul which has been deserted by its vices and brings forth virtues (159-161).

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS

So much for the punishments, but there is also the promise of restoration to the penitent and a renewal of the national life in greater prosperity than ever (162-168); the curses will be turned upon the persecutors, who will find that their victory was transient and that the race which they despised had still a seed from which new life would spring (169-172).

ΠΕΡΙ ΑΘΛΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΕΠΙΤΙΜΙΩΝ<sup>1</sup>

(ΚΑΙ ΑΡΩΝ)

[408]
<sup>1</sup> I. Τῶν μὲν οὖν διὰ τοῦ προφήτου Μωυσέως λογίων τρεῖς ἰδέας εἶναι συμβέβηκε, τὴν μὲν περὶ κοσμοποιίας, τὴν δὲ ἱστορικὴν, τὴν δὲ τρίτην νομοθετικὴν. ἡ μὲν οὖν κοσμοποιία παγκάλως πᾶσα καὶ θεοπρεπῶς μεμήνυται, λαβοῦσα τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ γενέσεως οὐρανοῦ καὶ λήξασα εἰς ἀνθρώπου κατασκευῆν· ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἀφθάρτων τελειότατος, ὁ δὲ θνητῶν. ἀθάνατα δὲ καὶ θνητὰ ἐν γενέσει συνυφαίνων ὁ ποιητὴς εἰργάσατο τὸν κόσμον, τὰ μὲν γενόμενα ἡγεμονικά, τὰ δ' ὡς ὑπήκοα καὶ γενησό-<sup>2</sup> μενα.<sup>2</sup> τὸ δὲ ἱστορικὸν μέρος ἀναγραφὴ

<sup>1</sup> On the title see App. p. 451.

<sup>2</sup> So mss. Cohn prints τὰ μὲν [γενόμενα] <ὡς> ἡγεμονικά, τὰ δ' ὡς ὑπήκοα [καὶ] γενησόμενα and translates "destined the former to be subjects, the latter to be rulers." I can see no difficulty in the mss. text if translated as above. It is an indisputable truth that, while the heavenly bodies (in Philo's view) were created once for all, mortals are perpetually being brought into being, and indeed Philo himself often insists upon it in connexion with parenthood. If any correction is required, I should omit the somewhat pointless ὡς and possibly change καὶ to ἀεὶ = "from time to time." But this is hardly necessary, for though mortals will be perpetually created, they were also created at the beginning. It is of

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS

(AND CURSES)

I. The oracles delivered through the prophet Moses 1 are of three kinds.<sup>a</sup> The first deals with the creation of the world, the second with history and the third with legislation. The story of the creation is told throughout with an excellence worthy of the divine subject, beginning with the genesis of Heaven and ending with the framing of man. For Heaven is the most perfect of things indestructible as man of things mortal, immortal and mortal being the original components out of which the Creator wrought the world, the one created then and there to take command, the other subject, as it were, to be also created in the future. The historical part is a record of 2

<sup>a</sup> The scheme here laid down is, with a slight difference of terms, identical with that given in Mos. ii. 46 ff. There the Pentateuch is analysed into two parts, the historical and the legislative, but the historical is divided into the creation story and the "genealogical," a term which was applied in the grammatical schools to that part of history which is concerned with particular persons, rather than with places, dates or events. See note to that passage (vol. vi. p. 606).

---

course no objection to this that in § 9 he says that the necessaries for mortal subsistence were prepared from the beginning.

PHILO

βίων ἐστὶ σπουδαίων καὶ πονηρῶν καὶ τὰ ὀρισθέντα ἐκατέροις ἐπιτίμια καὶ γέρα ἐν ἐκάσταις γενεαῖς. τοῦ δὲ νομοθετικοῦ τὸ μὲν καθολικωτέραν ὑπόθεσιν ἔχει, τὸ δ' ἕτερον (τῶν κατὰ) μέρος νομίμων εἰσὶν ἐντολαί· κεφάλαια μὲν<sup>1</sup> δέκα, ἅπερ λέγεται κεχρησμοῦσθαι οὐ δι' ἔρμηνέως ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ ὑψώματι τοῦ ἀέρος σχηματιζόμενα καὶ ἄρθρωσιν ἔχοντα λογικὴν, τὰ δ' ἄλλα τὰ κατ' [409] <sup>3</sup> εἶδος [μέρη] διὰ τοῦ | προφήτου θεοπισθέντα. περὶ ὧν ἀπάντων ὅσα καιρὸς ἐν ταῖς προτέραις συν-τάξεσι διεξελθὼν καὶ προσέτι τῶν ἀρετῶν ἃς ἀπένειμεν εἰρήνην τε καὶ πολέμῳ μέτειμι κατὰ τὸ ἀκόλουθον ἐπὶ τὰ προτεθέντα καὶ τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἀθλα καὶ τοῖς πονηροῖς ἐπιτίμια.

<sup>4</sup> Συνασκήσας γὰρ ὑψηγήσει καὶ προτροπαῖς μαλακωτέραις καὶ πάλιν ἐπανατάσει καὶ νου-θεσίαις ἐμβριθεστέραις τοὺς κατ' αὐτὸν πολιτευομένους ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὴν ὧν ἐπαιδεύθησαν ἐπίδειξιν· οἱ δὲ παρελθόντες ὥσπερ εἰς ἱερὸν ἀγῶνα γυμνῆν τὴν ἑαυτῶν προαίρεσιν ἀνέφηναν εἰς ἐναργέστατον <sup>5</sup> ἔλεγχον τῆς ἀληθείας. εἶτα οἱ μὲν ἀθληταὶ τῷ ὄντι ἀρετῆς ἀνευρίσκοντο μὴ ψεύσαντες τῆς ἐπ' αὐτοῖς χρηστῆς ἐλπίδος τοὺς ἀλείπτας νόμους, οἱ δὲ ἄνανδροι καὶ ἀγεννεῖς ὑπὸ τῆς ἐμφύτου μαλακίας τὰς ψυχάς, πρὶν ἢ δυνατώτερόν τι ἀντιβιάσασθαι, προκαταπίπτοντες αἰσχύνῃ καὶ γέλῳ θεατῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δὲ or omit.

<sup>a</sup> See on De Virt. 22.

<sup>b</sup> I understand this and the next section to refer to the subsequent history of the Jewish Church and nation. The good and bad lives and of the sentences passed in each generation on both, rewards in one case, punishments in the other. The legislative part has two divisions, one in which the subject matter is more general, the other consisting of the ordinances of specific laws. On the one hand there are the ten heads or summaries which we are told were not delivered through a spokesman but were shaped high above in the air into the form of articulate speech : on the other the specific ordinances of the oracles given through the lips of a prophet. All these and 3 further the virtues which he assigned to peace and war<sup>a</sup> have been discussed as fully as was needful in the preceding treatises, and I now proceed in due course to the rewards and punishments which the good and the bad have respectively to expect.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 2-5

After having schooled the citizens of his polity with 4 gentle instructions and exhortations and more sternly with threats and warnings he called on them to make a practical exhibition of what they had learned. They advanced as it were into the sacred arena and showed the spirit in which they would act bared ready for the contest, to the end that its sincerity might be tested beyond doubt.<sup>b</sup> Then it was found 5 that the true athletes of virtue did not disappoint the high hopes of the laws which had trained them, but the unmanly whose souls were degenerate through inbred weakness, without waiting for any stronger counter-force to overpower them, dropped down, a source of shame to themselves and derision to the Pentateuch records the laws which Moses bequeathed, the later history examples of failure or success in carrying them out. Philo, however, never works out this part, and indeed hardly ever makes any allusion to the later history. See App. p. 451.

PHILO

6 ἐγίνοντο. δι' ἣν αἰτίαν οἱ μὲν βραβείων καὶ κηρυγμάτων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα νικῶσι δίδονται μετελάμβανον, οἱ δὲ οὐκ ἀστεφάνωτοι μόνον ἀπήεσαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἦτταν ἐπονείδιστον ἐνδεξάμενοι τῶν ἐν τοῖς γυμνικοῖς ἀγῶσιν ἀργαλεωτέραν· ἐκεῖ μὲν γὰρ ἀθλητῶν σώματα κλίνεται ραδίως ὀρθοῦσθαι δυνάμενα, ἐνταῦθα δὲ ὅλοι βίοι πίπτουσιν, οὓς ἅπαξ ἀνατραπέντας μόλις ἔστιν ἀνεγεῖραι.

7 Τῆς δὲ προνομίας καὶ τιμῆς καὶ τούναντιον κολάσεως τάξεις ἐναρμονίους ὑφηγεῖται, κατ' ἄνδρας, κατ' οἴκους, κατὰ πόλεις, κατὰ χώρας καὶ ἔθνη, κατὰ κλίματα γῆς μεγάλα. II. πρότερον δ' ἐρευνητέον τὰ ἐπὶ τιμαῖς, ἐπειδὴ καὶ λυσιτελέστερα καὶ ἡδῖω πρὸς ἀκρόασιν, ἀρχὴν λαμβάνοντας τὴν
8 ἔφ' ἐνὸς<sup>1</sup> ἐκάστου τῶν ἐν μέρει. φασὶ τὸν παλαιὸν ἐκεῖνον Τριπτόλεμον Ἑλληνας ἀρθέντα μετέωρον ἐπὶ πτηνῶν δρακόντων τὸν τοῦ σίτου καρπὸν εἰς ἅπασαν τὴν γῆν κατασπείρειν, ἀντὶ βαλανηφαγίας ἢ ἔχῃ τὸ ἀνθρώπων γένος ἡμερον καὶ ὠφέλιμον καὶ ἡδίστην τροφήν. τοῦτο μὲν οὖν ὡσπερ πολλὰ καὶ ἄλλα τοῖς εἰωθόσι τερατεύεσθαι μύθου πλάσμα ὃν ἀπολελείφθω σοφιστείαν πρὸ σοφίας καὶ γοη-
9 τείαν πρὸ ἀληθείας ἐπιτετηδευκόσιν. ἐξ ἀρχῆς

<sup>1</sup> One mss. ἀφ' ἐνὸς ἐκάστου, which Cohn adopts. Some others either ἀφ' or ἐφ' ἐκάστου, omitting ἐνὸς. See note b.

<sup>a</sup> See note on the lacuna, § 78, App. p. 455.

<sup>b</sup> The translation takes τὴν as agreeing with τιμὴν understood out of τιμαῖς. Cohn's ἀφ' for ἐφ' would presumably make it agree with ἀρχήν, though his translation "we will make a beginning with the honours for single persons" points rather to the other. The translation also takes τῶν ἐν μέρει as partitive genitive after ἐκάστου, but it might pos-

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 6-9

spectators. And therefore, while the former enjoyed 6 the prizes and laudatory announcements and all the other tributes which are paid to the victors, the latter departed not only without a crown but with the stigma of a defeat more grievous than those sustained in the gymnastic contests. For there the athletes' bodies are brought low but can easily stand once more erect. Here it is whole lives that fall, which once overthrown can hardly be raised up again.

The lessons which he gives on privilege, and 7 honour, and on the other hand on punishments fall under heads arranged in an orderly series, individual men, families, cities, countries and nations, vast regions of the earth.<sup>a</sup> II. We must first examine what is said of honours, as both more profitable and more pleasant to listen to, and we will begin with the honour paid to each single and particular individual.<sup>b</sup> The Greeks say that the primeval hero 8 Triptolemus <sup>c</sup> borne aloft on winged dragons sowed the corn-seed over the whole earth, in order that in place of the acorns which had been their food the human race might have a kindly,<sup>d</sup> wholesome and exceedingly palatable means of nourishment. Now this story like many others is a mythical fable and may be left to those whose way is to deal in mar-vels and cultivate sophistry rather than wisdom, and imposture rather than truth. For from the 9 sibly refer to the "heads," individuals, families, etc., i.e. begin among the particular heads with the honours to individuals.

<sup>c</sup> For Triptolemus see App. p. 451. The sequence of thought in these two sections is "just as God" (not a man as the pagan myth says) "provided the corn-seed for the body at the beginning, so he provided the seed of hope for the soul."

<sup>d</sup> See note on the use of ἡμερος, § 60 App. p. 454.

PHILO

- γὰρ ἅμα τῇ πρώτῃ γενέσει τῶν ὄλων ὁ θεὸς προεντρεπίσατο τὰ ἐπιτήδεια πᾶσι τοῖς ζώοις ἐκ γῆς ἀνεῖς, καὶ μάλιστα τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ᾧ τὴν ἐφ' ἅπασι τοῖς γηγενέσιν ἡγεμονίαν ἐχαρίζετο. τῶν γὰρ θείων ἔργων οὐδὲν ὀψίγονον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅσα τέχναις καὶ ἐπιμελείαις ὕστερον τελειοῦσθαι δοκεῖ, πάντως ἡμίεργα προϋπόκειται προμηθεῖα
- [410] φύσεως, ὡς μὴ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τὰς | μαθήσεις ἀνα-
 10 μνήσεις εἶναι λέγεσθαι. ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ὑπερκείσθω· τὴν δ' ἀναγκαιοτάτην σπορὰν ἐπισκεπτέον, ἣν ὁ ποιητὴς ἐν ἀρετώσῃ χώρα κατ-
 11 ἔσπειρε, λογικῇ ψυχῇ. ταύτης δ' ὁ πρῶτος σπόρος ἐστὶν ἐλπίς, ἡ πηγὴ τῶν βίων. ἐλπίδι μὲν γὰρ κέρδους ὁ χρηματιστὴς ἐπαποδύεται πολυτρόποις ἰδέαις πορισμῶν, ἐλπίδι δ' ὁ ναύκληρος εὐπλοίας περαιούται τὰ μακρὰ πελάγη· ἐλπίδι δόξης καὶ ὁ φιλότιμος αἰρεῖται πολιτείαν καὶ κοινῶν πραγμάτων ἐπιμέλειαν· δι' ἐλπίδα βραβείων καὶ στεφάνων καὶ οἱ τῶν σωματῶν ἀσκηταὶ τοὺς γυμνικοὺς ἀγῶνας διαθλοῦσιν· ἐλπίς εὐδαιμονίας καὶ τοὺς ἀρετῆς ζηλωτὰς ἐπαίρει φιλοσοφεῖν, ὡς ταύτῃ δυνησομένους καὶ τὴν τῶν ὄντων φύσιν ἰδεῖν καὶ δρᾶσαι τὰ ἀκόλουθα πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀρίστων βίων θεωρητικοῦ τε καὶ πρακτικοῦ τελείωσιν, ὧν
 12 ὁ τυχῶν εὐθύς ἐστὶν εὐδαίμων. ἔνιοι μὲν οὖν τὰ ἐλπίδος σπέρματα ἢ ὡς πολέμοιοι τὰς ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ κακίας ζωπυρήσαντες ἐνέπρησαν ἢ ὡς ἀμελεῖς τέχνης τῆς γεωργικῆς ὑπὸ ῥαθυμίας διέφθειραν.

<sup>a</sup> With ἀκόλουθα sc. φύσει from above—a regular Stoic expression in Philo. This is better, I think, than to take it with πρὸς = “agreeing with” or “tending to.” So Mangey

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 9-12

beginning at the first creation of all things God provided beforehand, raised from the earth, what was necessary for all living animals and particularly for the human race to which he granted sovereignty over all earthborn creatures. For none of the works of God is of later birth, but all that seems to be accomplished by human skill and industry in later time was there by the foresight of nature lying ready half made, thus justifying the saying that learning is recollection. But this is not 10 a point for our present discussion. What we have to consider is that most vital form of seed which the Creator sowed in the rich soil of the rational soul. And the first thing thus sown is hope, the fountain 11 head of the lives which we lead. In hope of gain the tradesman arms himself for the manifold forms of money getting. In hope of a successful voyage the skipper crosses the wide open seas. In hope of glory the ambitious man chooses political life and the charge of public affairs. The hope of prizes and crowns moves the training athlete to endure the contests of the arena. The hope of happiness incites also the devotees of virtue to study wisdom, believing that thus they will be able to discern the nature of all that exists and to act in accordance with nature <sup>a</sup> and so bring to their fullness the best types of life, the contemplative and the practical, which necessarily make their possessor a happy man. Now some have acted 12 like enemies in war to the germs of hope, and consumed them in the fire of the vices which they have kindled in the soul or like careless husbandmen have through their laziness allowed them to perish. There “consentanea perfectioni,” and so apparently Cohn. With this one would expect the dative rather than πρός.

PHILO

- εἰσὶ δ' οἱ καὶ δόξαντες ἐπιμελεῖσθαι, φιλαυτίαν πρὸ εὐσεβείας ἀσπασάμενοι, τὰς αἰτίας τῶν κατορθω-13 μάτων ἀνέθηκαν ἑαυτοῖς. ὑπαίτιοι δὲ πάντες οὗτοι· μόνος δ' ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος ὁ ἀναθεὶς τὴν ἐλπίδα θεῷ καὶ ὡς αἰτίῳ τῆς γενέσεως αὐτῆς καὶ ὡς ἀσινῆ καὶ ἀδιάφθορον ἱκανῶ μόνῳ διαφυλάξαι. τί οὖν ἄθλον πρόκειται τῷ στεφανωθέντι τὸν ἀγῶνα τοῦτον; τὸ μικτὸν ἐκ θνητῆς καὶ ἀθανάτου φύσεως ζῶον, ὁ ἄνθρωπος, οὐθ' ὁ αὐτὸς οὐθ' 14 ἕτερος ὢν τοῦ λαβόντος. τοῦτον Χαλδαῖοι μὲν προσονομάζουσιν Ἐνώς, εἰς δ' Ἑλλάδα γλώτταν μεταληφθεὶς ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος, τὸ κοινὸν ὄνομα τοῦ γένους ἴδιον λαβών, ἄθλον ἐξαίρετον, ὡς δέον μηδένα νομίζεσθαι τὸ παράπαν ἄνθρωπον, ὃς ἂν μὴ ἐπὶ θεὸν ἐλπίζῃ.
- 15 III. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἐλπίδος νίκην ἀγῶν δευτέρως ἐστὶν, ἐν ᾧ μετάνοια ἀγωνίζεται τῆς μὲν ἀτρέπτου καὶ ἀμεταβλήτου καὶ αἰεὶ κατὰ ταῦτά καὶ ὡσαύτως ἐχούσης φύσεως ἀμοιρήσασα, ζήλῳ δὲ καὶ ἔρωτι τοῦ βελτίονος ἐξαίφνης κατασχεθεῖσα καὶ σπεύδουσα καταλιπεῖν μὲν τὴν σύντροφον πλεονεξίαν καὶ ἀδικίαν, μεθορμίσασθαι δὲ πρὸς σωφροσύνην

<sup>a</sup> The next sections, largely repeating De Abr. 7 ff., are based on Gen. iv. 26, where the E.V. "He called his name Enosh (A.V. Enos), then began men to call on the name of the Lord God," appears in the LXX "He called his name Enos, he hoped to call on the name of the Lord God." Enos being a Hebrew word for man, Philo argues that his reward for his hopefulness was that he received the name of man, i.e. the true man. See note on De Abr. 8.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. not a man, and therefore not either himself or any other, but "man," all that true manhood includes.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 12-15

are others who seem to have guarded them well but have clung to self-assertion rather than piety and regarded themselves as the source of their achievements. All these are to be condemned. <sup>a</sup>He alone 13 is worthy of approval who sets his hope on God both as the source to which his coming into existence itself is due and as the sole power which can keep him free from harm and destruction. What reward then is offered to the winner of the Crown in this contest? It is that living being whose nature is a mixture of the mortal and immortal, even man, not the same man nor yet another than the winner.<sup>b</sup> The Hebrew 14 name for him is Enos, and Enos translated into Greek is ἄνθρωπος or man. He takes the name which is common to the whole race as his personal name, a reward of special distinction implying that no one should be thought a man at all who does not set his hope on God.

III. After the victory of hope comes the second 15 contest, in which repentance is the champion.<sup>c</sup> Repentance has nothing of that nature which remains ever in the same stay without movement or change. It has been suddenly possessed with an ardent yearning for betterment, eager to leave its inbred covetousness and injustice and come over to sober-

<sup>c</sup> Philo's treatment of the story of Enoch is much the same as in the parallel passage De Abr. 17 ff. It is based on Gen. v. 24 LXX as quoted in § 16 "he was not found because God transferred him." E.V. "He was not, for God took him." The chief differences are that the first part of the verse "Enoch was well pleasing to God," is not noted here, and that "transferred," which in De Abr. is interpreted as a change from vice to virtue, is here taken more as "removed from familiar surroundings." As to the interpretation given in Heb. xi. 5 "he was translated that he should not see death," see note in vol. vi. p. 597.

PHILO

- 16 καὶ δικαιοσύνην καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀρετάς. ἄθλα καὶ ταύτη προτίθεται διττὰ ἐπὶ διττοῖς κατορθώμασιν, ἀπολείπει μὲν αἰσchrῶν, αἰρέσει δὲ τῶν καλλίστων.
- [411] τὰ δ' ἄθλα ἀποικία καὶ μόνωσις· φησὶ | γὰρ ἐπὶ τοῦ τὰς μὲν σώματος νεωτεροποιίας ἀποδράντος, αὐτομολήσαντος δὲ πρὸς ψυχὴν· “οὐχ εὐρίσκετο,
- 17 διότι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ θεός.” αἰνίττεται δὲ ἐναργῶς διὰ μὲν τῆς μεταθέσεως τὴν ἀποικίαν, διὰ δὲ τοῦ μὴ εὐρίσκεσθαι τὴν μόνωσιν· καὶ σφόδρα οἰκείως· εἰ γὰρ τῷ ὄντι ἄνθρωπος καταπεφρόνηκεν ἡδονῶν καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν καὶ ἐπάνω τῶν παθῶν ἀψευδῶς ἔγνωκεν ἴστασθαι, [πρὸς] μετανάστασιν εὐτρεπιζέσθω φεύγων ἀμεταστρεπτι καὶ
- 18 οἶκον καὶ πατρίδα καὶ συγγενεῖς καὶ φίλους. ὄλκον γὰρ ἢ συνήθεια, ὡς δέος εἶναι, μὴ καταμείνας ἀλῶ τοσοῦτοις ἐν κύκλῳ φίλτροις ἀποληφθεῖς, ὧν αἱ φαντασίαι τὴν ἐγγενομένην ἡσυχίαν τῶν αἰσchrῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων πάλιν ἀνακινήσουσι καὶ μνήμας ἐναύλους, ὧν ἐπιλελήσθαι καλὸν ἦν, ἐνεργάσσονται.
- 19 πολλοὶ γοῦν ἀποδημίαις ἐσωφρονίσθησαν, ἔρωτας ἐκμανεῖς καὶ λελυττηκότας θεραπευθέντες, οὐκέτι τῆς ὄψεως χορηγεῖν δυναμένης τῷ πάθει τῆς ἡδονῆς τὰ εἶδωλα· τῇ γὰρ διαζεύξει κατὰ κενοῦ βαίνειν ἀνάγκη, μηκέτι παρόντος ὑφ' οὗ διερεθισθή-
- 20 σεται. κἂν μεταναστῆ μέντοι, τοὺς τῶν πολλῶν θιάσους ἐκτρεπέσθω μόνωσιν ἀσπαζόμενος· πέφυκε γὰρ καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς ἀλλοδαπῆς ὅμοια τοῖς οἴκοι δίκτυα, οἷς ἀνάγκη περιπεῖρεσθαι<sup>1</sup> τοὺς ἀπροοράτως ἔχοντας καὶ ταῖς τῶν πολλῶν χαίροντας ὁμιλίαις· ὅ τι γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> An odd word to connect with δίκτυα, which seems to be used exclusively of nets, and though stakes might be set round the nets, the reference must be to the way in which

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 16-20

ness and justice and the other virtues. Repentance 16 also has two rewards assigned to its double achievement in abandoning the base and choosing the excellent. These rewards are a new home and a life of solitude ; for he says of him who fled from the insurgency of the body to join the forces of the soul " he was not found because God transferred him." By " transference " he clearly signifies the new home 17 and by " not found " the life of solitude. Very pertinently too. For if a man has really come to despise pleasures and desires and resolved in all sincerity to take his stand above the passions, he must prepare for a change of abode and flee from home and country and kinsfolk and friends without a backward glance. For great is the attraction of familiarity. 18 We may fear that if he stays he may be cut off and captured by all the love charms which surround him and will call up visions to stir again the base practices which had lain dormant and create vivid memories of what it were well to have forgotten. Many persons 19 in fact have come to a wiser mind by leaving their country and have been cured of their wild and frenzied cravings when sight can no longer minister to passion the images of pleasure. For when thus dissociated it must needs be treading on empty space since the stimulus of pleasure is no longer present. And further if he changes his abode he 20 must shun great gatherings and welcome solitude. It cannot but be that even in the foreign soil there are many snares like those at home on which the shortsighted who delight in large assemblies are sure to be pinned. For a crowd is another name for every-

---

the prey would naturally be caught. Perhaps read περιπλέκεσθαι.

PHILO

ἄτακτον, ἄκοσμον, πλημμυλές, ὑπαίτιον, τοῦτο ὄχλος ἐστί, μεθ' οὗ φέρεσθαι τῷ νῦν πρῶτον μετ-21 οικισαμένῳ πρὸς ἀρετὴν ἀλυσιτελέστατον. ὡς γὰρ τοῖς ἐκ νόσου μακρᾶς ἀρχομένοις ἀναλαμβάνειν εὐάλωτά πῶς ἐστί τὰ σώματα μήπω πρὸς ἰσχὺν παγέντα κραταιοτέραν, οὕτως καὶ οἷς ἡ ψυχὴ νῦν πρῶτον ὑγιαίνεται πλαδῶσιν οἱ νοεροὶ τόνοι καὶ κραδαίνονται, ὡς δέος εἶναι, μὴ πάλιν ἐξορμήσῃ τὸ πάθος, ὃ πέφυκεν ἐκ τῆς τῶν εἰκαιότερων συνδιαιτήσεως ἀνερεθίζεσθαι.

22 IV. Μετὰ δὲ τοὺς μετανοίας ἀγῶνας τρίτα ἄθλα τίθεται δικαιοσύνης, ἧς ὁ μεταποιησάμενος λαμβάνει γέρα διττά, τὸ μὲν σωτήριον ἐν κοινῇ φθορᾷ, τὸ δὲ ταμίαν καὶ φύλακα γενέσθαι ἐξ ἐκάστης ζώων ἰδέας ἡρμοσμένων ζυγάδην εἰς
 23 δευτέραν γένεσιν ἀντὶ τῆς ἀπολλυμένης. ἠξίωσε γὰρ ὁ ποιητῆς τὸν αὐτὸν καὶ τέλος γενέσθαι τῆς κατακρίτου γενεᾶς καὶ ἀρχὴν τῆς ἀνυπαιτίου, διδάσκων τοὺς ἀπρονόητον εἶναι τὸν κόσμον λέγοντας ἔργοις, οὐ ῥήμασιν, ὅτι καθ' ὃν εἰσηγήσατο νόμον ἐν τῇ φύσει τῶν ὄλων αἱ σύμπασαι μυριάδες
 [412] τῶν ἀνθρώπων | μετὰ ἀδικίας ζήσασαι ἐνὸς ἀνδρὸς οὐκ ἄξιοι δικαιοσύνη συμβιοῦντος. τοῦτον Ἐλλήγες μὲν Δευκαλίωνα, Χαλδαῖοι δὲ Νῶε ἐπονομάζουσι, ἐφ' οὗ τὸν μέγαν κατακλυσμὸν συνέβη γενέσθαι.

<sup>a</sup> Or taking τρεῖς with μετοικισαμένῳ “now for the first time come to settle in the land of virtue.”

<sup>b</sup> The treatment of Noah here is very brief compared with De Abr. 27-46. In particular nothing is said of the point insisted on there as ranking him with the inferior Trinity, thing that is disorderly, indecorous, discordant, culpable, and to be carried along with the crowd is very detrimental to the virtue<sup>a</sup> of the settler on his first arrival. For just as when men are beginning to 21 recover from a long illness their bodies easily give way because their increase of strength is not yet firmly established, so in those whose soul is now for the first time becoming healthy the sinews of the mind are flabby and rickety, so that there is a danger that passion, which is naturally stimulated by association with the thoughtless, may break out afresh.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 20-23

IV. After the contest won by repentance come a 22 third set of rewards offered for justice.<sup>b</sup> He who attains to justice receives two prizes, one his salvation amid the general destruction, the other his appointment to take into his charge and protection the specimens of each kind of living creatures, mated in couples to produce a second creation to make good the annihilation of the first. For the 23 Creator judged it right that the same man should end the condemned and begin the innocent generation, thereby teaching by deeds and not by words those who deny that the world is governed by providence, that, under the law which He established in universal nature, all the myriads of the human race, if they have lived a life of injustice, are not worth a single man who has not departed from justice. This person, in whose day the great deluge took place, is called by the Greeks Deucalion and by the Hebrews Noah.<sup>c</sup> namely, that though just and perfect, he was perfect only "in his generation," i.e. as compared with his contemporaries. But the two "rewards" here mentioned are noted there as his rewards (ibid. 46).

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 451.

PHILO

- 24 Μετὰ δὲ τὴν τριάδα ταύτην ἑτέρα τριάς ὀσιωτέρα καὶ θεοφιλεστέρα γίνεται μιᾶς συγγενείας· πατὴρ γὰρ καὶ υἱὸς καὶ υἰωνὸς ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ τέλος ἔσπευσαν τοῦ βίου <τὸ> τῷ ποιητῇ καὶ πατρὶ τῶν ὄλων εὐαρεστηῆσαι, καταφρονήσαντες μὲν ὧν θαυμάζουσιν οἱ πολλοί, δόξης καὶ πλούτου καὶ ἡδονῆς, γελάσαντες δὲ καὶ τῦφον, ὃς ἐκ ψευσμάτων αἰεὶ συνυφαίνεται καὶ καταποικίλλεται πρὸς ἀπάτην
- 25 τῶν ὀρώντων. οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ γόης, ὁ τὰ ἄψυχα θεοπλαστῶν, ὁ μέγας καὶ δυσάλωτος ἐπιτειχισμὸς, οὗ τοῖς σοφίσμασι καὶ στρατηγήμασι πᾶσα πόλις δελεάζεται προκαταλαμβάνοντος τὰς τῶν νέων ψυχάς· εἰσοικισάμενος γὰρ ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἄχρι γήρως ἐνίδρυται, πλὴν οἷς ἂν ὁ θεὸς αὐγὴν ἐπιλάμπῃ<sup>1</sup> τῆς ἀληθείας· ἀληθεία δὲ τῦφος ἀντίπαλον, ὃς μόλις μὲν ἀλλ' οὖν κραταιοτέρα δυνάμει νικηθεὶς
- 26 ὑπεξίσταται. τουτὶ δὲ τὸ γένος ἀριθμῶ μὲν ἐστὶν ὀλίγον, δυνάμει δὲ πολὺ καὶ μέγιστον, ὡς μηδ' ἅπαντα τὸν τῆς γῆς κύκλον αὐτὸ χωρεῖν δύνασθαι, φθάνειν δ' εἰς οὐρανόν· ἡμέρω γὰρ τοῦ θεωρεῖν καὶ τοῖς θείοις αἰεὶ συνεῖναι κατεσχημένον ἀλέκτω, τὴν ὀρατὴν ὅταν ἅπασαν φύσιν διερευνήσῃ καὶ διεξέλθῃ, πρὸς τὴν ἀσώματον καὶ νοητὴν εὐθύς μέτεισιν, οὐδεμίαν τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἐπαγόμενον, ἀλλ' ὅσον μὲν τῆς ψυχῆς ἄλογον μεθιέμενον, τῷ δ' ὁ κέκληται νοῦς καὶ λογισμὸς μόνω προσχρῶμενον.
- 27 ὁ μὲν οὖν ἡγεμὼν τῆς θεοφιλοῦς δόξης, ὁ πρῶτος ἐκ τῦφου μεθορμισάμενος πρὸς ἀλήθειαν, διδακτικῇ χρῆσάμενος ἀρετῇ πρὸς τελείωσιν, ἄθλον αἴρεται

<sup>1</sup> The transitive use of ἐπιλάμπω is quoted elsewhere only as either later or poetical, and the fact that the eighteen examples from Philo noted in the index, including § 37 326

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 24-27

After this Trinity comes another Trinity holier and 24 dearer to God, all belonging to one family. For it was a Father, a Son, a Grandson who pressed forward to the same goal of life, namely to be well pleasing to the Maker and Father of all. All that the multitudes admire, glory, wealth and pleasure, they despised, and laughed at vanity, that web woven of lies and cunningly devised to deceive the beholders. Vanity 25 is the impostor who deifies lifeless objects, the great and formidable engine of aggression who with its scheming and trickery beguiles every city and loses no time in capturing the souls of the young. For it sets up its abode in them and remains there from earliest infancy to old age, save in the cases where God illumines them with a ray of truth—truth the antagonist of vanity who retreats before it though slowly and reluctantly vanquished by its superior power. This <sup>a</sup> kind is few in number but in power so 26 manifold and mighty that it cannot be contained by the whole compass of the earth but reaches to Heaven, possessed with an intense longing to contemplate and for ever be in the company of things divine. After investigating the whole realm of the visible to its very end, it straightway proceeds to the immaterial and conceptual, not availing itself of any of the senses but casting aside all the irrational part of the soul and employing only the part which is called mind and reasoning. The leader in adopting 27 the godly creed, who first passed over from vanity to truth, came to his consummation by virtue gained through instruction, and he received for his reward

<sup>a</sup> i.e. those who despise vanity.

---

below, are all intransitive rouses suspicion. Cohn proposes ἐπιπέμψη.

PHILO

τὴν πρὸς θεὸν πίστιν· τῷ δὲ κατ' εὐμοιρίαν φύσεως αὐτήκοον καὶ αὐτομαθῆ καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον κτησαμένῳ τὴν ἀρετὴν βραβεῖον ἀναδίδοται χαρὰ· τοῦ δ' ἀσκητοῦ καὶ πόνοις ἀτρύτοις καὶ ἀκαμπέσι<sup>1</sup> περιποιησαμένου τὸ καλὸν ὁ στέφανός ἐστιν ὄρασις θεοῦ. τοῦ δὲ πιστεύειν θεῷ καὶ διὰ παντὸς τοῦ βίου χαίρειν καὶ ὄραν αἰεὶ τὸ ὄν τί ἂν ὠφελιμώτερον ἢ σεμνότερον ἐπινοήσεί τις;

- 28 V. Ἐπαυγασώμεθα δ' αὐτῶν ἕκαστον ἀκριβέστερον, μὴ τοῖς ὀνόμασι παραχθέντες, ἀλλὰ διακύψαντες εἴσω καὶ ταῖς διανοαῖς ἐμβαθύναντες. ὁ μὲν τοίνυν ἀψευδῶς πιστεύσας θεῷ τὴν ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα γενητὰ καὶ φθαρτὰ κατείληφεν ἀπιστίαν, ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ μέγα πνεόντων,
- [413] λογισμοῦ τε καὶ αἰσθήσεως· ἐκατέρῳ γὰρ ἴδιον | συνέδριον καὶ δικαστήριον προσκεκλήρωται, τῷ μὲν εἰς τὴν τῶν νοητῶν ἐπίσκεψιν, οὐ τέλος ἀλήθεια, τῇ δὲ εἰς τὴν τῶν ὀρατῶν, οὐ τέλος δόξα.
- 29 τὸ μὲν οὖν ἀνίδρυτον καὶ πεπλανημένον τῆς δόξης ἐνθένδε δῆλον· εἰκόσι γὰρ καὶ πιθανοῖς ἐφορμεί· πᾶσα δὲ εἰκῶν ὁμοιότητι εὐπαραγῶγῳ ψεύδεται τὸ ἀρχέτυπον. ὃ τε ἡγεμῶν αἰσθήσεως λογισμὸς τὰς κρίσεις οἰόμενος ἀνήφθαι τῶν νοητῶν καὶ κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ ὡσαύτως ἐχόντων ἀλίσκεται περὶ πολλὰ κηραίνων· ὅταν γὰρ μυρίοις οὔσι τοῖς κατὰ

<sup>1</sup> Cohn holding that ἀκαμπής is an unsuitable epithet to πόνος would insert a noun such as ἤθεισι. It is not unsuitable, I think, if πόνος is thought of as "toiling" rather than toil. In De Mig. 223 it is applied to πόνος παιδείας.

<sup>a</sup> For Abraham's faith cf. De Abr. 262 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Both in form and accent εἰκόσι may be dative of εἰκῶν or

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 27-29

belief in God.<sup>a</sup> To him who happily gifted by nature has acquired the virtue which listens to no other than itself, learns from no other, is taught by no other, the prize awarded is joy. The man of practice who by unwearied and unswerving labour has made the excellent his own has for his crown the vision of God. Belief in God, life-long joy, the perpetual vision of the Existent—what can anyone conceive more profitable or more august than these?

V. But let us look into each of them more carefully 28 and not be led away by mere names but with a peering eye explore the inwardness of their full meaning. Now he who has sincerely believed in God has learned to disbelieve in all else, all that is created only to perish, beginning with the forces which so loudly assert themselves in him, reasoning and sense-perception. Each of these has assigned to it a council chamber and tribunal, where they conduct their inspections, one into the conceptual, the other into the visible, one with truth, the other with opinion for its goal. The instability and waywardness of opinion 29 is obvious in that it is based on likelihoods<sup>b</sup> and plausibilities, and every likeness by its deceptive resemblance falsifies the original. Reason, sense-perception's master, who thinks itself appointed to judge things conceptual, which ever continue in the same stay, is found to be in sore trouble on many points. For when it comes to grapple with the vast εἰκός. The evidently intentional connexion with εἰκῶν points to the former, but on the other hand εἰκότα καὶ πιθανά is a frequent collocation with Philo, e.g. στοχασταὶ . . . πιθανῶν καὶ εἰκότων, Spec. Leg. i. 61. I imagine that Philo did not consciously parse it here, but thought of it as coming from both or either. Cohn translating εἰκόσι by "Vermutungen" and εἰκῶν by "Bild" entirely obscures the point.

PHILO

- μέρος ποιῆται τὰς προσβολάς, ἀδυνατεῖ καὶ ἐξασθενεῖ καὶ ἀπαγορεύει καθάπερ ἀθλητῆς ὑπὸ
- 30 ῥώμης δυνατωτέρας ἐκτραχηλιζόμενος. ὅτῳ δ' ἐξεγένετο πάντα μὲν σώματα πάντα δ' ἀσώματα ὑπεριδεῖν καὶ ὑπερκύψαι, μόνῳ δ' ἐπερείσασθαι καὶ στηρίσασθαι θεῷ μετ' ἰσχυρογνώμονος λογισμοῦ καὶ ἀκλινοῦς καὶ βεβαιοτάτης πίστεως, εὐδαίμων καὶ τρισμακάριος οὗτος ὡς ἀληθῶς.
- 31 Μετὰ πίστιν προῦκειτο τῷ περιπεποιημένῳ τὴν ἀρετὴν ἐκ φύσεως ἀκονιτὶ καὶ νικηφορήσαντι χαρὰ τὸ ἀθλον· ὠνομάσθη γάρ, ὡς μὲν ἂν εἶποιεν Ἕλληνες, γέλως, ὡς δὲ Χαλδαῖοι προσονομάζουσιν, Ἰσαάκ· γέλως δὲ σημεῖον ἐπὶ τοῦ σώματος φανερόν
- 32 ἀφανοῦς τῆς κατὰ διάνοιαν χαρᾶς ἐστι. χαρὰν δὲ τῶν εὐπαθειῶν ἀρίστην καὶ καλλίστην εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ὑφ' ἧς ὅλη δι' ὅλων εὐθυμίας ἢ ψυχῆ καταπίμπλαται, γεγηθυῖα μὲν ἐπὶ τῷ πατρὶ καὶ ποιητῇ τῶν συμπάντων θεῷ, γεγηθυῖα δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἄνευ κακίας δρωμένοις, κὰν μὴ τυγχάνῃ καθ' ἡδονὴν ὄντα, ὡς καλῶς γινομένοις καὶ ἐπὶ τῇ
- 33 τῶν ὅλων διαμονῇ. καθάπερ γὰρ ἰατρὸς μὲν ἐν ταῖς μεγάλαις καὶ ἐπισφαλέσι νόσοις ἔστιν ὅτε μέρη σωμάτων ἀφαιρεῖ στοχαζόμενος τῆς τοῦ λοιποῦ σώματος ὑγείας, κυβερνήτης δὲ χειμῶνων ἐπιγινόμενων ἀποφορτίζεται προνοία τῆς τῶν ἐμπλεόντων σωτηρίας, καὶ μέμψις οὔτε τῷ ἰατρῷ τῆς πηρώσεως οὔτε τῷ κυβερνήτῃ τῆς ἀποβολῆς ἔπεται, τοῦναντίον δὲ ἔπαινος ἑκατέρῳ τὸ συμφέρον πρὸ τοῦ
- 34 ἡδέος ἰδόντι καὶ κατορθώσαντι, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τὴν τῶν ὅλων φύσιν αἰεὶ θαυμαστόν καὶ τοῖς ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ πραττομένοις ἅπασιν ἄνευ τῆς ἐκουσίου κακίας εὐαρεστητέον ἐξετάζοντας, οὐκ εἰ

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 29-34

number of particular subjects it becomes incapable, grows exhausted and collapses like an athlete flung prostrate by superior power. But he to whom it is given to gaze and soar beyond not only material but all immaterial things, and to take God for his sole stay and support with a reasonableness whose resolution falters not, and a faith unswerving and securely founded, will be a truly happy and thrice blessed man.

After faith comes the reward set aside for the victorious champion who gained his virtue through nature and without a struggle. That reward is joy. For his name was in our speech "laughter" but as the Hebrews call it Isaac. Laughter is the outward and bodily sign of the unseen joy in the mind, and joy is in fact the best and noblest of the higher emotions. By it the soul is filled through and through with cheerfulness, rejoicing in the Father and Maker of all, rejoicing too in all His doings in which evil has no place, even though they do not conduce to its own pleasure, rejoicing because they are done for good and serve to preserve all that exists. A physician treating serious and dangerous diseases sometimes amputates parts of the body, hoping to secure the health of the rest, and the pilot in stormy weather casts cargo overboard to provide for the safety of the passengers. No blame attaches either to the physician for the mutilation or to the pilot for sacrifice of property, but on the contrary both are praised for looking to what is profitable rather than what is pleasant, and for having done the right thing. In the same way we must always reverence all-embracing nature and acquiesce cheerfully in its actions in the universe, free as they are from all intention of evil.

PHILO

- τι μὴ καθ' ἡδονὴν ἰδίαν συμβέβηκεν, ἀλλ' εἰ τρόπον εὐνόμου πόλεως ὁ κόσμος ἡνιοχεῖται τε καὶ κυ-35 βερνάται σωτηρίως. μακάριος οὖν καὶ οὗτος οὐχ ἦττον τοῦ προτέρου, συννοίας καὶ κατηφείας ἀμέτοχος ὢν, ἄλυπόν τε καὶ ἄφοβον ζῶν καρπούμενος, αὐστηροῦ καὶ αὐχμηροῦ βίου μηδ' ὄναρ [414] προσαιψάμενος διὰ τὸ | πάντα τόπον τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτοῦ χαρᾶ προκατέχεσθαι.
- 36 VI. Μετὰ τὸν αὐτομαθῆ δὲ καὶ πλουσία χρησάμενον τῇ φύσει τρίτος ὁ ἀσκητῆς τελειοῦται λαμ-βάνων γέρας ἐξαιρέτον ὄρασιν θεοῦ. πάντων γὰρ τῶν παρὰ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον ἐφαιψάμενος καὶ πᾶσιν ἐνομιλήσας οὐ παρέργως καὶ μηδένα πόνον ἢ κίνδυνον παρελθών, εἴ πως δυνηθείη τὴν ἀξιέραστον ἀλήθειαν ἰχνηλατῆσαι, παρὰ τῷ θνητῷ γένει πολὺν ζόφον ἀνεύρισκε κατὰ γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ ἀέρα καὶ αἰθέρα· καὶ γὰρ ὁ αἰθῆρ καὶ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανὸς νυκτὸς αὐτῷ παρέιχε φαντασίαν, ἐπειδὴ πᾶσα ἡ αἰσθητὴ φύσις ἀόριστος· τὸ δ' ἀόριστον 37 ἀδελφὸν σκότους καὶ συγγενές. καταμύσας οὖν τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα τὸν ἔμπροσθεν αἰῶνα τοῖς συνεχέσιν ἄθλοις μόγις<sup>1</sup> ἤρξατο διοίγνυσθαι καὶ τὴν ἐπισκιάσασαν διακρίνειν καὶ ἀποβάλλειν ἀχλύν· καθαρωτέρα γὰρ αἰθέρος ἀσώματος ἐξαίφνης ἐπιλάμψασα αὐγὴ τὸν νοητὸν κόσμον ἀνέφηνεν

<sup>1</sup> So mss. Cohn corrects to μόλις. I do not know why, unless through observation of Philo's usage. μόγις="with difficulty," often associated with βραδέως, etc., is a very suitable word here. See Lexicon.

---

<sup>a</sup> I understand this sentence to mean that prima facie ether and heaven are of a higher nature than earth, air, and water. Still, since they also belong to αἰσθητὴ φύσις, they

332

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 34-37

For the question before us is not whether the events are pleasant to us personally but whether the chariot and ship of the universe is guided in safety like a well-ordered state. So he too is blessed no less than 35 the first named. He never knows gloom and depression ; his days are passed in happy freedom from fears and grief ; the hardships and squalor of life never touch him even in his dreams, because every spot in his soul is already tenanted by joy.

VI. After the self-taught, the man enriched by his 36 natural gifts, the third to reach perfection is the Man of Practice who receives for his special reward the vision of God. For having been in touch with every side of human life and in no half-hearted familiarity with them all, and having shirked no toil or danger if thereby he might descry the truth, a quest well worthy of such love, he found mortal kind set in deep darkness spread over earth and water and the lower air and ether too. For ether and the whole Heaven wore to his eyes the semblance of night, since the whole realm of sense is without defining bounds, and the indefinite is close akin, even brother, to darkness.<sup>a</sup> In his former years the eyes of his soul had been 37 closed, but by means of continuous striving he began though slowly to open them and to break up and throw off the mist which overshadowed him. For a beam purer than ether<sup>b</sup> and incorporeal suddenly shone upon him and revealed the conceptual world share the indefiniteness and darkness which is only removed by νοητά, which as he says of the "ideas," Spec. Leg. i. 48, "give order to the disordered, definiteness to the indefinite, bounds to the boundless, shape to the shapeless." See on § 46 (App. p. 452).

<sup>b</sup> In face of what has just been said of ether, Cohn must surely be wrong in translating "a purer beam of ether."

PHILO

- 38 ἡνιοχούμενον. ὁ δ' ἡνίοχος ἀκράτῳ φέγγει περιλαμπόμενος ἐν κύκλῳ δυσόρατος καὶ δυστόπαστος ἦν, ταῖς μαρμαρυγαῖς τῆς ὄψεως ἀμυδρουμένης· ἡ δέ, καίτοι πολλοῦ ῥέοντος εἰς αὐτὴν πυρός, ἀντεῖχεν 39 ἔρωτι ἐκτόπῳ τοῦ θεάσασθαι. γνήσιον δὲ ἕμερον καὶ πόθον ἰδὼν ὁ πατὴρ καὶ σωτὴρ ἠλέησε καὶ κράτος δούς τῇ τῆς ὄψεως προσβολῇ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ θέας οὐκ ἐφθόνησε, καθ' ὅσον οἶόν τε ἦν χωρῆσαι γενητὴν καὶ θνητὴν φύσιν, οὐχὶ τῆς ὅ ἐστιν ἐμ-40 φαινούσης, ἀλλὰ τῆς ὅτι ἔστιν. ἐκείνο μὲν γάρ, ὁ καὶ ἀγαθοῦ κρεῖττον καὶ μονάδος πρεσβύτερον καὶ ἐνὸς εἰλικρινέστερον, ἀμήχανον ὑφ' ἑτέρου θεωρεῖσθαι τινος, διότι μόνῳ θέμις αὐτῷ ὑφ' ἑαυτοῦ καταλαμβάνεσθαι.

- VII. Τὸ δ' ὅτι ἔστιν, ὑπάρξεως ὀνόματι<sup>1</sup> κατα-ληπτὸν ὄν, ἢ οὐ πάντες ἢ οὐχ ὁδῶ τῇ βελτίονι καταλαμβάνουσιν· ἀλλ' οἱ μὲν ἀντικρυς ἀπεφάναντο μηδ' ὄλως εἶναι τὸ θεῖον, οἱ δὲ ἐνεδόιασαν ἐπαμφοτερίσαντες ὡς οὐκ ἔχοντες εἰπεῖν, εἴτε ἔστιν εἴτε μή, οἱ δὲ καὶ ἔθει μᾶλλον ἢ λογισμῶ τὰς περὶ ὑπάρξεως θεοῦ κομίσαντες ἐννοίας παρὰ τῶν τρεφόντων ἔδοξαν εὐστόχως εὐσεβεῖν δεισιδαιμονία 41 τὴν εὐσέβειαν χαράζαντες. εἰ δὲ τινες καὶ δι' ἐπιστήμης ἴσχυσαν φαντασιωθῆναι τὸν ποιητὴν

<sup>1</sup> So all mss. except A, which has ὄνομα, which is accepted by Cohn. His translation "the only comprehensible idea (or conception, Begriff) of His subsistence" I cannot fit into the Greek, or indeed give any meaning to ὄνομα.

<sup>a</sup> Cohn translates "resisted the longing," but is this sense? Cf. Spec. Leg. i. 37, 38, of the same subject, "the soul's eye is dazzled by the flashing of the rays. Yet it does not therefore faintheartedly give up the task."

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 38-41

ruled by its charioteer. That charioteer, ringed as he 38 was with beams of undiluted light, was beyond his sight or conjecture, for the eye was darkened by the dazzling beams. Yet in spite of the fiery stream which flooded it, his sight held its own in its unutter-able longing to behold the vision.<sup>a</sup> The Father and 39 Saviour perceiving the sincerity of his yearning in pity gave power to the penetration of his eyesight and did not grudge to grant him the vision of Himself in so far as it was possible for mortal and created nature to contain it. Yet the vision only showed that He is, not what He is. For this which is better 40 than the good, more venerable than the monad, purer than the unit, cannot be discerned by anyone else; to God alone is it permitted to apprehend God.

VII. Now the fact that He is, which can be apprehended under the name of His subsistence, is not apprehended by all or at any rate not in the best way. Some distinctly deny that there is such a thing as the Godhead. Others hesitate and fluctuate as though unable to state whether there is or not.
Others whose notions about the subsistence of God are derived through habit rather than thinking from those who brought them up, believe themselves to have successfully attained to religion yet have left on it the imprint of superstition.<sup>b</sup> Others again who 41 have had the strength through knowledge to envisage

<sup>b</sup> For the argument in these two sections cf. Spec. Leg. i. 33 ff., and note giving reference to other authors, vol. vii. p. 616. The statement of it given in Leg. All. iii. 97-99 resembles this still more closely, as those who gain the knowledge of God from creation are compared as here with those who have a higher inspiration, though the example there is Moses, not Jacob.

PHILO

καὶ ἡγεμόνα τοῦ παντός, τὸ λεγόμενον δὴ τοῦτο κάτωθεν ἄνω προῆλθον. ὥσπερ γὰρ εἰς εὖνομον πόλιν τόνδε τὸν κόσμον παρελθόντες καὶ θεασάμενοι γῆν μὲν ἐστῶσαν<sup>1</sup> ὄρεινὴν καὶ πεδιάδα, σπαρτῶν καὶ δένδρων καὶ καρπῶν ἔτι δὲ καὶ παντοίων ζώων [415] | ἀνάπλεων, ἐπὶ δ' αὐτῆς ἀνακεχυμένα πελάγη καὶ λίμνας καὶ ποταμοὺς αὐθιγενεῖς τε καὶ χειμάρρους, καὶ αἴερος καὶ πνευμάτων εὐκρασίας, καὶ τῶν ἐτησίων ὥρων τὰς ἐναρμονίους μεταβολάς, καὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσιν ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην πλάνητάς τε καὶ ἀπλανεῖς ἀστέρας καὶ τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανὸν ἐν τάξεσι μετὰ τῆς οἰκείας στρατιᾶς ἡρμουςμένον, 42 κόσμον ἀληθινὸν ἐν κόσμῳ περιπολοῦντα, θαυ-μάσαντες καὶ καταπλαγέντες εἰς ἔννοιαν ἦλθον ἀκόλουθοι τοῖς φανείσιν, ὅτι ἄρα τοσαῦτα κάλλη καὶ οὕτως ὑπερβάλλουσα τάξις οὐκ ἀπαυτομα-τισθέντα γέγονεν, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ τινος δημιουργοῦ κοσμοποιοῦ, καὶ ὅτι πρόνοιαν ἀναγκαῖον εἶναι νόμος γὰρ φύσεως ἐπιμελεῖσθαι τὸ πεποιηκὸς τοῦ 43 γεγονότος. ἀλλ' οὗτοί γε οἱ θεσπέσιοι καὶ τῶν ἄλλων διενηνοχότες, ὅπερ ἔφην, κάτωθεν ἄνω προῆλθον οἷα διὰ τινος οὐρανοῦ κλίμακος, ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων εἰκότι λογισμῶ στοχασάμενοι τὸν δημιουργόν. εἰ δέ τινες ἐδυνήθησαν αὐτὸν ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ καταλαβεῖν ἑτέρῳ μηδενὶ χρησάμενοι λογισμῶ συνεργῶ πρὸς τὴν θέαν, ἐν ὁσίοις καὶ γνησίοις θεραπευταῖς καὶ θεοφιλέσιν ὡς ἀληθῶς 44 ἀναγραφέσθωσαν. τούτων ἐστὶν ὁ Χαλδαῖστί μὲν

<sup>1</sup> So mss. Cohn following Mangey ἀρετώσαν. But cf. De Cher. 26 (of earth) ἡ δὲ μόνη τῶν τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν ἐστῶσα 336

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 41-44

the Maker and Ruler of all have in the common phrase advanced from down to up. Entering the world as into a well-ordered city they have beheld the earth standing fast, highland and lowland full of sown crops and trees and fruits and all kinds of living creatures to boot; also spread over its surface, seas and lakes and rivers both spring fed and winter torrents. They have seen too the air and breezes so happily tempered, the yearly seasons changing in harmonious order, and over all the sun and moon, planets and fixed stars, the whole heaven and heaven's host, line upon line, a true universe in itself revolving within the universe. Struck with admiration and 42 astonishment they arrived at a conception according with what they beheld, that surely all these beauties and this transcendent order has not come into being automatically but by the handiwork of an architect and world maker; also that there must be a providence, for it is a law of nature that a maker should take care of what has been made. These 43

no doubt are truly admirable persons and superior to the other classes. They have as I said advanced from down to up by a sort of heavenly ladder and by reason and reflection<sup>a</sup> happily inferred the Creator from His works. But those, if such there be, who have had the power to apprehend Him through Himself without the co-operation of any reasoning process to lead them to the sight, must be recorded as holy and genuine worshippers and friends of God in very truth. In their company is he who in the Hebrew is 44

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "by a probable (or reasonable) calculation," cf. De Dec. 40 εἰκότι μᾶλλον δ' ἀληθεῖ λογισμῶ.

---

παγίως ἐστία πρὸς τῶν παλαιῶν ὀνόμασται. Here it is quite to the point as an antithesis to περιπολοῦντα οὐρανόν.

PHILO

προσαγορευόμενος Ἰσραήλ, Ἑλληνιστὶ δὲ ὄρων θεόν, οὐχ οἴός ἐστιν ὁ θεός—τοῦτο γὰρ ἀμήχανον, ὡς ἔφη—, ἀλλ' ὅτι ἔστιν, οὐ παρ' ἑτέρου τινός μαθῶν, οὐχὶ τῶν κατὰ γῆν, οὐχὶ τῶν κατ' οὐρανόν, οὐχὶ τῶν ὅσα στοιχεῖα ἢ συγκρίματα θνητά τε αὐτὸ καὶ ἀθάνατα, ἀλλὰ παρ' αὐτοῦ μόνου μετακληθεὶς τὴν ἰδίαν ὑπαρξίν ἀναφῆναι θελήσαντος 45 ἰκέτη. πῶς δ' ἢ προσβολὴ γέγονεν, ἄξιον διὰ τινος εἰκόνοσ ἰδεῖν. τὸν αἰσθητὸν τοῦτον ἥλιον μὴ ἑτέρῳ τινὶ θεωροῦμεν ἢ ἡλίῳ; τὰ δὲ ἄστρα μὴ τισιν ἄλλοις ἢ ἀστροῖς θεωροῦμεν; καὶ συνόλως τὸ φῶς ἂρ' οὐ φωτὶ βλέπεται; τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ τρόπον καὶ ὁ θεὸς ἑαυτοῦ φέγγος ὦν δι' αὐτοῦ μόνου θεωρεῖται, μηδενὸς ἄλλου συνεργούντος ἢ δυναμένου συνεργῆσαι πρὸς τὴν εἰλικρινῆ κατάληψιν 46 τῆς ὑπαρξεως αὐτοῦ. στοχασταὶ μὲν οὖν οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν γεγονότων τὸν ἀγένητον καὶ γεννητὴν τῶν ὄλων σπεύδοντες θεωρεῖν, ὁμοίον τι δρῶντες τοῖς ἀπὸ δυάδος μονάδος φύσιν ἐρευνῶσι, δέον ἔμπαλιν ἀπὸ μονάδος—ἀρχὴ γὰρ αὕτη—δυσάδα σκοπεῖν· ἀλήθειαν δὲ μετῴσιν οἱ τὸν θεὸν θεῶ φαντασιωθέντες, 47 φωτὶ φῶς. VIII. τὸ μὲν οὖν μέγιστον ἄθλον εἶρηται. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις λαμβάνει βραβεῖον ὁ ἀσκητῆς λεχθῆναι μὲν οὐκ εὐφημον, νοηθῆναι δὲ ἄριστον· ὀνομάζεται δὲ τὸ βραβεῖον πλάτους νάρκη

<sup>a</sup> Or very possibly (as Cohn) "having had his name changed" (from Jacob to Israel), referring of course to Gen. xxxii. 28 "thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel," cf. De Mut. 81. But see App. p. 452.

<sup>b</sup> I understand ιδίαν, which Cohn ignores, to mean that His existence is to be distinguished from all other existences, and to give something of the sense in which we speak of a personal God.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 44-47

called Israel but in our tongue the God-seer who sees not His real nature, for that, as I said, is impossible—but that He is. And this knowledge he has gained not from any other source, not from things on earth or things in Heaven, not from the elements or combinations of elements mortal or immortal, but at the summons<sup>a</sup> of Him alone who has willed to reveal His existence as a person<sup>b</sup> to the suppliant. How this access has been obtained may be well seen through an illustration. Do we behold the sun which sense perceives by any other thing than the sun, or the stars by any others than the stars, and in general is not light seen by light? In the same way God too is His own brightness and is discerned through Himself alone, without anything co-operating or being able to co-operate in giving a perfect apprehension of His existence. They then do but make a happy guess, who are at pains to discern the Uncreated, and Creator of all from His creation, and are on the same footing as those who try to trace the nature of the monad from the dyad, whereas observation of the dyad should begin with the monad which is the starting-point.<sup>c</sup> The seekers for truth are those who envisage God through God, light through light.

VIII. So much for his chief reward. But besides all this the Practiser receives a prize with an ill-sounding name but excellent when we consider its meaning.<sup>d</sup> This prize is symbolically

<sup>c</sup> Cf. De Som. ii. 70, where the monad is equated to the maker and the dyad to the thing made. See App. p. 452.

<sup>d</sup> Gen. xxxii. 25. Cf. De Som. i. 130, where the same phrase "ill-sounding name" is used and the same interpretation given. For the LXX "the broad part of the thigh was numbed" the R.V. has "the hollow of his thigh was strained" (A.V. "out of joint").

PHILO

- [416] συμβολικῶς· ἀλαζονεία μὲν γὰρ καὶ ὑπεροψία | διὰ τοῦ πλάτους ἐμφαίνεται, χεομένης τῆς ψυχῆς ἄμετρον ἐφ' ἃ μὴ δεῖ χύσιν, διὰ δὲ τῆς νάρκης μετεώρου καὶ πεφυσημένου πράγματος, οἴσεως, 48 συστολή. σύμφορον δὲ οὐδὲν οὕτως ὡς τὸ κεχα-λασμένον καὶ ἀνειμένον τῶν ὀρμῶν ἀνακοπήναί τε καὶ ναρκῆσαι παρεθὲν τοὺς πνευματικούς τόνους, ἢ ἡ τῶν παθῶν ἄμετρος ἰσχὺς ἐξασθενήσασα πλάτος ἐμπαράσχη ψυχῆς τῷ βελτίονι μέρει.
- 49 Προσεξεταστέον δὲ ὅτι καὶ οἰκειότατον ἐκάστω τῶν τριῶν ἀπενεμήθη τὸ ἄθλον. τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἐκ διδασκαλίας τελειωθέντι πίστις, ἐπειδὴ τὸν μανθάνοντα πιστεῦσαι δεῖ τῷ διδάσκοντι περὶ ὧν ὑφηγεῖται· δύσκολον γάρ, μᾶλλον δ' ἀδύνατον 50 ἀπιστοῦντα παιδεύεσθαι. τῷ δὲ κατ' εὐμοιρίαν φύσεως ἐπ' ἀρετὴν φθάσαντι χαρὰ· χαρτὸν γὰρ ἡ εὐφυῖα καὶ τὰ φύσεως δῶρα, τῆς διανοίας εὐθιξίαις καὶ εὐσκόποις ἐπιβολαῖς προσγανουμένης, ἐν αἷς ἀπόνως εὐρίσκει τὰ ζητούμενα, καθάπερ ὑποβολέως ἔνδοθεν ὑπηχούντος· ἡ γὰρ σύντομος τῶν ἀπορου-51 μένων εὐρεσις χαρτὸν. τῷ δὲ δι' ἀσκήσεως περιποιησαμένῳ φρόνησιν ὄρασις· μετὰ γὰρ τὸν ἐν νεότητι πρακτικὸν βίον ὁ ἐν γήρα θεωρητικὸς βίος ἄριστος καὶ ἱερώτατος, ὃν οἶα κυβερνήτην παραπέμψας ἐπὶ πρύμναν ὁ θεὸς ἐνεχείρισε τοὺς οἴακας ὡς ἱκανῶ πηδαλιουχεῖν τὰ ἐπίγεια· χωρὶς γὰρ

<sup>a</sup> Or more accurately "currents of spirit force." Cf. Quis Rerum 242, where the πνευματικοὶ τόνοι are the ligaments which keep bodies in cohesion. See note there for some references, to which add De Aet. 125, where hard stones are said to decompose when their ἕξις or cohesion weakens, "ἕξις being a πνευματικὸς τόνος which though hard to loosen is not unbreakable." Cohn gives for it here "geistige Spann-

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 47-51

called the "numbing of the broad part." By the "broad part" arrogance and pride are suggested, since the soul spreads itself inordinately in the wrong direction; by "numbing," the contraction of the conceit which lifts itself on high and puffs itself out. And nothing is so profitable as that the laxity and free play of the appetites should be hampered and numbed with their vitalizing forces <sup>a</sup> paralysed so that the inordinate strength of the passions may be exhausted and thus provide a breadth in which the better part of the soul may expand. 48

A further question for consideration is the special suitability of the reward assigned to each of the three. Faith for him who was perfected through teaching, since the learner must believe the instructions of his teacher: to educate a disbeliever is difficult or rather impossible. Joy for him who through the happiness of his natural endowments arrives at virtue. For good abilities and natural gifts are a matter for rejoicing. The mind exults in the facility of its apprehension and the felicity of the processes <sup>b</sup> by which it discovers what it seeks without labour, as though dictated by an inward prompter. For to find the solution of difficulties quickly must bring joy. Vision for him who attains wisdom through practice. For after the active life of youth the contemplative life of old age is the best and most sacred—, that life which God sends to the stern like a helmsman and entrusts the rudder into its hands as well fitted to steer the course of earthly things. For without con-kraft," Mangey "animi spiritus." As stated in the note to Quis Rerum 242, πνεῦμα, τόπος and ἕξις are almost convertible terms. But the application of them here to moral or spiritual life is unusual.

<sup>b</sup> Or "applications."

PHILO

θεωρίας ἐπιστημονικῆς οὐδὲν τῶν πραττομένων καλόν.

- 52 IX. Ἐνὸς ἔτι μνησθεῖς ἀνδρός, στοχαζόμενος τοῦ μὴ μακρηγορεῖν, ἐπὶ τὰ ἀκόλουθα τῶν λόγων τρέψομαι. ὁ δ' ἀνὴρ οὗτος τοὺς ἱεροὺς ἀγῶνας ἐξῆς στεφανωθείς ἐκηρύχθη· λέγω δὲ ἱεροὺς οὐ τοὺς παρὰ πολλοῖς νομιζομένους—ἀνίεροι γὰρ οὗτοί γε βίαις καὶ ὕβρεσι καὶ ἀδικίαις ἀντὶ τῶν ἀνωτάτω τιμωριῶν γέρα καὶ τιμὰς προτείνοντες—, ἀλλ' οὓς ἡ ψυχὴ πέφυκε διαθλεῖν, φρονήσει μὲν ἡλιθιότητα καὶ πανουργίαν ἐλαύνουσα, σωφροσύνη δὲ ἀσωτίαν καὶ φειδωλίαν, ἀνδρεία δὲ θρασύτητα καὶ δειλίαν, καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις ἀρεταῖς τὰς ἀντιθέτους κακίας, αἱ μὴθ' ἑαυταῖς μῆτε ἄλλαις συμφέρονται.<sup>1</sup>
- 53 πᾶσαι μὲν οὖν αἱ ἀρεταὶ παρθένοι, καλλιστεύει δὲ ὡς ἐν χορῶ παραλαβοῦσα τὴν ἡγεμονίαν ἢ εὐσέβεια, ἣν ἐκληρώσατο διαφερόντως ὁ θεολόγος Μωυσῆς, δι' ἣν μετὰ μυρίων ἄλλων, ἅπερ ἐν τοῖς γραφεῖσι περὶ τοῦ κατ' αὐτὸν βίου μεμῆνυται, τεττάρων ἄθλων ἐξαιρέτων τυγχάνει, [τυχῶν] βασιλείας, νομοθεσίας, προφητείας, ἀρχιερωσύνης.
- 54 βασιλεύς τε γὰρ γέγονεν, οὐκ ἔθει τῷ καθεστῶτι
[417] μετὰ | στρατιᾶς τε καὶ ὄπλων ναυτικῆς τε καὶ πεζικῆς καὶ ἰππικῆς δυνάμεως, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ θεοῦ

<sup>1</sup> So mss. Cohn reads συμφέρονσι and translates (ignoring the feminine of ἄλλαις) "are of no use either to themselves or to others." So too Mangey "neque sibi ipsis neque aliis prosunt." I see little or no point in the remark. On the other hand οὐ συμφέρονται = "do not agree with" gives an excellent sense. Cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 88, where δειλία and θράσος are called antagonistic (μαχόμενα) passions. The battle of the virtues against the vices is assisted by the disunion of the latter.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 51-54

temptation and the knowledge which it gives no activity attains excellence.<sup>a</sup>

IX. One other man I will mention and then, as I 52 wish to avoid prolixity, proceed to the next part of the subject. This man is he who in the sacred contests one after the other was proclaimed the winner of the crown. By sacred contests I do not mean those which men regard as such<sup>b</sup>; they are unholy since they offer instead of the utmost penalties honours and crowns to violence, outrage and injustice. I mean those which the soul has to fight out, wielding successfully wisdom against folly and knavery, moderation against profligacy and miserliness, courage against rashness and cowardice, and the other virtues against the opposite<sup>c</sup> vices which are at variance with one another<sup>d</sup> and with other vices too. Now all 53 the virtues are virgins, but the fairest among them all, the acknowledged queen of the dance, is piety, which Moses, the teacher of divine lore, in a special degree had for his own, and through it gained among a multitude of other gifts, which have been described in the treatises dealing with his life, four special rewards, the offices of king, legislator, prophet and high priest.<sup>e</sup> For he did not become king in the ordinary 54 way by the aid of troops and weapons or of the might of ships and infantry and cavalry. It was God who

<sup>a</sup> On §§ 49-51 see App. p. 453.

<sup>b</sup> For this often repeated remark about the "sacred" games cf. e.g. De Agr. 113.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. opposite to the virtues, but perhaps better "antithetical" "opposed to each other," as the three pairs of vices all fall under this head.

<sup>d</sup> Or "to themselves," but ἐαυτ- is often used reciprocally, and this best suits the sense, as I understand it. See note 1.

<sup>e</sup> Cf. Mos. ii. 3, where the scheme here summarized, on which the whole book is based, is laid down.

PHILO

χειροτονηθεὶς ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ τῶν ἀρχομένων, ὃς τοῖς ὑπηκόοις ἐνειργάσατο τὴν ἐκουσίον αἴρεσιν. ἄναυδος γὰρ καὶ ἀκτῆμων καὶ ἀχρήματος μόνος οὗτος βασιλεὺς ἡμῖν ἀνεγράφη, πρὸ τοῦ τυφλοῦ τὸν βλέποντα πλοῦτον ἀσπασάμενος καί, εἰ δεῖ μηδὲν ὑποστειλάμενον εἰπεῖν, τὸν θεοῦ κλῆρον ἰδίαν 55 οὐσίαν ὑπολαμβάνων. ὁ δ' αὐτὸς γίνεται καὶ νομοθέτης· δεῖ γὰρ τὸν βασιλέα προστάττειν καὶ ἀπαγορεύειν· νόμος δὲ οὐδὲν ἔστιν ἕτερον ἢ λόγος προστάττων ἃ χρῆ καὶ ἀπαγορεύων ἃ μὴ χρῆ. ἐπεὶ δ' ἄδηλον τὸ ἐν ἑκατέρῳ συμφέρον—ἀγνοία γὰρ πολλάκις κελεύομεν ἃ μὴ δεῖ καὶ ἀπαγορεύομεν ἃ δεῖ πράττειν—, οἰκείον ἦν τρίτον λαβεῖν, προφητείαν, εἰς τὸ ἄπταιστον,—ἐρμηνεὺς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ προφήτης ἔνδοθεν ὑπηχοῦντος τὰ λεκτέα τοῦ θεοῦ,
 56 παρὰ θεῷ δ' οὐδὲν ὑπαίτιον,<sup>1</sup>—τέταρτον δ' ἀρχιερωσύνην, δι' ἧς προφητεύων ἐπιστημονικῶς θεραπεύσει τὸ ὄν καὶ τὰς ὑπὲρ τῶν ὑπηκόων κατορθούντων μὲν εὐχαριστίας, εἰ δὲ διαμαρτάνοιεν, εὐχὰς καὶ ἰκεσίας ἰλασκόμενος ποιήσεται. ταῦτα μᾶς ὄντα ἰδέας ἀλληλουχεῖν ὀφείλει τοῖς ἀρμονίας δεσμοῖς ἐνωθέντα καὶ περὶ τὸν αὐτὸν

<sup>1</sup> Cohn puts a full stop after ὑπαίτιον. But the accusative ἀρχιερωσύνην shows that the construction after οἰκείον ἦν λαβεῖν is continued and ἐρμηνεὺς . . . ὑπαίτιον is parenthetical.

<sup>a</sup> The thought seems to be as in Spec. Ileg. iv. 157, that the divine election is somehow compatible with free choice by the people.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Ex. iv. 10. Moses says "I am a stammerer (?) (ισχνόφωνος) and slow of tongue."

<sup>c</sup> The translation assumes that κλῆρον θεοῦ alludes to "the

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 54-56

appointed him by the free judgement of his subjects, God who created in them the willingness to choose him as their sovereign.<sup>a</sup> Of him alone we read that without the gifts of speech<sup>b</sup> or possessions or money he was made a king, he who eschewed the blind wealth and embraced that which has eyes to see, and, as we may say without reserve, held that all he owned was to have God for his heritage.<sup>c</sup> This same person was 55 also a lawgiver. For a king must enjoin and forbid and a law is nothing else but a pronouncement enjoining what ought to be done and forbidding what ought not.<sup>d</sup> But in both cases there is uncertainty as to what is profitable, since through ignorance we often enjoin what should not be done and forbid what should be done, and therefore it was meet that he should receive a third gift of prophecy to keep his feet from stumbling. For the prophet is the interpreter of God who prompts from within what he should say, and with God nothing is in fault. Meet 56 also<sup>e</sup> that he should have the fourth office of chief priesthood to enable him armed with prophetic knowledge to worship the Self-existent, and offer up thanksgivings for his subjects when they do well and prayers and supplications for propitiation when they do amiss. All these are one in kind; they should co-exist united with bonds of harmony and be found

Lord is thy portion," addressed to Levi. But the phrase is very strange. Possibly "the portion which God gave him," but this again is strange as well as feeble. Mangey's "quidquid deus possidet" seems to me even less satisfactory, while Cohn's "das Erbe Gottes" tells us nothing. I understand τὴν ἰδίαν οὐσίαν to mean "his personal possessions."

<sup>a</sup> On the definition of νόμος see App. p. 454.

<sup>e</sup> The construction with οἰκεῖον ἦν λαβεῖν continues, see note 1.

PHILO

ἐξετάζεσθαι, ὡς ὁ γέ τινος τῶν τεττάρων ὑπερίζων ἀτελής εἰς ἡγεμονίαν, χωλὴν ἀνημμένος κοινῶν πραγμάτων ἐπιμέλειαν.

- 57 X. "Ἄλις μὲν δὴ τῶν καθ' ἕκαστον ἄνδρα τιθεμένων ἄθλων· τίθεται δὲ καὶ ὅλοις οἴκοις καὶ πολυανθρώποις συγγενείαις. αὐτίκα τοῦ ἔθνους εἰς δώδεκα φυλὰς διανεμηθέντος ἰσάριθμοι ταῖς φυλαῖς εἰσιν ἡγεμόνες, οὐ μόνον μιᾶς οἰκίας ἢ συγγενείας, ἀλλὰ καὶ γνησιωτέρας οἰκειότητος· ἀδελφοὶ γὰρ ὁμοπάτριοι πάντες· ὁ δὲ τούτων πάππος καὶ πρόπαππος σὺν τῷ πατρὶ γεγονάσιν ἀρχηγέται τοῦ
- 58 ἔθνους. ὁ μὲν οὖν πρῶτος πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἐκ τύφου μεταθέμενος καὶ τῆς ἐν τοῖς μαθήμασι Χαλδαϊκῆς τερθρείας ὑπεριδὼν ἔνεκα τελειότερας ὄψεως, ἦν θεασάμενος ἐλχθεῖς<sup>1</sup> ἠκολούθησε τῇ φαντασίᾳ, καθάπερ τὸν σίδηρόν φασι ὑπὸ λίθου τῆς μαγνητιδος ἔλκεσθαι, ἀντὶ σοφιστοῦ γενόμενος ἐκ διδασκαλίας σοφός, πολλοὺς μὲν ἔσχε παῖδας, ἅπαντας δὲ πλὴν ἐνὸς ὑπαιτίους, ᾧ<sup>2</sup> τὰ πείσματα τοῦ γένους
- 59 ἐκδησάμενος ἀσφαλῶς ἐνωρμίσατο. τῷ δ' υἱῷ πάλιν αὐτομαθῆ καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον κτησαμένῳ φύσιν δύο συνέβη παῖδας γενέσθαι, τὸν μὲν ἄγριον καὶ ἀτίθασον, θυμοῦ γέμοντα καὶ ἐπιθυμίας καὶ συνόλως τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ἄλογον μέρος ἐπιτετειχικότα <sup>1</sup> mss. θελχθεῖς.

<sup>2</sup> So A. The other mss. have δς, which Cohn follows. The dative seems to me better sense. We do not come to Isaac's history till the next sentence. The point is that Abraham's family would have failed but for this one son. We might perhaps have expected οὐ after ἐκδησάμενος, but the dative can depend on ἐνωρμίσατο.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 56-59

embodied in the same person, since he who falls short in any of the four is imperfectly equipped for government and the administration of public affairs which he has undertaken will limp and halt.

X. <sup>a</sup> This may suffice for the rewards set before <sup>57</sup> individual men, but houses and families of many members have theirs also. For instance the twelve tribes into which the nation was divided had the same number of chieftains connected not only by membership of the same house and family but by a still more real affinity, for they were brothers with the same father, and their grandfather and great-grandfather as well as their father were the founders of the nation. The first of these who passed from vanity to truth, <sup>58</sup> who spurned the impostures of Chaldean astrology <sup>b</sup> for the sake of the fuller spectacle which he beheld and followed the vision, drawn to it as iron is said to be drawn by the magnet, thus changed by instruction from sophist to sage, had many children, but all faulty <sup>c</sup> save one to whom he bound fast the cables of the race and there found a safe haven. That son <sup>59</sup> again endued with a nature which learned from no other teacher than itself had two sons. One was wild and indocile, brimful of fierce temper and lust, who to sum him up armed the unreasoning part of the soul

<sup>a</sup> The gist of the next four sections is that the reward to families as families only applies to Jacob's children. Neither Abraham's nor Isaac's, both of which contained degenerate members, qualified for it.

<sup>b</sup> This perhaps rather than, as Cohn, "science," as in De Virt. 212, where see note. Compare also the Latin use of "mathematicus" = astrologer, Juv. xiv. 248, and elsewhere.

<sup>c</sup> See Gen. xxv. 6 "Abraham gave all that he had to Isaac his son, but to the sons of his concubines he gave gifts, and sent them away from Isaac his son." Cf. De Mig. 94.

PHILO

τῷ λογικῷ, τὸν δ' ἡμερον καὶ φιλόανθρωπον, καλο-[418] κἀγαθίας | ἔραστην<sup>1</sup> ἰσότητός τε καὶ ἀτυφίας, ἐν βελτίονι τεταγμένον τάξει, λογισμοῦ προαγωνιστήν, 60 ἀφροσύνης ἀντίπαλον· οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τρίτος τῶν ἀρχηγῶν, ὁ πολύπαις τε καὶ μόνος εὐτεκνος, ἀσυνῆς ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς μέρεσιν τῆς οἰκίας, οἷά τις γεωργὸς εὐδαίμων ἅπασαν τὴν σπορὰν ἐπιδὼν σῶον ἡμερόν τε καὶ καρποφόρον.

61 XI. Ἐχει δ' ἕκαστος τῶν τριῶν τὴν ῥητὴν διήγησιν<sup>2</sup> σύμβολον διανοίας ἀφανοῦς, ἣν ἐπισκεπτέον. αὐτίκα παντὶ τῷ διδασκομένῳ συμβαίνει μετιόντι πρὸς ἐπιστήμην ἀπολιπεῖν ἀμαθίαν· ἀμαθία δὲ πολύ-χου· διὰ τοῦτο ὁ πρῶτος λέγεται πολύπαις μὲν, οὐδένα δὲ τῶν ἄλλων ἀξιώσας υἷὸν αὐτοῦ χρημα-τίζειν πλὴν ἑνός· τρόπον γάρ τινα καὶ ὁ μανθάνων ἀποκηρύττει τὰ τῆς ἀμαθίας ἕκγονα καὶ ὡς ἐχθρὰ 62 καὶ δυσμενῆ παραιτεῖται. φύσει γε μὴν πάντες οἱ ἄνθρωποι, πρὶν τελειωθῆναι τὸν ἐν αὐτοῖς λόγον, κείμεθα ἐν μεθορίῳ κακίας καὶ ἀρετῆς πρὸς μηδέτερα πῶ ταλαντεύοντες· ἐπειδὴν δὲ πτερυξάμενος

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἐργάτην.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn supposes that some words have fallen out between διήγησιν and σύμβολον such as ταύτην ἔστι δὲ καὶ. But "each has the literal history as a symbol" for "has in its literal history a symbol" is perhaps not impossible Greek.

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps simply "belonging to the better class." But προαγωνιστήν suggests a military metaphor. Cf. De Virt. 127.

<sup>b</sup> For the use of ἡμερος see App. p. 454.

<sup>c</sup> The allegory of §§ 61-65, which is only concerned with the

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 59-62

to war against the rational. The other was gentle and kindly, a lover of noble conduct, of equality and simplicity, a soldier of the better cause,<sup>a</sup> the champion of reason and antagonist of folly. This is the third <sup>60</sup> of the founders, father of many children and alone among the three blessed in them all, who met with no mishap in any part of his household, like a happy husbandman who sees his whole crop safe and sound, thriving under his hand <sup>b</sup> and bearing fruit.

XI. In each of the three the literal story is sym- <sup>61</sup> bolical of a hidden meaning which demands examination.<sup>c</sup> Thus everyone who is taught, when he passes over to knowledge, must abandon ignorance. Ignorance is multiform and therefore it is said of the first of the three that he was the father of many children but did not deem any of them worthy to be called his sons save one. For the learner may also be said to disown the offspring of ignorance and discard them, seeing their hostility and ill will. Again naturally all <sup>62</sup> we men, before the reason in us is fully grown, lie in the borderline between vice and virtue with no bias to either side. But when the mind is fully fledged “children,” that is with the different lines of conduct shown by the three types of souls, is difficult in parts, but the general gist is as follows:

(a) The soul susceptible to teaching is under many ignorant illusions, but ultimately discards them for knowledge.

(β) The naturally-gifted soul does not at once develop its instinctive love of good, but only when it reaches maturity. But there comes a stage when its instinctive love of happiness asserts itself. Till then its “Esau” and “Jacob” are treated with impartiality. There is a certain likeness to De Sac. 15-16 and Quis Rerum 294-299. Philo did not expect much positive virtue in early life.

(γ) The soul which consolidates its natural gifts and instruction by exercise produces all the virtues.

PHILO

ὁ νοῦς ὅλη τῇ ψυχῇ διὰ πάντων αὐτῆς τῶν μερῶν φαντασιωθῆ τὸ ἀγαθόν, ἄφετος πρὸς αὐτὸ καὶ πτηνὸς ὄρμῃ τὸ συγγεγεννημένον ἀδελφὸν κακὸν ὀπίσω καταλιπών, ὃ καὶ ἀποφεύγει τὴν ἐναντίαν 63 ὁδὸν ἀμεταστρεπτί. τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ὃ αἰνίττεται φάσκων υἱοὺς δύο γεγενῆσθαι διδύμους τῷ φύσεως εὐμοίρου λαχόντι· παντὸς γὰρ ἀνθρώπου κατ' ἀρχὰς ἅμα τῇ γενέσει κυοφορεῖ δίδυμα ἢ ψυχῇ, κακόν, ὡς ἔφην, καὶ ἀγαθόν, ἐκάτερον φαντασιουμένη· μακαρίας δὲ καὶ εὐδαίμονος ὅταν τύχη μερίδος, ὀλκῇ μιᾷ ῥέπει πρὸς τὸ ἀγαθόν, μήτ' ἐπὶ θάτερά ποτε ταλαντεύσασα μήτ' ἐπαμφοτερίσασα 64 πρὸς τὸ ἰσόρροπον. ἢ δ' ἀγαθῆς μὲν φύσεως ἀγαθῆς δὲ καὶ παιδεύσεως ἐπιλαχοῦσα κακ τρίτου συνασκηθεῖσα τοῖς τῆς ἀρετῆς θεωρήμασιν, ὡς μηδὲν αὐτῶν ἐξ ἐπιπολῆς πλαδᾶν,<sup>1</sup> ἔγκολλα δ' εἶναι καὶ ἐντετυπωμένα τὰ πάντα καθάπερ νεύροις τισὶν ἐνωθέντα, κτᾶται μὲν ὑγείαν, κτᾶται δὲ δύναμιν, οἷς εὐχροια μὲν ἐξ αἰδοῦς, εὐεξία δὲ καὶ κάλλος 65 ἐπιγίνεται. γενομένη δὲ πλήρωμα ἀρετῶν ἤδε ἢ ψυχῇ διὰ τριῶν τῶν ἀρίστων, φύσεως καὶ μαθήσεως καὶ ἀσκήσεως, οὐδὲν ἐν ἑαυτῇ καταλιποῦσα κενὸν εἰς πάροδον ἄλλων, γεννᾷ τέλειον ἀριθμόν, διττὰς υἱῶν ἐξάδας, ἀπεικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα τοῦ ζωδιακοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιπλαδᾶν.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 62-65

when it has seen and absorbed into every part of its vitality the vision of the good, it ranges freely and wings its way to reach that vision and leaves behind good's brother and birth-fellow evil, which also flies away straight on in the opposite direction.<sup>a</sup> This is 63 what underlies his saying that the possessor of a highly gifted nature was the father of twins. For the soul of every man from the first as soon as he is born bears in its womb the twins good and evil as I have said and has the vision of both before him, but, when it comes to have happiness and bliss for its lot, it inclines uniformly to the good, never swaying in the other direction nor oscillating into equilibrium between the two. Once more if the soul has received a 64 good nature, good instruction and thirdly therewith exercise in the principles of virtue, none of them fluid and superficial, but all cemented within it, firmly impressed and strung as it were into a unity, it wins health, wins power, and to these are added the fine hue of modesty and a robust and comely form.<sup>b</sup> This soul through the triple excellence of 65 nature, learning and practice becomes the plenitude of virtues, leaving no empty room within itself where other things can enter, and it engenders sons twice six in number, the perfect number, the copy and likeness of the zodiac cycle, a source of increased <sup>a</sup> The last words are obscure. As the good is stationary, why should the evil fly away? It would be possible to take ὁ as accusative after ἀποφεύγει, i.e. the mind in flying to the good is necessarily flying from evil, but no intelligible sense can be given to τὴν ἐναντίαν ὁδόν.

<sup>b</sup> Possibly he means that such health of soul leads to bodily health, or that its spiritual qualities are analogous to such bodily gifts. I do not understand the point of the "fine complexion from modesty."

PHILO

κύκλου, πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἐνταῦθα βελτίωσιν. <sup>1</sup> οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀσινῆς οἶκος, ὁ τέλειος καὶ συνεχῆς ἐν ταῖς ῥηταῖς γραφαῖς καὶ ἐν ταῖς καθ' ὑπόνοιαν ἀλληγορίαις, ὃς ἔλαβεν ἄθλον, καθάπερ εἶπον, ἡγεμονίαν
 [419] 66 τῶν τοῦ ἔθνους | φυλῶν. ἐκ τοῦδε τοῦ οἴκου χρόνοις εἰς πολυανθρωπίαν ἐπιδόντος εὐνομοὶ πόλεις ἐκτίσθησαν, διδασκαλεία<sup>2</sup> φρονήσεως καὶ δικαιοσύνης καὶ ὁσιότητος, ἐν οἷς καὶ ἡ τῆς ἄλλης ἀρετῆς μεταποιήσις μεγαλοπρεπῶς διερευνᾶται.
 67 XII. Τὰ μὲν οὖν ἀπονεμηθέντα πάλαι τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἄθλα κοινῇ τε καὶ ἰδίᾳ λέλεκται τυπωδέσπερον, ἀφ' ὧν καὶ τὰ παραλειφθέντα δύναιτ' ἂν τις εὐμαρέστατα<sup>3</sup> συννοῶν. ἐξῆς δὲ τὰς προτεθείσας τοῖς πονηροῖς κολάσεις [ἐν μέρει] πάλιν ἐπισκεπτέον γενικώτερον, ἐπεὶ τὰς κατὰ μέρος ἀναγράφειν οὐ 68 καιρός. ἐγένετό τις κατ' ἀρχὰς εὐθύς, ὅτ' οὐπω τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένος ἐπλήθυνεν, ἀδελφοκτόνος. οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πρῶτος ἐναγῆς, ὁ πρῶτος καθαρευ-

<sup>1</sup> Here I think the section, which Cohn places at ἐκ τοῦδε, should begin. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> mss. διδασκαλία (-αι or -as).

<sup>3</sup> mss. εὐμαρέστερον.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the soul here described brings blessings or has influence for good on the world around it, as the Zodiac, the greatest of the heavenly bodies (Spec. Leg. ii. 178, De Som. ii. 112), has above. What these blessings are is not stated. (They may be perhaps identical with the specific qualities assigned to the twelve tribes in De Som. ii. 31-36.) But it is enough that they have the perfection of twelve, which is perfect as the duplication of the first perfect number six, see Spec. Leg. ii. 177. On the Zodiac see App. p. 454.

At this point the allegory of the three types of soul, though alluded to incidentally in the next sentence, really ends, and 352

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 65-68

welfare to things here below.<sup>a</sup> This is the household, which kept safe from harm, perfect and united both in the literal history and in the allegorical interpretation, received for its reward, as I have said, the chieftaincy of the tribes of the nation. From 66 this household, increased in the course of time to a great multitude, were founded flourishing and orderly cities, schools of wisdom, justice and religion, where also the rest of virtue and how to acquire it is the sublime subject of their research.

XII. We have discussed typical <sup>b</sup> examples of the 67 rewards assigned in the past to the good both individually and in common with others, from which anyone can easily discern those which have been left unnoticed. We have next to consider in their turn the punishments appointed for the wicked, but in a general way since this is not the time to describe particular cases. At the very beginning when the 68 human race had not yet multiplied arose a fratricide.<sup>c</sup> He it was who first fell under a curse, who first brought we return to the main point, the "reward" to Jacob's family, namely the headship of the tribes which expanded into the wisest of nations.

<sup>b</sup> For τυπωδέστερον L. & S. (revised) gives "summarily," quoting this passage. But the examples can hardly be called a summary. The treatment, however, is the same as that which is called γενικώτερον below, and both words may be used loosely to express incompleteness.

<sup>c</sup> Philo's view of the Cain story, viz. that his punishment was to be always suffering the pains of dying yet never dead (cf. De Virt. 200), has been stated earlier in De Fug. 60, De Conf. 122, and particularly Quod Det. 177 f. As appears there, his scriptural basis is that Cain's death is never recorded, and that the sign which God set upon him that no one should kill him really means that the mark which distinguished him was that he never was killed. Fantastic as the explanation is, it enables Philo to bring out a fine thought.

PHILO

ούση τῇ γῇ μίασμα προσβαλὼν ἄηθες ἀνθρωπείου αἵματος, ὁ πρῶτος ἀνιείσασκε καὶ βλαστάνουσας γένη ζώων καὶ φυτῶν καὶ οἷς εὐτοκεῖ πᾶσι τεθη-λυῖαν τῆς εὐτοκίας ἐπισχών, ὁ πρῶτος φθορὰν γενέσει καὶ θάνατον ζωῆ καὶ πένθος χαρᾶ καὶ κακὰ 69 ἀγαθοῖς ἐπιτειχίσας. τί ἂν οὖν παθὼν ἀξίαν ἐδεδώκει δίκην, ὅς διὰ μιᾶς πράξεως οὐδὲν τῶν βιαίων καὶ ἀσεβῶν παρέλιπε; ἴσως ἂν εἴποι τις· ἀναιρεθεῖς. ὁ λογισμὸς οὗτος ἀνθρώπου τὸ μέγα δικαστήριον οὐ βλέποντος· ἀνθρώποι μὲν γὰρ πέρασ τιμωριῶν εἶναι νομίζουσι τὸν θάνατον, ἐν δὲ τῷ 70 θεῷ δικαστηρίῳ μόλις οὗτός ἐστιν ἀρχή. ἐπεὶ τοίνυν καινὸν τὸ ἔργον, ἔδει καὶ τὴν ἐπ' αὐτῷ τιμωρίαν καινὴν εὐρεθῆναι. τίς οὖν ἐστὶν αὕτη; ζῆν ἀποθνήσκοντα αἰεὶ καὶ τρόπον τινὰ θάνατον ἀθάνατον ὑπομένειν καὶ ἀτελεύτητον. θανάτου γὰρ διττὸν εἶδος· τὸ μὲν κατὰ τὸ τεθνᾶναι, ὅπερ ἀγαθὸν ἐστὶν <ἢ> ἀδιάφορον, τὸ δὲ κατὰ τὸ ἀποθνήσκειν, ὃ δὴ κακὸν πάντως καὶ ὅσῳ χρονωτέρου 71 βαρύτερον. πῶς οὖν ὁ θάνατος αὐτῷ συνδιακωιδιζοι, σκόπει. τεττάρων ὄντων ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ παθῶν, δυοῖν μὲν περὶ τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἐνεστὸς ἢ μέλλον, ἡδονῆς καὶ ἐπιθυμίας, δυοῖν δὲ περὶ τὸ κακὸν παρὸν ἢ προσδοκώμενον, λύπης καὶ φόβου, τὴν μὲν τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ ρίζαις αὐταῖς ἐξέτεμε συζυγίαν, ἵνα μηδ' ἐκ τύχης ἡσθῆ ποτε ἢ ἐπιθυμῆση τινὸς ἡδέος, τὴν δὲ τοῦ κακοῦ μόνην ἐνεφύτευσε εἰς λύπην εὐθυμίας ἀμιγῆ 72 καὶ φόβον ἄκρατον. φησὶ γάρ, ὅτι ἀρὰν ἐπηράσατο

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 68-72

the monstrous pollution of human blood upon the still pure earth, who first, when it was giving birth and growth to every kind of animals and plants and was bright with all the products of its fruitfulness, set a bar to that fruitfulness, who first armed dissolution against generation, death against life, sorrow against joy and evil against good. What then could 69 be done to him by which he would pay the penalty he deserved, he who in a single action included everything that is violent and impious? Slay him, perhaps you will say. That is a man's idea—man who has no eyes for the great court of justice,—for men think that death is the termination of punishment but in the divine court it is hardly the beginning. Since 70 then the deed was without precedent, the punishment devised had to be also without precedent. What is this punishment? That he should live for ever in a state of dying and so to speak suffer a death which is deathless and unending. For there are two kinds of death, one consists in being dead, which is something either good or indifferent, the other consists in dying and that is entirely bad, more painful because more durable. Death thus remains with him 71 perpetually; observe how that is effected. There are four passions in the soul, two concerned with the good, either at the time or in the future, that is pleasure and desire, and two concerned with evil present or expected, that is grief and fear. The pair on the good side God tore out of him by the roots so that never by any chance he should have any pleasant sensations or desire anything pleasant, and engrafted in him only the pair on the bad side, producing grief unmixed with cheerfulness and fear unrelieved. For he says that he laid a curse upon the 72

PHILO

- [420] τῷ ἀδελφοκτόνῳ, ὡς | “ στένειν καὶ τρέμειν ” αἰεί, καὶ σημεῖον ἔθετο αὐτῷ μὴ ἀναιρεθῆναι πρὸς τινος, ἵνα μὴ ἅπαξ ἀποθάνῃ, διαιωνίζῃ δέ, ὡς εἶπον, ἀποθνήσκων ἐν ἀλγηδόσι καὶ ἀνίαις καὶ συμφοραῖς ἀδιαστάτοις καί, ὃ δὴ πάντων ἀργαλεώτατον, αἰσθάνηται τῶν ἰδίων κακῶν καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐν χερσὶν ἄχθηται καὶ τὴν φορὰν τῶν μελλόντων προορώμενος μὴ δύνηται φυλάξασθαι, τῆς ἐλπίδος ἐκτετμημένης αὐτῷ, ἣν ὁ θεὸς ἀνθρώπων γένει κατέσπειρεν, ἵν’ ἔχοντες συμφύες παραμύθιον ἐπελαφρίζωνται τὰς
- 73 ἀνίας οἱ μὴ ἀνίατα δράσαντες. ὥσπερ οὖν τῷ συναρπασθέντι ὑπὸ χειμάρρου φοβερὸν μὲν τὸ πλησίον ῥεῦμα ᾧ κατασύρεται, φοβερώτερον δὲ τὸ ἄνωθεν ἐπιφερόμενον, ὃ τῇ μὲν βία συντόνως ἐπωθεῖ καὶ ἀλήκτως, τῇ δ’ ἐπαναστάσει μετεωριζόμενον ἐπικλύζει,<sup>1</sup> τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τῶν κακῶν ἀνιαρὰ μὲν τὰ ἐν χερσὶν, ἀργαλεώτερα δὲ τὰ ἐκ φόβου ῥέοντα· χορηγεῖ γὰρ ὁ φόβος καθάπερ ἐκ πηγῆς τὰ ὀδυνηρά.
- 74 XIII. Ταῦτα μὲν ἐστὶ τὰ ὀρισθέντα κατὰ τοῦ πρώτου γεγονότος ἀδελφοκτόνου· ὠρίσθη δὲ καὶ ἐπ’ οἰκίαις ἕτερα συνθεμέναις κοινοπραγίαν ἀμαρτημάτων. ἦσαν τινες νεωκόροι καὶ ἱερόδουλοι τὴν πυλωρῶν τεταγμένοι τάξιν· οὗτοι φρονήματος ὑποπλησθέντες ἀλόγου τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν ἐπανέστησαν,
- 75 ἀξιοῦντες τὰ ἐκείνων γέρα σφετερίζεσθαι. προ-

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read ἐπικλύσει.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 72-75

fratricide that he should ever "groan and tremble."<sup>a</sup> And he set a sign upon him that no man should slay him so that he should not die once but continue perpetually dying, as I have said, dying with anguish and distress and sufferings unceasing, and most grievous of all should be sensible of his own evil plight, feeling the weight of the present ills and foreseeing the onrush of those yet to come against which he could not guard. For hope had been torn from him, hope which God has sown in mankind that they should have a comforter to be part of their nature and give relief to the distress of all whose deeds are not beyond atonement. So as a man 73 carried away by a torrent dreads the stream around him in which he is swept along but dreads still more the onrush of the flood from above propelling him violently and ceaselessly, but also towering high over him and threatening to engulf him, so too the ills close at hand are painful but more grievous are those which flow from fear, fear which supplies abundance of sorrows as from a fountain.

XIII. Such are the penalties decreed against the 74 man who first committed fratricide, but there are others decreed against groups<sup>b</sup> who conspire to sin in common.<sup>c</sup> There were certain temple attendants, servitors of the sanctuary, appointed to the office of gate-keepers. These persons filled with insensate ambition rose against the priests whose privileges they claimed should belong to themselves. They 75

<sup>a</sup> So LXX Gen. iv. 12. The E.V. has "a fugitive and wanderer" (A.V. "vagabond").

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "houses" or "families." The term is extended to the Levites here, perhaps as members of a hereditary caste.

<sup>c</sup> For the story see Num. xvi. 1-35, and cf. Mos. ii. 174 f. and 275-282.

PHILO

στησάμενοι δὲ τῆς συστάσεως ἡγεμόνα τὸν πρεσβύτατον, ὃς καὶ τοῦ τολμήματος μετ' ὀλίγων τῶν συναπονοηθέντων εἰσηγητῆς ἐγένετο, καταλιπόντες τὰ προπύλαια καὶ τὰς ἐσχατίας ἐπὶ τῶν ἀδύτων ἐχώρουν τοὺς χρησιμοῖς ἀξιοθέντας τῆς ἱερωσύνης 76 μεθιστάντες. ταραχὴ μὲν οὖν, ὡς εἰκός, ἐπέιχε τὴν πληθὺν ἅπασαν, ἅτε κινουμένων τῶν ἀκινήτων καὶ παρασπονδουμένων τῶν νόμων καὶ τοῦ περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν κόσμου σύγχυσιν λαμβάνοντος ὑπ' ἀταξίας 77 δεινῆς. ἐφ' οἷς ὁ τοῦ ἔθνους ἐπιμελητῆς καὶ προστάτης ἠγανάκτει. καὶ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἦθει βαρυτέρῳ χρώμενος χωρὶς ὀργῆς—ἦν γὰρ καὶ τὴν φύσιν ἀόργητος—λόγοις ἀναδιδάσκειν ἐπειράτο μεταβάλλεσθαι καὶ τοὺς ταχθέντας ὄρους μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν μηδὲ νεωτερίζειν εἰς τὰ ἅγια καὶ καθωσιωμένα, ὧν αἱ τοῦ ἔθνους ἐλπίδες ἐκκρέ-78 μανται. ἐπεὶ δ' οὐδὲν ἦνυεν, ἀλλ' ἐκεκώφηντο πρὸς ἅπαντα νομίζοντες αὐτὸν ἠττηθέντα φιλοοικείου πάθους ἀρχιερέα μὲν τὸν ἀδελφὸν κατα-στῆσαι, τοῖς δ' ἀδελφιδοῖς ἐγχειρίσαι τὴν ἱερωσύνην, δεινὸν οὐχὶ τοῦθ' ὑπελάμβανε καίπερ ὄν δεινόν, [421] ἀλλ' ἐκείνο | παγχάλεπον, εἰ δόξει τῶν λογίων, καθ' ἃ γέγονεν ἡ αἵρεσις τῶν ἱερέων, ἀλογεῖν. . . .

<sup>a</sup> Presumably Korah, though there is no authority for calling him the senior. Possibly this is induced by the confederacy with the tribe of Reuben, which Philo mentions in Mos. ii. 175 as the πρεσβυτάτη φυλή, whose leader might easily be called πρεσβύτατος. If so, it is a slip of memory, as Korah was a Levite, not a Reubenite.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. 250, Num. xvi. 2.

<sup>c</sup> Verse 19 "Korah raised up against them all his company (E.V. all the congregation) by the door of the tabernacle of witness."

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 75-78

adopted as leader of the sedition the senior <sup>a</sup> from among them, who also with a few <sup>b</sup> fellow madmen had been the instigator of the presumptuous enterprise, and leaving the frontage and the outermost parts of the building proceeded towards the inmost sanctuary <sup>c</sup> intending to displace those to whom divine utterances had adjudged the priesthood. Naturally enough the whole multitude was greatly <sup>76</sup> disturbed. They felt that their fundamental institutions were being shaken, their laws violated, and the decent order of the holy place reduced to chaos by such alarming anarchy. All this roused the indigna- <sup>77</sup> tion of the guardian and ruler of the nation. At first very seriously, but without loss of temper, which indeed was alien to his nature, he endeavoured with words of admonition to bring them to a better mind and to refrain from transgressing the appointed limits or revolting against the sacred and hallowed institutions on which the hopes of the nation depended. But this he found was of no avail. They <sup>78</sup> were deaf to all his words, believing that in appointing his brother high priest and committing the priesthood to his nephews he had given way to family affection. He was not however greatly aggrieved at this, great grievance though it was. What he felt to be intolerable was that they should purpose <sup>d</sup> to set at nought the divine instructions under which the choice of the priests had been made. . . .<sup>e</sup>

<sup>d</sup> Or "that he should be thought," which is perhaps the most natural way of taking the words, but does not agree with Philo's other version of the story. Moses was accused of having invented the divine instructions, cf. Mos. ii. 176 and 278.

<sup>e</sup> For the lacuna see App. p. 455.

PHILO

- 79 <sup>1</sup>XIV. . . . μαρτυρία δὲ σαφῆς ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς ἀνάκειται γράμμασι. λέγε<sup>2</sup> τὰς εὐχὰς πρότερον, ὡς “ εὐλογίας ” εἴωθεν ὀνομάζειν. εἴαν, φησί, τὰς θείας ἐντολὰς φυλάττητε καταπειθεῖς γινόμενοι τοῖς προστάγμασι καὶ τὰ διαγορευόμενα μὴ μέχρις ἀκοῆς καταδέχησθε, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῶν τοῦ βίου πράξεων ἐπιτελήτε, πρῶτην δωρεὰν ἔξετε νίκην κατ’ ἐχθρῶν.
- 80 οὐ γὰρ ὑπέρογκοι καὶ βαρύτεραι τῆς τῶν χρησομένων δυνάμεως αἱ προστάξεις εἰσὶν οὐδὲ μακρὰν τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἀφέστηκεν, ἢ πέραν θαλάττης ἢ ἐν ἐσχατιαῖς γῆς, ὡς δεῖσθαι πολυχρονίου καὶ καματηρᾶς ἀποδημίας, οὐδ’ ἐξαίφνης ἐστείλατο τὴν ἐνθένδε εἰς οὐρανὸν ἀποικίαν, ἵνα τις μετέωρος καὶ πτηνὸς ἀρθεῖς μόλις ἐφικέσθαι τούτων δυνηθῆ· πλησίον δ’ ἐστὶ καὶ ἐγγυτάτω, τρισὶ μέρεσι τῶν<sup>3</sup> καθ’ ἕκαστον ἡμῶν ἐνιδρυμένον, “ στόματι καὶ καρδίᾳ καὶ χερσὶ,” τροπικώτερον λόγῳ καὶ διανοίᾳ
- 81 καὶ πράξεσιν. εἴαν γὰρ οἶα τὰ βουλευόμενα τοιοῦτοι οἱ λόγοι καὶ οἶα τὰ λεγόμενα τοιαῖδε αἱ πράξεις ὦσι, καὶ ταῦτα ἀλλήλοις ἀντακολουθῆ δεθέντα ἀρμονίας ἀλύτοις δεσμοῖς, εὐδαιμονία κρατεῖ, τουτέστιν ἡ ἀψευδестаτή σοφία καὶ φρόνησις, σοφία

<sup>1</sup> Cohn here inserts a title Περὶ εὐχῶν καὶ εὐλογιῶν. The mss. have no title, quite possibly, as he says, because the beginning of this part of the treatise is lost. In my view (see General Introduction, pp. xix. f.) there is really no need for a title at all. But even if there is, the only authority for the form which he adopts is that a quotation in St. John Damascene’s parallels is cited as coming from “Philo, Περὶ εὐχῆς καὶ εὐλογιῶν.” The words εὐχὰς ὡς “εὐλογίας” εἴωθεν ὀνομάζειν in § 79 would point rather to Περὶ εὐχῶν ἢτοι εὐλογιῶν.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 79-81

XIV. . . . A clear testimony is recorded in the 79 Holy Scriptures. We will cite first <sup>a</sup> the invocations <sup>b</sup> which he is accustomed to call benedictions.<sup>c</sup> If, he says, you keep the divine commandment in obedience to his ordinances and accept his precepts, not merely to hear them but to carry them out by your life and conduct, the first boon <sup>d</sup> you will have is victory over your enemies. <sup>e</sup> For the commandments are not too 80 huge and heavy for the strength of those to whom they will apply, nor is the good far away either beyond the sea or at the end of the earth, so that it requires of you a lingering and wearisome exile, nor has it suddenly left this earth to settle in Heaven, so that one can scarce reach them though he soar on high and wing his way thither. No, it is close by, very near, firmly set in three of the parts of which each of us is constituted, mouth and heart and hand, representing in a figure respectively speech and thought and action. For if our words correspond 81 with our thoughts and intentions and our actions with our words and the three mutually follow each other, bound together with indissoluble bonds of harmony, happiness prevails and happiness is wisdom pure of all falsehood, the higher and the lower <sup>a</sup> Or "take and read" (imperative). The form follows the usual way of citing a document in Demosthenes.

<sup>b</sup> The blessings of Deut. xxviii. are given in the LXX in the optative form "may the Lord," etc., where the E.V. has the future indicative "the Lord shall."

<sup>c</sup> e.g. Deut. xi. 26, xxviii. 2.

<sup>d</sup> Lev. xxvi. 7, Deut. xxviii. 1, 7.

<sup>e</sup> For the next section see Deut. xxx. 11-14; cf. De Virt. 183.

---

<sup>2</sup> Some mss. λέγειν. Mangey λέγει, but see note a.

<sup>3</sup> mss. τοῖς.

PHILO

- μὲν [γὰρ] πρὸς θεραπείαν θεοῦ, φρόνησις δὲ πρὸς 82 ἀνθρωπίνου βίου διοίκησιν. ἄχρι μὲν οὖν λέγεται μόνον τὰ τῶν νόμων παραγγέλματα, βραχείας ἢ οὐδεμιᾶς ἀποδοχῆς τυγχάνει· προσγενομένων δ' ἀκολουθῶν καὶ ἐπομένων ἔργων ἐν τοῖς τοῦ βίου πᾶσιν ἐπιτηδεύμασιν, ὥσπερ ἐκ ζόφου βαθέος εἰς φῶς ἀναχθέντα περιλαμφθήσεται δι' εὐκλείας καὶ 83 εὐφημίας. τίς γὰρ οὐκ ἂν εἶποι καὶ τῶν φύσει βασκάνων, ὅτι σοφὸν ἄρα γένος καὶ ἐπιστημονι-κώτατον μόνον τοῦτ' ἐστίν, ᾧ τὰς θείας παραινέσεις ἐξεγένετο μὴ κενὰς καὶ ἐρήμους ἀπολιπεῖν τῶν οἰκείων πράξεων, ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι τοὺς λόγους 84 ἔργοις ἐπαινετοῖς; τοῦτο τὸ γένος οὐ μακρὰν ἀπώκισται θεοῦ, φαντασιούμενον ἀεὶ τὰ αἰθήρια κάλλη καὶ ποδηγετούμενον ὑπ' ἔρωτος οὐρανοῦ, ὡς, κἂν εἰ πύθοιτό τις, ποῖον ἔθνος μέγα, προσφυῶς ἂν τινὰς ἀποκρίνασθαι· ᾧ ὁ θεὸς ἐστὶν ἐπήκοος<sup>1</sup> ἱεροπρεπεστάτων εὐχῶν καὶ ταῖς ἀπὸ καθαροῦ τοῦ συνειδότος κατακλήσει συνεγγίζων.
 85 XV. Ἐπεὶ δ' ἐχθρῶν διττὸν εἶδος, τὸ μὲν ἀν-θρώπων ἐκ πλεονεξίας ἐπιτηδεύσει γεγονός, τὸ δὲ θηρίων ἀνευ ἐπιτηδεύσεως ἀλλοτριότητι χρώμενον φυσικῇ, περὶ ἑκατέρου λεκτέον ἐν μέρει, καὶ πρότερόν γε τοῦ κατὰ τοὺς φύσει πολεμίουσ θήρας·

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑπήκοος.

<sup>a</sup> Or if it is preferred, "wisdom and prudence." Philo has, no doubt, in mind Deut. iv. 6 "ye shall keep them and do them. For this is your wisdom and understanding" (σύνεσις).

<sup>b</sup> Deut. iv. 6 again. "They shall say 'behold this great nation is a wise and understanding (ἐπιστήμων) people.'"

<sup>c</sup> Deut. iv. 7. E.V. "What great nation is there that hath

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 81-85

wisdom,<sup>a</sup> the higher for the worship of God, the lower for the regulation of human life. Now while 82 the commandments of the laws are only on our lips our acceptance of them is little or none, but when we add thereto deeds which follow in their company, deeds shown in the whole conduct of our lives, the commandments will be as it were brought up out of the deep darkness into the light and surrounded with the brightness of good fame and good report. For 83 who, however spiteful his nature, would not admit that surely that nation alone is wise and full of knowledge<sup>b</sup> whose history has been such that it has not left the divine exhortations voided and forsaken by the actions which are akin to them, but has fulfilled the words with laudable deeds? Such a race 84 has its dwelling not far from God; it has the vision of ethereal loveliness always before its eyes, and its steps are guided by a heavenward yearning. So that if one should ask "what manner of nation is great?", others might aptly answer "a nation which has God to listen to its prayers inspired by true religion and to draw nigh when they call upon him with a clean conscience."<sup>c</sup>

XV. Enmity is of two kinds. There is the enmity 85 of men which has selfishness for its motive and is deliberately practised, and there is the enmity of wild beasts which is actuated by natural antipathy without such deliberation. Consequently each must be treated separately, taking first that of our natural a god (or God) so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is whensoever we call upon him?" Here the LXX has ποῖον ἔθνος μέγα ᾧ ἐστὶν αὐτῷ θεὸς ἐγγίζων αὐτοῖς, which no doubt means the same thing. But Philo takes it as a question, "What nation is great?" answered by "One which has," etc.

PHILO

οὔτοι γὰρ οὐ μιᾶς πόλεως ἢ ἔθνους ἑνός, ἀλλὰ τοῦ σύμπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους δυσμενεῖς εἰσιν, οὐ [422] πρὸς | ὠρισμένου χρόνου μῆκος, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἀόριστον
 86 καὶ ἀπερίγραφον αἰῶνα. τούτων οἱ μὲν ὡς δεσπότην ἄνθρωπον δεδιότες ὑποπτήσουσιν ἐγ-κότη μίσει, οἱ δὲ τολμηταὶ καὶ θρασύτεροι προεπιχειροῦσι καιροφυλακοῦντες, εἰ μὲν ἀσθενέστεροι τυγχάνουσιν, ἐξ ἐνέδρας, εἰ δὲ δυνατώτεροι, 87 φανερώς. ἀσπονδος γὰρ καὶ ἀκήρυκτος εἰς πόλεμος οὗτος, ὡς λύκοις πρὸς ἄρνας, καὶ πᾶσι θηρίοις πρὸς πάντας ἀνθρώπους, ἐνύδροις τε καὶ χερσαίοις· ὃν θνητὸς μὲν οὐδεὶς δυνατὸς καθαιρεῖν, ὁ δ' ἀγένητος μόνος καθαιρεῖ, ὅταν κρίνη τινὰς σωτηρίας ἀξίους, εἰρηνικοὺς μὲν τὸ ἦθος, ὁμοφροσύνην δὲ καὶ κοινωνίαν ἀσπαζομένους, οἷς φθόνος ἢ συνόλως οὐκ ἐνώκησεν ἢ τάχιστα μεταν-ἔστη τὰ ἴδια προφέρειν εἰς μέσον ἀγαθὰ διεγνω-88 κόσιν εἰς κοινὴν μετουσίαν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν. εἰ γὰρ ἐπιλάμψειέ ποτε τῷ βίῳ τὸ ἀγαθὸν τοῦτο καὶ δυνηθείημεν τὸν καιρὸν ἰδεῖν ἐκείνον, ἐν ᾧ χειροήθη ποτὲ γενήσεται τὰ ἀτίθασα. πολὺ δὲ<sup>1</sup> πρότερον τὰ ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ θηρία τιθασευθήσεται, οὐ μείζον ἀγαθὸν οὐκ ἔστιν εὐρεῖν· ἢ οὐχὶ εὐήθες ὑπολαμβάνειν, ὅτι τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἐκτὸς θηρίων βλάβας ἐκφευξόμεθα τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς εἰς δεινὴν ἀγριότητα ἀεὶ συγκρο-τοῦντες; ὅθεν οὐκ ἀπελπιστέον, ὅτι ἐξημερωθέν-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πολὺ γε οἱ πολὺ γὰρ.

<sup>a</sup> Philo apparently does not contemplate a universal or complete reformation of mankind before this change in the animal world. A change of heart in some there must be

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 85-88

foes, the beasts, whose hatred is directed not towards a single city or nation but to mankind as a whole and endures not for a limited period but is age-long, without bound or limit of time. Some of these fear 86 man as their master and cringe before him yet retain a rancorous hatred, others are audacious and more venturesome and are the first to attack, lying in wait to seize their opportunity if they are weaker, openly if they are stronger. For this is the one 87 war where no quarter or truce is possible ; as wolves with lambs, so all wild beasts both on land and water are at war with all men. This war no mortal can quell ; that is done only by the Uncreated, when He judges that there are some<sup>a</sup> worthy of salvation, men of peaceful disposition who cherish brotherly affection and good fellowship, in whom envy has either found no room at all or has entered only to take its departure with all speed, because their will is to bring their private blessings into the common stock to be shared and enjoyed by all alike. Would that this good gift might shine upon 88 our life and that we might be able to see that day when savage creatures become tame and gentle. But a very necessary preliminary to this is that the wild beasts within the soul shall be tamed, and no greater boon than this can be found. For is it not foolish to suppose that we shall escape the mischief which the brutes outside us can do if we are always working up those within us to dire savagery ? Therefore we need not give up hope that when the wild before the pacification, but even then it will only mean peace between the beasts and good men. But it will be sufficiently general to shame men into a horror of war (§§ 91 f.). For the foundations of his belief in the pacification apart from the obvious Isaiah xi. 6-9 see App. p. 455.

PHILO

- των τῶν κατὰ διάνοιαν καὶ τὰ ζῶα ἡμερωθήσεται.
- 89 τότε μοι δοκοῦσιν ἄρκτοι καὶ λέοντες καὶ παρδάλεις καὶ τὰ παρ' Ἰνδοῖς, ἐλέφαντές τε καὶ τίγρεις, καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα τὰς ἀλκὰς καὶ τὰς δυνάμεις ἀήττητα μεταβαλεῖν ἐκ τοῦ μονωτικοῦ τε καὶ μονοτρόπου πρὸς τὸ σύννομον· κακ τοῦ πρὸς ὀλίγον μιμήσει τῶν ἀγελαίων ἡμερωθήσεται πρὸς τὴν ἀνθρώπου φαντασίαν, μηκέτι ὡς πρότερον ἀνερεθισθέντα, καταπλαγέντα δ' ὡς ἄρχοντα καὶ φύσει δεσπότην εὐλαβῶς ἔξει, ἔνια δὲ καὶ τοῦ χειροήθους ἅμα καὶ φιλοδεσπότου τῇ παραζηλώσει, καθάπερ τὰ Μελιταῖα τῶν κυνιδίων ταῖς κέρκοις μεθ' ἰλαρωτέρας
- 90 κινήσεως προσσαίνοντα.<sup>1</sup> τότε καὶ τὰ σκορπίων γένη καὶ ὄφειων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἐρπετῶν ἄπρακτον ἔξει τὸν ἰόν· φέρει καὶ ποταμὸς ὁ Αἰγύπτιος ὄμορα<sup>2</sup> τοῖς οἰκήτορσι τῆς χώρας ἀνθρωποβόρα ζῶα, τοὺς κροκοδείλους λεγομένους καὶ ποταμίους ἵππους, φέρει καὶ τὰ πελάγη μυρίας ἰδέας ἀργαλεωτάτων ζώων· παρ' οἷς ἅπασιν ἱερὸς καὶ ἄσυλος γένοιτ' ἂν ὁ σπουδαῖος, ἀρετὴν τιμήσαντος θεοῦ καὶ γέρας αὐτῇ παρασχόντος τὸ ἀνεπιβούλευτον.
- 91 XVI. Οὕτως μὲν ὁ πρεσβύτερος καὶ χρόνω καὶ

<sup>1</sup> mss. προσαίνοντα.

<sup>2</sup> So some mss. Others ὁμοῖα, which Cohn prints, but supposes that καὶ βλαβερά has fallen out, or ὁμοίως βλαβερά should be substituted. This seems quite unnecessary. I see no objection to ὄμορα to mark the proximity and therefore greater dangerousness of the river animals as compared with the marine.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cohn, if I do not misjudge him, would omit τῇ and take

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 88-91

beasts within us are fully tamed the animals too will become tame and gentle. When that time comes I 89 believe that bears and lions and panthers and the Indian animals, elephants and tigers, and all others whose vigour and power are invincible, will change their life of solitariness and isolation for one of companionship, and gradually in imitation of the gregarious creatures show themselves tame when brought face to face with mankind. They will no longer as heretofore be roused to ferocity by the sight, but will be awe-struck into respectful fear of him as their natural lord and master, while others will grow gentle in emulation of the docility and affection for the master <sup>a</sup> shown for instance by the little Maltese dogs, <sup>b</sup> who express their fondness with the tails which they so cheerily wag. Then too the 90 tribes of scorpions and serpents and the other reptiles will have no use for their venom. The Egyptian river too carries man-eating creatures called crocodiles and hippopotamuses in close proximity to the inhabitants of the country, so too the seas have their multitudinous species of very formidable animals. Among all these the man of worth will move sacrosanct and inviolate because God has respected virtue and given it the privilege that none should imagine mischief against it.

XVI. Thus the age-long and natural and therefore 91 παραζηλώσει as a verb followed by the genitive τοῦ χειροθήτους καὶ φιλοδεσπότου with which he understands ζῶον. But there is no reason to think that παραζηλοῦν can govern a genitive, and τοῦ χειροθήτους καὶ φιλοδεσπότου is surely the neuter adjective used as an abstract noun. The verb understood is ἡμερωθήσεται from above and the noun παραζηλώσει is parallel to μιμήσει.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 456.

PHILO

- φύσει καταλυθήσεται πόλεμος, ἡμερωθέντων καὶ [423] μεταβαλόντων τῶν θηρίων πρὸς τὸ τιθασόν. ὁ δὲ | νεώτερος καὶ ἐπιτηδεύσει γενόμενος ἐκ πλεονεξίας ῥαδίως διαλυθήσεται, τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς γέ μοι δοκεῖ, δυσωπηθέντων, εἰ μελλήσουσιν ἀγριώτεροι ζώων ἀλόγων ἐξετάζεσθαι, ὅτε τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλόγων<sup>1</sup> 92 ζῆμίας καὶ βλάβας ἐκπεφύγασιν. αἴσχιστον γάρ, ὡς εἰκός, φανέεται, τὰ μὲν ἰοβόλα καὶ ἀνθρωποβόρα καὶ ἄμικτα καὶ ἀκοινώνητα ἔνσπονδα γεγενῆσθαι μεταβαλόντα πρὸς εἰρήνην, τὸ δὲ ἡμερον φύσει ζῶον, ἀνθρωπον, κοινωνίας καὶ ὁμοιοῦς συγγενές, 93 ἀσπονδεῖ φονᾶν κατὰ τῶν ὁμοίων. ἢ τὸ παράπαν οὖν, φησὶν, οὐ διελεύσεται πόλεμος διὰ χώρας εὐσεβῶν, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς καταρρηθήσεται καὶ συντριβή-σεται πρὸς ἑαυτόν, πρὸς οἷους ἔσοιτο ὁ ἀγὼν αἰσθανομένων τῶν ἀντιπάλων, ἅτε χρωμένους ἀνανταγωνίστῳ συμμαχία τοῦ δικαίου· μεγαλοπρεπές γὰρ καὶ περίσεμνον ἀρετῇ καὶ μόνη καθ' ἡσυχίαν ἱκανὴ φορὰς μεγάλων ἐξευμαρίζειν κακῶν.
 94 ἢ καὶ μεμνηότες τινὲς ἄπτωσιν ἀκαθέκτῳ καὶ ἀπαρηγορήτῳ χρώμενοι τῇ τοῦ πολεμεῖν ἐπιθυμίᾳ, μέχρι μὲν συνίστανται,<sup>2</sup> καταλαζονεύσονται θρασυνό-μενοι, πρὸς δὲ χειρῶν ἄμιλλαν ἤκοντες αἰσθήσονται κενὸν αὐχῆμα αὐχῆσαντες, ὡς μὴ δυνάμενοι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἄλλων.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps συνιστῶνται. See note c.

---

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "older both in time and by (not, I think, "in") nature," cf. § 85. The fact that it is created by nature in itself makes it, as compared with the non-natural war of men against men, πρεσβύτερος, though it is also so as judged by time.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 91-94

primary war<sup>a</sup> will be brought to an end through the change which makes the wild beasts tame and amenable. And then its later successor whose source is selfishness and its method deliberate will be easily settled, because men, I believe, will take shame to think that they should prove to be more savage than the irrational animals, when they have escaped all danger of injury or mischief from them. For surely it will seem a deep disgrace that while 92 venomous and man-eating brutes and creatures without a sense of fellowship or companionship have become placable and have been won over to a peaceful disposition, man, a creature naturally gentle and kindly, in whom the sense of fellowship and amity is ingrained, should implacably seek the life of his own kind. Either, then, as he says, the war 93 will not pass through the land of the godly at all,<sup>b</sup> but will dissolve and fall to pieces of itself when the enemy perceives the nature of their opponents, that they have in justice an irresistible ally. For virtue is majestic and august and can unaided and silently allay the onsets of evils however great. Or 94 if some fanatics whose lust for war defies restraint or remonstrance come careering to attack, till they are actually engaged,<sup>c</sup> they will be full of arrogance and bluster, but when they have come to a trial of blows they will find that their talk has been an idle boast. Win they cannot. Forced back by your

<sup>b</sup> Quoted almost verbatim from Lev. xxvi. 6.

<sup>c</sup> Or "while they are coming to close quarters," which should be the meaning if the indicative is kept (see note 2). μέχρι = "until," referring to the future, is followed by the subjunctive, generally with, but sometimes without, ἄν.

PHILO

νικᾶν· ῥώμη γὰρ ἀντιβιασθέντες κραταιοτέρα φεύ-ζονται προτροπάδην πρὸς πεντάδων ἑκατοντάδες καὶ πρὸς ἑκατοντάδων μυριάδες, πολλαῖς ὁδοῖς οἱ 95 κατὰ μίαν ἐπελθόντες. ἔνιοι δέ, μηδὲ διώκοντος μηδενὸς ὅτι μὴ φόβου, τὰ νῶτα τοῖς ἀντιπάλοις εἰς βολὰς εὐσκόπους ἐπιστρέψουσιν, ὡς εὐμάρειαν<sup>1</sup> εἶναι πάντας ἠβηδὸν ἀναιρεθέντας πεσεῖν. “ἐξελεύσεται γὰρ ἄνθρωπος,” φησὶν ὁ χρησμός, καὶ στραταρχῶν καὶ πολεμῶν ἔθνη μεγάλα καὶ πολυάνθρωπα χειρώσεται, τὸ ἀρμόττον ὁσίοις ἐπικουρικὸν ἐπιπέμφαντος τοῦ θεοῦ· τοῦτο δ’ ἐστὶ θάρσος ψυχῶν ἀκατάπληκτον καὶ σωμάτων ἰσχύς κραταιοτάτη, ὧν καὶ θάτερον φοβερόν ἐχθροῖς, ἄμφω δὲ εἰ 96 συνέλθοι, καὶ παντελῶς ἀνυπόστατα.<sup>2</sup> ἐνίους δὲ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἀναξίους ἔσεσθαι φησὶν ἤττης τῶν ἀνθρώπων, οἷς σμήνη σφηκῶν ἀντιτάξειν ἐπ’ 97 ὀλέθρῳ αἰσχίστῳ προπολεμοῦντα τῶν ὁσίων. τούτους<sup>3</sup> δ’ οὐ μόνον τὴν ἐν πολέμῳ νίκην ἀναιμωτῶ βεβαίως ἔξειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ κράτος ἀρχῆς ἀνανταγώ-[424] νιστον ἐπ’ ὠφελείᾳ τῶν | ὑπηκόων, ἣ γένοιτ’ ἂν δι’ εὐνοίαν ἢ φόβον ἢ αἰδῶ. τρία γὰρ ἐπιτηδεύουσι τὰ μέγιστα καὶ συντείνοντα πρὸς ἡγεμονίαν ἀκαθαί-ρητον, σεμνότητα καὶ δεινότητα καὶ εὐεργεσίαν, ἐξ ὧν ἀποτελεῖται τὰ λεχθέντα· τὸ μὲν γὰρ σεμνὸν αἰδῶ κατασκευάζει, τὸ δὲ δεινὸν φόβον, τὸ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read εὐμάρειαν <ἂν>. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀνυπόστατον.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. τοῦτο.

---

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxvi. 7 “they shall fall before you by the sword.” Philo perhaps wishes to avoid the suggestion of actual bloodshed. So too in the next sentence, if εὐμάρειαν ἂν is read, see note 1.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 94-97

superior strength, they will fly headlong,<sup>a</sup> companies of hundreds before handfuls of five, ten thousands before hundreds by many ways for the one by which they came.<sup>b</sup> Some, without even any 95 pursuer save fear, will turn their backs and present admirable targets to their enemies so that it would be an easy matter for all to fall slaughtered to a man.<sup>c</sup> For "there shall come forth a man,"<sup>d</sup> says the oracle, and leading his host to war he will subdue great and populous nations, because God has sent to his aid the reinforcement which befits the godly, and that is dauntless courage of soul and all-powerful strength of body, either of which strikes fear into the enemy and the two if united are quite irresistible. Some of the enemy, he says, will be unworthy 96 to be defeated by men. He promises to marshal against them to their shame and perdition, swarms of wasps<sup>e</sup> to fight in the van of the godly, who will 97 win not only a permanent and bloodless victory in the war but also a sovereignty which none can contest, bringing to its subjects the benefit which will accrue from the affection or fear or respect which they feel. For the conduct of their rulers shows three high qualities which contribute to make a government secure from subversion, namely dignity, strictness, benevolence, which produce the feelings mentioned above. For respect is created by dignity, <sup>b</sup> Lev. xxvi. 8, Deut. xxviii. 7.

<sup>c</sup> No particular text for this in the blessings. It is perhaps suggested by the parallel curse, Lev. xxvi. 37; cf. § 148.

<sup>d</sup> So LXX in Num. xxiv. 7 "There shall come forth a man from his seed and shall rule over many nations." The Hebrew appears to be totally different. E.V. "Water shall flow from his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters."

<sup>e</sup> E.V. "hornets." Ex. xxiii. 28, Deut. vii. 20.

PHILO

εὐεργετικὸν εὖνοιαν, ἅπερ ἀνακραθέντα καὶ ἀρμοσθέντα ἐν ψυχῇ καταπειθεῖς ἄρχουσιν ὑπηκόους ἀπεργάζεται.

- 98 XVII. Ταῦτα μὲν δὴ πρῶτά φησι συμβῆσθαι τοῖς ἐπομένοις θεῷ καὶ περιεχομένοις αἰεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ τῶν προσταγμάτων αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκάστῳ τῶν τοῦ βίου μερῶν ταῦτα ἐφαρμόττουσιν, ὡς μηδὲν<sup>1</sup> νόσω πλαζόμενον ἐκδαιτᾶσθαι· δεύτερον δὲ πλοῦτον, ὃς κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον εἰρήνη καὶ ἀρχῇ ἔπεται.
- 99 πλοῦτος δὲ ὁ μὲν τῆς φύσεως εὐτελής ἐστι τροφή καὶ σκέπη· τροφή μὲν οὖν ἄρτος καὶ ναματιαῖον ὕδωρ, ὃ πανταχοῦ<sup>2</sup> τῆς οἰκουμένης ἀνακέχυται· σκέπης δὲ διττὸν εἶδος, τὸ μὲν ἀμπεχόνη, τὸ δὲ οἰκία, διὰ τὰς ἀπὸ κρυμοῦ καὶ θάλπους παρακολουθούσας ζημίας· ὧν ἐκάτερον, εἴ τις ἐθελήσει τὴν περιέργον καὶ περιττὴν ἀφελεῖν πολυτέλειαν,
- 100 εὐποριστότατον. οἱ δ' ἂν ζηλώσωσι τὸν λεχθέντα πλοῦτον ἀσπασάμενοι τὰ φύσεως δῶρα, μὴ τὰ τῆς κενῆς δόξης, ὀλιγοδείαν καὶ ἐγκράτειαν ἀσκήσαντες, ἕξουσι κατὰ πολλὴν περιουσίαν καὶ τὸν τῆς ἀβροδιαίτου τροφῆς πλοῦτον οὐκ ἐπιτηδεύσαντας· ἐπιτηδήσει γὰρ ὡς πρὸς ἐπιτηδειοτάτους καὶ σεμνοὺς τῆς ἀρμοττούσης χρήσεως ἐπιστήμονας, ἀποδράς ἄσμενος τὰς τῶν ἀκολάστων καὶ ὕβριστῶν συνδαιτήσεις, ἵνα μὴ χορηγῇ τοῖς ἐπὶ βλάβῃ τῶν
- 101 πλησίον ζῶσι παρελθὼν τοὺς κοινωφελεῖς. λόγιον γάρ ἐστιν ὅτι τοῖς τὰς ἱεροπρεπεῖς ἐντολὰς φυλάττουσιν ὁ μὲν οὐρανὸς ὀμβρήσει καιρίους ὑετούς, ἡ δὲ γῆ καρπῶν παντοδαπῶν οἴσει φοράν, ἡ μὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μηδένα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἃ πανταχοῦ ἢ ἀπανταχοῦ.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 97-101

fear by strictness, affection by benevolence, and these when blended harmoniously in the soul render subjects obedient to their rulers.

XVII. These are the first blessings which he tells 98 us will fall to the lot of those who follow God and always and everywhere cleave to His commandments and so fasten them to every part of life that no part can go astray into new and unwholesome ways. The second blessing is wealth which necessarily follows peace and settled authority. Now the simple wealth 99 of nature is food and shelter.<sup>a</sup> Its food is bread and the spring water which gushes up in every part of the inhabited world. Shelter is of two kinds, raiment and housing, to save us from the injuries which cold and heat bring in their train, and both of these, if anyone is willing to eliminate costly and superfluous extravagance, are very easily obtainable. Yet those 100 who pursue the above-named wealth, who welcome the gifts of nature and not those of empty seeming, who practise frugality and self-restraint, will possess also abundance and more than abundance of another wealth in the shape of delectable food, and that without effort on their part. For it will spring to meet them as best fitted to receive it and as men of serious purpose who will know how to use it aright, and it will gladly flee from association with men of profligacy and violence, lest it should minister its boons to those who live to harm their neighbours and pass by those who serve the common weal. For there is a 101 divine promise<sup>b</sup> that on those who keep the sacred ordinances Heaven will shower timely rains, and the earth will bear abundance of every kind of food, the

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Virt. 6.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xxvi. 3, 4, Deut. xi. 13, 14.

PHILO

πεδιάς σπαρτῶν, ἢ δ' ὀρεινῇ τῶν ἀκροδρύων, καὶ ὅτι χρόνος οὐδεὶς ἀπολειφθήσεται κενὸς εὐεργεσίας, ἀλλὰ τῷ συνεχεῖ καὶ ἐπαλλήλῳ τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ χαρίτων “ καταλήψεται ὁ μὲν ἄμητος τρύγητον, κατα-102 λήψεται δὲ ὁ τρύγητος σπόρον,” ὡς ἀνελλιπῶς καὶ ἀδιαστάτως αἰεὶ τὰ μὲν συγκομίζειν, τὰ δὲ ἐλπίζειν, ἐφεδρευόντων ἑτέροις ἑτέρων, ἵνα τοῖς πέρασι τῶν προτέρων αἰ τῶν ὑστέρων ἀρχαὶ συνάπτουσαι κύκλον τινὰ καὶ χορείαν ἀποτελώσιν ἀνεπιδεᾶ παντὸς 103 ἀγαθοῦ. τὸ γὰρ πλῆθος τῶν γινομένων ἐξαρκέσει καὶ πρὸς τὴν παραντίκα χρήσιν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν καὶ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀφθονον περιουσίαν, νέων ἐπακμαζόντων παλαιοῖς καὶ τὴν ἐκείνων ἔνδειαν προσαναπληρούντων· ἔστι δὲ ὅτε καὶ ὑπ' εὐφορίας [425] ἀλέκτου τῶν | πάλαι συγκομισθέντων φροντίσει τὸ παράπαν οὐδεὶς, ἀλλ' ἀταμίευτα καὶ ἀθησαύριστα καταλείψουσι τοῖς βουλομένοις ἀφέντες τὴν χρήσιν 104 ἀδεᾶ. οἷς μὲν γὰρ ὁ ἀληθινὸς πλοῦτος ἐν οὐρανῷ κατάκειται διὰ σοφίας καὶ ὀσιότητος ἀσκηθεῖς,<sup>1</sup> τούτοις καὶ ὁ τῶν χρημάτων ἐπὶ γῆς περιουσιάζει, προνοία καὶ ἐπιμελεία θεοῦ τῶν ταμείων αἰεὶ πλη-ρομένων, ἐκ τοῦ<sup>2</sup> τὰς ὁρμὰς τῆς διανοίας καὶ τῶν χειρῶν τὰς ἐπιβολὰς μὴ ἐμποδίζεσθαι πρὸς τὴν

<sup>1</sup> This though perhaps translatable is strange. Cohn suggests ἀσκησιν presumably = “by the practice of,” but for this we should expect ἀσκήσεως. The same sense can be got more easily by ἀσκηθεῖσι agreeing with οἷς, and this I think may be the true reading. ἀσκεῖν in the sense of “train” is not uncommon, though “practise” is more common at any rate in Philo.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn wished to read ἐνεκα τοῦ = “in order that.” But see note c.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 101-104

lowlands of sown grain, the highlands of tree fruits, and no season will be left without some measure of beneficence, but so continuous will be the succession of the gifts of God "that the reaping will overtake the vintage and the vintage the seed time."<sup>a</sup> Thus in 102 ceaseless and unbroken order they will gather in the former harvest and hope for the latter, one set waiting to follow another, so that the beginnings of the later may join on to the ends of the earlier and move round and round in a procession from which no good thing is withheld. For the multitude of things 103 produced will suffice both for immediate use and enjoyment and to provide a generous surplus for the future, as the new crops ripen over the old and fill up what is lacking in them. Sometimes so vast will be the fertility that no one will take any thought for the harvest that is past but will leave it unhusbanded and unhoarded for all who wish to use it without fear or scruple. For those who possess stored up in Heaven 104 the true wealth whose adornment is<sup>b</sup> wisdom and godliness have also wealth of earthly riches in abundance. For under the providence and good care of God their store-houses are ever filled, because<sup>c</sup> the impulses of their minds and the undertakings of their hands are never hindered in carrying out successfully

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxvi. 5.

<sup>b</sup> Or "decked out in." This is the only way of taking the word if it is to stand. I do not think that Cohn's "acquired" or "earned" ("erworben") is possible. See note 1.

<sup>c</sup> Cohn "in order that," see note 2. But Philo is working on Deut. xxviii. 8 "The Lord send upon thee blessing on thy barns (ταμείους), and upon all to which thou shalt lay thy hand (ἐπιβάλης τὴν χεῖρά σου)." The fullness of the barns is the natural consequence of the industry expressed in the second clause.

PHILO

- 105 τῶν αἰὶ σπουδαζομένων<sup>1</sup> κατόρθωσιν. οἷς δὲ ὁ κληῖρος οὐκ ἔστιν οὐράνιος δι' ἀσέβειαν καὶ ἀδικίαν, οὐδὲ τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ἀγαθῶν εὐδοεῖν πέφυκεν ἢ κτήσις· ἀλλὰ καὶ προσγένηται, τάχιστα ἀπεπήδησεν, ὡς παραγενομένη τὴν ἀρχὴν οὐκ ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ τῶν λαβόντων, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ βαρῦναι τὴν ἀνίαν σφοδρότερον, ἥτις ἐκ τοῦ στέρεσθαι κατὰ τὸ ἀναγ-
- 106 καῖον ἔπεται. XVIII. τότε δῆ, φησὶν, ὑπὸ τῆς ἄγαν εὐφορίας καὶ ἀφθονίας ὁ νῦν ὑπομένεις ἐργάση· νῦν μὲν γὰρ μήτε τῶν νόμων μήτε τῶν πατρίων ἔθων αἰδῶ ποιούμενος ἀλλὰ πάντων ἀθρώως ἀλογῶν ὑστερίζεις μὲν τῶν ἀναγκαίων, θεραπεύεις δὲ τὰς τῶν δανειστῶν καὶ ὀβολοστατῶν οἰκίας ἐπὶ πολλῶ δανειζόμενος· τότε δ', ὥσπερ ἔφην, δράσεις τοῦναν-
- 107 τίον. ὑπὸ γὰρ ἀφθόνου περιουσίας αὐτὸς ἄλλοις δανειεῖς, καὶ οὐκ ὀλίγα οὐδ' ὀλίγοις, ἀλλὰ πολλὰ καὶ πολλοῖς, ὅλοις μὲν οὖν ἔθνεσι, πάντων καὶ τῶν κατὰ πόλιν καὶ τῶν κατὰ χώραν εὐτυχῶς ἀπαντῶντων, τῶν μὲν κατὰ πόλιν ἀρχαῖς καὶ τιμαῖς καὶ εὐδοξίαις διὰ τε εὐδικίας καὶ εὐβουλίας καὶ τοῦ διὰ λόγων καὶ πράξεων κοινωφελοῦς, τῶν δὲ κατ' ἀγρὸν εὐφορίαις καὶ τῶν ἀναγκαίων, σίτου, οἴνου, ἐλαίου, καὶ τῶν πρὸς ἀβροδίαιτον βίον, ταῦτα δ' ἐστὶ τὰ ἀμύθητα γένη τῶν ἀκροδρῦων, καὶ ἔτι βουκολίων αἰπολίων τῶν ἄλλων θρεμμάτων εὐτοκία.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> After σπουδαζομένων Cohn inserts καλῶν from the quotation of the passage by St. John Damascene, against the mss. It does not fit in well with my interpretation of the passage. See note c on p. 375.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. εὐτοκία, which, as they omit iotas subscript, may be either nominative or dative. Cohn (like Mangey) printed the nominative, but afterwards in his translation saw that the dative was needed.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 105-107

the purposes which they ever<sup>a</sup> zealously pursue. But 105 those who through injustice and impiety have no heavenly portion cannot prosper in acquiring earthly goods either, and if any such acquisition comes their way it speedily springs away as if its coming at all were not to benefit its possessor but to make the distress which necessarily follows on lack of means<sup>b</sup> weigh more heavily upon him. XVIII. In those 106 days he says your vast prosperity and opulence will cause you to do to others what you now suffer from them. Now because you pay no respect to the laws or ancestral customs, but despise the whole body of them, you lack bare necessities and wait upon the houses of money lenders and usurers and borrow at high interest. But then, as I said, you will do the 107 opposite, for in the abundance of your opulence you will yourself lend to others, not few loans nor to few, but many and to many, nay rather to whole nations.<sup>c</sup> For prosperity will attend you in everything both in the city and in the country<sup>d</sup>; in the city by offices, honours and reputations through justice well administered, through policy well considered, through words and deeds directed to serve the common weal: in the land by the fertility both of the necessaries, corn, wine and oil, and the means of enjoyable life, that is the numberless kinds of tree fruits, and also by the fruitful multiplying of oxen and goats and other cattle.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "from time to time" = whatever at any time they pursue.

<sup>b</sup> So, rather than "loss" (Cohn), if the comparative has any sense. Poverty is painful anyway but more painful if it follows abundance.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xv. 6.

<sup>d</sup> Deut. xxviii. 3.

<sup>e</sup> Deut. vii. 13, xxviii. 4.

- 108 Ἄλλὰ τί τούτων ὄφελος, εἴποι τις ἄν, τῷ μὴ μέλλοντι κληρονόμους καὶ διαδόχους ἀπολιπεῖν; διὰ τοῦτο ἐπισφραγιζόμενος τὰς εὐεργεσίας φησὶν· οὐδεὶς ἄγονος οὐδὲ στείρα γενήσεται, πάντες δὲ οἱ θεραπευταὶ θεοῦ γνήσιοι νόμον ἐκπληρώσουσι φύ-
- 109 σεως τὸν ἐπὶ παιδοποιῶν· καὶ γὰρ ἄνδρες ἔσονται πατέρες καὶ πατέρες εὐπαιδες καὶ γυναῖκες ἔσονται μητέρες καὶ μητέρες εὐτεκνοὶ, ὡς ἕκαστον οἶκον πλήρωμα εἶναι πολυανθρώπου συγγενείας, μηδενὸς ἔλλειφθέντος ἢ μέρους ἢ ὀνόματος τῶν ὅσα ἐπιφημίζεται τοῖς προσήκουσι, καὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἄνω, γονεῖς, θεῖους, πάππους, καὶ πρὸς τοὺς κάτω πάλιν ὁμοίως, (υἱούς), ἀδελφούς, ἀδελφιδούς, υἰωνούς,
- [426] θυγατριδούς, ἀνεψιούς, | ἀνεψιαδούς, τοὺς ἐξ αἵ-
- 110 ματος πάντας. ὠκύμορος δ' ἢ ἀτελής οὐδεὶς ἄν γένοιτο τῶν κοσμουμένων τοῖς νόμοις οὐδέ τις ἡλικίας ἄμοιρος ὣν ὁ θεὸς ἔνειμεν ἀνθρώπων γένει· ἀλλ' ἐκ βρέφους ἐπανιών ἐξῆς ὥσπερ δι' ἀναβαθμῶν, τεταγμέναις χρόνων περιόδοις ἐκάστης ἡλικίας τοὺς ὀρισθέντας ἀριθμοὺς συνεκπληρώσας, ἐπὶ τὴν τελευταίαν ἀφίξεται τὴν θανάτῳ μᾶλλον δ' ἀθανασίᾳ γειτνιώσαν, ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν εὐγερως, εὐπαιδα καὶ πολύπαιδα οἶκον ἂν' αὐτοῦ κατα-
- 111 λιπών. XIX. τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ὅπερ εἶπέ που προθεσπίζων, ὅτι "τὸν ἀριθμὸν τῶν ἡμερῶν σου ἀναπληρώσεις," παγκάλως χρησάμενος τοῖς ὀνόμασι κυρίοις ἅμα καὶ προσφύεσιν. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἀμαθῆς <sup>a</sup> Ex. xxiii. 26 "There shall be no man childless nor woman barren on thy land. The number of thy days I will surely fulfil." Philo quotes the first part of this verse, as it stands in the LXX (E.V. "none shall cast her young nor be barren

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 108-111

But someone may say, what profit is there in all 108 this to one who is not going to leave behind him heirs and successors? And therefore he crowns his boons by saying that no man shall be childless and no woman barren, but all the true servants of God will fulfil the law of nature for the procreation of children.<sup>a</sup> For men will be fathers and women 109 mothers both happy in those they beget or bear, so that each family will be a plenitude with a long list of kinsfolk, with no part nor any of the names which signify relationship missing. In the upper line will be parents, uncles, grandparents, likewise in the lower line sons, brothers, brothers' sons, grandsons, daughters' sons, cousins, cousins' sons, in fact all that are allied by blood. And none of those who 110 conform to the laws will die an early death or be cut short, or denied any stage of life that God has assigned to the human race, but each will rise as by stepping-stones from infancy through the successive terms appointed to every age, fulfilling its allotted tale until he reaches the last, the neighbour of death or rather immortality, and passes from that truly goodly old age to leave a great house of goodly children to fill his place. XIX. This is what he 111 means when he gives the prediction "thou shalt fulfil the number of thy days" and the exactness and aptness of the words which he uses is truly admirable.<sup>b</sup> For the ignorant and lawless is of no in thy land"), and the second part in § 111, where, however, he alters "I will fulfil" to "thou shalt fulfil."

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the text does mean that long life in the literal sense is one of the promised blessings, but it also gives through the κύρια ὀνόματα (ἀριθμὸς and ἡμέρα) the spiritual lesson that the higher meaning of long life is good life. For this cf.
Quis Rerum 290-292. On κυπλοῖς see App. p. 456.

PHILO

- καὶ ἔκνομος “ οὐτ’ ἐν λόγῳ,” φασίν,<sup>1</sup> “ οὐτ’ ἐν ἀριθμῷ,” τῷ δὲ παιδείας καὶ νόμων ἱερῶν μεταποιουμένῳ πρώτη χάρις ἐστὶν ἐλλογίμῳ καὶ δοκίμῳ
- 112 φανέντι μεταλαχεῖν ἀριθμοῦ καὶ τάξεως. ὑπερφυῶς δὲ ἔχει καὶ ἡ πλήρωσις οὐ μηνῶν ἢ ἐνιαυτῶν ἀλλ’ ἡμερῶν, ὡς δέον ἐκάστην ἡμέραν τοῦ σπουδαίου μηδὲν ἔρημον καὶ κενὸν εἶναι εἰς πάροδον ἀμαρτημάτων, ἀλλὰ πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσι καὶ διαστήμασιν ἑαυτῆς καλοκάγαθίας πεπληρῶσθαι· κρίνεται γὰρ οὐ ποσότητι ἀλλὰ ποιότητι ἢ ἀρετῇ καὶ τὸ καλόν. ὅθεν ἰσότημον καλῶ<sup>2</sup> βίῳ σοφοῦ καὶ μίαν ἡμέραν ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι κατορθουμένην.
- 113 τοῦτ’ ἐστὶν ὃ καὶ ἐν ἑτέροις αἰνίττεται φάσκων εὐλογίας ἄξιον ἔσεσθαι καὶ εἰσιόντα καὶ ἐξιόντα τὸν τοιοῦτον ἄνδρα, διότι πάσαις μὲν ταῖς κινήσεσι πάσαις δὲ ταῖς σχέσεσιν ὁ σπουδαῖος ἐπαινετός, ἔνδον τε καὶ ἔξω, πολιτικὸς ὁμοῦ καὶ οἰκονόμος, ὡς τὰ μὲν ἔνδον ἐξορθοῦν οἰκονομικῶς, τὰ δ’ ἔξω
- 114 πολιτικῶς, ἢ συμφέρον ἐπανορθοῦσθαι. εἰ μὲν οὖν εἰς ἀνὴρ τυγχάνη τοιοῦτος ὢν ἐν πόλει, τῆς πόλεως ὑπεράνω φανεῖται, εἰ δὲ πόλις, τῆς ἐν κύκλῳ χώρας, εἰ δὲ ἔθνος, ἐπιβήσεται πᾶσιν ἔθνεσιν ὥσπερ κεφαλὴ σώματι τοῦ περιφαίνεσθαι χάριν, οὐχ ὑπὲρ εὐδοξίας μᾶλλον ἢ τῆς τῶν ὁρώντων ὠφελείας· αἱ γὰρ συνεχεῖς τῶν καλῶν παραδειγμάτων φαντασίαι παραπλησίας εἰκόνας ἐγχαράττουσι ταῖς μὴ πάνυ σκληραῖς καὶ ἀποκρό-
- 115 τοῖς ψυχαῖς. ὅθεν εἴρηται πρὸς τοὺς ἐθέ-

<sup>1</sup> mss. φησίν.

<sup>2</sup> Clearly a mistake of the scribe, presumably for ὄλω, or possibly for καὶ (κ’) ὄλω, though the double καὶ = “also” would be rather heavy.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 111-115

account, as they say, and has no number,<sup>a</sup> but he who can lay claim to instruction and holy laws has for his first boon that he is seen to be of high account and well approved and therefore gains a number and a place in an ordered line. Marvellously apt too is the phrase that the fulfilment is not of months or years but of days, signifying that every day of the man of worth must leave nothing void or empty where sin can come in, but have every part and space in it filled up with virtuous and excellent living,<sup>b</sup> for virtue and excellence are judged not by quantity but by quality. Therefore he held that the wise man's single day rightly spent is worth a whole life-time.

This is what he suggests in another place where he says that such a man will be worthy of blessing both in his goings out and in his comings in,<sup>c</sup> because in all his ways, moving or standing, the good man shows his merit both inside and outside, both as householder and as statesman, his household skill shown in right management within, his statesmanship in outside reforms as the welfare of the state requires. So then one such man in a city, if such be found, will be superior to the city, one such city to the country around, one such nation will stand above other nations, as the head above the body, to be conspicuous on every side, not for its own glory but rather for the benefit of the beholders. For to gaze continuously upon noble models imprints their likeness in souls which are not entirely hardened and stony.

And therefore those who would imitate these

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 457.

<sup>b</sup> The next words show that Philo wishes to emphasize both parts of καλοκάγαθία.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xxviii. 6.

PHILO

- λοντας μιμείσθαι τὰ σπουδαῖα καὶ θαυμαστὰ κάλλη μὴ ἀπογινώσκειν<sup>1</sup> τὴν ἀμείνω μεταβολὴν μηδὲ τὴν ὡσπερ ἐκ διασπορᾶς ψυχικῆς ἦν εἰργάσατο κακία πρὸς ἀρετὴν καὶ σοφίαν ἐπάνοδον· ἵλεως γὰρ ὅταν 116 ἦ ὁ θεός, ἐξευμαρίζεται πάντα. | γίνεται δὲ ἵλεως [427] τοῖς αἰδουμένοις καὶ μεθορμιζομένοις ἐξ ἀκρασίας εἰς ἐγκράτειαν καὶ τὰ μὲν τῆς ὑπαιτίου ζωῆς κακί-ζουσι καὶ ὅσα ἐναπεμάξαντο ταῖς ψυχαῖς αἰσυχρὰ εἶδωλα μυσатτομένοις, εὐδῖαν δὲ παθῶν ἐζηλωκόσι 117 καὶ γαλήνην καὶ εἰρήνην βίου μετατρέχουσι. καθἀπερ οὖν ἀνθρώπους ἐν ἐσχατιαῖς ἀπωκισμένους ῥαδίως <ἂν> ἐνὶ κελεύσματι συναγάγοι ὁ θεὸς ἀπὸ περάτων εἰς ὃ τι ἂν θελήσῃ χωρίον, οὕτω καὶ τὸν νοῦν ἐξ ἄλλης πολυχρονίου πάντῃ πλανηθέντα καὶ κακωθέντα πρὸς ἡδονῆς καὶ ἐπιθυμίας, δεσποινῶν ἐκτετιμημένων,<sup>2</sup> ἐλεῶν ὁ σωτὴρ ἐξ ἀνοδίας εἰς ὄδον εὐπετώως ἂν ἀγάγοι, ἀμεταστρεπτὶ φεύγειν διεγνωκότα φυγῆν, οὐ τὴν ἐπονείδιστον λεγομένην, ἀλλὰ τὴν σωτήριον, ἣν οὐκ ἂν τις ἀμάρτοι λέγων καθόδου κρείττονα.
- 118 XX. Τὰ μὲν οὖν ἐκτὸς ἀγαθὰ εἴρηται, νῖκαι κατ' ἐχθρῶν, κράτη πολέμων, εἰρήνης βεβαιώσεις<sup>3</sup> καὶ τῶν κατ' εἰρήνην ἀγαθῶν περιουσίαι, πλοῦτοι καὶ

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀπογινώσκεισθαι.

<sup>2</sup> So one ms. The others ἐκτετιμημένων or ἐκτεταμένων. Mangey adopted the last and translated "infensus," but ἐκτείνω cannot have this meaning. But neither does ἐκτετιμημένων give a meaning which is very appropriate here. Possibly <καὶ> ἐκτεταμένον = "tortured," a meaning more commonly given to ἐπιτείνω, but also to ἐκτείνω. Cf. δέσποιναί . . . κατατείνουσι, Spec. Leg. iv. 82.

<sup>3</sup> mss. βεβαίωσις.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 115-118

examples of good living so marvellous in their loveliness, are bidden not to despair of changing for the better or of a restoration to the land of wisdom and virtue from the spiritual dispersion<sup>a</sup> which vice has wrought. For when God is gracious He makes all 116 things light and easy, and He does become gracious to those who depart with shame from incontinence to self-restraint and deplore the deeds of their guilty past, abhor the base illusive images which they imprinted on their souls and first<sup>b</sup> earnestly strive to still the storm of the passions, then seek to lead a life of serenity and peace. So then just as 117 God with a single call may easily gather together from the ends of the earth to any place that He wills the exiles dwelling in the utmost parts of the earth, so too the mind which has strayed everywhere in prolonged vagrancy, maltreated by pleasure and lust, the mistresses it honoured so unduly, may well be brought back by the mercy of its Saviour from the pathless wild into a road wherein it is resolved to flee straight on, a flight not the discredited flight of the outcast, but a flight of one banished from evil to salvation, a banishment which may be truly held to be better than a recall.<sup>c</sup>

XX. So much for the external blessings promised, 118 victories over enemies, successes in wars, establishments of peace and abundant supplies of the good

<sup>a</sup> Evidently an allegorization of Deut. xxx. 4 "if thy dispersion (διασπορά, E.V. thy outcasts) be from one end of heaven to the other, the Lord will gather thee thence."

<sup>b</sup> This is perhaps implied by the change from the perfect ἐξηλωκόσι to the present μετατρέχουσι.

<sup>c</sup> Philo combines the two senses of φυγή, "escape" and "banishment"; cf. note to De Fuga 118. The translation is somewhat expanded to bring this out.

PHILO

- τιμαὶ καὶ ἀρχαὶ καὶ τὰ παρεπόμενα τοῖς εὖ πράττουσιν ἐγκώμια, διὰ παντὸς στόματος καὶ φίλων καὶ δυσμενῶν ἐπαινουμένοις, τῶν μὲν διὰ φόβον, τῶν δὲ δι' εὐνοίαν· λεκτέον δὲ καὶ τὰ τούτων
- 119 οἰκειότερα, τὰ περὶ σῶμα. φησὶν οὖν, ὅτι τοῖς ἀρετὴν διαπονοῦσι καὶ τοὺς ἱεροὺς νόμους ἡγεμόνας τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον λόγων καὶ ἔργων προστησάμενοις ἰδίᾳ τε καὶ κοινῇ περιέσται τὸ εἰς ἅπαν ἄνοσον· εἰ δὲ καὶ γένοιτό τις ἀσθένεια, τοῦ μὲν κακῶσαι χάριν οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο, τοῦ δ' ὑπομῆσαι τὸν θνητὸν ὅτι θνητὸς ἐστίν, εἰς ὑπεραύχου φρονήματος κατάλυσιν καὶ βελτίωσιν ἡθῶν· ὑγεία δ' ἔψεται καὶ εὐαισθησία καὶ τὸ ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς μέρεσιν ὀλόκληρον καὶ παντελές, εἰς τὰς πρὸς ὃ γέγονεν
- 120 ἕκαστον ἀκωλύτους ὑπηρεσίας. ἐδικαίωσε γὰρ ὁ θεὸς γέρας τῷ σπουδαίῳ παρασχεῖν εὖ συνωκοδομημένην καὶ σνηρημοσμένην ἐκ θεμελίων ἄχρι στέγους οἰκίαν—οἰκία δὲ ψυχῆς συμφυεστάτη σῶμα—διὰ τε πολλὰ τῶν εἰς τὸ βίον ἀναγκαίων καὶ χρησίμων καὶ μάλιστα διὰ τόνδε τὸν καθάρσει
- 121 τελείαις νοῦν καθαρθέντα· <ὄν> καὶ μύστην γεγνότα τῶν θείων τελετῶν καὶ συμπεριπολοῦντα ταῖς τῶν οὐρανίων χορείαις καὶ περιόδοις ἐγέραρεν ὁ

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the bodily is more akin to the man than the external. But very possibly "more akin to these." If so, the comparative means "more akin than those of the soul." The three forms of the good are such a familiar idea, that this might be understood.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. vii. 15, there promised absolutely. Philo feels the necessity to qualify it by the possibility of sickness sent as a trial or warning, and to justify it by the need of bodily tranquillity for the working of the good mind. See General Introduction, p. xxi.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 118-121

things of peace, honours and offices and the eulogies accompanying the successful, who receive praise from the lips of all, friends and enemies, praises prompted by goodwill in the one case and by fear in the other. But we must also speak of a more personal<sup>a</sup> matter, the blessings bestowed on the body. He promises that those who take pains to cultivate 119 virtue and set the holy laws before them to guide them in all they do or say in their private or in their public capacity will receive as well the gift of complete freedom from disease,<sup>b</sup> and if some infirmity should befall them it will come not to do them injury but to remind the mortal that he is mortal, to humble his over-weening spirit and to improve his moral condition. Health will be followed by efficiency of the senses and the perfection and completeness of every part, so that without impediment they may render each the services for which it was made. For God thought it meet to 120 grant as a privilege to the man of worth that his body, the congenital<sup>c</sup> house of the soul, should be a house well built and well compacted from foundation to roof, to provide the many things which are necessary or useful for life and particularly for the sake of the mind of which we are speaking, a<sup>d</sup> mind purged clean of every spot. This mind, the initiate of the holy mysteries, the 121 fellow traveller of the heavenly bodies as they revolve in ordered march, has been honoured with the gift of

<sup>c</sup> Perhaps "congenital and lifelong" may better express the superlative.

<sup>d</sup> Not, I think, as Cohn "our mind," i.e. the human mind generally, but the mind of the σπουδαῖος, which for the rest of the Blessings becomes the true Israel to which the Blessings are addressed.

PHILO

- θεὸς ἡρεμία, βουληθεὶς ἀμέθελκτον<sup>1</sup> εἶναι, κηραίνοντα περι μῆδὲν πάθος ὧν αἱ τοῦ σώματος γεννώσιν ἀνάγκαι<sup>2</sup> ἐπιτιθέμεναι κατὰ πλεονεξίαν παθῶν
- [428] δυναστείας· | εἰ γὰρ περιέψυξέ τι ἢ περιέφλεξεν, αἶον καὶ αὐχμηρὸν ἢ τοῦναντίον ροῶδες ἀπειργάσατο<sup>3</sup>. δι' ὧν ἀπάντων ὁ νοῦς εὐθύνην ἀδυνατεῖ
- 122 τὴν τοῦ καθ' αὐτὸν βίου παρείαν. ἐνδιαιτώμενος δὲ ὑγιεινῶ σώματι κατὰ πολλὴν εὐμάρειαν ἐνδιατρίψει καὶ ἐνσχολάσει τοῖς σοφίας θεωρήμασι, μακαρίας καὶ εὐδαίμονος ζωῆς ἐπιλαχῶν· οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πολὺν ἄκρατον σπάσας τῆς εὐεργέτιδος τοῦ θεοῦ
- 123 θείας· οὗτος ᾧ φησιν ὁ προφήτης τὸν θεὸν “ἐμπεριπατεῖν” οἷα βασιλείῳ, καὶ γὰρ ἐστὶ τῷ ὄντι βασιλείον καὶ οἶκος θεοῦ σοφοῦ διάνοια· τούτου καλεῖται θεὸς ἰδίως ὁ τῶν συμπάντων θεός, καὶ λαὸς ἐξαιρέτος πάλιν οὗτος, οὐ τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἀρχόντων, ἀλλὰ τοῦ ἐνός καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἄρ-
- 124 χοντος, ἁγίου ἁγίος· οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πρὸ μικροῦ πολλαῖς μὲν ἡδοναῖς, πολλαῖς δ' ἐπιθυμίαις, μυρίαῖς δ' ἀνάγκαις κακιῶν καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν ὑπεζευγμένος·

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey for mss. ἀμέθεκτον, which Cohn retains, supposing some such word as νόσων to have fallen out. ἀμέθελκτον has been used in the adverbial form in De Fuga 92, and here makes excellent sense.

<sup>2</sup> Ἀ ἀνάγκαι (omitting γεννώσιν). The others γεννώσι δυνάμεις.

<sup>3</sup> The text is uncertain and that adopted here may not meet with general acceptance. The majority of mss. have ἢ γὰρ περιέψυξέ τις ἢ περιέφλεξεν αἶον καὶ αὐχμηρὸν ἢ τοῦναντίον ροῶδες ἀπειργάσατο. A has τι for τις and οὐρανός for αἶον. The first is not intelligible as it stands, and I have corrected ἢ to εἰ and τις to τι. The second is adopted by Mangey. Cohn expunges both αἶον and οὐρανός, holding that αἶον was a gloss on αὐχμηρὸν and was subsequently corrupted to οὐνος

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 121-124

quietude by God, who willed that it should be undistracted, never affected by any of the troublesome sensations which the distresses<sup>a</sup> of the body engender, subjecting it to a domination unduly usurped by such sensations.<sup>b</sup> For if anything over-chills or over-heats it, the house becomes warped and dried up or contrariwise wet and damp, and all these make the mind incapable of guiding the course of its own life aright. But if it resides in a healthy body it will have full 122 ease to live there devoting its leisure to the lore of wisdom, thus gaining a blessed and happy life. This mind it is that drinks deep of the strong wine of God's beneficent power and feasts on holy thoughts and doctrines. This it is in which God, so says the 123 prophet, "walks"<sup>c</sup> as in a palace, for in truth the wise man's mind is a palace and house of God. This it is which is declared to possess personally the God who is the God of all, this again is the chosen people, the people not of particular rulers, but of the one and only true ruler, a people holy even as He is holy. This it is which but now lay under the yoke of many 124 pleasures and many lusts and the innumerable distresses which its vices and lusts entail, but has been

<sup>a</sup> Or "necessities."

<sup>b</sup> More literally "laying upon it through greed the domination of the πάθη" (here of course not used in the ordinary sense in Philo of the "passions"). But the middle ἐπιθέμεναι and the repetition of πάθη seem to me strange.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxvi. 12. E.V. "walk among you." See App. p. 457.

---

= οὐρανός. He rather strangely says that οὐρανός makes no sense. Assuming that Philo is continuing the figure of the house, to which the terms are surely more applicable than to the body, οὐρανός="weather" makes good sense and I should be willing to accept it in addition to αἶον.

PHILO

- τούτου τὰ κακὰ τῆς δουλείας συνέτριψεν ὁ θεὸς εἰς ἐλευθερίαν ἐξαιρούμενος· οὗτος ὁ μὴ ἀπαρρησιάστου τυχὼν εὐεργεσίας ἀλλὰ διαβεβοημένης καὶ περιηγγελμένης πάντη διὰ τὴν τοῦ προασπίζοντος ἐξουσίαν, ὑφ' ἧς οὐχ ὑπεσύρη πρὸς τὰ οὐραῖα, ἀλλ' 125 ἐπὶ κεφαλὴν ἄνω παρεπέμφθη. ταῦτα δ' ἀλληγορεῖται τροπικῶς ἐξενεχθέντα· καθάπερ γὰρ ἐν ζῳῷ κεφαλὴ μὲν πρῶτον καὶ ἄριστον, οὐρὰ δ' ὑστατον καὶ φαυλότατον, οὐ μέρος συνεκπληροῦν τὸν τῶν μελῶν ἀριθμόν, ἀλλὰ σόβησις τῶν ἐπιποτωμένων, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον κεφαλὴν μὲν τοῦ ἀνθρωπίου γένους ἔσσεσθαι φησι τὸν σπουδαῖον εἴτε ἄνδρα εἴτε λαόν, τοὺς δὲ ἄλλους ἅπαντας οἷον μέρη σώματος ψυχούμενα ταῖς ἐν κεφαλῇ καὶ ὑπεράνω δυνάμεσιν.
- 126 Αὗται μὲν αἱ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τῶν ἀγαθῶν εἰσιν εὐχαὶ καὶ τοὺς νόμους ἔργοις ἐπιτελούντων, ἃς φησι τελεσφορηθήσεσθαι χάριτι τοῦ φιλοδώρου θεοῦ τὰ καλὰ διὰ τὴν πρὸς αὐτὸν ὁμοιότητα σεμνοποιοῦντος καὶ γεραίροντος· τὰς δὲ κατὰ τῶν ἐκνόμων καὶ ἀθέσμων ὀρισθείσας ἀρὰς ἐπισκεπτέον.

Περὶ ἀρῶν

- [429] XXI. | Πρώτην ἀρὰν ὡς κουφότατον κακὸν ἀνα-127 γράφει πενίαν καὶ ἔνδειαν καὶ σπάνιν τῶν ἀναγκαίων καὶ μετουσίαν παντελοῦς ἀπορίας· τὸν

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxvi. 13 "who brought you out of the land of Egypt when you were slaves, and I broke the bond of your yoke."

<sup>b</sup> So the LXX continuing the verse "and I brought you with open speech," μετὰ παρρησίας (E.V. "and made you go upright").

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xxviii. 13, cf. v. 44.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 124-127

redeemed into freedom by God, who broke asunder the miseries of its slavery.<sup>a</sup> This it is which received a benefaction not named with bated breath<sup>b</sup> but noised abroad and proclaimed on every side because of the mightiness of its champion, whereby it was not dragged down tailwards but lifted up to the head.<sup>c</sup> These last words contain an allegory and are figuratively expressed. For as in an animal the head is the first and best part and the tail the last and meanest, and in fact not a part which helps to complete the list of members, but a means of swishing off the winged creatures which settle on it, so too he means that the virtuous one, whether single man or people, will be the head of the human race and all the others like the limbs of a body which draw their life from the forces in the head and at the top.<sup>d</sup> 125

These are the blessings invoked upon good men, 126 men who fulfil the laws by their deeds, which blessings will be accomplished by the gift of the bounteous God, who glorifies and rewards moral excellence because of its likeness to Himself. We must now investigate the curses delivered against the law-breakers and transgressors.

On Curses

XXI. The first curse which he describes as the lightest of their evils is poverty and dearth and lack of necessaries and conditions of absolute destitution. 127

<sup>d</sup> The allegorical meaning seems to be that while the σπουδαίος is the source of spiritual life to all who, though not of his excellence, are true members of the body, the transgressors have no part in this life, but are only a slavish instrument, for what purpose is not stated.

PHILO

γὰρ σπόρον, φησίν, ἀτελῆ μὲν ὄντα δηώσουσι, τελειωθέντα δ' ἀμήσουσιν ἐξαίφνης ἐπελθόντες πολέμιοι, διττὴν ἐργασάμενον<sup>1</sup> συμφοράν, λιμὸν μὲν φίλοις, ἐχθροῖς δὲ περιουσίαν· λυπεῖ γὰρ μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦπτον τῶν ἰδίων κακῶν τῶν δυσμενῶν τὰ 128 ἀγαθὰ. καὶ ἡσυχάζοντων δὲ τῶν ἐχθρῶν οὐχ ἡσυχάσουσιν αἱ ἐκ φύσεως ἀργαλεώτεραι ζημίαι· σὺ μὲν γὰρ κατασπείρεις τὴν βαθύγειον τῆς πεδιάδος, ἀκρίδων δὲ νέφος ἐξαίφνης καταπτάμενον ἐκθερίσει καὶ τὰ ὑπολειφθέντα πολλοστὸν εἰς συγκομιδὴν ἔσται μέρος τῶν σπαρέντων· καὶ σὺ μὲν ἀμπελῶνα φυτεύεις δαπάναις ἀφειδέσει <καὶ> κακοπαθείαις ἀτρύτοις, ἄς εἰκὸς γεωπόνους ἀναδέχασθαι, τελειωθέντα δὲ ἤδη καὶ βλαστάνοντα καὶ βρίθοντα ὑπ' εὐφορίας σκώληκες ἐπιγενόμενοι 129 τρυγήσουσι. τοὺς ἔλαιώνας ὅταν ἴδης εὐθηνούντας καὶ καρπῶν ἄφθονον πλῆθος, ἡσθήσῃ, ὥσπερ εἰκὸς, δι' ἐλπίδα συγκομιδῆς εὐτυχούς, ὅταν δὲ ἄρξῃ συγκομίζειν, αἰσθήσῃ τῆς ἀτυχίας μᾶλλον ἢ τῆς ἀσεβείας<sup>2</sup>. τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἔλαιον καὶ ὅσον πῖον ἐκρυσσεται σύμπαν ἀφανῶς, ὁ δ' ἐκτὸς ὄγκος αὐτὸς εἰς ἀπάτην ψυχῆς κενὸς κενῆς ὑπολειφθήσεται. καὶ

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for mss. ἐργασάμενοι as more logical. I follow him with some doubt.

<sup>2</sup> For this obvious corruption Cohn suggests ἀφθονίας or εὐθηνίας, but "you expect good fortune, but you will have bad fortune rather than good fortune" is somewhat feeble. I have ventured to translate a conjecture of my own which seems textually no more difficult and gives a better point τῆς <οὐκ> ἀτυχίας μᾶλλον ἢ τῆς ἀσεβείας <τιμωρίας>, "you expect good fortune: you will get—not bad fortune, that is not the right word, but," etc. οὐ or μή is so frequently lost in the mss. of Philo that it hardly counts, and the falling out of another word ending in -ias is at least as easy a mistake

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 127-129

The crops, he says, will be ravaged while unripe, or reaped when ripe by the sudden attacks of the hostile army, and thus will bring about a double misfortune, starvation for friends and abundance for enemies.<sup>a</sup> For the good fortune of the foe is more or at any rate no less painful than our own suffering. And even if the enemy take no action the more grievous injuries which nature inflicts will not be inactive. You put seed in the deep soil of the lowlands, and a cloud of locusts will suddenly fly down and reap the harvest, leaving only an insignificant fraction of what you sowed for you to gather.<sup>b</sup> You plant a vineyard, spare no expense and endure the endless hardships which the husbandman has to expect, and, when it is come to its fullness and is flourishing, laden with a plentiful crop, worms will come and strip the grapes.<sup>c</sup> When you see your olive yards thriving with an abundant wealth of fruit you will naturally be pleased at the prospect of a fortunate ingathering, but when you come to pick them you will be faced with misfortune, better called the punishment of impiety.<sup>d</sup> For the oil and all the fatness will run out unnoticed,<sup>e</sup> and the outer lump will be left by itself as empty of all goodness as the soul which it remains to disappoint. In fact all <sup>a</sup> Lev. xxvi. 16 "ye shall sow your seeds in vain, and your enemy shall eat them.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxviii. 38.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xxviii. 39.

<sup>d</sup> Deut. xxviii. 40.

<sup>e</sup> The LXX has ἐλαία (olive tree) ἐκρῆσεται, probably meaning the same as the E.V. "cast its fruit." Philo may have read ἐλαιον, or perhaps made a slip.

---

as the substitution of an alien and nonsensical word. οὐ . . . μᾶλλον ἢ for μᾶλλον δέ constantly recurs in Philo, e.g. § 163.

PHILO

- συνόλως ὅσα σπαρτὰ ἢ δένδρα καρποῖς αὐτοῖς 130 ἔξαναλωθήσεται πρὸς ἐρυσίβης. XXII. ἐφεδρεύουσι δὲ καὶ ἄλλαι συμφοραὶ δίχα τῶν εἰρημένων, ἐνδείας καὶ ἀπορίας δημιουργοί. δι' ὧν γὰρ ἀν-θρώποις ἢ φύσιν ἐχορήγει τὰ ἀγαθὰ, στερηθή-σεται, γῆ καὶ οὐρανός, ἢ μὲν ἀμβλίσκουσα καὶ τελειογονεῖν ἀδυνατοῦσα τοὺς καρπούς, ὁ δὲ μετα-βεβηκῶς εἰς ἀγονίαν, τῶν ἐτησίων ὥρων μὴ χειμῶνος, μὴ θέρους, μὴ ἔαρος, μὴ μετοπώρου πρὸς τὰς οἰκείας τάξεις ἀνιόντων, ἀλλ' εἰς ἄποιον καὶ πεφορημένην σύγκρισιν βιασθέντων ἀποκριθῆναι 131 δεσποτικοῦ κράτους ἀρχῆ. οὐ γὰρ ὄμβρος, οὐχ ὑέτός, οὐ λεπτή ψεκάς, οὐ βραχεῖα λιβάς, οὐ δρό-σος, οὐκ ἄλλο τι τῶν αὖξιν δυναμένων ἐπιγενήσεται, τοῦναντίον δὲ ὅσα λυμαντικὰ μὲν φυομένων, φθοροποιὰ δὲ καρπῶν καταπεπανθέντων καὶ ἵνα μὴ τελειωθῇ παρεσκευασμένα. “θῆσω” γὰρ φησι “τὸν οὐρανὸν ὑμῖν χαλκοῦν καὶ τὴν γῆν σιδηρᾶν,” [430] αἰνιττόμενος τὸ μηδέτερον αὐτῶν | τὰ οἰκεία καὶ
 132 πρὸς ἃ γέγονεν ἐπιτελέσειν ἔργα. ποῦ γὰρ ἢ σίδηρος ἔσταχυηφόρησεν ἢ ὑέτὸν ἤνεγκε χαλκός, ὧν χρεῖα τὰ ζῶα καὶ μάλιστα τὸ ἐπίκηρον καὶ πολλῶν ἐπιδεές, ἄνθρωπος; μηνύει δ' οὐ μόνον ἀφορίαν καὶ τῶν ἐτησίων ὥρων φθοράν, ἀλλὰ καὶ πολέμων γενέσεις καὶ τῶν ἐν τούτοις ἀφορήτων καὶ ἀμυθή-των κακῶν· χαλκός γὰρ καὶ σίδηρος πολεμιστηρίων

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxviii. 42. For the LXX ἐρυσίβη, “mildew” the E.V. has “locusts.”

<sup>b</sup> ἀποκρίνειν, “to sift off,” seems to be used in the same way as in Mos. ii. 180 ἀμφοτέρων εἰς μίαν ἰδέαν ἀποκριθέντων,

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 129-132

the crops which you sow or the trees which you plant will be mildewed and perish with their fruits.<sup>a</sup> XXII. But besides these there are other sufferings 130 waiting their turn to create want and destitution. The sources which nature uses to bestow her boons on mankind, earth and heaven, will become barren. Earth will destroy her fruit in the germ and prove unable to bring them to their fullness. Heaven will be transformed into sterility, as none of the yearly seasons, neither winter nor summer, nor spring nor autumn arise to take their proper places but all are forcibly merged<sup>b</sup> in formless turbid<sup>c</sup> congeries by the dictation of an imperious power. For no down- 131 pour, no shower, no slight drizzle nor tiny dropping, no dew nor anything else that can promote growth will come. But on the contrary all that makes havoc of growing plants or destroys the ripened fruit will be provided to hinder them from coming to their perfection. For He says "I will make the heaven brazen to you and the earth iron,"<sup>d</sup> indicating that both of them will fail to perform their proper functions for which they were made. For when did 132 ever iron bear corn in the ear or brass bring rain, things necessary to all living creatures and particularly to men, whose life is precarious and full of needs? And the phrase suggests not only unfruitfulness and the ruin of the yearly seasons but also the sources of war and the intolerable and innumerable evils which war creates, for brass and iron are the materials from which the weapons of war are cf. also Spec. Leg. i. 218, De Som. i. 210. Cohn strangely translates "will pass into each other or separate."

<sup>c</sup> Or "unstable," cf. its application to the profligate, De Fug. 28, and the multitude, De Ebr. 198.

<sup>d</sup> Lev. xxvi. 19, Deut. xxviii. 23.

PHILO

133 ὄπλων ὕλαι. καὶ γῆ μέντοι κονιορτὸν οἴσει καὶ χουῖς ἄνωθεν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ καταχθήσεται βαρύτατον ἐπιφέρων καρπὸν<sup>1</sup> εἰς τὴν διὰ πνίγους ἀπώλειαν, ἵνα μηδὲν παραλειφθῆ τῶν ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ. πολυάνθρωποι μὲν ἐρημωθήσονται συγγένειαι, κεναὶ δὲ αἱ πόλεις ἕξαπιναίως οἰκητόρων ἔσονται, μνημεῖα παλαιᾶς μὲν εὐτυχίας προσκαιροῦ δὲ βαρυδαιμονίας ὑπο-λειφθεῖσαι πρὸς νουθεσίαν τῶν δυναμένων σω-φρονίζεσθαι.

134 XXIII. Τοσαύτη δὲ ἐφέξει σπάνις τῶν ἀναγ-καίων, ὥστε ἀλλοτριωθέντες τούτων τρέφονται ἐπ' ἀλληλοφαγίας, οὐ μόνον ὀθνείων καὶ μηδὲν προσηκόντων, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν οἰκειοτάτων καὶ φιλάτων· ἄψεται γὰρ καὶ πατὴρ υἱοῦ σαρκῶν καὶ μήτηρ σπλάγχχνων θυγατρὸς καὶ ἀδελφῶν ἀδελφοὶ καὶ γονέων παῖδες· αἰεὶ δὲ οἱ ἀσθενέστεροι τῶν δυνατω-τέρων κακαὶ καὶ ἐπάρατοι τροφαί· τὰ Θυέστεια παιδιὰ [καὶ] συγκρινόμενα ταῖς ὑπερβολαῖς τῶν 135 συμφορῶν, ἃς μεγαλουργήσουσιν οἱ καιροί. μετὰ γὰρ τῶν ἄλλων, ὥσπερ τοῖς ἐν εὐτυχίαις ποθεινὸς ὁ βίος εἰς ἀπόλαυσιν ἀγαθῶν, οὕτως καὶ τοῖς βαρυ-

<sup>1</sup> For the corrupt καρπὸν Cohn suggests κακὸν. The translation again takes a very tentative guess of my own, καπνὸν, which in form suits well, and smoke does choke. But I do not know of any example of καπνός apart from fire. Philo, however, is transcribing the LXX, and we do not know what conception he formed of the χοῦς coming down from heaven. He may have connected it with the fiery rain of Gen. xix.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxviii. 24 "The Lord make the rain of thy land dust (κονίωρος), and dust (χοῦς) shall come down from heaven." In E.V. "powder and dust; from heaven shall it (apparently both) come down upon thee."

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 133-135

made. Earth too will bear dust, and powder will 133 descend from Heaven<sup>a</sup> above, bringing a very grievous cloud of smoke to choke<sup>b</sup> and destroy life, and so no instrument of extinction will be left unused.
Whole families will waste away from many into nothingness, cities will be suddenly left stripped of inhabitants,<sup>c</sup> monuments of their past prosperity and the misery that swiftly followed,<sup>d</sup> left to admonish those who can learn their lesson of wisdom.

XXIII. So greatly will the lack of necessities pre- 134 vail that dismissing all thought of them they will betake themselves to feeding on their own kind, not only on strangers outside their family but on their nearest and dearest.<sup>e</sup> The father will lay his hands on the flesh of his son, the mother on the entrails of her daughter, brothers on brothers, children on parents, and always the weaker will supply an evil and accursed meal to the stronger. The story of Thyestes<sup>f</sup> will be child's play compared with the monstrous calamities which those times of terror will bring about. For apart from all else, just as the 135 prosperous desire life to enjoy their blessings, so

<sup>b</sup> Or "to destroy by stifling heat (πνίγος)."<sup>g</sup> So Cohn ("Glut"). It is true that in all the examples of πνίγος quoted in the Lexicon, it is applied to the effects of heat, but this does not prove that it may not sometimes have retained its original general meaning.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxvi. 31.

<sup>d</sup> So Mangey "mox secutae," cf. ἐξαιναίους, § 150. But I cannot find any authority for this use of πρόκαιρος, which regularly means "for the occasion" or "transient." This is impossible here, for Philo cannot be referring here to the restoration of the penitent. Mangey proposed omitting βαρυσταμονίας, but surely Philo would have written the words in a different order.

<sup>e</sup> For this section see Lev. xxvi. 29, Deut. xxviii. 53-57.

<sup>f</sup> Atreus murdered the two sons of his brother Thyestes, and dressed and served up their flesh to their father.

- δαίμοσιν ἐκείνοις ἔρως πολὺς ἐνιδρυθήσεται τοῦ ζῆν πρὸς ἀμέτρων καὶ ἀπαύστων κακῶν μετουσίαν, ἀπάντων ἀνιάτων. ἦττον γὰρ <χαλεπὸν><sup>1</sup> ἀπαλλαγσαντας ἐπιτεμεῖν θανάτῳ τὰς ἀνίας, ὃ τοῖς μὴ λίαν φρενοβλαβέσιν ἔθος δρᾶν· οἱ δ' ἐκ παραπληξίας ἐθέλοιεν ἂν καὶ μακροβιώτατοι γενέσθαι, τῆς ἀνω-τάτῳ βαρυδαιμονίας ἀπλήστως καὶ ἀκορέστως 136 ἔχοντες. τοιαῦτα τὸ κουφότατον εἶναι δοκοῦν τῶν κακῶν, ἀπορία, προσεργάζεσθαι πέφυκεν, ὅταν θεήλατος ἐπάγηται δίκη· καὶ γὰρ εἰ χαλεπὰ ῥίγος, δίψος, ἔνδεια τροφῆς, ἀλλ' εὐκταϊότατα γένοιτ' ἂν ἐπὶ καιρῶν, εἰ μόνον ἀνυπέρθετον φθορὰν ἐργά-σοιτο<sup>2</sup>. χρονίζοντα δὲ καὶ τήκοντα ψυχὴν τε καὶ σῶμα τῶν τετραγωδημένων, ἃ δι' ὑπερβολὰς με-μυθεῦσθαι δοκεῖ, βαρύτερα πέφυκε καινουργεῖν.
- 137 XXIV. Δουλεία τοῖς ἐλευθέροις ἀφορητότατόν ἐστιν, ὑπὲρ ἧς σπουδάξουσιν ἀποθνήσκειν οἱ σώ-[431] φρονες | ἀγωνιζόμενοι φιλοκινδύνως πρὸς τοὺς ἐπανατεινομένους δεσποτεῖαν· ἀφόρητον δὲ καὶ ἐχθρὸς ἄμαχος· εἰ δ' ὁ αὐτὸς ἀμφότερα γένοιτο, δεσπότης ὁμοῦ καὶ πολέμοις, τίς ἂν ὑποσταίῃ <τὸν> τὸ μὲν δύνασθαι ἀδικεῖν ἐκ δεσποτικῆς ἐξουσίας, τὸ δὲ μηδὲν συγγινώσκειν ἐξ ἀσυμβάτου δυσμενείας
138 περιπεποιημένον; ἐχθροῖς οὖν φησι δεσπότης εἰς

<sup>1</sup> Cohn's insertion. I doubt its necessity: ἦττον, in itself "a smaller thing," can = "easier."

<sup>2</sup> Cohn, though printing ἐργάσοιτο, suggested ἐργάσαιτο. But the future optative representing Oratio Obliqua seems more effective.

<sup>a</sup> There is no authority in Leviticus or Deuteronomy for these two sections. Philo is perhaps so familiar with suicide as a way of escaping misery that he feels that the curse to be complete must include inability to make use of it.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 135-138

too these wretches will have firmly implanted in them a great longing for survival to experience miseries measureless and ceaseless all beyond hope of cure.<sup>a</sup> For it would be a comparatively small matter in their desperation to cut short their afflictions by death, a course often taken by those who have a little sanity left. But these sufferers in their infatuation will wish to prolong their life to the utmost, and their appetite for supreme misery is never satisfied. Such are the natural consequences 136 of what appears to be the lightest of the calamities promised, destitution, when it comes as a visitation of divine justice. For cold and thirst and want of food are hard to bear but may on occasions be most earnestly desired, if we feel that they will only entail undelayed annihilation, but when they linger and waste both soul and body they are bound to produce marvels of suffering worse even than those which, doubtless because they are so intensely painful,<sup>b</sup> are represented on the tragic stage.

XXIV. Slavery to the free is a thing most intoler- 137 able. To avoid it sensible people are eager and ready to die and gladly run any risk in contending with those who menace them with enslavement. But an irresistible enemy is also something intolerable, and when both despotic power and hostility are combined in the same person, who can resist one to whom his authority has given the power to act unjustly and his implacable enmity the disposition to show no consideration? So he declares that those who set at 138 <sup>b</sup> The translation takes μυθεύω in the sense of "to tell" (a myth), Cohn as "invent," and δι' ὑπερβολάς as desire for the hyperbolic. This does not seem to me to suit the plural.

PHILO

τὸ ἀνηλεὲς χρῆσεσθαι τοὺς ἀλογοῦντας νόμων ἱερῶν, οὐ μόνον ἐξ ἐπιθέσεως τῆς ἐκείνων ὑπαχθέντας, ἀλλὰ καὶ γνώμαις<sup>1</sup> ἔκουσίοις ἐκδόντας αὐτοὺς ἔνεκα τῶν ἀβουλήτων, ἃ λιμὸς καὶ σπάνις τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἀπεργάζεται· τὰ γὰρ ἐλάττω κακὰ φυγῇ μειζόνων αἰρετὰ νομίζουσί τινες, εἰ δὴ τι 139 βραχὺ τῶν εἰρημένων ἐστί. δουλεύοντες <γὰρ> πικρῶν μὲν ἐπιταγμάτων ὑπηρεσίας ἀναδέξονται τοῖς σώμασι, πικροτέρων δὲ θεαμάτων ἀνίαις κατα-τεινόμενοι τὰς ψυχὰς ἀπαγορεύουσιν· ὄψονται γὰρ ὧν συνωκοδόμησαν ἢ κατεφύτευσαν ἢ περιποιήσαντο κληρονόμους γεγονότας ἐχθρούς, ἀλλοτρίων ἀπολαύοντας ἀγαθῶν καὶ ἐτοίμων· ὄψονται καὶ τὰ πίονα τῶν ἰδίων θρεμμάτων εὐωχουμένους, ἱερεύοντας<sup>2</sup> καὶ παραρτύοντας εἰς ἀπόλαυσιν ἡδίστην, οἱ στερόμενοι τοὺς ἀφελομένους<sup>3</sup>. ὄψονται καὶ γυναικας, ἃς ἠγάγοντο κουριδίας ἐπὶ γνησίων παίδων σπορά, σώφρονας <καὶ> οἰκουροὺς καὶ φιλάνδρους 140 ἑταιρῶν τρόπον ὑβριζομένας. καὶ πρὸς μὲν ἄμυναν ὀρμήσουσιν, ἔξω δὲ τοῦ σφαδάζειν οὐδὲν ἐργάσα-σθαι δυνήσονται πᾶσαν ἰσχὺν ἐκτετμημένοι καὶ ἐκνεενυρισμένοι· προκείσονται γὰρ σκοποὶ τοῖς ἐθέ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. νόμοις.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἱεροῦντας.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. τοῖς ἀφελομένοις.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxviii. 48 "Thou shalt serve thy enemies . . . in hunger and thirst, and in nakedness, and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck."

<sup>b</sup> Philo may perhaps obtain this by taking v. 48 to mean "in your hunger, etc., you will become servants to your

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 138-140

nought the holy laws will have for their masters enemies who do not shrink from ruthlessness.<sup>a</sup> And not only will they be brought into subjection by the aggressiveness of the enemy but will voluntarily and deliberately surrender themselves because of the distresses which hunger and lack of necessaries produce.<sup>b</sup> For, in the opinion of some, lesser evils may be accepted to escape from the greater, though indeed is any of those here mentioned small? For 139 in slavery their bodies will be exercised in doing service to cruel orders and still more cruel will be the distressing sights which will torture their souls and drive them to despair.<sup>c</sup> They will see what they have built or planted or acquired become the heritage of enemies who enjoy the good things which others have owned and made ready. They will see them feasting on the fattest of their own cattle, slaughtered and dressed to give high delight and enjoyment to the robbers before the eyes of the robbed. They will see too the women whom they took in lawful wedlock for the procreation of true-born children, chaste domestic loving wives, outraged as though they were harlots. They will set about to defend them but 140 apart from some struggling will be able to accomplish nothing, with their strength all gelded and their nerves unstrung.<sup>d</sup> For they will present targets to enemies." In v. 68 the E.V. has "you will sell yourselves," but the LXX is passive "you will be sold." Some texts have "thou shalt put a yoke." If Philo read this, it would assist the idea.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xxviii. 34 "Thou shalt be distraught (παράπληκτος) because of the sights of thine eyes which thou shalt see." The next two sentences reproduce vv. 30-31.

<sup>d</sup> Perhaps based on v. 32 "thy hand shall not be strong." E.V. "there shall be nought in the power of thy hand."

PHILO

λουσιν ἄγειν, φέρειν, ἀρπάζειν, ὑβρίζειν, τιτρώσκειν, εἰς βλάβας, εἰς αἰκίας, εἰς πανωλεθρίαν, ὡς μηδὲν ἀφεθῆναι τῶν βλημάτων κωφόν, ἀλλ' εὐσκοπα καὶ εὐστοχα πάντα.

- 141 Ἐπάρατοι μὲν ἐν πόλεσι καὶ κώμαις, ἐπάρατοι δ' ἐν οἰκίαις καὶ ἐπαύλεσιν ἔσονται· ἐπάρατος μὲν ἡ πεδιάς καὶ ὅσα κατεβλήθη σπέρματα, ἐπάρατος δὲ ἡ βαθύγειος τῆς ὀρεινῆς καὶ ὅσα γένη δένδρων ἡμέρων· ἐπάρατοι τῶν θρεμμάτων αἱ ἀγέλαι, στερωθήσονται γὰρ πρὸς ἀγονίαν· ἐπάρατοι πάντες οἱ καρποί, τῷ γὰρ καιριωτάτῳ τῆς ἀκμῆς ἀνεμό-142 φθοροὶ γενήσονται. τὰ πλήρη ταμεία τροφῶν καὶ χρημάτων κενωθήσεται<sup>1</sup>. πόρος οὐδεὶς εὐδοήσει,<sup>2</sup> τέχνηαι πᾶσαι, πραγματεῖαι πολύτροποι, βίων ἰδέαι μυρίων τοῖς χρωμένοις οὐδὲν ὄφελος· ἀτελεῖς γὰρ
[432] αἱ τῶν σπουδαζομένων | ἐλπίδες ἔσονται καὶ συνόλως ὅτου ἐφάβονται διὰ πονηρῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων ἢ ἔργων, ὧν κεφαλὴ καὶ τέλος ἀπόλειψις θεραπείας θεοῦ· τὰ γὰρ ἀσεβείας καὶ παρανομίας ἐπίχειρα ταῦτα.

- 143 XXV. Καὶ πρὸς τούτοις αἱ σωματικαὶ νόσοι μέλος ἕκαστον καὶ μέρος ἰδίᾳ κατεργαζόμεναι καὶ διεσθίουσαι καὶ πάλιν ὅλα δι' ὅλων καταξαίνουσαι, πυρετοῖς, ρίγεσι, φθινάσι τηκεδόσι, ψώραῖς ἀγρίαις, <sup>1</sup> MSS. κενωθήσονται.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. εὐοδώσει.

---

<sup>a</sup> The next two sections are a development of Deut. xxviii.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 140-143

all who wish to ravish, harry, rob, assault, wound and deal out injuries, outrage and destruction. No shaft will fall lame or impotent ; a true eye and hand will carry them all to their mark.

<sup>a</sup> Cursed will they be in their cities and villages, <sup>141</sup> cursed in their houses and farm buildings. Cursed will be the field and all the seed dropped therein, cursed the fertile parts of the uplands and every kind of cultivated tree. Cursed their herds of cattle, barren without hope of increase, cursed all their fruits, blasted at the very height of their ripening. Their store-houses full of provisions and money will <sup>142</sup> become empty ; no profit-seeking trade will flourish ; all the crafts, the many-sided industries, the million ways of earning a livelihood, will prove useless to those who pursue them. Their hopes of attaining their ambition and in general everything which they take in hand will be frustrated by the evil practices or actions which their abandonment of God's service heads and consummates. For these are the wages of impiety and disobedience.

XXV. <sup>b</sup> Besides all this diseases of the body will <sup>143</sup> overpower and devour each separate limb and part, as well as tearing the whole frame right through with hot fits, cold fits, wasting consumption, malignant

16-19, the last part of § 142 interpreting "cursed shalt thou be in thy coming in and going out." Cf. his interpretation of that phrase in the Blessings 113. The last words are a close reminiscence of v. 20 "because of thy evil practices (πονηρὰ ἐπιτηδέυματα) and because thou hast forsaken (ἐγκατέλιπες) me."

<sup>b</sup> The bodily curses are mainly based with much expansion on Deut. xxviii. 22, 27, 35, and Lev. xxvi. 16. The terms ἰκτερος, σφακελίζω, τηκεδών come from Leviticus, and πυρετός, ῥίγος, ψώρα ἀγρία, ἔλκος from Deuteronomy.

PHILO

ἰκτέροις, σφακελίζουσιν ὀφθαλμοῖς,<sup>1</sup> ἔλκεσιν ὑποπύοις <καὶ> ἐρπηνώδεσι κατὰ πάσης χεομένοις τῆς δορᾶς, κακώσεσι τῶν ἐντοσθίων, ἀνατροπαῖς στο-μάχου, τῶν ἐν πνεύμονι πόρων ἀποφράξεις ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ εὐδοεῖν τὴν ἀναπνοήν. πάρεσις γλώσσης, κώφωσις ὤτων, πῆρωσις ὀφθαλμῶν, τῶν ἄλλων ἀμυδρότης αἰσθήσεων καὶ σύγχυσις, καίτοι δεινὰ 144 ὄντα, συγκρινόμενα βαρυτέροις οὐ φαίνεται δεινὰ,<sup>2</sup> τοῦ μὲν ἐν φλεψὶν αἵματος ἀποβαλόντος ὅσον ἦν ἐν αὐτῷ ζωτικόν, τοῦ δ' ἐν ἀρτηρίαις πνεύματος τὴν ἔξωθεν ἀπὸ τοῦ συμφυοῦς ἀέρος μηκέθ' ὁμοίως ἐπιδεχομένου σωτήριον κρᾶσιν, τῶν δὲ νεύρων 145 ἀνεθέντων καὶ χαλασθέντων· οἷς ἐπακολουθεῖ τῆς ἀρμονίας καὶ συμφωνίας τῶν μελῶν πάρεσις πρότερον πονηθέντων ἀλμυροῦ καὶ πάνυ πικροῦ φορᾶ ρεύματος εἴσω παραδυομένου καί, ὅποτε στενοῖς ἐγκατακλεισθείη πόροις εὐμαρεῖς διεξόδους οὐκ ἔχουσι, θλιβομένου τε καὶ θλίβοντος εἰς πικρῶν καὶ δυσυπομονήτων γένεσιν ἀλγηδόνων, ἐξ ὧν φύεται τὰ ποδαγρικὰ καὶ ἀρθριτικὰ πάθη καὶ νοσήματα, πρὸς ἃ σωτήριον οὐδὲν ἐπενοήθη φάρμακον, ἀλλ'

<sup>1</sup> So mss. and so apparently the best text of the LXX. Many authorities, however, have in Lev. xxvi. 16 τὸν ἰκτερα σφακελίζοντα τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς, in accordance with which Mangey corrected ὀφθαλμοῖς to -οῦς. Presumably this is more in accordance with the Hebrew, as the E.V. has "fever, that shall consume the eyes." But no instance is quoted of σφακελίζω as transitive.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn prints πάρεσις . . . δεινὰ as a parenthesis, holding that τοῦ μὲν ἐν φλεψὶν κτλ. continues the construction of the previous sentence. It seems to me quite unnecessary. The genitives absolute follow naturally on βαρυτέροις.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 143-145

scabs, jaundice, mortification <sup>a</sup> of the eyes, ulcers suppurating and creeping till they spread over the whole skin, dysentery, disorders of the intestine, obstruction of the passages in the lungs so that the respiration cannot travel properly.<sup>b</sup> If the tongue is crippled or the ears lose their hearing, or the eyes their sight, or the other senses are dulled or disorganized, we have conditions which though terrible in themselves lose their terrors if compared with 144 these graver symptoms, when the blood in the veins has lost its life-giving power and the breath in the bronchia can no longer receive a salutary fusion from its natural partner the air outside, and the nerves are relaxed and unstrung. These are followed by a 145 breaking up of the harmony and concord which unites the members. They have already laboured under the stream of the bitter briny rheumatic humour which steals within them, and when it is enclosed in narrow passages through which it has no easy outlet, undergoes and in its turn exerts a heavy pressure, producing bitter and almost intolerable pains. This again engenders affections of the feet and joints <sup>c</sup> and distempers for which no curative remedy is known, <sup>a</sup> This seems the ordinary meaning of the word, though perhaps not very suitable here. Cohn "inflammation." Perhaps simply "wasting away," which seems to be the meaning of the word in Deut. xxviii. 32 οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ σου βλέπονται σφακελίζοντες (E.V. "look, and fail with longing"). But Philo is quoting from the LXX, and it is perhaps useless to inquire what meaning he put upon it.

<sup>b</sup> Or "that the tongue is crippled . . . are conditions," i.e. disability of the senses is a necessary but minor accompaniment (the only one actually mentioned is blindness (ἀορασία), v. 32).

<sup>c</sup> Based on v. 35 "The Lord smite thee on the legs and on the knees."

PHILO

- 146 ἔστιν ἀνθρωπίαις ἐπινοίαις ἀνίατα. ταῦτα ὄρωντες ἔνιοι καταπλαγήσονται, πῶς οἱ πρὸ μικροῦ πίονες εὖσαρκοί τε καὶ εὐεξία μάλιστα θάλλοντες οὕτως αἰφνίδιον ἐκτακέντες ῥικνοὶ γεγόνασιν ἴνες αὐτὸ μόνον καὶ λεπτὴ δορά, καὶ πῶς γυναῖκες ἀβροδίατοι καὶ πανάπαλοι διὰ τὴν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας συναυξηθεῖσαν τρυφὴν ὑπὸ κακώσεως δεινῆς ἅμα ταῖς ψυχαῖς καὶ τὰ σώματα ἐξηγγρίωνται.<sup>1</sup>
- 147 Τότε δὴ τότε διώξονται μὲν ἐχθροὶ καὶ μάχαιρα ἐκδικήσει δίκη, οἱ δ' εἰς τὰς πόλεις καταφεύ-γοντες, ὅταν ἐν ἀσφαλεῖ γεγενῆσθαι νομίσωσιν, ἐλπίδος ἀπάτη φενακισθέντες ἡβηδὸν ἀπολοῦνται,
- 148 προκαταδύντων<sup>2</sup> ἐνέδραις ἐχθρῶν. XXVI. κἂν <εἰ> ἐπὶ τούτοις μὴ σωφρονίζονται πλαγιάζοντες καὶ τὰς ἐπ' ἀλήθειαν ἀγούσας εὐθυτενεῖς ὁδοὺς ἐκτρεπόμενοι, δειλία καὶ φόβος ταῖς ψυχαῖς αὐτῶν ἐνιδρυθήσεται, καὶ φεύξονται μὲν οὐδενὸς διώκοντος, φήμαις δὲ οἶα φιλεῖ ψευδέσι πεσοῦνται [433] προτροπάδην, φύλλου τε κτύπος | κουφότατος δι'

<sup>1</sup> Cohn places the paragraph after the next sentence. But the break is surely here, where we pass from the bodily afflictions to those of war.

<sup>2</sup> So mss. Cohn προκαταδύντες = "because they have fallen into the snares before they get there"? The mss. reading seems to me to give a more natural interpretation of the LXX in Lev. xxvi. 25 "ye shall flee to your cities and I will send out death to you and ye shall be delivered (or betrayed, παραδώσεσθε) into the hands of your enemies." The enemy have access to the cities through accomplices, as the Thebans

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 145-148

nor can human ingenuity find any way of healing them. Such sights will make people ask in amazement how it is that persons who but now were plump and well clothed with flesh in the full bloom of robust health have so suddenly wasted away and shrunk into nothing but a set of sinews with a thin coating of skin ; and how women who have lived in ease and comfort, the dainty product of the luxury that has grown up with them from their earliest years,<sup>a</sup> have become wizened<sup>b</sup> in body as well as in soul through the cruel ravages of disease.<sup>c</sup> 146

Then too the enemy will pursue and the sword will exact justice. They will fly to their cities and think that they have found safety, but a false hope has deceived them ; the enemy will be there already lying in wait, and they will perish wholesale.<sup>d</sup> XXVI. 148
And if with all this they fail to learn wisdom and still go crookedly<sup>e</sup> away from the straight paths which lead to truth, cowardice and fear will be established in their souls. They will fly when no man pursues ; rumours false as they so often are will send them falling headlong, and the lightest sound of a leaf borne through <sup>a</sup> This looks like a reminiscence of v. 56 "She that is tender (ἀπαλή) and delicate (τρυφερά) among you whose foot has not attempted to go upon the ground because of her tenderness and delicacy," though the context is totally different. πανάπαλοι is Homeric, cf. Odyssey xiii. 223.

<sup>b</sup> More literally "have grown wild," which in English hardly answers to the description.

<sup>c</sup> For the medical use of κάκωσις for the consequences of disease see L. & S.

<sup>d</sup> Lev. xxvi. 25.

<sup>e</sup> So in Lev. xxvi. 21, 23, 27 ἐὰν πορεύησθε πλαγιάζοντες. E.V. "walk contrary to me."

---

had in Plataea (Thuc. ii. 22). The E.V., which has "pestilence" instead of "death," gives a different picture.

PHILO

ἀέρος φερομένου<sup>1</sup> τοσαύτην ἀγωνίαν καὶ πτοίαν ἐργάσεται, ὅσῃν ὁ τραχύτατος πόλεμος ἐκ δυνατωτέρων ἐχθρῶν, ὡς καὶ τέκνα γονέων καὶ γονεῖς τέκνων καὶ ἀδελφούς ἀδελφῶν ὑπεριδεῖν, ἐκ μὲν τῆς ἀλλήλων ἐπιβοηθείας ἄλωσιν προσδοκήσαντας, σωτηρίαν δ' ἐκ τοῦ ἑαυτοὺς ἀποδιδράσκειν 149 ἕκαστον. πονηρῶν δὲ ἀνθρώπων ἀτελεῖς ἐλπίδες· μᾶλλον γὰρ ἢ οὐχ ἦττον οἱ διαπεφευγέναι δόξαντες τῶν προκαταληφθέντων ἀλώσονται. κἂν διαλάθωσι μέντοι τινές, ἐφεδρείαν δ' ἔξουσι τῶν φύσει πολεμίων· οὗτοι δὲ εἰσιν ἀγριώτεροι<sup>2</sup> θῆρες ἐξ ἑαυ-τῶν εὐοπλοῦντες, οὓς ὁ θεὸς ἅμα τῇ πρώτῃ γενέσει τοῦ παντὸς ἐδημιούργει πρὸς ἀνθρώπων τῶν μὲν δυναμένων νοθετεῖσθαι φόβον τῶν δὲ ἀνιάτως 150 ἐχόντων ἀπαραίτητον δίκην. ἀπιστήσουσι μὲν οἱ θεασάμενοι τὰς αὐτοῖς θεμελίους ἀναιρεθείσας πό-λεις, εἰ πώποτε ὠκίσθησαν· ἐν εἶδει δὲ παροιμίας θήσονται τὰς ἐκ λαμπρῶν εὐτυχημάτων ἐξαπιναίους κακοπραγίας, ὅσαι καὶ ἀνεγράφησαν καὶ εἰσιν 151 ἄγραφοι. παρελεύσονται καὶ μέχρι σπλάγχχνων αἰ-τηκεδόνες ἀθυμίας τε καὶ ἀδημονίας ἐμποιοῦσαι σὺν ἐκθλίψει. ζωῆν ἀνίδρυτον καὶ κρεμαμένην ὥσπερ

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn (in translation) for mss. φερόμενος, cf. LXX φωνῆ φύλλου φερομένου.

<sup>2</sup> So mss. Cohn ἀγριώτατοι.

<sup>a</sup> Or "agitation." πτοία, though connected by Philo with fear, is applicable to other kinds of excitement. See note, vol. vii. p. 612.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xxvi. 36, where Philo perhaps read with some mss. δειλίαν for δουλείαν (E.V. "faintness"). The rumours seem to be his interpretation of the "driven leaf."

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxvi. 37. LXX καὶ ὑπερόψεται ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ ὡσεὶ ἐν πολέμῳ. E.V. "And they shall stumble one upon another, as it were before the sword."

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 148-151

the air will cause as much trepidation and quaking<sup>a</sup> as the most savage war waged by mightier enemies.<sup>b</sup> So children will take no thought for parents nor parents for children, nor brother for brother, expecting that mutual help will lead to destruction, and flight, each man for himself, to salvation.<sup>c</sup> But the hopes of the 149 wicked are not fulfilled; those who imagine they have escaped will suffer worse or at any rate no better fate than those who were captured earlier.<sup>d</sup> Further if some elude their captors they will have to meet a reserve force of their natural enemies. These are wild beasts more ferocious than men, formidably equipped with their native weapons, whom God when He first made the universe created to put fear into those who could take the warning and to punish inexorably the incorrigible.<sup>e</sup> Those 150 who behold the cities with their very foundations demolished will disbelieve that they were ever before inhabited,<sup>f</sup> and all the calamities, whether described in the law or not,<sup>g</sup> which suddenly succeeded the bright days of prosperity, will become to them like a proverb.<sup>h</sup> The wasting will pass into their very bowels 151 and wring them with despair and sore distress; life will be made unstable and suspended as it were to

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxvi. 39 "Those who are left of you shall be destroyed" (E.V. "pine away").

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xxvi. 22.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxvi. 31, 32 "I will lay your cities waste . . . and your enemies who dwell in it shall wonder at it."

<sup>d</sup> Deut. xxviii. 61. E.V. "Every plague, which is not written in the book of the law," to which the LXX adds "and every one that is written."

<sup>e</sup> Deut. xxviii. 37. E.V. "Thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword." LXX ἔσει ἐν αἰνίγματι ("riddle") καὶ παραβολῇ καὶ διηγήματι. Philo sums up the three in παροιμία.

ἐξ ἀγχόνης ἐργάσονται φόβου διαδοχαὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτωρ τὴν ψυχὴν ἄνω καὶ κάτω κλονοῦσαι,<sup>1</sup> ὡς πρωίας μὲν ἐσπέραν ἐσπέρας δὲ ὄρθρον εὔχου-σθαι διὰ τὰς καὶ ἐγρηγορότων κακώσεις ἐμφανείς καὶ κοιμωμένων ἐξ ὄνειράτων ἀποτροπαίους φαν-τασίας.

152 Ὁ μὲν ἔπηλυς ἄνω ταῖς εὐτυχίαις μετέωρος ἀρ-θρῆς περίβλεπτος ἔσται, θαυμαζόμενος καὶ μακα-ριζόμενος ἐπὶ δυσὶ τοῖς καλλίστοις, τῷ τε αὐτομολῆσαι πρὸς θεὸν καὶ τῷ γέρας λαβεῖν οἰκειότατον τὴν ἐν οὐρανῷ τάξιν βεβαίαν, ἣν οὐ θέμις εἰπεῖν, ὃ δ' εὐπατρίδης παρακόψιας τὸ νόμισμα τῆς εὐγενείας ὑποσυρήσεται κατωτάτω πρὸς αὐτὸν τάρταρον καὶ βαθὺ σκότος ἐνεχθεῖς, ἵνα ταῦτα ὄρωντες τὰ παραδείγματα πάντες ἄνθρωποι σω-φρονίζωνται, μανθάνοντες ὅτι τὴν ἐκ δυσγενείας<sup>2</sup> ἀρετὴν φυομένην<sup>3</sup> θεὸς ἀσπάζεται, τὰς μὲν ρίζας ἐὼν χαίρειν, τὸ δὲ στελεχωθὲν ἔρνος, ὅτι μετέβαλεν ἡμερωθὲν πρὸς εὐκαρπίαν, ἀποδεχόμενος.

153 XXVII. Οὕτως καθάπερ ὑπὸ πυρὸς δαπανη-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κλίνουσι or κατακλινούσιν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δυσμενείας.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. φθιομένην, φθιομένην and A οὐ φθειρομένην (so Mangey).

<sup>a</sup> For this section see Deut. xxviii. 65-67. In the last words "for the fear of thy heart which thou shalt fear, and the sights of thy eyes which thou shalt see," Philo takes the "fears" to apply to the morning and the "sights" (i.e. dreams) to the evening or night.

<sup>b</sup> For this section see Deut. xxviii. 43 "The stranger (προσ-ῆλυτος) within thee shall mount higher and higher (ἄνω ἄνω) and thou shalt descend lower and lower (κάτω κάτω)." Philo's persistent determination to make προσῆλυτος = "prose-lyte" leads him here as elsewhere to ignore the context, which a halter by one terror succeeding another, day and night, hustling the soul up and down, so that in the morning they will pray for evening and in the evening for morning through the palpable miseries of their waking hours and the horrible dreams which appear to them in sleep.<sup>a</sup>

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 151-153

The proselyte exalted aloft by his happy lot will be 152 gazed at from all sides, marvelled at and held blessed by all for two things of highest excellence, that he came over to the camp of God and that he has won a prize best suited to his merits, a place in heaven firmly fixed, greater than words dare describe, while the nobly born who has falsified the sterling of his high lineage will be dragged right down and carried into Tartarus itself and profound darkness. Thus may all men seeing these examples be brought to a wiser mind and learn that God welcomes the virtue which springs from ignoble birth, that He takes no account of the roots but accepts the full-grown stem, because it has been changed from a weed into fruitfulness.<sup>b</sup>

XXVII. <sup>c</sup>When the cities have been thus con- 153

continues "he shall lend to thee and thou shalt not lend to him." The "place in heaven" (perhaps better "high as heaven") does not of course refer to an after life but merely represents the emphatic ἄνω ἄνω, as "Tartarus" the κάτω κάτω.

<sup>c</sup> The sections that follow are mainly based on Lev. xxvi. 33-35 (cf. v. 43) "your land shall be desolate and your cities shall be desolate. Then the land shall enjoy (εὐδοκήσει) its sabbaths in the days of its desolation . . . it shall keep sabbaths, which it kept not among your sabbaths, when ye dwelt in it." On the word "enjoy" or "be well pleased" Philo builds a denunciation of the neglect of the sabbatical year as a wrong to the land, somewhat in the same spirit as his discourse on kindness to plants, De Virt. 155-160, and to the land, Spec. Leg. iv. 215 ff.

PHILO

θειῶν τῶν πόλεων καὶ τῆς χώρας ἐρημωθείσης, ἄρξεται ποτε διαπνεῖν καὶ ἀνακύπτειν ἢ πολλὰ γυμνασθεῖσα καὶ τραχηλισθεῖσα γῆ πρὸς οἰκητόρων [434] ἀφορήτου βίας, οἱ τὰς παρθένους | ἑβδομάδας ὑπερορίους καὶ τῆς χώρας καὶ τῆς αὐτῶν διανοίας ἀπήλασαν. μόνας γὰρ ἢ τό γε ἀσφαλέστερον εἰπεῖν πρώτας ἀνέδειξεν ἑορτὰς ἢ φύσις τὰς ἑβδομάδας ἡμερῶν τε καὶ ἑνιαυτῶν, πρὸς ἀνάπαυλαν ἀνθρώποις μὲν τὰς ἡμερῶν, τῇ δὲ χώρα τὰς ἑνιαυτῶν.
 154 οἱ δ' ὅλον τοῦτον παρακαλυψάμενοι τὸν νόμον, τοὺς ἄλας, τὰς σπονδάς, τὸν ἐλέου βωμόν, τὴν κοινήν ἐστίαν, ἐξ ὧν φιλία καὶ ὁμόνοια ἡρμόζετο—πάντα γὰρ δι' ἑβδομάδος καὶ ἑβδομάς—, ἐβάρυναν μὲν ἀνθρώπους ἀσθενεστέρους οἱ δυνατώτεροι συνεχέσι καὶ ἀδιαστάτοις ἐπιτάγμασιν, ἐβάρυναν δὲ καὶ τὰς ἀρούρας αἰεὶ κέρδη μεταδιώκοντες ἐκ πλεονεξιῶν ἄδικα, ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις ἐφιστάντες<sup>1</sup> ἀχαλίνους καὶ 155 ἀδίκους ὄρμας εἰς τὸ ἀκόρεστον. ἀντὶ γὰρ τοῦ παρασχεῖν μὲν ἀνθρώποις, κατὰ τὸν ἀψευδέστατον λόγον ἀδελφοῖς, ὧν μία μήτηρ ἢ κοινὴ φύσις, τὰς προστεταγμένας δι' ἐξ ἡμερῶν ἐκεχειρίας, παρέχειν δὲ καὶ τῇ χώρᾳ τὰς δι' ἐξ ἑνιαυτῶν ἀνέσεις μήτε 156 σποραῖς μήτε φυτεῖαις βαρύνοντας, ἵνα μὴ καμάτοις ἐπαλλήλοις ἀπαγορεύσῃ, ἀμελήσαντες τουτωνὶ τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιστάντες.

<sup>a</sup> On these symbols of peace see App. p. 457. The general meaning is that anyone capable of violating the Sabbath and sabbatical year is capable of any inhumanity.

<sup>b</sup> Or "all things," but see App. p. 458.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "are Seven." On this, which seems to me to go

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 153-156

sumed by fire and the country made desolate, the land will begin to take breath and raise its head—that land so long roughly handled in the grip of the intolerable violence shown by the inhabitants, who chased the virgin Sevens into banishment both from the country and from their thoughts. For the sole, or to speak more cautiously, the chief feasts appointed by nature are the recurrence of the sevenths in days and years, days to give rest to men, years to the country. But they have closed their eyes to the 154 whole of this law, to the salt, to the libations, to the altar of mercy, to the common hearth,<sup>a</sup> all which have served as bonds of friendship and goodwill, all of them <sup>b</sup> produced by Seven and embraced in Seven.<sup>c</sup> On men they have laid a heavy burden, the stronger oppressing the weaker, by making the tasks which they impose continuous and unbroken: on the fields, by ever pursuing unjust gains in the coveteousness of their hearts, lust at the base and on it impulses to action unjust and unrestrained, which never can be satisfied.<sup>d</sup> Instead of granting to men who in 155 absolute truth were their brethren, children of one mother their common nature, the appointed holiday after every six days, and to the land after every six years its time of release from the burden of sowing and planting lest it become exhausted by repeated 156 beyond the other phrases in which Philo extols the mystical virtues of Seven, see App. p. 458.

<sup>a</sup> The translation suggests a distinction between ἐπιθυμία, a desire not yet translated into an active impulse, and ὄρμη. But I have not seen anything either in Philo or S.V.F. to support it. Cohn translates "letting their desires have free course in an unbridled and wicked way," but I do not understand what he makes of ἐφιστάντες. Perhaps some other correction should be made for the mss. ἐπιστάντες, such as ἐπιχάλασαντες.

PHILO

χρηστῶν παραινήσεων εἰς ἡμερότητα προκαλου-μένων τὰ μὲν σώματα καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς ὧν ἐδύναντο πάντων ἀνάγκαις ἀτρύτοις ἐπίεσαν, τῆς βαθυγείου δὲ τὴν ἰσχὺν ὑπετέμοντο φοραῖς ταῖς ὑπὲρ δύναμιν ἀπλήστως προσοδομένοι καὶ δασμοῖς οὐκ ἐτησίοις 157 μόνου ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐφημέροις ὄλην δι' ὄλων ἐκτραχηλίζοντες. ὑπὲρ ὧν οἱ μὲν τὰς λεχθείσας ἀρὰς καὶ δίκας ἀναπλήσουσιν, ἢ δ' ἐκνευρισθεῖσα χώρα καὶ μυρίας ὑπομείνασα κακώσεις, ἀποφορτισαμένη τὸ τῶν ἀσεβῶν οἰκητόρων ἄχθος, ἐπελαφρισθήσεται· καὶ ὅταν ἐν κύκλῳ περιβλεψαμένη μηδένα θεάσῃται τῶν καθελόντων αὐτῆς τὸ μεγαλαύχημα καὶ ἀξίωμα, ἀλλὰ κενὰς μὲν αὐτῆς τὰς ἀγορὰς θορύβων καὶ πολέμων καὶ ἀδικημάτων, πλήρεις δὲ ἡσυχίας καὶ εἰρήνης καὶ δικαιοσύνης, ἀνηβήσει καὶ ἐπακμάσει καὶ τοὺς τῶν ἱερῶν ἐβδομάδων καιροὺς 158 ἐορτώδεις ἡρεμήσει καὶ ἀναπαύσεται συλλεγομένη καθάπερ ἀθλητῆς προηγωνισμένος δύναμιν. εἶθ' οἷα μήτηρ φιλόστοργος οἰκτιεῖται μὲν υἱοὺς καὶ θυγατέρας οὓς ἀπέβαλεν, οἷ καὶ ἀποθανόντες καὶ ζῶντες ἔτι μᾶλλον ὀδύναι τοῖς τοκεῦσιν ἐγένοντο· πάλιν δὲ νεάσασα εὐφορήσει καὶ τέξεται γενεὰν ἀνεπίληπτον, ἐπανόρθωμα τῆς προτέρας· ἢ γὰρ [435] ἔρημος, ἣ φησιν ὁ προφήτης, εὐτεκνός | τε καὶ πολύπαις, ὅπερ λόγιον καὶ ἐπὶ ψυχῆς ἀλληγορεῖται.
 159 πολλὴ μὲν γὰρ ὅταν ἦ, παθῶν καὶ κακιῶν ἀνά-πλεως, οἷα περικεχυμένων αὐτῇ τέκνων, ἡδονῶν, ἐπιθυμιῶν, ἀφροσύνης, ἀκολασίας, ἀδικίας, ἀσθενεί καὶ νοσεῖ καὶ ἐπικῆρως ἔχουσα θανατᾶ, στερω-412

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 156-159

labours, they set at nought their kindly admonitions which call to gentleness. They oppressed the souls and bodies of all whom they could with perpetual hardships and undermined the strength of the deep soiled field while they accumulated wealth insatiably by levying tributes greater than it could bear and broke it down utterly through its whole extent by tolls exacted not only annually but daily. For this they 157 themselves will receive the full measure of curses and penalties named above, but the land unstrung by the numberless mishandlings which it has undergone will now be relieved, disburdened of the heavy weight of its impious inhabitants. And when she looks around and sees none of the destroyers of her former pride and high name, sees her market places void of turmoil and war and wrongdoing, but full of tranquillity and peace and justice, she will renew her youth and bloom and take her rest calm and serene during the festal seasons of the sacred Seven, rallying her strength like a wrestler after his first bout. Then like 158 a fond mother she will pity the sons and daughters whom she has lost, who in death and still more when in life were a grief to their parents. Young once more she will be fruitful and bear a blameless generation to redress the one that went before. For she that is desolate, says the prophet,<sup>a</sup> will have children many and fine, a saying which also is an allegory of the history of the soul. For when the soul is "many," 159 full that is of passions and vices with her children, pleasures, desires, folly, incontinence, injustice, gathered around her, she is feeble and sick and <sup>a</sup> Isaiah liv. 1 "for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife." LXX τῆς ἐχούσης τὸν ἄνδρα.

PHILO

- θεῖσα δὲ καὶ ἀγονήσασα τούτων ἢ καὶ ἀποβαλοῦσα ἀθρόα γίνεται μὲν ἐκ μεταβολῆς ἀγνή παρθένος, 160 παραδεξαμένη δὲ τὸν θεῖον σπόρον διαπλάττει καὶ ζωογονεῖ περιμαχῆτους φύσεις, θαυμαστὰ κάλλη, φρόνησιν, ἀνδρείαν, σωφροσύνην, δικαιοσύνην, ὁσιότητα, εὐσέβειαν, τὰς ἄλλας ἀρετὰς τε καὶ εὐπαθείας, ὧν οὐ μόνον ἡ γένεσις εὐτεκνος<sup>1</sup> ἀγαθόν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ προσδοκία τῆς γενέσεως ἐλπίδι προγανοῦσα 161 τὴν ἀσθένειαν.<sup>2</sup> ἐλπίς δὲ χαρὰ πρὸ χαρᾶς ἐστίν, εἰ καὶ ἐνδεῆς παρὰ τελείαν, ἀλλά τοι τῆς ἐπιγυνομένης καθ' ἐκάτερα βελτίων, ὅτι τε τὸ αὐχμηρὸν ἀναχαλᾶ καὶ λιπαίνει τῶν φροντίδων καὶ ὅτι φθάνουσα τὸ μέλλον καὶ πλήρες ἀγαθὸν εὐαγγελίζεται.
- 162 XXVIII. Τὰς μὲν οὖν ἀρὰς καὶ τιμωρίας, ἃς ὑπομένειν ἄξιον τοὺς τῶν ἱερῶν νόμων δικαιοσύνης καὶ εὐσεβείας ὑπερορῶντας καὶ ταῖς πολυθέοις δόξαις ὑπαχθέντας, ὧν ἀθεότης τὸ τέλος, λήθη τῆς συγγενοῦς καὶ πατρίου διδασκαλίας, ἣν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐπαιδεύθησαν τὴν τοῦ ἐνὸς φύσιν τὸν ἀνω-τάτω νομίζειν θεόν, ᾧ δεῖ μόνῳ προσκεκληρῶσθαι

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey and Cohn for MSS. εὐτεκνον. I do not feel sure about this correction. For though εὐτεκνον ἀγαθόν would be a strange expression, the position of εὐτεκνος is also strange.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn finally accepted Mangey's correction to διάνοιαν, but see note c.

---

<sup>a</sup> Though starting from the verse in Isaiah, the allegory of the soul is more concerned with 1 Sam. ii. 5 (Hannah's song) "yea, the barren hath borne seven; and she that hath many children languisheth. The Lord killeth, and maketh alive," a passage quoted to the same effect Quod Deus 10, 414

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 159-162

dangerously near to death.<sup>a</sup> But when she has become barren and ceases to produce these children or indeed has cast them out bodily she is transformed into a pure virgin.<sup>b</sup> Then receiving the divine seed 160 she moulds it into shape and brings forth new life in forms of precious quality and marvellous loveliness, wisdom, courage, temperance, justice, holiness, piety and the other virtues and good emotions. Not only is it well that these goodly children should be brought to the birth, but good also is the expectation of this birth, the forecast cheering the soul's weakness<sup>c</sup> with hope. Hope is joy before joy, falling short of the 161 perfection of the other yet superior to its successor in two ways, one that it relaxes with its unction the aridity of our cares, the other that it goes before as a harbinger of the plenitude of good which is to be.<sup>d</sup>

XXVIII. I have now described without any 162 reservation the curses and penalties which they will deservedly suffer who disregard the holy laws of justice and piety, who have been seduced by the polytheistic creeds which finally lead to atheism and have forgotten the teaching of their race and of their fathers, in which they were trained from their earliest years to acknowledge the One in substance,<sup>e</sup> the supreme God, to whom alone all

De Mut. 143. Here the LXX has ἡ πολλή ἐν τέκνοις ἡσθένησε. ὁ κύριος θανατοῖ καὶ ζωογονεῖ, in which the phrases ἡ πολλή for πολλὰ ἔχουσα τέκνα, ἡσθένησε, ζωογονεῖ, and perhaps θανατοῖ in θανατᾶ are echoed by Philo.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Cher. 50.

<sup>c</sup> Another echo of ἡσθένησε. The substitution of διάνοιαν would miss this point.

<sup>d</sup> Compare the glorification of hope, §§ 7-14 above and De Mut. 157 ff., where also the phrase χαίρειν πρὸ χαρᾶς occurs.

<sup>e</sup> Lit. the "nature of the One." The theological use of "substance" is, I think, much the same.

PHILO

τοὺς ἄπλαστον ἀλήθειαν ἀντὶ πεπλασμένων μύθων μεταδιώκοντας, οὐδὲν ὑποστειλόμενος δεδήλωκα.
 163 ἂν μέντοι μὴ ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ δέξωνται τὰς δυνάμεις<sup>1</sup> μᾶλλον ἢ νοθεσία καὶ καταιδεσθέντες ὅλη ψυχῇ μεταβάλωσι, κακίσαντες μὲν αὐτοὺς τῆς πλάνης, ἐξαγορεύσαντες δὲ καὶ ὁμολογήσαντες ὅσα ἡμαρτον καθ' αὐτοὺς διανοίᾳ κεκαθαρμένη τὸ πρῶτον εἰς τὸ τοῦ συνειδότος ἀψευδὲς καὶ ἀνύπουλον, ἔπειτα καὶ γλώττη πρὸς βελτίωσιν τῶν ἀκούοντων, εὐμενείας τεύξονται τῆς τοῦ σωτήρος καὶ ἰλεω θεοῦ τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐξαίρετον παρασχομένου καὶ μεγί-στην δωρεάν, τὴν πρὸς τὸν αὐτοῦ λόγου συγγένειαν, ἀφ' οὗ καθάπερ ἀρχετύπου γέγονεν ὁ ἀνθρώπινος 164 νοῦς· κἂν γὰρ ἐν ἐσχατιαῖς ὧσι γῆς δουλεύοντες παρὰ τοῖς αἰχμαλώτους αὐτοὺς ἀπάγουσιν ἐχθροῖς, ὥσπερ ἀφ' ἐνὸς συνθήματος ἡμέρα μιᾷ πάντες ἐλευθερωθήσονται, τῆς ἀθρόας πρὸς ἀρετὴν μεταβολῆς κατάπληξιν ἐργασαμένης τοῖς δεσπόταις· μεθήσονται γὰρ αὐτοὺς αἰδεσθέντες κρειττόνων 165 ἄρχειν. XXIX. ὅταν δὲ τύχωσι τῆς ἀπροσδοκῆτου ταύτης ἐλευθερίας, οἱ πρὸ μικροῦ σποράδες ἐν Ἑλλάδι καὶ βαρβάρῳ κατὰ νήσους καὶ κατὰ ἠπείρους [436] ἀναστάντες | ὁρμῇ μιᾷ πρὸς ἓνα συντενοῦσιν<sup>2</sup> ἀλλα-χόθεν ἄλλοι τὸν ἀποδειχθέντα χῶρον, ξεναγούμενοι

<sup>1</sup> The word seems impossible as it stands. Cohn suggested δυσμενείας, but later rejected it and inclined to Mangey's ἐπανατάσεις. But the curses at this point are not threats, but actual punishments. If anything of this kind, κολάσεις. But τὰς <κολαστηρίους> δυνάμεις would not be out of place, cf. De Fibr. 32 τὰς κολαστηρίους δυνάμεις πῶς ἐπιφερομένας

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 162-165

must belong who follow truth unfeigned instead of mythical figments. <sup>a</sup> If however they accept these 163 chastisements as a warning rather than as intending their perdition, if shamed into a whole-hearted conversion, they reproach themselves for going thus astray, and make a full confession and acknowledgement of all their sin,<sup>b</sup> first within themselves with a mind so purged that their conscience is sincere and free from lurking taint, secondly with their tongues to bring their hearers to a better way, then they will find favour with God the Saviour, the Merciful, who has bestowed on mankind that peculiar and chiefest gift of kinship with His own Word, from whom as its archetype the human mind was created. <sup>c</sup> For even though they dwell in the uttermost parts 164 of the earth, in slavery to those who led them away captive, one signal, as it were, one day will bring liberty to all. This conversion in a body to virtue will strike awe into their masters, who will set them free, ashamed to rule over men better than themselves. XXIX. When they have gained this unexpected 165 liberty, those who but now were scattered in Greece and the outside world over islands and continents will arise and post from every side with one impulse to the one appointed place, guided in their pilgrimage

<sup>a</sup> For the restoration see Lev. xxvi. 40 ff. and Deut. xxx. 1 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xxvi. 40 "they shall confess (ἐξαγορεύσουσι) their sins."

<sup>c</sup> For this and the next section see Deut. xxx. 3-5.

---

οἴσομεν ; De Conf. 171 αἱ κολαστήριοι (sc. δυνάμεις)· ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἡ κόλασις οὐκ ἐπιζήμιον, ἀμαρτημάτων οὐσα κώλυσις καὶ ἐπανόρθωσις. Though κολαστηρίους can hardly be understood here, it may have fallen out.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. συντείνουσι.

PHILO

πρὸς τινος θειοτέρας ἢ κατὰ φύσιν ἀνθρωπίνην ὄψεως, ἀδήλου μὲν ἑτέροις, μόνοις δὲ τοῖς ἀνασω-166 ζομένοις ἐμφανούς, τρισὶ χρησάμενοι παρακλήτοις τῶν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα καταλλαγῶν, ἐνὶ μὲν ἐπιεικείᾳ καὶ χρηστότητι τοῦ παρακαλουμένου συγ-γνώμην πρὸ τιμωρίας ἀεὶ τιθέντος, δευτέρῳ δὲ τῇ τῶν ἀρχηγῶν τοῦ ἔθνους ὁσιότητι, ὅτι ταῖς ἀφειμέναις σωμάτων ψυχαῖς ἄπλαστον καὶ γυμνήν ἐνδεικνύμενοι πρὸς τὸν ἄρχοντα θεραπείαν τὰς ὑπὲρ υἰῶν καὶ θυγατέρων ἰκετείας οὐκ ἀτελεῖς εἰώθασι ποιῆσθαι, γέρας αὐτοῖς παρέχοντος τοῦ πατρὸς τὸ 167 ἐπήκοον ἐν εὐχαῖς, τρίτῳ δὲ δι' ὃ μάλιστα καὶ ἡ τῶν λεχθέντων εὐμένεια φθάνει προαπαντῶσα, τοῦτο δὲ ἐστὶ βελτίωσις τῶν ἀγομένων εἰς σπονδὰς καὶ συμβάσεις, οἳ μόλις ἐξ ἀνοδίας εἰς ὁδὸν ἐδυνήθησαν ἔλθειν, ἧς τὸ πέρας οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἢ εὐαρεστεῖν 168 τῷ θεῷ καθάπερ υἱὸς πατρί. παραγενομένων δὲ πολιστήσονται πάλιν αἱ ἐρείπιοι γενόμεναι πρὸ μικροῦ καὶ ἡ ἔρημος οἰκισθήσεται καὶ ἡ στείρω-θείσα γῆ μεταβαλεῖ πρὸς εὐγονίαν· αἱ τε πατέρων καὶ προγόνων εὐτυχίαι βραχὺ μέρος εἶναι νομι-σθήσονται διὰ τὰς ἀφθόνοους τῶν ἐν χερσὶ περιου-

---

<sup>a</sup> These remarkable words are regarded by Cohn (Introduction to translation, p. 382) as a somewhat obscure allusion to the Jewish expectation of a personal Messiah. But need they indicate more than a belief that in the second deliverance the nation would be guided as they were in the first by the Cloud in which was a θεία ὄψις flashing rays of fire, Mos. ii. 254? Cf. also the description of the Burning Bush, Mos. i. 66.

<sup>b</sup> A special sense of ἀνασώζομαι, see L. & S.

<sup>c</sup> Or "free from the complications (ἄπλαστον) and wrappings (γυμνή) of the body."

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 165-168

by a vision divine and superhuman<sup>a</sup> unseen by others but manifest to them as they pass from exile to their home.<sup>b</sup> Three intercessors they have to 166 plead for their reconciliation with the Father. One is the clemency and kindness of Him to whom they appeal, who ever prefers forgiveness to punishment. The second is the holiness of the founders of the race because with souls released from their bodies they show forth in that naked simplicity<sup>c</sup> their devotion to their Ruler and cease not to make supplications for their sons and daughters, supplications not made in vain, because the Father grants to them the privilege that their prayers should be heard.<sup>d</sup> The third is one which more than 167 anything else moves the loving kindness of the other two to come forward so readily, and that is the reformation working in those who are being brought to make a covenant of peace, those who after much toil have been able to pass from the pathless wild to the road which has no other goal but to find favour with God, as sons may with their father. When they have arrived, the cities which 168 but now lay in ruins will be cities once more; the desolate land will be inhabited; the barren will change into fruitfulness; all the prosperity of their fathers and ancestors will seem a tiny fragment, so lavish will be the abundant riches in their posses-

<sup>a</sup> This is presumably founded on Lev. xxvi. 42 "I will remember my covenant with Abraham . . . and with Isaac . . . and with Jacob." But the idea of the departed saints acting as intercessors, which Cohn l.c. notes as a genuinely Jewish idea, is, I think, unique in Philo. Indeed he rarely if ever suggests any conscious activity on their part. The nearest approaches to it which I have noted are in De Sac. 5, Quis Rerum 276 and Mos. ii. 288.

PHILO

σίας, αἱ καθάπερ <ἀπ'> ἀενάων πηγῶν τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ χαρίτων ῥέουσai βαθὺν πλοῦτον ἰδίᾳ τε ἐκάστῳ καὶ πᾶσι κοινῇ περιποιήσουσι φθόνου κρείττονα.

169 μεταβολὴ δὲ πάντων ἐξαπιναίως ἔσται. τρέψει γὰρ ὁ θεὸς τὰς ἀρὰς ἐπὶ τοὺς <τῶν> μετανενοηκότων ἐχθρούς, οἷτινες κακοπραγίαις τοῦ ἔθνους ἐφήδοντο κατακερτομοῦντες καὶ ἐπιχλευάζοντες, ὡς αὐτοὶ μὲν ἀκαθαίρετον ἔξοντες κλήρον<sup>1</sup> εὐτυχίας, ὃν παισὶ καὶ ἐγγόνοις κατὰ διαδοχὴν ἀπολείψειν ἤλπισαν, αἰεὶ δὲ ἐποψόμενοι τοὺς ἀντιπάλους ἐν βεβαίῳ καὶ ἀκλινεῖ δυστυχίᾳ ταμειυθη-

170 σομένη καὶ ταῖς ἔπειτα γενεαῖς, ὑπὸ φρενοβλαβείας οὐ συνιέντες ὅτι καὶ τῆς πρὸ μικροῦ λαμπρότητος ἀπέλαυσαν οὐ δι' αὐτοὺς ἀλλὰ διὰ νουθεσίαν ἐτέρων, οἷς τὰ πάτρια καταλύσασι φάρμακον ἀνευρέθη σωτήριον, λύπη, τὰ τῶν δυσμενῶν ἀγαθὰ περι-αλγήσασι. κλαύσαντες οὖν καὶ στενάξαντες τὴν ἰδίαν τροπὴν ἐπὶ τὴν ἀρχαίαν καὶ προγονικὴν ἀνακάμψουσιν εὐτυχίαν διαυλοδρομή-

171 σαντες, οἷς μὴ εἰς ἅπαν ἐξοκεῖλαι συνέβη. οἱ δὲ γελάσαντες τὰς ὀλοφύρσεις ἐκείνων καὶ δημοτελεῖς ἑορτὰς ἄγειν ψηφισάμενοι τὰς ἀποφράδας αὐτῶν καὶ [437] τὰ πένθη κατευωχηθέντες καὶ συνόλως | τὴν ἐτέ-ρων κακοδαιμονίαν εὐδαιμονήσαντες, ὅταν ἄρξων-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καιρὸν.

<sup>a</sup> Deut. xxx. 5 "He will make thee abundant (πλεοναστὸν) beyond thy fathers."

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xxx. 7.

<sup>c</sup> This must be the meaning of πρὸ μικροῦ here, and prob-

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 168-171

sion, which flowing from the gracious bounties of God as from a perennial fountain will bring to each individually and to all in common a deep stream of wealth leaving no room for envy.<sup>a</sup>

Everything will suddenly be reversed, God will 169 turn the curses against the enemies of these penitents,<sup>b</sup> the enemies who rejoiced in the misfortunes of the nation and mocked and railed at them, thinking that they themselves would have a heritage which nothing could destroy and which they hoped to leave to their children and descendants in due succession; thinking too that they would always see their opponents in a firmly established and unchanging adversity which would be reserved for the generations that followed them. In their in- 170 fatuation they did not understand that the short-lived<sup>c</sup> brilliance which they had enjoyed had been given them not for their own sakes but as a lesson to others, who had subverted the institutions of their fathers, and therefore grief—the very painful feeling aroused by the sight of their enemy's good fortune—was devised as a medicine to save them from perdition.

So then those of them who have not come to utter destruction, in tears and groans lamenting their own lapse, will make their way back with course reversed to the prosperity of the ancestral past. But these enemies who have 171 mocked at their lamentations, proclaimed public holidays on the days of their misfortunes,<sup>d</sup> feasted on their mourning, in general made the unhappiness of others their own happiness, will, when they begin to ably in § 171, rather than the ordinary sense of “a little while ago,” though such a use is not noted in the Lexicon.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 458.

PHILO

ται κομίζεσθαι τὰ ἐπίχειρα τῆς ὠμότητος, αἰσθήσονται διότι οὐκ εἰς ἀφανεῖς καὶ ἡμελημένους ἐξημάρτανον, ἀλλ' εἰς εὐπατρίδας ἔχοντας ἐναύσματα τῆς εὐγενείας, ἀφ' ὧν ἀναρριπισθέντων ἐξέλαμψεν ἡ πρὸ μικροῦ σβεσθεῖσα εὐκλεία.

172 καθάπερ γὰρ ὑποτμηθέντων τῶν στελεχῶν, ὅταν μὴ ἀφαιρεθῶσιν αἱ ρίζαι, νέα ἔρνη βλαστάνει,<sup>1</sup> ὑφ' ὧν τὰ γεράνδρα παρευημερεῖται, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἐν ψυχαῖς βραχυτάτου σπέρματος τῶν εἰς ἀρετὴν ὑπολειφθέντος, ἄλλων περιαιρεθέντων, οὐδὲν ἦττον ἀπὸ τοῦ βραχέος φύεται τὰ τιμιώτατα καὶ κάλλιστα τῶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις, δι' ἃ πάλιν εὐαν-δροῦσαι [αἱ] πόλεις συνοικίζονται καὶ ἔθνη πρὸς πολυανθρωπίαν ἐπιδίδωσιν.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. βλαστάνουσι.

ON REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS, 171-172

reap the rewards of their cruelty, find that their misconduct was directed not against the obscure and unmeritable but against men of high lineage retaining sparks of their noble birth, which have to be but fanned into a flame, and from them shines out the glory which for a little while was quenched. For 172 just as when the stalks of plants are cut away, if the roots are left undestroyed, new growths shoot up which supersede the old, so too if in the soul a tiny seed be left of the qualities which promote virtue, though other things have been stripped away, still from that little seed spring forth the fairest and most precious things in human life, by which states are constituted manned with good citizens, and nations grow into a great population.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> On this conclusion to the treatise see General Introduction, p. xxii.

APPENDIX TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, IV

(The title.) This, as it is given here, is taken from a list of some of the works of Philo, found in an eleventh-century ms., which itself contains only half of the De Opificio, but the list no doubt is the table of contents in the exemplar from which that ms. was taken. It agrees with that in the two mss. (S and M) of this treatise, except that they omit δλης. All these omit the last word or words, which Cohn supplied by τέλος. The last six words so amended are translated in Goodhart and Goodenough's Bibliography, p. 135, "and which (i.e. justice) is the objective of the whole code." I understand δ to have the phrase περι δικαιοσύνης for its antecedent, and συντάξεως, which could hardly mean "code," as referring to the whole of the four books.

The addition of τῶν εἰς ἕκαστον ἀναφερομένων seems quite needless. Compare the titles of the other three books.

§ 2. (Stealing open and secret.) As the distinction made by Philo, though natural enough, is not drawn at any rate directly from the Law it is a case where perhaps he may have been influenced by other legislation. Goodenough, Jewish Jurisprudence in Egypt, pp. 145 ff., and Heinemann, Bildung, pp. 421 ff., have some discussion on this. Goodenough notes that the Ptolemaic law in Egypt distinguished between open robbery (λεία) and ordinary stealing. He gives a reference to Taubenschlag, Strafrecht, pp. 26 ff., which I have not been able to see. In Roman law the person who committed a "furtum manifestum" was held to be a "fur inprobior" (Mommsen, Strafrecht, p. 601). In Attic law the distinction does not seem to be so clear. In Xen. Mem. i. 2. 62, which Goodenough cites, κατὰ τοὺς νόμους εἰάν τις φανερός γένηται κλέπτων . . . θάνατός ἐστιν ἢ ζημία, φανερός may mean "detected," "clearly proved" rather than, as Goodenough, "openly."

§ 2. Repay the stolen goods twofold. Mangey on these words and Driver on Ex. xxii. 4 give several examples of a similar rule. Among them are Solon's laws as stated by Gellius xi. 18 and Dem. Adv. Timocrat., p. 467 (of conviction for theft in a private action) and Plato, Laws 857 A. Philo may have known these, but his generalization is not so inexact that we need suppose him to have been influenced by other legislations.

PHILO

§ 4. General proclamation. Heinemann, Bildung, p. 421, dissents from the view that there is an allusion to Lev. xxv. 10, and regards the phrase as meaning merely a public announcement. The absence of the article may favour this, but he does not give any evidence of such a regulation from Philo or elsewhere. The Athenian ἀποκήρυξις which he quotes as an analogy, a term applied to a formal notice of disinheriting, does not help much.

§ 7. In the very place where he has broken in. L. and S. revised give “(the act of) breaking in” for διόρυγμα as a LXX usage, citing this passage, viz. Ex. xxii. 2 and Jeremiah ii. 34. I do not think this is right. In neither passage, the second of which appears to be an allusion to the first, is there any necessity to understand the act rather than the place. Anyway, Philo is more likely to have understood the word, which he quotes from the LXX, in its usual sense.

For the law that a thief might be legally killed at night cf. the Attic law as stated by Demosthenes, Adv. Timocrat., p. 463, also Plato, Laws ix. 874 β νύκτωρ φῶρα εἰς οἰκίαν εἰσιόντα ἐπὶ κλοπῇ χρημάτων, εἰάν ἐλὼν κτείνῃ τις, καθαρὸς ἔστω. In Roman law, the XII Tables have “si nox furtum factum sit, si eum occisit, iure caesus esto.” As Philo is reproducing Exodus, these are illustrations of that rather than of this. However, one point noted by Goodenough, p. 154, may be worth mentioning. The Roman law, as stated in the Digest, directed that the killing must be preceded by a call for help (“cum clamore”). If Philo knew this, it would agree with his insistence that the right to kill is founded on the inability to get help. Much the same point is made in another connexion in Spec. Leg. iii. 74-78.

§§ 11, 12. (Value of Sheep and Ox.) Heinemann's suggestion (approved by Goodenough), that the thought in these sections was developed from the Stoic doctrine that animals were created for the service of man, seems to me fanciful. Philo has to give a reason why the law requires a higher rate of compensation for a sheep and still more for an ox than for other goods, and this necessarily depends on their value to the owner. The passage he quotes from Cic. De Nat. ii. 158 ff. certainly says that the sheep was intended to supply man with wool and the ox to supply him with means for ploughing, but does not note the other abilities noted here. The two passages are also alike in not mentioning that either animal is good for food, but elsewhere the Stoics seem to have held that they were also created to be eaten ("ad vescendum"), Cic. De Leg. i. 8. 25 (S.V.F. ii. 1162).

APPENDICES

§ 13. (Kidnapping.) As the LXX (see footnote) does not deal with the crime of kidnapping a non-Israelite, Philo leaves the punishment to be determined by the "court," cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 148, where the same is laid down in the case of death caused to a man by falling into an unguarded pit, whereas the law only prescribed compensation for the death of an animal. By the Court I do not understand him, as Goodenough does, to be thinking of the Jewish Court in Alexandria. What he says in these sections is that (1) the act is obviously a crime against humanity, and (2) would therefore have to be punished by a court, (3) should be, or at least might be, punished by something less than death.

In Roman law kidnapping ("plagium") was a serious crime, sometimes punishable by death (see Dict. of Ant.).

§ 21. (ἀγρονόμοι.) Nothing really is known of this office, except from two passages in Aristotle, Politics vi. 5, 1321 b and vii. 11, 1331 b, where he says that the ὕλωροί or forest-wardens are also called ἀγρονόμοι, but he does not specify the states where these are to be found. It is conjectured (see Pauly-Wissowa) that the πεδιανόμοι at Sparta, whose title is found in an inscription, are the same. But Plato in several passages of the Laws recommends the appointment of such officials to do for the country what the ἀστυνόμοι do for the towns. See particularly 760 ff. and 844 b, where they are empowered to redress civil injuries. Very little importance, I think, can be attached to Philo's statement that the best governed cities have these officials. It is an inference which he would easily draw from Plato's way of speaking of them. And indeed some modern scholars seem to have made the same assumption (see Dict. of Ant.).

§ 39. τῶν . . . μελλόντων. In support of the translation somewhat doubtfully given in the text it may be pointed out that

PHILO

Philo evidently sees in Lev. xix. 11, 12 something like the rhetorical figure, technically called "the ladder" (κλίμαξ), in which at each stage the crucial word of the preceding stage is repeated. (See Ernesti, Lex. Rhet.) A similar example in Demosthenes (speaking of the process by which a quarrel rises to bloodshed) runs μηδὲ κατὰ μικρὸν ὑπάγεσθαι, ἐκ μὲν λαιδορίας εἰς πληγὰς, ἐκ δὲ πληγῶν εἰς τραύματα, ἐκ δὲ τραυμάτων εἰς θάνατον. Of course in Lev. itself it is not a proper "climax," as the πρότερον is not repeated before the ἐπόμενον, but Philo's exposition takes that form.

§ 40. Unscientific method of proof. The depreciatory note which Philo here puts into the word ἀτεχνος is very unfair. The ἀτεχνοὶ πίστευσι are, as quoted from Cope in the note to De Plant. 173 (vol. iii. p. 499), "proofs not due to the artist's invented skill, but supplied to him from the outside as it were of his art." They are not opposed to ἐλεγχοὶ δίκαιοι but are indeed really more "just," in so far as they cannot be perverted by the orator's skill. In De Plant. the word was translated "inartistic" (perhaps better "unartistic"), and that or "unartificial" is the equivalent usually given. But "unscientific" seems to me in the usual English usage to come nearer to the meaning (or perhaps "non-scientific," though I have kept the "un-" as giving something of Philo's depreciatory note).

§ 40. (Text of φύσει ἀγαθὸν καὶ θεῖον ὄνομα, etc.) As stated in the footnote Cohn expelled ἀγαθὸν καὶ on the grounds (1) that ἀγαθόν is an unsuitable adjective in this context, (2) that the fairly obvious corrections ἄγιον or ἀγαστὸν suggested by Mangey are ruled out by the hiatus after φύσει. This objection applies of course to ἀγαθόν also.

In a note in vol. vii. p. 620 I said that I did not know how far Cohn's argument that a certain reading was unacceptable on account of the hiatus was valid and that Cohn did not anywhere formulate his doctrine. Since then I have got more information originally through Cumont's edition of the De Aeternitate, Prol., p. xx. Cumont refers to a publication by J. Jessen in a Festschrift to Hermann Sauppe entitled De elocutione Philonis Alexandrini (1889). Jessen's article is largely occupied in showing that Philo uses μέχρι or ἄχρι according as a vowel or consonant precedes. But towards the end he discusses hiatus in general from a study of the De Opificio and concludes that it is only admitted when

APPENDICES

(a) Philo is quoting scripture or another writer such as Plato, (b) when any stop, even a comma, intervenes, (c) in familiar conjunctions of words forming a single phrase such as ἐρήσιοι ὄραι, (d) after the article, or the relative pronoun or prepositions or καί, μή, τι, ὅτι, etc. This last class means, I suppose, the little common words which recur so frequently that the writer would be hampered if he always had to follow with a consonantal word. Cumont finds that this rule also applies to the De Aet., the genuineness of which he is supporting.

Jessen however admitted that in the De Op. there was a certain residuum of cases, where the hiatus had no such excuse, and Cumont said the same of the De Aet., and probably an examination of the other treatises would give the same result. Most of those quoted by Jessen and Cumont are capable of emendation, sometimes easily, sometimes only with some straining. As a matter of fact I observe that Cohn, who had Jessen's work before him, left all but one of these cases of hiatus as they stand in the mss. in his own edition.

The real question is whether Philo put the hiatus on the same footing as a grammatical error, or whether he thought it a thing to be avoided generally, but not if the avoidance hampered his expression in any way. I should be inclined to take the second view and hold that while a hiatus may justly increase suspicion of a reading to which there are other objections, it does not in itself create a fatal or even a very serious objection. In the case under discussion I do not think that the expulsion of ἀγαθὸν καὶ is justified, particularly as the same hiatus after φύσει occurs elsewhere (ἑβδομάδος φύσει οἰκέα, Leg. All. i. 16), where neither is any easy emendation possible nor has Cohn or any other editor raised any objection.

As for the first objection, it may be granted that as ἀγαθὸς when applied to God regularly connotes His beneficence, ἅγιον would be more appropriate here. But it is going too far to call it unsuitable. It is applied to the Divine Name in Ps. liii. (liv.) 6.

§ 49. Heinemann refers on this passage to Plato, Ion 534. Here and in the parallels, Spec. Leg. i. 65 and Quis Rerum 265 f., Philo may have had in mind this passage, particularly διὰ ταῦτα δὲ ὁ θεὸς ἐξαιρούμενος τούτων (i.e. "poets") τὸν νοῦν τούτοις χρήται ὑπηρεταῖς καὶ τοῖς μάντεσι τοῖς θεοῖς . . . ἀλλ' ὁ θεὸς αὐτὸς ἐστὶν ὁ λέγων, διὰ τούτων δὲ φθέγγεται πρὸς ἡμᾶς. But

PHILO

Heinemann goes much too far, I think, in saying that this conception is derived ("entlehnten") from Plato. The idea of the prophet as God's mouthpiece is self-evident throughout the prophetic books, and the most striking point in Philo's imagery here and in Quis Rerum, that the prophet is the musical instrument on which God plays, does not come so far as I know from Plato, at any rate not from this passage in the Ion.

§ 52. όλοστόν. Stephanus gives for this word "integer totus," Hesychius όλως ός έστιν (what does that mean exactly?) and L. and S. old and revised merely repeat this statement or part of it. It is a mis-statement to say that it is only known from Hesychius. It is found here in the mss. of Philo in a passage the genuineness of which was not questioned till lately, but was overlooked by the lexicographers, who conceivably may have overlooked the word elsewhere. In fact it has the advantage over several other words only quoted from Philo that it has the support of Hesychius. But the formation is odd. If formed like other words in -στός, the ordinals and όλιγοστός, πολλοστός, it should be "one out of a whole": a further difficulty here is that it seems to be used as a substantive, which is not the case, so far as I know, with the other words in -στός. I am inclined to think that the writer of the clause, whether Philo or another, actually wrote as Mangey suggests όλως αύτόν, which, as he says, would easily pass by abbreviation into όλοστόν.

§ 54. (Last sentence.) Heinemann remarks on these words that both the expression and the thought are derived from the Stoics, who, while combatting the sceptical doctrine that certain knowledge was unattainable and έποχή was universally necessary (cf. the sceptical sections in De Ebr. 171-205), allowed that there were cases where for want of evidence έποχή was necessary. Cf. S.V.F. ii. 121 πάς δογματικός έν τισιν έπέχειν είωθεν, ήτοι παρά γνώμης άσθένειαν ή παρά πραγμάτων άσάφειαν, ή παρά τήν τών λόγων ίσοσθένειαν. έπέχειν and έποχή are the accepted technical terms in this sense, but need such a commonsense observation as that, when two things are equal, you cannot decide in favour of either, be necessarily traced to Stoic sources?

§§ 63 ff. These sections have a close parallel in Plato, Laws 955 c-d "those who serve their country ought to serve without receiving gifts, and there ought to be no excusing or approving the saying 'Men should receive gifts as the reward of good but not of evil deeds'—for to know what is good and to persevere in what we know is no easy matter. The safest course is to obey the law, which says 'Do no service for a bribe'" (Jowett). That Philo had Plato in mind is made more probable by his introduction of another Platonic word ἡμιμόχθηροι, Rep. 352, used to describe the half-way house in injustice.

APPENDICES

§ 64. Awarder (or umpire) of justice. Heinemann may be right in regarding this as a direct quotation from Aristotle. Philo however also knew the expression βραβεύειν τὰ δίκαια from Demosthenes, Ol. iii. 96. βραβεύς, βραβεύειν and βραβευτής, originally applied to the games, easily lend themselves to metaphor and Philo has used the last several times in other connexions. But see on § 149.

§ 73. One of the men of old. Mangey supposed that this refers to the passage in the Theaetetus of Plato quoted below on § 188. But imitation is not quite the same as assimilation, nor is showing kindness there specifically marked. Heinemann's note is "this frequently quoted saying was ascribed to Pythagoras and Demosthenes," and refers for the evidence of this to Vahlen's edition of Longinus, De Sublimitate, p. 216; Cohn gives the same reference. I am sorry that I have been unable to see this edition, but presumably the evidence is the same as or includes that quoted by Roberts in his edition of the De Sub., p. 244. (a) Aelian, Var. Hist., xii. 59 "Pythagoras said that the two best gifts of the gods to men were speaking the truth and showing kindness (τό τε ἀληθεύειν καὶ τὸ εὐεργετεῖν), and he added that both resembled the works of the gods." (b) Arsen, Viol. 189 "Demosthenes, being asked what man has like God, said 'showing kindness and speaking the truth.'"

§ 85. ἔρως. This is a word for which there is no real equivalent in English when the context does not allow it, as no doubt it often does, to be rendered by the single word "love." The phrase "sexual love" is not attractive, and does not cover the whole of the Greek conception. The Stoic definition of ἔρως as one of the seven different forms of ἐπιθυμία, Diog. Laert. vii. 113, is ἐπιθυμία τις οὐχὶ περὶ τοὺς σπουδαίους· ἔστι γὰρ ἐπιβολὴ φιλοποιίας διὰ κάλλος ἐμφαινόμενον, which Hicks translates "a craving from which good men are free, for it is an effort to win affection due to the visible presence of beauty." An interesting study of the four words στοργή, ἔρωσ, φιλεῖν, ἀγαπᾶν, particularly as used by Plato and Aristotle, is given in an Appendix to Sandys's edition of Aristot. Rhet., vol. i.

PHILO

§ 104. μακρόθεν. As Heinemann, Mangey and Cohn generally give quite a different sense here and elsewhere from myself to this adverb and πόρρωθεν, I take the opportunity of collecting the passages I have noted in this book and the preceding and the De Virtutibus. In nearly all the clear intention is to show that the injunction actually given leads on to another principle of a higher kind, which I have generally translated by the adverb "indirectly" or "by implication," on which see below.

(1) Spec. Leg. iii. 48 μακρόθεν δ' ὡς ἀπὸ σκοπῆς ἐσωφρόνισεν ἀνθρώπους.

Here, where ἀπὸ σκοπῆς fixes the meaning beyond question, the guilt of unlawful unions among men is deduced from the prohibition of mixed matings of animals. Heinemann "wie von einer Warte"; Mangey "longe quasi e speculo."

(2) Ib. 63 πόρρωθεν μοιχείας ἀνείργων. (Guilt of adultery from the injunction of ablutions even after lawful intercourse.)

Here Heinemann translates πόρρωθεν ἀνείργων by "fern zu halten"; Mangey "longe submovens."

(3) Ib. 117 πόρρωθεν τὴν βρεφῶν ἔκθεσιν ἀπέιπε δι' ὑπονοιῶν. (Guilt of infanticide from the punishment decreed against causing a miscarriage.)

Here the addition of δι' ὑπονοιῶν gives the same thought in a different form. The one prohibition is an allegory of the other. Heinemann "in versteckter Andeutung," apparently translating δι' ὑπονοιῶν and ignoring πόρρωθεν; Mangey "procul vetuit."

(4) Spec. Leg. iv. 104 (this passage) μακρόθεν ἀνείρξαι βουλόμενος τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ λεχθέντα ὀρμήν. (The evil of cruel vindictiveness from the prohibition of carnivorous animals for food.)

Heinemann "recht fern zu halten"; Mangey "procul remoturus."

(5) Ib. 203 πόρρωθεν ἀνακοπήν μοιχῶν ἐργάζεσθαι. (Guilt of adultery from the mixed mating of animals, cf. iii. 48.)

APPENDICES

Heinemann "offenbar" ("openly" or "plainly"?); Mangey "quanto magis."

(6) Ib. 218 αἱ μακρόθεν τῶν ἐπ' ἀνθρώποις πλεονεξιῶν τὴν λύσσαν ἀνείργουσι. (Duty of restraining covetousness from the prohibition of sowing the vineyard.)

Heinemann "nachdrücklich"; Mangey "procul arcet."

(7) De Virt. 21 πόρρωθεν ὡς ἀνδρογύνους οὕτως καὶ γυνάνδρους φυλαξάμενος. (Womanliness in general from the single item of womanly dress (see the next sentence ἐνὸς γὰρ κτλ.).)

Cohn "fernhalten"; Mangey "longe submovens."

(8) Ib. 116 πόρρωθεν ἀναδιδάσκων τὸ μὴ ἐφήδεται. (Avoidance of ἐπιχαιρεκακία, from the injunction to help an enemy's beast.)

Ignored by Cohn; Mangey "in minimis quoque docet."

(9) Ib. 137 ὑπὲρ τοῦ μακρόθεν ἐπισχεῖν τὴν εὐχέρειαν. (Guilt of infanticide from the prohibition of killing a pregnant animal.)

Cohn "schon von vornherein"; Mangey "ad longe com-pescendum."

(10) Ib. 160 πόρρωθεν ἀναδιδάσκεται τῶν λογικῶν ἐπιμελεῖσθαι. (Consideration for men from kindness to animals.)

Cohn gives this well, "zieht durchaus die weitere Lehre"; Mangey "inde dixit rationalibus potio-rem curam inpendere." To these may be added De Virt. 151 τὸ μέλλον ὡς περ ἀπὸ σκοπῆς μακρόθεν . . . καθορᾶσθαι, where the same phrase is used as in iii. 48, but has no reference to Moses' teaching. Cf. also De Virt. 129.

While taking the adverbs in an intensive sense "to keep far away" will suit (7) and perhaps (2, 4, 6), if the adverbs in -θεν can bear this sense, which seems to me doubtful, it is hardly compatible with ἀπειπεῖν (3), or ἀνακοπήν ἐργάζεσθαι (5), or ἐπισχεῖν (9), and quite impossible with σωφρονίζειν (1), and ἀναδιδάσκειν (8, 10). It is clear to me that throughout, as indicated by (1), both adverbs express Philo's conception of the Law as a code in which those who have eyes to see may discern other lessons far away from the primary and literal. I do not feel that the translation "indirectly" or "implicitly" is at all adequate. "A lesson reaching far beyond the actual words " would express the meaning better, but be too heavy a rendering for this single word.

PHILO

§ 106. (Dividing the hoof.) In this treatise the phrase is used of ethical questions only and signifies the distinguishing of the desirable from the undesirable. In De Agr. 131-145 the treatment is somewhat different. In § 133 as here it is taken to mean distinguishing the beneficial from the injurious, but as the discussion proceeds it is applied to analysis and distinction in the arts and sciences—grammar, music and logic. The sophists in fact are represented by the pig, because although they divide the hoof they do not chew the cud.

As Philo's interpretation of διχληεῖν or something like it appears in the letter of Aristeeas 150, which though of uncertain date is by general agreement considered to be earlier than Philo, it is not altogether original with him. As to whether it was accepted later, I have no information as far as Rabbinism is concerned. Heinemann's silence in Bildung would suggest that it was not. But there is an interesting passage in the Pilgrim's Progress, where Faithful discoursing about Talkative says that he reminds him of Moses' saying that the clean beast must both chew the cud and part the hoof. "The hare cheweth the cud, but yet is unclean because he parteth not the hoof. And this truly resembles Talkative. He cheweth the cud, he seeketh knowledge; he cheweth upon the word; but he divideth not the hoof; he parteth not with the way of sinners; but as the hare, retaineth the foot of a dog or bear, and therefore he is unclean." This is not very different from Philo's interpretation. Is Bunyan here following a tradition of the Christian pulpit? Christian's reply is "You have spoken, for aught I know, the gospel-sense of these things."

§ 109. πολύχλα. This word is not recorded by Stephanus or the earlier L. & S. The revised L. & S., citing this passage, erroneously gives it as "dividing the hoof, opposed to μονώνυχα."

§ 113. Cormorant. αἴθυια ("sea-gull"?) is taken as a type of voracity with the same verb ἐμφορεῖσθαι in Leg. All. iii. 155 and Quod Det. 101. Philo is the only author quoted for this usage, as the other passage cited by Stephanus, Athenaeus vii. 283 c, is not to the point. L. & S. do not notice it at all.

§ 116. (Clean and unclean birds.) Aristeeas 145-147 gives the same definition of the unclean birds and mentions doves, pigeons, geese and partridges as specimens of the clean. He also adds the moral that the prohibition is intended as a warning against injustice and tyranny among men.

APPENDICES

§ 128. ἀνδρὸς εὐζώνου. While εὐζωνος in a general sense is common enough, the phrase as a standard of measurement is not quoted in the Lexicon from any writers later than Herodotus (i. 72, 104) and Thucydides (ii. 97). If the absence of quotation reflects the facts, we may fairly set its presence here as a conscious literary reminiscence or imitation of the historians.

§ 137. Shaking before the eyes. Though Philo does not actually use σαλευτά nor get nearer to it than σάλον δ' ἐγέτω below, there can be no doubt that this is what he read. It is equally clear that it is a misreading, and his explanation is fantastical. But the mistake is not confined to him. The Apparatus Criticus in Brook and Maclean's edition of the LXX shows that one ms. has σαλευτόν in Deut. xi. 18, though not apparently in vi. 8, and that the Old Latin version had "mobilia." This is also supported by a treatise of Origen, which only survives in the Latin. The reference to this is not given. Otherwise it would be interesting to see whether Origen owed the idea to Philo and gave it further currency.

§§ 149, 150. Unwritten Laws. Heinemann rightly notes the resemblance to Aristot. Rhet. i. 14. 7, where Aristotle says that on the one hand it may be argued that "the better man is he who is just without compulsion; now the written laws of right are compulsory, the unwritten are not." This is the view taken here. From another point of view it is worse to offend against the written, "for he who commits offences which are dangerous and liable to penalty will still more do so when there is no penalty." Our passage looks like a definite reminiscence and strengthens the probability that the phrase in § 64 is a direct quotation (the same can hardly be said of the allusion to ἄτεχνοι πίστεις in § 40). The distinction between ἄτεχνοι and ἐντεχνοι πίστεις, though originating with Aristotle, runs through the whole of later rhetoric and must have been "known to every schoolboy."

It is to be observed that the sense of ἄγραφοι νόμοι here is totally different from that of De Virt. 194, where see note b.

§ 158. (Footnotes b and c.) In De Agr. 84 ff. Philo takes ἵππων, which he here paraphrases by θρέμματα, in its regular sense of cavalry and introduces his allegory by declaring that the literal interpretation is untenable because Moses would not recommend that a ruler should forgo such an indispensable part of his armament. Cf. note on De Virt. 28 ff.

PHILO

§ 160. Ἐπινομιδα. Philo has used this name for Deuteronomy in Quis Rerum 162, 250. As so applied it is not quoted from any other writer, and if the application is due to him it is a reasonable supposition that it is modelled on the pseudo-Platonic treatise of that name.

§ 188. Assimilated to God. Philo no doubt here and elsewhere where he uses this expression is thinking of Plato, Theaetetus 176 A-B, which he quotes, naming the treatise, in De Fug. 63, "to fly away (from earth to heaven) is to become like God (ὁμοίωσις θεῶ) as far as this is possible, and to become like him is to become just, holy and wise."

§ 188. Σῶμα σῆμα. This play of words appears also in Leg. All. i. 108 in connexion with a saying of Heraclitus, from which "the editors of Heraclitus infer that σῶμα σῆμα was originally said by him" (Thompson on Gorg. 493 A). Plato himself in the Cratylus ascribes it to the Orphics. Heinemann refers to Philolaus fr. 14 Diels, which I have had no opportunity of verifying. Possibly it is the same as the saying attributed to Philolaus by Clement Al. Strom. iii. 17 α ἡ ψυχὰ τῷ σώματι συνέζευκται καὶ καθάπερ ἐν σώματι τούτῳ τέθαιπται.

§ 190. (Footnote a.) According to Josephus, Ant. iv. 218, this court of appeal consists of the high priest, the Prophet and the council of elders. Is there some connexion between this inclusion of the Prophet and Philo's insistence in § 192 on the prophetic character of the true priest?

§ 191. νηφάλια θύειν. This use of the neuter accusative plural is too well attested in Philo (see footnote) to be disposed of by correction to -ους. But the usage is strange and calls for more explanation than I can give with any confidence. May we suppose that in the wineless offerings to various deities the abstention of the offerer was felt to be an essential element (cf. νήφων δόινοις, Soph. O.C. 100), and so the phrase acquired this personal meaning? Two passages quoted by Stephanus from Plutarch suggest something of the kind, Mor. 464 c ἀμεθύστους καὶ δόινοις διαγα-γείν, ὥσπερ νηφάλια καὶ μελίσπονδα θύοντα, and 132 Ε αὐτῷ τῷ Διονύσῳ πολλάκις νηφάλια θύομεν ἐπιζόμενοι μὴ ζητεῖν αἰεὶ τὸν ἄκρατον.

APPENDICES

§ 193. Market-controllers. "Agoranomi existed both at Athens and Sparta, and, as inscriptions prove in almost every Greek state, . . . they regulated the price and quantity of all things which were brought into the market and punished all persons convicted of cheating, especially by false weights and measures." (Dict. of Ant.)

§ 199. (ἀδικοπραγεῖν.) Stephanus quotes five examples of this word, one from Plutarch, the other four all from Philo. Of these one as Stephanus has it, and as it stands in Mangey's text, is transitive, viz. Spec. Leg. iii. 182 εἰὰν περὶ τὰς οὐσίας ἀδικοπραγῶσι τὸν πλησίον, and so the majority of mss. F however has τῶν πλησίον and S apparently τῶν πλησίων. I feel no doubt that Cohn is right in following F. The corruption of τῶν to τὸν to bring it into supposed agreement with πλησίον is very natural.

The converse δικαιοπραγεῖν is commoner or at least is cited from a much greater range of authors and seems to be always intransitive.

§ 231. (Footnote c.) For this Pythagorean thought see Zeller, Presocratic Philosophy (Eng. trans.), vol. i. pp. 420 f. τῆς δικαιοσύνης ἴδιον . . . τοῖς ἴσον, and the statement "that the first square number (ισάκις ἴσον), i.e. four or nine, is justice." So in De Plant. 122 the saying "that equality is the mother of justice" is connected with the equality of the sides of a square.

§ 237. Democracy . . . the best of constitutions. Democracy is equated here to ἰσότης, cf. De Conf. 108, "which honours equality and has law and justice for its rulers." There it is opposed to mob rule, ὀχλοκρατία, and so also De Agr. 45 and De Virt. 180, but in De Abr. 242 to tyranny, while in Quod Deus 176 we have the curious idea that the world is a democracy because each nation in its turn gets supremacy. From all this one can gather little more than a vague idea of order, justice and a government under which every one receives the rights and duties for which he is best fitted.

On the puzzling question how Philo comes to apply to this ideal constitution the name of democracy repeated so emphatically six times (see note on Quod Deus 176) a good deal has been written lately. Dr. Eric Langstadt in his essay Zu Philos Begriff der Demokratie, Dr. Martin Braun in an essay called Social and Political Aspects of Philo's Philosophy, Professor Goodenough in his Philo's Politics, Practice and Theory, have all dealt with the subject. Langstadt in the body of his essay gives a careful and interesting analysis of Philo's conceptions of good government, conceptions which he may be supposed to have summed up under the name of democracy, but which only serve to make the name more surprising. For an attempt to explain the name we must turn to his Nachwort. In this he suggests that the name is taken from the Platonic or pseudo-Platonic Menexenus 238 c, where Socrates is represented as saying of the Athenian constitution as it was and is "one man calls it a democracy, another by any name which pleases him. In reality it is an aristocracy carried on with the approval of the multitude." There are some good points in favour of this theory. Philo quotes another part of this description as from Plato in the De Op. 133, and there are features in this idealized picture of the Athenian constitution which remind us of Philo. A notable example is the insistence on equality of birth as the source of its excellence, and some more recondite resemblances are pointed out by Langstadt. But on the whole it is difficult to suppose that this casual mention of the name democracy can so have impressed Philo as the theory supposes.

PHILO

Braun finds the solution of the puzzle in the use of δημοκρατία as the Greek equivalent for the Latin "Res publica," particularly in the sense of the republican constitution which was superseded by Caesarism. He gives many examples of this from Dion Cassius, and what is more important as nearer to Philo, from Josephus. His main point is that δημοκρατία had become the battle-cry of the senatorial opposition, though to say this does not do justice to his full analysis of the political situation both at Rome and Alexandria.

Goodenough also takes this use of δημοκρατία as his starting-point. But he lays more stress on the acceptance of the term by the upholders of the principate. He points out that in the chapters in Dion Cassius 52, where Augustus is advised by Agrippa to refuse and by Maecenas to assume supreme power, while Agrippa extols democracy, Maecenas declares that a monarchy will insure the true democracy, and that Dion also remarks that the emperors were careful to build up their power by assuming democratic titles. So he finally comes to the conclusion that to Philo the ideal government is monarchy in its Roman form of democracy, kingship in its best sense.

APPENDICES

If one may take as a working hypothesis that Philo's use of the term springs from this special sense, while I think Braun is nearer the truth, I should suggest a middle course between the two views. Perhaps we may say that reverence for the great Roman Republic, S.P.Q.R., had by Philo's time raised the name from the disparagement cast on it by Plato and Aristotle to a position of high respect. On the lips of the opposition its meaning was unmistakable, and I think Braun might strengthen his argument by the fact that this opposition was largely Stoical, though not perhaps so markedly so as some decades later (see Arnold's Roman Stoicism, pp. 392 ff.). But the imperialist would not allow his opponent to monopolize the term. He claimed, as Maecenas says, that the Principate gave a freedom which, unlike the freedom of the mob, awarded equally to all according to their deserts, and was, in fact, government of the people for the people though not by the people. Philo thus adopts this slogan or catch-word as Braun calls it and, as he well says, surrounds it with a religious and metaphysical halo, not caring very much how far it fitted in with his Platonic conception of the philosopher king.

APPENDIX TO DE VIRTUTIBUS

(The title.) This as given by Cohn is based mainly on Eusebius's description of the treatise (Hist. Eccl. ii. 18) Περὶ τῶν τριῶν ἀρετῶν ἄς σὺν ἄλλαις ἀνέγραψε Μωσῆς (see Gen. Introd., p. xvi), and on the title in S, the oldest ms., Περὶ γ' ἀρετῶν ἄς σὺν ἄλλαις ἀνέγραψε Μωσῆς περὶ ἀνδρείας καὶ φιλανθρωπίας καὶ μετανοίας. Cohn seems to me to have dealt somewhat arbitrarily with these. Since the other mss., which do not have either τριῶν or ἄς . . . Μωσῆς, persist in including the non-extant Περὶ εὐσεβείας (see Gen. Introd., p. xiii. note b), he has added it against the authority of S and consequently has to exclude τριῶν.

Mangey gives περὶ τριῶν ἀρετῶν ἧτοι περὶ ἀνδρείας καὶ φιλανθρωπίας καὶ μετανοίας. I presume that he thought, as I should be inclined to think, that Eusebius did not intend the words ἄς . . . Μωσῆς to be part of the title, but a note added to avoid any misconception to the effect that Moses only recognized three virtues. Incidentally, I am not clear about the correct meaning of ἀνέγραψε. I have followed Cohn's "geschildert" in translating it by "described." But Moses can hardly be said to have "described" the virtues. Goodhart and Goodenough give "discussed." Perhaps rather "set forth" (as laws), i.e. "enjoined."

§ 17. ἀτυφίας . . . τυφός. These two words are of course opposites and are definitely named together below, §§ 178 and 195, as well as here. In De Cong. 138 and Mos. ii. 96 ἀτυφία is contrasted with οἷησις ("conceit") and may be given by "humility" or "modesty," but this is exceptional. τυφός itself constantly recurs in Philo, but in rather different senses. Goodenough on pp. 34 f. of his Philo's Politics has a description of it with useful references, but the word which he adopts, "arrogance," seems to me to be rarely if ever applicable. Nearer to it is "vanity," meaning either the disposition which follows vain things or the vain things themselves.

APPENDICES

Very frequently it is applied to the vain imagination of idolaters, as for example in § 178, and sometimes, particularly when coupled with "Egyptian," to the object of the false worship, e.g. Spec. Leg. iii. 125. Elsewhere as here it is the love of the vanities of life in general and particularly its pomps, and in In Flacc. 4 he gives it this meaning in a not unfavourable sense, for in describing Flaccus's earlier good government he says that "he upheld the dignity of his position (σεμνότερον ἤγεν αὐτόν), for τῦφος is very useful to a ruler." In a more general sense ἀτυφία is coupled with ἀχρηματία (De Fug. 25), and opposed to φιλοδοξία (De Abr. 24, 104), while in De Vit. Cont. 39 it is applied to the more extreme asceticism of the Therapeutae. In such cases it is fairly well given by "simplicity," but when it is contrasted with τῦφος in the sense of false beliefs or worship, I do not know of any suitable word. When Philo says that everything he has said about ἀτυφία connotes the idea of courage he means no doubt all that he has said against τῦφος in the sense of the pomps and vanities of life.

I may take this opportunity of correcting a very careless slip in the version of Mos. ii. 96, where ἀτυφίας was translated as if it was τύφου.

§ 28. (Comparison of these sections with De Agr. 148-156.) This is the most striking example of the way in which Philo alternates between a penetrating criticism of the Pentateuch and literal orthodoxy. In the De Agr. the law on this point is discussed in a dialogue between a hostile critic (A.) and a defender (B.). A. remarks first, that those who hope to enjoy their possessions will make better soldiers than those who have no possessions to fight for, secondly, that if their country is conquered they will not enjoy them. To this last B. replies that they will not be captured. A. "On the contrary they will fare the worst, since being non-combatants they will not be able to protect themselves." B. "But they will be protected by the strength of their fellow-countrymen." A. "How shameful then that they should be living at ease, when their fellow-countrymen are suffering the hardships of war." B. "But it is hard that they should lose their lives before they have enjoyed what they have worked for." A. "Far less hard to die in battle and leave their property to their kinsfolk, than to live to see it fall into the hands of enemies."

PHILO

Philo does not actually say that he agrees with A., but he feels his arguments so forcible that he prefers to meet them by interpreting the passage with one of his most fantastic allegories. The war is the war of the wise against the clever sophist, which only those who are specially trained can undertake with success. He who is betrothed to a maiden represents the beginner in wisdom, the planter of the vineyard is anyone who is "progressing," and the builder of the house is he who has reached perfection. Yet all three without special training are unfit to undertake such a contest and had better hold their tongues.

§ 28. (See end of footnote 2.) I think Clement's introduction of στρατηγικῶς can be satisfactorily explained without supposing that he found anything corresponding to it in his text of Philo. In the chapter of the Stromateis in which this comes (ii. 18) he is showing that all the virtues, including φρόνησις and σωφροσύνη as well as δικαιοσύνη and ἀνδρεία, are enjoined in the Scriptures, and to prove this he makes a number of unacknowledged borrowings, almost extracts, from the De Virtutibus (see Gen. Introd., p. xii.). But while constantly reproducing Philo's phraseology he often adds explanations of his own, as for instance that noted on § 111 (p. 446). So too in quoting "thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian" (cf. § 106) he adds that by "Egyptian" a gentile may be meant, or indeed any κοσμικός ("worldly person"?). In dealing with § 28 he follows Philo very closely, even quoting Deut. xx. 5-7 from Philo's paraphrase instead of from the LXX, but he seems rather at a loss as to what moral is to be drawn. He reproduces Philo's φιλανθρωπία νόμου by ὁ φιλόανθρωπος νόμος κελεύει, but rightly observes that the second reason is not "philanthropic" but "strategic." He then passes on to the "philanthropic" side and, finally catching at Philo's words in § 29 about not rendering hopes futile, declares that the law is encouraging ἀνδρεία by pointing out that those who have built or planted may hope to enjoy the fruits of their labour. By στρατηγικῶς he may mean, I think, that the law is enjoining φρόνησις also. That the wise man is στρατηγικός, as well as having other qualities, is a Stoic maxim (S. V. F. iii. 567, i. 216).

§ 29. ὡς οὐ δέειν. Both Cohn and Mangey think that a causal clause giving the reason for χαλεπὸν ἔδοξεν is required rather than a consecutive. I do not feel this. "It is not right, because it is cruel" is as logical as "it is cruel, because it is not right." Cohn, Hermes, 1908, p. 211 gives as an additional reason that οὐ with a consecutive infinitive is bad grammar. This, I think, is quite wrong. In Oratio Obliqua, as this is, οὐ in such cases is a recognized, perhaps indeed the regular, usage (see Goodwin, Moods and Tenses, p. 227). But while Mangey would correct δεῖν to δέον, Cohn retains it as an example of the Attic use of δεῖν for the participle. He refers to an article by Usener, Jahrb. class. Philol. cv. 743 ff.), where examples of this usage, which is mentioned by the Greek grammarians, are quoted from Lysias, Xenophon and Plutarch. They seem to be authentic and suggest that the form is better established than the notice of it in L. & S. revised would lead one to think. Still, there seems no need to invoke it here.

APPENDICES

§ 31. ἣν ἀδυνατοῦν ἀπορρίψει. Lit. "which being without strength it will cast off." This is a strange expression, both in assigning the action to the body instead of the man and in the use of ἀδυνατέω without the infinitive expressed, as it is in e.g. § 12 above and § 88 below. Stephanus notes this as a rare usage but quotes no examples. It may perhaps be worth considering a correction to ἣν ἀδύνατον ἀπορρίψαι or ἣν ἀδύνατον ἦ ἀπορρίψαι. I think this has more point. The encumbrance could not be got rid of on the battlefield and so is analogous to the body from which the diseased soul cannot rid itself.

§ 34. (The Midianites.) Cohn notes here that Philo ascribes to the Midianites what the Bible (and also Philo in Mos. i. 300 ff.) relates of Balaam and the Moabites, because he is here concerned with the war of revenge which was waged against the Midianites for this act (Num. xxxi. 2 ff.). The note seems to me misleading. Philo steers his way rather well through the hopeless confusion, caused perhaps by the mixture of two different narratives. Num. xxv. begins with stating that the daughters of Moab led Israel into fornication and idolatry. But after this the Moabites disappear. It is a Midianitish woman who is killed by Phinehas (v. 7), Midianites who are to be smitten for "beguiling you in the matter of Peor" (v. 18), and Midianitish women who are all put to death because "they caused the children of Israel through the counsels of Balaam to commit trespass against the Lord in the matter of Peor" (xxx. 16). In Mos. i. 300 ff.

PHILO

Philo does not mention the Moabites or the Midianites at all. The war was waged against Balak (ibid. 305), but Balak has been described as one of the neighbouring kings who had brought under his sway a great and populous part of the East. That phrase looks as if he was trying to harmonize the narrative by supposing that Balak was king of Midian and Moab.

Josephus in Ant. iv. 102 ff. represents Balak as king of Moab, but having an ancestral alliance with the Midianites. He sends an embassy to them to enlist their help against Israel, and it is they who invite and press Balaam to come to their aid.

§ 34. πέρας καθιέντες. L. & S. (old and revised) s.v. καθήμι give for this phrase "make attempts," and cite Aelian, V.H. ii. 13 and N.A. i. 57. In the first of these the phrase is used of the intrigues of the accusers of Socrates to create a prejudice against him, in the second of a curious scheme devised by a parent to test the paternity of his presumed child. Taken together with our passage, the examples suggest that the phrase means more than the colourless "make attempts" and something like the "laid down snares" suggested in the footnote. The special sense belongs perhaps more to καθήμι than to πέρα. So L. & S. cite Aristoph. Vesp. 174 οἶαν πρόσφασιν καθῆκε, and Dion. Cass. i. 47 λόγους συμβατηρίου καθίει, where the context suggests insincerity.

§ 44. (Cf. footnote b, διαφωνεῖν.) This word occurs twice in the Pentateuch, Ex. xxiv. 11, and Num. xxxi. 49, as well as a few times elsewhere in the LXX. Both examples in the Pentateuch are quoted by Philo more than once, and of the former he says (fr. 59 Harris) that while the literal meaning of the text τῶν ἐπιλέκτων τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ οὐ διεφώνησεν οὐδὲ εἰς is that they were all kept safe, the inner meaning is that they were not out of harmony with the good. So too in De Conf. 56, and also on Num. xxxi. 49, there and elsewhere.

In a note on De Conf. 56 I was misled by the old L. & S., which following Stephanus's "extremam vocem edidit" disposed of this special use of διαφωνεῖν with "to breathe one's last," "die," "perish," "be lost." But the word does not in its literal sense mean to "cease speaking," and it is more likely that the special use is derived from the regular use for "speak differently," "be at discord." Though in later use it seems to have been strengthened to "die" or "perish," it need not mean in either place in the Pentateuch more than "suffer some harm," and Philo may be right in supposing that in Num. xxxi. διαπεφώνηκεν οὐδὲ εἰς means "all have come out unscathed."

APPENDICES

L. & S. revised deals with this usage more fully, but not very accurately. In Ex. xxiv. 11 it cannot mean "fail to answer roll-calls," "desert," and in the fragment, where it is opposed to συμφώνους, "fail" is misleading.

§ 78. Cohn is, I think, probably right in regarding this section as an interpolation, though his reasons are not all of equal strength. (1) The section is omitted in S, which he considers, I daresay rightly, the best authority. (2) αἰτήσεις ἀγαθῶν is an awkward expression for αἰτήσεις περὶ ἀγαθῶν. (3) θνητῶ ὅπως is a difficult hiatus. (4) ὑπάρχωσιν with a neuter plural is contrary to Philo's usage. (5) ἐπάν for ἐπειδάν is un-Philonic. (6) τοῦ τῆς σαρκὸς δεσμοῦ "belongs to a Christian interpolator." Philo would have said τοῦ σώματος. (7) The whole sentence is frigid ("frostig") and disturbs the connexion between §§ 77 and 79.

I think that (2) cannot have much weight when we compare εὐχή ἐστὶν αἰτήσις ἀγαθῶν, Quod Deus 87 and De Agr. 99. On (3) see note on Spec. Leg. iv. 40, App. p. 428. (4) may be true of Philo, but not always so of his scribes. See De Praem. 142 and 172, where the mss. have κενωθήσονται and βλαστώνουσι with neuter plural subjects, though Cohn has corrected them. (5) ἐπάν is found in the mss. of De Agr. 158 and retained in the text of Cohn, but the sentence is quite ungrammatical. There is not much in (6): σάρξ or σάρκες is often used as an alternative for σῶμα in opposition to ψυχή or νοῦς, and such a phrase as (ψυχαὶ) τὸν σαρκὸς φόρτον ἀχθοφοροῦσι is a fair parallel. But I quite agree with the last part of (7), and also have great doubt whether the thought is really Philonic. Philo's conception of immortality, when he uses the word in any literal sense, seems (as Kennedy says) "surrounded by a rarefied philosophical atmosphere," and altogether different from the ordinary Christian conception. And such passages as Quis Rerum 276 (of Abraham) and this and De Sac. 8 and Mos. ii. 288 (of Moses) do not lead me to expect that he would represent Moses as praying for "true goods" beyond the grave for his people.

§ 100. πενία or πενίας? (See footnote 1.) Clement's paraphrase is τούς τε πενία μακρῆ ὑποσχόντας δίκην μὴ διὰ βίου κολαζομένους ἐλεῶν. Here Cohn wished to correct μὴ to καὶ. But the text should stand, "pitying those who have undergone punishment through their long poverty, but (through his pity) do not suffer a lifelong punishment." The long poverty is clearly that of their years of dispossession.

PHILO

Perhaps πενία <πενίας> might be worth consideration, as an effective and very easy correction.

§ 111. Shave the hair of her head and pare her nails. Philo does not give, nor perhaps know any reason for this. Modern commentators apparently explain it taken in connexion with her change of dress as "elements in her purification from heathenism." See Adam Smith. Josephus, Ant. iv. 257 says nothing about the nails, but evidently takes the shaving of the head as a sign of mourning. Clement, Strom. ii. 18, while also ignoring the nails, supposed that the cutting off the hair is to test the self-control of her lover. "For if reason urges him to marry her, he will hold to her, even when she has become ugly."

§ 115. Nor yet keep her as a slave. So too Jos. Ant. iv. 259. Is this one of the cases where Philo shews some knowledge of or information about the Hebrew and corrects the LXX? But apart from the fact that the Hebrew verb (see Driver) is said to mean rather "play the master over her," the phrase "thou shalt not set her at naught (or treat her contemptuously), because thou hast humiliated her" naturally suggests that her status would be that of a slave, and the possibility of selling her suggests the same.

§ 122. Philo's interpretation of the law of slavery is difficult, and Heinemann in Bildung, pp. 329 ff., while discussing at length Philo's attitude to slavery, throws no light on the details. In what follows I must be understood as asking for enlightenment quite as much as giving it.

(1) The θῆτες (see footnote a) are persons who from sheer penury have sold themselves. So E.V. in Lev. xxv. 39, and so indeed Philo (ὑποβεβληκότας ἑαυτούς), though the LXX ἐὰν πρᾶθῃ τις would suggest that he had been sold by others. (2) From these are distinguished the debtors of "temporary loans," if that is the meaning of the word. They have not been sold, for the creditor retains the use of their services (§ 173). And indeed I do not think the Pentateuch recognizes the sale of a person for ordinary debt, though there are glimpses of the practice in the O.T. (2 Kings iv. 1 and elsewhere). Does the creditor simply make him work out his debt? (3) What are the other ways in which the free man is reduced to slavery? The thief unable to make restitution (Spec. Leg. iv. 3) would be a case in point, but what else?

APPENDICES

It should be noted that Philo in prescribing the seventh year for the release is following Exodus and Deuteronomy rather than Leviticus, which limits the release to the year of Jubile (xxv. 40). But he would hardly know this, for the LXX has there the "year of release" (ἀφέσεως), and in Deut. xv. 1 and 9 he would find the seventh year called by the same name.

§ 122. (Footnote c.) Out of respect for Mangey I give his ingenious, but I fear impossible, emendation and explanation of this which he calls "mendosus et mutilus locus." Reading παραβολῆς with F and apparently transposing ἐφημερινῶν, he suggests χρεώστας, τὸ τῆς παραβολῆς ἐφημέρων ὄνομα, κτλ., i.e. debtors, who, to use a figurative phrase, get the name and condition of one-day-creatures. He gives examples from Aristotle and Athenaeus to show that ἐφήμερα ζῶα is a name applied to animals who live only for a day, and the παραβολή consists in transferring the name to people who subsist on what they can borrow day by day. For this last he might have quoted ἐφημερόβιος in § 88.

§ 124. (Footnote a. In accordance with Attic law.) See Lipsius, Attisches Recht, p. 643 to the effect that a slave taking refuge in a sanctuary from the cruelty of his master had a right to demand to be sold to another. He quotes a fragment of Aristophanes, ἔμοι κράτιστόν ἐστιν εἰς τὸ Θησεῖον δραμεῖν, ἐκεῖ δ' ἔως ἂν πράσῃ εὐρωμεν μένειν.

The idea of the hearth as a sanctuary is, as both Goodenough and Heinemann point out, entirely Greek, not Jewish. The most familiar example is that of Themistocles at the hearth of Admetus (Thuc. i. 136). Cf. also on κωή ἐστία in De Praem. 154.

§ 139. For the practice here noted Cohn gives the following references. (a) Diodorus i. 77. Diodorus mentions it as an Egyptian law and adds that the same rule was observed by many Greeks, also as demanded by justice to the unborn child. (b) Aelian, V.H. v. 18, who ascribes it to the

PHILO

Areopagus at Athens. (c) Plutarch, De sera num. vind. 7 as an Egyptian law which has been copied (ἀπογράφασθαι) by some of the Greeks. (d) Roman law, as stated by Ulpian, Dig. xlviii. 19. 3. Clement in his paraphrase of this passage substitutes the Romans for Philo's "some legislators."

§ 152. (The maxim of Bias.) This in its original form as given by Diog. Laert. i. 5. 87 was φιλεῖν ὡς μισήσοντας· τοὺς γὰρ πλείστους εἶναι κακοὺς, and says nothing of "hating as about to love." And it is the first half which has attracted most attention, being regarded sometimes as merely enjoining caution in forming intimacies, sometimes as purely cynical. Thus Cic. De Am. xvi. 59 makes Scipio describe it as abominable and unworthy of a sage. It is quoted with the other half added, and attributed to Bias by Aristot. Rhet. ii. 13. 4, and later (ib. 21. 13), when, talking about the rhetorical value of maxims, he says that it would create an impression of amiability, if you say οὐ δεῖ, ὥσπερ φασί, φιλεῖν ὡς μισήσοντας, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον μισεῖν ὡς φιλήσοντας, showing that the kernel of the maxim is in general opinion the first part. Sophocles puts both parts into the mouth of Ajax (Aj. 679 ff.), but the stress is laid on the unreliability of friends, and Dem. Contra. Arist. 122, though he deals fairly with both sides, and concludes ἄχρι τούτου καὶ φιλεῖν, οἶμαι, χρή καὶ μισεῖν, μηδετέρου τὸν καιρὸν ὑπερβάλλοντας, is really concerned with warning against ill-considered acts of friendship.

Sandys on Aristot. Rhet. l.c. and Jebb on Soph. Aj. l.c. have collected other comments from later writers, such as Bacon, Montaigne and La Bruyère. I think it is worth while noting (1) that Philo, while quoting and commenting on both sides of the saying, is really concerned, unlike the others, with the lesson of forbearance in enmity, (2) that he applies the maxim in a way that no other does to international relations, (3) that the fact that neither of the two great scholars mentioned cites this passage reflects the neglect generally shown in England by classicists to Philo during the last hundred years.

§ 185. καθάπερ (or καθ' ὅπερ) αὐτὸς αἰρεῖται. A possible emendation might be καθ' ὅπερ <αὐτὸν> αὐτὸς αἰρεῖται <εἶναι>. This would obviously be easily corrupted into what we have. Or again there may be an allusion to the double choice mentioned in the text, καθὰ ὅνπερ αὐτὸς αἰρεῖται αὐτὸν αἰρεῖται, with or without εἶναι added = "as He whom he himself chooses, chooses him (to be).” In this case αὐτός = the man, in the former it = God.

APPENDICES

§ 188. (Last part.) Mangey, like Cohn, takes ἀργυρος . . . ὑπηρεσίαν as a parenthesis, so making αὐγοειδέστατον . . . ιδόντες an attribute of men who have only sipped wisdom. He translates εὐόκασι, κτλ. by “assimilantur his qui in principatu ad negotia administranda constituti sunt virtutis tanquam reginae ministerio servientes.” This, apart from other difficulties, gives an impossibly high character to the inferior goods. Mangey, as perhaps also Cohn, failed to see that πρός, instead of expressing a connexion, might bear the quite common sense of “in comparison with”!

I may not have done justice to their view that ιδόντες goes back to τινες. But the form of the sentence postulated seems to me almost impossibly awkward, and the change of metaphor is as abrupt as on my hypothesis.

§ 189. Give the name of noble only to the . . . just. This sentiment is no doubt a definite Stoic doctrine on a line with the other paradoxes about the sage being rich, king, etc. Chrysippus asserted the worthlessness of εὐγένεια in the literal sense, declaring it to be “mere scrapings and offscourings” (περίττημα καὶ διάξυσμα), and supported his argument by quotations from Homer (Plut. De Nobilitate 17 and 12). Cohn quotes Sen. De Benef. iii. 28. 1 “nemo altero nobilior, nisi cui rectius ingenium et artibus bonis aptius.” Cf. Ep. 44 passim, e.g. “Quis est generosus? Ad virtutem bene a natura compositus.” But outside Stoicism it is a common piece of moralizing, from Eur. fr.

ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἐσθλὸς εὐγενὴς ἔμοι γ' ἀνὴρ, ὁ δ' οὐ δίκαιος, κἂν ἀμείνονος πατρὸς Ζητὸς πεφύκη, δυσγενὴς εἶναι δοκεῖ, down to Tennyson's “'tis only noble to be good.” See the collection of quotations in Stobaeus, Fl. lxxxvi. The best known statement of it in ancient literature is Juv. viii. 20 “nobilitas sola est atque unica virtus.”

§ 208. Except . . . policy. Before definitely accepting Cohn's condemnation of this clause, one would like to know what he thought of Clement's evidence. Clement, after giving a short summary of Philo's remarks about Jacob and Esau with a very similar wording, adds ἡ δὲ οἰκονομία αὕτη καὶ προφητικὴ καὶ τυπικὴ. Cohn quotes the summary but not the addition. The use of the word οἰκονομία looks like a reminiscence of the clause, but nothing is said about the hands.

PHILO

Also in Quaest. in Gen. iv. 206, Jacob's answers to his father are described as a "virtutis dispensatio," where we may reasonably assume that the Greek word translated by "dispensatio" is οἰκονομία. The context shews that the οἰκονομία is a euphemistic word for a stratagem or, as I have translated it, "an act of policy." If the clause is genuine that will be the meaning here.

On the other hand οἰκονομία in the Fathers often means a divine dispensation, an over-ruling of evil by good (cf. the Jewish view of Tamar's sin in the next note). Stephanus among his examples of this use quotes Chrysostom on this particular case. "Jacob has deceived his father, but it was not an ἀπατή but an οἰκονομία." This is the sense in which, as the adjectives show, Clement uses the word, and presumably also the interpolator, if the clause is an interpolation. So too Mangey, who translates "quadam certa providentia."

On the whole I incline to the view that the clause, so peculiarly inept where the point is the permanent difference of the two, is spurious, and that Clement's phrase is independent of Philo, an early expression of the Christian feeling that Jacob's mendacity needs justification.

§ 221. Tamar. "The story of Tamar," says Cohn, "is greatly idealized." In the allegorizing of her story in De Fug. 149 ff., De Mut. 134 ff. and elsewhere, we do not expect any censure. But this beatification of the actress in what to our minds is a peculiarly shocking story outdoes the other extravagances of the De Nobilitate. A number of Rabbinical comments are collected in Strack and Billerbeck's Talmudic commentary on Matthew i. 3. I do not think they show much signs of admiration for Tamar, though the sin of her and Judah is regarded as overruled by Providence. One reason for this seems to be as follows: Tamar was believed to be of pure blood descended from Shem (quite in opposition to Philo). Judah had married a Canaanite (Gen. xxxviii. 2) and her sons were tainted. The union between him and Tamar produced the offspring which was fit to be the progenitor of David and the Messiah.

APPENDIX TO DE PRAEMIIS ET POENIS

(The title.) This, which is given by Cohn as printed here, except that I have ventured to mark a doubt as to the fitness of the addition περὶ ἀρῶν, is founded on Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. ii. 18. 5, who in enumerating the works of Philo known to him speaks of this as τὸ περὶ τῶν προκειμένων τοῖς μὲν ἀγαθοῖς ἄθλων τοῖς δὲ πονηροῖς ἐπιτιμίων καὶ ἀρῶν. But if Eusebius is to be understood as giving a formal title traceable to Philo himself, is there any reason why it should not be given in full? In itself the title does not seem very appropriate. If the "curses" are to be distinguished from the "punishments," the "blessings" must also be distinguished from the "rewards."

§§ 4-6. The allusion may perhaps be to the conduct, good or bad, of the people in the wilderness after the Sinaitic giving of the Law, but as the warnings are so largely drawn from Deuteronomy, which Philo accepts as Moses' final message, it seems more likely that he is thinking of the subsequent history. If so, and indeed in any case, the absence of any definite notice of persons or events, and of any attempt to draw the moral which the books themselves draw of the punishment of the people for apostasy and their restoration on repentance, is remarkable. The only person of whom anything substantial is said is Samuel, and what is said of him has no historical bearing. And this is still more true of Gideon, who is mentioned in De Conf. 130.

§ 8. Triptolemus. The story told here is given by Ovid, Met. v. 642 ff. Ceres harnessed two winged dragons or snakes to her car and sent it to Athens to Triptolemus, who rode in it through the air over Europe and Asia and scattered the corn seeds. In Verg. Georg. i. 19 he is also the inventor of the plough.

§ 23. (Noah and Deucalion.) This identification is, I think, unique in Philo. Though he often mentions Greek mythical personages, and not always with signs of disbelief (e.g. Pasiphaë in Spec. Leg. iii. 44 f.), he nowhere equates them with Old Testament characters. (The identification of the Aloeidae with the Babel-builders which Mangey suggested at De Som. ii. 283 is quite impossible, see my note there.) As for this particular identification, which of course is especially easy, neither Mangey nor Cohn quote any real parallel. Cohn indeed notes that Theophilus, a Christian writer of the late second century A.D., thought that the Greeks had given the name of Deucalion to Noah because he said δεῦτε καλέϊ ὑμᾶς ὁ θεὸς εἰς μετάνοιαν, but I have seen no evidence that it was made by Jews of Philo's time. The nearest parallel I have found is in Malchus, otherwise called Cleodemus, on whom see Schürer, Jewish People (Eng. trans.) ii. 3, pp. 209 f. Malchus stated that Abraham's three sons by Keturah accompanied Heracles to Libya, and that Heracles married the daughter of one of them. Schürer calls Malchus "a classic example of that intermixture of Oriental and Greek tradition which was popular throughout the region of Hellenism." But none of the Graeco-Jewish writers whom he mentions show anything really similar.

PHILO

§ 44. μετακληθείς. To understand this of the change of name from Jacob to Israel is certainly tempting, though we might have expected Philo to enlarge a little more on the point, if he mentions it at all. Also there is no particular point in speaking of Jacob here as summoned or invited by God. And it would be natural enough for μετα- in this compound as in so many others to express change. On the other hand there is no authority for the usage; Tzetzes (twelfth century A.D.), cited by Stephanus, can hardly count. Philo uses the word elsewhere in the sense of "summoned" or perhaps "summoned away" (De Som. i. 188 cannot be quoted as an exception; see note on vol. v. pp. 601 ff.), and what is perhaps more important, throughout De Mut. 57-129, where he treats at length of the changes of name, including that of Jacob, he uses μετονομάζω. The other reading καταβληθείς has, on Cohn's principles, inferior authority and would of course require correction. Mangey suggested κατηχηθείς = "instructed," and translated "informatus." Perhaps κατ-ελεηθείς, cf. ἠλέησε in § 39.

§ 46. (Monad and dyad.) The doctrine is the same as that ascribed to the Pythagoreans by Diogenes Laertius

APPENDICES

viii. 25 ἀρχὴν μὲν ἀπάντων μονάδα· ἐκ δὲ τῆς μονάδος ἀόριστον δυάδα ὡς ἂν ὕλην τῇ μονάδι αὐτῷ αἰτίῳ ὄντι ὑποστηῆναι· ἐκ δὲ τῆς μονάδος καὶ τῆς ἀόριστου δυάδος τοὺς ἀριθμούς, “the principle of all things is the monad or unit; arising from the monad the undefined dyad or two serves as material substratum to the monad which is cause; from the monad and undefined dyad spring numbers” (Hicks). The passage continues that “from numbers come points, from points lines, from lines plane figures, from plane figures solid figures, from solid figures sensible bodies,” whence ultimately the universe. With the epithet “undefined” (ἀόριστος) here applied to the dyad, that is, passive matter, compare its application to αἰσθητῆ φύσις in § 36. A fuller discussion of these ideas is given by Zeller, Presocratic Philosophy (Eng. trans.), vol. i. pp. 387 ff.

§§ 49-51. As suggested in Gen. Introd. to vol. vi. p. xi, this passage gives the best clue to Philo's meaning in adapting to spiritual experience and applying to the three Patriarchs the formula “Nature, Instruction, Practice” which runs through ancient educational literature from Plato and Aristotle to Cicero and Quintilian. Except possibly in the case of Jacob this application does not rest on the history of the three. The starting-point is that Isaac's name means “joy,” and Philo would argue that in education joy is the characteristic of the student who learns naturally and instinctively. Carried over to the spiritual sphere, joy is the characteristic of the soul which instinctively knows God's will, has not any temptation to disobey it and finds a ground for rejoicing even in what would naturally be displeasing (cf. § 30). So with Abraham. In education readiness to believe belongs to the mind which is most susceptible to teaching; and though Abraham's name does not, like Isaac's, supply a suitable clue, the emphasis laid on his faith in Genesis fits him to represent Instruction. The argument needed to fit Jacob into the formula is more strained. But his second name of Israel = “Seeing God,” does express the attainment which is the result of practice, and his history, which, though Philo does not suggest it, was subjected to more vicissitudes than the other two, would assist the idea.

In education it was recognized that all three were indispensable, though in different degrees, to every mind for successful study, and Quintilian stresses this in Inst.

PHILO

Pr. 27. Philo makes the same point for the spiritual life in De Abr. 53.

§ 55. (Definition of νόμος.) Cohn rightly calls attention to this, as the accepted definition of νόμος by the Stoics (see Index to S. V. F. s. v.). The more exact form seems to be λόγος ὀρθὸς προστάτων (προστακτικός), κτλ. or sometimes λόγος φύσεως, κτλ. So Cic. De Leg. i. 6. 18 "lex est ratio summa insita in natura, quae iubet ea quae facienda sunt, prohibetque contraria." Philo quotes it in this form in De Ios. 29. Cf. also Mos. ii. 4, where, as here, he connects it with kingship.

§ 60. σπορὰν . . . ἡμερον. ἡμερος when applied to vegetation of any kind often means simply "cultivated," as opposed to "wild." So e.g. Spec. Leg. iv. 209, but at other times it takes on something of what it connotes when applied to animals or men, i.e. the qualities of a domesticated animal or a civilized man. So in § 8, where it is applied to bread-food as opposed to acorns, the translation "kindly," though not quite satisfactory, gives the meaning better than "cultivated" would. Here too the meaning is, I think, more than "thriving" alone would give (Cohn, "gut gedeihen"). The crop is "responsive" to the trouble taken on it.

§ 65. (The twelve sons of Jacob and the Zodiac.) For this connexion of the twelve tribes and their founders with the Twelve Signs cf. De Som. ii. 111 ff., where Philo is discussing Gen. xxxvii. 9-11, where Joseph says "the sun and moon and eleven stars did obeisance to me," thus "classing himself as the twelfth to complete the Zodiac."

It seems to be agreed that the Signs are mentioned in Job xxxviii. 32 under the name of the Mazzaroth (a word copied without translation by the LXX), and many modern scholars have thought that Gen. xxxvii. 9 actually refers to them, some indeed finding traces of them in the blessing of Jacob in ch. xlix. Whether this is so or not, Philo naturally took the words so, but the tone of that passage, where Joseph's presumption is condemned, is very different from this, where the twelve tribes are the earthly counterpart of the twelve great heavenly bodies. It would be interesting to know how far the idea was current in Philo's time. An article by Feuchtwanger, in Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums, 1915, pp. 241-267, gives an account of the place held by the Zodiac in Rabbinical tradition, but mostly in later times, and does not dwell much upon its relation to the tribes and their founders. One point mentioned (also by the Jewish Encyclopaedia, s.v. Zodiac) is the tradition that each of the tribes had one of the Signs on its banner.

APPENDICES

§ 78. (The lacuna.) This evidently contained the end of the story of Korah and something at the beginning of the Blessings. But was there anything else? I think that there is good reason to think that there was something, and perhaps a good deal. Eight examples have been given of rewards against two of punishments. Also in § 7 he has classified both under five heads, individuals, families, cities, nations and countries, great regions of the earth. In Mos. ii. 53-56 he has signalized the Flood and the destruction of the cities of the plain as the two great judgements of God upon the unrighteous. These fit the fifth and third of the heads, and it is unlikely that he would fail to mention them here whether briefly or at length. Possibly he may have cited also the disasters which befell the Egyptians through the plagues and at the Red Sea to cover "nations and countries."

If it is objected that, while he has stated that the rewards also fall under the five heads, he is content to stop at the second, one answer might be that the expansion of Jacob's family into a great nation, with its "orderly cities, schools of wisdom, justice and religion" (§ 66), though mentioned as the reward of Jacob's family, is also a reward to the nation and its cities. But a better answer is that, apart from this, there were no good examples of the other heads to give. The preservation of Zoar might have been quoted as an example of a city rewarded, though this is not in Genesis ascribed to its merits, but otherwise what record is there in the Pentateuch of any larger nation or city being so rewarded? I think we must conclude that § 7 is loosely worded, and that the full classification applies only to the punishments.

The part lost at the beginning of the Blessings need not have been more than a single sentence stating that Moses promised that in the future also prosperity would be the reward of obedience and misfortune of disobedience.

§ 87. (Pacification of wild beasts.) Philo has no authority for this in the Pentateuch beyond Lev. xxvi. 6 "I will destroy evil (or wicked) beasts out of your land." It seems to me impossible to doubt that he is thinking of Isaiah xi. 6-9 or perhaps rather that he reads the text in Leviticus in the light of Isaiah ; that is a straining of which he is not incapable. I do not understand Heinemann's remark (Bildung, p. 419), that "it is noteworthy that he does not appeal to Isaiah xi." Apparently he thinks that Philo has no direct knowledge of that passage ("schwerlich hat er von dieser Stelle unmittelbare Kenntniss"). If this means that the absence of any direct statement that the thought comes from Isaiah shows ignorance of the passage, I entirely disagree. Philo never mentions Isaiah by name, but quotes from him four times as one of the prophets and once (Quis Rerum 25, Isaiah l. 4) without any indication that it is a quotation. Here he gives the substance of Isaiah's description spiritualized by the thought that this can never come about till the "wild beasts within ourselves" are tamed, a thought which to his mind, in which the allegorical is always seen behind the literal, would be assisted by the epithet πονηρά = "wicked," applied to the beasts in Leviticus.

PHILO

Besides Isaiah, Philo may have had in mind Job v. 23 (of the righteous) "the savage beasts shall be at peace with them," and still more, Hosea ii. 18 "I will make for them in that day a covenant with the wild beasts of the field, and the birds of heaven, and the reptiles of the earth." Both these books were known to him and are quoted (Job being mentioned by name).

Heinemann goes on to say that Philo must certainly have drawn from the "Wise Sayings" (Weissagungen), for which he gives a reference to the Sibylline Oracles iii. 788, since the Greek pictures of the "Beast-peace" are by no means so authoritative as to have given him the conception. This may be true, but it seems to me that he could find enough authority in Scripture itself.

§ 89. Maltese dogs. This breed is mentioned by Strabo vi. p. 277, by Athenaeus xii. p. 518 (of the Sybarites ἔχαιρον τοῖς Μελιταίοις κυνιδίοις), and by Pliny, Hist. Nat. iii. 26, where they are called "catulos."

§ 111. τοῖς ὀνόμασι κυρίοις. κύρια ὀνόματα, said in L. & S. to signify "authorized, proper or literal words," are, according to Aristot. Rhet. iii. 2. 2, ordinary words as opposed to those which are figurative, foreign, archaic or in any way uncommon (Cope). Philo often uses the phrase for a proper or personal name (e.g. Mos. ii. 207: people do not as a rule address a parent by his κύριον ὄνομα), but more often for a word which exactly expresses its meaning, e.g. De Conf. 192, Moses when he spoke of God "confounding" the languages at Babel did not mean that He divided them, for then he would have used a κυριώτερον such as τομή or διάκρισις. Sometimes it means a word which brings out some true or striking aspect, e.g. Quod Deus 139, "seers" (δρώντες) was a κύριον ὄνομα for prophets. Here the use is extended further. "Day" is κύριον, because it expresses the lesson which Philo draws more exactly than "years" for instance would, and "number" is κύριον, because it brings out a similar lesson more exactly than "all thy days" would. Thus the phrase has been made to mean something almost the opposite of what we should call literal, and so also does the phrase "literally true" as often used in English. (See also note to Mos. ii. 38 (vol. vi. p. 606).)

APPENDICES

§ 111. οὐτ' ἐν λόγῳ . . . οὐτ' ἐν ἀριθμῶ. Mangey quotes Iamblichus, Vita Pythagorae 208, where it is said that his disciples who remembered him told how τοὺς μὲν ἐταίρους ἦγεν ἴσον μακαρέσσι θεοῖσι, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους ἠγείτ' οὐτ' ἐν λόγῳ οὐτ' ἐν ἀριθμῶ.

Cf. also Callimachus, Ep. 25, and Theocritus xiv. 48, where it is in the form οὔτε λόγῳ τινὸς ἄξιοι οὐτ' ἀριθματοί.

§ 123. In which God . . . walks as in a palace. St. Paul, quoting freely Lev. xxvi. 12, also gives ἐν the sense of "in" rather than "among" in 2 Cor. vi. 16 "We are the temple of the living God; as God said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them" (so E.V. rightly).

§ 154. (The symbols of peace.) Salt has been used in this sense, De Ios. 210, and joined with libations in Spec. Leg. iii. 96. On the altar of mercy Mangey says that there was an altar of that name at Athens founded by the descendants of Heracles and used as an asylum for suppliants. I do not know what evidence he has for his statement about the founders. He refers to the scholiast on Soph. O.C. 260 ἐπεὶ καὶ Ἐλέου βωμὸς ἐν Ἀθήναις ἴδρυνται, and Pausanias (presumably of Athens) τοὺς εἰς ἐλέου βωμὸν καταφυγόντας ἀσυλίαν ἔχειν. He does not give the reference for this, but see Paus. i. 17 Ἀθηναίους δὲ ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ καὶ ἄλλα ἐστὶν οὐκ ἐς ἅπαντας ἐπίσημα καὶ Ἐλέου βωμὸς, φ' μάλιστα θεῶν ἐς ἀνθρώπινον βίον καὶ μεταβολὰς πραγμάτων ὅτι ὠφέλιμος, μόνου τιμὰς Ἑλλήνων νέμουσιν Ἀθηναῖοι. If, judging from this, we may take the Altar of Mercy as an allusion to the Athenian institution, it might give some ground for giving κοινὴ ἐστία, which otherwise might be taken in a general way, as in De Virt. 124, the special sense of the altar placed in the Prytaneium of a city for state sacrifices, or the further hospitality given to ambassadors and others. See references in L. & S. and more fully in Stephanus.

PHILO

§ 154. All are through Seven and are Seven. Cohn translates "denn alles geschieht mit Hilfe des Sabbats und ist Sabbatfeier." Here, by giving Sabbath for ἑβδομάς, as he generally does, he fails to express the potency and sanctity of the number itself. Mangey has "omnia vel sunt hebdomas vel pertinent ad hebdomadem." Both these seem to take πάντα as "all things in general" rather than "they all," i.e. the symbols just mentioned. I have not noticed any real parallel to this. In Spec. Leg. ii. 156, speaking of the feast of unleavened bread which is held for seven days "to mark the precedence and honour which the number holds in the universe," he adds, "the sacred seven which He intended to be the source and fountain to men of all good things." For "all are seven" cf. De Fug. 173 "Peace and Seven are identical." Both these point to limiting the scope of πάντα.

§ 171. The days of their misfortunes (or inauspicious days.) See on Spec. Leg. iii. 183. Is there any specific allusion?

Massebieau's translation "decreed that they (the Jews) should observe their ill-omened (or abominable) public festivals" can hardly be got out of the Greek. Possibly "their fast-days." The Law knows of only one regular fast-day, the Day of Atonement. But after the Captivity four such were appointed (Jewish Encyclopaedia on Fasting and Fast-days). Heinemann, Bildung, p. 97, says that Philo betrays no knowledge of them, but on the other hand, in describing the Law he has no occasion to do so. But, on the whole, it seems better to take the words generally of what naturally happens to a conquered nation. The celebration of the conqueror's victories is a celebration of their defeat.

PHILO

IN TEN VOLUMES (AND TWO SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES)

IX

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

F. H. COLSON, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS
HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS

LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD

MCMLXXXV

CONTENTS OF VOLUME IX

	PAGE
PREFACE . . . . .	vii
LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS . . . . .	xi
EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE (QUOD OMNIS PROBUS LIBER SIT)
Introduction . . . . .	2
Text and Translation . . . . .	10
ON THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE OR SUPPLIANTS (DE VITA CONTEMPLA- TIVA)
Introduction . . . . .	104
Text and Translation . . . . .	112
ON THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD (DE AETERNITATE MUNDI)
Introduction . . . . .	172
Text and Translation . . . . .	184
FLACCUS (IN FLACCUM)
Introduction . . . . .	295
Text and Translation . . . . .	302

CONTENTS

	PAGE
HYPOTHETICA (APOLOGIA PRO IUDAEIS)
Introduction . . . . .	407
Text and Translation . . . . .	414
ON PROVIDENCE (DE PROVIDENTIA)
Introduction . . . . .	447
Text and Translation—
Fragment I . . . . .	454
Fragment II . . . . .	458
APPENDICES
I. To Quod Omnis Probus Liber Sit . . . . .	509
II. To De Vita Contemplativa . . . . .	518
III. To De Aeternitate Mundi . . . . .	525
IV. To In Flaccum . . . . .	531
V. To Hypothetica . . . . .	539
VI. To De Providentia . . . . .	541

PREFACE TO VOLUME IX

THE six treatises or parts of treatises comprised in this volume are of a very different nature from the eight preceding volumes. In those the all-engrossing subject has been the interpretation of the Pentateuch, illustrated to a small extent from the rest of the Old Testament and largely, throughout the first five which we have called the Commentary, from Greek philosophy. In this volume only one part, the fragment of the Hypothetica preserved by Eusebius, takes any serious account of the Pentateuch, and it treats it with a method and in a spirit which has nothing in common with the philosophical allegorizing of the Commentary and bears only a superficial resemblance to the full and orderly classification and the abundance of striking thoughts which distinguish the Exposition. Of the other five treatises three are purely philosophical and differ entirely from the other two. One of these is to some extent autobiographical and deals with contemporary history. It is closely related to the longer Legatio which is reserved for the final volume, but stands quite apart from the remaining one, the De Vit. Cont., which describes the life of a particular community, whether we take this, as is generally assumed, to be a typical example of a widespread movement, or, as I should prefer, an isolated and perhaps ephemeral institution which happened to be well known to Philo and secured his friendship and admiration. Even the three philosophical treatises are very heterogeneous. The first deals with that kernel of Stoic ethics, the self-sufficiency of the virtuous man, the second with the mystery of the universe, the third with its divine government. The volume as a whole is an ample proof of the versatility of Philo's mind, but yet to me at least it is far less interesting than the other eight. I expect that this is true also of the great majority of those who throughout the centuries have made a careful study of Philo, and that what I have suggested with regard to the Quod Omn. Prob., that it owes its preservation not so much to its intrinsic merits as to the interest and respect created by Philo's main work, is true more or less of the other five treatises.

PREFACE

In view of this it is odd to find that there has been more translation into English of the contents of this volume than of all the rest of Philo. In the first five volumes of Cohn-Wendland the German translation by different hands has appeared at intervals, but there has been no rendering into English except of isolated passages between Yonge and this translation. For this volume the German version is no doubt either in preparation or has been completed and possibly published, but I have heard nothing of it.<sup>a</sup> In English on the other hand we have Conybeare's version of the De Vit. Cont., which supplements his great and important commentary, Gifford's versions of the Hypothetica, and of the De Prov. as well as of 16 sections of the Quod Omn. Prob. contained in the translation which forms part of his monumental edition of the Praeparatio, and Box's translation of the Flaccus in his recent edition of that treatise. While I have been careful not to look at any of the translations before making my own I have found comparison with them very useful, leading sometimes to correction or at least reconsideration, though I have abstained from borrowing their phraseology even when I prefer it to my own. But I must say something more about Mr. Box's work. I cannot of course judge the comparative merits of the two translations, but his historical introduction and commentary on historical points is on a scale which I could not attempt to rival, and my much shorter notes even when they embody different conclusions from his are largely founded on them. What a pity that the same pains and research have never been used to produce so complete a commentary on the real, the theological and philosophical side of Philo's work!

<sup>a</sup> We have, however, Bernays' earlier version of the De Aeternitate.

PREFACE

It was clearly right to include either in this or the next volume the extracts made by Eusebius from the otherwise unknown Hypothetica. The extracts are so substantial that it is much to be regretted that they were omitted in the Editio Maior of Cohn-Wendland, and their inclusion in the Editio Minor makes only partial amends, as that has no Apparatus Criticus. The other great set of extracts from the De Prov. are in a different position, as the whole treatise survives in the Armenian, and it was a doubtful question whether it should not be relegated to a separate volume containing that and also the other treatise only known in the Armenian, the De Animalibus. But at any rate by the course which we have adopted the reader will have ultimately in his hands all that substantially survives of Philo in the original Greek.

PREFACE

The text of the first three treatises was edited by Cohn himself. Here his work both in the text itself and in the subsequent discussion of points in Hermes, 1916, ended, and the rest of his volume six, i.e. the Flaccus and Legatio, was edited by Reiter. I have as in previous volumes taken their text for my base, but, largely because I felt that I was moving in a less familiar region, I have adhered to it more closely and confined my suggested corrections almost entirely to the footnotes instead of substituting them in the text, even in cases such as that of p. 52 where I feel fairly confident of the correction proposed. In the two Eusebian items I have taken for my base what seemed to be the most authoritative, i.e. the text of the Editio Minor for the Hypothetica and the latest edition (Gifford's) for the De Prov., but compared them with other editions and noted the alternatives. These alternatives I have occasionally adopted, and as the notes both at the foot and in the Appendix will show, there are other cases where further reflection makes me think that the alternatives are superior. But at any rate so long as the alternatives are clearly indicated it matters little whether they appear in the notes or in the body of the text.

F. H. C.

CAMBRIDGE
March 1941

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

SHOWING THEIR DIVISION INTO VOLUMES IN THIS EDITION

VOLUME

- I. On the Creation (De Opificio Mundi)
Allegorical Interpretation (Legum Allegoriae)
- II. On the Cherubim (De Cherubim)
On the Sacrifices of Abel and Cain (De Sacrificiis Abelis et Caini)
The Worse attacks the Better (Quod Deterius Potiori insidiari solet)
On the Posterity and Exile of Cain (De Posteritate Caini)
On the Giants (De Gigantibus)
- III. On the Unchangeableness of God (Quod Deus im-mutabilis sit)
On Husbandry (De Agricultura)
On Noah's Work as a Planter (De Plantatione)
On Drunkenness (De Ebrietate)
On Sobriety (De Sobrietate)
- IV. On the Confusion of Tongues (De Confusione Lin-guarum)
On the Migration of Abraham (De Migratione Abrahami)
Who is the Heir (Quis Rerum Divinarum Heres)
On the Preliminary Studies (De Congressu quaerendae Eruditionis gratia)
- V. On Flight and Finding (De Fuga et Inventione)
On the Change of Names (De Mutatione Nominum)
On Dreams (De Somniis)
- VI. On Abraham (De Abrahamo)
On Joseph (De Iosepho)
Moses (De Vita Mosis)

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

VOLUME

- VII. On the Decalogue (De Decalogo)
On the Special Laws Books I-III (De Specialibus Legibus)
- VIII. On the Special Laws Book IV (De Specialibus Legibus)
On the Virtues (De Virtutibus)
On Rewards and Punishments (De Praemiis et Poenis)
- IX. Every Good Man is Free (Quod Omnis Probus Liber sit)
On the Contemplative Life (De Vita Contemplativa)
On the Eternity of the World (De Aeternitate Mundi)
Flaccus (In Flaccum)
Hypothetica <sup>1</sup> (Apologia pro Iudaeis)
On Providence <sup>1</sup> (De Providentia)
- X. On the Embassy to Gaius (De Legatione ad Gaium)
- GENERAL INDEX TO VOLUMES I-X

SUPPLEMENT

- I. Questions and Answers on Genesis <sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesin)
- II. Questions and Answers on Exodus <sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Exodum)
- GENERAL INDEX TO SUPPLEMENTS I-II

<sup>1</sup> Only two fragments extant.

<sup>2</sup> Extant only in an Armenian version.

INTRODUCTION TO QUOD OMNIS PROBUS LIBER SIT

This treatise is usually believed to be a youthful essay of Philo's and we may well suppose that it belongs to a period of his life when he still had the dialectic of the philosophical schools fresh in mind and before he had settled down to his life's work of interpreting the Pentateuch. Its genuineness has been impugned but on no good grounds. It has the testimony of Eusebius, who names it in his list of Philo's works,<sup>a</sup> and also makes a long extract from it, and it is also used on a considerable scale by St. Ambrose though he does not name the author. But apart from these the close resemblance in style and language, remarkably close, considering the difference of subject to the main body of treatises, leaves little doubt as to the authorship.

The tract is an argument to show the truth of the Stoic "paradox" that the wise man alone is free. The paradoxes are one of the best known features of the Stoic system. The doctrine that all the gifts and qualities generally held desirable belong in the true sense to the virtuous or wise man is a natural deduction from the primary maxim that the morally excellent, τὸ καλόν, is the only good. Though they sometimes assume a fantastic form, as when the Stoics claimed, or were supposed to claim, that only the wise man could be a general or a pilot or a poet or a cobbler,<sup>a</sup> the more obvious ones that he alone is free or rich or noble or beautiful,<sup>b</sup> are really almost truisms which have been echoed by preachers and moralists in every age. But they put the doctrine in arresting forms which impressed the serious and also gave occasion for banter to those who observed that the life of the philosophers was not always consistent with their principles. Allusions to them and short explanations of their meaning abound in Stoic writings. The list compiled by Arnim (S.V.F.) contains some 120 items. But the peculiarity of this treatise is that it argues out the matter with a fullness and lengthiness unparalleled elsewhere,<sup>c</sup> though since the writings of the founders of Stoicism have not survived we cannot say how they may have treated it. At any rate the treatise, whatever its intrinsic merits, has this interest that we have in it a specimen of Stoic dialectic preserved to us almost by accident because it was part of the works of an author whose treatment of the Pentateuch appealed so strongly to the Christian mind.

<sup>a</sup> Eecl. Hist. ii. 18.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE

The length and fullness become still more remark-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Hor. Sat. i. 3. 128.

<sup>b</sup> "The wise man only is free, because he alone uses his own will and controls himself; alone beautiful, because only virtue is beautiful and attractive; alone rich and happy, because goods of the soul are the most valuable, and true riches consist in being independent of wants." Zeller, Stoics (Eng. trans.), p. 253.

<sup>c</sup> The most substantial discussions of this particular paradox known to me are Cicero's Paradoxa, ch. v., and Epictetus's Diss. iv. 1. Epictetus's meditation is much the longer of the two, but is too discursive to summarize. It lays more stress than Philo does on obedience to the will of God as the true freedom.

PHILO

able when we find that we have here only the second part of a disquisition, for Philo tells us in his opening sentence that it was preceded by "that every fool or bad man is a slave," which is also mentioned by Eusebius in the catalogue named above. Since mankind are divided into free and slaves and also, according to orthodox Stoicism, into wise and fools, then if the wise alone is free it must follow that a fool is a slave, and one cannot but think that the two should be taken together as they are by Cicero. However, it is a fact that the slavery of the bad though frequently just mentioned is never discussed at length in our treatise except in §§ 51 ff., where the argument that the wise enjoy the right of free discussion (ἰσηγορία), which is the mark of the free, is followed by the converse so completely worked out that it can hardly have been given in the earlier half. The slavery of lovesickness is also described at some length in § 38, but it is introduced there so incidentally that one would not be surprised to find it earlier. The main topic presumably was the slavery to the passions which is noted in § 45 and more fully in §§ 156 and 158 f. and is a subject capable of development to any extent. Slightly different to this is the slavery of the multitude to opinion, cf. § 21, and he may well have noticed also what Cicero gives as an example, the devotion to artistic objects. The description of a statesman who never cringes to the mob in De Ios. 67 suggests that something about the statesman who is in servitude to the people would be appropriate, and this again appears in Cicero. The thought that slavery in the sense of subjection to the wise is the best hope for the wicked, a moral which he draws from the story of Esau (§ 57) and from Noah's curse of Canaan in De

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE

Sob. 69,<sup>a</sup> may well have played a part. One thing we may be sure of is that examples were drawn from secular history such as the slavish fear of Dionysius or the impious infatuation of Xerxes<sup>b</sup> to correspond to the examples of philosophical heroism in which this tract abounds.

The great preponderance of secular illustration may be fairly regarded as another sign that this and the twin treatise belong to the youth of Philo. There are altogether only five allusions to or quotations from the Pentateuch. In this the treatise stands in marked contrast to the De Nob, which as I have pointed out elsewhere is really a dissertation on the twin paradox that the wise man is noble but is illustrated entirely from the Pentateuch.

It is a consequence of this predominantly secular character that to judge from Cohn's footnotes little use of the treatise was made by Christian writers with two marked exceptions. The first is the account of the Essenes in §§ 75-91, which is quoted in full by Eusebius, Praep. Ev. viii. 12. Eusebius has special reasons for making this extract. The other is the 37th letter of Ambrose, a large part of which is a kind of paraphrase of the Quod Omnis Probus. I have mentioned in my notes three passages from this which have some bearing on the text or its interpretation, but there are many others cited by Cohn.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Both these examples from Genesis are quoted by Ambrose xxxvii. 67, with the same moral.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Som. ii. 117 ff.

<sup>c</sup> One that is not noticed by Cohn is to be found in xxxvii. 33, where the "heavy hands" of Moses in Ex. xvii. 12 are cited as showing that the heart and deeds of the wise man should be steadfast and immovable. Cf. § 29.

In general it is interesting to observe how Ambrose

PHILO

The following is an analysis of the treatise.

After stating the subject of this and the preceding treatise Philo points out that such high doctrines are beyond the comprehension of the uneducated multitude (1-3) to whom they seem wild illusion (4-5). He gives a highly coloured picture of the way in which the ignorant react to the paradoxes that the wise and the foolish are respectively (a) citizens and exiles (6-7), (b) rich and poor (8-9) and says that they raise the same objection to the paradox of freedom and slavery which is here discussed (10). Such persons should like sick people put themselves under the guidance of the physician, that is the philosopher, and if they do so they will feel that they have wasted their past, whence we see the need of philosophical education for the young (11-15).

Coming to the main question, after pointing out that he is not dealing with freedom or slavery of the body (16-18) and declaring that the true freedom, like true sovereignty (though this does not concern us at present), lies in following God (19-20), he passes at once to the main point that the wise man is free from the domination of the passions (21-22). What the poet rightly says of the contempt of death is true of the contempt of other ills, and the wise man will assert manages to give a Christian and Biblical touch to the secular matter which he draws from Philo. Thus while noting the quotation from Sophocles, in § 19, he adds that David and Job said the same thing before Sophocles. The thought in §§ 38 ff. that masters, like the purchasers of lions, become slaves of their slaves is supported by Ambrose from Prov. xvii. 2 (Lxx) : " a wise servant rules a foolish master," and after giving the story of Calanus and his letter (§§ 93 ff.) almost verbatim, he points out that Calanus's heroism is surpassed by Laurence and the Three Children and the Maccabean martyrs.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE

his freedom by facing these bravely (22-25). This is supported by citing the resolution shown by pancratiasts (26-27); also the wise man is unmoved and thus has the leadership of the common herd (28-31). At this point he seems to digress <sup>a</sup> in order to show that some common conceptions of slavery are inconsistent. Such are (a) the fact of service, but soldiers serve without being slaves and the same is true of the impoverished free man, whilst slaves often have control of others (32-35), (b) the fact of having to obey, but children obey their parents yet are reckoned free (36), (c) of being purchased, but free men are ransomed and purchased slaves often rule their masters just as purchased lions intimidate their owners (37-40). The argument is resumed by showing that the wise man is (a) happy (41), (b) like Moses a friend of God and therefore free (42-44), also as law-abiding cities are considered free, so he also obeys the law of reason (45-47). Next comes an intricate argument on the ἰσχυροπία or right of discussion on an equal footing enjoyed by the wise (48-50) and not enjoyed by the fool (51-52), and this is supported by a saying of Zeno (53-56) which Philo supposes him to have derived from Moses's account of Isaac condemning Esau to be the slave of Jacob (57). A final argument is: "the wise man is free because he does right voluntarily, cannot be compelled to do wrong and treats things indifferent with indifference" (58-61).

Here till towards the end of the treatise the argument proper is dropped and we have several stories of persons who exemplify the picture of the wise man given above. These are introduced by a discussion whether such persons are to be found. Some doubt <sup>a</sup> See note on § 32.

PHILO

it (62), yet they do exist and have existed though they are scarce and also hard to find because they seek retirement from the wickedness of the world (62-63). We ought to seek them out instead of ransacking land and sea for jewels and the like (64-66) and we should remember the text, "the word is very near thee in thy mouth and thy heart and thy hand." The thoughts, words and deeds here symbolized will if properly cultivated produce good fruit (67-70), but we neglect this and consequently the rarity of the virtuous (71-72). Still they exist both in Greece itself and outside Greece, among the Persians and Indians (73-74), while in Palestine we have the Essenes (75). The long account of the Essenes which follows describes the innocence of their occupations (76-78), rejection of slave labour (79), devout study of the law, particularly on the Sabbath (80-82), threefold devotion to God, virtue and man (83-84), the last particularly shown by sharing house and property and providing for the sick and aged (84-87). Their excellence is attested by the respect shown them even by tyrants and oppressors (88-91). Passing on to individuals, we have the story of the Indian Calanus and his firm resistance to Alexander (92-97), and returning to the Greeks some examples from poetry and history, the picture of Heracles in Euripides (98-104) and, leaving demigods out as not fair specimens, Zeno the Eleate and Anaxarchus (105-109). Further, the dauntlessness shown by those who are not philosophers assures us that the true philosopher is still more dauntless. Among these are the athletes (110-113) and even boys and women (114-117), and whole people like the Xanthians (118-120). In these we see a fortitude which ends in their death, but there is also a fortitude in continuing to live, and so we here have a number of anecdotes of Diogenes, somewhat irrelevantly, since Diogenes was a philosopher (120-124). This leads to other stories of bold answering by Chaereas and Theodorus (125-130); after this digression we return to the fortitude which defies death, the example being fighting cocks who fight on till they are killed (131-135). Then there is another digression. That freedom in the ordinary sense is noble and slavery disgraceful is universally recognized (136-137) and examples of this feeling are given—the desire for political freedom shown by senates and generals (138-139), the abhorrence of slavery shown by exclusions of slaves from festivals and from the Argo (140-143). The remainder of the treatise is connected though loosely with the main theme. The wise man will scorn and have a ready answer for all attempts which threaten his independence (144-146) for, since actual slaves when in asylum often exhibit great boldness, the wise man will find a stronger asylum in his virtue (148-153) and will discard all crooked and crafty ways (154-155). It is absurd to suppose that manumission gives true liberty (156-157). The concluding sections (158-161) repeat the main doctrine that freedom lies in eliminating the passions and emphasize the need of education of the young to attain this end.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΠΑΝΤΑ ΣΠΟΥΔΑΙΟΝ ΕΛΕΥ-ΘΕΡΟΝ ΕΙΝΑΙ

[445]
1 I. Ὁ μὲν πρότερος λόγος ἦν ἡμῖν, ὧ Θεόδοτε, περὶ τοῦ δοῦλον εἶναι πάντα φαῦλον, ὡς καὶ διὰ πολλῶν καὶ εἰκότων καὶ ἀληθῶν ἐπιστωσάμεθα· οὗτοσί δ' ἐκείνου συγγενῆς, ὁμοπάτριος καὶ ὁμομήτριος ἀδελφὸς καὶ τρόπον τινὰ δίδυμος, καθ' ὃν
2 ἐπιδείξομεν, ὅτι πᾶς ὁ ἀστεῖος ἐλεύθερος. τὸν μὲν οὖν τῶν Πυθαγορείων ἱερώτατον θίασον λόγος ἔχει μετὰ πολλῶν καὶ ἄλλων καλῶν καὶ τοῦτ' ἀναδιδάσκειν, “ταῖς λεωφόροις μὴ βαδίζειν ὁδοῖς,” οὐχ ἵνα κρημνοβατῶμεν—οὐ γὰρ ποσὶ κάματον παρήγγελεν—, ἀλλ' αἰνιττόμενος διὰ συμβόλου τὸ μήτε λόγους μήτ' ἔργοις δημῶδεσι καὶ πεπατημένοις
3 χρῆσθαι. ὅσοι δὲ φιλοσοφίαν γνησίως ἠσπᾶσαντο, καταπειθεῖς γενόμενοι τῷ προστάγματι νόμον αὐτὸ μᾶλλον δὲ θεσμόν ἰσοῦμενον χρησμῶ ὑπετόπησαν, δόξας δ' ἀγελαιίους ὑπερκύψαντες ἀτραπὸν ἄλλην ἐκαινοτόμησαν ἄβατον<sup>1</sup> ἰδιώταις λόγων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἄλλην.

<sup>a</sup> See Introd. p. 4.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE

I. Our former treatise, Theodotus, had for its theme 1 “ every bad man is a slave ” and established it by many reasonable and indisputable arguments.<sup>a</sup> The present treatise is closely akin to that, its full brother, indeed, we may say its twin, and in it we shall show that every man of worth is free.<sup>b</sup> Now we are told 2 that the saintly company of the Pythagoreans teaches among other excellent doctrines this also, “ walk not on the highways.”<sup>c</sup> This does not mean that we should climb steep hills—the school was not prescribing foot-weariness—but it indicates by this figure that in our words and deeds we should not follow popular and beaten tracks. All genuine votaries of 3 philosophy have obeyed the injunction, divining in it a law, or rather super-law,<sup>d</sup> equivalent to an oracle.
Rising above the opinions of the common herd they have opened up a new pathway, in which the outside world can never tread, for studying and discerning

<sup>b</sup> On this and the Stoic “ paradoxes ” in general see Intro. pp. 2 ff.

<sup>c</sup> See Diog. Laert. viii. 17, where this occurs in a list of allegorical watchwords or precepts (σύμβολα) put forth by Pythagoras, others being “ Don’t stir a fire with a knife,” “ Don’t eat your heart,” and “ Don’t keep birds with crooked claws.” Diogenes Laertius explains a few of them. On the exact form of the one quoted here see App. p. 509.

<sup>d</sup> See App. p. 509.

PHILO

καὶ δογμάτων, ἰδέας ἀνατείλαντες ὧν οὐδενὶ μὴ 4 καθαρῷ θέμις ψαύειν. λέγω δὲ μὴ [446] καθαρούς, ὅσοι ἢ παιδείας εἰς ἅπαν ἄγευστοι | δι-ετέλεσαν ἢ πλαγίως ἀλλὰ μὴ ἐπ' εὐθείας αὐτὴν ἐδέξαντο κάλλος τὸ σοφίας εἰς τὸ σοφιστείας 5 αἰσχος μεταχαράξαντες. οὗτοι τὸ νοητὸν φῶς ἰδεῖν οὐ δυνάμενοι δι' ἀσθένειαν τοῦ κατὰ ψυχὴν ὄμματος, ὃ ταῖς μαρμαρυγαῖς πέφυκεν ἐπισκιάζεσθαι, καθάπερ ἐν νυκτὶ διάγοντες ἀπιστοῦσι τοῖς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ζῶσι καὶ ὅσ' ἂν αὐγαῖς ἀκράτοις τῶν ἡλιακῶν ἀκτίνων<sup>1</sup> εἰλικρινέστατα περιαιθήσαντες διηγῶνται τεράστια νομίζουσι φάσμασιν εἰκότα, τῶν ἐν τοῖς θαύμασιν οὐ διαφέροντα.
 6 πῶς γὰρ οὐκ ἐκτόπια καὶ θαύματ' ὄντως, φυγάδας μὲν καλεῖν τοὺς μὴ μόνον ἐν μέσῃ τῇ πόλει διατρίβοντας, ἀλλὰ καὶ βουλευοντας καὶ δικάζοντας καὶ ἐκκλησιαζοντας, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ ἀγορανομίας καὶ γυμνασιαρχίας καὶ τὰς ἄλλας λειτουργίας ὑπο-

<sup>1</sup> The text here is uncertain. All mss. except M have κρατούντων or ἐπικρατούντων after ἀκτίνων. But ἀκτίς is always feminine. Cohn follows M in the main, but does not give any satisfactory account of the presence of κρατούντων in the others.

<sup>a</sup> ἰδέα here in the Platonic sense equivalent to νοητὸν φῶς below.

<sup>b</sup> This section is clearly a reminiscence of the opening of Plato, Rep. vii. 514 ff. where mankind are compared to prisoners chained in a cave with their backs to a fire and unable to see more than the shadows cast by the passers-by, who even if released will be so dazzled by the daylight that they will still believe that the shadows are the reality.

<sup>c</sup> So Plato 515 c διὰ τὰς μαρμαρυγὰς ἀδυνατοὶ καθορᾶν ἐκεῖνα ὧν τότε τὰς σκιὰς εἴωρα.

<sup>d</sup> Philo is perhaps thinking of ibid. 514 B ὥσπερ τοῖς

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 3-6

truths, and have brought to light the ideal forms<sup>a</sup> which none of the unclean may touch.

By unclean I mean all those who without ever tasting<sup>4</sup> education at all, or else having received it in a crooked and distorted form, have changed the stamp of wisdom's beauty into the ugliness of sophistry. These,<sup>b</sup> unable to discern the conceptual light through<sup>5</sup> the weakness of the soul's eye, which cannot but be beclouded by the flashing rays,<sup>c</sup> as dwellers in perpetual night disbelieve those who live in the daylight, and think that all their tales of what they have seen around them, shown clearly by the unalloyed radiance of the sunbeams, are wild phantom-like inventions no better than the illusions of the puppet show.<sup>d</sup>

"Surely it is an absurdity," they think,<sup>e</sup> 6
"a mere showman's trick, to apply names in this way, to give the name of exile to men who not only spend their days in the heart of the city, but also sit as councillors, jurymen, and members of assembly, and sometimes undertake the burden of administering the market, or managing the gymnasium and the θauματοποιοῖς πρὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων πρόκειται τὰ παραφράγματα, ὑπὲρ ὧν τὰ θαύματα δεικνύσασιν. But see App. p. 509.

<sup>e</sup> While the sense requires beyond all question that the next four sections represent the views of the unphilosophical common man and in particular explain the word θαύματα ("puppet show" or "conjurer's trick") as applied just above to the paradoxes of the philosophers, it seems strange to find no word to indicate this. And anyone who reads the translations of Yonge or Mangey, where no such word is inserted, naturally starts off by taking these sections to be Philo's opinion, until he realizes that they will make hopeless nonsense. It is possible that φασί or some such word has fallen out, but not necessary. A somewhat similar air of approbation in stating opinions which are finally condemned may be found in Spec. Leg. i. 335-338.

PHILO

- 7 μένοντας, πολίτας δὲ τοὺς ἢ μὴ ἐγγραφέντας τὸ παράπαν ἢ ὧν ἀτιμία καὶ φυγὴ κατέγνωσται, πέραν ὄρων ἀνθρώπους ἐληλαμένους, οὐ μόνον οὐκ ἐπιβῆναι τῆς χώρας ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐξ ἀπόπτου τὸ πατρῶον ἔδαφος θεάσασθαι δυναμένους, εἰ μὴ τισι Ποιναῖς ἐλαύνοντο θανατῶντες; ἔφεδροι γὰρ καταστειχόντων κολασταὶ μυρίοι, καὶ δι' ἑαυτῶν ἠκονημένοι καὶ νόμων προστάξεσιν ὑπηρετοῦντες.
- 8 Π. πῶς δὲ οὐ παράλογα καὶ γέμοντα πολλῆς ἀναισχυντίας ἢ μανίας ἢ οὐκ ἔχω τί λέγω—διὰ γὰρ ὑπερβολὴν οὐδ' οἰκείων ὀνομάτων εὐπορηῆσαι ῥάδιον—πλουσίους μὲν ὀνομάζειν τοὺς ἀπορωτάτους καὶ τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἐνδεεῖς, λυπρῶς καὶ ἀθλίως ἀποζῶντας, μόλις τὸ ἐφήμερον ἐκπορίζοντας, ἐν εὐθηνία κοινῇ λιμὸν ἐξαίρετον ἔχοντας, ἀρετῆς αὔρα, καθάπερ ἀέρι φασὶ τοὺς τέττιγας, τρεφομένους,
- 9 πένητας δὲ τοὺς ἀργύρω καὶ χρυσῶ καὶ πλήθει κτημάτων καὶ προσόδων καὶ ἄλλων ἀμυθῆτων ἀγαθῶν ἀφθονία περιρρομένους, ὧν ὁ πλοῦτος οὐ συγγενεῖς καὶ φίλους αὐτὸ μόνον ὤνησεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς οἰκίας ἔξω προελθὼν μεγάλους ὀμίλους δημοτῶν καὶ φυλετῶν, διαβὰς δ' ἔτι μείζον καὶ πόλει χορηγεῖ τὰ πάντα, ὧν εἰρήνη χρεῖος ἢ πόλεμος;

---

<sup>a</sup> The paradox of good man citizen v. bad man exile does not seem to be quoted so often as some of the others, and the only examples cited by Arnim are from Philo himself, e.g. Leg. All. iii. 1. But cf. Cicero, Acad. Pri. ii. 136 Sapientem . . . solum civem . . . insipientes omnes peregrinos, exsules.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "I know not." This use of the 1st person sing. in a statement of other people's opinions seems strange, but is paralleled in De Aet. 119, and Flacc. 50.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 7-10

other public services : to call those citizens<sup>a</sup> who have 7 either never been placed on the burgess rolls or have been condemned to disfranchisement or banishment, men chased beyond the frontiers, unable not only to set foot in the country but even to get a distant view of their ancestral soil, unless hounded thither by some kind of avenging furies they come courting death.
For when they return there are numberless ministers of punishment waiting for them, spurred to vengeance by their personal feelings and also ready to do service to the commands of the law.” II. “Surely 8 your other statements too,” they continue, “are contrary to reason, brimful of shameless effrontery and madness or one knows not<sup>b</sup> what to call them, for even names are difficult to find appropriate to such extravagance. You call those rich<sup>c</sup> who are utterly destitute, lacking the very necessaries, who drag on their sorry, miserable life, scarcely providing their daily subsistence, starving exceptions to the general prosperity, feeding on the empty breath of virtue as grasshoppers are said to feed on air.<sup>d</sup> You call those 9 poor who are lapped round by silver and gold and a multitude of landed possessions and revenues and numberless other good things in unstinted abundance, whose wealth not only benefits their kinsfolk and friends but steps outside the household to do the same to multitudes of fellow tribesmen and wardsmen, and taking a still wider sweep endows the state with all that either peace or war demands. It is part of the 10

<sup>c</sup> The paradox good man rich v. bad man poor is very common, see examples in S.V.F. iii. 589-603. Philo's constant insistence on the contrast between blind wealth and seeing wealth is substantially the same.

<sup>d</sup> See on De Vit. Cont. 35.

PHILO

10 ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς αὐτῆς ὄνειρώξεως τοῖς μὲν ἀμφιθαλέσι καὶ τῷ ὄντι εὐπατρίδαις, ὧν οὐ γονεῖς μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ πάπποι καὶ πρόγονοι μέχρι τῶν ἀρχηγετῶν καὶ πρὸς ἀνδρῶν καὶ πρὸς γυναικῶν ἐπιφανέστατοι γεγόνασι, δουλείαν ἐτόλμησαν ἐπιφημίσαι, τοῖς δ' ἐκ τριγωνίας στιγματίαις, πεδότρυμι καὶ παλαιο-δούλοις, ἐλευθερίαν.

11 [447] "Ἔστι δὲ | τὰ τοιαῦτα, ὡς ἔφην, πρόφασις ἀνθρώπων, οἱ διάνοιαν μὲν ἡμαύρωνται, δούλοι δ' εἰσὶ δόξης ἐπανέχοντες αἰσθήσεσιν, ὧν τὸ συνέδριον ὑπὸ

12 τῶν κρινομένων αἰεὶ δεκαζόμενον<sup>1</sup> ἀβέβαιον. χρῆν δὲ αὐτούς, εἴπερ ὄλως ἐζήλουν ἀλήθειαν, μὴ τῶν τὰ σώματα καμνόντων ἐν τῷ φρονεῖν ἐλαττοῦσθαι· ἐκεῖνοι μὲν γὰρ ἑαυτοὺς ἐπιτρέπουσιν ἰατροῖς ὑγείας ὀρεγόμενοι, κατοκνοῦσι δ' οὗτοι νόσον ψυχῆς, ἀπαι-δευσίαν, ἀπώσασθαι, γενόμενοι σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν ὁμιληταί, παρ' ὧν οὐ μόνον ἔστιν ἀπομαθεῖν ἀμαθίαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ἴδιον ἀνθρώπου κτῆμα προσλαβεῖν, ἐπι-

13 στήμην. ἐπειδὴ δὲ κατὰ τὸν ἱερώτατον<sup>2</sup> Πλάτωνα " φθόνος ἕξω θείου χοροῦ ἴσταται," θειότατον δὲ καὶ κοινωνικώτατον σοφία, συγκλείει μὲν οὐδέποτε τὸ ἑαυτῆς φροντιστήριον, ἀναπεπταμένη δὲ αἰεὶ δέχεται τοὺς ποτίμων διψῶντας λόγων, οἷς ἀκράτου διδασκαλίας ἄφθονον ἐπαντλοῦσα νᾶμα μεθύειν τῆν

<sup>1</sup> mss. δικαζόμενον.

<sup>2</sup> So M. The others λιγυρώτατον ("most musical" or "clear-voiced"). I feel considerable doubt as to whether M is right. The quotation which follows as well as the phrase ποτίμων λόγων comes from the myth in the Phaedrus which Socrates introduces with an appeal to the Muses as λίγυραι (237 A), and λιγυρός has been used earlier, 230 c, in describing the scene of the dialogue.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 10-13

same fantastic dream when you dare to ascribe slavery to the highly connected,<sup>a</sup> the indisputably nobly born, who have not only parents but grandparents and ancestors right down to the founders of the family greatly distinguished both in the male and the female line : freedom to those who are heirs in the third generation to the branding iron, the fetter, and immemorial thralldom.”

So they think, but all this is as I have said, the 11 shallow talk of men with minds bedimmed, slaves to opinion, basing themselves on the senses, whose unstable council is always open to bribes from its suitors. If they whole-heartedly sought for truth, they ought 12 not to let themselves be outdone in prudence by the sick in body. They in their desire for health commit themselves to physicians, but these people show no willingness to cast off the soul-sickness of their untrained grossness by resorting to wise men from whom they can not only unlearn their ignorance but gain that knowledge which is mankind's peculiar property. But since we have it on the sacred author- 13 ity of Plato that envy has no place in the divine choir,<sup>b</sup> and wisdom is most divine and most free-handed, she never closes her school of thought but always opens her doors to those who thirst for the sweet water of discourse,<sup>c</sup> and pouring on them an unstinted stream of undiluted doctrine, persuades them to be drunken with the drunkenness which is

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 510.

<sup>b</sup> Phaedrus 247 A. Quoted also with βαίνει for ἵσταται Spec. Leg. ii. 249, and with many echoes elsewhere. See note on De Fuga 62 (vol. v. pp. 583 f.).

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Phaedrus 243 D ἐπιθυμῶ ποτίμῳ λόγῳ οἶον ἀλμυρὰν ἀκοήν ἀποκλύσασθαι. The phrase has been used several times by Philo.

PHILO

14 νηφάλιον ἀναπαίθει μέθην. οἱ δὲ ὥσπερ ἐν ταῖς τελεταῖς ἱεροφαντηθέντες, ὅταν ὀργίων γεμισθῶσι, πολλὰ τῆς πρόσθεν ὀλιγωρίας ἑαυτοὺς κακίζουσιν, ὡς οὐ φεισάμενοι χρόνου, βίον δὲ τρίψαντες ἀβίω-15 τον, ἐν ᾧ φρονήσεως ἐχήρευσαν. ἄξιον οὖν νεό-τητα τὴν πανταχοῦ πᾶσαν τὰς ἀπαρχὰς τῆς πρώτης ἀκμῆς μηδενὶ μᾶλλον ἢ παιδείᾳ ἀναθεῖναι,<sup>1</sup> ἢ καὶ ἐνηβῆσαι καὶ ἐγγηράσαι καλόν· ὥσπερ γάρ, φασί, τὰ καινὰ τῶν ἀγγείων ἀναφέρει τὰς τῶν πρώτων εἰς αὐτὰ ἐγχυθέντων ὀσμᾶς, οὕτως καὶ αἱ τῶν νέων ψυχαὶ τοὺς πρώτους τῶν φαντασιῶν τύπους ἀν-εξαιέπτους ἐναποματτόμεναι, τῇ φορᾷ τῶν αὐθις ἐπεισερόντων ἤκιστα κατακλυζόμεναι, τὸ ἀρχαῖον διαφαίνουσιν εἶδος.

16 III. Ἄλις μὲν δὴ τούτων. ἀκριβωτέον δὲ τὸ ζητούμενον, ἵνα μὴ τῇ τῶν ὀνομάτων ἀσαφείᾳ παραγόμενοι πλαζώμεθα, καταλαβόντες δὲ περὶ οὗ ὁ λόγος τὰς ἀποδείξεις εὐσκόπως ἐφαρμόττωμεν.

17 δουλεία τοίνυν ἢ μὲν ψυχῶν, ἢ δὲ σωμάτων λέγεται. δεσπόται δὲ τῶν μὲν σωμάτων ἄνθρωποι, ψυχῶν δὲ κακίαι καὶ πάθη. κατὰ ταῦτά δὲ καὶ ἐλευθερία· ἢ μὲν γὰρ ἄδειαν σωμάτων ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων δυνατω-τέρων, ἢ δὲ διανοίας ἐκεχειρίαν ἀπὸ τῆς τῶν παθῶν [448] 18 δυναστείας | ἐργάζεται. τὸ μὲν οὖν πρότερον οὐδὲ εἰς ζητεῖ· μυρίαὶ γὰρ αἱ ἀνθρώπων τύχαι, καὶ πολλοὶ πολλάκις καιροῖς ἀβουλήτοις τῶν σφόδρα

<sup>1</sup> On the hiatus παιδεία ἀναθεῖναι see App. p. 510.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 511.

<sup>b</sup> The meaning presumably is that ἐλευθερία in the literal sense cannot be the subject of a philosophical ζήτημα because

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 14-18

soberness itself. Then when like initiates in the 14 mysteries they have taken their fill of the revelations, they reproach themselves greatly for their former neglect and feel that they have wasted their time and that their life while they lacked wisdom was not worth the living. It is well then that the young, all 15 of them and everywhere, should dedicate the first fruits of the flower of their prime above all else to culture, wherein it is good for both youth and old age to dwell. For just as new vessels are said to retain the scents of the substances first poured into them,<sup>a</sup> so, too, the souls of the young take indelible impressions of the ideas first presented to them and do not have them washed away by the stream of the later influx, and so they preserve the original form for all to see.

III. So much for these matters. Let us proceed 16 to the subject of our discourse and give it careful consideration, that we may not go astray, misled by the vagueness in the terms employed, but apprehend what we are talking about, adjust our arguments to it, and so prove our point. Slavery then is applied 17 in one sense to bodies, in another to souls ; bodies have men for their masters, souls their vices and passions. The same is true of freedom ; one freedom produces security of the body from men of superior strength, the other sets the mind at liberty from the domination of the passions. No one makes the first 18 kind the subject of investigation.<sup>b</sup> For the vicissitudes of men are numberless and in many instances and at many times persons of the highest virtue have through adverse blows of fortune lost the no moral issues are involved. It is an accident which does not tell us anything about character or conduct.

PHILO

ἀστείων τὴν ἐκ γένους ἀπέβαλον ἐλευθερίαν· ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἢ σκέψις περὶ τρόπων, οὓς οὐτ' ἐπιθυμῖαι οὔτε φόβοι οὐθ' ἡδοναὶ οὔτε λῦπαι κατέζευξαν, ὥσπερ ἐξ εἰρκτῆς προεληλυθότων καὶ δεσμῶν οἷς 19 ἐπεσφίγγοντο διαφειμένων. ἀνελόντες οὖν ἐκποδῶν τὰς προφασιστικὰς εὐρεσιλογίας καὶ τὰ φύσεως μὲν ἀλλότρια δόξης δ' ἡρτημένα ὀνόματα οἰκοτρίβων ἢ ἀργυρωνήτων ἢ αἰχμαλώτων τὸν ἀψευδῶς ἐλεύθερον ἀναζητῶμεν, ᾧ μόνῳ τὸ αὐτοκρατὲς πρόσεστι, κἂν μυριοὶ γράφωσι δεσπότης ἑαυτοῦς. ἀναφθέγγεται γὰρ ἐκεῖνο τὸ Σοφόκλειον οὐδὲν τῶν πυθοχρήστων διαφέρον·

“θεὸς<sup>1</sup> ἐμὸς ἄρχων, θνητὸς δ' οὐδεὶς.”

20 τῷ γὰρ ὄντι μόνος ἐλεύθερος ὁ μόνῳ θεῷ χρώμενος ἡγεμόνι, κατ' ἐμὴν δὲ διάνοιαν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἡγεμῶν, ἐπιτετραμμένος τὰ περίγεια, οἷα μεγάλου βασιλέως, θνητὸς ἀθανάτου, διάδοχος. ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν περὶ ἀρχῆς τοῦ σοφοῦ λόγος εἰς καιρὸν ἐπιτηδειότερον ὑπερκείσθω, τὸν δὲ περὶ ἐλευθερίας τὰ νῦν 21 ἀκριβωτέον. εἰ δὴ τις εἴσω προελθὼν τῶν πραγμάτων ἐθελήσειε διακύψαι, γνώσεται σαφῶς, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἄλλῃ συγγενὲς οὕτως, ὡς αὐτοπραγία ἐλευθερία, διότι πολλὰ μὲν τῷ φαύλῳ τὰ ἐμποδῶν, φιλαργυρία, φιλοδοξία, φιληδονία, τῷ δ' ἀστείῳ τὸ παράπαν οὐδὲν, ἐπανισταμένῳ καὶ ἐπιβεβηκότι

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read Ζεὺς, see note a.

---

<sup>a</sup> This line is quoted in Arist. Eth. Eud. 1242 a 37 with Ζεὺς for θεός, as the anapaestic metre requires, and is paraphrased by Ambrose “Jupiter mihi praeest, nullus autem hominum.” As Ambrose is not likely to have known the freedom to which they were born. Our inquiry is concerned with characters which have never fallen under the yoke of desire, or fear, or pleasure, or grief; characters which have as it were escaped from prison and thrown off the chains which bound them so tightly. Casting aside, therefore, specious 19 quibblings and the terms which have no basis in nature but depend upon convention, such as "home-bred," "purchased" or "captured in war," let us examine the veritable free man, who alone possesses independence, even though a host of people claim to be his masters. Let us hear the voice of Sophocles in words which are as true as any Delphic oracle

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 18-21

God and no mortal is my Sovereign.<sup>a</sup>

For in very truth he who has God alone for his leader, 20 he alone is free, though to my thinking he is also the leader of all others, having received the charge of earthly things from the great, the immortal King, whom he, the mortal, serves as viceroy. But the subject of the wise man's sovereignty<sup>b</sup> must be postponed to a more suitable occasion and we have now to examine his freedom carefully. If one looks with 21 a penetrating eye into the facts, he will clearly perceive that no two [things are so closely akin as independence of action and freedom, because the bad man has a multitude of incumbrances, such as love of money or reputation and pleasure, while the good man has none at all. He stands defiant and trium-line from any other source, there is certainly some reason to suppose that he found Zeus in his text of Philo.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 122 οὐ μόνον δὲ ἐλευθέρους εἶναι τοὺς σοφοὺς ἀλλὰ καὶ βασιλέας. This is probably the most common of the paradoxes, and is given by Philo several times, e.g. De Mut. 152 (vol. v. p. 591), where see note.

PHILO

καθάπερ ἐν ἄθλων ἀγῶνι τοῖς καταπαλαισθεῖσιν, ἔρωτι, φόβῳ, δειλίᾳ, λύπῃ, τοῖς ὁμοιοτρόποις.
 22 ἔμαθε γὰρ ἀλογεῖν ἐπιταγμάτων, ὅσα οἱ ψυχῆς παρανομώτατοι ἄρχοντες ἐπιτάττουσι, διὰ ζῆλον καὶ πόθον ἐλευθερίας, ἧς τὸ αὐτοκέλευστον καὶ ἐθελουργὸν κλῆρος ἴδιος. ἐπαινεῖται παρά τισιν ὁ τὸ τρίμετρον ἐκείνο ποιήσας

“ τίς δ’ ἐστὶ δούλος τοῦ θανεῖν ἄφροντις ὦν;”

ὡς μάλα συνιδῶν τὸ ἀκόλουθον· ὑπέλαβε γάρ, ὅτι οὐδὲν οὕτως δουλοῦσθαι πέφυκε διάνοιαν, ὡς τὸ ἐπὶ θανάτῳ δέος, ἔνεκα τοῦ πρὸς τὸ ζῆν ἡμέρου.

23 IV. χρῆν δὲ λογίσασθαι, ὅτι οὐχ ὁ τοῦ θανεῖν μόνον ἄφροντις ὦν ἀδούλωτος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁ τοῦ πένεσθαι καὶ ἀδοξεῖν καὶ ἀλγεῖν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων
 [449] ὅσα οἱ πολλοὶ κακὰ νομίζουσι, κακοὶ τῶν | πραγμάτων ὄντες αὐτοὶ κριταί, οἷτινες ἐκ τῶν χρειῶν δοκιμάζουσι τὸν δούλον εἰς τὰς ὑπηρεσίας ἀφ-
 24 ὠρῶντες, δέον εἰς τὸ ἀδούλωτον ἦθος. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ ταπεινοῦ καὶ δουλοπρεποῦς φρονήματος ταπεινοῖς καὶ δουλοπρεπέσι παρὰ γνώμην ἐγχειρῶν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ δούλος ὄντως· ὁ δὲ πρὸς τὸν παρόντα καιρὸν ἀρμοζόμενος τὰ οἰκεία καὶ ἐκουσίως ἅμα καὶ τλητικῶς ἐγκαρτερῶν τοῖς ἀπὸ τύχης καὶ μηδὲν καιρὸν τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων εἶναι νομίζων, ἀλλ’ ἐξήτακῶς ἐπιμελῶς, ὅτι τὰ μὲν θεῖα αἰωνίῳ τάξει καὶ εὐδαιμονία τετίμηται, τὰ δὲ θνητὰ πάντα σάλῳ καὶ κλύδωνι πραγμάτων διαφερόμενα πρὸς ἀνίσους ροπὰς ταλαντεύει, καὶ γενναίως ὑπομένων τὰ συμ-

<sup>a</sup> Quoted also by Plut. De Poet. Aud. 13 as from Euripides. Plutarch makes the same point as Philo, that it applies to other seeming evils besides death.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 21-24

phant over love, fear, cowardice, grief and all that sort, as the victor over the fallen in the wrestling bout. For he has learnt to set at nought the injunctions laid upon him by those most lawless rulers of the soul, inspired as he is by his ardent yearning for the freedom whose peculiar heritage it is that it obeys no orders and works no will but its own. Some people praise the author of the line

What slave is there who takes no thought of death? <sup>a</sup> and think that he well understood the thought that it involves. For he meant that nothing is so calculated to enslave the mind as fearing death through desire to live. IV. But we must reflect that <sup>23</sup> exemption from slavery belongs to him who takes no thought not only of death but also of poverty, disrepute and pain and all the other things which the mass of men count as evil, though the evil lies in themselves and in their judgement, which makes them test the slave by the tasks he performs and fix their eyes on the services he renders instead of on his unenslaved character. For he who with a <sup>24</sup> mean and slavish spirit puts his hand to mean and slavish actions contrary to his own proper judgement is a slave indeed. But he who adjusts himself and his to fit the present occasion and willingly and also patiently endures the blows of fortune, who holds that there is nothing new in human circumstances, who has by diligent thought convinced himself that, while what is God's has the honour of possessing eternal order and happiness, all mortal things are carried about in the tossing surge of circumstance and sway unevenly on the balance, who nobly endures whatever befalls him—he indeed needs no more to

PHILO

25 πίπτοντα φιλόσοφος εὐθύς ἐστι καὶ ἐλεύθερος. ὅθεν οὐδὲ παντὶ τῷ<sup>1</sup> προστάττοντι ὑπακούσεται, κἂν αἰκίας καὶ βασάνους καὶ τινας φοβερωτάτας ἀπειλὰς ἐπανατείνηται, νεανιευσάμενος δὲ ἀντικηρύξει·

“ ὅπτα, κάταιθε σάρκας, ἐμπλήσθητί μου πίνων κελαινὸν αἷμα· πρόσθε γὰρ κάτω γῆς εἰσιν ἄστρα, γῆ δ’ ἄνεισ’ ἐς οὐρανόν, πρὶν ἐξ ἐμοῦ σοι θῶπ’ ἀπαντῆσαι λόγον.”

26 V. ἤδη ποτ’ εἶδον ἐν ἀγῶνι παγκρατιαστῶν τὸν μὲν ἐπιφέροντα τὰς πληγὰς καὶ χερσὶ καὶ ποσὶ καὶ πάσας εὐσκόπως καὶ μηδὲν παραλελοιπότα τῶν εἰς τὸ νικᾶν ἀπειρηκότα καὶ παρεμῆνον καὶ πέρας ἀστεφάνωτον ἐξελθόντα τοῦ σταδίου, τὸν δὲ τυπτόμενον, ὑπὸ πυκνότητος σαρκῶν πεπιλημένον, στρυφνόν, ναστόν, ὄντως γέμοντα πνεύματος ἀθλητικοῦ, δι’ ὅλων νευρωμένον, οἷα πέτραν ἢ σίδηρον, οὐδὲν μὲν πρὸς τὰς πληγὰς ἐνδόντα, τὴν δὲ τοῦ ἀντιπάλου δύναμιν τῷ καρτερικῷ καὶ παγίῳ τῆς ὑπομονῆς καθηρηκότα

27 μέχρι παντελοῦς νίκης. ὁμοιον δὴ τι τούτῳ πεπονθέναι μοι δοκεῖ ὁ ἀστεῖος· τὴν γὰρ ψυχὴν εὖ μάλα κραταιωθείς ἰσχυρογνώμωνι λογισμῷ θᾶπτον ἀναγκάζει τὸν βιαζόμενον ἀπειπεῖν ἢ ὑπομένει τι

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read παντὶ τῷ, a common phrase in Philo, or παντὰ τῷ. The stress seems to be on resistance to improper orders, rather than to the person who makes them.

<sup>a</sup> See on § 99.

<sup>b</sup> Or “elasticity”—or perhaps “with the well-knit frame of the true athlete.” That is to say I conceive the word to be used in the semi-physical Stoic sense of the force or current

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 25-27

make him a philosopher and a free man. And, there- 25 fore, he will not obey just anyone who gives him orders, even though he menaces him with outrage and tortures and threats however dreadful, but will openly and boldly defy him thus :

Roast and consume my flesh, and drink thy fill
Of my dark blood ; for sooner shall the stars
Go 'neath the earth and earth go up to heaven
Than thou shalt from my lips meet fawning word.<sup>a</sup>

V. I have observed in a contest of pancratiasts how 26 one of the combatants will strike blow after blow both with hands and feet, every one of them well aimed, and leave nothing undone that might secure his victory, and yet he will finally quit the arena without a crown in a state of exhaustion and collapse, while the object of his attack, a mass of closely packed flesh, rigid and solid, full of the wiriness<sup>b</sup> of the true athlete, his sinews taut from end to end, firm as a piece of rock or iron, will yield not a whit to the blows, but by his stark and stubborn endurance will break down utterly the strength of his adversary and end by winning a complete victory. Much the same 27 as it seems to me is the case of the virtuous man ; his soul strongly fortified with a resolution firmly founded on reason, he compels the employer of violence to give up in exhaustion, sooner than himself which holds bodies together and is otherwise known as ξίς.

Thus "walking" is said by Seneca to be a "spiritus a princi-cipali usque ad pedes permissus" (Arnold, Roman Stoicism, pp. 89, 250). See on ἔξεως πνευματικῆς (De Aet. 86). It can hardly here mean "athletic spirit" in the sense that we use the phrase, nor yet the "good wind" of the athlete, though Leisegang perhaps took it so, when he couples this passage with Leg. All. iii. 14 ἀθλητοῦ τρόπον διαπνέοντος καὶ συλλεγομένου τὸ πνεῦμα.

PHILO

- δράσαι τῶν παρὰ γνώμην. ἀλλ' ἄπιστον ἴσως τοῖς μὴ πεπονηθόσιν ἀρετῆν<sup>1</sup> τὸ λεγόμενον<sup>2</sup>—καὶ γὰρ ἐκείνο τοῖς τοὺς παγκρατιαστὰς οὐκ εἰδόσι—, γέγονε 28 δ' οὐδὲν ἦττον ἐπ' ἀληθείας. εἰς ταῦτα δ' ἀπιδὼν Ἀντισθένης δυσβάστακτον εἶπεν εἶναι τὸν ἀστεῖον· ὡς γὰρ ἡ ἀφροσύνη κοῦφον καὶ φερόμενον, (οὕτως)<sup>3</sup> ἡ φρόνησις ἐπηρεισμένον καὶ ἀκλινὲς καὶ βάρως 29 ἔχον ἀσάλευτον. ὁ δὲ δὴ τῶν Ἰουδαίων νομοθέτης [450] τὰς τοῦ σοφοῦ χεῖρας | βαρείας εἰσάγει, διὰ συμ-βόλων τὰς πράξεις αἰνιττόμενος οὐκ ἐπιπολαίως ἀλλὰ παγίως ἐρηρεισμένας ἀπὸ διανοίας ἀρρεπουῖς.
 30 πρὸς οὐδενὸς οὖν ἀναγκάζεται, ἅτε καταπεφρονηκῶς μὲν ἀλγηδόνων, καταπεφρονηκῶς δὲ θανάτου, νόμῳ δὲ φύσεως ὑπηκόους ἔχων ἅπαντας ἄφρονας· ὄνπερ γὰρ τρόπον αἰγῶν μὲν καὶ βοῶν καὶ προβάτων αἰπόλοι καὶ βουκόλοι καὶ νομεῖς ἀφηγοῦνται, τὰς δ' ἀγέλας ἀμήχανον ἐπιτάξαι ποιμέσι, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον οἱ μὲν πολλοὶ θρέμμασιν εὐοκότες ἐπιστάτου καὶ ἄρχοντος δέονται, ἡγεμόνες δ' εἰσὶν οἱ ἀστεῖοι τὴν τῶν ἀγελαρχῶν τεταγμένοι τάξιν.
 31 Ὁμηρος μὲν οὖν “ ποιμένας λαῶν ” εἴωθε καλεῖν τοὺς βασιλέας, ἡ δὲ φύσις τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς κυριώτερον

<sup>1</sup> See note a. The correction προσπεπονηθόσιν ἀρετῆ is possible, particularly as M has ἀρετῆ (= -ῆ) = “devoted to virtue.” I suggest for consideration πεποιθόσιν ἀρετῆ or πεποθηκόσιν ἀρετῆν.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn punctuates with a colon after λεγόμενον, and comma after εἰδόσι, thus making the case of the pancratiast to be the subject of γέγονε instead of the moral victory of the ἀστεῖος.

<sup>3</sup> On the insertion of οὕτως see App. p. 511.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 27-31

submit to do anything contrary to his judgement. This statement may perhaps seem incredible to those who have had no experience of virtue<sup>a</sup> (so would the other just mentioned to those who do not know the pancratiast), but none the less it is an actual fact. It 28 is this which Antisthenes had in view when he said that a virtuous man is heavy to carry,<sup>b</sup> for as want of sense is a light thing, never stationary, so good sense is firmly based, never swerves and has a weight that cannot be shaken. The law-giver of the Jews de- 29 scribes the wise man's hands as heavy,<sup>c</sup> indicating by this figure that his actions are not superficial but firmly based, the outcome of a mind that never wavers. No one then can compel him, since he has 30 come to despise both pain and death, and by the law of nature has all fools in subjection. For just as goats and oxen and sheep are led by goatherds and oxherds and shepherds, and flocks and herds cannot possibly give orders to herdsmen, so too the multitude, who are like cattle, require a master and a ruler and have for their leaders men of virtue, appointed to the office of governing the herd. Homer 31 often calls kings "shepherds of the people,"<sup>d</sup> but nature more accurately applies the title to the good, even in the sense of having experience of virtue in others is more than doubtful Greek. No satisfactory emendation however has been proposed. See note 1.

<sup>b</sup> Zeller, Socrates (Eng. trans.), p. 334 takes the saying to mean that the virtuous man is hard to bear or makes himself a nuisance by telling unpleasant truths and quotes in support other similar sayings of the Cynics. Philo takes it in a quite different sense, though the last words of § 31 suggest something of the thought which Zeller assigns to it.

<sup>c</sup> Ex. xvii. 12. The same interpretation is given with some additions in Leg. All. iii. 45.

<sup>d</sup> e.g. Il. ii. 243.

PHILO

τουτὶ τοῦνομα ἐπεφήμισεν, εἴ γε ἐκείνοι ποιμαίνονται τὸ πλεόν ἢ ποιμαίνουσιν—ἄκρατος γὰρ αὐτοὺς ἄγει καὶ εὐμορφία πέμματά τε καὶ ὄψα καὶ τὰ μαγείρων καὶ σιτοποιῶν ἡδύσματα, ἵνα τὰς ἀργύρου καὶ χρυσοῦ καὶ τῶν σεμνοτέρων ἐπιθυμίας παραλείπω—, τοῖς δ' ὑπ' οὐδενὸς συμβέβηκε δελεάζεσθαι, νουθετεῖν δὲ καὶ ὄσους ἂν αἰσθωνται πάγαις ἡδονῆς ἀλισκομένους.

- 32 VI. "Οτι δ' οὐχ αἱ ὑπηρεσίαι μηνύματ' εἰσὶ δουλείας, ἐναργεστάτη πίστις οἱ πόλεμοι· τοὺς γὰρ στρατευομένους ἰδεῖν ἔστιν αὐτουργοὺς ἅπαντας, οὐ μόνον τὰς πανοπλίας κομίζοντας, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅσα πρὸς τὴν ἀναγκαίαν χρῆσιν ὑποζυγίων τρόπον ἐπηχθισμένους, εἴτ' ἐφ' ὑδρείαν ἐξιόντας καὶ φρυ-33 γανισμὸν καὶ χιλὸν κτήγεσι. τὰ γὰρ πρὸς τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ἐν ταῖς στρατείαις τί δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν, τάφρους ἀνατεμνόντων ἢ τεῖχη κατασκευαζόντων ἢ τριήρεις ναυπηγουμένων ἢ ὅσα ὑπουργίας ἢ τέχνης πάντα χερσὶ καὶ τῷ ἄλλῳ σώματι ὑπηρε-
34 τούντων. ἔστι δέ τις καὶ κατ' εἰρήνην πόλεμος τῶν ἐν τοῖς ὄπλοις οὐκ ἀποδέων, ὃν ἀδοξία καὶ πενία καὶ δεινὴ σπάνις τῶν ἀναγκαίων συγκροτοῦσιν, ὑφ' οὗ βιασθέντες ἐγχειρεῖν καὶ τοῖς δουλοπρεπεστάτοις ἀναγκάζονται, σκάπτοντες, γέωπονοῦντες, βαναύσους ἐπιτηδεύοντες τέχνας,

<sup>a</sup> §§ 32-40. These sections, except in § 40, where the casual illustration from the lions leads Philo to revert to his main theme, do not seem to bear upon the argument that the good man alone is free. They may perhaps be regarded as arguing that, independently of the main philosophical contention, the common tests of slavery and freedom are not consistently held. So with ὑπηρεσίαι, which as Cohn points out has been stated in § 23 to be the ordinary test, no one since kings are more often in the position of the sheep than of the shepherd. They are led by strong drink and good looks and by baked meats and savoury dishes and the dainties produced by cooks and confectioners, to say nothing of their craving for silver and gold and grander ambitions. But the good nothing can ensnare, and it is theirs also to admonish those whom they see caught in the toils of pleasure.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 31-34

VI. <sup>a</sup>That services rendered are no proof of enslave- 32 ment is very clearly shown in war-time. We see soldiers in the field all working on their own account, not only carrying all their weapons, but also laden like beasts with every necessary requirement, and then making expeditions to get water or firewood or fodder for the animals. As for labours required in 33 defence against the enemy, such as cutting trenches or building walls or constructing triremes, and all other skilled or subsidiary operations in which the hands and the rest of the body are employed, there is no need to recount them at length. On the other hand, 34 there is a peace-time war, no less grave than those fought with arms, a war set on foot by disrepute and poverty and dire lack of the necessaries of life, a war by which men are forced under duress to undertake the most servile tasks, digging and toiling on the land and practising menial crafts, labouring un-calls the soldier a slave, nor yet that other soldier, the freeman driven by poverty to do menial tasks. On the other hand (§ 34) persons who are admittedly slaves in the ordinary sense have functions which are not ὑπηρεσίαι. A second test (obedience) begins in § 36. This breaks down because children and pupils obey but are not slaves; a third test, purchase (§ 37), because ransomed captives are not slaves, and purchase also does not prevent the complete subjection of the purchaser to the purchased (§§ 38-39).

PHILO

ὑπηρετοῦντες ἀόκνως ἔνεκα τοῦ παρατρέφεσθαι, πολλάκις δὲ καὶ κατὰ μέσσην ἀγορὰν ἀχθοφοροῦντες ἐν ἡλικιωτῶν καὶ συμφοιτητῶν καὶ συνεφήβων 35 ὄψεσιν. ἕτεροι δ' εἰσὶν ἐκ γένους δούλοι τὰ τῶν ἐλευθέρων εὐμοιρία τύχης μετιόντες· ἐπίτροποι γὰρ οἰκιῶν καὶ κτημάτων καὶ μεγάλων οὐσιῶν, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ τῶν ὁμοδούλων ἄρχοντες καθίστανται, πολλοὶ δὲ καὶ γυναῖκας καὶ παῖδας ὀρφανοὺς δεσποτῶν ἐπετράπησαν, φίλων καὶ συγ-γενῶν προκριθέντες εἰς πίστιν· ἀλλ' ὅμως εἰσὶ δούλοι, δανειζόντες, ἠνούμενοι, προσόδους ἐκλεγό-μενοι, θεραπευόμενοι. τί οὖν θαυμαστόν, εἰ καὶ [451] κατὰ τούναντίον ὀλίσθω τις εὐτυχίας | δουλικὰς
 36 χρείας ἐπιτελεῖ; τὸ δ' ὑπακούειν ἑτέρῳ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἀφαιρεῖται. καὶ πῶς πατὴρ μὲν ἢ μητὴρ ἐπιταγμάτων παῖδες ἀνέχονται, γνώριμοι δὲ ὧν ὑφήγηται<sup>1</sup> διακελεύονται; δούλος γὰρ ἐκὼν οὐδεὶς. οἷ γε μὴν τοκέες οὐ τοσαύτην ὑπερβολὴν ἐπιδεί-ξονται ποτε μισοτεκνίας, ὥσθ' ἂ μόνον σύμβολα δουλείας ἐστί, τὰς ὑπηρεσίας, ἀναγκάσαι ἂν παῖδας 37 τοὺς ἑαυτῶν ὑπομένειν. εἰ δέ τις ὑπ' ἀνδραποδοκαπήλων ἐπευωνιζομένους ἰδὼν τις οἶεται δούλους εὐθὺς εἶναι, πολὺ διαμαρτάνει τῆς ἀληθείας· οὐ γὰρ ἢ πρᾶσις ἢ κύριον ἀποφαίνει τὸν πριάμενον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑφήγωνται or ἀφηγούνται.

<sup>a</sup> Stephanus says of παρατρέφεσθαι "Plutarchus dicitur usurpasse de pauperibus qui misere aluntur," but no examples are quoted, and the words may simply mean "get their rations," the point of the prefix being that like slaves they are dependent on others.

<sup>b</sup> This may be taken in two ways, (1) as in the translation with what follows: the parents' interests are identical with those of the children, and they cannot wish them to be slaves;

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 34-37

ceasingly to earn a meagre<sup>a</sup> subsistence ; often too carrying burdens in the midst of the market place before the eyes of their fellows in age who were their associates in boyhood and in youth.

There are others born in slavery, who by a happy dispensation of fortune pursue the occupations of the free. 35 They receive the stewardship of houses and landed estates and great properties ; sometimes too they become the rulers of their fellow slaves. Many too have the wives and orphan children of their masters committed to their charge, being preferred for trustworthiness to friends and members of the family. Still all the same they are slaves though they lend, purchase, collect revenues and are much courted. Why then should we wonder when the opposite occurs and a man whose good luck has taken a bad turn performs the offices of a slave ? But you say, " by 36 obedience to another he loses his liberty." How then is it that children suffer the orders of their father or mother, and pupils the injunctions of their instructors ? For no one is willing to be a slave<sup>b</sup> ; and surely parents will not show such an extreme hatred of their offspring as to compel their own children to submit to render services which according to you are the sole distinctive marks of slavery. Again, anyone who 37 thinks that people put up for sale<sup>c</sup> by kidnappers thereby become slaves goes utterly astray from the truth. Selling does not make the purchaser a master,

(2) taking it with the previous sentence, no one who acts voluntarily is a slave, and the children do act voluntarily.

<sup>c</sup> Perhaps " sold cheap " as apparently in § 121. On the other hand neither here nor in Flaccus 132 is there much point in cheapness. See my note on De Cher. 123, vol. ii. p. 486, where it is suggested that the word merely conveys some measure of contempt like our " peddling."

PHILO

ἢ τὸν πραθέντα δοῦλον, ἐπεὶ καὶ πατέρες υἰῶν τιμὰς κατέθεσαν καὶ υἱοὶ πολλάκις πατέρων ἢ κατὰ ληστείας ἀπαχθέντων ἢ κατὰ πόλεμον αἰχμαλώτων γενομένων, οὓς οἱ τῆς φύσεως νόμοι τῶν κάτωθεν ὄντες βεβαιότεροι γράφουσιν ἐλευθέρους.

- 38 ἤδη δέ τινες καὶ προσυπερβάλλοντες εἰς τοῦναντίον περιήγαγον τὸ πρᾶγμα, δεσπότην γενόμενοι τῶν πριαμένων ἀντὶ δούλων· ἔγωγ' οὖν ἔθεασάμην πολλάκις εὐμορφα παιδισκάρια καὶ φύσει στωμύλα δυσὶν ὄρμητηρίοις, ὄψεως κάλλει καὶ τῇ περὶ λόγους χάριτι, πορθοῦντα τοὺς κεκτημένους· ἐλεπόλεις γὰρ ταῦτα ψυχῶν ἀνδρῦτων καὶ ἀνερματίστων, μηχανημάτων ἀπάντων ὅσα ἐπ' ἀνατροπῇ τειχῶν κατασκευάζεται σθεναρώτερα.
- 39 σημεῖον δέ· θεραπεύουσιν, ἱκετεύουσιν, εὐμένειαν ὡς παρὰ τύχης καὶ ἀγαθοῦ δαίμονος αἰτεῖσθαι γλίσχονται, καὶ παρορώμενοι μὲν σφαδάζουσιν, εἰ δ' αὐτὸ μόνον τὸ βλέμμα ἴλεων θεάσαιντο, γε-
- 40 γηθότες ἀνορχοῦνται. εἰ μὴ καὶ τὸν λέοντας ὠνησάμενον δεσπότην φατέον εἶναι λεόντων, ὅς, εἰ μόνον ἐπανατείναντο τὰς ὄψεις, οἴους ἐπρίατο κυρίου ὁ δύστηνος, ὡς χαλεποὺς καὶ ὠμοθύμους, αὐτίκα παθῶν εἴσεται. τί οὖν; οὐκ οἴομεθα τὸν σοφὸν ἀδουλωτότερον εἶναι λεόντων, ἐλευθέρῳ καὶ ἀτρώτῳ ψυχῇ τὴν ἀλκὴν ἔχοντα μᾶλλον ἢ εἰ

---

<sup>a</sup> εἰ μὴ refers back to § 37. Philo is no doubt thinking

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 37-40

nor the purchased a slave. Fathers pay a price for their sons and sons often for their fathers if they have been carried off in raids or taken prisoners in war, and that such persons are free men is asserted by the laws of nature which have a more solid foundation than those of our lower world.

Indeed, some of those thus bought and sold reverse 38 the situation to such an extreme extent that they become the masters of their purchasers instead of their slaves. I have often myself seen pretty little slave girls with a natural gift for wheedling words, who with these two sources of strength, beauty of face and charm of speech, stormed the hearts of their owners. For these two are engines of attack against souls with no ballast or stability, engines mightier than all the machines constructed to demolish walls. This is shown by the way in which their owners court 39 them, supplicate them, eagerly beg their favours, as though they were praying to fortune or some good genius. If they are scouted they go into fits of despair and if they just see a kindly glance they dance for joy. If selling constitutes slavery we 40 should have to assert that a person who had bought some lions is master of the lions,<sup>a</sup> whereas if the beasts do but turn menacing eyes upon him, the poor man will learn at once by experience the cruel and ferocious lordship of those whom he has purchased. Well then must we not suppose that if lions cannot, still less can the wise man be enslaved, who has in his free and unscathed soul a greater power of resistance of the story told of Diogenes (Diog. Laert. vi. 75): when his friends offered to ransom him from the pirates, he refused, "for lions are not slaves of those who keep them, but they are the slaves of the lions. For fear is the mark of the slave, but wild beasts make men fear them."

PHILO

σώματι φύσει δούλω καὶ εὐτονία κραταιοτάτη<sup>1</sup> ἰσχύος ἀφηνιάζοι;

- 41 VII. Μάθοι δ' ἂν τις τὴν ἐλευθερίαν,<sup>2</sup> ἢ περὶ τὸν σπουδαῖόν ἐστι, καὶ ἐξ ἐτέρων· δούλος εὐδαίμων πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐδεὶς· τί γὰρ ἀθλιώτερον ἢ πάντων ἄκυρον εἶναί τινα καὶ ἑαυτοῦ; ὁ δέ γε σοφὸς εὐδαίμων, ἔρμα καὶ πλήρωμα καλοκαγαθίας ἐπι-φερόμενος, ἐν ἧ τὸ κῦρὸς ἐστὶν ἀπάντων· (ὥστ') ἀναμφιβόλως καὶ ἐξ ἀνάγκης ὁ σπουδαῖος ἐλεύ-42 θερός ἐστι. πρὸς τούτοις τίς οὐκ ἂν εἶποι τοὺς φίλους τοῦ θεοῦ<sup>3</sup> ἐλευθέρους εἶναι; εἰ μὴ τοῖς μὲν [452] τῶν βασιλέων ἐταίροις | ἄξιον οὐ μόνον ἐλευθερίαν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀρχὴν ὁμολογεῖν<sup>4</sup> συνεπιτροπεύουσι καὶ συνδιέπουσι τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, τοῖς δὲ θεῶν τῶν ὀλυμπίων δουλείαν ἐπιφημιστέον, οἱ διὰ τὸ φιλόθεον εὐθὺς γενόμενοι θεοφιλεῖς, ἴση ἀντιτιμηθέντες εὐνοία παρ' ἀληθείᾳ δικαζούσῃ, καθάπερ οἱ ποιηταί φασι, πανάρχοντές τε καὶ βασιλέες βασιλέων εἰσί.
 43 νεανικώτερον δ' ὁ τῶν Ἰουδαίων νομοθέτης προσυπερβάλλων, ἄτε γυμνῆς ὡς λόγος ἀσκητῆς φιλοσοφίας, τὸν ἔρωτι θείῳ κατεσχημένον καὶ τὸ ὄν μόνον θεραπεύοντα οὐκέτ' ἄνθρωπον ἀλλὰ θεὸν

<sup>1</sup> "Suspectum propter hiatus," says Cohn. See App. p. 510 on § 15.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἀλήθειαν.

<sup>3</sup> So mss. Cohn τῶν θεῶν calling attention to the plural just below. But easy alternation between God and Gods is, I think, a common phenomenon in Stoicism. There is also the hiatus; see again App. p. 510.

<sup>4</sup> mss. συνομολογεῖν.

<sup>a</sup> See on § 128.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 40-43

to the yoke than any he could make with the naturally slavish body and all the vigour of its physical strength?

VII. The freedom of the good man may be learnt 41 in other ways. No slave is really happy. For what greater misery is there than to live with no power over anything, including oneself? But the wise man is happy, ballasted and freighted <sup>a</sup> by his high morality, which confers power over everything, and so beyond all doubt and of sheer necessity, the good man is free. Furthermore no one would deny that the friends 42 of God are free. Surely when we agree that the familiars of kings enjoy not only freedom but authority, because they take part in their management and administration as leaders, we must not give the name of slaves to those who stand in the same relation to the celestial gods, who are god-lovers and thereby necessarily god-beloved, rewarded with the same affection as they have shown, and in the judgement of truth are as the poets say, <sup>b</sup> rulers of all and kings of kings. The legislator of the Jews in a bolder spirit 43 went to a further extreme and in the practice of his "naked" philosophy, <sup>c</sup> as they call it, ventured to speak of him who was possessed by love of the divine and worshipped the Self-existent only, as having

<sup>b</sup> No poetical reference is quoted either for the thought or the language, and I understand the reference to be to the word πανάρχων, which is not cited from elsewhere.

<sup>c</sup> By "naked philosophy" he perhaps means "frank" or "outsoken." Cf. γυμνοῖς ἤθεσι προσαγορεύοντες "their manner of address was unreserved" De Abr. 117, and γυμνοῖς ὀνόμασι Spec. Leg. ii. 131. But this does not quite account for ὡς λόγος, and still less does the γνησίας which Mangey proposed. Possibly there may be some allusion to the gymnosophists (see § 93), but more probably to something which we cannot now recover.

PHILO

ἀπετόλμησεν εἰπεῖν· ἀνθρώπων μέντοι θεόν, οὐ τῶν τῆς φύσεως μερῶν, ἵνα τῷ πάντων καταλίπη πατρί 44 τὸ θεῶν εἶναι βασιλεῖ καὶ θεῷ. ἄρ' ἄξιον τὸν προνομίας τοσαύτης τετυχηκότα δούλον ἢ μόνον ἐλεύθερον εἶναι νομίζεις; ὃς εἰ καὶ θείας οὐκ ἠξιώται μοίρας καθ' αὐτόν, ἀλλά τοι διὰ τὸ φίλῳ θεῷ χρῆσθαι πάντως ὤφειλεν εὐδαιμονεῖν· οὔτε γὰρ ἀσθενῆς ὁ ὑπέρμαχος οὔτε φιλικῶν ἀμελῆς δικαίων θεὸς ἑταιρείος ὢν καὶ τὰ κατὰ τοὺς ἑταίρους 45 ἐφορῶν. ἔτι τοίνυν, ὥσπερ τῶν πόλεων αἱ μὲν ὀλιγαρχούμεναι καὶ τυραννούμεναι δουλείαν ὑπο-μένουσι χαλεποὺς καὶ βαρεῖς ἔχουσαι δεσπότης τοὺς ὑπαγομένους καὶ κρατοῦντας, αἱ δὲ νόμοις ἐπιμεληταῖς χρώμεναι καὶ προστάταις εἰσὶν ἐλεύ-θεραι, οὕτως καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, παρ' οἷς μὲν ὀργῇ ἢ ἐπιθυμίᾳ ἢ τι ἄλλο πάθος ἢ καὶ ἐπίβουλος κακία δυναστεύει, πάντως εἰσὶ δούλοι, ὅσοι δὲ μετὰ νόμου 46 ζῶσιν, ἐλεύθεροι. νόμος δὲ ἀψευδῆς ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος, οὐχ ὑπὸ τοῦ δέινος ἢ τοῦ δέινος, θνητοῦ φθαρτός, ἐν χαρτιδίῳ ἢ στήλαις, ἄψυχος ἀψύχους, ἀλλ' ὑπ' ἀθανάτου φύσεως ἄφθαρτος ἐν ἀθανάτῳ διανοία 47 τυπωθεῖς. διὸ καὶ θαυμάσαι ἂν τις τῆς ἀμβλυ-ωπίας τοὺς τρανὰς οὕτω πραγμάτων ἰδιότητος μὴ συνωρῶντας, οἱ μεγίστοις μὲν δήμοις Ἀθήναις καὶ Λακεδαιμόνι πρὸς ἐλευθερίαν ἀνταρκεστάτους εἶναι φασὶ τοὺς Σόλωνος καὶ Λυκούργου νόμους κρατοῦντάς τε καὶ ἄρχοντας πειθαρχούντων αὐτοῖς τῶν πολιτευομένων, σοφοῖς δὲ ἀνδράσι τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον, ὃς καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐστὶ πηγὴ νόμοις, οὐχ

---

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. vii. 1 "Behold I give thee as a god to Pharaoh";

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 43-47

passed from a man into a god, though, indeed, a god to men, not to the different parts of nature, thus leaving to the Father of all the place of King and God of gods.<sup>a</sup> Does one who has obtained so great a 44 preferment deserve to be considered a slave and not rather the solely free? Though he was not deemed worthy of divine rank in his own right, yet because he had God for a friend, he was bound to have absolute felicity, for he had no feeble champion, nor one neglectful of the rights of friendship in Him who is the comrade's god and keeps watch over the claims of comradeship. Further again, just as with cities, 45 those which lie under an oligarchy or tyranny suffer enslavement, because they have cruel and severe masters, who keep them in subjection under their sway, while those which have laws to care for and protect them are free, so, too, with men. Those in whom anger or desire or any other passion, or again any insidious vice holds sway, are entirely enslaved, while all whose life is regulated by law are free. And right reason is an infallible law engraved not by 46 this mortal or that and, therefore, perishable as he, nor on parchment or slabs, and, therefore, soulless as they, but by immortal nature on the immortal mind, never to perish. So, one may well wonder at the 47 short-sightedness of those who ignore the characteristics which so clearly distinguish different things and declare that the laws of Solon and Lycurgus are all-sufficient to secure the freedom of the greatest of republics, Athens and Sparta, because their sovereign authority is loyally accepted by those who enjoy that citizenship, yet deny that right reason, which is the a text cited elsewhere several times. Cf. in particular Quod Det. 161 ff.

PHILO

ικανὸν εἶναι πρὸς μετουσίαν ἐλευθερίας ὑπακούουσι πάντων, ἅττ' ἂν ἢ προστάτῃ ἢ ἀπαγορεύῃ.

- 48 πρὸς τοίνυν τοῖς εἰρημένοις ἐναργεστάτῃ πίστις ἐλευθερίας ἰσηγορία, ἣν οἱ σπουδαῖοι πάντες ἄγουσι πρὸς ἀλλήλους. ὅθεν καὶ τὰ τρίμετρα φιλοσόφως ἐκεῖνά φασιν εἰρῆσθαι.

[453] | “οὐ γὰρ μετεῖναι τῶν νόμων δούλοις ἔφν.”

καὶ πάλιν·

“δούλος πέφυκας, οὐ μέτεστί σοι λόγος.”

- 49 καθάπερ οὖν ὁ μουσικὸς νόμος ἅπασι τοῖς ἐπιτετηδευκόσι μουσικὴν ἰσηγορίας τῆς ἐν τῇ τέχνῃ μεταδίδωσι καὶ ὁ γραμματικὸς ἢ ὁ γεωμετρικὸς γραμματικοῖς ἢ γεωμέτραις, οὕτω καὶ ὁ ἐν τῷ
- 50 βίῳ νόμος τοῖς ἐμπείροις τῶν βιωτικῶν. οἱ δὲ σπουδαῖοι πάντες ἔμπειροι τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον πραγμάτων εἰσίν, ὅποτε καὶ τῶν ἐν ἀπάσῃ τῇ φύσει· καὶ εἰσὶ τινες αὐτῶν ἐλεύθεροι, ὥστε καὶ ὅσοι τούτοις ἰσηγορίας μετέχουσιν. οὐδεὶς ἄρα τῶν σπουδαίων δούλος, ἀλλ' ἐλεύθεροι πάντες.
- 51 VIII. ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς αὐτῆς ἀφορμῆς καὶ ὅτι δούλος ὁ ἄφρων ἐστίν, ἐπιδειχθήσεται. ὥσπερ γὰρ ὁ κατὰ μουσικὴν νόμος οὐ δίδωσιν ἰσηγορίαν ἀμουσοῖς

<sup>a</sup> The source of these two quotations is unknown. The second is quoted by Marcus Aurelius xi. 80.

<sup>b</sup> The point of the words “some . . . free” is obscure both here and below and their expunction has been suggested. I think they are defensible here, but not below, where I suggest that they may have been inserted in mistaken analogy. The argument, as I understand it, is, ισηγορία between persons implies that they are of the same status, both free

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 47-51

fountain head of all other law, can impart freedom to the wise, who obey all that it prescribes or forbids.

Further, besides these just mentioned, 48 we have a very clear evidence of freedom in the equality recognized by all the good in addressing each other. Thus it is argued that the following iambic verses contain sound philosophy :

No part or lot in law has any slave and again

A slave thou art, no right of speech hast thou.<sup>a</sup>

Just as the laws of music put all adepts in music on 49 an equal footing in discussing that art and the laws of grammar and geometry do the same for their respective professionals, so, too, the laws of human life and conduct create a similar equality between those who are proficient in life-matters. But the 50 good are all proficient in such matters, because their proficiency embraces the whole of nature. Some of the good are admittedly free,<sup>b</sup> and, therefore, all who enjoy the right to address them on an equal footing are free also. Consequently none of the good is a slave but all are free. VIII. By the same line of 51 argument it will appear that the fool is a slave. The laws of music, of grammar, of art in general, do not put the unmusical, the illiterate, the inartistic in or both slaves. All good men, being proficient in the laws or art of conduct, have ισηγ. with each other, therefore they are all either free or slaves. And as no one denies that some good men are free, they must all be free.

The negative argument is, the bad man, being unproficient in the said laws or art, has no ισηγ. with the proficient, and as all free men have ισηγ. with each other the bad cannot be free. I do not see how one can fit "some of the good are free" into this.

PHILO

πρὸς μεμουσωμένους οὐδ' ὁ κατὰ γραμματικὴν ἀγραμμάτοις πρὸς γραμματικούς οὐδὲ συνόλως ὁ τεχνικός πρὸς τεχνίτας ἀτέχνους, οὕτως οὐδ' ὁ βιωτικός νόμος ἰσηγορίας μεταδίδωσι τοῖς κατὰ 52 τὸν βίον ἀπείροις πρὸς ἐμπείρους. τοῖς δ' ἐλευθέροις ἢ ἐκ νόμου πᾶσιν ἰσηγορία δίδεται· [καὶ εἰσὶ τινες τῶν σπουδαίων ἐλεύθεροι·] καὶ τῶν βιωτικῶν ἄπειροι μὲν οἱ φαῦλοι, ἐμπειρότατοι δ' οἱ σοφοί· οὐκ ἄρ' εἰσὶ τινες τῶν φαύλων ἐλεύθεροι, δοῦλοι 53 δὲ πάντες. ὁ δὲ Ζήνων, εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος ὑπ' ἀρετῆς ἀχθείς, νεανικώτερον ἀποδείκνυσι περὶ τοῦ μὴ εἶναι τοῖς φαύλοις ἰσηγορίαν πρὸς ἀστείουσ-φησὶ γάρ· “ οὐκ οἰμώξεται μὲν ὁ φαῦλος, ἐὰν ἀντιλέγῃ τῷ σπουδαίῳ;” οὐκ ἄρ' ἐστὶν ἰσηγορία 54 τῷ φαύλῳ πρὸς σπουδαῖον. οἶδ' ὅτι πολλοὶ τοῦ λόγου κατακερτομήσουσιν ὡς αὐθαδεῖα τὸ πλεόν ἐρωτηθέντος ἢ συνέσει. μετὰ δὲ τὴν χλευήν παυσάμενοι τοῦ γέλωτος ἦν ἐθελήσωσι διακύψαι καὶ τὸ λεγόμενον σαφῶς ἐρευνῆσαι, καταπλαγέντες αὐτοῦ τὸ ἀψευδὲς εἴσονται, ὅτι ἐπ' οὐδενὶ μᾶλλον 55 οἰμώξεται τις ἢ τῷ μὴ πειθαρχεῖν τῷ σοφῷ. ζημία γὰρ χρημάτων ἢ ἀτιμία ἢ φυγαὶ ἢ αἰ διὰ πληγῶν ὕβρεις ἢ ὅσα ὁμοίотροπα βραχέα καὶ τὸ μηδὲν ἀντιτιθέμενα κακίαις καὶ ὧν αἰ κακίαι δημιουργοί. τοὺς δὲ πολλούς, οὐ συνορῶντας τὰς ψυχῆς βλάβας

---

<sup>a</sup> Cohn and Arnim in S.V.F. i. 228 take this sentence as part of the quotation from Zeno. It seems to me better to take it as Philo's inference from Zeno's dictum. To include it in Zeno's words would imply that he made a point of general on an equal footing in discussion with the musical, the literary and the artistic. In the same way the laws of life and conduct do not put the unproficient in life matters on an equal footing in discussion with the proficient. But this right of equal 52 discussion, which these laws give, is given to all the free [and some of the good are free]. And in life-matters the bad are unproficient, while the wise are most proficient and consequently none of the bad is free but all are slaves. Zeno, who lived under the 53 direction of virtue to an unsurpassed degree, proves still more forcibly that the bad are not on equal terms in addressing the virtuous. "Shall not the bad rue it if he gainsay the good?" he says. The bad man, therefore, has no right to speak to a good man as his equal.<sup>a</sup> I am aware that many people 54 will pour abuse on such words and hold that Zeno's question <sup>b</sup> shows presumption rather than good sense. But when they have had their jeering and stopped laughing, if they are willing to look closely and seek for a clear understanding of the saying, they will to their utter confusion recognize its absolute truth and that nothing will a man rue more than refusal to 55 listen to the wise. For confiscation of money or disfranchisement or banishment or the cruel disgrace of the lash, or anything else of the same kind, are small things and of no account when set against vices and the results which vices produce. But the majority, who through the blindness of their reason do not discern the damages which the soul has sustained, ισηγορία, and one might expect to hear more of it, but the term does not appear elsewhere in S.V.F. Also § 54 deals entirely with Zeno's question and not with the inference drawn from it.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 51-55

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps "the argument," see note on De Act. 143.

PHILO

διὰ λογισμοῦ πῆρωσιν, ἐπὶ μόναίς ταῖς ἐκτὸς συμβέβηκεν ἄχθεσθαι, τὸ κριτήριον ἀφηρημένους, ὧ 56 μόνῳ καταλαβεῖν ἔστι διανοίας ζημίαν. εἰ δὲ δυνηθεῖεν ἀναβλέψαι, θεασάμενοι τὰς δι' ἀφροσύνης [454] ἀπάτας καὶ τὰς ἐκ | δειλίας ἐπηρείας καὶ ὅσα ἀκολασία παρώνησεν ἢ ἀδικία παρηνόμησεν, ἐπὶ ταῖς τοῦ ἀρίστου συμφοραῖς λύπης ἀπαύστου γε-μισθέντες οὐδὲ παρηγορίας δι' ὑπερβολὰς κακῶν 57 ἀνέξονται. εἶοικε δὲ ὁ Ζήνων ἀρύσασθαι τὸν λόγον ὡσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς τῆς Ἰουδαίων νομοθεσίας, ἐν ᾗ δυοῖν ὄντων ἀδελφοῖν, τοῦ μὲν σώ-φρονος, τοῦ δ' ἀκολάστου, λαβὼν οἶκτον ὁ κοινὸς ἀμφοῖν πατὴρ τοῦ μὴ ἐπ' ἀρετὴν ἤκοντος εὐχεται, ἵνα δουλεύσῃ τῷ ἀδελφῷ, τὸ δοκοῦν μέγιστον εἶναι κακόν, δουλείαν, ἀγαθὸν τελεώτατον ὑπολαμβάνων ἀφρονι, τὸ μὲν αὐτεξούσιον ἀφηρη-μένῳ πρὸς τὸ μὴ σὺν ἀδείᾳ πλημμελεῖν, ἐκ δὲ τῆς τοῦ προεστῶτος προστασίας βελτιωθησομένῳ τὸ ἦθος.

58 IX. Τὰ μὲν οὖν λεχθέντα πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ζητουμένου διασύστασιν ἔμοιγε ἀποχρῶντα ἦν. ἐπεὶ δὲ τὰ ποικίλα τῶν νοσημάτων ἰατροῖς ἔθος ποικιλω-τέραις ἰᾶσθαι θεραπείαις, ἀνάγκη καὶ τοῖς παραδόξοις νομιζομένοις τῶν προβλημάτων διὰ τὸ ἄηθες ἐπάγειν πίστεις ἐπαλλήλους προσεγχνρίοντας· μόλις γὰρ ἔνιοι συνεχεῖα πληττόμενοι τῶν ἀποδείξεων 59 αἰσθάνονται. λέγεται τοίνυν οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ, ὅτι

---

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xxvii. 40 "Thou shalt serve (δουλεύσεις) thy brother." Cf. De Cong. 176. For the idea that Zeno drew from Moses cf. the ascription of Heracleitus's doctrine of the opposites to him, Quis Rerum 214.

<sup>b</sup> The word perhaps carries on the idea of medical treat-

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 55-59

only feel the pain of external injuries, because the faculty of judgement, which alone can enable them to apprehend the damage to the mind, is taken from them. But if they could recover their sight, observing the delusions which folly brings and the outrages wrought by cowardice and all that the sottishness of incontinence and the lawlessness of injustice has done, they will be filled with ceaseless sorrow at the calamitous plight of the best thing they possess, and even refuse to listen to consolation, so vast are the evils which have befallen them. We may well suppose that the fountain from which Zeno drew this thought was the law-book of the Jews, which tells of two brothers, one wise and temperate, the other incontinent, how the father of them both prayed in pity for him who had not attained to virtue that he should be his brother's slave.<sup>a</sup> He held that slavery, which men think the worst of evils, was the best possible boon to the fool, because the loss of independence would prevent him from transgressing without fear of punishment, and his character would be improved under the control of the authority set above him.

IX. I have now said all that appeared to me necessary to prove the proposition, but just as physicians regularly use a greater multiformity of treatment to cure multiform diseases, so when statements regarded as paradoxical are put forward, their unfamiliarity renders it necessary to apply <sup>b</sup> a succession of proofs to bear upon the subject. For some can only be brought to understand under the impact of a continued series of demonstrations. Thus the following ment, i.e. ointment or liniment, but more probably, as suggested by πληττόμενοι, friction, "rubbing it in."

PHILO

ὁ φρονίμως πάντα ποιῶν εὖ ποιεῖ πάντα, ὁ δ' εὖ ποιῶν πάντα ὀρθῶς ποιεῖ πάντα, ὁ δ' ὀρθῶς πάντα ποιῶν καὶ ἀναμαρτήτως καὶ ἀμέμπτως καὶ ἀνεπιλήπτως καὶ ἀνυπευθύνως καὶ ἀζημίως, ὥστ' ἐξουσίαν σχήσει πάντα δρᾶν καὶ ζῆν ὡς βούλεται· ᾧ δὲ ταῦτ' ἐξεστίν, ἐλεύθερος ἂν εἴη. ἀλλὰ μὴν πάντα φρονίμως ποιεῖ ὁ ἀστείος· μόνος ἄρα ἐστὶν ἐλεύθερος. καὶ μὴν ὃν μὴ ἐνδέχεται μήτ' ἀναγκάσαι μήτε κωλύσαι, ἐκεῖνος οὐκ ἂν εἴη δοῦλος· τὸν δὲ σπουδαῖον οὐκ ἔστιν οὔτ' ἀναγκάσαι οὔτε κωλύσαι· οὐκ ἄρα δοῦλος ὁ σπουδαῖος. ὅτι δ' οὔτ' ἀναγκάζεται οὔτε κωλύεται, δῆλον· κωλύεται μὲν γὰρ ὁ μὴ τυγχάνων ὧν ὀρέγεται, ὀρέγεται δ' ὁ σοφὸς τῶν ἀπ' ἀρετῆς, ὧν ἀποτυγχάνειν οὐ πέφυκε. καὶ μὴν εἰ ἀναγκάζεται, δῆλον ὅτι ἄκων τι ποιεῖ· ἐν οἷς<sup>1</sup> δὲ αἱ πράξεις, ἧ ἀπ' ἀρετῆς εἰσι κατορθώματα ἢ ἀπὸ κακίας ἀμαρτήματα ἢ μέσα καὶ ἀδιάφορα.

61 τὰ μὲν οὖν ἀπ' ἀρετῆς οὐ βιασθεῖς ἀλλ' ἐκῶν—αἰρετὰ γάρ ἐστιν αὐτῷ πάνθ' ἃ δρᾶ—, τὰ δ' ἀπὸ κακίας ἅτε φευκτὰ οὐδ' ὄναρ πράττει· οὐδὲ μὴν τὰ ἀδιάφορα εἰκός, πρὸς ἃ καθάπερ ἐπὶ πλάστιγγος ἢ διάνοια ἰσορροπεῖ, δεδιδαγμένη μήτε ὡς ὄλκον ἔχουσι δύναμιν ἐνιδιδόναι μήθ' ὡς ἀποστροφῆς ἀξίους δυσχεραίνειν. ἐξ ὧν ἐστὶ δῆλον, ὅτι οὐδέν

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps ἀνθρώποις (written ἀνοῖς) δέ, see note a.

<sup>a</sup> Literally “ things in which there are actions are righteous actions,” etc., which is hardly sense. Arnim’s correction to ἀνθρώποις δέ (see note 1) is very probable.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 59-61

argument is well to the point. He who always acts sensibly, always acts well : he who always acts well, always acts rightly : he who always acts rightly, also acts impeccably, blamelessly, faultlessly, irreproachably, harmlessly, and, therefore, will have the power to do anything, and to live as he wishes, and he who has this power must be free. But the good man always acts sensibly, and, therefore, he alone is free. Again, one who cannot be compelled to do anything 60 or prevented from doing anything, cannot be a slave. But the good man cannot be compelled or prevented : the good man, therefore, cannot be a slave. That he is not compelled nor prevented is evident. One is prevented when he does not get what he desires, but the wise man desires things which have their origin in virtue, and these, being what he is, he cannot fail to obtain. Further, if one is compelled he clearly acts against his will. But where there are actions,<sup>a</sup> they are either righteous actions born of virtue or wrong actions born of vice or neutral and indifferent. The virtuous actions he performs not under constraint 61 but willingly, since all that he does are what he holds to be desirable. The vicious are to be eschewed and therefore he never dreams of doing them. Naturally too in matters indifferent he does not act under compulsion.<sup>b</sup> To these, as on a balance his mind preserves its equipoise, trained neither to surrender to them in acknowledgement of their superior weight, nor yet to regard them with hostility, as deserving aversion. Whence it is clear that he does nothing <sup>b</sup> Philo cannot of course mean "that he does not do indifferent actions," and we must understand βιασθέντα πράττειν. Ambrose's paraphrase "indifferentibus ita non movetur ut nullis momentis . . . inclinetur" looks as if he read something else (? εἰκῆ).

PHILO

ἄκων ποιεῖ οὐδ' ἀναγκάζεται· δούλος δ' εἶπερ ἦν, ἠναγκάζεται ἄν' ὥστ' ἐλεύθερος ἂν εἴη ὁ ἀστείος.

62 X. Ἐπεὶ δέ τινες τῶν | ἠκιστα κεχορευκόντων
|455] Μούσαις λόγων ἀποδεικτικῶν οὐ συνιέντες, οἱ τὰς καθόλου τῶν πραγμάτων ἐμφάσεις παριστᾶσιν, εἰώθασιν ἐρωτᾶν· τίνες οὖν ἢ πρότερον γεγόνασιν ἄνδρες ἢ νῦν εἰσιν, ὁποίους ἀναπλάττετε; καλόν γε ἀποκρίνασθαι, ὅτι καὶ πάλαι τινὲς ἦσαν οἱ τῶν καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἀρετῇ διέφερον, ἠγεμόνι μόνῳ θεῷ χρῶμενοι καὶ κατὰ νόμον, τὸν ὀρθὸν φύσεως λόγον, ζῶντες, οὐκ ἐλεύθεροι μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς πλησιάζον-τας ἐλευθέρου φρονήματος ἀναπιμπλάντες, καὶ ἐφ' ἡμῶν αὐτῶν ἔτ' εἰσὶν ὥσπερ εἰκόνες ἀπὸ ἀρχετύπου γραφῆς, σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν καλοκαγαθίας, 63 τυπωθέντες. οὐ γάρ, εἰ αἱ τῶν ἀντιλεγόντων ψυχαὶ κεχηρεύκασιν ἐλευθερίας, ὑπ' ἀφροσύνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων κακιῶν δουλαγωγηθεῖσαι, διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένος· εἰ δὲ μὴ κατὰ στίφη μεγάλα προΐασιν ἀγεληδόν, θαυμαστὸν οὐδέν· πρῶ-τον μὲν, ὅτι τὰ λίαν καλὰ σπάνια, εἴτ' ἐπειδὴ τὸν τῶν εἰκαιωτέρων ἐκτρεπόμενοι πολὺν ὄμιλον θεωρία τῶν τῆς φύσεως σχολάζουσιν, εὐχόμενοι μὲν, εἴ πως ἐνήν, ἐπανορθώσασθαι τὸν βίον—κοινωφελὲς γὰρ ἡ ἀρετή,—τὸ δὲ ἀδυνατοῦντες, πλημμυρούντων κατὰ πόλεις ἀλλοκότων πραγμάτων, ἃ ψυχῆς πάθη (καὶ) κακίαι συνηύξησαν, ἀποδιδράσκουσιν, ὡς μὴ

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "set forth the general appearances of things," meaning I suppose the impressions they produce as a whole when we do not examine them in detail.

<sup>b</sup> ἀναπιμπλάντες perhaps has the common meaning of "infect," though here used in a good sense. Cf. De Prov. 71.

<sup>c</sup> For this thought of the rarity and retiring nature of the

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 61-63

unwillingly and is never compelled, whereas if he were a slave he would be compelled, and therefore the good man will be a free man.

X. But among those who have kept little company <sup>62</sup> with the Muses, there are some who have no understanding of the methods of logical deduction, but make general statements based on appearances.<sup>a</sup> These people often ask "who have there been in the past, and who are there living now of the kind that you imagine?" An excellent answer is that in the past there have been those who surpassed their contemporaries in virtue, who took God for their sole guide and lived according to a law of nature's right reason, not only free themselves, but communicating <sup>b</sup> to their neighbours the spirit of freedom: also in our own time there are still men formed as it were in the likeness of the original picture supplied by the high excellence of sages. For it does not <sup>63</sup> follow that if the souls of the gainsayers have been bereft of freedom, held in bondage to folly and the other vices, the same is true of the human race. Nor is it a matter for wonder that the good do not appear herded in great throngs. First because specimens of great goodness are rare, secondly, because they avoid the great crowd of the more thoughtless and keep themselves at leisure for the contemplation of what nature has to show.<sup>c</sup> Their prayer is that if possible they may work a reformation in the lives of the others, for virtue serves the common weal. But as this is made impossible through the atrocious doings which flood the cities, gathering strength from the passions and vices of the soul, they flee right away good cf. De Mut. 34-38, where it is associated with the text "Enoch was not found."

PHILO

τῆ ρύμη τῆς φορᾶς καθάπερ ἀπὸ χειμάρρου βίας 64 κατασυρεῖεν. ἡμᾶς δέ, εἰ βελτιώσεως ζῆλός τις ἦν, ἰχνηλατεῖν ἔδει τὰς τούτων καταδύσεις καὶ ἰκέτας καθεζομένους παρακαλεῖν, ἵνα τεθηρωμένον τὸν βίον προσελθόντες ἐξημερώσωσιν, ἀντὶ πολέμου καὶ δουλείας καὶ κακῶν ἀμυθήτων εἰρήνην καὶ ἐλευθερίαν καὶ τὴν τῶν ἄλλων ἀγαθῶν ἀφθονίαν περιρ-65 ρομένην<sup>1</sup> καταγγείλαντες. νυνὶ δὲ χρημάτων μὲν ἔνεκα πάντας μυχοὺς ἐρευνῶμεν καὶ γῆς στρυφνὰς καὶ ἀποκρότους φλέβας ἀναστέλλομεν, καὶ μεταλλεύεται μὲν πολλὴ τῆς πεδιάδος, μεταλλεύεται δὲ οὐκ ὀλίγη τῆς ὄρεινῆς, χρυσοῦν καὶ ἄργυρον, χαλκόν τε καὶ σίδηρον, καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ὕλας ἀναζη-66 τούντων. θεοπλαστοῦσα δὲ ἡ κενὴ δόξα τὸν τύφον ἄχρι καὶ βυθοῦ κατέβη θαλάττης διερευνημένη, μὴ τι τῶν πρὸς αἴσθησιν ἀφανὲς ἐναπόκειται πού καλόν· καὶ λίθων ποικίλων καὶ πολυτελῶν ἀνευροῦσα ἰδέας, τὰς μὲν πέτραις προσπεφυκυίας, τὰς δ' ὀστρέοις, αἷ καὶ τιμαλφέστεραι γεγόνασιν, ὄψεως 67 ἀπάτην ἐξετίμησε. φρονήσεως δὲ ἡ σωφροσύνης ἢ ἀνδρείας ἢ δικαιοσύνης ἔνεκα γῆ μὲν ἀπόρευτός ἐστὶ καὶ ἡ βίασιμος, πελάγη δὲ ἅπλωτα τὰ καθ' ἐκάστην ὥραν τοῦ ἔτους ναυκλήροις ἐμπλεόμενα.
 68 καίτοι τίς ἢ μακρᾶς ὁδοιπορίας ἢ τοῦ θαλαττεύειν
 456] ἐστὶ | χρεῖα πρὸς ἔρευναν καὶ ζήτησιν ἀρετῆς, ἥς τὰς ρίζας ὁ ποιῶν οὐ μακρὰν ἀλλ' οὕτωςι πλησίον ἐβάλετο; καθάπερ καὶ ὁ σοφὸς τῶν Ἰουδαίων νομοθέτης φησὶν· “ ἐν τῷ στόματί σου καὶ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου καὶ ἐν ταῖς χερσί σου,” αἰνιττόμενος

<sup>1</sup> So one ms. (S). The others either omit or have περιρ-

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 63-68

lest they should be swept down by the force of their onrush, as by the violence of a torrent. But we, if 64 we had any zeal for betterment should track them to their hiding places, and sitting as suppliants before them, exhort them to join us and humanize our bestial life, in place of war and slavery and a host of ills proclaiming peace, liberty and the overflowing abundance of all other blessings. As it is, for the sake of 65 money we ransack every corner and open up rough and rocky veins of earth, and much of the low land and no small part of the high land is mined in the quest of gold and silver, copper and iron, and the other like substances. The empty-headed way of 66 thinking, deifying vanity, dives to the depths of the sea, searching whether some fair treasure to delight the senses lies hidden there.<sup>a</sup> And when it has found different kinds of many-coloured precious stones, some adhering to rocks, others, the more highly prized, to shells, it gives every honour to the beguiling spectacle. But for wisdom or temperance or courage or justice, 67 no journey is taken by land, even though it gives easy travelling, no seas are navigated, though the skippers sail them every summer season. Yet what need is 68 there of long journeying on the land or voyaging on the seas to seek and search for virtue, whose roots have been set by their Maker ever so near us, as the wise legislator of the Jews also says, "in thy mouth, in thy heart and in thy hand," thereby indicating in ροομένων which seems quite impossible, but the middle in the sense of " overflow " has no examples quoted.

<sup>a</sup> Mangey translates " numquid pretiosum adhuc fugiens sensum ibi reponatur." But this, which is certainly simpler, would require the omission of τῶν.

---

PHILO

- διὰ συμβόλων λόγους, βουλὰς, πράξεις, ἃ δὴ πάντα 69 γεωργικῆς τέχνης δεῖται. οἱ μὲν οὖν ἀργίαν πόνου προτιμήσαντες οὐ μόνον τὰς βλάστας ἐκώλυσαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς ρίζας ἀφανάσαντες ἔφθειραν· οἱ δὲ σχολὴν μὲν βλαβερὸν ἠγοούμενοι, πονεῖν δὲ ἐθέλοντες, ὥσπερ εὐγενῆ μοσχεύματα γεωργοῦντες, τῷ συνεχεῖ τῆς ἐπιμελείας οὐρανομήκεις ἐστελέχωσαν ἀρετάς, ἀειθαλῆ καὶ ἀθάνατα ἔρνη καρπὸν φέροντα εὐδαιμονίαν οὐδέποτε λήγοντα ἢ, ὡς τινες, οὐ φέροντα, ἀλλ' αὐτὰ ὄντα εὐδαιμονίαν, ἃ Μωυσῆς ὀνόματι συνθέτω καλεῖν εἴωθεν ὀλοκαρπώματα.
- 70 ἐπὶ μὲν γὰρ τῶν ἐκ γῆς βλαστανόντων οὐθ' ὁ καρπὸς ἐστὶ δένδρα οὔτε τὰ δένδρα καρπὸς, ἐπὶ δὲ τῶν ἐν ψυχῇ φυομένων ὅλα δι' ὅλων εἰς καρποῦ φύσιν μεταβέβληκε τὰ ἔρνη, τὸ φρονήσεως, τὸ 71 δικαιοσύνης, τὸ ἀνδρείας, τὸ σωφροσύνης. XI. ἔχοντες οὖν τοιαύτας παρ' ἑαυτοῖς ἀφορμὰς οὐκ ἐρυθριῶμεν ἔνδειαν σοφίας ἀνθρώπων γένει καταγγέλλοντες, ἣν δυνατὸν ἦν ἐκφυσῆσαντας καθάπερ ἐν ὕλη σπινθῆρα τυφόμενον ζωπυρῆσαι; ἀλλὰ γὰρ πρὸς ἃ μὲν σπεύδειν ἐχρῆν ὡς συγγενέστατα καὶ οἰκειότατα, πολὺς ὄκνος καὶ ῥαθυμία συνεχῆς, ὑφ' ὧν τὰ καλοκαγαθίας σπέρματα διαφθείρεται, ὧν δὲ εἰκὸς ἦν ὑστερίζειν, ἡμερος καὶ πόθος ἄπληστος.
- 72 διὰ τοῦτο πλουσίων μὲν καὶ ἐνδόξων καὶ ταῖς ἡδο-ναῖς χρωμένων μεστὴ γῆ καὶ θάλαττα, φρονίμων δὲ καὶ δικαίων καὶ ἀστέων ὀλίγος ἀριθμὸς· τὸ δὲ

<sup>a</sup> The whole section is founded on Deut. xxx. 11-14, part

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 68-72

a figure, words, thoughts and actions? <sup>a</sup> All these, indeed, need the cultivator's skill. Those who prefer 69 idleness to labour, not only prevent the growths but also wither and destroy the roots. But those who consider inaction mischievous and are willing to labour, do as the husbandman does with fine young shoots. By constant care they rear the virtues into stems rising up to heaven, saplings everblooming and immortal, bearing and never ceasing to bear the fruits of happiness, or as some hold, not so much bearing as being in themselves that happiness. These Moses often calls by the compound name of wholefruits. <sup>b</sup> In the case of growths which 70 spring from the earth, neither are the trees the fruit nor the fruit the trees, but in the soul's plantation the saplings of wisdom, of justice, of temperance, have their whole being transformed completely into fruits. XI. Having then in us such 71 potentialities, should we not blush to denounce the human race as lacking in wisdom, wisdom which the bellows could kindle into a blaze like the spark which smoulders in the firewood? And yet these things for which we should strive eagerly, things so closely akin to ourselves, so truly our own, we treat with great slackness and constant indifference and thus destroy the germs of excellence, while those things in which deficiency were a merit we desire with an insatiable yearning. Consequently land and 72 sea are full of the rich, the distinguished and the men of pleasure, but of the wise and just and virtuous, the number is small. But this small body though scanty of which is actually quoted, a passage often used by Philo, e.g. De Virt. 183, and with the same interpretation of v. 14.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 511.

PHILO

- 73 ὀλίγον, εἰ καὶ σπάνιον, οὐκ ἀνύπαρκτον. μάρτυς δὲ ἡ Ἑλλάς καὶ ἡ βάρβαρος· ἐν τῇ μὲν γὰρ οἱ ἐτύμως ἐπὶ σοφοὶ προσονομασθέντες ἦνθησαν, καὶ ἄλλων πρότερον καὶ αὖθις ὡς εἰκὸς ἀκμασάντων, ὧν ἡ μνήμη παλαιότερων μὲν ὄντων μήκει χρόνων ἠφανίσθη, νεαζόντων δὲ ἔτι διὰ τὴν ἐπιπολάζουσαν τῶν συνόντων ὀλιγωρίαν ἐξαμαυροῦται.
- 74 Κατὰ δὲ τὴν βάρβαρον, ἐν ἣ ἡ πρεσβευταὶ λόγων καὶ ἔργων,<sup>1</sup> πολυανθρωπότατα στίφη καλῶν καὶ ἀγαθῶν ἐστὶν ἀνδρῶν· ἐν Πέρσαις μὲν τὸ μάγων, οἱ τὰ φύσεως ἔργα διερευνώμενοι πρὸς ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας καθ' ἡσυχίαν τὰς θείας ἀρετὰς τρανοτέραις ἐμφάσεσιν ἱεροφαντοῦνται τε καὶ ἱεροφαντοῦσιν· ἐν Ἰνδοῖς δὲ τὸ γυμνοσοφιστῶν, οἱ πρὸς τῇ [457] φυσικῇ καὶ τῇ ἠθικῇ φιλοσοφίαν | διαπονοῦντες ὄλον ἐπίδειξιν ἀρετῆς πεποιήνται τὸν βίον.
- 75 XII. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἡ Παλαιστίνη Συρία καλοκἀ-

<sup>1</sup> So one ms. (F). Of the others three have πρεσβευταὶ λόγων ἔργων, three πρεσβευταὶ λόγων ἔργω, and one (M) προσέταξε λόγων ἔργα. The characteristic common to these seven is the omission of καὶ after λόγων. I suggest with considerable confidence ἐν ἣ πρεσβεύεται λόγων ἔργα "in which deeds are held in higher esteem than words." The use of πρεσβεύομαι with the genitive is quoted from Plato, Legg. 879 B and need cause no difficulty, though πρεσβεύω is perhaps more common. I submit that it is quite supported by what Philo goes on to say of the "barbarians." The Magi search into the words of nature καθ' ἡσυχίαν. The Essenes (cf. De Vit. Cont. 1) representing the practical life, avoid the περιεργία Ἑλληνικῶν ὀνομάτων, § 88, and the gymnosophists, as exemplified by Calanus, do not practise λόγους εἰς πανήγυριν, § 96. See also App. p. 513.

is not absolutely non-existent.<sup>a</sup> For this we have 73 the testimony, both of Greece and the world outside Greece. In Greece there flourished the sages known also by the appropriate <sup>b</sup> name of the Seven, and we might expect that both before them and after them, others had their day, though the memory of the more ancient has vanished in the lapse of many years, and is dimmed in the case of those whose lives are still recent through the widespread neglect of their contemporaries.

In the outside world where are those who spread 74 the message by words and deeds,<sup>c</sup> we find large associations of men of the highest excellence. Among the Persians there is the order of the Magi, who silently make research into the facts of nature to gain knowledge of the truth and through visions clearer than speech, give and receive the revelations of divine excellency.<sup>d</sup> In India, too, there is the order of the Gymnosophists, who study ethical as well as physical philosophy and make the whole of their lives an exhibition of virtue.<sup>e</sup>

XII. Palestinian Syria, too, has not 75

<sup>a</sup> So too in De Mut. 35-37, though some say that σοφία and ὁ σοφός are ἀνύπαρκτος, the conclusion is that each of them is ὑπαρκτὸν πράγμα.

<sup>b</sup> "Appropriate," because ἐπτά is supposed to be derived from σεμνός and σεβασμός, cf. De Op. 127. But see App. p. 512.

<sup>c</sup> This translation of the only translatable reading found in any one ms. is given in despair, for I do not believe that "ambassadors of words and deeds" is a possible expression. Cohn, Hermes, 1916, p. 174, thinks that πρεσβευταί here = "cultores." But no example for such a sense of the noun is cited. For what I believe to be the true reading see note 1.

<sup>d</sup> Cf. the very similar remarks in Spec. Leg. iii. 100 and note vol. vii. pp. 635 f.

<sup>e</sup> On the Gymnosophists see App. p. 513.

PHILO

γαθίας οὐκ ἄγονος, ἦν πολυανθρωποτάτου ἔθνους τῶν Ἰουδαίων οὐκ ὀλίγη μοῖρα νέμεται. λέγονται τινες παρ' αὐτοῖς ὄνομα Ἑσσαῖοι, πλήθος ὑπερ-τετρακισχίλιοι, κατ' ἐμὴν δόξαν—οὐκ ἀκριβεῖ τύ-πω διαλέκτου Ἑλληνικῆς—παρώνυμοι ὁσιότητος, ἐπειδὴ κὰν τοῖς μάλιστα θεραπευταὶ θεοῦ γεγό-νοσιν, οὐ ζῶα καταθύοντες, ἀλλ' ἱεροπρεπεῖς τὰς 76 ἑαυτῶν διανοίας κατασκευάζειν ἀξιούντες. οὗτοι τὸ μὲν πρῶτον κωμηδὸν οἰκοῦσι τὰς πόλεις ἐκ-τρεπόμενοι διὰ τὰς τῶν πολιτευομένων χειροθήεις ἀνομίας, εἰδότες ἐκ τῶν συνόντων ὡς ἀπ' ἀέρος φθοροποιοῦ νόσον ἐγγινομένην προσβολὴν ψυχαῖς ἀνιάτον· ὧν οἱ μὲν γεωπονοῦντες, οἱ δὲ τέχνας μετιόντες ὅσαι συνεργάτιδες εἰρήνης, ἑαυτοὺς τε καὶ τοὺς πλησιάζοντας ὠφελούσιν, οὐκ ἄργυρον καὶ χρυσὸν θησαυροφυλακοῦντες οὐδ' ἀποτομὰς γῆς μεγάλας κτώμενοι δι' ἐπιθυμίαν προσόδων, ἀλλ' ὅσα πρὸς τὰς ἀναγκαίας τοῦ βίου χρείας ἐκπορί- 77 ζοντες. μόνοι γὰρ ἐξ ἀπάντων σχεδὸν ἀνθρώπων ἀχρήματοι καὶ ἀκτήμονες γεγονότες ἐπιτηδεύσει τὸ πλεον ἢ ἐνδεία εὐτυχίας πλουσιώτατοι νομί-ζονται, τὴν ὀλιγοδείαν καὶ εὐκολίαν, ὅπερ ἐστί, 78 κρίνοντες περιουσίαν. βελῶν ἢ ἀκόντων ἢ ξιφι-δίων ἢ κράνους ἢ θώρακος ἢ ἀσπίδος οὐδένα παρ' αὐτοῖς ἂν εὔροις δημιουργὸν οὐδὲ συνόλως ὄπλο-ποιὸν ἢ μηχανοποιὸν ἢ τι τῶν κατὰ πόλεμον ἐπιτηδεύοντα· ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ὅσα τῶν κατ' εἰρήνην εὐόλισθα εἰς κακίαν· ἐμπορίας γὰρ ἢ καπηλείας ἢ

<sup>a</sup> For observations on the relation of this description of the Essenes (§§ 75-91) to those in the Hypothetica (pp. 437 ff. of this volume) and in Josephus see App. p. 514.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 75-78

failed to produce high moral excellence. In this country live a considerable part of the very populous nation of the Jews, including as it is said, certain persons, more than four thousand in number, called Essenes.<sup>a</sup> Their name which is, I think, a variation, though the form of the Greek is inexact, of ἁγιότης (holiness), is given them, because they have shown themselves especially devout in the service of God, not by offering sacrifices of animals, but by resolving to sanctify their minds. The first thing about these 76 people is that they live in villages and avoid the cities because of the iniquities which have become inveterate among city dwellers, for they know that their company would have a deadly effect upon their own souls, like a disease brought by a pestilential atmosphere. Some of them labour on the land and others pursue such crafts as co-operate with peace and so benefit themselves and their neighbours. They do not hoard gold and silver or acquire great slices of land because they desire the revenues therefrom, but provide what is needed for the necessary requirements of life. For while they stand almost alone in 77 the whole of mankind in that they have become moneyless and landless by deliberate action rather than by lack of good fortune, they are esteemed exceedingly rich, because they judge frugality with contentment to be, as indeed it is, an abundance of wealth. As for darts, javelins, daggers, or the helmet, 78 breastplate or shield, you could not find a single manufacturer of them, nor, in general, any person making weapons or engines or plying any industry concerned with war, nor, indeed, any of the peaceful kind, which easily lapse into vice, for they have not the vaguest idea of commerce either wholesale or

PHILO

ναυκληρίας οὐδ' ὄναρ ἴσασι, τὰς εἰς πλεονεξίαν 79 ἀφορμὰς ἀποδιοπομπούμενοι. δούλος τε παρ' αὐτοῖς οὐδὲ εἰς ἔστιν, ἀλλ' ἐλεύθεροι πάντες ἀνθυπουργοῦντες ἀλλήλοις· καταγινώσκουσί τε τῶν δεσποτῶν, οὐ μόνον ὡς ἀδίκων, ἰσότητα λυμαιο-μένων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὡς ἀσεβῶν, θεσμὸν φύσεως ἀναιρούντων, ἣ πάντας ὁμοίως γεννήσασα καὶ θρειαμένη μητρὸς δίκην ἀδελφούς γνησίους, οὐ [158] λεγομένους ἀλλ' ὄντας ὄντως, | ἀπειργάσατο· ὦν τὴν συγγένειαν ἢ ἐπίβουλος πλεονεξία παρενη-μερήσασα διέσεισεν, ἀντ' οἰκειότητος ἀλλοτριότητα 80 καὶ ἀντὶ φιλίας ἔχθραν ἐργασαμένη. φιλοσοφίας τε τὸ μὲν λογικὸν ὡς οὐκ ἀναγκαῖον εἰς κτῆσιν ἀρετῆς λογοθήραιοι, τὸ δὲ φυσικὸν ὡς μείζον ἢ κατὰ ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν μετεωρολέσχαιοι ἀπολιπόντες, πλὴν ὅσον αὐτοῦ περὶ ὑπάρξεως θεοῦ καὶ τῆς τοῦ παντὸς γενέσεως φιλοσοφεῖται, τὸ ἠθικὸν εὖ μάλα διαπонуσιν ἀλείπταιοι χρώμενοι τοῖς πατρίοις νόμοις, οὓς ἀμήχανον ἀνθρωπίνην ἐπινοῆσαι ψυχὴν 81 ἄνευ κατοκωχῆς ἐνθέου. τούτους ἀνα-διδάσκονται μὲν καὶ παρὰ τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον, ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἐβδόμοις διαφερόντως. ἱερὰ γὰρ ἢ ἐβδόμη νενομίσται, καθ' ἣν τῶν ἄλλων ἀνέχοντες ἔργων, εἰς ἱεροῦς ἀφικνούμενοι τόπους, οἱ καλοῦνται συν-αγωγαί, καθ' ἡλικίας ἐν τάξεσιν ὑπὸ πρεσβυτέροις νέοι καθέζονται, μετὰ κόσμου τοῦ προσήκοντος 82 ἔχοντες ἀκροατικῶς. εἶθ' εἰς μὲν τις τὰς βίβλους ἀναγινώσκει λαβῶν, ἕτερος δὲ τῶν ἐμπειροτάτων

---

<sup>a</sup> The triple division of philosophy has been frequently mentioned by Philo. For the fullest account of it see De 56

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 78-82

retail or marine, but pack the inducements to covetousness off in disgrace. Not a single slave is to be found among them, but all are free, exchanging services with each other, and they denounce the owners of slaves, not merely for their injustice in outraging the law of equality, but also for their impiety in annulling the statute of Nature, who mother-like has born and reared all men alike, and created them genuine brothers, not in mere name, but in very reality, though this kinship has been put to confusion by the triumph of malignant covetousness, which has wrought estrangement instead of affinity and enmity instead of friendship. As for philosophy they abandon the logical part to quibbling verbalists as unnecessary for the acquisition of virtue, and the physical to visionary praters as beyond the grasp of human nature, only retaining that part which treats philosophically of the existence of God and the creation of the universe.<sup>a</sup> But the ethical part they study very industriously, taking for their trainers the laws of their fathers, which could not possibly have been conceived by the human soul without divine inspiration.

In these they are instructed at all other times, but particularly on the seventh days. For that day has been set apart to be kept holy and on it they abstain from all other work and proceed to sacred spots which they call synagogues. There, arranged in rows according to their ages, the younger below the elder, they sit decorously as befits the occasion with attentive ears. Then one takes the books and reads aloud and another of especial pro-

Ag. 14 ff. For the Stoic view by which natural theology is included in physic see notes on De Abr. 99 (vol. vi. pp. 52 and 597).

PHILO

ὅσα μὴ γνώριμα παρελθὼν ἀναδιδάσκει· τὰ γὰρ πλείστα διὰ συμβόλων ἀρχαιοτρόπῳ ζηλώσει παρ' 83 αὐτοῖς φιλοσοφεῖται. παιδεύονται δὲ εὐσέβειαν, ὁσιότητα, δικαιοσύνην, οἰκονομίαν, πολιτείαν, ἐπιστήμην τῶν πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀγαθῶν καὶ κακῶν καὶ ἀδιαφόρων, αἰρέσεις ὧν χρῆ καὶ φυγὰς τῶν ἐναντίων, ὅροις καὶ κανόσι τριπτοῖς χρώμενοι, τῷ τε 84 φιλοθέῳ καὶ φιλαρέτῳ καὶ φιλανθρώπῳ. τοῦ μὲν οὖν φιλοθέου δείγματα παρέχονται μυρία· τὴν παρ' ὄλον τὸν βίον συνεχῆ καὶ ἐπάλληλον ἀγνείαν, τὸ ἀνώμοτον, τὸ ἀψευδές, τὸ πάντων μὲν ἀγαθῶν αἴτιον, κακοῦ δὲ μηδενὸς νομίζειν εἶναι τὸ θεῖον· τοῦ δὲ φιλαρέτου τὸ ἀφιλοχρήματον, τὸ ἀφιλόδοξον, τὸ ἀφιλήδονον, τὸ ἐγκρατές, τὸ καρτερικόν, ἔτι δὲ ὀλιγοδεῖαν, ἀφέλειαν, εὐκολίαν, τὸ ἄτυφον, τὸ νό-μιμον, τὸ εὐσταθές, καὶ ὅσα τούτοις ὁμοίωτροπα· τοῦ δὲ φιλανθρώπου εὐνοίαν, ἰσότητα, τὴν παντὸς λόγου κρείττονα κοινωνίαν, περὶ ἧς οὐκ ἄκαιρον 85 βραχέα εἰπεῖν. πρῶτον μὲν τοίνυν οὐδενὸς οἰκία τίς ἐστὶν ἰδία, ἣν οὐχὶ πάντων εἶναι κοινὴν συμ-βέβηκε· πρὸς γὰρ τῷ κατὰ θιάσους συνοικεῖν ἀναπέπταται καὶ τοῖς ἐτέρωθεν ἀφικνουμένοις τῶν 86 ὁμοζήλων. εἰτ' ἐστὶ ταμέιον ἐν πάντων καὶ δαπάναι (κοιναί), καὶ κοιναὶ μὲν ἐσθῆτες, κοιναὶ δὲ τροφαὶ συσσίτια πεποιημένων· τὸ γὰρ ὁμωρόφιον ἢ ὁμοδίαιτον ἢ ὁμοτράπεζον οὐκ ἂν τις

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "with ardour worthy of the men of old." The same phrase occurs in De Plant. 158 and De Mig. 201, where also the exact meaning is somewhat uncertain.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. ceremonial purity and avoidance of defilement. So rather than general purity of life, which would come under τὸ φιλάρετον. For this use of ἀγνεία cf. Plato, Legg.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 82-86

iciency comes forward and expounds what is not understood. For most of their philosophical study takes the form of allegory, and in this they emulate the tradition of the past.<sup>a</sup> They are trained in 83 piety, holiness, justice, domestic and civic conduct, knowledge of what is truly good, or evil, or indifferent, and how to choose what they should and avoid the opposite, taking for their defining standards these three, love of God, love of virtue, love of men. Their love of God they show by 84 a multitude of proofs, by religious purity<sup>b</sup> constant and unbroken throughout their lives, by abstinence from oaths, by veracity, by their belief that the Godhead is the cause of all good things and nothing bad; their love of virtue, by their freedom from the love of either money or reputation or pleasure, by self-mastery and endurance, again by frugality, simple living, contentment, humility, respect for law, steadiness and all similar qualities; their love of men by benevolence and sense of equality, and their spirit of fellowship, which defies description, though a few words on it will not be out of place. First of all then no one's house is his own 85 in the sense that it is not shared by all, for besides the fact that they dwell together in communities, the door is open to visitors from elsewhere who share their convictions. Again they all have 86 a single treasury and common disbursements; their clothes are held in common and also their food through their institution of public meals. In no other community can we find the custom of sharing 917 Β καθαρότητος τε καὶ ἀγνείας τὰ περὶ τοὺς θεοῦς. Though this kind of purity is not mentioned elsewhere in this narrative, it is in other accounts, see App. p. 514.

PHILO

[459] εὔροι παρ' ἑτέροις μᾶλλον ἔργω βεβαιούμενον· | καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· ὅσα γὰρ ἂν μεθ' ἡμέραν ἐργασά-μενοι λάβωσιν ἐπὶ μισθῷ, ταῦτ' οὐκ ἴδια φυλάττουσιν, ἀλλ' εἰς μέσον προτιθέντες κοινὴν τοῖς 87 ἐθέλουσι χρῆσθαι τὴν ἀπ' αὐτῶν παρασκευάζουσιν ὠφέλειαν. οἷ τε νοσοῦντες οὐχ ὅτι πορίζειν ἀδυ-νατοῦσιν ἀμελοῦνται, τὰ πρὸς τὰς νοσηλείας ἐκ τῶν κοινῶν ἔχοντες ἐν ἐτοίμῳ, ὡς μετὰ πάσης ἀδείας ἐξ ἀφθονωτέρων ἀναλίσκειν. αἰδῶς δ' ἐστὶ πρε-σβυτέρων καὶ φροντίς, οἷα γονέων ὑπὸ γνησίων παίδων χερσὶ καὶ διανοίαις μυρίαῖς ἐν ἀφθονίᾳ τῇ 88 πάσῃ γηροτροφουμένων. XIII. τοιούτους ἢ δίχα περιεργίας Ἑλληνικῶν ὀνομάτων ἀθλητὰς ἀρετῆς ἀπεργάζεται φιλοσοφία, γυμνάσματα προτιθεῖσα τὰς ἐπαινετὰς πράξεις, ἐξ ὧν ἡ ἀδούλω-89 τος ἐλευθερία βεβαιοῦται. σημεῖον δέ· πολλῶν κατὰ καιροὺς ἐπαναστάντων τῇ χώρᾳ δυναστῶν καὶ φύσει καὶ προαιρέσει χρησαμένων διαφερούσαις —οἱ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς τὸ ἀτίθασον ἀγριότητα θηρίων ἐκνικῆσαι σπουδάσαντες, οὐδὲν παραλιπόντες τῶν εἰς ὠμότητα, τοὺς ὑπηκόους ἀγεληδὸν ἱερεύοντες ἢ καὶ ζῶντας ἔτι μαγείρων τρόπον κατὰ μέρη καὶ μέλη κρεουργοῦντες ἄχρι τοῦ τὰς αὐτὰς ὑπομείναι συμφορὰς ὑπὸ τῆς τὰ ἀνθρώπεια ἐφορώσης δίκης 90 οὐκ ἐπαύσαντο· οἱ δὲ τὸ παρακεκινημένον καὶ λελυττηκὸς εἰς ἑτέρας εἶδος κακίας μεθαρμοσά-

<sup>a</sup> γνήσιος is here used of children, not as usual in antithesis to νόθος, but in the literal as opposed to the figurative sense. So too in Legatio 62, 71, the behaviour of a father-in-law to his son-in-law is as good as if he were the γνήσιος πατήρ. So roof, life and board more firmly established in actual practice. And that is no more than one would expect. For all the wages which they earn in the day's work they do not keep as their private property, but throw them into the common stock and allow the benefit thus accruing to be shared by those who wish to use it. The sick are not neglected because 87 they cannot provide anything, but have the cost of their treatment lying ready in the common stock, so that they can meet expenses out of the greater wealth in full security. To the elder men too is given the respect and care which real<sup>a</sup> children give to their parents, and they receive from countless hands and minds a full and generous maintenance for their latter years.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 86-90

XIII. Such are the athletes 88 of virtue produced by a philosophy free from the pedantry of Greek wordiness, a philosophy which sets its pupils to practise themselves in laudable actions, by which the liberty which can never be enslaved is firmly established. Here we have a proof. 89 Many are the potentates who at various occasions have raised themselves to power over the country. They differed both in nature and the line of conduct which they followed. Some of them carried their zest for outdoing wild beasts in ferocity to the point of savagery. They left no form of cruelty untried. They slaughtered their subjects wholesale, or like cooks carved them piecemeal and limb by limb whilst still alive, and did not stay their hands till justice who surveys human affairs visited them with the same calamities. Others transformed this wild frenzy into 90 another kind of viciousness. Their conduct showed too in Spec. Leg. iv. 184 of the behaviour of a ruler to his subjects.

PHILO

- μενοι, πικρίαν ἄλεκτον ἐπιτηδεύσαντες, ἡσυχῇ δια-λαλοῦντες, ἡρεμαιοτέρας φωνῆς ὑποκρίσει βαρύμηνι ἦθος ἐπιδεικνύμενοι, κυνῶν ἰοβόλων τρόπον προσσαίνοντες, ἀνιάτων γενόμενοι κακῶν αἴτιοι, κατὰ πόλεις μνημεία τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἀσεβείας καὶ μισανθρωπίας ἀπέλιπον τὰς τῶν πεπονηθῶτων ἀλήστους 91 συμφοράς—, ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐδεὶς οὔτε τῶν σφόδρα ὠμοθύμων οὔτε τῶν πάνυ δολερῶν καὶ ὑπούλων ἴσχυσε τὸν λεχθέντα τῶν Ἑσσαίων ἢ ὀσίων ὄμιλον αἰτιάσασθαι, πάντες δὲ ἀσθενέστεροι τῆς τῶν ἀνδρῶν καλοκάγαθίας γενόμενοι καθάπερ αὐτονό-μοις καὶ ἐλευθέροις οὖσιν ἐκ φύσεως προσηρέχθησαν, ἄδοντες αὐτῶν τὰ συσσίτια καὶ τὴν παντὸς λόγου κρείττονα κοινωνίαν, ἣ βίου τελείου καὶ σφόδρα εὐδαίμονός ἐστι σαφέστατον δεῖγμα.
- 92 XIV. Χρῆ δ', ἐπειδὴ τὰς ἐν τοῖς πλήθεσιν ἀρετὰς οὐκ οἴονται τινες εἶναι τελείας, ἀλλ' ἄχρι συναυξήσεως καὶ ἐπιδόσεως αὐτὸ μόνον ἴστασθαι, μάρτυρας βίους τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἀνδρῶν ἀγαθῶν παραγαγεῖν, 93 οἱ σαφέσταται πίστεις ἐλευθερίας εἰσὶ. Κάλανος ἦν Ἰνδὸς γένος τῶν γυμνοσοφιστῶν· οὗτος καρτε-[460] ρικώτατος τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν ἀπάντων | νομισθεὶς οὐ μόνον ὑπὸ τῶν ἐγχωρίων ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς ἀλλοφύλων, ὃ δὴ σπανιώτατόν ἐστιν, ἐχθρῶν βασιλέων ἐθαυμάσθη, λόγοις ἐπαινετοῖς σπουδαῖα ἔργα συνυφήνας.
- 94 Ἀλέξανδρος γοῦν ὁ Μακεδῶν βουλόμενος ἐπιδείξασθαι τῇ Ἑλλάδι τὴν ἐν τῇ βαρβάρῳ σοφίαν, καθάπερ ἀπ' ἀρχετύπου γραφῆς ἀπικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον παρεκάλει Κάλανον συναποδημηῆσαι, μέγιστον περιποιήσοντα κλέος (ἐν) 95 ὅλῃ Ἀσίᾳ καὶ ὅλῃ Εὐρώπῃ. ὡς δ' οὐκ ἔπειθεν,

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 90-95

intense bitterness, but they talked with calmness, though the mask of their milder language failed to conceal their rancorous disposition. They fawned like venomous hounds yet wrought evils irremediable and left behind them throughout the cities the unforgettable sufferings of their victims as monuments of their impiety and inhumanity. Yet none of these, 91 neither the extremely ferocious nor the deep-dyed treacherous dissemblers, were able to lay a charge against this congregation of Essenes or holy ones here described. Unable to resist the high excellence of these people, they all treated them as self-governing and freemen by nature and extolled their communal meals and that ineffable sense of fellowship, which is the clearest evidence of a perfect and supremely happy life.<sup>a</sup> ✓

XIV. But since some consider that the virtues of 92 large bodies are never perfect, but merely grow and improve and then come to a halt, we must cite as evidence the lives of good individual men, which are the clearest proof of the existence of liberty. Calanus 93 was an Indian by birth of the school of the gymnosophists. Regarded as possessed of endurance more than any of his contemporaries, by combining virtuous actions with laudable words he gained the admiration, not only of his fellow countrymen, but of men of other races, and, what is most singular of all, of enemy sovereigns. Thus Alexander of Macedon, wishing to 94 exhibit to the Grecian world a specimen of the barbarians' wisdom, like a copy reproducing the original picture, began by urging Calanus to travel with him from India with the prospect of winning high fame in the whole of Asia and the whole of Europe ; and 95 ✓

<sup>a</sup> On §§ 89-91 see App. p. 515.

PHILO

ἀναγκάσειν ἔφη συνακολουθεῖν· ὁ δὲ εὐθυβόλως πάνυ καὶ εὐγενῶς “ τίνος οὖν ” εἶπεν “ ἄξιόν με τοῖς Ἑλλησιν ἐπιδείξεις, Ἀλέξανδρε, εἴ γε ἀναγκασθήσομαι ποιεῖν ἢ μὴ βούλομαι; ” ἄρ’ οὐ γέμων μὲν παρρησίας ὁ λόγος, πολὺ δὲ μᾶλλον ἐλευθερίας<sup>1</sup> ὁ νοῦς; ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ ἐν τοῖς βεβαιότεροις φωνῶν γράμμασιν ἦθους ἀδουλώτου τύπους 96 ἔστηλίτευσεν ἀριδῆλους. μηνύει δὲ ἡ πεμφθεῖσα ἐπιστολὴ τῷ βασιλεῖ·

“ Κάλανος Ἀλεξάνδρῳ

Φίλοι πείθουσί σε χεῖρας καὶ ἀνάγκην προσφέρειν Ἰνδῶν φιλοσόφοις οὐδ’ ἐν ὕπνοις ἑωρακότες ἡμέτερα ἔργα. σώματα μὲν γὰρ μετοίσεις ἐκ τόπου εἰς τόπον, ψυχὰς δὲ οὐκ ἀναγκάσεις ποιεῖν ἢ μὴ βούλονται μᾶλλον ἢ πλίνθους καὶ ξύλα φωνὴν ἀφεῖναι. πῦρ μεγίστους τοῖς ζῶσι σώμασι πόνους καὶ φθορὰν ἐργάζεται· τούτου ὑπεράνω ἡμεῖς γινόμεθα, ζῶντες καιόμεθα. οὐκ ἔστι βασιλεὺς οὐδὲ ἄρχων, ὃς ἀναγκάσει ἡμᾶς ποιεῖν ἢ μὴ προαιρούμεθα. Ἑλλήνων δὲ φιλοσόφοις οὐκ ἐξομοιούμεθα, ὅσοι αὐτῶν εἰς πανήγυριν λόγους ἐμελέτησαν, ἀλλὰ λόγοις ἔργα παρ’ ἡμῖν ἀκόλουθα καὶ ἔργοις λόγοι βραχεῖαν<sup>2</sup> ἔχουσι δύναμιν καὶ μακαριότητα

<sup>1</sup> mss. παρρησίας.

<sup>2</sup> M has βραχεῖς ἄλλην. The evidently defective text of this sentence must be judged in the light of Ambrose’s paraphrase. Ambrose, whose version of the letter in Ep. 37 is very close till the end, closes with “ nobis res sociae verbis et verba rebus: res celeres et sermones breves: in virtute nobis libertas beata est.” From this Cohn suggests after ἔργοις λόγοι, (ἔργα μὲν ταχέα καὶ λόγοι) βραχεῖς, ἀλλ’ ἔχουσι δύναμιν, κτλ. The difficulty I find in this is that it ignores

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 95-96

when he failed to persuade him declared that he would compel him to follow him. Calanus's reply was as noble as it was apposite. "What shall I be worth to you, Alexander, for exhibiting to the Greeks if I am compelled to do what I do not wish to do?" What a wealth of frankness there is in the words and far more of freedom in the thought. But more durable than his spoken are his written words and in these he set on record clear signs of a spirit which could not be enslaved. The letter he sent to Alexander runs thus:—

“ Calanus to Alexander

Your friends urge you to apply violence and compulsion to the philosophers of India. These friends, however, have never even in their dreams seen what we do. Bodies you will transport from place to place, but souls you will not compel to do what they will not do, any more than force bricks or sticks to talk. Fire causes the greatest trouble and ruin to living bodies: we are superior to this: we burn ourselves alive.<sup>a</sup> There is no king, no ruler, who will compel us to do what we do not freely wish to do. We are not like those philosophers of the Greeks, who practise words for a festal assembly. With us deeds accord with words and words with deeds. Deeds pass swiftly and words have short-lived power:

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Abr. 182, where it is stated that the gymnosophists burn themselves at the outset of old age. Calanus is said to have ended his life in this way. See App. p. 516.

---

Ambrose's "in virtute." I tentatively suggest and have translated (ἔργα μὲν ταχέα καὶ λόγοι) βραχείαν ἔχουσι δύναμιν (ἀρεταὶ ἡμῶν) καὶ μακαριότητα καὶ ἐλευθερίαν περιποιῶνται (this

PHILO

97 καὶ ἐλευθερίαν περιποιούντες.” ἐπὶ δὴ τοιαύταις ἀποφάσεσι καὶ γνώμαις ἄρ’ οὐκ ἄξιον τὸ Ζηνώνειον ἐπιφωνῆσαι, ὅτι “ θάττον ἂν ἀσκὸν βαπτίσει τις πλήρη πνεύματος ἢ βιάσαιτο τῶν σπουδαίων ὄντιν οὖν ἄκοντα δρᾶσαι τι τῶν ἀβουλήτων”; ἀνένδοτος γὰρ ψυχὴ καὶ ἀήττητος, ἣν ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος δόγμασι παγίοις ἐνεύρωσε.

98 XV. Τῆς δὲ σπουδαίων ἐλευθερίας μάρτυρές εἰσι ποιηταὶ καὶ συγγραφεῖς, ὧν ταῖς γνώμαις “Ἕλληνες ὁμοῦ καὶ βάρβαροι σχεδὸν ἐξ αὐτῶν σπαργάνων ἐντρέφόμενοι βελτιοῦνται τὰ ἦθη, πᾶν ὅσον ἐξ ὑπαιτίου τροφῆς καὶ διαίτης ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς κεκιβδήλευτα μεταχαραττόμενοι πρὸς τὸ δόκιμον.

99 ἴδε γοῦν οἶα παρ’ Εὐριπίδῃ φησὶν ὁ Ἡρακλῆς·

[461] | “ πῖμπρα, κάταιθε σάρκας, ἐμπλήσθητί μου πίνων κελαινὸν αἷμα· πρόσθε γὰρ κάτω γῆς εἰσιν ἄστρα γῆ τ’ ἄνεισ’ εἰς αἰθέρα, πρὶν ἐξ ἐμοῦ σοι θῶπ’ ἀπαντήσαι λόγον.”

τῶ γὰρ ὄντι θωπεία μὲν καὶ κολακεία καὶ ὑπό-κρισις, ἐν οἷς λόγοι γνώμαις διαμάχονται, δουλοπρεπέστατα, τὸ δὲ ἀνόθως καὶ γνησίως ἐκ καθαροῦ τοῦ συνειδότος ἐλευθεροστομεῖν εὐγενέσιν ἀρμόττον.

100 πάλιν τὸν αὐτὸν σπουδαῖον οὐχ ὀρᾶς, ὅτι οὐδὲ πωλούμενος θεράπων εἶναι δοκεῖ, κατα-πλήττων τοὺς ὀρῶντας, ὡς οὐ μόνον ἐλεύθερος ὢν last is read by two mss. for περιποιούντες). The similar ending of δύναμιν and ἡμῖν would facilitate the loss of ἀρεταὶ ἡμῖν. At the same time it is true that the βραχεῖς of M fits better with Ambrose’s “breves.” See also App. p. 516.

<sup>a</sup> Or if Cohn’s reconstruction (see note 2, pp. 64-66) is pre-66

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 96-100

virtues secure to us blessedness and freedom.”<sup>a</sup>

Protestations and judgements like these 97 may well bring to our lips the saying of Zeno : “ Sooner will you sink an inflated bladder than compel any virtuous man to do against his will anything that he does not wish.” For never will that soul surrender or suffer defeat which right reason has braced with principles firmly held.

XV. The freedom of the virtuous is also vouched 98 for by the poets and prose writers, in whose thoughts Greeks and barbarians alike are reared almost from the cradle, and so gain improvement of character and restamp into sterling coin every bit of metal in their souls which has been debased by a faulty upbringing and mode of life. See, for instance, what Heracles 99 says in Euripides :

Burn me, consume my flesh, and drink thy fill
Of my dark blood ; for sooner shall the stars
Go 'neath the earth and earth go up to sky
Ere thou shalt from my lips meet fawning word.<sup>b</sup>

For in very truth, fawning and flattery and dissembling, in which the words are at war with the thought, are utterly slavish. But freedom of speech, genuine without taint of bastardy, and proceeding from a pure conscience, befits the nobly born.

Again, observe how this same man of 100 worth, even when put up for sale, seems to be no menial, but strikes awe into the beholders, who feel ferred, “ Our deeds are swift and our words short ; but they have power, securing for us blessedness and freedom.” For the suggested reconstruction translated above see same note.

<sup>b</sup> This is the fourth time that this passage is quoted by Philo, the other three being Leg. All. iii. 202, De Ios. 78, and § 25 above. On the source of the quotation see App. p. 516.

PHILO

101 ἀλλὰ καὶ δεσπότης ἐσόμενος τοῦ πριαμένου; ὁ γοῦν Ἑρμῆς πυνθανομένω μὲν, εἰ φαῦλός ἐστιν, ἀποκρίνεται·

“ ἦκιστα φαῦλος, ἀλλὰ πᾶν τούναντίον πρὸς σχῆμα σεμνὸς κοῦ ταπεινὸς οὐδ’ ἄγαν εὖογκος ὡς ἂν δοῦλος, ἀλλὰ καὶ στολήν ἰδόντι λαμπρὸς καὶ ξύλω δραστήριος.

οὐδεὶς δ’ ἐς οἶκους δεσπότης ἀμείνονας αὐτοῦ πρίασθαι βούλεται· σέ δ’ εἰσορῶν πᾶς τις δέδοικεν. ὄμμα γὰρ πυρὸς γέμεις, ταῦρος λέοντος ὡς βλέπων πρὸς ἐμβολήν.”

εἶτ’ ἐπιλέγει·

“ τό γ’ εἶδος αὐτό σου<sup>1</sup> κατηγορεῖ σιγῶντος, ὡς εἴης ἂν οὐχ ὑπήκοος, τάσσειν δὲ μᾶλλον ἢ ἰπιτάσσεσθαι θέλοις.”

102 ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ πριαμένου Συλέως εἰς ἀγρὸν ἐπέμφθη, διέδειξεν ἔργοις τὸ τῆς φύσεως ἀδούλωτον· τὸν μὲν γὰρ ἄριστον τῶν ἐκεῖ ταύρων καταθύσας Διὶ πρόφασιν εὐωχεῖτο, πολὺν δ’ οἶνον ἐκφορήσας 103 ἀθρόον εὔ μάλα κατακλιθεὶς ἠκρατίζετο. Συλεῖ δὲ ἀφικομένω καὶ δυσανασχετοῦντι ἐπὶ τε τῇ βλάβῃ καὶ τῇ τοῦ θεράποντος ῥαθυμίᾳ καὶ τῇ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὸ εἶδος αὐτοῦ οὐ (or οὐδ). Cohn prints the last two words as above, but leaves the equally unmetrical τὸ εἶδος though he expresses high approval of the correction (Elmsley's) to τό γ’.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 100-103

that he is not only free, but will become the master of his purchaser. <sup>a</sup> Hermes, for example, in answer 101 to the question whether Heracles is worthless says :

Worthless ? far from it, quite the contrary :
His bearing's dignified, no meanness here,
Not slave-like overstocked with fat, and look How smart his dress—and he can wield a club.

To which the other replies :

Who wants to buy a stronger than himself,
And bring him home as master of the house ?
It fairly frightens one to look at you,
Eyes full of fire—you look just like a bull Watching a lion's onset.

Then he continues :

Your looks alone are evidence enough,
Though you say nothing, that you won't obey—Giving, not taking, orders is your line.

And when Syleus after buying him, sent him into his 102 estate, he showed by his actions that there was nothing of the slave in his nature. For he killed the finest bull in the stud, nominally as a sacrifice to Zeus, and feasted on it, and then brought out a great quantity of wine and lying there very comfortably drank it in huge draughts. When Syleus arrived, 103 very indignant both at the loss of his property, and at his servant's easy-going and excessively disdainful <sup>a</sup> This passage from a Satyric drama of Euripides evidently gives a different version from that in Apollodorus ii. 6. 2, in which Heracles having murdered Iphitus has to expiate his crime by three years servitude and accordingly is sold by Hermes to Omphale. During this servitude he kills Syleus, who used to compel strangers to dig in his vineyard. See further App. p. 516.

PHILO

περιττῇ καταφρονήσει μηδὲν μήτε τῆς χροᾶς μήτε ὧν ἔπραττε μεταβαλὼν εὐτολμώτατά φησι·

“ κλίθητι καὶ πύωμεν, ἐν τούτῳ δέ μου τὴν πείραν εὐθὺς λάμβαν’, εἰ κρείσσων ἔσῃ.”

104 τοῦτον οὖν πότερον δοῦλον ἢ κύριον ἀποφαντέον τοῦ δεσπότου, μὴ μόνον ἀπελευθεριάζειν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπιτάγματα ἐπιτάττειν τῷ κτησαμένῳ καὶ εἰ ἀφηνιάζοι τύπτειν καὶ προπηλακίζειν, εἰ δὲ καὶ βοηθοὺς ἐπάγοιτο, πάντας ἄρδην ἀπολλύναι τολμῶντα; γέλωσ οὖν ἂν εἶη καὶ φλυαρία πολλή τὰ κατὰ τὰς λεγομένας ὠνάς γράμματα, ἐπειδὴν τῇ καθ’ ὧν γράφεται παρενημερηθῆ σθεναρωτέρα δυνάμει, χαρτιδίων ἀγράφων ἀκρότερα, ὑπὸ σέων ἢ χρόνου ἢ εὐρώτος εἰς ἅπαν διαφθαρησόμενα.

[462]

105 XVI. | Ἄλλ’ οὐ χρή, φήσει τις, τὰς τῶν ἡρώων παράγειν εἰς πίστιν ἀρετάς· μείζους γὰρ ἢ κατὰ ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν γενομένους Ὀλυμπίοις ἀμιλλᾶσθαι, μικτῆς γενέσεως, ἀθανάτων καὶ θνητῶν ἀνακραθέντων σπερμάτων, ἐπιλαχόντας, ἡμιθέους εἰκότως προσαγορευθέντας, τοῦ θνητοῦ μίγματος ὑπὸ τῆς ἀφθάρτου μερίδος κατακρατηθέντος, ὡς μηδὲν εἶναι παράδοξον, εἰ τῶν ἐπ’ αὐτοῖς δουλείαν

106 τεχναζόντων ὠλιγώρουν. ἔστω ταῦτα. μὴ καὶ Ἀνάξαρχος ἢ Ζήνων ὁ Ἐλεάτης ἤρωες ἢ ἐκ θεῶν; ἀλλ’ ὅμως ὑπὸ τυράννων ὠμοθύμων καὶ τὴν φύσιν πικρῶν ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐπ’ αὐτοῖς ἐκθηριωθέντων στρεβλούμενοι κεκαινουργημέναις αἰκίαις, ὥσπερ ἀλλότρια ἢ ἐχθρῶν ἐπιφερόμενοι σώματα, μάλα 107 καταφρονητικῶς ἠλόγουν τῶν φοβερῶν. τὴν γὰρ

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 103-106

behaviour, Heracles did not change colour a whit, nor make any difference in what he was doing, but said with the utmost boldness :

Lie down and let us drink and have a try
At once, who'll do it better, you or I.

How then must we describe his standing with his 104 master ? Is he slave or lord, he who dares not only to take these liberties, but even to issue orders to his owner, ready to beat him and knock him about if he shows resistance, or if he calls others to his aid to annihilate them altogether ! Surely then these title-deeds, which record the so-called purchases, are just a laughing-stock and a mass of nonsense, when they are put out of court by the superior force of those against whom they are drawn up, less valid even than blank sheets of paper and destined to perish utterly, through moths, or time, or mildew.

XVI. But it is not fair, an objector will say, to cite 105 the achievements of the heroes as evidence. They have a greatness above human nature ; they vie with the Olympians and as inheritors of a mixed parentage, a blend of mortal and immortal seed, are rightly called demigods, because the mortal ingredient is overpowered by the immortal part, so that there is nothing extraordinary in their contempt for those who plan to enslave them. Be it so ! But what of 106 Anaxarchus or Zeno the Eleatic ? Are they heroes or the offspring of gods ? Nevertheless in the hands of cruel-hearted tyrants, naturally bitter and stirred to still greater ferocity by anger with them, though racked with strange and ingeniously invented tortures, they behaved as though the bodies in which they lay belonged to strangers or enemies, and with high disdain set the terrors of the tormentors at

PHILO

- ψυχὴν ἐθίσαντες ἐξ ἀρχῆς δι' ἐπιστήμης ἔρωτα τῆς μὲν πρὸς τὰ πάθη κοινωνίας ἀφίστασθαι, παιδείας δὲ καὶ σοφίας περιέχεσθαι, μετανάστιν μὲν σώματος εἰργάσαντο, φρονήσει δὲ καὶ ἀνδρεία καὶ ταῖς ἄλ-108 λαις ἄρεταῖς σύνοικον ἀπέφηναν. τοιγαροῦν ὁ μὲν κρεμᾶμενος<sup>1</sup> καὶ κατατεινόμενος ὑπὲρ τοῦ τι τῶν ἀρρήτων ἐκλαλήσαι, πυρὸς καὶ σιδήρου, τῶν ἐν τῇ φύσει κραταιοτάτων, φανεῖς δυνατώτερος, ἀποτρα-γῶν τοῖς ὁδοῦσι τὴν γλῶτταν εἰς τὸν βασανιστὴν ἠκόντισεν, ἵνα μηδ' ἄκων ἂ καλὸν ἠσυχάζειν 109 φθέγγηται βιασθεῖς. ὁ δὲ τλητικώτατα εἶπε· “ πτίσσε τὸν Ἀναξάρχου ἀσκόν· Ἀνάξαρχον γὰρ οὐκ ἂν δύναιο.” αὐταὶ γέμουσαι θράσους αἱ εὐτολμῖαι τὴν ἠρωϊκὴν εὐγένειαν οὐ μετρίως ὑπερβάλλουσι,<sup>2</sup> διότι τοῖς μὲν τὸ κλέος ἐν τοῖς φυτεύσασιν ἀκούσιον, τῶν δ' ἐν ἐκουσίοις ἀρεταῖς, αἱ τοὺς ἀδόλως χρωμένους ἀθανατίζειν πεφύκασι.
 110 XVII. Παλαιστὰς οἶδα καὶ παγκρατιαστὰς πολλάκις ὑπὸ φιλοτιμίας καὶ τῆς εἰς τὸ νικᾶν σπουδῆς, ἀπαγορευόντων αὐτοῖς τῶν σωματίων, μόνῃ ψυχῇ διαπνέοντας ἔτι καὶ διαθλοῦντας, ἣν ἐθίσαντες καταφρονητικῶς ἔχειν τῶν φοβερῶν ἐγκαρτεροῦσιν 111 ἄχρι τῆς τοῦ βίου τελευτῆς. εἴτ' οἰόμεθα τοὺς μὲν ἀσκητὰς τῆς ἐν σώμασιν εὐτονίας ἐπιβεβηκέναι φόβῳ θανάτου ἢ δι' ἐλπίδα νίκης ἢ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ

<sup>1</sup> So mss. except M which has κρινόμενος (so Cohn).

<sup>2</sup> mss. ὑπερβάλλουσαι.

<sup>a</sup> The same story is told of Zeno in Diogenes Laertius ix. 27, and also of Anaxarchus, ibid. 59.

<sup>b</sup> For this story see Diogenes Laertius ix. 59, where the word for the thing pounded is θύλακος (“bag” or “pouch”). By this is meant the body as being the bag containing the

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 107-111

nought. For having inured the soul from the first to 107 hold aloof through love of knowledge from association with the passions, and to cleave to culture and wisdom, they set it wandering away from the body and brought it to make its home with wisdom and courage and the other virtues. So it was that Zeno 108 when suspended and stretched on the wheel, to make him tell something which should not be disclosed, showed himself mightier than the strongest things in nature, fire and iron. He gnawed off his tongue and shot it at the torturer, lest under violence he should involuntarily utter what honour would leave unspoken.<sup>a</sup> Anaxarchus's speech showed the staunchest 109 endurance. "Pound Anaxarchus's skin," he said, "Anaxarchus you cannot pound."<sup>b</sup> These examples of true courage, full of the spirit of defiance, have a value far exceeding the inherited nobleness of the heroes. Their glory belongs to their parentage and is not of their own volition. The glory of the philosophers rests upon achievements of virtue, freely willed by themselves, and these being what they are, immortalize those who practise them in sincerity.

XVII. I know many cases of wrestlers and pan- 110 cratiasts so full of ambition and eagerness for victory that though their bodies have lost their strength, they renew their vigour and continue their athletic efforts with nothing to help them but the soul, which they have inured to despise terrors, and in this they persevere to their last gasp. Then, if those who exercise 111 their bodily vigour have surmounted the fear of death whether in the hope of victory or to avoid seeing themselves defeated, can we suppose that those soul and ἀσκός here may mean the same rather than the skin in the literal sense.

PHILO

τὴν ἰδίαν ἦτταν ἐπιδεῖν, τοὺς δὲ τὸν ἀόρατον νοῦν γυμνάζοντας ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ὃς ἀψευδῶς ἀνθρωπὸς ἐστὶν οἶκον ἐπιφερόμενος τὸ αἰσθητὸν εἶδος, καὶ | [463] λόγοις μὲν τοῖς ἐκ φιλοσοφίας ἔργοις δὲ τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀλείφοντας οὐχ ὑπὲρ ἐλευθερίας ἐθελήσειν ἀποθνήσκειν, ἢ ἐν ἀδουλώτῳ φρονήματι τὴν εἰμαρ-112 μένην ἀνύσωσι πορείαν; ἐν ἀγῶνί φασιν ἱερῶ δύο ἀθλητὰς ἰσορρόπῳ κεκρημένους ἀλκῇ, τὰ αὐτὰ ἀντιδρῶντάς τε καὶ ἀντιπάσχοντας, μὴ πρότερον ἀπειπεῖν ἢ ἐκότερον τελευτῆσαι.

“ δαιμόνιε, φθίσει σε τὸ σὸν μένος,”

113 εἴποι τις ἂν ἐπὶ τῶν τοιούτων. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὖν κοτίνων μὲν χάριν καὶ σελίνων εὐκλεῆς ἀγωνισταῖς ἢ τελευτῇ, σοφοῖς δὲ οὐ πολὺ μᾶλλον ἐλευθερίας, ἥς ὁ πόθος ταῖς ψυχαῖς μόνον, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἐνίδρυται καθάπερ τι μέρος ἠνωμένον οὐ τῶν ἐπι-τυχόντων, οὗ διακοπέντος ἅπασαν τὴν κοινωνίαν 114 φθειρεσθαι συμβέβηκε; Λακωνικοῦ παιδὸς ἄδεται παρ’ οἷς ἔθος ἰχνηλατεῖν ἀρετὰς τὸ ἐκ γένους ἢ φύσεως ἀδουλώτων· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ αἰχμάλωτος ἀπαχθεῖς ὑπὸ τινος τῶν Ἀντιγόνου τὰς μὲν ἐλευθέρας χρείας ὑπέμενε, ταῖς δὲ δουλικαῖς ἠναντιοῦτο φάσκων οὐχὶ δουλεύσειν, καίτοι μήπω τοῖς Λυκούργου νόμοις παγίως ἐντραφῆναι διὰ τὴν ἡλικίαν δυνη-θεῖς, ὅτι μόνον αὐτῶν ἐγεύσατο, τοῦ παρόντος ἀβιώτου βίου θάνατον εὐτυχέστερον κρίνας, ἀπο-γνοὺς ἀπολύτρωσιν, ἄσμενος ἑαυτὸν διεχρήσατο.

<sup>a</sup> Il. vi. 407.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. Antigonus Doson, who conquered Sparta 221 B.C.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 111-115

who drill the invisible mind within them, the veritable man, housed within the form which the senses perceive,—those who train it with words of philosophy and deeds of virtue will not be willing to die for their freedom and so complete their appointed pilgrimage with a spirit that defies enslavement! It is told of 112 two athletes in a sacred contest how possessed of equal strength, each offensive taken by the one returned in equal measure by the other, they never flagged until both fell dead. “ Ah! then thy own prowess will destroy thee,”<sup>a</sup> are words which will apply to such as these. Surely then if to die for a 113 garland of wild olive or parsley is a glory to the rivals in the arena, a far greater glory is it to the wise to die for freedom, the love of which stands in very truth implanted in the soul like nothing else, not as a casual adjunct but an essential part of its unity, and cannot be amputated without the whole system being destroyed as the result. Students who investigate 114 examples of high excellence sing the praises of the Laconian boy, to whom race or his own nature gave a spirit which would not brook enslavement. Carried into captivity by one of Antigonus’s<sup>b</sup> people, he submitted to such tasks as became a freeman, but stood out against those of a slavish kind, declaring that he would not be a slave. And although by reason of his tender years he had not received the solid nutrition of the laws of Lyncurgus, yet from his mere taste of them, he judged that death was a happier lot than his present valueless life, and despairing of ransom gladly put an end to himself.<sup>c</sup> There is also the story 115 <sup>c</sup> The same story is told by Sen. Ep. 77 with the same moral. According to Seneca he killed himself by knocking his head against the wall.

PHILO

- 115 λέγεται δὲ καὶ πρὸς Μακεδόνων ἀλούσας Δαρδανίδας γυναικας αἰσχιστον κακὸν δουλείαν ὑπολαβούσας οὓς ἐκουροτρόφουν παῖδας εἰς τὸ βαθύτατον τοῦ ποταμοῦ ρίπτειν ἐπιφωνούσας· “ ἄλλ’ ὑμεῖς γε οὐ δουλεύετε, πρὶν δ’ ἄρξασθαι βίου βαρυδαίμονος, τὸ χρεῶν ἐπιτεμόντες ἐλεύ-θεροι τὴν ἀναγκαίαν καὶ πανυστάτην ὁδὸν περαιώ-116 σεσθε.” Πολυξένην δὲ ὁ τραγικὸς Εὐριπίδης ἀλογοῦσαν μὲν θανάτου φροντίζουσαν δὲ ἐλευθερίας εἰσάγει δι’ ὧν φησιν·

“ ἐκοῦσα θήσκω, μὴ τις ἄψηται χρὸς τοῦμοῦ· παρέξω γὰρ δέρην εὐκαρδίως, ἐλευθέραν δέ μ’, ὡς ἐλευθέρα θάνω, πρὸς θεῶν μεθέντες κτείνατε.”

- 117 XVIII. εἶτ’ οἰόμεθα γυναίκοις μὲν καὶ μειρακίοις, ὧν τὰ μὲν φύσει ὀλιγόφρονα τὰ δὲ ἡλικία εὐολίσθω χρώμενα, τοσοῦτον ἐλευθερίας ἔρωτα ἐντήκεσθαι, ὡς ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ ταύτην ἀφαιρεθῆναι πρὸς θάνατον ὡς ἐπ’ ἀθανασίαν ὀρμᾶν, τοὺς δὲ σοφίας ἀκράτου σπάσαντας οὐκ εὐθὺς ἐλευθέρους [464] εἶναι, | πηγὴν τινα εὐδαιμονίας τὴν ἀρετὴν (ἐν) ἑαυτοῖς περιφέροντας, ἣν ἐπίβουλος οὐδεμία πώποτε δύναμις κατέξευξε τὸν ἀρχῆς καὶ βασιλείας 118 ἔχουσαν αἰώνιον κλῆρον; ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ δήμους ὅλους ἀκούομεν ὑπὲρ ἐλευθερίας ἅμα καὶ πίστεως τῆς πρὸς ἀποθανόντας εὐεργέτας αὐθαί-ρητον πανωλεθρίαν ὑποστάντας, ὥσπερ φασὶν οὐ πρὸ πολλοῦ Ξανθίου. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ εἰς τῶν ἐπι-θεμένων Ἰουλίῳ Καίσαρι, Βροῦτος, ἐπιὼν ἐπ’

<sup>a</sup> No reference is given for this story. Dardania is of the Dardanian women taken prisoners by the Macedonians, how holding slavery to be the worst disgrace they threw the children which they were nurturing into the deepest part of the river, exclaiming, "You at least shall not be slaves but ere you have begun your life of misery shall cut short your destined span and pass still free along the final road which all must tread."<sup>a</sup> Polyxena, too, is described 116 by the tragedian Euripides as thinking little of death but much of her freedom when she says :

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 115-118

Willing I die, that none may touch my flesh—
For I will give my throat with all my heart.
In heaven's name let me go free, then slay me
That I may die still free.<sup>b</sup>

XVIII. Then can we suppose that while 117 women and lads, the former endowed by nature with little sense, the latter at so insecure an age, are imbued with so profound a love of liberty, that to save themselves from losing it they seek death as eagerly as if it were immortality—can we suppose, I say, that those who have drunk deep of wisdom undiluted can be anything but free—those who bear within them a well-spring of happiness in the high courage which no malignant force has ever yet subdued because sovereignty and kingship is its everlasting heritage?

Indeed we hear of whole populations 118 voluntarily suffering annihilation to safeguard their liberty and at the same time their good faith to dead benefactors. Such is the story told of the Xanthians in recent years. When one of the assassins of Julius Caesar, namely Brutus, marched with an army apparently a vague term for part of Mysia (Dictionary of Geography).

<sup>b</sup> Hecuba 548 ff.

PHILO

- αὐτοὺς ἐστράτευσε, δεδιότες οὐ πόρθησιν ἀλλὰ <δουλείαν> τὴν ὑπ' ἀνδροφόνου κτείναντος ἡγεμόνα καὶ εὐεργέτην—ἀμφότερα γὰρ ἦν αὐτῷ Καῖσαρ—ἀπεμάχοντο μὲν ἐφ' ὅσον οἰοί τε ἦσαν δυνατῶς τὸ πρῶτον, ὑπαναλούμενοι δὲ ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ὀλίγον ἔτ' 119 ἀντείχον. ὡς δὲ ἅπασαν τὴν ἰσχὺν ἔδαπάνησαν, γύναια καὶ γονεῖς καὶ τέκνα συνελάσαντες εἰς τὰς σφῶν οἰκίας ἕκαστοι καθιέρευον· καὶ σωρηδὸν τὰ σφάγια νήσαντες, πῦρ ἐνέντες καὶ ἑαυτοὺς ἐπικατασφάξαντες, ἐλεύθεροι τὸ πεπρωμένον ἀπ' ἐλευ-120 θέρου καὶ εὐγενοῦς φρονήματος ἐξέπλησαν. ἀλλ' οὔτοι μὲν πικρίαν ἀμείλικτον τυραννικῶν ἐχθρῶν ἀποδιδράσκοντες πρὸ ἀδόξου βίου τὸν μετ' εὐκλείας θάνατον ἠροῦντο. οἷς δὲ ἐπέτρεπε ζῆν τὰ πράγματα τὰ τυχηρά, τλητικῶς ὑπέμενον τὴν Ἡρά-κλειον εὐτολμίαν ἀπομιμούμενοι· καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνος τῶν Εὐρυσθέως ἐπιταγμάτων διεφάνη κρείττων.
 121 ὁ γοῦν κυνικὸς φιλόσοφος Διογένης ὕψει καὶ μεγέθει τοσοῦτῳ φρονήματος ἐχρήσατο, ὥσθ' ἄλους ὑπὸ ληστῶν, ἐπεὶ γλίσχρως καὶ μόλις τὰς ἀναγκαίας αὐτῷ παρείχον τροφάς, οὔθ' ὑπὸ τῆς παρούσης τύχης γναμφθεῖς οὔτε τὴν ὠμότητα τῶν ὑπηγμένων δείσας “ἀτοπώτατον οὖν” ἔφη “γίνεται, δελφάκια μὲν ἢ προβάτια, ὅποτε μέλλοι πιπράσκεισθαι, τροφαῖς ἐπιμελεστέραις πιαίνειν εἰς εὐσαρκίαν, ζώων δὲ τὸ ἄριστον, ἄνθρωπον, ἀσιτίαις

<sup>a</sup> The story is told at length by Appian, Bell. Civ. iv. 76-80.

<sup>b</sup> The first of these stories about Diogenes, §§ 121 and 122, does not appear to be referred to elsewhere. Of the re-

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 118-121

against them, what they feared was not the sack of their city, but enslavement to a murderer, who had killed his own leader and benefactor, for Caesar had been both to him. As long as they could they fought 119 on and at first made a powerful defence, and while their numbers were gradually wasting away they still held out. But when their whole strength was spent, they drove their women and parents and children each to their several homes and there slaughtered them, and after piling the bodies in a heap fired it and slew themselves upon it, thus completing their allotted term as free men inspired by a free and noble resolution.<sup>a</sup> Now these to escape the merciless cruelty of 120 tyrannical enemies chose death with honour in preference to an inglorious life, but others whom the circumstances of their lot permitted to live, endured in patience, imitating the courage of Heracles, who proved himself superior to the tasks imposed by Eurystheus.

<sup>b</sup> Thus it was with the cynic 121 philosopher Diogenes. So great and lofty was his spirit, that when captured by robbers, who grudgingly provided him with the barest minimum of food, still remained unmoved by his present position and had no fear of the cruelty of those who held him in their power. "It is surely very preposterous," he said, "that while sucking pigs and sheep when they are going to be sold are fed up with greater care to make them fat and well favoured, man the best of animals should be reduced to a skeleton by want of food and partees in § 123 the first is given in Diogenes Laertius vi. 29 and in another setting ibid. 74. The second repartee seems to be another form of that recorded in Diogenes Laertius vi. 74, where speaking of a certain Xenias (elsewhere described as a profligate), he said to the auctioneer "sell me to him, for he needs a master."

PHILO

κατασκελετευθέντα καὶ συνεχέσιν ἐνδείαις ἐπευωνί-122 ζεσθαι.” λαβὼν δὲ τροφὰς διαρκεῖς, ἐπειδὴ μεθ’ ἑτέρων αἰχμαλώτων ἔμελλεν ἀπεμπολεῖσθαι, καθἴσας πρότερον ἡρίστα μαλ’ εὐθαρσῶς, ἐπιδιδούς καὶ τοῖς πλησίον. ἐνὸς δὲ οὐχ ὑπομένοντος,<sup>1</sup> ἀλλὰ καὶ σφόδρα κατηφοῦντος, “ οὐ παύση τῆς συννοίας; χρῶ τοῖς παροῦσιν ” ἔφη.

“ καὶ γάρ τ’ ἠύκομος Νιόβη ἐμνήσατο σίτου, τῇ περ δώδεκα παῖδες ἐνὶ μεγάροισιν ὄλοντο, ἕξ μὲν θυγατέρες, ἕξ δ’ υἱέες ἡβῶντες.”

123 | εἴτ’ ἐπινεανιεύομενος πρὸς τὸν πυθόμενον τῶν
 [465] ὀνητικῶς ἐχόντων “ τί οἶδας; ” “ ἄρχειν ” εἶπεν “ ἀνθρώπων,” ἔνδοθεν, ὡς ἔοικε, τῆς ψυχῆς τὸ ἐλεύθερον καὶ εὐγενὲς καὶ φύσει βασιλικὸν ὑπη-χούσης. ἤδη δὲ καὶ πρὸς χαριεντισμὸν ὑπὸ τῆς συνήθους ἐκεχειρίας,<sup>2</sup> ἐφ’ οἷς οἱ ἄλλοι συννοίας γέ-124 μοντες κατήφουν, ἐτράπετο. λέγεται γοῦν, ὅτι θεασάμενός τινα τῶν ὠνουμένων, ὃν θήλεια νόσος εἶχεν, ἐκ τῆς ὄψεως οὐκ ἄρρενα προσελθὼν ἔφη.

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn with M. The other mss. vary between οὐ λυπουμένου ὄντος, οὐ μόνον λυπουμένου ὄντος and οὐ μόνον λυπουμένου.
 Cohn’s theory that the first form of these arose by mistaking the χ of οὐχ for λ, and that the others were later developed out of it, is probably right.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn, who prints ἐφ’ ἧ for ἐφ’ οἷς, regards the passage or at least ἐκεχειρίας to be corrupt. I do not feel sure of this.
 The word is used coupled with ἀδεια and ἀνεσις in De Cher.
 92 and De Sac. 23 and below, § 148. In De Conf. 165, where see note, we have ἡ τοῦ διαμαρτάνειν ἐκεχειρία. The extension of the word from a situation where restraint is removed to unrestrainedness as a quality in a man is not great. It would be difficult however to fit it in with ἐφ’ ἧ, unless it meant that the others were frightened at his cheeki-

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 122-124

constant privations and so fetch a lower price.”<sup>a</sup> He 122 then received adequate allowances of food and when he was about to be brought to market with the other captives, he first sat down and took his dinner in the highest spirits, and gave some of it to those near him. To one of them who could not resign himself,<sup>b</sup> and, indeed, was exceedingly dejected, he said, “ Stop this repining and make the best of things, for

E'en fair-haired Niobe took thought for food Though she had lost twelve children in the halls—
Six daughters and six sons in prime of youth.”<sup>c</sup>

Then when one of the prospective purchasers asked 123 him what he was skilled at, he said with all boldness “ at ruling men,” a reply which, showing freedom, nobility, and natural kingliness, was clearly dictated by the soul within him. Again we find him with his wonted licence making witticisms out of a situation which filled the others with melancholy and dejection. It is said, for instance, that looking at one of 124 the purchasers, an addict to effeminacy, whose face showed that he had nothing of the male about him, he went up to him and said, “ You should buy me, for

<sup>a</sup> See on § 37.

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps “ could not bring himself to accept the food,” which fits in better with the Homeric quotation. Cf. οὐχ ὑπέμειναν τὰς δωρέας “ they scorned to accept the gifts” (quoted by L. & S. rev. from Isoc. iv. 94).

<sup>c</sup> Il. xxiv. 602 ff.

---

ness, and I have adopted ἐφ' οἷς (M) which has at least as good authority. We might expect τὰ ἐφ' οἷς, but compare τῇ καθ' ὧν γράφεται δυνάμει, § 104. The most questionable thing about the interpretation which I have given is that it assumes that the middle ἐτρέπετο can be used transitively, and though τρέπειν and τρέπεσθαι are in some ways interchangeable, I have not found any exact parallel.

PHILO

“ σύ με πρίω· σὺ γὰρ ἀνδρὸς χρεῖαν ἔχειν μοι δοκεῖς,” ὡς τὸν μὲν δυσωπηθέντα ἐφ’ οἷς ἑαυτῷ συνήδει καταδύναι, τοὺς δὲ ἄλλους τὸ σὺν εὐτολμῖα εὐθυβόλον ἐκπλήττεσθαι. ἄρα γε τῷ τοιούτῳ δουλείαν, ἀλλ’ οὐ μόνον ἐλευθερίαν δίχα ἀνυπευ-125 θύνου ἡγεμονίας ἐπιφημιστέον; ζηλωτῆς δὲ τῆς τούτου παρρησίας ἐγένετό τις Χαιρέας τῶν ἀπὸ παιδείας. Ἀλεξάνδρειαν γὰρ οἰκῶν τὴν πρὸς Αἰγύπτῳ, δυσχεράναντός ποτε Πτολεμαίου καὶ ἀπειλήσαντος οὐ μετρίως, τῆς ἐκείνου βασιλείας οὐδὲν ἐλάττονα τὴν ἐν τῇ ἑαυτοῦ φύσει νομίσας ἐλευθερίαν, ἀντέλεξεν·

“ Αἰγυπτίοισιν ἄνασσε, σέθεν δ’ ἐγὼ οὐκ ἀλεγίζω οὐδ’ ὄθομαι κοτέοντος.”

126 ἔχουσι γάρ τι βασιλικὸν αἰ εὐγενεῖς ψυχαί, τὸ λαμπρὸν πλεονεξία τύχης οὐκ ἀμαυρούμεναι, ὃ προτρέπει καὶ τοῖς τὰξίωμα ὑπερόγκοις ἐξ ἴσου διαφέρεσθαι, ἀλαζονεῖα παρρησίαν ἀντιτάττον.

127 Θεόδωρον λόγος ἔχει τὸν ἐπικληθέντα ἄθεον ἐκπεσόντα τῶν Ἀθηνῶν καὶ πρὸς Λυσίμαχον ἐλθόντα, ἐπειδὴ τις τῶν ἐν τέλει τὸν δρασμὸν ὠνείδισεν, ἅμα καὶ τὰς αἰτίας ἐπιλέγων, ὅτι ἐπὶ ἀθεότητι καὶ διαφθορᾷ τῶν νέων καταγνωσθεῖς

---

<sup>a</sup> This phrase is difficult. The sense given to δίχα in the translation, by which “without” is extended to mean “not

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 124–127

you seem to me to need a husband," whereat the person concerned conscience-stricken into shame subsided, and the others were amazed at the courage and the aptness of the sally. Must we apply the term slavery to such as him, or any other word but liberty, over which irresponsible domination has no power? <sup>a</sup>

His freedom of speech was emulated by 125
Chaereas, a man of culture. When he was living in Alexandria by Egypt, he once incurred the anger of Ptolemy, who threatened him in no mild terms. Chaereas considering that his own natural freedom was not a whit inferior to the other's kingship replied:

Be King of Egypt; I care not for you—
A fig for all your anger. <sup>b</sup>

For noble souls, whose brightness the greed of fortune 126 cannot dim, have a kingly something, which urges them to contend on an equal footing with persons of the most massive dignity and pits freedom of speech against arrogance.

A story is told of 127
Theodorus <sup>c</sup> surnamed the atheist, that when he had been banished from Athens and had joined Lysimachus, his flight was brought up against him by a person of authority, who recited the circumstances which caused it and declared that he had been ejected after being condemned as an atheist and corrupter of subject to," is not natural. δίχα is often used by Philo to introduce some additional statement and possibly that may be the meaning here, i.e. "not to say absolute sovereignty," referring of course to the sovereignty of the sage described by Diogenes Laertius vii. 122 as ἀρχὴ ἀνυπεύθυνος. The natural translation "freedom but not irresponsible sovereignty" (so Mangey "nudam libertatem imperio pleno destitutam") seems impossibly pointless.

<sup>b</sup> Il. i. 180 f. (Μυρμιδόνεσσιν for Αἰγυπτιόισιν in the original).

<sup>c</sup> For Theodorus see App. p. 517.

- ἐξέπεσεν, “ [οὐκ] ἐξέπεσον ”<sup>1</sup> φάναι, “ τὸ δ’ αὐτὸ 128 ἔπαθον τῷ Διὸς Ἡρακλεῖ. καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνος ἐξετέθη πρὸς τῶν Ἀργοναυτῶν, οὐκ ἀδικῶν, ἀλλ’ ὅτι μόνος πλήρωμα καὶ ἔρμα καθ’ αὐτὸν ὢν ἐναυβάρει, δέος παρασχὼν τοῖς συμπλέουσι, μὴ τὸ σκάφος ὑπέραντλον γένηται. καὶ γὰρ διὰ τοῦτο μετανέστην, ὕψι καὶ μεγέθει τῆς ἐμῆς διανοίας τῶν πολιτενομένων Ἀθηνησιν οὐ δυνηθέντων συνδραμεῖν, ἅμα 129 καὶ φθονηθεῖς.” προσανερομένου δὲ Λυσιμάχου· “ μὴ καὶ ἐκ τῆς πατρίδος ἐξέπεσες φθόνῳ; ” πάλιν ἀποκρίνασθαι· “ φθόνῳ μὲν οὐ, φύσεως δὲ ὑπερ-130 βολαῖς, ἃς ἡ πατὴρ οὐκ ἐχώρει. καθάπερ γὰρ Σεμέλης, ἠνίκα Διόνυσον ἐκύει, τὸν ὠρισμένον ἄχρι [466] τῆς | ἀποτέξεως χρόνον ἐνεγκεῖν οὐ δυνηθείσης, καταπλαγείς Ζεὺς τὴν τοῦ κατὰ γαστρὸς φύσιν ἡλιτόμηνον ἐξελκύσας ἰσότιμον τοῖς οὐρανίοις ἀπ-ἔφηγε θεοῖς, οὕτω καὶ ἐμὲ, τῆς πατρίδος βραχυτέρας οὔσης ἢ ὥστε δέξασθαι φιλοσόφου φρονήματος ὄγκον τοσοῦτον, δαίμων τις ἢ θεὸς ἀναστήσας εἰς εὐτυχέστερον τόπον Ἀθηνῶν<sup>2</sup> ἀποικίσαι διενόηθη.” 131 XIX. Τῆς δὲ ἐν σοφοῖς ἐλευθερίας, ὥσπερ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀνθρωπίνων ἀγαθῶν, καὶ τοῖς ἀλόγοις

<sup>1</sup> Cohn and Mangey are no doubt right in expunging the negative. For though it would make sense as “ I was not banished, but removed by divine agency ” (see end of § 130), the comparison with Heracles who was ejected and the versions of the story given by Diogenes Laertius ii. 102 and Plutarch (De Exil. 16), both of whom make him answer the question “ Were you banished? ” in the affirmative, show that οὐκ should be omitted.

<sup>2</sup> So three mss. The others Ἀθήνας, which Cohn prints. Whether he intended to insert ἦ and omitted it by inadvertence I do not know. As it stands, it seems to me quite impossible.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 127-131

youth. "I was ejected," he answered, "but I shared that fortune with the son of Zeus Heracles, for he was thrown overboard by the Argonauts, not 128 for any wrongdoing, but because he himself alone was freight<sup>a</sup> and ballast enough to overload the vessel, and made his fellow sailors afraid that it would be water-logged. And I, too, changed my residence<sup>b</sup> for this reason, because the politicians at Athens were unable to keep pace with the loftiness and magnitude of my intellect; also I was the object of envy." When 129 Lysimachus put the further question, "Was it then for envy that you were ejected?" he answered, "No, not through envy but because of the transcendence of my natural gifts which the country could not hold. For just as when Semele, while carrying Dionysus, 130 was unable to bear the weight till the time appointed for her delivery, and Zeus in consternation pulled out the fruit of her womb in a premature stage of being and made it rank equal to the celestial gods, so it was with me: my country was too small to hold such a mass of philosophical thinking, and some lower or higher deity dislodged me and resolved to transplant me to a place more favoured by fortune than Athens."

XIX. The freedom of the wise like all other human 131 good gifts may be seen exemplified also in the irra-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. § 41. The general meaning of πλήρωμα as a nautical term is "the crew," i.e. not a dead-weight, but the human "complement" as in § 142, but this does not suit the context here, and not very well in § 41, and as the two passages cannot be dissociated, it seems better to assume that in both cases the meaning is "freight" or "cargo."

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps "was made to leave my home," μετανέστην having the passive sense which the uncompounded verb often has.

PHILO

- ζώοις παραδείγματα σκοπῶν ἂν τις εὔροι. οἱ γοῦν ἀλεκτρονέες οὕτως εἰώθασι φιλοκινδύνως ἀγωνίζεσθαι, ὥστε ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ εἶξαι καὶ παραχωρῆσαι, κἂν ἡττῶνται ταῖς δυνάμεσιν, οὐχ ἡττώμενοι ταῖς
- 132 εὐτολμίαις ἄχρι θανάτου παραμένουσιν. ὁ συνιδὼν Μιλτιάδης ὁ τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγός, ἠνίκα βασιλεὺς ὁ Περσῶν ἅπασαν τὴν ἀκμὴν τῆς Ἀσίας ἀναστήσας μυριάσι πολλαῖς διέβαιεν ἐπὶ τὴν Εὐρώπην, ὡς ἀναρπάσων αὐτοβοεῖ τὴν Ἑλλάδα, συναγαγὼν ἐν τῷ παναθηναϊκῷ τοὺς συμμάχους ὀρνίθων ἀγῶνας ἐπέδειξε, λόγου παντὸς δυνατωτέρα ὑπολαμβάνων ἔσσεσθαι τὴν διὰ τῆς τοιαύτης ὄψεως παρακέλευσιν· καὶ γνώμης οὐχ ἤμαρτε.
- 133 θεασάμενοι γὰρ τὸ τλητικὸν καὶ φιλότιμον ἄχρι τελευτῆς ἐν ἀλόγοις ἀήττητον, ἀρπάσαντες τὰ ὄπλα πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον ὤρμησαν, ὡς ἐχθρῶν ἀγωνιούμενοι σώμασι, τραυμάτων καὶ σφαγῶν ἀλογοῦντες, ὑπὲρ τοῦ καὶ ἀποθανόντες ἐν ἐλευθέρῳ γοῦν τῷ τῆς πατρίδος ἐδάφει ταφῆναι. προτροπῆς γὰρ εἰς βελτίωσιν οὐδὲν οὕτως αἴτιον, ὡς ἡ τῶν ἀφανέ-
- 134 στέρων ἐλπίδος μείζων κατόρθωσις. τοῦ δὲ περὶ τοὺς ὄρνιθας ἐναγωνίου μέμνηται καὶ ὁ τραγικὸς Ἴων διὰ τούτων· “ οὐδ’ ὃ γε σῶμα τυπεῖς διφυεῖς τε κόρας ἐπιλάθεται ἀλκᾶς, ἀλλ’ ὀλιγοδρανέων φθογγάζεται· θάνατον δ’ ὃ γε δουλοσύνας προβέβουλε.”

- 135 τοὺς οὖν σοφοὺς τί οἰόμεθα οὐκ ἀσμενέστατα δουλείας ἀντικαταλλάξεσθαι τελευτήν; τὰς δὲ τῶν νέων καὶ εὐφύων ψυχὰς ἄρ’ οὐκ ἄτοπον λέγειν

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 131-135

tional animals. Thus cocks are wont to fight with such intrepidity that rather than yield and withdraw, though outdone in strength yet not outdone in courage they continue fighting until they die. This 132 Miltiades, the general of the Athenians, had observed, and when the Persian king having pressed into the ranks all the flower of Asia crossed into Europe with many myriads, thinking to seize Greece without a struggle, Miltiades collected his fellow soldiers at the Panathenaea and showed them some cocks fighting, holding that the spectacle would speak with a persuasion which no words could have. His judgement did not err, for when they saw this invincible 133 gallantry and endurance asserting itself even to death in irrational creatures, they seized their arms and rushed to war, where the rivals against whom they were matched would be the bodies of the foes, and recked not of the wounds nor of the slaughter in their hope to secure that if they fell at least their native soil in which they lay would still be free. For nothing so creates an impulse to do better, as that those of less repute than ourselves should rise to heights of achievement beyond our expectation. Cock-fighting is also mentioned by the Tragedian Ion<sup>a</sup> 134 in these words :

Battered his body and blind each eye
He rallies his courage, and faint, still crows,
For death he prefers to slavery.

Why then should we suppose that the wise would not 135 most gladly choose death rather than slavery? Is it not against all reason that the souls of the young and highly gifted should be worsted in the contests of <sup>a</sup> See App. p. 517.

PHILO

ἐν ἄθλοις ἀρετῆς ὀρνίθων ἐλαττοῦσθαι καὶ μόλις φέρεσθαι τὰ δευτερεῖα;

- 136 Καὶ μὴν οὐδ' ἐκεῖνό τις τῶν ἐπὶ βραχὺ παιδείας ἀψαμένων ἀγνοεῖ, ὅτι καλὸν μὲν πρᾶγμα ἐλευθερία, αἰσχρὸν δὲ δουλεία, καὶ ὅτι τὰ μὲν καλὰ πρόσεστι τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς, τὰ δ' αἰσχρὰ τοῖς φαύλοις· ἐξ ὧν ἐναργέστατα παρίσταται τὸ μῆτε τινὰ τῶν σπουδαίων δοῦλον εἶναι, κἂν μυρίοι τὰ δεσποτῶν σύμβολα προφέροντες ἐπανατείνωνται, μῆτε τῶν
- 137 ἀφρόνων ἐλεύθερον, κἂν Κροῖσος ἢ Μίδας ἢ ὁ μέγας [467] βασιλεὺς ὧν τυγχάνη. XX. | τὸ δὲ ἐλευθερίας μὲν αἰοίδιμον κάλλος δουλείας δὲ ἐπάρατον αἰσχος ὑπὸ τῶν παλαιότερων καὶ πολυχρονωτέρων καὶ ὡς ἐν θνητοῖς ἀθανάτων, οἷς θέμις
- 138 ἀψευδεῖν, πόλεόν τε καὶ ἔθνῶν μαρτυρεῖται. βουλαί τε γὰρ καὶ ἐκκλησίαι καθ' ἐκάστην σχεδὸν ἡμέραν ἀθροίζονται περὶ τίνος μᾶλλον ἢ ἐλευθερίας παρούσης μὲν βεβαιώσεως, εἰ δ' ἀπίη, κτήσεως; ἢ δ' Ἑλλὰς καὶ βάρβαρος κατὰ ἔθνη στασιάζουσι καὶ πολεμοῦσιν ἀεὶ τί βουλόμεναι ὅ τι μὴ δουλείαν μὲν
- 139 ἀποδιδράσκειν, ἐλευθερίαν δὲ περιποιεῖσθαι; διὸ κἂν ταῖς μάχαις ἢ λοχαγῶν καὶ ταξιαρχῶν καὶ στρατηγῶν μεγίστη παρακέλευσις ἦδ' ἐστί· “κακῶν τὸ βαρύτερον, ἄνδρες σύμμαχοι, δουλείαν ἐπιφερομένην ἀπωσώμεθα· τοῦ καλλίστου τῶν ἐν

---

<sup>a</sup> §§ 137-143. In these sections Philo seems to abandon his theory and to accept the common conception of freedom and slavery. The slavery which the generals declare to be the worst of evils, which incapacitated for admission to the religious functions at Athens, and for service on the Argo, is according to the doctrine which the treatise preaches not slavery to the wise. It may perhaps be said that if freedom is admitted to be excellent, freedom in the philosophical sense virtue by birds and take only the second place and that barely ?

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 135-139

This too is a truth well known to everyone who 136 has taken even a slight hold of culture, that freedom is an honourable thing, and slavery a disgraceful thing, and that honourable things are associated with good men and disgraceful things with bad men. Hence, it clearly follows that no person of true worth is a slave, though threatened by a host of claimants who produce contracts to prove their ownership, nor is any fool a free man, even though he be a Croesus or a Midas or the Great King himself.

XX. <sup>a</sup> And this doctrine that freedom is glorious and 137 honourable, slavery execrable and disgraceful, is attested by cities and nations, which are more ancient, more permanent, and, as far as mortals may be, immortal, and for immortals it is a law of their being that their every word is true. The senates and 138 national assemblies meet almost every day to discuss more than anything else how to confirm their freedom if they have it, or to acquire it if they have it not. The Greek and the outside world are perpetually engaged in feuds and wars, nation against nation, and with what object save to escape from slavery and to win freedom? And so on the battle- 139 field, the commanders of armies and regiments and companies couch their exhortations to their men mainly in this form. "Fellow soldiers, slavery is the most grievous of evils. Let us repel its assault.

is still more excellent—that the exclusion of slaves in the ordinary sense from the Athenian celebrations and from the Argo did incidentally teach the lesson that the "free" might carry out menial duties without loss of true freedom. But those ideas are only just hinted at. The real argument is resumed in § 144.

PHILO

- ἀνθρώποις ἀγαθῶν, ἐλευθερίας, μὴ περιίδωμεν.
 ἥδ' ἐστὶν ἀρχὴ καὶ πηγὴ τῆς εὐδαιμονίας, ἀφ' ἧς 140 αἱ κατὰ μέρος ρέουσιν ὠφέλειαι.” διό μοι δοκοῦσιν οἱ τῶν Ἑλλήνων ὀξυδερκέστατοι διάνοιαν Ἀθηναῖοι—ὅπερ γὰρ ἐν ὀφθαλμῷ κόρη ἢ ἐν ψυχῇ λογισμός, τοῦτ' ἐν Ἑλλάδι Ἀθηναί—τὴν ἐπὶ ταῖς Σεμναῖς Θεαῖς πομπὴν ὅταν στέλλωσι, δοῦλον μηδένα προσπαραλαμβάνειν τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλὰ δι' ἐλευθέρων ἕκαστα τῶν νενομισμένων ἀνδρῶν τε καὶ γυναικῶν ἐπιτελεῖν, καὶ οὐχ οἴων ἂν τύχη, ἀλλὰ βίον ἐξηλωκότων ἀνεπίληπτον· ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰ πρὸς τὴν ἑορτὴν πέμματα τῶν ἐφήβων οἱ δοκιμώτατοι σιτοπονοῦσι, πρὸς εὐδοξίας καὶ τιμῆς, ὅπερ ἐστί, 141 τὴν ὑπηρεσίαν τιθέμενοι. πρῶν ὑποκριτῶν τραγωδῖαν ἐπιδεικνυμένων καὶ τὰ παρ' Εὐριπίδῃ τρίμετρα διεξιόντων ἐκεῖνα

“ τοῦλεύθερον γὰρ ὄνομα παντὸς ἄξιον, καὶ σμίκρ' ἔχη τις, μεγάλ' ἔχειν νομιζέτω,”

- τοὺς θεατὰς ἅπαντας εἶδον ἐπ' ἄκρων ποδῶν ὑπ' ἐκπλήξεως ἀναστάντας καὶ φωναῖς μείζουσι καὶ ἐκβοήσεσιν ἐπαλλήλοις ἔπαινον μὲν τῆς γνώμης, ἔπαινον δὲ καὶ τοῦ ποιητοῦ συνείροντας, ὃς οὐ μόνον τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἔργοις ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦνομα 142 αὐτῆς ἐσέμνυνεν. ἄγαμαι καὶ τῶν Ἀργοναυτῶν, οἱ σύμπαν ἀπέφηναν ἐλεύθερον τὸ πλήρωμα μηδένα μηδὲ τῶν εἰς ἀναγκαίας ὑπηρεσίας προσέμενοι δοῦλον, ἀδελφὴν ἐλευθερίας αὐτουργίαν ἐν τῷ τότε

<sup>a</sup> According to Cohn, Demeter and Persephone, but see App. p. 517.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 139-142

Freedom is the noblest of human blessings ; let us not suffer it to be lost. Freedom is the source and fountain of happiness and from it flow all particular benefits.” This I think is the reason why <sup>140</sup> the Athenians, the keenest in intelligence among the Greeks—for Athens is in Greece what the pupil is in the eye and the reason in the soul—when they celebrate the procession in honour of the Venerable Goddesses,<sup>a</sup> admit no slave to the company, but employ free men and women to carry out all the solemnities, and these not chosen at haphazard, but such as have earnestly pursued a blameless life. On the same principle, the cakes for the feast are made by the youths who have best passed their test, and they consider this service to be an honour and glory as indeed it is. A short time ago, when some players <sup>141</sup> were acting a tragedy, and reciting those lines of Euripides,

The name of freedom is worth all the world ;
If one has little, let him think that much,<sup>b</sup>

I saw the whole audience so carried away by enthusiasm that they stood upright to their full height, and raising their voices above the actors, burst into shout after shout of applause, combining praise of the maxim with praise of the poet, who glorified not only freedom for what it does, but even its name. I also admire the Argonauts, who <sup>142</sup> made their crew consist entirely of the free and admitted no slave, not even those who would do the necessary menial labours, welcoming personal service in these circumstances as the sister of <sup>b</sup> Part of four lines quoted by Stobaeus from the Auge of Euripides.

PHILO

143 ἀσπασαμένων. εἰ δὲ καὶ ποιηταῖς προσέχειν ἄξιον —διὰ τί δὲ οὐ μέλλομεν; παιδευταὶ γὰρ οὗτοί γε τοῦ σύμπαντος βίου, καθάπερ ἰδίᾳ γονεῖς παῖδας καὶ οὗτοι δημοσίᾳ τὰς πόλεις σωφρονίζοντες—, οὐδ' ἢ Ἄργῳ ναυαρχοῦντος Ἰάσονος ἐπέτρεπεν ἐπι-[468] βαίνειν οἰκέταις, μεμοιραμένη | ψυχῆς καὶ λογισμοῦ, φύσις οὔσα φιλελεύθερος. ὅθεν καὶ ὁ Αἰσχύλος ἐπ' αὐτῆς εἶπε·

“ ποῦ δ' ἐστὶν Ἄργου<sup>ς</sup> ἱερόν, αὔδασον,<sup>1</sup> ξύλον; ”

144 Ἐπανατάσεων δὲ καὶ ἀπειλῶν, ἃς σοφοῖς ἀνδράσιμ ἐπανατείνονται καὶ ἀπειλοῦσί τινες, ἥκιστα φροντιστέον καὶ τὰ ὅμοια λεκτέον Ἀντιγενίδα τῷ αὐλητῇ. καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνόν φασιν, ἐπειδὴ τις τῶν ἀντιτέχνων ὀργισθεὶς εἶπεν “ ὠνήσομαί σε, ” βαθεῖ ἦθει φάναι· “ κἀγὼ τοιγαροῦν διδάξω σε αὐλεῖν. ” 145 ἄξιον οὖν καὶ τῷ σπουδαίῳ πρὸς μὲν τὸν ἔχοντα ὠνητικῶς λέγειν· “ σωφροσύνην ἄρα ἀναδιδαχ-θήση, ” πρὸς δὲ τὸν ἀπειλοῦντα φυγῆν· “ πᾶσα γῆ 146 μοι πατρίς, ” πρὸς δὲ τὸν χρημάτων ζημίαν· “ ἀρκεῖ μετρία βιοτά μοι, ” πρὸς δὲ τὸν πληγὰς ἢ θάνατον

<sup>1</sup> mss. αὔδασαι or αὔδασε or (M) δαπέν<sup>σ</sup> (sic). For the suggestion αὐδῆεν see note a.

<sup>a</sup> This refers to the legend that Athena fitted into the prow of the Argo a speaking (φωνῆεν) timber from the oak at Dodona. See Apollodorus i. 9. 19 who mentions two of its utterances, one being the complaint that Heracles overloaded it referred to in § 128. The quotation from Aeschylus, at any rate as punctuated by Cohn and translated above, does not seem very apposite. As αὔδασον has no ms. authority (see note 1), the correction αὐδῆεν or αὐδᾶεν seems probable

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 143-146

freedom. And if we are justified in listening to 143 the poets,—and why should we not, since they are our educators through all our days, and as parents in private life teach wisdom to their children, so do they in public life to their cities—if I say we believe them, even the Argo, which captained by Jason was endowed with soul and reason, a sentient being filled with love of freedom, would not let bond servants board her.
So Aeschylus says of her :

Where is the sacred bark of Argo? Speak.<sup>a</sup>

The menacing gestures and speeches with which 144 some people threaten the wise should be treated with little respect and meet with a reply like that of Antigenidas, the flute-player. When a rival professional said to him in anger, “ I’ll buy you,” he answered him with great irony,<sup>b</sup> “ Then I’ll teach you to play.” So then, too, the man of worth may say 145 to his prospective purchaser, “ Then you will have lessons in self-control.” If one threatens him with banishment, he can say, “ Every land is my native country ”<sup>c</sup>; if with loss of money, “ A moderate 146 livelihood suffices me ”<sup>d</sup>; if the threat takes the unless Nauck’s objection that the word would not be used in iambics precludes it. If αῖδασον is retained I should prefer to translate “ Where is it (or he)? Speak, holy bark of Argo.”

<sup>b</sup> Or “ very wittily ” or “ very good-naturedly.” I have discussed the meaning of this phrase in a note on De Ios.
168, vol. vi. p. 602. Antigenidas was a famous Theban musician, about the beginning of the fourth century B.C.

<sup>c</sup> Perhaps a reminiscence of the line by an unknown author τῷ γὰρ καλῶς πράσσοντι πᾶσα γῆ πατρίς, though the meaning of this is not what is intended here.

<sup>d</sup> A fragment of Euripides (lyrical, whence the form βιοτά for -ή), and continuing σώφρονος τραπέζης.

PHILO

ἐπανατεινόμενον· “ οὐ μορμολύττεται με ταῦτα, οὐδ’ εἰμι πυκτῶν ἢ παγκρατιαστῶν ἐλάττων, οἷτινες ἀμαυρὰ εἶδωλα ἀρετῆς ὀρῶντες, ἄτε σωμάτων αὐτὸ μόνον εὐεξίαν διαπονήσαντες, ἐκάτερα τλητικῶς ὑπομένουσιν· ὁ γὰρ ἡγεμῶν σώματος ἐν ἐμοὶ νοῦς ἀνδρεία τονωθείς οὕτω σφόδρα νενεύρωται, ὡς ἐπάνω πάσης ἀλγηδόνης ἴστασθαι δύνασθαι.”

147 XXI. [Φυλακτέον οὖν τὸν τοιοῦτον θῆρα συλλαμβάνειν, ὃς οὐκ ἀλκῆν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ὄψιν φοβερός ὢν τὸ δυσάλωτον καὶ μὴ εὐκαταφρόνητον δείκνυται.]

148 Ἀσυλία τόπων πολλάκις οἰκετῶν τοῖς καταφεύγουσιν ἄδειαν καὶ ἐκεχειρίαν ὡς ἰσοτίμοις καὶ ἰσοτελέσι παρέσχετο· καὶ τοὺς ἐκ προπάππων καὶ τῶν ἄνω προγόνων κατὰ τινα συγγενικὴν διαδοχὴν παλαιοδούλους ἔστιν ἰδεῖν, ὅταν ἐν ἱεροῖς ἰκέται καθέζωνται, μετὰ πάσης ἀδείας ἐλευθεροστομοῦντας. εἰσὶ δ’ οἱ καὶ τοῖς κτησαμένοις οὐκ ἐξ ἴσου μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος εὐτόνως ἅμα καὶ καταφρονητικῶς διαφέρονται περὶ τῶν δικαίων· οὓς μὲν γὰρ ὁ τοῦ συνειδότος ἔλεγχος, κἂν ὦσιν εὐπατρίδαι, πέφυκε δουλοῦσθαι, οἱ δὲ τὴν τοῦ σώματος ἄδειαν ἐκ τῆς περὶ τὸν τόπον ἀσυλίας πεπορισμένοι ψυχῆς, ἣν ὁ θεὸς ἐκ πάντων ἀχείρωτον ἐδημιούργησεν, ἐλεύθερα καὶ εὐγενῆ σφόδρα

---

<sup>a</sup> That this section makes impossible nonsense here is obvious. Massebieau propounded the theory that §§ 32-40 should be transferred to after § 146 and followed by § 147. While the relevance of §§ 32-40 as it stands is not very clear, it seems to me they would be still more intrusive here. And what connexion has § 147 with § 40? In § 40 lions are said to be really the masters of their owners and the moral deduced is that still more is the wise man master in the true form of blows or death, he can say, "These bugbears do not scare me; I am not inferior to boxers or pancratiasts, who though they see but dim shadows of true excellence, since they only cultivate robustness of body, yet endure both bravely. For the mind within me which rules the body is by courage so well-braced and nerved, that it can stand superior to any kind of pain."

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 146-149

XXI. [We must be careful, therefore, not to take a wild 147 beast of this kind, which displays not only strength, but by the terrors of its appearance, its invincible and formidable nature.]<sup>a</sup>

Places which serve as sanctuaries often provide the 148 bond servants who take refuge in them with the same security and licence of speech as if they enjoyed equal rights and privileges with the rest. And one may see those whose servitude is immemorial handed down from their great-grandfathers and earlier ancestors by a kind of family succession, talking freely with complete fearlessness, when sitting in temples as suppliants. Some even show not mere equality but 149 great superiority in the energy and disdain with which they dispute questions of justice with their owners.
For while the owners however highly born may well become as slaves through the conscience which convicts them, the suppliants, who are provided with bodily security by the inviolability of the place, exhibit in the soul, which God created proof against all that could subdue it, characteristics of freedom sense. To follow by a warning against buying lions would be utterly inept. By what accident it got inserted here, it is useless guessing. But probably it belongs to some dis-quisition in which harbouring passions is compared to keeping wild beasts (cf. De Praem. 88). Such a disquisition might well have found a place in the twin treatise "that every fool is a slave."

PHILO

- 150 ἀναφαίνουσιν ἤθη· εἰ μὴ λίαν οὕτω τις ἐστὶν ἀλόγιστος, ὡς χωρία μὲν θάρσους αἴτια καὶ παρρησίας ὑπολαμβάνειν εἶναι, τὸ δὲ τῶν ὄντων θεοειδέστατον, [469] ἀρετὴν, μηκέτι, δι' ἣν καὶ τοῖς | χωρίοις καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα φρονήσεως μετέχει τὸ ἱεροπρεπὲς ἐγ-151 γίνεται. καὶ μὴν τοῖς μὲν εἰς ἀσύλους τόπους καταφεύγουσιν, ἐκ μόνων τῶν τόπων περιπεποιη-μένοις ἀσφάλειαν, ἐκ μυρίων ἄλλων ἀγωγίμοις συμβέβηκε γίνεσθαι, δῶρων γυναικός, ἀδοξίας τέκνων, ἔρωτος ἀπάτης, τοῖς δὲ εἰς ἀρετὴν ὥσπερ εἰς ἀκαθαίρετον καὶ ἐρυμνότατον τεῖχος ἀλογεῖν βλη-μάτων, ὧν αἱ ἐφεδρεῖαι τῶν παθῶν βάλλουσι καὶ 152 τοξεύουσι. ταύτῃ τις πεφραγμένος τῇ δυνάμει μετὰ παρρησίας ἂν εἴποι, ὅτι οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι πρὸς τῶν τυχόντων ἀλίσκονται,

“ ἐγὼ δ' ἔμαντοῦ ” κατὰ τὸν τραγικὸν “ καὶ κλύειν ἐπίσταμαι, ἄρχειν θ' ὁμοίως, τὰρετῇ σταθμώμενος τὰ πάντα.”

- 153 λέγεται γοῦν ὁ Πριηνεὺς Βίας ἀπειλοῦντι Κροίσῳ μάλα καταφρονητικῶς ἀνταπειλήσαι ἐπεσθίειν τῶν κρομμύων, αἰνιττόμενος τὸ κλαίειν, ἐπεὶ δάκρυα 154 κινεῖ ἢ κρομμύων βρῶσις. οὕτως οἱ σοφοὶ βασι-λικώτερον οὐδὲν ἀρετῆς νομίζοντες, ἢ τοῦ βίου

---

<sup>a</sup> The argument seems to be “bodily immunity may put the philosophical slave on an equal footing, but only spiritual freedom would give the superiority in discussion.” It would be clearer if πόσῳ μᾶλλον ἐλευθεροστομήσει ὁ σοφός (a suggestion mentioned by Cohn) was inserted before εἰ μὴ, but it is not necessary.

<sup>b</sup> φρονήσεως has not been questioned, but seems to me

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 150-154

and high nobility.<sup>a</sup> It must be so, for who could be 150 so exceedingly unreasonable as to think that while places produce courage and free speaking, this does not extend to the most God-like thing existing, virtue, through which both places and everything else which participates in wisdom <sup>b</sup> acquires sanctity?
 And indeed those who take refuge in sacrosanct 151 localities and owe their security to the localities only, turn out to be in bondage to numberless other considerations, such as a wife seduced by gifts,<sup>c</sup> children fallen into disgrace, betrayal in love matters. But those who take refuge in virtue, as in an indestructible and impregnable fortress, disregard the darts and arrows aimed at them by the passions which stalk them. Fortified by this power, a man may say 152 freely and boldly, "While all others are the victims of chance circumstances, I can say with the tragic poet :

Myself I can obey and can command.
 I measure all things by the rule of virtue."<sup>d</sup>

Thus Bias of Priene is said to have retorted very dis- 153 dainfully to the threats of Croesus,<sup>e</sup> by bidding him eat onions, a phrase which means "go weep," because eating onions sets the tears running. In this spirit 154 the wise who hold that nothing is more royal than virtue, the captain whom they serve as soldiers hardly possible, at any rate if τοῖς ἄλλοις is retained. What is wanted is something to indicate the sacrosanctity which altars, vessels and the like share with sanctuaries (? ὄσ' ἀφερρώσεως).

<sup>c</sup> If this is the meaning. So Mangey "uxore corrupta," but the phrase seems strange.

<sup>d</sup> Source unknown, thought by Nauck to be Euripides.

<sup>e</sup> According to Diog. Laert. i. 83 it was said to Halyattes the father of Croesus.

PHILO

παντὸς αὐτοῖς ταξιαρχεῖ, τὰς ἄλλων ἡγεμονίας ὡς ὑπηκόων οὐ δεδίασι. παρ' ὃ τοὺς διχόνους καὶ δολεροὺς ἅπασιν ὀνομάζειν ἔθος ἀνελευθέρους τε 155 καὶ δουλοπρεπεῖς. ὅθεν κακείνα εὖ πεφώνηται·

“ οὐποτε δουλείῃ κεφαλὴ εὐθεία πέφυκεν, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ σκολιή, καυχένα λοξὸν ἔχει.”

τὸ γὰρ πλάγιον καὶ ποικίλον καὶ ἀπατηλὸν ἦθος ἀγενέστατον, ὥσπερ (εὐγενές) τὸ εὐθὺ καὶ ἀπλα-στον καὶ ἀνύπουλον, λόγων βουλευμάσι καὶ βουλευ-156 μάτων λόγοις συναδόντων. ἄξιον δὲ καταγελᾶν τῶν ἐπειδὰν ἀπαλλαγῶσι δεσποτικῆς κτήσεως ἐλευθερωθῆναι νομιζόντων· οἰκέται μὲν γὰρ οὐκέθ' ὁμοίως (ἄν) εἶεν οἳ γε ἀφειμένοι, δούλοι δὲ καὶ μαστιγῖαι πάντες, ὑπακούοντες οὐκ ἀνθρώπων—ἦττον γὰρ ἂν ἦν τὸ δεινόν—, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν ἐν ἀψύχοις ἀτιμοτάτων, ἀκράτου, λαχάνων,<sup>1</sup> πεμμάτων,<sup>2</sup> ὅσα ἄλλα σιτοπόνων τε καὶ ὀψαρτυτῶν 157 γούσι. ὁ γοῦν Διογένης ἰδὼν τινα τῶν λεγομένων ἀπελευθέρων ἀβρυνόμενον καὶ πολλοὺς αὐτῷ συνηδομένους, θαυμάσας τὸ ἄλογον καὶ ἄκριτον, “ ὅμοιον ” εἶπεν “ ὡς εἴ τις ἀνακηρύξειέ τινα τῶν οἰκετῶν ἀπὸ ταύτης τῆς ἡμέρας εἶναι γραμματικὸν
 [470] ἢ γεωμέτρην ἢ μουσικόν, οὐδ' | ὄναρ τῶν τεχνῶν

<sup>1</sup> Though Cohn does not notice it, something may be said for Mangey's suggestion of λαγάνων. λάχανα elsewhere, e.g. Spec. Leg. ii. 20, De Prov. 70, are associated with the frugal life.

<sup>2</sup> mss. σπερμάτων. The manuscripts here appear to be confused. In the same line where σιτοπόνων is printed, M has πεμμάτων, the others πομάτων or σπερμάτων repeated.

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 154–157

throughout their lives, do not fear the orders of others whom they regard as subordinates.<sup>a</sup> And so double-faced and shifty people are universally called servile and slavish. This same thought is well 155 expressed in another couplet :

A slave's head ne'er sits straight upon his shoulder
But always crooked on a twisted neck.<sup>b</sup>

For the crooked, artificial, deceitful character is utterly ignoble, while the straight, simple and ingenuous, in which thoughts agree with words and words with thoughts, is noble. We may 156 well deride the folly of those who think that when they are released from the ownership of their masters they become free. Servants, indeed, they are no longer now that they have been dismissed, but slaves they are and of the vilest kind, not to men, which would not be so grievous, but to the least reputable of inanimate things, to strong drink, to pot-herbs, to baked meats and all the other preparations made by the elaborate skill of cooks and confectioners, to afflict the miserable belly. Thus Diogenes the cynic, 157 seeing one of the so-called freedmen pluming himself, while many heartily congratulated him, marvelled at the absence of reason and discernment. "A man might as well," he said, "proclaim that one of his servants became from this day a grammarian, a geometrician, or musician, when he has no idea whatever of the art." For as the proclamation cannot ἐψησθημένον.” ὡς γὰρ ἐπιστήμονας οὐ ποιεῖ τὸ κήρυγμα, οὕτως οὐδὲ ἐλευθέρους—ἐπεὶ μακάριον ἦν τι—, ἀλλὰ μόνον οὐκ οἰκέτας.

<sup>a</sup> The logical connexion demanded by παρ' δ is not clear and Mangey may be right in supposing that something has been lost before this sentence. <sup>b</sup> Theognis, El. v. 535 f.

The correction σιτοπόνων is based on its frequent conjunction with ὄψαρτυρίς, e.g. De Vit. Cont. 53.

- 158 XXII. Ἀνελόντες οὖν τὴν κενὴν δόξαν, ἧς ὁ πολὺς ὄμιλος ἀνθρώπων ἀπηώρηται, καὶ ἀληθείας ἱερωτάτου κτήματος ἐρασθέντες μήτε τοῖς λεγομένοις ἀστοῖς πολιτείαν ἢ ἐλευθερίαν μήτε τοῖς οἰκότριβιν ἢ ἀργυρωνήτοις δουλείαν ἐπιφημίσωμεν, ἀλλὰ γένη καὶ δεσποτικὰ γράμματα καὶ συνόλως
- 159 σώματα παρελθόντες ψυχῆς φύσιν ἐρευνῶμεν. εἰ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς ἐπιθυμίας ἐλαύνεται ἢ ὑφ' ἡδονῆς δελεάζεται ἢ φόβῳ ἐκκλίνει ἢ λύπη στέλλεται<sup>1</sup> ἢ ὑπ' ὀργῆς τραχηλίζεται, δουλοῖ μὲν αὐτήν, δούλον δὲ καὶ τὸν ἔχοντα μυρίων δεσποτῶν ἀπεργάζεται· εἰ δὲ φρονήσει μὲν ἀμαθίαν, σωφροσύνη δ' ἀκολασίαν, δειλίαν δὲ ἀνδρεία καὶ πλεονεξίαν δικαιοσύνη κατηγωνίσαστο, τῷ ἀδουλώτῳ καὶ τὸ ἀρχικὸν προσείλη-
- 160 φεν. ὅσαι δὲ μηδετέρας ἰδέας πῶ μετεσχήκασι, μήτε τῆς καταδουλουμένης μήτε δι' ἧς ἐλευθερία βεβαιοῦται, γυμναὶ δὲ εἰσιν ἔτι, καθάπερ αἱ τῶν κομιδῆ νηπίων, ταύτας τιθηνοκομητέον, ἐνστάζοντας<sup>2</sup> τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀντὶ γάλακτος ἀπαλὰς τροφάς, τὰς διὰ τῶν ἐγκυκλίων ὑψηγήσεις, εἴτ' αὖθις κραταιοτέρας ὧν φιλοσοφία δημιουργός, ἐξ ὧν ἀνδρωθεῖσαι καὶ εὐεκτήσασαι πρὸς τέλος αἴσιον, οὐ Ζηνώνειον μᾶλλον ἢ πυθόχρηστον, ἀφίξονται, τὸ ἀκολούθως τῇ φύσει ζῆν.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps with some mss. συστέλλεται. For the regular Stoic definition of λύπη as ἄλογος συστολή see S. V. F. iii. 391, 394. The same applies to Mos. ii. 139, where again the mss. are divided between στελλούσης and συστελλούσης.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἐνάττοντας (Μ προτάτων τὰς).

EVERY GOOD MAN IS FREE, 157-160

make them men of knowledge, so neither can it make them free, for that is a state of blessedness. It can only make them no longer servants.

XXII. Let us then do away with the idle fancy, to 158 which the great mass of men feebly cling, and fixing our affections on that holiest of possessions, truth, refuse to ascribe citizenship or freedom to possessors of so-called civic rights, or slavery to servants, whether homebred or purchased, but dismissing questions of race and certificates of ownership and bodily matters in general, study the nature of the soul. For if the 159 soul is driven by desire, or enticed by pleasure, or diverted<sup>a</sup> from its course by fear, or shrunk by grief, or helpless in the grip of anger, it enslaves itself and makes him whose soul it is a slave to a host of masters.
But if it vanquishes ignorance with good sense, incon-tinence with self-control, cowardice with courage and covetousness with justice, it gains not only freedom from slavery but the gift of ruling as well. But souls 160 which have as yet got nothing of either kind, neither that which enslaves, nor that which establishes freedom, souls still naked like those of mere infants, must be tended and nursed by instilling first, in place of milk, the soft food of instruction given in the school subjects, later, the harder, stronger meat, which philosophy produces.<sup>b</sup> Reared by these to manhood and robustness, they will reach the happy consummation which Zeno, or rather an oracle higher than Zeno, bids us seek, a life led agreeably to nature.

<sup>a</sup> This again like στέλλεται (see note 1) is a Stoic definition, φόβος ἄλογος ἐκκλισις S. V. F. iii. 391, 393.

<sup>b</sup> For this view of the part played by the Encycelia and Philosophy in education see De Congressu, passim and Gen. Intro. to vol. i. pp. xvi f.

ON THE CONTEMPLATIVE
LIFE OR SUPPLIANTS
(DE VITA CONTEMPLATIVA)

INTRODUCTION TO DE VITA CONTEMPLATIVA

This treatise is except for a few digressions a highly eulogistic account of an ascetic community known to Philo and settled near Alexandria. It is introduced as a counterpart to his description of the Essenes, whether that in Quod Omnis Probus 75-91 or perhaps more probably that in the Hypothetica, 11. 1-18, or possibly some third which has not survived. The Therapeutae are differentiated from the others in that while the Essenes exemplify the practical they represent the contemplative life. They do not have any active occupation or any custom of sharing houses or garments, nor do they even mess together except on special occasions. Another difference is that while the Essenes are exclusively male the Therapeutae admit women freely to such communal life as they have. On the other hand while the Essenes of course observe frugality there is no suggestion that they practised abstinence like the Therapeutae, who carried it to an extreme.

The treatise does not seem to me to rank high among the works of Philo; the subject is slight and gives little scope to the richness of thought which marks so much of the commentary and in a less degree the exposition of the Law. Historically it is perhaps of some importance as giving an account of an institution with some of the marks of later monasticism for which we have no parallel either without or within the Judaism of the times. And the importance would be much greater if we could suppose that this Alexandrian community was of a type widespread through the world outside. The opening words of section 21 may at first suggest that this was so and the argument of Lucius who maintained that the treatise was spurious was primarily based on this assumption. The Therapeutae, he argued, are said by the author to have been found in many places ; if it were so we must have heard of them from other sources, and as we do not hear of them the whole thing must be a fiction. But I do not think that section 21 bears this meaning. This kind he says is found in many parts of the world, particularly in Egypt, and the best of them find a home in a certain spot which he proceeds to describe. But when we look back to find who this kind are it appears that they are religious enthusiasts who give up their property and family ties and go and live in solitude. That this type of character existed in Philo's time we might take for granted even if we did not have, abundant evidence in his own writings,<sup>a</sup> and it would not be surprising to find them occasionally organizing themselves into communities which would not necessarily attract much attention. Philo however does not assert that they ever did so except in the body which he glorifies in this treatise. Nor <sup>a</sup> The natural tendency of the religious philosopher to cultivate solitude and avoid cities is several times referred to. See above in Quod Omn. Prob. 63, also De Abr. 22 f., Spec. Leg. ii. 44. So too the translators of the LXX "avoided the city," Mos. ii. 34. For the renunciation of property cf. De Mut. 32.

104

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE

PHILO

does he tell us how numerous they were or how long they maintained themselves. If any inference is to be drawn from the absence of mention elsewhere it would be that this settlement was small and ephemeral.<sup>a</sup>

In fact it is neither the literary nor the philosophical value nor its historical importance which has made this treatise better known and more discussed than any other work of Philo. It owes its fame to the controversies which have raged round it since the fourth century. The thing began when Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. ii. 17 discovered in the Therapeutae a picture of the first Christian converts. After noting the traditional evangelization of Alexandria by St. Mark, he declares that no one could possibly doubt that Philo was referring to the first generation of his converts.

<sup>a</sup> I venture to put forth a conjectural picture of what the situation may have been. The point which the critics ignore is that this account unlike anything else in Philo's works outside the historical treatises is an account of people who were or may well have been known to him personally. I suggest that this is the second half of a tract on a favourite antithesis of the practical and the contemplative life. The first half is neither the account of the Essenes given in the Quod Omn. Prob. nor that in the Hypothetica, but a third account which insisted on the practical aspect of the Essene community more strongly than either of the extant narratives. He wanted a counterpart showing the contemplative life and he had one ready to hand in a little settlement near his own home. This community was well known to him and he had for it a sincere admiration which made him shut his eyes to the considerations in De Fuga 36, that the contemplative life should begin when the aspirant has been thoroughly schooled in the practical. It was a pleasure to him to glorify in this way the friends whom Alexandrian society ignored. Naturally he did not foresee the use to which his narrative would be put by a Eusebius and a Lucius.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE

In the renunciation of their property, their severe fasting, in the virginity of the women members, in their study of the scriptures including the writings of men of old which are clearly the gospels and apostolic writings and commentaries on the Old Testament such as Paul used—in their festal meetings which are a description of Easter celebrations, and the officials who manage these meetings in whom we may see bishops, priests and deacons, no one can possibly fail to see the first Christians. Nowadays it seems needless to argue that the theory has no foundation whatever. But it is easy to understand that the idea of finding in this Jewish philosopher an account of the life and worship of the early church, particularly in the great city whose evangelization is unnoticed in the New Testament, was very fascinating, and it is not surprising that it was strongly maintained by orthodox churchmen down to the 18th century. Hardly had it died out in the form sketched by Eusebius when it was revived in another form by two German scholars, Grätz and (more elaborately) Lucius in 1880. Eusebius had believed that Philo himself was in good faith describing the actual Christians of his time. Lucius supposed that some unknown writer at the end of the third century A.D. drew up an imaginary account of the monasticism of his own time which he put forth in Philo's name in order to commend it to readers, who impressed by the authority thus given to it would believe that it was a genuine picture of the primitive church. Somehow Lucius secured the approval not only of such distinguished historians as Schürer and Zeller but a formidable number of other distinguished scholars. But I find it difficult to understand how anyone who reads

PHILO

Conybeare's and Wendland's refutations side by side with Lucius's dissertation can believe it. I will not attempt to give more than a few main points. Lucius's strongest argument was the absolute silence elsewhere about the Therapeutae, and this might have weight if we understood the author to assert that communities like that of the Mareotic Lake were to be found everywhere through the Roman world. But as I have said above I see no need to make such a deduction. Lucius also declared that various practices mentioned had Christian parallels, a claim in some cases obviously absurd, in others I daresay justified. But it was necessary to his argument to show that these customs or practices were not only Christian but also non-Jewish and this, if the two writers I have mentioned are to be believed, is rarely if ever the case. (But the one great source of evidence on which a student of Philo not expert in Christian antiquities is entitled to give his opinion is the style and language. Here the evidence as shown not merely in thought but in vocabulary and phrasing seems to me quite beyond dispute.) The Testimonia printed by Conybeare at the foot of each page are overwhelming and with the additions made by Wendland demand at any rate a forger of extraordinary skill. They prove also that Lucius's study of Philo, as shown in what he considers to be an approximately correct list of the parallels in the treatise with the rest of Philo, was exceedingly inadequate. Whatever was the case when Lucius's argument was put forward sixty years ago, the tide of opinion has turned against it and rightly so far as I can judge.

The following is an analysis of the treatise :

He opens with saying that as a counterpart to the practical type represented by the Essenes he will describe the contemplative type which he calls Therapeutic. The name may originally mean healing but also worshipping, and this is the sense in which he further develops it (1-2). He compares this worship to the honour paid to other objects; the elements, the heavenly bodies and images are each reviewed and their inadequacy exposed (3-7), and this discussion ends with a scathing denunciation of the worst of all these false religions the Egyptian animal worship (8-9).

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE

We now return to the Therapeutic type; their most essential characteristic is their mystical aspiration to reach the vision of the one God and this leads them to renounce all thoughts of private property (10-13). Philo praises them because in contrast to Anaxagoras and Democritus they do not let their property run to waste but give it over to friends and kinsmen while at the same time they gain leisure to devote themselves to the higher life (14-17). Free from these cares they leave behind them all family ties and seek solitude away from the corrupting influence of cities (18-20).

While the Therapeutic type in this wider sense is to be found in many parts of the Greek and Barbarian world, and particularly in Egypt, Philo declares that the best of them (in Egypt?) resort from every quarter to a particular spot near the Mareotic Lake, the climate and position of which he describes (21-23). The simple houses of these settlers each of them contain a room set apart for their meditations in which they study the Scriptures and devotional works from sunrise to sunset (24-26). At both times they pray and also compose hymns (27-29). This solitary life is relaxed somewhat on the Sabbath, when they meet in the synagogue where men and women sit in separate partitions and listen to a sermon (30-33). As to their diet, during the six days they eat nothing till sunset and even in some cases fast for three whole days or more, but on the Sabbath it is more generous, though then the food and drink are little more than bread and water (34-37) and this asceticism extends to their dress (38-39).

PHILO

The ordinary Sabbath meeting does not seem to include a Symposium, but they have such a thing on occasions. But before giving an account of it Philo makes a digression which takes up about a quarter of the whole treatise, describing the pagan feasts with which he will contrast it. First he notes the savage violence and drunkenness which disfigure such feasts (40-47), secondly the extravagant luxury shown in the appurtenances, couches and drinking vessels and still more in the number, finery and beauty of the attendants (48-52), and the number and variety of the dishes with which the guests gorge themselves (53-56). Greek literature does include two Symposia of a more refined kind, those described by Xenophon and Plato. Yet even these are full of folly, and Philo can see little more in Plato's than the exaltation of pederasty which he takes the occasion to denounce (57-63). The rest of the treatise (64-90) describes in contrast to the above the festal meeting of the Therapeutae. First the date and occasion <sup>a</sup> (65); then the preliminaries and prayers, the seating in order of seniority in the community, with the sexes separate (66-69); then the nature of the couches used and the qualifications of the attendants who are not slaves but young freemen<sup>a</sup> (69-72); the simplicity of the meal provided (73-74). After they have taken their places on the couches there follows a discourse by the President on some scriptural point bringing out the spiritual lessons that the literal text provides, which is received with all attention followed by applause at the end (75-79). The discourse is followed by hymns, the first sung by the President, the others by the congregation each in turn, while all join in the refrain at the end (80-81). Then at last the meal itself is served (82). After this the vigil begins, the men and women each form a choir, the two choirs sing and dance in turn and then join together (83-85), thus resembling the songs of Moses and Miriam after the destruction of Pharaoh in the Red Sea, which is once more told in some detail (85-87). This is continued till dawn when they stand up and face the east and at sunrise after prayer return each to their own prayer room (88-89). The concluding section sums up the virtues and blessedness of the Therapeutae (90).

<sup>a</sup> See notes on § 65, p. 152.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps novices in the community.

ΠΕΡΙ ΒΙΟΥ ΘΕΩΡΗΤΙΚΟΥ Ἡ ΙΚΕΤΩΝ

(ΠΕΡΙ ΑΡΕΤΩΝ ΤΟ ΤΕΤΑΡΤΟΝ)

[471]
1 I. | Ἐσσαίων περί διαλεχθείς, οἱ τὸν πρακτικὸν ἐζήλωσαν καὶ διεπόνησαν βίον ἐν ἅπασιν ἢ—τὸ γοῦν φορητότερον<sup>1</sup> εἰπεῖν—τοῖς πλείστοις μέρεσι διενεγκόντες, αὐτίκα καὶ περὶ τῶν θεωρίαν ἀσπασαμένων ἀκολουθία τῆς πραγματείας ἐπόμενος τὰ προσήκοντα λέξω, μηδὲν οἴκοθεν ἔνεκα τοῦ βελτιῶσαι προστιθείς, ὃ δρᾶν ἔθος ἐν σπάνει καλῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων ἅπασι τοῖς ποιηταῖς καὶ λογογράφοις, ἀλλ' ἀτεχνῶς αὐτῆς περιεχόμενος τῆς ἀληθείας, πρὸς ἣν οἶδ' ὅτι καὶ ὁ δεινότατος εἰπεῖν ἀπαγορεύσει. διαθλητέον δὲ ὅμως καὶ διαγωνιστέον· οὐ γὰρ δεῖ τὸ μέγεθος τῆς τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἀρετῆς αἴτιον ἀφωνίας γενέσθαι τοῖς μηδὲν καλὸν
2 ἡσυχάζεσθαι δικαιούσιν. ἢ δὲ προαίρεσις τῶν φιλοσόφων εὐθύς ἐμφαίνεται διὰ τῆς προσρή-

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn with some mss. Conybeare with others ἀφορητότερον, which he says is certainly the true reading. The weight of authority is perhaps in its favour, but the explanation which he gives, viz. that the Essenes were so highly esteemed that the suggestion that they were not necessarily superior in every way would be unpalatable, does not seem natural.

ON THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE OR SUPPLIANTS

(THE FOURTH PART CONCERNING THE VIRTUES)<sup>a</sup>

I. I have discussed the Essenes, who persistently pursued the active life and excelled in all or, to put it more moderately, in most of its departments. I will now proceed at once in accordance with the sequence required by the subject to say what is needed about those who embraced the life of contemplation. In doing so I will not add anything of my own procuring to improve upon the facts as is constantly done by poets and historians through lack of excellence in the lives and practices which they record, but shall adhere absolutely to the actual truth. Though I know that in this case it is such as to unnerve the greatest master of oratory, still we must persevere and not decline the conflict, for the magnitude of virtue shown by these men must not be allowed to tie the tongues of those who hold that nothing excellent should be passed over in silence.

The vocation<sup>b</sup> of these philosophers is at once made clear from their title of

<sup>a</sup> On the title and subtitle see App. p. 518.

<sup>b</sup> On προαίρεσις see App. p. 518.

PHILO

σεως· θεραπευταὶ γὰρ καὶ θεραπευτρίδες ἐτύμως καλοῦνται, ἧτοι παρόσον ἰατρικὴν ἐπαγγέλλονται κρείσσονα τῆς κατὰ πόλεις—ἢ μὲν γὰρ σώματα θεραπεύει μόνον, ἐκείνη δὲ καὶ ψυχὰς νόσοις κεκρατημένας χαλεπαῖς τε καὶ δυσιάτοις, ἃς ἐγκατέσκηψαν<sup>1</sup> ἡδοναὶ καὶ ἐπιθυμίαι καὶ λῦπαι καὶ φόβοι πλεονεξίαι τε καὶ ἀφροσύναι καὶ ἀδικίαι καὶ τὸ τῶν ἄλλων παθῶν καὶ κακιῶν ἀνήνυτον πλήθος—ἢ [472] παρόσον ἐκ φύσεως καὶ τῶν ἱερῶν νόμων | ἐπαιδεύθησαν θεραπεύειν τὸ ὄν, ὃ καὶ ἀγαθοῦ κρείττον ἐστὶ καὶ ἐνὸς εἰλικρινέστερον καὶ μονάδος ἀρχε-3 γονώτερον. οἷς τίνας συγκρίνειν ἄξιον τῶν ἐπαγ-γελλομένων εὐσέβειαν; ἀρά γε τοὺς τὰ στοιχεῖα τιμῶντας, γῆν, ὕδωρ, ἀέρα, πῦρ; οἷς καὶ ἐπωνυμίας ἔθεντο ἑτέρας ἕτεροι, τὸ μὲν πῦρ
"Ἡφαιστον παρὰ τὴν ἕξασιν, οἶμαι, καλοῦντες, "Ἡραν δὲ τὸν ἀέρα παρὰ τὸ αἶρεσθαι καὶ μετεωρί-ζεσθαι πρὸς ὕψος, τὸ δὲ ὕδωρ Ποσειδῶνα τάχα που διὰ τὸ ποτόν, τὴν δὲ γῆν Δήμητραν, παρόσον μήτηρ εἶναι δοκεῖ πάντων φυτῶν τε καὶ ζώων.
4 ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν ὀνόματα σοφιστῶν ἐστὶν εὐρήματα, τὰ δὲ στοιχεῖα ἄψυχος ὕλη καὶ ἐξ ἑαυτῆς ἀκίνητος, ὑποβεβλημένα τῷ τεχνίτῃ πρὸς ἀπάσας σχημάτων 5 καὶ ποιότητων ιδέας. ἀλλὰ τοὺς τὰ

<sup>1</sup> mss. κατέσκηψαν, which Conybeare retains, and attempts to justify. But the other examples of the simple verb in the index and almost all cited in Stephanus are intransitive.

<sup>a</sup> ἐτύμως = "in accordance with the meaning of the word from which the name is derived," in this case θεραπεύω. See on Quod Omn. Prob. 73 (App. p. 512).

<sup>b</sup> For the distinction between the Monad and the One in Pythagoreanism see Zeller, Presocratics (Eng. trans.), vol. i.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 2-5

Therapeutae and Therapeutrides, a name derived<sup>a</sup> from θεραπεύω, either in the sense of "cure" because they profess an art of healing better than that current in the cities which cures only the bodies, while theirs treats also souls oppressed with grievous and well-nigh incurable diseases, inflicted by pleasures and desires and griefs and fears, by acts of covetousness, folly and injustice and the countless host of the other passions and vices : or else in the sense of "worship," because nature and the sacred laws have schooled them to worship the Self-existent who is better than the good, purer than the One and more primordial than the Monad.<sup>b</sup> Who among those who<sup>3</sup> profess piety deserve to be compared with these ?

Can we compare those who revere the elements, earth, water, air, fire, which have received different names from different peoples who call fire Hephaestus because it is kindled (ἐξέπτω), air Hera because it is lifted up (αἴρω) and exalted on high, water Poseidon perhaps because it is drunk (ποτός), and earth Demeter because it appears to be the mother of all plants and animals ?<sup>c</sup> Sophists have invented<sup>4</sup> these names for the elements but the elements themselves are lifeless matter incapable of movement of itself and laid by the Artificer as a substratum for every kind of shape and quality.

What of the worshippers of the bodies<sup>5</sup>

pp. 309 f. The upshot seems to be that generally speaking, while the Monad is opposed to the Dyad, being the "father" of numbers as the Dyad is the "mother," the One stands above all as representing Deity. Others however rank the Monad above the One, as perhaps Philo does here and in De Praem. 40, where he uses identical language.

<sup>c</sup> See note on De Dec. 54, vol. vii. p. 610, and further App. p. 519.

PHILO

ἀποτελέσματα, ἥλιον, σελήνην ἢ τοὺς ἄλλους ἀστέρας πλάνητας ἢ ἀπλανεῖς ἢ τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανὸν τε καὶ κόσμον; ἀλλὰ καὶ ταῦτα οὐκ ἐξ ἑαυτῶν γέγονεν, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ τινος δημιουργοῦ τελειο-6 τάτου τὴν ἐπιστήμην. ἀλλὰ τοὺς<sup>1</sup> ἡμιθεούς; ἢ τοῦτό γε καὶ χλεύης ἄξιον· πῶς γὰρ ἂν ὁ αὐτὸς ἀθάνατός τε καὶ θνητὸς εἴη; δίχα τοῦ καὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς τούτων γενέσεως ἐπίληπτον εἶναι, μεираκιώδους ἀκρασίας ἀνάπλεων, ἣν πολμῶσιν οὐκ εὐαγῶς προσάπτειν ταῖς μακαρίαις καὶ θείαις δυνάμεσιν, εἰ γυναιξὶ θνηταῖς ἐπιμανέντες ὠμίλησαν οἱ παντὸς πάθους ἀμέτοχοι καὶ τρισ-7 ευδαίμονες. ἀλλὰ τοὺς τὰ ξόανα καὶ ἀγάλματα; ὧν αἱ οὐσίαι λίθοι καὶ ξύλα, τὰ μεχρι πρὸ μικροῦ τελείως ἄμορφα, λιθοτόμων καὶ δρυοτόμων τῆς συμφυΐας αὐτὰ διακοψάντων, ὧν τὰ ἀδελφὰ μέρη καὶ συγγενῆ λουτροφόροι γεγόνασι καὶ ποδόνηπτρα καὶ ἄλλα ἄττα τῶν ἀτιμοτέρων, ἃ πρὸς τὰς ἐν σκότῳ χρείας ὑπηρετεῖ μάλλον ἢ 8 τὰς ἐν φωτί. τῶν μὲν γὰρ παρ' Αἴγυ-πτίοις οὐδὲ μεμνήσθαι καλόν, οἱ ζῶα ἄλογα καὶ οὐχ ἡμερα μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ θηρίων τὰ ἀγριώτατα παραγήοχασιν εἰς θεῶν τιμὰς ἐξ ἐκάστου τῶν κάτω σελήνης, χερσαίων μὲν λέοντα, ἐνύδρων δὲ τὸν ἐγχώριον κροκόδειλον, ἀεροπόρων δὲ ἴκτινον καὶ

<sup>1</sup> As the construction with τιμώντας understood is continued in the next sentence, and in all the other examples the object of worship has the article prefixed, I should be inclined to read τοὺς <τοὺς> ἡμιθέους, unless we are to suppose that Philo would refuse such a collocation.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 5-8

framed from the elements,<sup>a</sup> sun, moon or the other stars fixed or wandering, or the whole heaven and universe? But these too were not brought into being self-made, but through an architect of most perfect knowledge. What of the worship of the 6 demi-gods? Surely this is quite ridiculous. How could one and the same person be both mortal and immortal, to say nothing of the reproach attaching to the original source of their birth, tainted as it is with the licentiousness of wanton youth which they impiously dare to ascribe to the blissful and divine powers by supposing that the thrice blessed and exempt from every passion in their infatuation had intercourse with mortal women. What 7 of the worshippers of the different kinds of images? Their substance is wood and stone, till a short time ago completely shapeless, hewn away from their congenital structure by quarrymen and woodcutters while their brethren, pieces from the same original source, have become urns and foot-basins or some others of the less honourable vessels which serve the purposes of darkness rather than of light.

For as for the gods of the Egyptians 8 it is hardly decent even to mention them. The Egyptians have promoted to divine honours irrational animals, not only of the tame sort but also beasts of the utmost savagery, drawn from each of the kinds found below the moon, from the creatures of the land the lion, from those of the water their indigenous crocodile, from the rangers of the air <sup>a</sup> For the antithesis between the στοιχεία and ἀποτελέσματα cf. Quis Rerum 209 (among a series of opposite pairs στοιχεία ἀποτελέσματα), so also ibid. 226 and Mos. i. 96 τὰ στοιχεῖα . . . οἷς ἀπετελέσθη ὁ κόσμος.

- 9 τὴν Αἰγυπτίαν ἴβιν. καὶ ταῦτα ὀρώντες γεννώμενα καὶ τροφῆς χρεῖαν ἔχοντα καὶ περὶ ἔδωδὴν ἄπληστα καὶ μεστὰ περιπτωμάτων ἰοβόλα τε καὶ ἀνθρωποβόρα καὶ νόσοις ἀλωτὰ παντοίαις καὶ οὐ μόνον θανάτῳ τῷ κατὰ φύσιν ἀλλὰ καὶ βιαίῳ πολλάκις διαφθειρόμενα προσκυνοῦσιν, οἱ ἡμεροὶ τὰ ἀνήμερα καὶ ἀτίθασα καὶ οἱ λογικοὶ τὰ ἄλογα καὶ οἱ συγγένειαν ἔχοντες πρὸς τὸ θεῖον τὰ μηδ' [473] ἂν Θερσίτησι<sup>1</sup> | συγκριθέντα, οἱ ἄρχοντες καὶ δεσπόται τὰ ὑπήκοα φύσει καὶ δοῦλα.
- 10 II. Ἄλλ' οὗτοι μὲν, ἐπειδὴ περ οὐ τοὺς ὁμοφύλους μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς πλησιάζοντας ἀναπιμπλάσι φλυαρίας, ἀθεράπευτοι διατελείτῳσαν ὄψιν, τὴν ἀναγκαιοτάτην τῶν αἰσθήσεων, πεπηρωμένοι· λέγω δὲ οὐ τὴν σώματος, ἀλλὰ τὴν ψυχῆς, ἣ τὸ ἀληθές 11 καὶ τὸ ψεῦδος μόνῃ γνωρίζεται. τὸ δὲ θεραπευτικὸν γένος βλέπειν αἰεὶ προδιδασκόμενον<sup>2</sup> τῆς τοῦ ὄντος θεᾶς ἐφέισθω καὶ τὸν αἰσθητὸν ἥλιον ὑπερβαινέτω καὶ μηδέποτε τὴν τάξιν ταύτην λειπέτω 12 πρὸς τελείαν ἄγουσαν εὐδαιμονίαν. οἱ δὲ ἐπὶ θεραπείαν ἰόντες οὔτε ἐξ ἔθους οὔτε ἐκ παραινέσεως ἢ παρακλήσεώς τινων, ἀλλ' ὑπ' ἔρωτος ἀρπασθέντες οὐρανίου, καθάπερ οἱ βακχεύομενοι καὶ κορυβαντιῶντες, ἐνθουσιάζουσι μέχρις ἂν τὸ 13 ποθούμενον ἴδωσιν. εἶτα διὰ τὸν τῆς ἀθανάτου καὶ μακαρίας ζωῆς ἡμερον τετελευτηκέναι

<sup>1</sup> So one mss. and the Armenian. The others θηροί τισι.
 The use of the Ionic form of the dat. plur. is strange.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. προσδιδασκόμενον.

<sup>a</sup> See note on "Egyptian animal worship" to De Dec. 77
 (vol. vii. p. 610).

<sup>b</sup> Il. ii. 216 ff. Other examples of Thersites as a type of

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 9-13

the hawk and the Egyptian ibis.<sup>a</sup> And though they 9 see these creatures brought to their birth, requiring food, eating voraciously, full of ordure, venomous too and man-eating, the prey of every sort of disease, and perishing not only by a natural but often by a violent death, they render worship to them, they the civilized to the uncivilized and untamed, the reasonable to the irrational, the kinsfolk of the Godhead to ugliness unmatched even by a Thersites,<sup>b</sup> the rulers and masters to the naturally subservient and slavish.

II. These indeed, since they infect not only their 10 own compatriots but the peoples in their neighbourhood with their folly, must remain incurable, for they have lost the use of the most vital of the senses, sight. And by this I do not mean the sight of the body but of the soul, the sight which alone gives a knowledge of truth and falsehood. But it is well 11 that the Therapeutae, a people always taught from the first to use their sight, should desire the vision of the Existent and soar above the sun of our senses and never leave their place in this company which carries them on to perfect happiness.<sup>c</sup> And those 12 who set themselves to this service, not just following custom nor on the advice and admonition of others but carried away by a heaven-sent passion of love, remain rapt and possessed like bacchanals or cory-bants until they see the object of their yearning.

Then such is their longing for the death- 13 ugliness are cited by Conybeare and Cohn from Plutarch, Clement and Hippocrates.

<sup>c</sup> τάξις here seems to combine the common meaning of the post which the soldier holds with the idea of the company which he makes. Cf. Quis Rerum 46 ὑπὸ τῆς ἀμείνωνος ἀγόμενον τάξεως.

PHILO

νομίζοντες ἤδη τὸν θνητὸν βίον ἀπολείπουσι τὰς οὐσίας υἱοῖς ἢ θυγατράσιν εἴτε καὶ ἄλλοις συγγενέσιν, ἔκουσίω γνώμη προκληρονομούμενοι,<sup>1</sup> οἷς δὲ μὴ συγγενεῖς εἰσιν, ἑταίροις καὶ φίλοις· ἔδει γὰρ τοὺς τὸν βλέποντα πλοῦτον ἐξ ἐτοίμου λαβόντας τὸν τυφλὸν παραχωρῆσαι τοῖς ἔτι τὰς διανοίας

14 τυφλώττουσιν. Ἀναξαγόραν καὶ Δημόκριτον Ἕλληνας ἄδουσιν, ὅτι φιλοσοφίας ἡμέρῳ πληχθέντες μηλοβότους εἶασαν γενέσθαι τὰς οὐσίας· ἄγαμαι τοὺς ἄνδρας καὶ αὐτὸς γενομένους χρημάτων κρείττονας. ἀλλὰ πόσῳ βελτίονες οἱ μὴ θρέμμασιν ἐμβόσκεισθαι τὰς κτήσεις ἀνέντες, ἀλλὰ τὰς ἀνθρώπων ἐνδείας, συγγενῶν ἢ φίλων, ἐπανορθωσάμενοι καὶ ἐξ ἀπόρων εὐπόρους ἀποφῆναντες; ἐκείνο μὲν γὰρ ἀπερίσκεπτον—ἵνα μὴ μανιῶδες ἐπ' ἀνδρῶν, οὓς ἢ Ἑλλὰς ἐθαύμασεν, εἶπω τὸ ἔργον—, τοῦτο δὲ νηφάλιον καὶ μετὰ φρονήσεως ἡκρι-

15 βωμένον περιττῆς. οἱ πολέμοι τί πλέον δρῶσιν ἢ κείρουσι καὶ δενδροτομοῦσι τὴν τῶν ἀντιπάλων χώραν, ἵνα σπάνει τῶν ἀναγκαίων πιεσθέντες ἐνδῶσι; τοῦτο οἱ περὶ Δημόκριτον τοῖς ἀφ' αἵματος εἰργάσαντο χειροποίητον ἐνδειαν καὶ πενίαν αὐτοῖς κατασκευάσαντες, οὐκ ἐξ ἐπιβουλῆς ἴσως, ἀλλὰ τῷ μὴ προιδέσθαι καὶ περιαθρῆσαι τὸ τοῖς

16 ἄλλοις συμφέρον. πόσῳ δὴ κρείττους οὗτοι καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προσκληρονομούμενοι.

<sup>a</sup> The same story is told of Anaxagoras by Philo, De Prov., Aucher, p. 52, and so Plut. Pericles 16 (τὴν χώραν ἀφήκεν ἄργον καὶ μηλόβοτον). Plato more vaguely says (Hipp. Mai. 283 A) that he wasted all his property. Diogenes Laertius on the other hand (ii. 6) that he gave it all over to his relations. Democritus is coupled with Anaxagoras in Cic.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 13-16

less and blessed life that thinking their mortal life already ended they abandon their property to their sons or daughters or to other kinsfolk, thus voluntarily advancing the time of their inheritance, while those who have no kinsfolk give them to comrades and friends. For it was right that those who have received ready to their hand the wealth that has eyes to see should surrender the blind wealth to those who are still blind in mind. The Greeks extol 14 Anaxagoras and Democritus because smitten with the desire for philosophy they left their fields to be devoured by sheep.<sup>a</sup> I too myself admire them for showing themselves superior to wealth, but how much better are these who did not let their estates serve as feeding-ground for cattle but made good the needs of men, their kinsfolk and friends, and so turned their indigence into affluence. Of the two actions the first was thoughtless, I might say mad, but that the persons concerned have the admiration of Greece, the second showed soberness and careful consideration and remarkable good sense. What 15 more does a hostile army do than cut the crops and hew the trees of their opponents' country to force them to surrender through lack of necessaries? This is what a Democritus did to his own blood-relations, inflicting on them poverty and indigence artificially created, not perhaps with mischievous intent but through lack of foresight and consideration for the interest of the others. How much better and 16

Tusc. Disp. v. 114 as abandoning his lands and patrimony, and so Hor. Ep. i. 12. 12 (pecus edit agellos). μηλόβοτος does not mean that they turned their cornland into pasturage, but that they allowed it to be overrun. In fact μηλ. is almost a synonym for ἀργός, with which it is coupled in the passage of Plutarch quoted here.

PHILO

θαυμασιώτεροι, χρησάμενοι μὲν οὐκ ἐλάττωσι ταῖς πρὸς φιλοσοφίαν ὁρμαῖς, μεγαλόνοιαν δὲ ὀλιγωρίας προτιμήσαντες καὶ χαρισάμενοι τὰς οὐσίας, ἀλλὰ μὴ διαφθείραντες, ἵνα καὶ ἑτέρους καὶ ἑαυτοὺς [474] ὠφελήσωσι, | τοὺς μὲν ἐν ἀφθόνοις περιουσίαις, ἑαυτοὺς δὲ ἐν τῷ φιλοσοφεῖν; αἱ γὰρ χρημάτων καὶ κτημάτων ἐπιμέλειαι τοὺς χρόνους<sup>1</sup> ἀναλίσκουσι· χρόνου δὲ φείδεσθαι καλόν, ἐπειδὴ κατὰ τὸν ἰατρὸν Ἴπποκράτην “ὁ μὲν βίος βραχύς, ἡ δὲ τέχνη 17 μακρῆ.” τοῦτό μοι δοκεῖ καὶ “Ὀμηρος αἰνίζασθαι ἐν Ἰλιάδι κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς τρισκαιδεκάτης ῥαψωδίας διὰ τούτων τῶν ἐπῶν·

“ Μυσῶν τ’ ἀγχεμάχων καὶ ἀγαυῶν Ἰππημολγῶν, γλακτοφάγων ἀβίων τε, δικαιοτάτων ἀνθρώπων,” ὡς τῆς μὲν περὶ βίον σπουδῆς καὶ χρηματισμὸν ἀδικίαν γεννώσης διὰ τὸ ἄνισον, δικαιοσύνην δὲ τῆς ἐναντίας προαιρέσεως ἔνεκα ἰσότητος, καθ’ ἣν ὁ τῆς φύσεως πλοῦτος ὄρισταὶ καὶ παρενημερεῖ 18 τὸν ἐν ταῖς κεναῖς δόξαις. ὅταν οὖν

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. χρωμένους, which Conybeare adopts.

<sup>a</sup> ἵνα here is perhaps as often in Philo consecutive rather than final.

<sup>b</sup> The well-known opening aphorism of Hippocrates, though there ἡ τέχνη is the art, i.e. of medicine.

<sup>c</sup> It is certainly strange to find this exact reference. In the great majority of his references to Homer (of which the index, probably not exhaustively, gives over fifty) he does not indicate the source at all. Sometimes the quotation is definitely ascribed to ὁ δοκιμώτατος τῶν ποιητῶν, and thrice at least elsewhere (De Conf. 4, Quod Omn. Prob. 31, Legatio 80) he mentions him by name. Perhaps this departure from the usual course is due to the nature of the quotation. It is not like most of them a notable or familiar phrase, but comes more admirable are these who with no less ardour for the study of wisdom preferred magnanimity to negligence and gave away their possessions instead of wasting them, in this way<sup>a</sup> benefiting both others and themselves, others through supplying them with abundant resources, themselves through furthering the study of philosophy? For taking care of wealth and possessions consumes time and to economize time is an excellent thing since according to the physician Hippocrates "life is short but art is long."<sup>b</sup> The 17 same idea is suggested I think by Homer in the Iliad at the beginning of the thirteenth book in the lines<sup>c</sup>

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 16-17

The Mysians fighting hand to hand, and noble Mare's-milk-drinkers—Nought else but milk sustains their life,<sup>d</sup> these men of perfect justice.

The idea conveyed is that injustice is bred by anxious thought for the means of life and for money-making, justice by holding and following the opposite creed. The first entails inequality, the second equality, the principle by which nature's wealth is regulated and so stands superior to the wealth of vain opinion.<sup>e</sup> from a passage which would not in itself attract attention, and only serves to bring out a connexion (ἀβίος with δίκαιος) which would not occur to most people. On the use of ῥαψωδία see App. p. 519.

<sup>a</sup> Il. xiii. 5, 6. 'Αβίων is by some taken to be a proper name, by others as = "having no fixed means of subsistence," i.e. nomads. Philo evidently takes it as an adjective meaning without βίος in the sense of means of life.

<sup>e</sup> See note on De Virt. 6, where "the wealth of nature," i.e. the simple means of living, bread and water, which are equally available to all, is distinguished from the "seeing wealth," i.e. the spiritual wealth of virtue and wisdom, though it is superior to the "blind wealth," here called the "wealth of vain opinion."

PHILO

- ἐκστῶσι τῶν οὐσιῶν, ὑπ' οὐδενὸς ἔτι δελεαζόμενοι φεύγουσιν ἀμεταστρεπτὶ καταλιπόντες ἀδελφούς, τέκνα, γυναῖκας, γονεῖς, πολυανθρώπους συγγενείας, φιλικὰς ἑταιρείας, τὰς πατρίδας, ἐν αἷς ἐγεννήθησαν καὶ ἐτράφησαν, ἐπειδὴ τὸ σύνηθες 19 ὄλκον καὶ δελεάσαι δυνατώτατον. μετοικίζονται δὲ οὐκ εἰς ἑτέραν πόλιν, ὥσπερ οἱ πρᾶσιν αἰτούμενοι παρὰ τῶν κεκτημένων ἀτυχεῖς ἢ κακόδουλο δεσποτῶν ὑπαλλαγὴν, οὐκ ἐλευθερίαν, αὐτοῖς ἐκπορίζοντες—πᾶσα γὰρ πόλις, καὶ ἡ εὐνομωτάτη, γέμει θορύβων καὶ ταραχῶν ἀμυθῆτων, ἃς οὐκ 20 ἂν ὑπομείναι τις ἄπαξ ὑπὸ σοφίας ἀχθεῖς—, ἀλλὰ τειχῶν ἔξω ποιοῦνται τὰς διατριβὰς ἐν κήποις ἢ μοναγρίαις ἐρημίαν μεταδιώκοντες, οὐ διὰ τινα ὤμην ἐπιτετηδευμένην μισανθρωπίαν, ἀλλὰ τὰς ἐκ τῶν ἀνομοίων τὸ ἦθος ἐπιμιξίας ἀλυσιτελεῖς καὶ βλαβερὰς εἰδότες.
- 21 III. Πολλαχοῦ μὲν οὖν τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐστὶ τὸ γένος—ἔδει γὰρ ἀγαθοῦ τελείου μετασχεῖν καὶ τὴν Ἑλλάδα καὶ τὴν βάρβαρον—, πλεονάζει δὲ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ καθ' ἕκαστον τῶν ἐπικαλουμένων νόμων 22 καὶ μάλιστα περὶ τὴν Ἀλεξάνδρειαν. οἱ δὲ πανταχόθεν ἄριστοι καθάπερ εἰς πατρίδα [θεραπευτῶν] ἀποικίαν στέλλονται πρὸς τι χωρίον ἐπιτηδειό-τατον, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ὑπὲρ λίμνης Μαρείας κείμενον ἐπὶ γεωλόφου χθαμαλωτέρου, σφόδρα εὐκαίρως, 23 ἀσφαλείας τε ἔνεκα καὶ ἀέρος εὐκρασίας. τὴν μὲν

---

<sup>a</sup> Or as Conybeare translates it “ the intercourse with and influence from persons,” etc., to express the curious preposition instead of the usual πρὸς with accusative as e.g. De

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 18-23

So when they have divested themselves 18 of their possessions and have no longer ought to ensnare them they flee without a backward glance and leave their brothers, their children, their wives, their parents, the wide circle of their kinsfolk, the groups of friends around them, the fatherlands in which they were born and reared, since strong is the attraction of familiarity and very great its power to ensnare. And they do not migrate into another 19 city like the unfortunate or worthless slaves who demand to be sold by their owners and so procure a change of masters but not freedom. For every city, even the best governed, is full of turmoils and disturbances innumerable which no one could endure who has ever been even once under the guidance of wisdom. Instead of this they pass their days out- 20 side the walls pursuing solitude in gardens or lonely bits of country, not from any acquired habit of mis-anthropical bitterness but because they know how unprofitable and mischievous are associations with persons of dissimilar character.<sup>a</sup>

III. This kind exists in many places in the inhabited 21 world, for perfect goodness must needs be shared both by Greeks and the world outside Greece, but it abounds in Egypt in each of the nomes as they are called and especially round Alexandria. But the 22 best of these votaries journey from every side to settle in a certain very suitable place which they regard as their fatherland. This place is situated above the Mareotic Lake on a somewhat low-lying hill very happily placed both because of its security and the pleasantly tempered air. The safety is 23

Dec. 127. He suggests that ἐπιμυξία may carry with it the idea of contagion.

PHILO

οὖν ἀσφάλειαν αἱ ἐν κύκλῳ παρέχουσιν ἐπαύλεις [475] τε καὶ κῶμαι, | τὴν δὲ περὶ τὸν ἀέρα εὐκρασίαν αἱ ἔκ τε τῆς λίμνης ἀνεστομωμένης εἰς τὴν θάλατταν καὶ τοῦ πελάγους ἐγγὺς ὄντος ἀναδιδόμεναι συνεχεῖς αὖραι, λεπταὶ μὲν αἱ ἔκ τοῦ πελάγους, παχεῖαι δὲ αἱ ἀπὸ τῆς λίμνης, ὧν ἡ μίξις ὑγιεινο-24 τάτην κατάστασιν ἀπεργάζεται. αἱ δὲ οἰκίαι τῶν συνεληλυθότων σφόδρα μὲν εὐτελεῖς εἰσι, πρὸς δύο τὰ ἀναγκαϊότατα σκέπην παρ-ἔχουσαι, πρὸς τε τὸν ἀφ' ἡλίου φλογμὸν καὶ τὸν ἀπ' ἀέρος κρυμὸν· οὔτε δὲ ἐγγύς, ὥσπερ αἱ ἐν τοῖς ἄστεσιν,—ὄχληρόν γὰρ καὶ δυσάρεστον τοῖς ἐρημίαν ἐζηλωκόσι καὶ μεταδιώκουσιν αἱ γειτνιασεις—οὔτε πόρρω, δι' ἣν ἀσπάζονται κοινωνίαν καὶ ἴνα, εἰ ληστῶν γένοιτο ἔφοδος, ἀλλήλοις ἐπιβοηθῶσιν.
 25 ἐν ἐκάστη δὲ ἔστιν οἴκημα ἱερόν, ὃ καλεῖται σεμνεῖον καὶ μοναστήριον, ἐν ᾧ μονούμενοι τὰ τοῦ σεμνοῦ βίου μυστήρια τελοῦνται, μηδὲν εἰσκομίζοντες, μὴ ποτόν, μὴ σιτίον, μηδέ τι τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα πρὸς τὰς τοῦ σώματος χρείας ἀναγκαῖα, ἀλλὰ νόμους καὶ λόγια θεσπισθέντα διὰ προφητῶν καὶ ὕμνους καὶ τὰ ἄλλα οἷς ἐπιστήμη καὶ εὐσέβεια 26 συναύξονται καὶ τελειοῦνται. αἶψα μὲν οὖν ἄληστον ἔχουσι τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ μνήμην, ὡς καὶ δι' ὄνειράτων μηδὲν ἕτερον ἢ τὰ κάλλη τῶν θείων ἀρετῶν καὶ δυνάμεων φαντασιοῦσθαι· πολλοὶ γοῦν καὶ ἐκ-λαλοῦσιν ἐν ὕπνοις ὄνειροπολούμενοι τὰ τῆς ἱερᾶς 27 φιλοσοφίας ἀοίδιμα δόγματα. δις δὲ καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν εἰώθασιν εὐχεσθαι, περὶ τὴν ἔω καὶ περὶ τὴν ἐσπέραν, ἡλίου μὲν ἀνίσχοντος εὐημερίαν αἰτούμενοι τὴν ὄντως εὐημερίαν, φωτὸς οὐρανοῦ

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 23-27

secured by the farm buildings and villages round about and the pleasantness of the air by the continuous breezes which arise both from the lake which debouches into the sea and from the open sea hard by. For the sea breezes are light, the lake breezes close and the two combining together produce a most healthy condition of climate. The 24 houses of the society thus collected are exceedingly simple, providing protection against two of the most pressing dangers, the fiery heat of the sun and the icy cold of the air. They are neither near together as in towns, since living at close quarters is troublesome and displeasing to people who are seeking to satisfy their desire for solitude, nor yet at a great distance because of the sense of fellowship which they cherish, and to render help to each other if robbers attack 25 them. In each house there is a consecrated room 25 which is called a sanctuary or closet <sup>a</sup> and closeted in this they are initiated into the mysteries of the sanctified life. They take nothing into it, either drink or food or any other of the things necessary for the needs of the body, but laws and oracles delivered through the mouth of prophets, and psalms and anything <sup>b</sup> else which fosters and perfects knowledge and piety. They keep the memory of God alive and 26 never forget it, so that even in their dreams the picture is nothing else but the loveliness of divine excellences and powers. Indeed many when asleep and dreaming give utterance to the glorious verities of their holy philosophy. Twice every day they 27 pray, at dawn and at eventide ; at sunrise they pray for a fine bright day, fine and bright in the true sense

<sup>a</sup> For the word μοναστήριον see App. p. 519.

<sup>b</sup> Or "the other books" (of the O.T.). See App. p. 520.

PHILO

τὴν διάνοιαν αὐτῶν ἀναπλησθῆναι, δυομένου δὲ ὑπὲρ τοῦ τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ τῶν αἰσθήσεων καὶ αἰσθητῶν ὄχλου παντελῶς ἐπικουφισθεῖσαν, ἐν τῷ ἑαυτῆς συνεδρίῳ καὶ βουλευτηρίῳ γενομένην, 28 ἀλήθειαν ἰχνηλατεῖν. τὸ δὲ ἐξ ἑωθινοῦ μέχρι ἑσπέρας διάστημα σύμπαν αὐτοῖς ἔστιν ἄσκησις· ἐντυγχάνοντες γὰρ τοῖς ἱεροῖς γράμμασι φιλοσοφοῦσι τὴν πάτριον φιλοσοφίαν<sup>1</sup> ἀλληγοροῦντες, ἐπειδὴ σύμβολα τὰ τῆς ῥητῆς ἐρμηνείας νομίζουσιν ἀποκεκρυμμένης φύσεως ἐν ὑπονοίαις δηλουμένης.

29 ἔστι δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ συγγράμματα παλαιῶν ἀνδρῶν, οἳ τῆς αἰρέσεως ἀρχηγέται γενόμενοι πολλὰ μνημεῖα τῆς ἐν τοῖς ἀλληγοροῦμένοις ἰδέας ἀπέλιπον, οἷς καθάπερ τισὶν ἀρχε- [476] τύποις | χρώμενοι μιμοῦνται τῆς προαιρέσεως τὸν τρόπον· ὥστε οὐ θεωροῦσι μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ποιοῦσιν ἄσματα καὶ ὕμνους εἰς τὸν θεὸν διὰ

<sup>1</sup> Conybeare νομοθεσίαν mainly on the authority of the Armenian.

<sup>a</sup> The translation takes φιλοσοφίαν as cognate accusative after φιλοσοφοῦσι as in Mos. ii. 216. Cf. De Som. i. 55 φιλοσόφῃσιν ἀναγκαιοτάτην . . . φιλοσοφίαν. But it may be governed by ἀλληγοροῦντες, cf. Spec. Leg. ii. 29.

<sup>b</sup> I understand ἐρμηνεία to be here used as elsewhere, e.g. Quis Rerum 108, in the technical rhetorical sense of the language in which the thought is expressed as opposed to the thought itself, and so with the synonymous λέξις or φράσις

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 27-29

of the heavenly daylight which they pray may fill their minds. At sunset they ask that the soul may be wholly relieved from the press of the senses and the objects of sense and sitting where she is consistency and council chamber to herself pursue the quest of truth. The interval between early morning 28 and evening is spent entirely in spiritual exercise. They read the Holy Scriptures and seek wisdom from their ancestral philosophy by taking it as an allegory,<sup>a</sup> since they think that the words of the literal text are symbols of something whose hidden nature is revealed by studying the underlying meaning.<sup>b</sup>

They have also writings of men of 29 old, the founders of their way of thinking, who left many memorials of the form<sup>c</sup> used in allegorical interpretation and these they take as a kind of archetype and imitate the method in which this principle is carried out.<sup>d</sup> And so they do not confine themselves to contemplation but also compose hymns and psalms corresponding to the Latin elocutio. Conybeare gives "literal meaning." Lake (translating Euseb. Hist. Eccl. where this passage is quoted) "literal interpretation." ἀποκεκρυμμένης φύσεως may perhaps mean "a hidden natural (i.e. theological) truth," cf. again Mos. ii. 216 and note there and De Abr. 99.

<sup>a</sup> Conybeare "of the idea involved in allegory." But I do not think that Philo except when he is speaking Platonically used ἰδέα thus. Lake's "of the meaning allegorically expressed" is still farther away. ἰδέα is, I think, simply the form or kind of treatment which we find in allegory.

<sup>d</sup> The phrase τῆς προαιρέσεως τὸν τρόπον is obscure. Lake has "treatment" for προαιρ. But the word must suggest a motive or purpose. Conybeare "emulating the ideal of character traced out in them." I understand προαιρ. to mean the belief which inspired the allegorists that the scriptures were to be interpreted allegorically. Their successors emulated the method in which this principle was carried out.

PHILO

παντοίων μέτρων καὶ μελῶν, ἃ ῥυθμοῖς σεμνοτέροις ἀναγκαίως χαράττουσι.

- 30 Τὰς μὲν οὖν ἐξ ἡμέρας χωρὶς ἕκαστοι μονούμενοι παρ' ἑαυτοῖς ἐν τοῖς λεχθεῖσι μοναστηρίοις φιλο-σοφοῦσι, τὴν αὐλειον οὐχ ὑπερβαίνοντες, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐξ ἀπόπτου θεωροῦντες· ταῖς δὲ ἐβδόμαις συν-έρχονται καθάπερ εἰς κοινὸν σύλλογον καὶ καθ' ἡλικίαν ἐξῆς καθέζονται μετὰ τοῦ πρέποντος σχήματος, εἴσω τὰς χεῖρας ἔχοντες, τὴν μὲν δεξιὰν μεταξὺ στέρνου καὶ γενείου, τὴν δὲ εὐώνυμον 31 ὑπεσταλμένην παρὰ τῇ λαγόνι. παρελθὼν δὲ ὁ πρεσβύτατος καὶ τῶν δογμάτων ἐμπειρότατος διαλέγεται, καθεστῶτι μὲν τῷ βλέμματι, καθεστῶσι δὲ τῇ φωνῇ, μετὰ λογισμοῦ καὶ φρονήσεως, οὐ δεινότητα λόγων ὥσπερ οἱ ῥήτορες ἢ οἱ νῦν σοφισταὶ παρεπιδεικνύμενος, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐν τοῖς νοήμασι διηρευνηκῶς καὶ διερμηνεύων ἀκρίβειαν, ἣτις οὐκ ἄκροισ ὡσὶν ἐφιλιάει, ἀλλὰ δι' ἀκοῆς ἐπὶ ψυχὴν ἔρχεται καὶ βεβαίως ἐπιμένει. καθ' ἡσυχίαν δὲ οἱ ἄλλοι πάντες ἀκροῶνται, τὸν ἔπαινον νεύμασιν ὄψεως ἢ κεφαλῆς παραδηλοῦντες αὐτὸ 32 μόνον. τὸ δὲ κοινὸν τοῦτο σεμνεῖον, εἰς ὃ ταῖς ἐβδόμαις συνέρχονται, διπλοῦς ἐστὶ περίβολος, ὃ μὲν εἰς ἀνδρῶνα, ὃ δὲ εἰς γυναικωνίτιν ἀποκριθεῖς· καὶ γὰρ καὶ γυναιῖκες ἐξ ἔθους συν-ακροῶνται τὸν αὐτὸν ζῆλον καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν προαίρεσιν

---

<sup>a</sup> Here again we have a doubtful phrase. Conybeare translates "which they write down in solemn rhythms as best they can," a meaning which ἀναγκαίως certainly bears in Philo and elsewhere. His explanation is that they could not engrave them on stone (hymns for worship seem to have been thus cut in stone) and so were fain to use papyrus.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 29-32

to God in all sorts of metres and melodies which they write down with the rhythms necessarily made more solemn.<sup>a</sup>

For six days they seek wisdom by themselves in 30 solitude in the closets mentioned above, never passing the outside door of the house or even getting a distant view of it. But every seventh day they meet together as for a general assembly and sit in order according to their age in the proper attitude, with their hands inside the robe, the right hand between the breast and the chin and the left withdrawn along the flank. Then the senior among them who 31 also has the fullest knowledge of the doctrines which they profess comes forward and with visage and voice alike quiet and composed gives a well-reasoned and wise discourse. He does not make an exhibition of clever rhetoric like the orators or sophists of to-day but follows careful examination by careful expression of the exact meaning of the thoughts, and this does not lodge just outside the ears of the audience but passes through the hearing into the soul and there stays securely. All the others sit still and listen showing their approval merely by their looks or nods.

This common sanctuary in which 32 they meet every seventh day is a double enclosure, one portion set apart for the use of the men, the other for the women. For women too regularly make part of the audience with the same ardour and the Lake quite impossibly gives "arrange" for χαράττοις. Philo is clearly referring to the accepted division of music into metre, melody and rhythm, see note on De Som. i. 205 (vol. v. pp. 603 f.), and the suggestion made very tentatively in the translation is that it is the rhythm which gives the solemnity necessary for sacred music and that this was indicated by some notation.

PHILO

- 33 ἔχουσαι. ὁ δὲ μεταξὺ τῶν οἰκῶν τοίχος τὸ μὲν ἐξ ἐδάφους ἐπὶ τρεῖς ἢ τέσσαρας πήχεις εἰς τὸ ἄνω συνωκοδόμηται θωρακίου τρόπον, τὸ δὲ ἄχρι τέγους ἀνάγειον ἀχανὲς ἀνεῖται, δυοῖν ἕνεκα, τοῦ τε τὴν πρέπουσαν αἰδῶ τῇ γυναικείᾳ φύσει διατηρεῖσθαι καὶ τοῦ τὴν ἀντίληψιν ἔχειν εὐμαρῆ καθεζομένας ἐν ἐπηκόῳ, μηδενὸς τὴν τοῦ διαλεγομένου φωνὴν ἐμποδίζοντος.
- 34 IV. Ἐγκράτειαν δὲ ὡσπερ τιὰ θεμέλιον προκαταβαλλόμενοι τῆς ψυχῆς τὰς ἄλλας ἐποικοδομοῦσιν ἀρετάς. σιτίον ἢ ποτὸν οὐδεὶς ἂν αὐτῶν προσενέγκαιτο πρὸ ἡλίου δύσεως, ἐπεὶ τὸ μὲν φιλοσοφεῖν ἄξιον φωτὸς κρίνουσιν εἶναι, σκότους δὲ τὰς τοῦ σώματος ἀνάγκας, ὅθεν τῷ μὲν ἡμέραν,
- 35 ταῖς δὲ νυκτὸς βραχὺ τι μέρος ἔνειμαν. ἔνιοι δὲ καὶ διὰ τριῶν ἡμερῶν ὑπομιμνήσκονται τροφῆς, οἷς πλείων ὁ πόθος ἐπιστήμης ἐνίδρυται· τινὲς δὲ οὕτως ἐνευφραίνονται καὶ τρυφῶσιν ὑπὸ σοφίας ἐστιώμενοι πλουσίως καὶ ἀφθόνως τὰ δόγματα χορηγούσης, ὡς καὶ πρὸς διπλασίονα χρόνον ἀντέχειν καὶ μόλις δι' ἕξ ἡμερῶν ἀπογεύεσθαι τροφῆς ἀναγκαίας, ἐθισθέντες ὡσπερ φασι τὸ τῶν τεττίγων
- [477] | γένος ἀέρι τρέφεσθαι, τῆς ὠδῆς, ὡς γε οἶμαι, τὴν
- 36 ἔνδειαν ἐξευμαριζούσης. τὴν δὲ ἐβδόμην πανιέρων τινα καὶ πανέορτον εἶναι νομίζοντες ἐξαιρέτου γέρως ἡξιώκασιν, ἐν ἣ μετὰ τὴν τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπι-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Quod Omn. Prob. 8. Here Philo follows Plato more definitely. See Phaedrus 259 c τὸ τεττίγων γένος . . . γέρας

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 33-36

same sense of their calling. The wall between the 33 two chambers rises up from the ground to three or four cubits built in the form of a breast work, while the space above up to the roof is left open. This arrangement serves two purposes; the modesty becoming to the female sex is preserved, while the women sitting within ear-shot can easily follow what is said since there is nothing to obstruct the voice of the speaker.

IV. They lay self-control to be as it were the foun- 34 dation of their soul and on it build the other virtues.
None of them would put food or drink to his lips before sunset since they hold that philosophy finds its right place in the light, the needs of the body in the darkness, and therefore they assign the day to the one and some small part of the night to the other.
Some in whom the desire for studying wisdom is more deeply implanted even only after three days remember to take food. Others so luxuriate and 35 delight in the banquet of truths which wisdom richly and lavishly supplies that they hold out for twice that time and only after six days do they bring themselves to taste such sustenance as is absolutely necessary. They have become habituated to abstinence like the grasshoppers<sup>a</sup> who are said to live on air because, I suppose, their singing makes their lack of food a light matter. But to the seventh day as 36 they consider it to be sacred and festal in the highest degree they have awarded special privileges as its due, and on it after providing for the soul refresh

τοῦτο παρὰ Μουσῶν λαβόν, μηδὲν τροφῆς δεῖσθαι, ἀλλ' αἰτόν τε καὶ ἄποτον εὐθὺς γινόμενον ἄδειν, ἕως ἂν τελευτήσῃ. The idea that the grasshopper needs no food except air (or more frequently dew) goes back to Hesiod, Shield 395 ff. τέττιξ
. . . ῶτε πόσις καὶ βρώσις θηλὺς ἔέρση.

PHILO

μέλειαν καὶ τὸ σῶμα λιπαίνουσιν, ὡσπερ ἀμέλει καὶ τὰ θρέμματα τῶν συνεχῶν πόνων ἀνιέντες.
37 σιτοῦνται δὲ πολυτελὲς οὐδέν, ἀλλὰ ἄρτον εὐτελεῖ, καὶ ὄψον ἄλες, οὓς οἱ ἀβροδιαῖοι παραρτύουσιν ὑσσώπῳ, ποτὸν δὲ ὕδωρ ναματιαῖον αὐτοῖς ἐστίν· ἄς γὰρ ἡ φύσις ἐπέστησε τῷ θνητῷ γένει δεσποίνας, πεινάν τε καὶ δίψαν, ἀπομειλίσσονται, τῶν εἰς κολακείαν ἐπιφέροντες οὐδέν, ἀλλ' αὐτὰ τὰ χρήσιμα, ᾧν ἄνευ ζῆν οὐκ ἔστι. διὰ τοῦτο ἐσθίουσι μὲν, ὥστε μὴ πεινῆν, πίνουσι δέ, ὥστε μὴ διψῆν, πλησμονῆν ὡς ἐχθρόν τε καὶ ἐπίβουλον ψυχῆς τε 38 καὶ σώματος ἐκτρεπόμενοι. ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ σκέπης διττὸν εἶδος, τὸ μὲν ἐσθῆς, τὸ δὲ οἰκία, περὶ μὲν οἰκίας εἴρηται πρότερον, ὅτι ἐστὶν ἀκαλλώπιστος καὶ αὐτοσχέδιος, πρὸς τὸ χρειώδες αὐτὸ μόνον εἰργασμένη· καὶ ἐσθῆς δὲ ὁμοίως εὐτελεστάτη, πρὸς ἀλέξημα κρυμοῦ τε καὶ θάλπους, χλαῖνα μὲν ἀπὸ<sup>1</sup> λασίου δορᾶς παχεῖα χειμῶνος, 39 ἐξωμῖς δὲ θέρους ἢ ὀθόνη.<sup>2</sup> συνόλως γὰρ ἀσκοῦσιν

<sup>1</sup> ἀντὶ Conybeare with the majority of mss. See note b.

<sup>2</sup> ἢ ὀθόνη Conybeare. See note c.

---

<sup>a</sup> Conybeare translates "they anoint the body, releasing it just as you might the lower animals from the long spell of toil." But neither anointing in the literal sense nor rest from labour for the Therapeutae themselves suits the context, which is concerned with the general abstemiousness in food and mild relaxation on the sabbath. The sense I have given to λιπαίνω is much the same as in Spec. Leg. iv. 74, where it is applied to relieving the hard condition of the needy by charity. The point of ἀμέλει, as I have taken it, is that the release of the cattle from labour on the sabbath is a duty recognized by everybody. But see App. p. 520.

<sup>b</sup> Conybeare's reading, ἀντὶ for ἀπὸ which certainly seems

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 36-39

the body also, which they do as a matter of course with the cattle too by releasing them from their continuous labour.<sup>a</sup> Still they eat nothing costly, 37 only common bread with salt for a relish flavoured further by the daintier with hyssop, and their drink is spring water. For as nature has set hunger and thirst as mistresses over mortal kind they propitiate them without using anything to curry favour but only such things as are actually needed and without which life cannot be maintained. Therefore they eat enough to keep from hunger and drink enough to keep from thirst but abhor surfeiting as a malignant enemy both to soul and body. As for 38

the two forms of shelter, clothes and housing, we have already said that the house is unembellished and a makeshift constructed for utility only. Their clothing likewise is the most inexpensive, enough to protect them against extreme cold and heat, a thick coat of shaggy skin<sup>b</sup> in winter and in summer a vest or linen shirt.<sup>c</sup> For they practise an all-round 39 to have the better ms. authority, is based by him, as stated in a long and interesting note, on the general belief that linen was more sacred than any substance which was the produce of animals—an idea stated by Philo himself in several places, e.g. Spec. Leg. i. 84. The chief objection seems to be that χλαῖνα would have to be understood as = “linen garment,” whereas such evidence as I have seen goes to show that it was frequently, if not usually, made of wool, and wool was as unclean as skin.

<sup>c</sup> Conybeare, reading ῆ for ῆ̄, translates “a smock without sleeves, the linen coat namely.” He says that ῆ̄ does not make sense, meaning apparently that as any garment made of linen would be an ὀθόνη, it could not be an alternative to the ἕξωμῖς. In Spec. Leg. ii. 20, the χλαῖνα is coupled with the ὀθόνη, and in Hyp. 11. 12 with the ἕξωμῖς as simple garments for winter and summer respectively. This perhaps supports his view.

PHILO

ἀτυφίαν, εἰδότες τύφον<sup>1</sup> μὲν τοῦ ψεύδους ἀρχήν, ἀτυφίαν δὲ ἀληθείας, ἐκάτερον δὲ πηγῆς λόγον ἔχον· ρέουσι γὰρ ἀπὸ μὲν τοῦ ψεύδους αἱ πολύτροποι τῶν κακῶν ἰδέαι, ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς ἀληθείας αἱ περιουσίαι τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἀνθρωπίνων τε καὶ θείων.

- 40 V. Βούλομαι δὲ καὶ τὰς κοινὰς συνόδους αὐτῶν καὶ ἰλαρωτέρας ἐν συμποσίοις διαγωγὰς εἰπεῖν, ἀντιτάξας τὰ τῶν ἄλλων συμπόσια. οἱ μὲν γὰρ ὅταν ἄκρατον ἐμφορήσωνται, καθάπερ οὐκ οἶνον πίνοντες ἀλλὰ παρακινηματικόν τι καὶ μανιώδες καὶ εἴ τι χαλεπώτερον ἐπ' ἐκστάσει λογισμοῦ φυσικόν,<sup>2</sup> κράζουσι<sup>3</sup> καὶ λυττώσι τρόπον κυνῶν ἀτιθάσων καὶ ἐπανιστάμενοι δάκνουσιν ἀλλήλους καὶ ἀποτρῶγουσι ῥίνας, ὦτα, δακτύλους, ἕτερα ἅπτα μέρη τοῦ σώματος, ὡς τὸν ἐπὶ Κύκλωπος καὶ τῶν Ὀδυσσεῶς ἐταίρων μῦθον ἀποδεδειχέναι τούτους ἀληθῆ, “ψωμούς,” ἧ φησιν ὁ ποιητής, ἐπεσθίοντας ἀνθρώπων, καὶ ὠμότερον ἢ ἐκείνος.
- 41 ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἐχθροὺς ὑποτοπήσας ἠμύνετο, οἱ δὲ συνήθεις καὶ φίλους, ἔστι δὲ ὅτε καὶ συγγενεῖς, ἐφ' ἄλων καὶ τραπέζης, ἄσπονδα ἐν σπονδαῖς ἐργασά-

<sup>1</sup> The mss. reverse the case of the nouns τύφου . . . ψεύδος . . . ἀτυφίας . . . ἀλήθειαν. The correction, which is supported by the Latin version and is accepted by both Cohn and Conybeare, makes better sense. Both (i.e. τύφος and ἀτυφία) lead respectively to the falsehood and truth, from which flow evil and good, and may therefore be regarded (λόγον ἔχει) as a πηγή.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps read φυσικὸν (φάρμακον). See note b.

<sup>3</sup> So Conybeare with some authorities. Cohn with mss. ἀράσσοισι.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 39-41

simplicity knowing that its opposite, vanity,<sup>a</sup> is the source of falsehood as simplicity is of truth, and that both play the part of a fountain head of other things, since from falsehood flow the manifold forms of evil and from truth abundant streams of goodness both human and divine.

V. I wish also to speak of their common assemblages 40 and the cheerfulness of their convivial meals as contrasted with those of other people. Some people when they have filled themselves with strong drink behave as though they had drunk not wine but some witch's potion<sup>b</sup> charged with frenzy and madness and anything more fatal that can be imagined to overthrow their reason. They bellow and rave like wild dogs, attack and bite each other and gnaw off noses, ears, fingers and some other parts of the body,<sup>c</sup> so that they make good the story of the comrades of Odysseus and the Cyclops by eating "gobbets"<sup>d</sup> of men, as the poet says, and with greater cruelty than the Cyclops. For he avenged himself on men whom 41 he suspected to be enemies, they on their familiars and friends and sometimes even on their kin over the salt and across the board, and as they pour the rather than as Conybeare (pride?). See note on De Virt. 17 (vol. viii. pp. 440 f.).

<sup>b</sup> This must be the meaning if the word is right. But there is no really parallel use of the word at any rate without some explanatory noun. τὰ φυσικά found in the Geoponica (? date) is stated by Stephanus not to bear this meaning. φυσικὸν φάρμακον, to which the Armenian is said to point, is quoted from Alexander Trallianus (? sixth century A.D.).

<sup>c</sup> For this and other points in this description cf. De Plant.

160.

<sup>d</sup> Od. ix. 373—

φάρυγος δ' ἐξέσσυτο οἶνος ψωμοί τ' ἀνδρόμοι.

PHILO

μενοι τῶν ἐν τοῖς γυμνικοῖς ἀγῶσιν ὅμοια καὶ παρακόπτοντες ὥσπερ νόμισμα δόκιμον ἄσκησιν, οἱ ἀντὶ ἀθλητῶν ἄθλιοι· τοῦτο γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἐπι-42 φημιστέον. ἂ γὰρ νήφοντες ἐν σταδίοις ἐκεῖνοι θεαταῖς χρώμενοι τοῖς Πανέλλησι μεθ' ἡμέραν | [478] ἔνεκα νίκης καὶ στεφάνων [Ὀλυμπιονίκαι]<sup>1</sup> σὺν τέχνῃ δρῶσιν, οὗτοι κιβδηλεύοντες ἐπὶ συμποσίων νύκτωρ ἐν σκότῳ (καὶ) μεθύοντες, ἐμπαροινούντες, ἀνεπιστημόνως καὶ κακοτέχνως ἐπ' ἀτιμία καὶ ὕβρει καὶ αἰκία χαλεπῇ τῶν ὑπομενόντων ἐνερ-43 γούσιν. εἰ δὲ μηδεὶς οἷα βραβευτῆς παρελθὼν μέσος διαλύσειε, μετὰ πλείονος ἐξουσίας κατα-παλαίουσι, φονῶντες ἐν ταύτῳ καὶ θανατῶντες· πάσχουσι γὰρ οὐκ ἐλάττονα ὧν διατιθέασιν, ὅπερ<sup>2</sup> οὐκ ἴσασι, παραπαίοντες οἱ τὸν οἶνον οὐχ, ὡς ὁ κωμικός φησιν, ἐπὶ κακῷ τῶν πλησίον αὐτὸ μόνον 44 ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ ἰδίῳ πίνειν ὑπομένοντες. τοι-γαροῦν οἱ πρὸ μικροῦ παρελθόντες εἰς τὰ συμπόσια σῶοι καὶ φίλοι μικρὸν ὕστερον ἐξίασιν ἐχθροὶ καὶ τὰ σώματα ἠκρωτηριασμένοι· καὶ οἱ μὲν συνηγόρων καὶ δικαστῶν, οἱ δὲ καταπλαστῶν καὶ ἰατρῶν καὶ 45 τῆς ὑπὸ τούτων δέονται βοήθειας. ἕτεροι δὲ τῶν μετρωτέρων δοκούντων εἶναι συμποτῶν ὥσπερ μανδραγόραν τὸν ἄκρατον πίνοντες ὑπερβεβλύκασι<sup>3</sup> καὶ τὸν εὐάνυμον ἀγκῶνα προβαλόντες καὶ τὸν

<sup>1</sup> Bracketed by Cohn on the grounds that it is omitted by the Latin. The word is not very appropriate here as we are talking of competitors rather than victors, and it may well be a gloss, but these are doubtful reasons. If, as Cohn thinks, the Armenian points to Ὀλυμπίων or Ὀλυμπιακῶν, I should prefer to read one of them.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἄπερ. Here again Cohn's correction seems doubtful.

<sup>3</sup> mss. ὑποβεβλύκασι

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 41-45

libation of peace they commit deeds of war<sup>a</sup> like those of the gymnastic contests, counterfeiting the genuine coin of manly exercise, no wrestlers but wretches, for that is the right name to give them. For what 42 the athletes do in the arena while sober, in the daylight, with the eyes of all Greece upon them, in the hope of victory and the crown and in the exercise of their skill, are debased by the revellers who ply their activities in convivial gatherings by night and in darkness, drink-besotted, ignorant and skilful only for mischief to inflict dishonour, insult and grievous outrage on the objects of their assault. And if no 43 one plays the umpire and comes forward to intervene and separate them they carry on the bout with increased licence to the finish, ready both to kill and to be killed. For they suffer no less than what they mete to others though they know it not, so infatuated are these who shrink not from drinking wine, as the comic poet says, to mar not only their neighbours but themselves.<sup>b</sup> And so those who but 44 now came to the party sound in body and friendly at heart leave soon afterwards in enmity and with bodily mutilation,—enmity in some cases calling for advocates and judges, mutilation in others requiring the apothecary and physician and the help that they can bring. Others belonging to what we may 45 suppose is the more moderate part of the company are in a state of overflow. Draughts of strong wine act upon them like mandragora, they throw the left

<sup>a</sup> Or as Conybeare "whom in the midst of peace they treat implacably." But σπονδαί carries with it the sense of "libation" as well as "truce." Cf. the same phrase though in a different connexion in Spec. Leg. iii. 96, where see note.

<sup>b</sup> Source unknown.

PHILO

- αὐχένα ἐγκάρσιον ἐπιστρέφαντες, ἐνερευγόμενοι ταῖς κύλιξιν, ὕπνω βαθεῖ πιέζονται, μηδὲν μῆτε ἰδόντες μῆτε ἀκούσαντες, ὡς μίαν μόνην ἔχοντες 46 αἰσθησιν, τὴν ἀνδραποδωδεσάτην γεῦσιν. οἶδα δέ τινας, [οἱ] ἐπειδὴν ἀκροθώρακες γένωνται, πρὶν τελέως βαπτισθῆναι, τὸν εἰς τὴν ὑστεραίαν πότον ἐξ ἐπιδόσεως καὶ συμβολῶν προευτρεπιζομένους, μέρος ὑπολαμβάνοντας τῆς ἐν χερσὶν εὐφροσύνης εἶναι τὴν περὶ τῆς εἰς τὸ μέλλον μέθης ἐλπίδα.
- 47 τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον διαζῶντες ἄοικοι καὶ ἀνέστιοι διατελοῦσιν, ἐχθροὶ μὲν γονέων καὶ γυναικῶν καὶ τέκνων, ἐχθροὶ δὲ καὶ τῆς πατρίδος, πολέμιοι δὲ καὶ ἑαυτῶν· ὑγρὸς γὰρ καὶ ἄσωτος βίος ἅπασιν ἐπίβουλος.
- 48 VI. Ἴσως δ' ἂν τις ἀποδέξαιτο τὴν ἐπιπολάζουσαν νυνὶ τῶν συμποσιῶν πανταχοῦ διάθεσιν κατὰ πόθον τῆς Ἰταλικῆς πολυτελείας καὶ τρυφῆς, ἣν ἐζήλωσαν Ἕλληνές τε καὶ βάρβαροι πρὸς ἐπίδειξιν μᾶλλον ἢ πρὸς εὐωχίαν ποιούμενοι τὰς 49 παρασκευάς. τρίκλινα τε καὶ πολύκλινα<sup>1</sup> χελώνης ἢ ἐλέφαντος κατεσκευασμένα καὶ τιμαλφεστέρας ὕλης, ὧν τὰ πλείστα λιθοκόλλητα· στρωμναὶ ἀλουργεῖς ἐνυφασμένου χρυσοῦ καὶ ἀνθοβαφεῖς ἕτεραι παντοίων χρωμάτων πρὸς τὸ τῆς ὄψεως ἐπαγωγόν· ἐκπωμάτων πλήθος ἐκτεταγμένων καθ' ἕκαστον εἶδος, ῥυτὰ γὰρ καὶ φιάλαι καὶ κύλικες καὶ ἕτερα πολυειδῆ τεχνικώτατα θηρίκλεια καὶ 50 τορεῖαις ἐπιστημονικῶν ἀνδρῶν ἠκριβωμένα. δια-[479] κονικὰ ἀνδράποδα εὐμορφότατα | καὶ περικαλ-λέστατα, ὡς ἀφιγμένα οὐχ ὑπηρεσίας ἔνεκα μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ φανέντα τὴν τῶν θεωμένων ὄψιν ἠδῦναι·

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 45-50

elbow forward, turn the neck at a right angle, belch into the cups and sink into a profound sleep, seeing nothing and hearing nothing, having apparently only one sense and that the most slavish, taste. I know 46 of some who when they are half-seas-over and before they have completely gone under arrange donations and subscriptions in preparation for to-morrow's bout, considering that one factor in their present exhilaration is the hope of future intoxication. In this way 47 they spend their whole life ever heartless and homeless, enemies to their parents, their wives and their children, enemies too to their country and at war with themselves. For a loose and a dissolute life is a menace to all.

VI. Some perhaps may approve the method of 48 banqueting now prevalent everywhere through hankering for the Italian expensiveness and luxury emulated both by Greek and non-Greeks who make their arrangements for ostentation rather than festivity. Sets of three or many couches<sup>a</sup> made of 49 tortoise shell or ivory or even more valuable material, most of them inlaid with precious stones; coverlets purple-dyed with gold interwoven, others brocaded with flower patterns of all sorts of colours to allure the eye; a host of drinking cups set out in their several kinds, beakers, stoops, tankards, other goblets of many shapes, very artistically and elaborately chased by scientific craftsmen. For waiting there are slaves 50 of the utmost comeliness and beauty, giving the idea that they have come not so much to render service as to give pleasure to the eyes of the beholders by

<sup>a</sup> For τρίκλινα see App. p. 521. The mss. περίκλινα would mean "couches round the table."

<sup>1</sup> So the Armenian. mss. περίκλινα. See note a.

PHILO

- τούτων οἱ μὲν παῖδες ἔτι ὄντες οἰνοχοοῦσιν, ὕδροφοροῦσι δὲ βούπαιδες λελουμένοι καὶ λελειασμένοι, <οἱ> τά τε πρόσωπα ἐντρίβονται καὶ ὑπογράφονται καὶ τὰς τῆς κεφαλῆς τρίχας εὖ πως διαπλέκονται
- 51 σφηκούμενοι· βαθυχαῖται γάρ εἰσιν ἢ μὴ κειρόμενοι τὸ παράπαν ἢ τὰς προμετωπιδίους αὐτὸ μόνον ἐξ ἄκρων εἰς ἐπανίσωσιν καὶ γραμμῆς κυκλοτεροῦς ἠκριβωμένον σχῆμα· χιτῶνάς τε ἀραχνοῦφείς καὶ ἐκλεύκους ἐπαναζωσάμενοι, τὰ μὲν ἐμπρόσθια κατωτέρω τῶν ὑπὸ γόνυ<sup>1</sup> τὰ δὲ κατόπιν μικρὸν ὑπὸ τοῖς γονατίοις, ἐκάτερον δὲ μέρος οὐλοτέραις ταῖς σειραίαις ἐπιδιπλώσεισι κατὰ τὴν τῶν χιτωνίσκων συμβολὴν συστέλλοντες ἐκ πλαγίων κόλπους ἀπαιωροῦσιν, εὐρύνοντες τὰ κοῖλα τῶν πλευρῶν.
- 52 ἐφεδρεύουσι δ' ἄλλοι, μειράκια πρωτογένεια,<sup>2</sup> τοὺς ἰούλους ἄρτι ἀνθοῦντες, ἀθύρματα πρὸ μικροῦ παιδεραστῶν γεγονότες, ἠσκημένοι σφόδρα περιέργως πρὸς τὰς βαρυτέρας ὑπηρεσίας, ἐπίδειξις ἐστιατόρων εὐπορίας, ὡς ἴσασιν<sup>3</sup> οἱ χρώμενοι, ὡς
- 53 δὲ ἔχει τὸ ἀληθές, ἀπειροκαλίας.<sup>4</sup> πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> Cohn in both editions prints γόνου, which I think must be a mere misprint. Not only is such a form unknown, but Conybeare who prints γόνυ (as Mangey) gives no sign that there is any variation in the mss.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn inserts ἢ after μειράκια, citing De Cher. 114, and Hypothetica 11. 3, in both of which we have μειράκια distinguished from the πρωτογένειοι. He does not seem to observe that this would involve changing πρωτογένεια to πρωτογένειοι. At least I do not see how the neuter could be defended.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps correct to φασιν, but see note e.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἀπειροκαλία.

<sup>a</sup> Conybeare translates "trimmed off equally all round, in a neatly bevelled curved line."

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 50-53

appearing on the scene. Some of them who are still boys pour the wine, while the water is carried by full-grown lads fresh from the bath and smooth shaven, with their faces smeared with cosmetics and paint under the eyelids and the hair of the head prettily plaited and tightly bound. For they have 51 long thick hair which is not cut at all or else the forelocks only are cut at the tips to make them level and take exactly the figure of a circular line.<sup>a</sup> They wear tunics fine as cobwebs and of dazzling white girt high up ; the front part hangs below the under knee, the back part a little below the back of the knee and they draw together each part with curly bows of ribbon along the line of join of the tunics and then let the folds dangle down obliquely, broadening out the hollows along the sides.<sup>b</sup> In the 52 background<sup>c</sup> are others, grown lads newly bearded with the down just blooming on their cheeks, recently pets of the pederasts, elaborately<sup>d</sup> dressed up for the heavier services, a proof of the opulence of the hosts as those who employ them know, but in reality of their bad taste.<sup>e</sup> Besides there are the varieties 53

<sup>b</sup> This sentence has been transcribed bodily from Conybeare's "provisional rendering" in his commentary. I do not profess to understand clearly either the Greek or the English. The revision given in his translation somewhat later does not differ materially except that οὐλοτέραις ταῖς σειραίαις ἐπιδιπλώσει is rendered "with bows of twisted ribbons doubled over."

<sup>c</sup> Or "waiting in relays."

<sup>d</sup> Or perhaps "over elaborately" (considering the kind of work they have to do).

<sup>e</sup> φασιν or νομίζουσιν (as Mangey) would certainly be more natural, but perhaps no alteration is required, or if any, ἀληθέστερον for ἀληθές. It is not denied that opulence is displayed. What the guests do not know is that it is bad taste.

PHILO

δὲ τούτοις αἱ περμμάτων καὶ ὄψων καὶ ἡδυσμάτων ποικιλίαι, περὶ ἃ σιτοπόνοι καὶ ὄψαρτυταὶ πο-νοῦνται, φροντίζοντες οὐ γεῦσιν, ὅπερ ἀναγκαῖον ἦν, ἡδῦναι μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὄψιν τῇ καθαριότητι.
 * * * τοὺς αὐχένας ἐν κύκλῳ περιάγοντες τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς καὶ τοῖς μυκτῆρσι περιλιχνεύουσι, τοῖς μὲν τὰς εὐσαρκίας καὶ τὸ πλῆθος, τοῖς δὲ τὴν ἀναδιδομένην κνίσαν. εἶτα ὅταν ἀμφοτέρων, ὄψεων τε καὶ ὄσμων, γένωνται διακορεῖς, ἐσθίειν κε-λεύουσιν, ἐπαινέσαντες οὐκ ὀλίγα τὴν παρασκευὴν 54 καὶ τὸν ἐστιάτορα τῆς πολυτελείας. ἐπτὰ γοῦν καὶ πλείους εἰσκομίζονται τράπεζαι, πλήρεις ἀπάντων ὅσα γῆ τε καὶ θάλαττα καὶ ποταμοὶ καὶ ἀῆρ φέρουσιν ἔκλογα πάντα καὶ εὐσαρκα, χερσαίων, ἐνύδρων, ἀεροπόρων, ὧν ἐκάστη διαλλάσσει καὶ ταῖς παρασκευαῖς καὶ ταῖς παραρτύσεσιν. ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ μηδὲν εἶδος ἀπολειφθῆναι τῶν ἐν τῇ φύσει, τελευταῖαι τῶν ἀκροδρύων εἰσκομίζονται γέμουσαι, δίχα τῶν εἰς τοὺς κώμους καὶ τὰς λεγομένας 55 ἐπιδειπνίδας. εἶτα αἱ μὲν ἐκκομίζονται κεναὶ διὰ τὴν τῶν παρόντων ἀπληστίαν, οἱ τρόπον αἰθιυῶν ἐμφορούμενοι κατοψοφαγοῦσιν οὕτως, ὡς καὶ τῶν ὀστέων ἐπεντραγεῖν, τὰς δὲ λωβήσαντες καὶ σπαράξαντες ἡμιβρώτους ἐῶσιν. ὅταν δὲ τελέως ἀπαγορεύσωσι, τὰς μὲν γαστέρας ἄχρι φαρυγγῶν πεπληρωμένοι, κενοὶ δὲ πρὸς τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, 56 ἀπειρηκότες πρὸς τὰς ἐδωδάς, * * *<sup>1</sup> ἀλλὰ τι

<sup>1</sup> I have printed §§ 53-55 according to Cohn's text, though I do not feel certain that the transposition which he makes is correct. His theory is that originally after καθαριότητι in § 53 stood something like οἱ γοῦν παρελθόντες ἐς τὰ συμπόσια and that § 55 ended with something like πρὸς τὸν πότον τρέπονται. Somehow in the mss. § 53 f. got transferred to

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 53-56

of baked meats, savoury dishes and seasonings produced by the labour of cooks and confectioners who are careful to please not merely the taste as they are bound to do but also the sight by the elegance of the viands. (The assembled guests) turn their necks round and round, greedily eyeing the richness and abundance of the meat and nosing the steamy odour which arises from it. When they have had their fill of both seeing and smelling they give the word to fall to with many a compliment to the entertainment and the munificence of the entertainer. Seven tables at the least and even more are brought 54 in covered with the flesh of every creature that land, sea and rivers or air produce, beast, fish or bird, all choice and in fine condition, each table differing in the dishes served and the method of seasoning. And, that nothing to be found in nature should be unrepresented, the last tables brought in are loaded with fruits, not including those reserved for the drinking bouts and the after-dinners as they call them. Then while some tables are taken out 55 emptied by the gluttony of the company who gorge themselves like cormorants,<sup>a</sup> so voraciously that they nibble even at the bones, other tables have their dishes mangled and torn and left half eaten. And when they are quite exhausted, their bellies crammed up to the gullets, but their lust still ravenous, impotent for eating (they turn to the drink). But 56

<sup>a</sup> See note on Spec. Leg. iv. 113 (vol. viii. p. 434).

---

after § 55, and then the words πρὸς τὸν πότον τρέπονται. οἱ γούνη παρελθόντες ἐς τὰ συμπόσια fell out. This is what we find in the mss. According to this the guests having gorged themselves with food turn their necks round, gaze and sniff at the food, and then urge others to eat. Who are these ταῦτα προσήκε μηκύνειν, ἃ παρὰ πολλοῖς ἤδη τῶν μετριωτέρων καταγινώσκειται προσαναρρηγνύντα τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, ὧν ἡ μείωσις ὠφέλιμον; εὐξαίτο [480] γὰρ ἂν τις τὰ ἀπευκταιότατα, | πεινᾶν τε καὶ δίψαν, <μᾶλλον> ἢ τὴν ἐν ταῖς τοιαύταις εὐωχίαις ἄφθονον σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν περιουσίαν.

PHILO

- 57 VII. Τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἑλλάδι συμποσίων τὰ περιβόητα καὶ σημειωδέστατα δύο ταῦτά ἐστιν, οἷς καὶ Σωκράτης παρετύγχανε· τὸ μὲν ἐν Καλλίου, ἡνίκα στεφανωθέντος Αὐτολύκου τὰ ἐπινίκια εἰστία,<sup>1</sup> τὸ δὲ ἐν Ἀγάθωνος, ἃ καὶ μνήμης ἠξίωσαν ἄνδρες τά τε ἦθθη καὶ τοὺς λόγους φιλόσοφοι, Ξενοφῶν τε καὶ Πλάτων· ἀνεγράψαντο γὰρ ὡς ἀξιομνημόνευτα, οἷς ὑπετόπασαν χρῆσεσθαι παραδείγμασι τοὺς ἔπειτα τῆς ἐν συμποσίοις ἐμμελοῦς διαγωγῆς.
- 58 ἄλλ' ὅμως καὶ ταῦτα συγκρινόμενα τοῖς τῶν ἡμετέρων, οἳ τὸν θεωρητικὸν ἠσπᾶσαντο βίον, γέλως ἀναφανεῖται. ἡδονὰς μὲν οὖν ἔχει ἐκάτερον, ἀνθρωπικώτερον δὲ ἐστὶ τὸ Ξενοφῶντος· αὐλητρίδες τε καὶ ὄρχησται καὶ θαυματοποιοὶ καὶ ποιηταὶ γελοίων ἐπὶ τῷ σκῶψαι καὶ χαριεντίζασθαι μέγα φρονούντες εἰσὶ τινες καὶ ἄλλα<sup>2</sup> τῶν ἐν ταῖς ἰλαρω-
- 59 τέραις ἀνέσειςι. τὸ δὲ Πλατωνικὸν ὄλον others? The picture is barely intelligible, and undoubtedly Cohn's order gives a better sense. On the other hand to postulate first the transposition and then the omission of some ten words seems drastic, particularly as, so far as I can see, their retention would not have made worse nonsense. Conybeare translates the manuscript version without apparently finding anything very incongruous.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εἰσιτῆα, which Conybeare retains and perhaps is

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 56-59

why dilate on these doings which are now condemned by many of the more sober minded as giving further vent to the lusts which might profitably be curtailed? For one may well pray for what men most pray to escape, hunger and thirst, rather than for the lavish profusion of food and drink found in festivities of this kind.

VII. Among the banquets held in Greece there are two celebrated and highly notable examples, namely those in which Socrates took part, one held in the house of Callias and given by him in honour of the victory in which Autolycus won the crown, the other in the house of Agathon. That these deserve to be remembered was the judgement of men whose character and discourses showed them to be philosophers, Xenophon and Plato, who described them as worthy to be recorded, surmising that they would serve to posterity as models of the happily conducted banquet. Yet even these if compared with those of our people who embrace the contemplative life will appear as matters for derision. Pleasure is an element in both, but Xenophon's banquet is more concerned with ordinary humanity. There are flute girls, dancers, jugglers, fun-makers, proud of their gift of jesting and facetiousness, and other accompaniments of more unrestrained merry-making.<sup>a</sup> In Plato's banquet the talk is not impossible, but the active with the host as subject and the occasion as a cognate accusative agrees with the ordinary usage.

<sup>a</sup> See Xen. Symp. ii. 1 ff. See App. p. 521.

---

<sup>2</sup> MSS. φρονούντες· εἰσὶ τινα καὶ ἄλλα. Cohn's objection to this is not stated, but presumably is to the plural verb with neuter plural noun; but see note on De Virt. 78 (vol. viii. p. 445).

PHILO

- σχεδόν ἐστι περὶ ἔρωτος, οὐκ ἀνδρῶν γυναιξὶν ἐπιμανέντων ἢ γυναικῶν ἀνδράσιν αὐτὸ μόνον— ὑποτελοῦσι γὰρ αἱ ἐπιθυμίαι αὐται νόμοις φύσεως—, ἀλλὰ ἀνδρῶν ἄρρεσιν ἡλικία μόνον διαφέρουσι· καὶ γὰρ εἴ τι περὶ ἔρωτος καὶ Ἀφροδίτης οὐρανίου κεκομφεῦσθαι δοκεῖ, χάριν ἀστεϊσμοῦ παρείληπται.
- 60 τὸ γὰρ πλείστον αὐτοῦ μέρος ὁ κοινὸς καὶ πάνδημος ἔρως διείληφεν, ἀνδρείαν μὲν, τὴν βιωφελεστάτην ἀρετὴν κατὰ πόλεμον καὶ κατ' εἰρήνην, ἀφαιρούμενος, θήλειαν δὲ νόσον ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἐναπεργαζόμενος καὶ ἀνδρογύνους κατασκευάζων, οὓς ἐχρῆν πᾶσι τοῖς πρὸς ἀλκὴν ἐπιτηδεύμασι συγκροτεῖσθαι.
- 61 λυμηνάμενος δὲ τὴν παιδικὴν ἡλικίαν καὶ εἰς ἔρως τῆς τάξιν καὶ διάθεσιν ἀγαγὼν ἐξημίωσε καὶ τοὺς ἔραστὰς περὶ τὰ ἀναγκαιότατα, σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν καὶ οὐσίαν· ἀνάγκη γὰρ τοῦ παιδεραστοῦ τὸν μὲν νοῦν τετάσθαι πρὸς τὰ παιδικά, πρὸς ταῦτα μόνον ὀξύδορκούντα, πρὸς δὲ τὰ ἄλλα πάντα ἰδίᾳ τε καὶ κοινὰ τυφλούμενον, (τὸ δὲ σῶμα) ὑπὸ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας, καὶ μάλιστα εἰ ἀποτυγχάνοιτο, συντήκεσθαι, τὴν δὲ οὐσίαν ἐλαττοῦσθαι διχόθεν, ἔκ τε ἀμελείας καὶ τῶν εἰς τὸν ἐρώμενον ἀναλωμάτων.
- 62 παραφύεται δὲ καὶ μείζον ἄλλο πάνδημον κακόν· ἔρημίαν γὰρ πόλεων καὶ σπάνιν τοῦ ἀρίστου γένους ἀνθρώπων καὶ στείρωσιν καὶ ἀγωνίαν τεχνάζονται, οἱ μιμοῦνται τοὺς ἀνεπιστήμονας τῆς γεωργίας,
- [481] σπείροντες ἀντὶ τῆς | βαθυγείου πεδιάδος ὑφάλμους ἀρούρας ἢ λιθώδη καὶ ἀπόκροτα χωρία, ἃ πρὸς τῷ

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "paying tribute to," and therefore under their protection.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 59-62

almost entirely concerned with love, not merely with the love-sickness of men for women, or women for men, passions recognized <sup>a</sup> by the laws of nature, but of men for other males differing from them only in age. For, if we find some clever subtlety dealing apparently with the heavenly Love and Aphrodite, it is brought in to give a touch of humour. The <sup>60</sup> chief part is taken up by the common vulgar love <sup>b</sup> which robs men of the courage which is the virtue most valuable for the life both of peace and war, sets up the disease of effeminacy in their souls and turns into a hybrid of man and woman those who should have been disciplined in all the practices which make for valour. And having wrought havoc <sup>61</sup> with the years of boyhood and reduced the boy to the grade and condition of a girl besieged by a lover it inflicts damage on the lovers also in three most essential respects, their bodies, their souls and their property. For the mind of the lover is necessarily set towards his darling and its sight is keen for him only, blind to all other interests, private and public; his body wastes away through desire, particularly if his suit is unsuccessful, while his property is diminished by two causes, neglect and expenditure on his beloved. As a side growth we have another greater <sup>62</sup> evil of national importance. Cities are desolated, the best kind of men become scarce, sterility and childlessness ensue through the devices of these who imitate men who have no knowledge of husbandry by sowing not in the deep soil of the lowland but in briny fields and stony and stubborn places, which <sup>b</sup> Philo here identifies Plato's πάνδημος ἔρως with pederasty. On that and other points in his estimate of the Symposium see App. p. 521. For similar denunciations of the evil cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 37 ff. and De Abr. 135 ff.

PHILO

μηδὲν πεφυκέναι βλαστάνειν καὶ τὰ καταβληθέντα 63 φθείρει σπέρματα. σιωπῶ τὰ τῶν μύθων πλάσματα καὶ τοὺς δισωμάτους, οἱ κατ' ἀρχὰς προσφύντες ἀλλήλοις ἐνωτικάις<sup>1</sup> δυνάμεσιν αὐθις οἶα μέρη συνεληλυθότα διεζεύχθησαν, τῆς ἀρμονίας ὑφ' ἧς συνείχοντο λυθείσης· εὐπαράγωγα γὰρ ταῦτα πάντα, δυνάμενα τῇ καινότητι τῆς ἐπινοίας τὰ ὄντα δελεάζειν· ὧν ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος οἱ Μωυσέως γνώριμοι, μεμαθηκότες ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐρᾶν ἀληθείας, καταφρονοῦσιν ἀνεξαπάτητοι διατελοῦντες.

64 VIII. Ἄλλ' ἐπειδὴ τὰ διωνομασμένα συμπόσια τοιαύτης μεστὰ φλυαρίας ἐστίν, ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἔχοντα τὸν ἔλεγχον, εἴ τις μὴ πρὸς δόξας καὶ τὴν διαδοθεῖσαν περὶ αὐτῶν ὡς δὴ πάνυ κατωρθωμένων φήμην ἐθελήσειεν ἀφορᾶν, ἀντιτάξω <τὰ> τῶν ἀνατεθεικότων τὸν ἴδιον βίον καὶ ἑαυτοὺς ἐπιστήμη καὶ θεωρίᾳ τῶν τῆς φύσεως πραγμάτων κατὰ τὰς τοῦ προφήτου Μωυσέως ἱερωτάτας ὑφηγήσεις.

<sup>1</sup> Most mss. ἐρωτικάις, which might at first sight be defended by the statement of the teller of the fable, that it is told to show the δύναμις ἔρωτος. But the words do not apply to this earlier but to the later part of the fable and the phrase δυνάμεις ἐνωτικάί occurs in De Plant. 89.

<sup>a</sup> Philo is perhaps thinking of Plato, Laws 838 e, where the same practice is described as sowing in rocks and stones.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 62-65

not only give no possibility for anything to grow but even destroy the seed deposited within them.<sup>a</sup>

I pass over the mythical stories of the 63 double-bodied men who were originally brought by unifying forces into cohesion with each other and afterwards came asunder, as an assemblage of separate parts might do when the bond of union which brought them together was loosened.<sup>b</sup> All these are seductive enough, calculated by the novelty of the notion to beguile the ear, but the disciples of Moses trained from their earliest years to love the truth regard them with supreme<sup>c</sup> contempt and continue undeceived.

VIII. But since the story of these well-known 64 banquets is full of such follies and they stand self-convicted in the eyes of any who do not regard conventional opinions and the widely circulated report which declares them to have been all that they should be, I will describe in contrast the festal meetings of those who have dedicated their own life<sup>d</sup> and themselves to knowledge and the contemplation of the verities of nature, following the truly sacred instructions of the prophet Moses. First of all these 65

He has used much the same language of mating with barren women in Spec. Leg. iii. 34.

<sup>b</sup> The allusion is to the combination of men and women, the original third sex, set forth by Aristophanes in Symp. 189 D-190.

<sup>c</sup> Conybeare "from a lofty vantage ground." The phrase is a favourite of Philo's for equalling "with plenty to spare." Sometimes it is contrasted with ἴσος as in Quod Omn. Prob. 149 and Flacc. 126, or is coupled with κρατεῖν or νικᾶν as in De Agr. 112 and De Post. 161 (so in De Aet. 80 πολλῆ τιμι περιουσίᾳ). In other cases it seems to intensify an action or create a superlative. So Mos. i. 93 and ii. 75 and so, I think, here.

<sup>d</sup> So, I think, rather than "means of livelihood" (Conybeare).

PHILO

65 οὗτοι τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀθροίζονται δι' ἑπτὰ ἑβδομάδων, οὐ μόνον τὴν ἀπλήν ἑβδομάδα ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν δύναμιν τεθηπότες· ἀγνήν γὰρ καὶ ἀειπάρθενον αὐτὴν ἴσασι. ἔστι δὲ προέορτος μεγίστης ἑορτῆς, ἣν πεντηκοντὰς ἔλαχεν, ἀγιώτατος καὶ φυσικώτατος ἀριθμῶν, ἐκ τῆς τοῦ ὀρθογωνίου τριγώνου δυνάμεως, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀρχὴ τῆς τῶν ὄλων γενέσεως,

66 συσταθεῖς. ἔπειδὰν οὖν συνέλθωσι λευχειμονοῦντες φαιδροὶ μετὰ τῆς ἀνωτάτω σεμνότητος, ὑποσημαίνοντός τινος τῶν ἐφημερευτῶν—οὕτω γὰρ ὀνομάζειν ἔθος τοὺς ἐν ταῖς τοιαύταις ὑπηρεσίαις—, πρὸ τῆς κατακλίσεως στάντες ἐξῆς κατὰ στοίχον ἐν κόσμῳ καὶ τὰς τε ὄψεις καὶ τὰς χεῖρας εἰς οὐρανὸν ἀνατείναντες, τὰς μὲν ἔπειδὴ τὰ θέας ἄξια καθορᾶν ἐπαιδευθήσαν, τὰς δὲ ὅτι καθαραὶ λημμάτων εἰσὶν ὑπ' οὐδεμιᾶς προφάσεως τῶν εἰς πορισμὸν μαινόμεναι, προσεύχονται τῷ θεῷ θυμῆρη γενέσθαι καὶ κατὰ νοῦν ἀπαντῆσαι

---

<sup>a</sup> I believe with Conybeare that this refers to the feast of Pentecost. But Philo writes carelessly when he omits to tell us from what time the seven weeks are calculated. In Spec. Leg. ii. 176 he has stated that they are calculated from the "Sheaf," the festival on the second (?) day after the passover, and presumably he means the same here. But Conybeare is too severe when he scolds Lucius for supposing δι' ἑπτὰ ἑβδ. to mean "every seven weeks." Since at present we have only heard of minor meetings every week, that would be the natural meaning. Wendland indeed takes it so. See App. p. 522 on this and the meaning of πρῶτον μὲν, which Conybeare translates "for the first time."

<sup>b</sup> We are naturally surprised to see Pentecost rather than the Passover called the chief feast, but see App. p. 523.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. 3, 4, 5 are the sides of the primal right-angled triangle and  $3^2 + 4^2 + 5^2 = 50$ . See the full explanation in Spec. Leg. ii. 176 and Mos. ii. 80, and the notes thereon.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 65-66

people assemble after seven sets of seven days<sup>a</sup> have passed, for they revere not only the simple seven but its square also, since they know its chastity and perpetual virginity. This is the eve of the chief<sup>b</sup> feast which Fifty takes for its own, Fifty the most sacred of numbers and the most deeply rooted in nature, being formed from the square of the right-angled triangle which is the source from which the universe springs.<sup>c</sup>

So then they assemble, white-<sup>66</sup>robed and with faces in which cheerfulness is combined with the utmost seriousness, but before they recline, at a signal from a member of the Rota,<sup>d</sup> which is the name commonly given to those who perform these services, they take their stand in a regular line in an orderly way, their eyes and hands lifted up to Heaven, eyes because they have been trained to fix their gaze on things worthy of contemplation, hands in token that they are clean from gain-taking and not defiled through any cause<sup>e</sup> of the profit-making kind. So standing they pray to God that their feasting may be acceptable and pro-

<sup>a</sup> Conybeare considers that these ἑφημερευταί are the same as the πρόεδροι mentioned later and quotes an inscription of A. D. 174 ἑφημερεύοντος Πανσανίου προέδρου in minutes of a βουλή in Tyre. But the word in itself merely suggests duties performed in rotation, and ὑπηρεσίαις points to what we should describe as a sidesman rather than an officiating minister.

<sup>e</sup> Conybeare "pretence." But Philo often uses the word in a way hardly distinguishable from "cause." So e.g. the eyesight is damaged μικρᾶς ἔνεκα προφάσεως Spec. Leg. iv. 200 and the firstborn in Egypt suddenly perish ἀπ' οὐδεμιᾶς προφάσεως Mos. i. 135. If the word differs at all from αἰτία, it is that it indicates not the absolute cause, but what people may consider to be the cause. So perhaps here "anything that might be regarded as a money-making business."

PHILO

- 67 τὴν εὐωχίαν. μετὰ δὲ τὰς εὐχὰς οἱ πρεσβύτεροι κατακλίνονται ταῖς εἰσκρίσεσιν ἀκολουθοῦντες· πρεσβυτέρους δὲ οὐ τοὺς πολυτεεῖς καὶ πολιοῦς<sup>1</sup> νομίζουσιν ἀλλ' ἔτι κομιδῇ νέους παῖδας,<sup>2</sup> ἂν ὀψὲ τῆς προαιρέσεως ἐρασθῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τοὺς [482] ἐκ πρώτης | ἡλικίας ἐνηβήσαντας καὶ ἐνακμάσαντας τῷ θεωρητικῷ μέρει φιλοσοφίας, ὃ δὴ κάλλιστον 68 καὶ θειότατόν ἐστι. συνεστιῶνται δὲ καὶ γυναῖκες, ὧν πλείσται γηραιαὶ παρθένοι, τὴν ἀγνείαν οὐκ ἀνάγκη, καθάπερ ἔναι τῶν παρ' Ἑλλησιν ἱερειῶν, διαφυλάξασαι μᾶλλον ἢ καθ' ἐκούσιον γνώμην, διὰ ζῆλον καὶ πόθον σοφίας, ἧ συμβιοῦν σπουδάσασαι τῶν περὶ σῶμα ἡδονῶν ἡλόγησαν, οὐ θνητῶν ἐκγόνων ἀλλ' ἀθανάτων ὀρεχθεῖσαι, ἃ μόνη τίκτειν ἀφ' ἑαυτῆς οἷα τέ ἐστιν ἡ θεοφιλῆς ψυχὴ, σπείραντος εἰς αὐτὴν ἀκτῖνας νοητὰς τοῦ πατρός, αἷς δυνήσεται θεωρεῖν τὰ σοφίας δόγματα.
- 69 IX. διανενέμηται δὲ ἡ κατάκλισις χωρὶς μὲν ἀνδράσιν ἐπὶ δεξιά, χωρὶς δὲ γυναῖξιν ἐπ' εὐώνυμα. μὴ πού τις<sup>3</sup> ὑπολαμβάνει στρωμνὰς, εἰ καὶ οὐ πολυτελεῖς, ἀλλ' οὖν μαλακωτέρας ἀνθρώποις εὐγενέσι καὶ ἀστείοις καὶ φιλοσοφίας ἀσκηταῖς εὐτρεπίσθαι; στιβάδες γάρ εἰσιν εἰκαιότερας ὕλης, ἐφ' ὧν<sup>4</sup> εὐτελῆ πάνυ χαμαίστρωτα παπύρου τῆς ἐγχωρίου, μικρὸν ὑπερέχοντα κατὰ τοὺς ἀγκῶνας, ἵνα ἐπερείδωιντο· τὴν μὲν γὰρ Λακωνικὴν σκληραγωγίαν ὑπανιᾶσιν, αἰεὶ δὲ καὶ πανταχοῦ τὴν ἐλευθέριον εὐκολίαν ἐπι-

<sup>1</sup> mss. παλαίους.

<sup>2</sup> ἀλλ' . . . παῖδας are bracketed by Cohn. The only reason given in the footnote, that they are omitted in the Armenian, seems hardly sufficient. But see App. p. 523.

<sup>3</sup> mss. ἡ πού τις or εἰ πού τις.

<sup>4</sup> mss. ἀφ' ὧν.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 67-69

ceed as He would have it. After the 67 prayers the seniors recline according to the order of their admission, since by senior they do not understand the aged and grey headed who are regarded as still mere children if they have only in late years come to love this rule of life, but those who from their earliest years have grown to manhood and spent their prime in pursuing the contemplative branch of philosophy, which indeed is the noblest and most god-like part. The feast is shared by women also, 68 most of them aged virgins, who have kept their chastity not under compulsion, like some of the Greek priestesses, but of their own free will in their ardent yearning for wisdom. Eager to have her for their life mate they have spurned the pleasures of the body and desire no mortal offspring but those immortal children which only the soul that is dear to God can bring to the birth unaided<sup>a</sup> because the Father has sown in her spiritual rays enabling her to behold the verities of wisdom.

IX. The order of 69
reclining is so apportioned that the men sit by themselves on the right and the women by themselves on the left. Perhaps it may be thought that couches though not costly still of a softer kind would have been provided for people of good birth and high character and trained practice in philosophy.
Actually they are plank beds of the common kinds of wood, covered with quite cheap strewings of native papyrus, raised slightly at the arms to give something to lean on. For while they mitigate somewhat the harsh austerity of Sparta, they always and every-<sup>a</sup> The thought may be "without needing the midwife's skill" (τέχνη μαιευτική). So at least in a very similar passage, De Mig. 142.

PHILO

τηδεύουσιν, ἀνὰ κράτος τοῖς ἡδονῆς φίλτροις ἀπ-70 εχθόμενοι. διακονοῦνται δὲ οὐχ ὑπ' ἀνδραπόδων, ἡγούμενοι συνόλως τὴν θεραπόντων κτήσιν εἶναι παρὰ φύσιν· ἡ μὲν γὰρ ἐλευθέρους ἅπαντας γε-γέννηκεν, αἱ δὲ τινων ἀδικίαι καὶ πλεονεξίαι ζηλω-σάντων τὴν ἀρχέκακον ἀνισότητα καταζεύξασαι τὸ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀσθενεστέροις κράτος τοῖς δυνατωτέροις 71 ἀνῆψαν. ἐν δὴ τῷ ἱερῷ τούτῳ συμποσίῳ δοῦλος μὲν ὡς ἔφην οὐδεὶς, ἐλεύθεροι δὲ ὑπηρετοῦσι, τὰς διακονικὰς χρείας ἐπιτελοῦντες οὐ πρὸς βίαν οὐδὲ προστάξεις ἀναμένοντες, ἀλλ' ἐθελουσίῳ γνώμη φθάνοντες μετὰ σπουδῆς καὶ προθυμίας τὰς ἐπικε-72 λεύσεις. οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ τυχόντες ἐλεύθεροι τάττονται πρὸς ταῖς ὑπουργίαις ταύταις, ἀλλ' οἱ νέοι τῶν ἐν τῷ συστήματι μετὰ πάσης ἐπιμελείας ἀριστίνδην ἐπικριθέντες, ὃν χρῆ τρόπον ἀστείου καὶ εὐγενεῖς πρὸς ἄκραν ἀρετὴν ἐπειγομένους· οἱ καθάπερ υἱοὶ γνήσιοι φιλοτίμως ἄσμενοι πατράσι καὶ μητράσιν ὑπουργοῦσι, κοινούς αὐτῶν γονεῖς νομίζοντες οἰκειοτέρους τῶν ἀφ' αἵματος, εἴ γε καλοκαγαθίας οὐδὲν οἰκειότερόν ἐστι τοῖς εὖ φρονούσιν· ἄζωστοι δὲ καὶ καθειμένοι τοὺς χιτωνίσκους εἰσίσαιν ὑπηρε-
 [483] τήσοντες, | ἔνεκα τοῦ μηδὲν εἰδῶλον ἐπιφέρεσθαι 73 δουλοπρεποῦς σχήματος. εἰς τοῦτο τὸ συμπόσιον—οἶδ' ὅτι γελάσσονται τινες ἀκούσαντες, γελάσσονται δὲ οἱ κλαυθμῶν καὶ θρήνων ἄξια δρῶντες—οἶνος ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις οὐκ εἰσκο-μίζεται, ἀλλὰ διαυγέστατον ὕδωρ, ψυχρὸν μὲν τοῖς

<sup>a</sup> On this use of γνήσιος see Quod Omn. Prob. 87.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 69-73

where practise a frugal contentment worthy of the free, and oppose with might and main the love-lures of pleasure. They do not have slaves to wait upon 70 them as they consider that the ownership of servants is entirely against nature. For nature has borne all men to be free, but the wrongful and covetous acts of some who pursued that source of evil, inequality, have imposed their yoke and invested the stronger with power over the weaker. In this sacred banquet 71 there is as I have said no slave, but the services are rendered by free men who perform their tasks as attendants not under compulsion nor yet waiting for orders, but with deliberate goodwill anticipating eagerly and zealously the demands that may be made. For it is not just any free men who are appointed 72 for these offices but young members of the association chosen with all care for their special merit who as becomes their good character and nobility are pressing on to reach the summit of virtue. They give their services gladly and proudly like sons to their real fathers and mothers,<sup>a</sup> judging them to be the parents of them all in common, in a closer affinity than that of blood, since to the right minded there is no closer tie than noble living. And they come in to do their office ungirt and with tunics hanging down, that in their appearance there may be no shadow of anything to suggest the slave. In this 73 banquet—I know that some will laugh at this, but only those whose actions call for tears and lamentation—no wine is brought during those days<sup>b</sup> but only water of the brightest and clearest, cold for most <sup>b</sup> Not to be taken as implying that the wine would be used on other occasions, which is negatived by νηφάλια βιοῦν, but in contrast to the feasts of other people.

PHILO

πολλοῖς, θερμὸν δὲ τῶν πρεσβυτάτων τοῖς ἀβροδιαίτοις· καὶ τράπεζα καθαρὰ τῶν ἐναίμων, ἐφ' ἧς ἄρτοι μὲν τροφή, προσόψημα δὲ ἄλες, οἷς ἔστιν ὅτε καὶ ὕσσωπος ἡδυσμα παραρτύεται διὰ τοὺς 74 τρυφῶντας. νηφάλια γὰρ ὡς τοῖς ἱερεῦσι θύειν καὶ τούτοις βιοῦν ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος ὑφηγεῖται· οἶνος μὲν γὰρ ἀφροσύνης φάρμακον, ὄψα δὲ πολυτελῆ τὸ θρεμμάτων ἀπληστότατον διερεθίζει, τὴν ἐπιθυ-75 μίαν. X. καὶ τὰ μὲν πρῶτα τοιαῦτα. μετὰ δὲ τὸ κατακλιθῆναι μὲν τοὺς συμπότας ἐν αἷς ἐδήλωσα τάξεσι, στήναι δὲ τοὺς διακόνους ἐν κόσμῳ πρὸς ὑπηρεσίαν ἐτοιμούς, (ὁ πρόεδρος αὐτῶν, πολλῆς ἀπάντων ἡσυχίας γενομένης)<sup>1</sup>—πότε δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν; εἶποι τις ἂν· ἀλλ' ἔτι μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον, ὡς μηδὲ γρύξαι τινὰ τολμᾶν ἢ ἀνα-πνεῦσαι βιαϊότερον—, ζητεῖ<sup>2</sup> τι τῶν ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς γράμμασιν ἢ καὶ ὑπ' ἄλλου προταθὲν ἐπιλύεται, φροντίζων μὲν οὐδὲν ἐπιδείξεως—οὐ γὰρ τῆς ἐπὶ δεινότητι λόγων εὐκλείας ὀρέγεται—, θεάσασθαι δέ τινα ποθῶν ἀκριβέστερον καὶ θεασάμενος μὴ φθονῆσαι τοῖς εἰ καὶ μὴ ὁμοίως ὀξυδορκοῦσι, τὸν 76 γοῦν τοῦ μαθεῖν ἡμερον παραπλήσιον ἔχουσι. καὶ ὁ μὲν σχολαιοτέρα χρῆται τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ, διαμέλλων καὶ βραδύνων ταῖς ἐπαναλήψεσιν, ἐγχαράτ-

<sup>1</sup> The sentence, which is evidently imperfect as it stands in the mss., is here filled up from the Armenian. Conybeare has for the last four words ὅτε κοινὴ ἡσυχία γέγονεν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ζητεῖται—which would leave ὁ πρόεδρος without a verb, unless the middle can be used in this sense.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 73-76

of the guests but warm for such of the older men as live delicately. The table too is kept pure from the flesh of animals ; the food laid on it is loaves of bread with salt as a seasoning, sometimes also flavoured with hyssop as a relish for the daintier appetites. Abstinence from wine is enjoined by right reason 74 as for the priest when sacrificing, so to these for their lifetime.<sup>a</sup> For wine acts like a drug producing folly, and costly dishes stir up that most insatiable of animals,<sup>b</sup> desire.

X. Such are the pre-75 liminaries. But when the guests have laid themselves down arranged in rows, as I have described, and the attendants have taken their stand with everything in order ready for their ministry, the President of the company, when a general silence is established—here it may be asked when is there no silence—well at this point there is silence even more than before so that no one ventures to make a sound or breathe with more force than usual—amid this silence, I say, he discusses some question arising in the Holy Scriptures or solves one that has been propounded by someone else. In doing this he has no thought of making a display, for he has no ambition to get a reputation for clever oratory but desires to gain a closer insight into some particular matters and having gained it not to withhold it selfishly from those who if not so clear-sighted as he have at least a similar desire to learn. His instruction proceeds in 76 a leisurely manner ; he lingers over it and spins it out with repetitions, thus permanently imprinting

<sup>a</sup> For the use of the neuter νηφάλια see note on Spec. Leg. iv. 191 (vol. viii. p. 436).

<sup>b</sup> The phrase goes back to Plato, Timaeus 70 E. See Spec. Leg. i. 148, iv. 94 and notes.

PHILO

των ταῖς ψυχαῖς τὰ νοήματα—τῇ γὰρ ἐρμηνεία τοῦ εὐτρόχως καὶ ἀπνευστὶ συνείροντος ὁ τῶν ἀκρωμένων νοῦς συνομαρτεῖν ἀδυνατῶν ὑστερίζει καὶ ἀπολείπεται τῆς καταλήψεως τῶν λεγομένων—

- 77 οἱ δὲ ἀνωρθιακότες <τὰ ὦτα καὶ τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ἀνατετακότες><sup>1</sup> εἰς αὐτὸν ἐπὶ μιᾶς καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς σχέσεως ἐπιμένοντες ἀκροῶνται, τὸ μὲν συνιέναι καὶ κατειληφέναι νεύματι καὶ βλέμματι διασημαίνοντες, τὸν δὲ ἔπαινον τοῦ λέγοντος ἰλαρότητι καὶ τῇ σχέδην περιαγωγῇ τοῦ προσώπου, τὴν δὲ διαπόρησιν ἡρεμαιοτέρᾳ κινήσει τῆς κεφαλῆς καὶ ἄκρῳ δακτύλῳ τῆς δεξιᾶς χειρός· οὐχ ἦττον δὲ τῶν κατακεκλιμένων οἱ παρεστῶτες νέοι προσ-
- 78 ἔχουσιν. αἱ δὲ ἐξηγήσεις τῶν ἱερῶν γραμμάτων γίνονται δι' ὑπονοιῶν ἐν ἀλληγορίαις· ἅπαντα γὰρ ἢ νομοθεσία δοκεῖ τοῖς ἀνδράσι τούτοις εἰκέναι ζῶν καὶ σῶμα μὲν ἔχειν τὰς ῥήτας διατάξεις, ψυχὴν δὲ τὸν ἐναποκείμενον ταῖς λέξεσιν ἀόρατον νοῦν, ἐν ᾧ ἦρξαστο ἢ λογικὴ ψυχὴ διαφερόντως τὰ οἰκεῖα θεωρεῖν, ὥσπερ διὰ κατόπτρου τῶν ὀνομάτων
- [484] ἐξαισία κάλλη νοημάτων | ἐμφαινόμενα κατιδοῦσα καὶ τὰ μὲν σύμβολα διαπτύξασα καὶ διακαλύψασα, γυμνὰ δὲ εἰς φῶς προαγαγοῦσα τὰ ἐνθύμια τοῖς δυναμένοις ἐκ μικρᾶς ὑπομνήσεως τὰ ἀφανῆ
- 79 διὰ τῶν φανερῶν θεωρεῖν. ἐπειδὴν οὖν ἱκανῶς ὁ πρόεδρος διειλέχθαι δοκῆ καὶ κατὰ προ-

<sup>1</sup> The insertion is based on the Armenian. There is no authority for the absolute use of ἀνωρθιάζειν. On the other hand it is used with τὰ ὦτα several times in Philo, e.g. De Dec. 45.

<sup>a</sup> σχέδην = “gradually” or “quietly.” Conybeare trans-
160

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 76-79

the thoughts in the souls of the hearers, since if the speaker goes on descanting with breathless rapidity the mind of the hearers is unable to follow his language, loses ground and fails to arrive at apprehension of what is said. His audience listen with ears pricked 77 up and eyes fixed on him always in exactly the same posture, signifying comprehension and understanding by nods and glances, praise of the speaker by the cheerful change of expression which steals over the face,<sup>a</sup> difficulty by a gentler movement of the head and by pointing with a finger-tip of the right hand. The young men standing by show no less attentive- 78 ness than the occupants of the couches. The ex- position of the sacred scriptures treats the inner meaning conveyed in allegory. For to these people the whole law book seems to resemble a living creature with the literal ordinances for its body and for its soul the invisible mind <sup>b</sup> laid up in its wording. It is in this mind especially that the rational soul begins to contemplate the things akin to itself and looking through the words as through a mirror beholds the marvellous beauties of the concepts, unfolds and removes the symbolic coverings and brings forth the thoughts and sets them bare to the light of day for those who need but a little reminding<sup>c</sup> to enable them to discern the inward and hidden through the outward and visible.

When then the Presi- 79 dent thinks he has discoursed enough and both sides lates "by cheerfulness and by slightly turning their faces about."

<sup>b</sup> It is difficult to say whether νοῦς here = "mind" or (as often) "meaning." I suspect that Philo hardly distinguishes the two and that while "meaning" is predominant in νοῦς, "mind" is predominant in the relative ἐν ψ̄.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 523.

PHILO

αίρεσιν ἀπηνητηκέναι τῷ μὲν ἢ διάλεξις εὐσκόπως ταῖς ἐπιβολαῖς, τοῖς δὲ ἢ ἀκρόασις, κρότος ἐξ ἀπάντων ὡς ἂν συνηδομένων εἰς τὸ ἔτι ἐψόμενον<sup>1</sup> 80 γίνεται. καὶ ἔπειτα ὁ μὲν ἀναστὰς ὕμνον ᾄδει πεποιημένον εἰς τὸν θεόν, ἢ καινὸν αὐτὸς πεποιηκῶς ἢ ἀρχαῖόν τινα τῶν πάλαι ποιητῶν—μέτρα γὰρ καὶ μέλη καταλελοίπασι πολλὰ ἐπῶν,<sup>2</sup> τριμέτρων, προσοδίων ὕμνων, παρασπονδείων, παραβωμίων, στασίμων χορικῶν στροφαῖς πολυστρόφοις εὖ διαμεμετρημένων—, μεθ' ὃν καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι κατὰ τάξεις ἐν κόσμῳ προσήκοντι, πάντων κατὰ πολλὴν ἡσυχίαν ἀκρωμένων, πλὴν ὅποτε τὰ ἀκροτελεύτια καὶ ἐφύμνια ᾄδειν δέοι· τότε γὰρ 81 ἐξηχοῦσι πάντες τε καὶ πᾶσαι. ὅταν δὲ ἕκαστος διαπεράνηται τὸν ὕμνον, οἱ νέοι τὴν πρὸ μικροῦ λεχθεῖσαν τράπεζαν εἰσκομίζουσιν, ἐφ' ἧς τὸ παν-αγέστατον σιτίον, ἄρτος ἐξυμωμένος μετὰ προσ-

<sup>1</sup> mss. τὸ ἐποψόμενον (one ἐψόμενον). Conybeare from the Armenian εἰς τὸ τρίτον μόνον, i.e. the applause on such an occasion had to be limited. The Greek of the mss. certainly seems weak, and Mangey suggested εἰς τὸ ἐνδόσιμον "to give the keynote for the hymn which followed."

<sup>2</sup> For the comma which I have inserted after ἐπῶν see note b.

---

<sup>a</sup> As I understand the sentence, it is more literally "when the discussion seems to him in accordance with his purpose to have met successfully the objects aimed at, and to them the listening seems to have turned out according to their purpose," etc. That is to say δοκῆ κατὰ προαίρεσιν ἀπηνητηκέναι is understood with τοῖς δὲ, but while with τῷ μὲν it is further explained by εὐσκόπως ταῖς ἐπιβολαῖς, with τοῖς δὲ this is not added, so that in the first case ἀπηνητηκέναι = "to have met," in the second = "to have turned out"; cf. κατὰ νοῦν ἀπαντηῆσαι § 66.

Conybeare takes ἐπιβολαῖς = "the points raised." But the regular use of the word in Philo seems to be "aim" or mental feel sure that they have attained their object, the speaker in the effectiveness with which his discourse has carried out his aims, the audience in the substance of what they have heard,<sup>a</sup> universal applause arises showing a general pleasure in the prospect of what is still to follow. Then the President rises and 80 sings a hymn composed as an address to God, either a new one of his own composition or an old one by poets of an earlier day who have left behind them hymns in many measures and melodies, hexameters<sup>b</sup> and iambs, lyrics suitable for processions or in libations and at the altars, or for the chorus whilst standing or dancing, with careful metrical arrangements to fit the various evolutions.<sup>c</sup> After him all the others take their turn as they are arranged and in the proper order while all the rest listen in complete silence except when they have to chant the closing lines or refrains, for then they all lift up their voices, men and women alike. When everyone 81 has finished his hymn the young men bring in the tables mentioned a little above on which is set the truly purified<sup>d</sup> meal of leavened bread seasoned with effort of some kind. Cf. e.g. τὰς . . . τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπιβολὰς τε καὶ ὀρμὰς Mos. i. 26, κατὰ τὴν ἰδίαν ἐπιβολήν ("of his own motion") De Som. i. 1.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 79-81

<sup>b</sup> For the use of ἔπη for hexameter verse in particular see examples in Stephanus, but it is no doubt permissible to take it = "verses," simply in agreement with τριμέτρων.

<sup>c</sup> Conybeare translates the last four words "deftly proportioned for turning and returning." On these hymns in general see App. p. 524.

<sup>d</sup> Conybeare "all-purest." The epithet seems strange, since it is followed at once by the statement that the shewbread in purity ranked above it. No one has suggested, and I only do it with hesitation, that the negative before παναγέστατον, as often, has fallen out.

PHILO

- οψήματος ἀλῶν, οἷς ὕσσωπος ἀναμέμικται, δι' αἰδῶ τῆς ἀνακειμένης ἐν τῷ ἀγίῳ προνάῳ ἱερᾶς τραπέζης· ἐπὶ γὰρ ταύτης εἰσὶν ἄρτοι καὶ ἄλλες ἄνευ ἡδυσμάτων, ἄζυμοι μὲν οἱ ἄρτοι, ἀμιγείς δὲ
- 82 οἱ ἄλλες. προσήκον γὰρ ἦν τὰ μὲν ἀπλούστατα καὶ εἰλικρινέστατα τῇ κρατίστη τῶν ἱερέων ἀπονεμηθῆναι μερίδι λειτουργίας ἀθλον, τοὺς δὲ ἄλλους τὰ μὲν ὅμοια ζηλοῦν, ἀπέχεσθαι δὲ τῶν αὐτῶν,<sup>1</sup> ἵνα ἔχῃσι προνομίαν οἱ κρείττονες.
- 83 XI. Μετὰ δὲ τὸ δεῖπνον τὴν ἱερὰν ἄγουσι παννυχίδα. ἄγεται δὲ ἡ παννυχὶς τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· ἀνίστανται πάντες ἀθροοί, καὶ κατὰ μέσον τὸ συμπόσιον δύο γίνονται τὸ πρῶτον χοροί, ὁ μὲν ἀνδρῶν, ὁ δὲ γυναικῶν· ἡγεμῶν δὲ καὶ ἕξαρχος
- [485] αἰρεῖται καθ' ἑκάτερον ἐντιμότητός τε καὶ ἐμ-
- 84 μελέστατος. εἶτα ᾄδουσι πεποιημένους ὕμνους εἰς τὸν θεὸν πολλοῖς μέτροις καὶ μέλεσι, τῇ μὲν συνηχοῦντες, τῇ δὲ καὶ ἀντιφώνοις ἁρμονίαις ἐπιχειρονομοῦντες καὶ ἐπορχούμενοι, καὶ ἐπιθειάζοντες τοτὲ μὲν τὰ προσόδια, τοτὲ δὲ τὰ στάσιμα, στροφάς τε τὰς ἐν χορείᾳ<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀντιστροφὰς ποιού-
- 85 μενοι. εἶτα ὅταν ἑκάτερος τῶν χορῶν<sup>3</sup> ἰδίᾳ καὶ καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἐστιαθῆ, καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς βακχεῖαις ἀκράτου σπάσαντες τοῦ θεοφιλοῦς, ἀναμίγνυνται καὶ γίνονται χορὸς εἰς ἕξ ἀμφοῖν, μίμημα τοῦ πάλαι συστάντος κατὰ τὴν ἐρυθρὰν
- 86 θάλασσαν ἕνεκα τῶν θαυματουργηθέντων ἐκεῖ. τὸ

<sup>1</sup> So the Armenian. mss. τῶν ἄρτων.

<sup>2</sup> So the Armenian. mss. χρεῖα.

<sup>3</sup> mss. ἀνδρῶν. One however has τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἰδίᾳ καὶ τῶν

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 81-85

salt mixed with hyssop, out of reverence for the holy table enshrined in the sacred vestibule of the temple on which lie loaves and salt without condiments, the loaves unleavened and the salt unmixed.<sup>a</sup> For it was 82 meet that the simplest and purest food should be assigned to the highest caste, namely the priests, as a reward for their ministry, and that the others while aspiring to similar privileges should abstain from seeking the same as they and allow their superiors to retain their precedence.

XI. After the supper they hold the sacred vigil 83 which is conducted in the following way. They rise up all together and standing in the middle of the refectory form themselves first into two choirs, one of men and one of women, the leader and precentor chosen for each being the most honoured amongst them and also the most musical. Then they sing 84 hymns to God composed of many measures and set to many melodies, sometimes chanting together, sometimes taking up the harmony antiphonally, hands and feet keeping time in accompaniment, and rapt with enthusiasm reproduce sometimes the lyrics of the procession, sometimes of the halt and of the wheeling and counter-wheeling of a choric dance.

Then when each choir has separ- 85 ately done its own part in the feast, having drunk as in the Bacchic rites of the strong wine of God's love they mix and both together become a single choir, a copy of the choir set up of old beside the Red Sea in honour of the wonders there wrought.

<sup>a</sup> The LXX though not the Hebrew prescribes salt with the shewbread. See Mos. ii. 104.

γυναικῶν ἰδίᾳ, which Mangey has. χορῶν adopted by both Cohn and Conybeare is from the Armenian.

PHILO

- γὰρ πέλαγος προστάξει θεοῦ τοῖς μὲν σωτηρίας αἴτιον τοῖς δὲ πανωλεθρίας γίνεται· ῥαγέντος μὲν γὰρ καὶ βιαίους ἀνακοπαῖς ὑποσυρέντος καὶ ἑκατέρωθεν ἐξ ἐναντίας οἶα τειχῶν παγέντων, τὸ μεθόριον διάστημα εἰς λεωφόρον ὁδὸν καὶ ξηρὰν πᾶσαν ἀνατμηθὲν εὐρύνετο, δι' ἧς ὁ λεὼς ἐπέξενυσεν ἄχρι τῆς ἀντιπέραν ἡπείρου πρὸς τὰ μετέωρα παραπεμφθεῖς· ἐπιδραμόντος δὲ ταῖς παλιρροίαις καὶ τοῦ μὲν ἔνθεν τοῦ δὲ ἔνθεν εἰς τὸ χερσωθὲν ἔδαφος ἀναχθέντος, οἱ ἐπακολουθήσαντες τῶν
- 87 πολεμίων κατακλυσθέντες διαφθείρονται. τοῦτο δὲ ἰδόντες καὶ παθόντες, ὁ λόγου καὶ ἐννοίας καὶ ἐλπίδος μείζον ἔργον ἦν, ἐνθουσιῶντές τε ἄνδρες ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναῖκες, εἰς γενόμενοι χορός, τοὺς εὐχαριστηρίους ὕμνους εἰς τὸν σωτήρα θεὸν ἦδον, ἐξάρχοντος τοῖς μὲν ἀνδράσι Μωυσέως τοῦ προφήτου, ταῖς δὲ γυναίξι Μαριάμ τῆς προφήτιδος.
- 88 Τούτῳ μάλιστα ἀπεικονισθεῖς ὁ τῶν θεραπευτῶν καὶ θεραπευτρίδων, μέλεσιν ἀντήχοις καὶ ἀντιφώνοις πρὸς βαρὺν ἦχον τῶν ἀνδρῶν ὁ γυναικῶν ὀξύς ἀνακιρνάμενος, ἑναρμόνιον συμφωνίαν ἀποτελεῖ καὶ μουσικὴν ὄντως· πάγκαλα μὲν τὰ νοήματα, πάγκαλοι δὲ αἱ λέξεις, σεμνοὶ δὲ οἱ χορευταί· τὸ δὲ τέλος καὶ τῶν νοημάτων καὶ τῶν λέξεων καὶ
- 89 τῶν χορευτῶν εὐσέβεια. μεθυσθέντες οὖν ἄχρι πρωΐας τὴν καλὴν ταύτην μέθην, οὐ καρηβαροῦντες ἢ καταμύοντες, ἀλλὰ διεγηγερμένοι μᾶλλον ἢ ὅτε παρεγένοντο εἰς τὸ συμπόσιον, τὰς τε ὄψεις καὶ ὄλον τὸ σῶμα πρὸς τὴν ἕω στάντες,<sup>1</sup> ἐπὶ θεάσωνται τὸν ἥλιον ἀνίσχοντα, τὰς χεῖρας ἀνατείναντες εἰς

<sup>1</sup> The construction is very strange. Cohn suggests καθιστάντες. Perhaps σταθέντες.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 86-89

For at the command of God the sea became a source 86 of salvation to one party and of perdition to the other.
As it broke in twain and withdrew under the violence of the forces which swept it back there rose on either side, opposite to each other, the semblance of solid <sup>a</sup> walls, while the space thus opened between them broadened into a highway smooth and dry throughout on which the people marched under guidance right on until they reached the higher ground on the opposite mainland. But when the sea came rushing in with the returning tide, and from either side passed over the ground where dry land had appeared the pursuing enemy were submerged and perished. This 87 wonderful sight and experience, an act transcending word and thought and hope, so filled with ecstasy both men and women that forming a single choir they sang hymns of thanksgiving to God their Saviour, the men led by the prophet Moses and the women by the prophetess Miriam.

It is on this model above all that the choir of the 88 Therapeutae of either sex, note in response to note and voice to voice, the treble of the women blending with the bass of the men, create an harmonious concert, music in the truest sense. Lovely are the thoughts, lovely the words and worthy of reverence the choristers, and the end and aim of thoughts, words and choristers alike is piety. Thus they con- 89 tinue till dawn, drunk with this drunkenness in which there is no shame, then not with heavy heads or drowsy eyes but more alert and wakeful than when they came to the banquet, they stand with their faces and whole body turned to the east and when they see the sun rising they stretch their hands

<sup>a</sup> Or "congealed."

PHILO

[486] οὐρανὸν εὐημερίαν καὶ | ἀλήθειαν ἐπέυχονται καὶ ὀξύωπιαν λογισμοῦ· καὶ μετὰ τὰς εὐχὰς εἰς τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστος σεμνεία ἀναχωροῦσι, πάλιν τὴν συνήθη φιλοσοφίαν ἐμπορευσόμενοι καὶ γεωργήσοντες.

90 Θεραπευτῶν μὲν δὴ περί τοσαῦτα θεωρίαν ἀσπασαμένων φύσεως καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῇ καὶ ψυχῇ μόνη βιωσάντων, οὐρανοῦ μὲν καὶ κόσμου πολιτῶν, τῷ δὲ πατρὶ καὶ ποιητῇ τῶν ὅλων γνησίως συσταθέντων ὑπ' ἀρετῆς, ἣτις <θεοῦ><sup>1</sup> φιλίαν αὐτοῖς προξένησεν οἰκειότατον γέρας καλοκάγαθίας προσθεῖσα, πάσης ἄμεινον εὐτυχίας, ἐπ' αὐτὴν ἀκρότητα φθάνον εὐδαιμονίας.

<sup>1</sup> An explanatory genitive is perhaps required. But I do not understand why Cohn (Hermes, 1916, p. 91) summarily rejects the more natural αὐτοῦ.

---

<sup>a</sup> As the Therapeutae would naturally, like the Essenes (cf. Quod Omn. Prob. 80), deal only with the theological side of up to heaven and pray for bright days and knowledge of the truth and the power of keen sighted thinking. And after the prayers they depart each to his private sanctuary once more to ply the trade and till the field of their wonted philosophy.

THE CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, 89-90

So much then for the Therapeutae, who have taken 90 to their hearts the contemplation of nature and what it has to teach,<sup>a</sup> and have lived in the soul alone, citizens of Heaven and the world, presented <sup>b</sup> to the Father and Maker of all by their faithful sponsor Virtue, who has procured for them God's friendship and added a gift going hand in hand with it, true excellence of life, a boon better than all good fortune and rising to the very summit of felicity.

physic, I think this must be what is referred to by τῶν ἐν αὐτῇ. Elsewhere the phrase seems to mean the contents of the natural world. I should like to omit τῶν and translate "lived in it and the soul alone."

<sup>b</sup> The conjunction with προϋξένησεν shows clearly that συσταθέντες is here used in the quite common sense of "commended" rather than as Conybeare "established."

ON THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

(DE AETERNITATE MUNDI)

INTRODUCTION TO DE AETERNITATE MUNDI

AMONG the works of Philo this is certainly the one whose genuineness can be most reasonably doubted. It is not mentioned in Eusebius's list, and the only external evidence for it so far as I know is that it has always been included in the Philonian corpus. The internal evidence, the resemblance to Philo's style and language, has been dealt with by Cumont, and though certainly strong, particularly when we remember how different the subject-matter is from that of the rest, it is not I think as overwhelming as in the case of the De Vita Contemplativa. In fact while if that work came before us as of unknown authorship I should without hesitation set it down as Philo's, I should not feel the same certainty about the De Aeternitate.

The belief that the work is non-Philonic rests chiefly I think on the authority of Bernays. My confidence in his judgement is not increased by observing that he says the same of the Quod Omnis Probus and the De Providentia. He does not anywhere formulate his reasons for rejection and one or two of those casually mentioned are trivial. But on p. 45 he notes the phrase ὁπαρὸς θεός as one which no orthodox Jew could have used of the Cosmos. Cumont perhaps makes somewhat too light of this objection. For Philo in the body of his work nowhere, I think, speaks of the Cosmos as a God. It is true indeed that he twice at least calls the stars gods <sup>a</sup> and quite often divine beings. Also his chief care seems to be not so much that they should not be called gods as that they should not be recognized as primal or sovereign gods, and perhaps we cannot fairly reason from the numberless heavenly bodies to the Cosmos itself. If regarded as a god at all its godship would be unique and certainly tend to endanger monotheism. It must be admitted that taken by itself this is some argument against the genuineness.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

But the most important objection at first sight to the Philonic authorship, though I am not sure that Bernays ever definitely mentions it, lies not in any particular phrase but in the views displayed passim on the question under discussion. Philo in his other works has denounced the doctrine that the world is uncreated and indestructible,<sup>b</sup> in this book he appears to maintain that theory.

My own view is that a distinction should be made between the earlier part up to the first sentence of § 20 and the rest. Up to § 20 the author is no doubt speaking himself. In § 20 he states that out of respect for the divine Cosmos the opinions which maintain that it is uncreated and eternal should take prece-

<sup>a</sup> De Op. 27, Spec. Leg. i. 19.

<sup>b</sup> De Op. 7, De Som. ii. 283, cf. De Conf. 114. But the form in which he understood its destructibility is given in De Dec. 58. "For the world has become what it is, and its becoming is the beginning of its destruction, even though by the providence of God it be made immortal," i.e. he held to the doctrine of the Timaeus 41 A with regard to the lesser gods, and belongs to those who in Quis Rerum 246 are spoken of as declaring "that though by nature destructible it will never be destroyed, being held together by a bond of superior strength, namely the will of its Maker."

PHILO

dence. And from that point we have an account of the various arguments used by the advocates of that opinion, ending with the statement that in the sequel he will give an account of the arguments on the other side. In describing the arguments for the eternity of the Cosmos he puts them forth with such gusto and denounces the opponents so vigorously that at first sight anyone would suppose that he is giving us his own conviction. But it is Philo's way to reproduce with all his vigour opinions and doctrines which he is really going to controvert later. Observe the misleading way in which the views of the unphilosophical are described in Quod Omn. Prob. 6-10 and the vigorous advocacy of the champions of the senses in Spec. Leg. i. 337-343. So when I read in De Aet. 35 and 49 that some argument must be "clear to everyone" or in § 69 "that the foolish imaginations of the opponents have been refuted" I do not feel sure that Philo might not talk very differently when he gives to each point the opposition which he promises in his final words.

When we turn to the first twenty sections we have the following expressions of the author's opinions. (1) Nothing is generated from the non-existent and nothing can be destroyed into non-existence. (2) Plato's statement that the world was created and indestructible is not to be explained away. (3) When Aristotle said that it was uncreated and indestructible he spoke "piously and religiously." (4) The Cosmos is a God.<sup>a</sup> With the fourth I have <sup>a</sup> Though it should be noted that in the only place in §§ 1-20 where this is stated apart from the citation from Aristotle θεόν is an insertion. The MSS. have only τὸν or τὸ ὄπαρόν. Still I think the insertion is practically certain.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

dealt already. As to the third, the words that follow show that "piously and religiously" apply to indestructible rather than to uncreated. Philo in his later days would certainly denounce those who put the divine beings in heaven on a level with idols.<sup>a</sup> The second is quite in the spirit of the other writings in which the Timaeus is a sort of Gospel whose meaning is not to be tampered with, and it is quite opposed to the Peripatetic view put forward in § 27, which while citing the Timaeus to show the indestructibility declares that the uncreatedness must be postulated on the general grounds that γένεσις and φθορά are inseparable. As to the first, there are several places where Philo speaks of God and indeed parenthood as creating the existing from the non-existent, e.g. Spec. Leg. ii. 225,<sup>b</sup> but these are merely concessions to popular ideas and could not Philo have pleaded that the αἰσθητὸς κόσμος was created out of the eternal νοητός? In fact it seems to me that judging from the sections in which the author gives us hints of his own view the differences from the opinions expressed in the bulk of Philo's work are not on the whole vital, and even if this statement is an exaggeration, why should Philo be refused the right of developing his creed as Plato and Aristotle did? On the whole I feel that this objection to the genuineness breaks down and if it does the balance of argument as a whole seems to be in favour of the authenticity.

<sup>a</sup> So I have translated χειροκμήτων. It is the usual sense in Philo, and in De Dec. 66 he emphasizes the minor guilt of worshipping the heavenly bodies, compared with worshipping idols. But perhaps better "human works" as compared with those of God.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. also Mos. ii. 267, De Som. i. 76, Spec. Leg. iv. 187.

PHILO

As to the sections after 20 to the end, if I am right in thinking that the expressions of confidence in the arguments adduced and the denunciation of opponents are rather echoes of the opinions reproduced than the convinced opinions of the author, it might be thought that this shows that all this part is little more than a matter of scissors and paste as Bernay's commentary sometimes seems to hold. But I do not think this would be a just conclusion. Philo can throw himself with great gusto into retailing arguments with which he does not necessarily agree, but he can at the same time introduce phraseology and illustrations of his own. There is one treatise extant which he tells us he has read and which no doubt he used, that of Ocellus Lucanus.<sup>a</sup> There are passages in the De Aeternitate which can be paralleled with this in substance but with no very close resemblance in language. In the account of Critolaus's argument in §§ 55-69, while we may suppose that Critolaus spoke with scorn of the Stoic appeal to myths, the length at which this attack is developed and many of the expressions in it savour of Philo himself, and in particular the complaint in § 56 that the myth-makers have used the seduction of metre and rhythm has a close resemblance to a similar complaint in Spec. Leg. i. 28. Also the panegyric on the eternal youthfulness of the earth in §§ 63 f. is very much in the vein of the description of the world's wonders elsewhere,<sup>b</sup> if we make allowance for the fact that here it is the earth only and not the Cosmos which is extolled. In the concluding thirty-three sections in which he reproduces Theophrastus's

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 525.

<sup>b</sup> Mos. i. 212, Spec. Leg. i. 34, De Praem. 41.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

account of the four arguments adduced by the Stoics against the creation of the world and then Theophrastus's refutation of the same the substance no doubt is what it claims to be, but I cannot help suspecting that the irrelevant story of the elephants in §§ 128, 129, the quotation from Pindar in § 121, the account from the Timaeus of Atlantis in § 141, and perhaps the allusions to the same book at the end belong to Philo and not to Theophrastus.

As I have said in the Preface, the value of the De Aeternitate is to a Philonist very little. It contributes hardly anything to the body of thought which has kept his name famous, but its value for the history of Greek philosophy is surely very considerable. We know apart from him the opinions held by the long series of Greek philosophers on this primal question of how the universe came to be, but very little of the grounds on which their opinions were formed, and hardly anything outside this treatise<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> I should not omit to mention the theory propounded by Cumont, pp. xi-xv. Cumont, who considers that the author throughout maintains that the Cosmos is ἀγένητος as well as ἀφθαρτος, understands him to mean that it is ἀγένητος κατὰ χρόνον, i.e. that it was created from everlasting. I do not feel competent to judge whether the evidence he cites is convincing, but anyhow I cannot see that anywhere in the first twenty sections does the author assert that it is ἀγένητος. Naturally we should conclude from these sections that his sympathies are with Plato, who, he says, meant what he says, viz. that it is γενητός and ἀφθαρτος, in the sense of φθαρτός, ἀλλ' οὐ φθαρησόμενος. Whether in the sequel promised in the last section he brought out either this solution or that which Cumont indicates seems to me doubtful. The word προτέρους instead of πρώτους in § 20 suggests that the only subject treated in either half of the essay was the controversy between the Stoics and Peripatetics, any third hypothesis being ignored for the occasion.

PHILO

of the detailed arguments used by disputants on either side. From this point of view it seems strange to me that the work had been so little noticed and that no really complete commentary exists to elucidate it.

The following is an analysis of the treatise.

After stating the duty of invoking God's blessing on so important a discussion and an acknowledgment that unpurified humanity cannot hope for certainty (1-2) we have to define the terms κόσμος and φθορά. The former is used in three different senses, but that accepted in this book is the Cosmos consisting of heaven and earth and living creatures in or on it; by φθορά we do not understand annihilation in the strict sense, which is impossible, but resolution into a single conformation or "confusion as when things are broken and shattered" (3-6). Three views are held, (a) that of Democritus, Epicurus and most Stoics, that it is created and destructible; (b) Aristotle's and perhaps before him the Pythagoreans', that it is uncreated and indestructible (7-12); and (c) Plato's, though the meaning of his words have been disputed, that it is created and indestructible (13-16), a view attributed by some to Hesiod and also to be found in Genesis (17-19).

Philo considers that the second hypothesis as worthier of the divine Cosmos should take precedence of the first, and the rest of the treatise is occupied in stating the case for this. The first argument is that as destruction is always due to some cause within or without the body destroyed neither of these is possible for the Cosmos (20-27). The second argument is that compound bodies are compounded in an unnatural order and their destruction means that their elements return to their natural order, but the Cosmos is in its natural order (28-34). The third is that everything seeks to preserve its own nature, but the parts of the universe such as vegetable or animal life have not the power to do so ; the Universe seeks the same and has the power, for each part when destroyed goes to feed some other part (35-38). The fourth introduces a theological thought ; assuming that the destruction of the Cosmos if it is destroyed must be the work of God, it is asked what motive God can have for doing so (39-44). The fifth begins a polemic against the Stoic theory of a periodical conflagration followed by a periodical reconstruction and argues that this involves destruction of the divine heavenly bodies and even of the world's soul, providence (45-51). The sixth is based on the assumption that time has no beginning or end, and since time is the measurement of the world's movement that also must have no beginning or end (52-54).

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

Up to this point the arguments have been ascribed to (presumably) the Peripatetic school in general. We now come to those attributed to particular persons, beginning with Critolaus. His first point is that if the world was created the human race was also, i.e. the original man must have been produced in some other way than by human parentage. This argument, at any rate as represented here, turns mainly into a denunciation of the story of the Spartoi who sprang from the soil fully armed (55-60). It is pointed out that if men were once produced from the earth they would be still, for earth is clearly as prolific as ever (61-64). Other absurdities in the story are noted, with the conclusion that the reproduction of men has gone on from everlasting, that the human race is everlasting and therefore the world of which it is a part (65-69). The second argument attributed to him is put very shortly, namely that the existence of all that exists is caused by the Cosmos and therefore it must be the cause of its own existence (70); also that a created world, according to the analogy of other created things, would be originally imperfect, then grow to perfection and ultimately decline, a view which is denounced as a blasphemy against the perfection of the Cosmos (71-73). Again the three things which cause death to living creatures, disease, age and privation cannot affect the Cosmos (74). The Stoics themselves admit that fate or the chain of causation has neither beginning nor end and why should not the Cosmos considering its nature be put in the same category (75)?

PHILO

We pass on to the opinions of Stoics, notably Boethus, who did not accept the common Stoic doctrine of conflagration and reconstruction. The argument of §§ 20-27 is restated with the addition that if there is nothing internal or external to destroy the Cosmos, the destruction must be caused by something non-existing and this is unthinkable (76-78). Three possible methods of destruction, dismemberment, destruction of the prevailing quality and amalgamation or "confusion" are declared to be inapplicable to the Cosmos (79-82). Further the doctrine of ἐκπύρωσις implies the inactivity during that period of God, whose perpetual activity as soul of the world is laid down by the Stoics themselves (83-84). This leads to a close examination of the conflagration theory. The elements of fire as we know it are live coal, the flame and the light, and the destruction of the substance of the universe will be the destruction of the last two also, and nothing will remain to make the reconstruction possible (85-88). The Stoics meet this by supposing that some fire will remain at the end of the period, but that is inconsistent with what has just been shown (89-93). Chrysippus has said that the fire is the seed of the new world, but it is living things which produce seed, not those which are destroyed as the world on this theory is supposed to be (94-96). Also seed does not generate by itself, and the sustenance which seed receives from the earth will be absent when the world is resolved into fire (97-99). Things too generated by seed grow larger while the reconstructed Cosmos will occupy less space than the fire which will expand into the void (100-103). To return to more general arguments, everything has its opposite, but when everything is fire the qualities opposite to those of fire will be non-existent (104-105). As other causes of destruction are ruled out the destruction would be caused by God, and this is blasphemy (106). The selection of fire as the sole element into which the Cosmos is resolved contradicts the equality of reciprocation which exists between the elements as they pass from one into each other (107-112). Another conception is then given of the methods through which destruction takes place, namely addition, subtraction, transposition and transmutation, and each of these is declared to be impossible (113-116).

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

The rest of the treatise is taken up with matter drawn from Theophrastus. Theophrastus had stated at length four points which weighed especially with the Stoics and had also given at length his own answer to each (117). The first of these four points is that if the world had existed from everlasting it would by now have been reduced to a level surface through the action of rain (118-119). The second is that it will not exist for everlasting since the diminution of the sea as shown by the emergence of islands like Delos formerly submerged indicates that the other elements will be gradually destroyed (120-123). The third is directed to proving that it is destructible because all four elements can be shown to be destructible and if so the whole is destructible (124-126). Appended to this is a short disquisition on the "lame-ness" of fire, which cannot exist without the support of fuel, illustrated with a somewhat irrelevant anecdote about elephants crushing the snakes which suck their blood (127-129). The fourth like the first seeks to prove that the world has not been from everlasting, because if so mankind was from everlasting, whereas the arts which are necessary to human life are known to be comparatively recently invented (130-131). Theophrastus's answers to these are as follows. The first is met by suggesting that though the mountains suffer loss through the action of rain, this is replaced by new accretions, but still more by a theory that they are originally heaved up by the action of fire and that this same power keeps their main body permanent (132-137). The answer to the second is that the sea is not diminished because the emergence of some islands is compensated by the submersion of others, notably Atlantis (138-142). The third is disposed of as a fallacy since it is only if all the parts of a thing are destroyed at once that we can argue from the destructibility of the parts to that of the whole (143-144). As to the fourth, while it is admitted that the inventors of the arts as we have them are comparatively recent, there have been partial destructions by fire and flood in which the arts perished with the majority of mankind but were subsequently reinvented (145-149). The treatise ends with a promise to give the answers made by the opponents to the several arguments (150).

PHILO

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

ΠΕΡΙ ΑΦΘΑΡΣΙΑΣ ΚΟΣΜΟΥ

[487]

<sup>1</sup> I. Ἐπὶ μὲν παντὸς ἀδήλου καὶ σπουδαίου πράγματος θεὸν καλεῖν ἄξιον, διότι ἀγαθὸς ἐστὶ γεννητῆς καὶ οὐδὲν ἀδηλον παρ' αὐτῷ τὴν τῶν ὄλων ἀκριβεστάτην ἐπιστήμην εἰληχότι, πρὸς δὲ τὸν ὑπὲρ ἀφθαρσίας τοῦ κόσμου λόγον ἀναγκαιότατον· οὔτε γὰρ ἐν αἰσθητοῖς παντελέστερόν τι τοῦ κόσμου οὔτε ἐν νοητοῖς θεοῦ τελεώτερον, αἰεὶ δ' αἰσθήσεως ἡγεμῶν νοῦς καὶ νοητὸν αἰσθητοῦ, τὰ δὲ τῶν ὑπηκόων παρ' ἡγεμόνος τε καὶ ἐπιστάτου νόμος<sup>1</sup> φιλοπευστεῖν, οἷς ἐπέφυκε πόθος ἀληθείας πλείων.

<sup>2</sup> εἰ μὲν οὖν ἐνασκηθέντες τοῖς φρονήσεως καὶ σωφροσύνης καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς δόγμασιν ἀπερρυψάμεθα τὰς ἐκ παθῶν καὶ νοσημάτων κηλίδας, οὐκ ἂν ἴσως ἀπηξίωσεν ὁ θεὸς ἄκρως κεκαθαρμέναις καὶ φαιδρυναμέναις αὐγοειδῶς<sup>2</sup> ψυχαῖς ἐπιστήμην τῶν οὐρανίων ἢ δι' ὄνειράτων ἢ διὰ χρησμῶν<sup>3</sup> ἢ διὰ σημείων ἢ τεράτων ὑφηγεῖσθαι· ἐπεὶ δὲ τοὺς ἀφροσύνης καὶ ἀδικίας καὶ τῶν ἄλλων κακιῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πόνος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. αὐτοειδῶς.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. χρήσεων.

<sup>a</sup> Bernays gives several references to the practice of invoking God at the beginning of a discussion, and clearly Philo has in mind Timaeus 27 c, where Socrates calls on Timaeus to speak after invoking the Gods, and Timaeus replies that

ON THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD

I. In dealing with every obscure and weighty 1 question it is well to call upon God, because He is good, because He is the Creator, and possessed as He is of absolutely exact knowledge of all things nothing is obscure to Him. But it is particularly necessary when the subject in question is the indestructibility of the world.<sup>a</sup> For nothing in the realm of the sensible is more complete in every way than the world, nothing in the intelligible realm more perfect than God, and intelligence always takes command of sense and the intelligible of the sensible. And those in whom the love of truth is implanted in greater measure observe the law that knowledge about the subjects must be sought from the Commander and Ruler. Now, if schooled in the doctrines 2 of wisdom and temperance and every virtue we had scoured away the stains of the passions and soul-distempers, perhaps God would not have refused to impart the knowledge of things heavenly through dreams or oracles or signs or wonders to souls thoroughly purged and bright and radiant. But since we bear upon us deep ingrained the imprints every sensible person does so when speaking on any matter great or small, and he will certainly do so when speaking about the universe, whether it is created or uncreated (ἢ γέγονεν ἢ καὶ ἀγενές ἐστίν).

ἀναμαζάμενοι [στοχασμούς<sup>1</sup>· καὶ] τύπους δυσεκ-[488] πλύτους | ἔχομεν, ἀγαπᾶν χρή, κἂν εἰκόσι (στοχασμοῖς) δι' αὐτῶν μίμημά τι τῆς ἀληθείας ἀνευρίσκωμεν.

3 "Ἄξιον οὖν τοὺς ζητοῦντας εἰ ἄφθαρτος ὁ κόσμος, ἐπειδὴ καὶ "φθορὰ" καὶ "κόσμος" τῶν πολ-λαχῶς λεγομένων ἐστὶν ἐκότερον, πρῶτον ἐρευνῆσαι περὶ τῶν ὀνομάτων, ἵνα καθ' ὃ σημαίνόμενον<sup>2</sup> νυνὶ [καὶ] τέτακται διαγνωθῆμεν· ἀλλ' οὐχ ὅσα δηλοῦται<sup>3</sup> (πάντα) καταριθμητέον, ἀλλ' ὅσα πρὸς τὴν παροῦ-4 σαν διδασκαλίαν χρήσιμα.

II. λέγεται
 τοίνυν ὁ κόσμος καθ' ἓν μὲν [πρῶτον] σύστημα ἐξ οὐρανοῦ καὶ ἄστρον κατὰ περιοχὴν (καὶ) γῆς καὶ τῶν ἐπ' αὐτῆς ζώων καὶ φυτῶν, καθ' ἕτερον δὲ μόνος οὐρανός, εἰς ὃν ἀπιδὼν Ἄναξαγόρας πρὸς τὸν πυθόμενον, ἧς ἔνεκα αἰτίας ταλαιπωρεῖται διανυκτερεύων<sup>4</sup> ὑπαιθρος, ἀπεκρίνατο "τοῦ τὸν κόσμον θεάσασθαι," τὰς χορείας καὶ περιφορὰς τῶν ἀστέρων αἰνιπτόμενος, κατὰ δὲ τρίτον, ὡς δοκεῖ τοῖς Στωϊκοῖς, διήκων<sup>5</sup> ἄχρι τῆς ἐκπυρώσεως, οὐσία

<sup>1</sup> Bernays μολυσμούς. Cumont retains στοχασμούς where it is in the mss., but does not attempt to make sense of it. I have followed Cohn's transference of the word, but would prefer to read εἰκόσι καὶ στοχασμοῖς. Cohn in Hermes, 1916, p. 181, says that εἰκότες στοχασμοί is an exceedingly common collocation in Philo, but he gives no examples, and up to the present I have not found any. On the other hand, εἰκότα coupled with πιθανά occurs several times, e.g. στοχασταὶ . . . πιθανῶν καὶ εἰκότων Spec. Leg. i. 61, and it is an established term in rhetoric; cf. also στοχασμοῖς καὶ εἰκασίαις De Som. i. 23.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. σημαίνεται.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. δηλοῦνται.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. τὰ πολλὰ πειρᾶται διανυκτερεύειν. The correction made by Bernays and accepted by Cohn and Cumont is based on Thuc. i. 134. 1 ἵνα μὴ ὑπαιθριος ταλαιπωροῖη.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. διήκων. Bernays and others διήκουσα. The correc-

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 2-4.

of injustice and folly and the other vices we must be content if through a study of probabilities and by our own efforts we may discover some semblance of the truth.

Now the words "world" and "destruction" are 3 both such as are used in many senses and therefore it will be well to open the discussion whether the world is indestructible by examining these terms in order to distinguish under what signification they stand in this case. Still we need not make a complete list of all the meanings they bear but only such as are instructive for our present purpose.

II. In one sense, the world or Cosmos signifies the 4 whole system of heaven and the stars including the earth and the plants and animals thereon; in another sense the heaven only. It was on heaven that Anaxagoras had been gazing, when in answer to the person who asked why he suffered discomfort by spending the whole night under the open sky said he did it in order to contemplate the Cosmos, meaning by Cosmos the choric movements and revolutions of the stars. The third sense, which is approved by the Stoics, is something existing continuously to and through the general conflagration,<sup>a</sup> a substance either

<sup>a</sup> That ἄχρι is here used inclusively is, I think, shown by ἀδιακόσμητος, a condition which only exists during the ἐκπύρωσις (cf. Philo's disquisition on the inclusive use of ἀπό in De Som. ii. 257). I understand Bernays to say that the addition of ἡ ἀδιακ. is inaccurate ("ungenau") according to Stoic doctrine. But Philo implies the same in § 9.

tion to διήκων in preference to διήκουσα seems to have been originally made by Jessen (see note, vol. viii. p. 428) to accord with his canon, that an open vowel is followed by μέχρι instead of ἄχρι in Philo. I do not see why <ό> διήκων (sc. κόσμος) should not be possible.

PHILO

τις ἢ διακεκοσμημένη ἢ ἀδιακόσμητος, οὐ τῆς κινήσεώς φασιν εἶναι τὸν χρόνον διάστημα. νῦν δ' ἐστὶν ἡ σκέψις περὶ κόσμον τοῦ κατὰ τὸ πρῶτον σημαινόμενον, ὃς ἐξ οὐρανοῦ καὶ 5 γῆς καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς ζώων<sup>1</sup> συνέστηκε. λέγεται μέντοι καὶ φθορὰ ἢ τε πρὸς τὸ χεῖρον μεταβολή [λέγεται δὲ] καὶ ἡ ἐκ τοῦ ὄντος ἀναίρεσις παντελής, ἣν καὶ ἀνύπαρκτον ἀναγκαῖον λέγειν· ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος οὐδὲν γίνεται, οὐδ' εἰς τὸ μὴ ὄν φθείρεται·

“ ἔκ τε γὰρ οὐδάμ' ἔοντος ἀμήχανόν ἐστι γενέσθαι [τι] καὶ τ' ἔον ἐξαπολέσθαι ἀνήγυστον καὶ ἄπυστον<sup>2</sup>.”

καὶ ὁ τραγικός·

“ θνήσκει δ' οὐδὲν τῶν γιγνομένων, διακρινόμενον δ' ἄλλο πρὸς ἄλλο<sup>3</sup>
 μορφήν ἑτέραν ἀπέδειξεν.”

6 οὐδέν<sup>4</sup> γε οὕτως ἐστὶν εὐήθες ὡς τὸ ἀπορεῖν, εἰ ὁ κόσμος εἰς τὸ μὴ ὄν φθείρεται, ἀλλ' εἰ δέχεται τὴν ἐκ τῆς διακοσμήσεως μεταβολήν, τὰς ποικίλας μορφὰς στοιχείων τε καὶ συγκριμάτων εἰς μίαν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ιδέα ἀναλυθεὶς ἢ ὥσπερ ἐν τοῖς θλάσμασι καὶ τοῖς κατάγμασι δεξάμενος παντελεῖ σύγχυσιν.

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἐξ ὧν.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἄπυστον.

<sup>3</sup> As a long syllable is required in the anapaestic, Cumont has ἄλλου, Bernays ἄλλω and so in the other places (§§ 30 and 144) where the lines are quoted.

<sup>4</sup> mss. οὐδέ: Bernays and Cumont οὐδεῖς . . . εὐήθης, followed by ὥστε with most mss., though one has τὸ but without ὡς.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 4-6

reduced or not reduced to order, and time, they say, is what measures its movement.<sup>a</sup> Our present discussion is concerned with the world in the first sense, namely the world which consists of heaven and earth and the life on them.<sup>b</sup> The word destruction 5 in one sense means a change for the worse, in another complete removal from existence, and this we must pronounce to be a thing which cannot possibly be, for just as nothing comes into being out of the non-existent, so nothing is destroyed into non-existence.

Nothing from what is not can come to be,
Nor was it ever heard or brought to pass,
That what exists should perish utterly.<sup>c</sup>

So too the tragic poet

Naught that is born can die;
Hither and thither its parts disperse
And take another form.<sup>d</sup>

Nothing in fact is so foolish as to raise the question 6 whether the world is destroyed into non-existence. The point is whether it undergoes a transmutation from its ordered arrangement through the various forms of the elements and their combinations being either resolved into one and the self-same conformation or reduced into complete confusion as things are when broken or shattered.

<sup>a</sup> For this accepted Stoic definition of time cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 141. It is repeated in this treatise, §§ 52 ff., cf. De Op. 26, where it was translated "a measured space determined by the world's movement," which perhaps gives the idea of διάστημα (distance or interval) more exactly.

<sup>b</sup> The stars are regarded as ζῶα.

<sup>c</sup> Stated to be a fragment from Empedocles.

<sup>d</sup> See on § 30.

PHILO

[489] III. | Τριτταὶ δὲ περὶ τοῦ ζητουμένου γεγόνασι
 7 δόξαι, τῶν μὲν αἰδίων τὸν κόσμον φαμένων, ἀγένητόν τε καὶ ἀνώλεθρον, τῶν δὲ ἐξ ἐναντίας γενητόν τε καὶ φθαρτόν· εἰσὶ δ' οἱ παρ' ἑκατέρων ἐκλαβόντες, τὸ μὲν γενητόν παρὰ τῶν ὑστέρων παρὰ δὲ τῶν προτέρων τὸ ἄφθαρτον, μικτὴν δόξαν ἀπέλιπον, γενητόν καὶ ἄφθαρτον οἰθηθέντες αὐτὸν 8 εἶναι. Δημόκριτος μὲν οὖν καὶ Ἐπί-κουρος καὶ ὁ πολὺς ὄμιλος τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς Στοᾶς φιλοσόφων γένεσιν καὶ φθορὰν ἀπολείπουσι τοῦ κόσμου, πλὴν οὐχ ὁμοίως· οἱ μὲν γὰρ πολλοὺς κόσμους ὑπογράφουσιν, ὧν τὴν μὲν γένεσιν ἀλληλοτυπίαῖς καὶ ἐπιπλοκαῖς ἀτόμων ἀνατιθέασι, τὴν δὲ φθορὰν ἀντικοπαῖς καὶ προσράξεσι τῶν γεγονότων· οἱ δὲ Στωικοὶ κόσμον μὲν ἓνα, γενέσεως δ' αὐτοῦ θεὸν αἴτιον, φθορᾶς δὲ μηκέτι θεόν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν ἐν τοῖς οὐσι πυρὸς ἀκαμάτου δύναμιν χρόνων μακραῖς περιόδοις ἀναλύουσιν τὰ πάντα εἰς ἑαυτήν, ἐξ ἧς πάλιν ἀναγέννησιν κόσμου 9 συνίστασθαι προμηθεΐα τοῦ τεχνίτου. δύναται δὲ κατὰ τούτους ὁ μὲν τις κόσμος αἰδῖος, ὁ δὲ τις φθαρτὸς λέγεσθαι, φθαρτὸς μὲν ὁ κατὰ τὴν διακό-σμησιν, αἰδῖος δὲ ὁ κατὰ τὴν ἐκπύρωσιν παλιγγενεσίαις καὶ περιόδοις ἀθανατιζόμενος οὐδέποτε 10 ληγούσας. Ἄριστοτέλης δὲ μήποτ' εὐσεβῶς καὶ ὁσίως ἐνιστάμενος<sup>1</sup> ἀγένητον καὶ ἄφθαρτον ἔφη τὸν κόσμον εἶναι, δεινὴν δὲ ἀθεότητα κατεγίνωσκε τῶν τάναντία διεξιόντων, οἱ τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιστάμενος.

<sup>a</sup> The meaning would be clearer if ἐκπύρ. and διακ. changed places. When we consider the former we see that a world

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 7-10

III. Three views have been put forward on the 7 question before us. Some assert that the world is eternal, uncreated and imperishable. Some on the contrary say that it is created and destructible.
Others draw from both these. From the latter they take the idea of the created, from the former that of the indestructible and so have laid down a composite doctrine to the effect that the world is created 8 and indestructible.

Democritus with Epi- 8
curus and the great mass of Stoic philosophers maintain the creation and destruction of the world but in different ways. The two first named postulate many worlds, the origin of which they ascribe to the mutual impacts and interlacings of atoms and its destruction to the counterblows and collisions sustained by the bodies so formed. The Stoics admit one world only ; God is the cause of its creation but not of its destruction. This is due to the force of the ever-active fire which exists in things and in the course of long cycles of time resolves everything into itself and out of it is constructed a reborn world according to the design of its architect. According 9 to these the world may be called from one point of view an eternal, from another a perishable world ;
thought of as a world reconstructed it is perishable, thought of as subject to the conflagration it is everlasting through the ceaseless rebirths and cycles which render it immortal.<sup>a</sup>

But Aristotle 10
surely showed a pious and religious spirit when in opposition to this view he said that the world was uncreated and indestructible and denounced the shocking atheism of those who stated the contrary has perished. When we see it followed by the latter we recognize that it did not really perish.

PHILO

- χειροκμήτων οὐδὲν ᾠήθησαν διαφέρειν τοσοῦτον ὁρατὸν θεόν, ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ τὸ ἄλλο τῶν πλανήτων καὶ ἀπλανῶν ὡς ἀληθῶς περιέχοντα
- 11 πάνθειον· ἔλεγέ τε, ὡς ἔστιν ἀκούειν, κατακερτομῶν, ὅτι πάλαι μὲν ἐδεδίδει περὶ τῆς οἰκίας, μὴ βιαίοις πνεύμασιν ἢ χειμῶσιν ἐξαισίοις ἢ χρόνῳ ἢ ῥαθυμία τῆς ἀρμοττοῦσης ἐπιμελείας ἀνατραπῆ, νυνὶ δὲ φόβον ἐπικρέμασθαι μείζονα πρὸς τῶν τὸν ἅπαντα κόσμον τῷ λόγῳ καθαιρουμένων.
- 12 ἔνιοι δ' οὐκ Ἀριστοτέλην τῆς δόξης εὐρετὴν λέγουσιν ἀλλὰ τῶν Πυθαγορείων τινάς. ἐγὼ δὲ καὶ Ὀκέλλου συγγράμματι, Λευκανοῦ γένος, ἐπιγραφομένῳ “ Περὶ τῆς τοῦ παντὸς φύσεως ” ἐνέτυχον, ἐν ᾧ ἀγένητόν τε καὶ ἀφθαρτόν οὐκ [490] ἀπεφαίνετο μόνον<sup>1</sup> ἀλλὰ καὶ δι’ ἀποδείξεων | κατασκεύαζε τὸν κόσμον εἶναι.
- 13 IV. Γενητὸν δὲ καὶ ἀφθαρτόν φασιν ὑπὸ Πλάτωνος ἐν Τιμαίῳ δηλοῦσθαι διὰ τῆς θεοπρεποῦς ἐκκλησίας, ἐν ἣ λέγεται πρὸς τοὺς νεωτέρους θεοὺς ὑπὸ τοῦ πρεσβυτάτου καὶ ἡγεμόνος· “ θεοὶ θεῶν, (ῶν) ἐγὼ δημιουργὸς πατήρ τε ἔργων, ἄλυστα ἐμοῦ γε μὴ θέλοντος. τὸ μὲν οὖν δῆ<sup>2</sup> δεθὲν πᾶν λυτόν, τό γε μὴν καλῶς ἀρμοσθὲν καὶ ἔχον εὖ λύειν ἐθέλειν κακοῦ. δι’ ἃ καὶ ἐπίπερ γεγένησθε, ἀθάνατοι μὲν οὐκ ἔστε οὐδ’ ἄλυτοι τὸ πάμπαν, οὔτι γε μὴν λυθήσεσθέ γε, οὐδὲ τεύξεσθε θανάτου μοίρας, τῆς ἐμῆς βουλήσεως μείζονος ἔτι δεσμοῦ καὶ κυριωτέρου λαχόντες ἐκείνων, οἷς ὅτε ἐγίγνεσθε

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μὲν οὖν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. μῆ.

<sup>a</sup> See Introd. p. 175 note a.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 10-13

and held that there was no difference between hand-made idols<sup>a</sup> and that great visible God who embraces the sun and moon and the pantheon as it may be truly called of the fixed and wandering stars. He 11 is reported to have said in bitter mockery that in the past he had feared for his house lest it should be overthrown by violent winds or terrific storms or lapse of time or neglect of proper care. But now he lived under the fear of a greater menace from the theorists who would destroy the whole world.

Some say that the author of this doctrine was not 12 Aristotle but certain Pythagoreans, and I have read a work of Ocellus a Lucanian<sup>b</sup> entitled On the Nature of the Universe, in which he not only stated but sought to establish by demonstrations that it was uncreated and indestructible.

IV. That it is created and indestructible is said to 13 be shown by Plato in the Timaeus<sup>c</sup> in his account of the great assembly of deities in which the younger gods are addressed thus by the eldest and chief. "Gods sprung from gods, the works of which I am the Maker and Father are indissoluble unless I will otherwise. Now all that is bound can be loosed but only the bad would will to loose what is well put together and in good condition. So since you are created beings you are not immortal nor altogether indissoluble, yet you will not be dissolved nor will death be your fate, for in my will you have a greater and mightier bond than those by which you were <sup>b</sup> Ocellus was a Pythagorean of earlier times. The work attributed to him, which is still extant and which Philo alludes to here, belongs to the first or second century B.C. See further App. p. 525.

<sup>c</sup> Tim. 41 A. For other ways of taking the opening words see App. p. 525.

PHILO

- 14 συνεδείσθε.” τινές δὲ οἴονται σοφιζόμενοι κατὰ Πλάτωνα γενητὸν λέγεσθαι τὸν κόσμον οὐ τῷ λαβεῖν γενέσεως ἀρχήν, ἀλλὰ τῷ, εἴπερ ἐγίγνετο, μὴ ἂν ἐτέρως ἢ τὸν εἰρημένον συστήναι τρόπον, ἢ διὰ τὸ ἐν γενέσει καὶ μεταβολῇ τὰ μέρη θεω-
- 15 ρεῖσθαι. βέλτιον δὲ καὶ ἀληθέστερον ὑπονοεῖν τὸ πρότερον, οὐ μόνον ὅτι διὰ παντὸς τοῦ συγγράμματος πατέρα μὲν καὶ ποιητὴν καὶ δημιουργὸν τὸν θεοπλάστην ἐκείνον καλεῖ, ἔργον<sup>1</sup> δὲ καὶ ἔγγονον τουτουὶ<sup>2</sup> τὸν κόσμον, ἀπ’ ἀρχετύπου (καὶ) νοητοῦ παραδείγματος μίμημα αἰσθητὸν, πάνθ’ ὅσα ἐν ἐκείνῳ νοητὰ περιέχοντα αἰσθητὰ ἐν αὐτῷ, τελειότατου πρὸς νοῦν<sup>3</sup> τελειότατον ἐκμα-
- 16 γεῖον πρὸς αἴσθησιν, ἀλλ’ ὅτι καὶ Ἀριστοτέλης ταῦτα μαρτυρεῖ περὶ Πλάτωνος, διὰ τὴν τῆς φιλοσοφίας αἰδῶ μηδὲν ἂν ψευδάμενος, καὶ διότι πιστότερος οὐδεὶς ὑφηγητῆ<sup>4</sup> γνωρίμου μαρτυρεῖν καὶ μάλιστα τοιούτου, ὃς οὐ πάρεργον ἔθετο παιδείαν ἀψικόρῳ ῥαθυμῖα, προσυπερβαλεῖν δὲ σπουδάσας τὰς τῶν παλαιῶν εὐρέσεις ἔνια τῶν

<sup>1</sup> mss. καλλίεργον.

<sup>2</sup> Bernays τουτουὶ, i.e. τοῦ θεοπλάστου.

<sup>3</sup> Bernays νοῦ, see note c.

<sup>4</sup> mss. ὑφηγητῆς.

---

<sup>a</sup> For the first of these explanations Bernays refers to Ar. De Caelo i. 10, 279 b 34: “They (i.e. those who hold that it is indestructible but generated) claim that what they say is analogous to the diagrams drawn by mathematicians; their exposition does not mean that the world ever was generated, but is used for instructional purposes, since it makes things easier to understand, just as the diagram does for those who see it in process of construction” (Guthrie’s translation, who adds that the defence according to Simplicius is “that of Xenocrates and other Platonists”).

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 14-16

bound when you were created." Some hold the 14 notion that when Plato speaks of the world as created he does not mean that it began by being created but that if it had been created it would not have been formed in any other way than that which he describes, or else that he uses the word because the parts of the world are observed to come into being and to be changed.<sup>a</sup>

But this subtlety of 15 theirs is not so good or true an idea as the view before mentioned, not merely because throughout the whole treatise <sup>b</sup> he speaks of the great Framers of deities as the Father and Maker and Artificer and this world as His work and offspring, a sensible copy of the archetypal and intelligible model, embracing in itself as objects of sense all which that model contains as objects of intelligence, an impress <sup>c</sup> for sense perception as absolutely perfect as that is for the mind. Another reason is that this view of Plato's meaning 16 has the testimony of Aristotle, who had too much respect for philosophy to falsify anything. A teacher can have no more trustworthy witness than a disciple and particularly one like Aristotle who did not treat culture as a by-work or with frivolous carelessness, but sought earnestly to transcend the truths discovered by the ancients and so struck out a new <sup>b</sup> Though the reference is to the Timaeus, passim, Bernays notes ἔργον = κόσμος 30 B, περιέχον 31 A and ἔκγονα 50 D. We have also μίμημα παραδείγματος 49 A and ἐκμαγείον 50 C.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps rather "plastic substance" (for receiving imprints), which seems to be the meaning in 50 C, in which case τελειοτάτου will agree with ἐκμαγείον understood rather than as Leisegang (in index) with παραδείγματος. The other is the regular meaning in Philo, but does not suit πρὸς so well. Bernays indeed translates "Abdruck," but he reads νοῦ for νοῦν—i.e. "issuing from a most perfect mind."

PHILO

ἀναγκαιοτάτων εἰς ἕκαστον φιλοσοφίας μέρος και-17 νοτομήσας προσεξεύρετο. V. πατέρα δὲ τοῦ Πλατωνείου δόγματος ἔνιοι νομίζουσι τὸν ποιητὴν Ἡσίοδον, γενητὸν καὶ ἄφθαρτον οἰόμενοι τὸν κόσμον ὑπ' ἐκείνου λέγεσθαι, γενητὸν μὲν, ὅτι φησὶν

“ ἦτοι μὲν πρώτιστα χάος γένητ', αὐτὰρ ἔπειτα γαῖ' εὐρύστερνος, πάντων ἕδος ἀσφαλὲς αἰεί,” ἄφθαρτον δέ, ὅτι διάλυσιν καὶ φθορὰν οὐ μεμή-18 νυκεν αὐτοῦ. χάος δὲ ὁ μὲν Ἀριστοτέλης τόπον οἶεται εἶναι, ὅτι τὸ δεξόμενον ἀνάγκη προῦπο-κείσθαι σώματι, τῶν δὲ Στωικῶν ἔνιοι τὸ ὕδωρ παρὰ τὴν χύσιν τοῦνομα πεποιῆσθαι νομίζοντες.

ὁποτέρως δ' ἂν ἔχοι, τὸ γενητὸν εἶναι τὸν κόσμον ἐναργέστατα παρ' Ἡσιόδῳ μεμῆνυται.

19 μακροῖς δὲ χρόνοις πρότερον ὁ τῶν Ἰουδαίων [491] νομοθέτης Μωυσῆς γενητὸν καὶ ἄφθαρτον ἔφη τὸν κόσμον ἐν ἱεραῖς βίβλοις· εἰσὶ δὲ πέντε, ὧν τὴν πρώτην ἐπέγραψε Γένεσιν, ἐν ἣ ἄρχεται τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· “ Ἐν ἀρχῇ ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν· ἡ δὲ γῆ ἦν ἀόρατος καὶ ἀκατασκεύαστος,” εἶτα προελθὼν ἐν τοῖς ἔπειτα μηνύει πάλιν, ὅτι ἡμέραι καὶ νύκτες καὶ ὧραι καὶ ἐνιαυτοὶ σελήνη τε καὶ ἥλιος, οἱ χρόνου με-

<sup>a</sup> Theogony 116 f.

<sup>b</sup> Ar. Phys. iv. 1, 208 b 29. “Hesiod seems to have been

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 16-19

path by discovering some very vital additions to every part of philosophy. V. Some think 17 that the poet Hesiod is the father of this Platonic doctrine and suppose that he calls the world uncreated and indestructible, uncreated because he says

First Chaos was, and then broad-breasted earth Safe dwelling-place for all for evermore,<sup>a</sup> indestructible because he never declared that it will be dissolved or destroyed. Chaos in Aristotle's 18 opinion is a space because a body must have something there already to hold it,<sup>b</sup> but some of the Stoics suppose that it is water and that the name is derived from its diffusion (χύσις).<sup>c</sup> But whichever of these is right Hesiod very clearly states the view that the world is created and long before 19 Hesiod Moses the lawgiver of the Jews said in the Holy Books that it was created and imperishable. These books are five in number, to the first of which he gave the name of Genesis. In this he begins by saying "In the beginning God made the Heavens and the Earth and the Earth was invisible and without form."<sup>d</sup> Then again he goes on to say in the sequel that "days and nights and seasons and years and the sun and moon whose natural function is to right in putting Chaos first, where he says Chaos was first, then earth ὡς δέον πρῶτον ὑπάρξαι χώραν τοῖς οὐσι διὰ τὸ νομίζων, ὥσπερ οἱ πολλοί, πάντα εἶναι πον καὶ ἐν τόπῳ."

<sup>c</sup> This opinion is attributed to Zeno himself, S. V. F. i. 103, 104.

<sup>d</sup> This remarkable difference in the LXX of Gen. i. 2 from the Hebrew translated in the A.V. "without form and void" (R.V. "waste and void") is compared with Timaeus 51 ἄνόρατον εἶδος τι καὶ ἄμορφον by Bernays, who thinks that the translators had it in mind. He notes also Wisdom xi. 17 κτίσασα τὸν κόσμον ἐξ ἀμόρφου ὕλης.

PHILO

τρήσεως φύσιν ἐδέξαντο,<sup>1</sup> μετὰ τοῦ παντός οὐρανοῦ μοίρας ἀθανάτου λαχόντες διατελοῦσιν ἄφθαρτοι.

- 20 Τοὺς δὲ ἀγένητον καὶ ἄφθαρτον κατασκευάζοντας λόγους ἕνεκα τῆς πρὸς τὸν ὄρατὸν <θεὸν> αἰδοῦς προτέρους τακτέον οἰκείαν ἀρχὴν λαβόντας. ἅπασι τοῖς φθορὰν ἐνδεχομένοις αἰτίαι διτταὶ τῆς ἀπωλείας, ἡ μὲν ἐντός, ἡ δὲ ἐκτός, προϋπόκεινται· σίδηρον γοῦν καὶ χαλκὸν καὶ τὰς τοιουτοτρόπους οὐσίας εὖροις ἂν ἀφανιζόμενας ἐξ ἑαυτῶν μὲν, ὅταν ἐρπηνώδους νοσήματος τρόπον ἰὸς ἐπιδραμῶν διαφάγη, πρὸς δὲ τῶν ἐκτός, ὅταν ἐμπιπραμένης οἰκίας ἢ πόλεως συναναφλεχθεῖσαι τῇ πυρὸς βιαίῳ ῥιπῇ διαλυθῶσιν· ὁμοιοτρόπως δὲ καὶ ζώοις ἐπιγίνεται τελευτὴ νοσήσασι μὲν ἐξ ἑαυτῶν, ὑπὸ δὲ τῶν ἐκτός σφαπτομένοις ἢ καταλενομένοις ἢ ἐμπιπραμένοις ἢ θάνατον οὐ καθαρὸν τὸν δι’
- 21 ἀγχόνης ὑπομένουσιν. εἰ δὴ φθείρεται καὶ κόσμος, ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἤτοι ὑπὸ τινος τῶν ἐκτός ἢ πρὸς τινος τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ διαφθαρήσεται δυνάμεων· ἀμήχανον δ’ ἐκάτερον· ἐκτός μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲν ἐστὶ τοῦ κόσμου, πάντων εἰς τὴν συμπλήρωσιν αὐτοῦ συνεραμι-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn ἔδειξαν. He quotes § 52 below and also De Op. 60 and Spec. Leg. i. 90, and what is closer to this passage Leg. All. i. 2 ἡ γὰρ οὐρανοῦ κίνησις χρόνου φύσιν ἔδειξεν. Still “indicating the nature of the nature of time” is not quite the same as “indicating the nature of the measurement of time.” On the other hand ἐδέξαντο φύσιν, which Bernays translates “die Eigenschaft empfinden,” is a strange expression.

<sup>a</sup> The allusion is no doubt to Gen. viii. 22 E.V. “While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease.”

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 19-21

measure time are together with the whole heaven destined to immortality and continue indestructible." <sup>a</sup>

Respect for that visible God requires that we <sup>20</sup> should begin the discussion in the proper way by setting forth first the arguments which contend that it is uncreated and indestructible. All things which are liable to perish are subject to two fundamental sources of destruction, the external and the internal. Thus iron, brass and similar substances will be found to vanish of themselves when devoured by the rust which courses over them like a creeping sickness <sup>b</sup> ; and also through external agencies, when a house or city is burnt and they too are caught in the flames and dissolved through the violence of the rushing fire. Similarly, too, living creatures die of themselves through disease or through external causes, being slain with the sword or stoned or burnt or suffering the unclean death of hanging. <sup>c</sup> Now if the world is <sup>21</sup> destroyed it will necessarily be through either some force from without or some of those which it contains within itself, and both of these are impossible. For there is nothing outside the world since all things have been brought into contribution to fill it up, and

The LXX text is confused and difficult to translate grammatically, but gives the same meaning that these will continue while the earth lasts, but not that the earth will last. In the words οἱ χρόνοι κτλ. there is also an allusion to Gen. i. 14 "Let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years," which again gives no proof of everlastingness.

<sup>b</sup> A familiar figure with Philo, applied to desire or vice, Quod Det. 110, Spec. Leg. iv. 83, De Dec. 150 and to the spread of famine De Ios. 160 (there called ἐρπήν). See also De Prov. 30.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. De Mut. 62 ἐπ' ἀγρόνην ἦξεν, ἵνα . . . μηδὲ καθαρῶ θανάτῳ τελευτήσῃ.

PHILO

σθέντων· οὕτως γὰρ εἰς τε ἔσται καὶ ὅλος καὶ ἀγήρως, εἰς μὲν διὰ τὸ ἀπολειφθέντων τινῶν ἕτερον ἂν τῷ νῦν ὄντι γενέσθαι ὅμοιον, ὅλος δὲ ἔνεκα τοῦ σύμπασαν τὴν οὐσίαν εἰς αὐτὸν ἐξαναλῶσθαι, ἀγήρως δὲ καὶ ἄνοσος, ἐπειδὴ τὰ νόσοις καὶ γήρα σώματα ἄλωτὰ θερμότησι καὶ ψύξεσι καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις ἐναντιότησι προσεπιπιπούσαις ἕξωθεν ἰσχυρῶς ἀνατρέπεται, ὧν οὐδεμία δύναμις ἀποδράσα κυκλοῦται καὶ ἐπιτίθεται, πασῶν,<sup>1</sup> μηδενὸς ἀποστατοῦντος μέρους, ὀλοκλήρων ἐγκατειλημμένων εἶσω. εἰ δ' ἄρα τί ἐστὶν ἐκτός, πάντως ἂν εἴη κενόν, ἢ ἀπαθὴς φύσις, ἣν ἀδύνατον 22 παθεῖν τι ἢ δρᾶσαι. καὶ μὴν οὐδὲ ὑπὸ τινος αἰτίας διαλυθήσεται τῶν ἐντὸς αὐτοῦ· πρῶτον μὲν, ἐπειδὴ τοῦ ὅλου τὸ μέρος καὶ μείζον ἔσται καὶ κραταιότερον, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀτοπώτατον· ὁ γὰρ κόσμος
 [492] ἀνυπερβλήτῳ κράτει | χρώμενος ἄγει τὰ πάντα μέρη, πρὸς μηδενὸς αὐτῶν ἀγόμενος· ἔπειτα διότι<sup>2</sup> διττῶν οὐσῶν φθορᾶς αἰτιῶν, τῆς μὲν ἐντὸς τῆς δὲ ἐκτός, ἃ τὴν ἐτέραν οἶά τε<sup>3</sup> ὑπομένειν,
 23 δεκτικὰ καὶ τῆς ἐτέρας ἐστὶ πάντως. σημεῖον δέ· βουῖς καὶ ἵππος καὶ ἄνθρωπος καὶ τὰ παραπλήσια ζῶα, διότι πέφυκεν ἀναιρεῖσθαι ὑπὸ σιδήρου, καὶ νόσῳ τελευτήσῃ· χαλεπὸν γὰρ μᾶλλον δὲ ἀδύνατον εὐρεῖν, ὃ τι τὴν ἕξωθεν αἰτίαν πεφυκὸς ὑπομένειν
 [497] τῆς φθορᾶς ἄδεκτον ἔσται<sup>4</sup> | κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς τῆς
 24 ἐνδοθεν. ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ὑπ' οὐδενὸς τῶν ἐκτός

<sup>1</sup> MSS. παθῶν.

<sup>2</sup> So MSS. and the other editors. Cohn corrects it to ἔπειτα δέ, ὅτι, which is not needed. πρῶτον μὲν is, I believe, more often followed by ἔπειτα than by ἔπειτα δὲ or at least as often.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. οἶεται.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 21-24

filled it must be if it is to be one and a total and unaging: one because if some things are left out another world would come into being like the one that now is; total because all that exists is used up to make it; proof against age and disease because the bodies which fall a prey to diseases and old age succumb to the powerful onsets from outside of heat and cold and all other opposite extremes,<sup>a</sup> and none of these forces can escape from the world to surround and attack it, for they are all in their entirety confined within it and no part of them stays away from it. And if there is anything outside it will necessarily be a void, 'the impassive form of existence which cannot be acted on or act. Neither again will any- 22 thing internal cause its dissolution. First because if it did the part would be greater and stronger than the whole, which is against all reason. For the world while exerting a force which nothing can surpass propels all its parts and is propelled by none. Secondly because as the sources of destruction are twofold, one external and one internal, things which can be subject to one of these two must certainly be susceptible to the other. As a proof of this we see 23 that an ox or a horse or a man or other similar creatures since they are liable to be killed by an iron weapon are also liable to die through disease. For it is difficult or rather impossible to find anything which if susceptible to destruction through an external cause is entirely proof against an internal. Since then it has been shown that the world will not 24

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 526.

---

<sup>4</sup> On the displacement of the text in the mss. at this point see App. p. 527.

PHILO

φθαρησόμενος ἐδείχθη ὁ κόσμος, τῷ μηδὲν ἕξω καταλελειφθαι πάντως, οὐδ' ὑπό τινος τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ, διὰ τὴν προεπιλογισθείσαν ἀπόδειξιν, καθ' ἣν τὸ ἀλωτὸν τῇ ἑτέρα τῶν αἰτιῶν καὶ τὴν ἑτέραν 25 ἐπεφύκει δέχεσθαι. VI. μαρτύρια δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐν Τιμαίῳ περὶ τοῦ τὸν κόσμον ἄνοσον εἶναι καὶ μὴ φθαρησόμενον τάδε· “ τῶν δὲ δὴ τεττάρων ἐν ὅλον ἕκαστον εἴληφεν ἢ τοῦ κόσμου σύστασις· ἐκ γὰρ πυρὸς παντὸς ὕδατός τε καὶ ἀέρος καὶ γῆς συνέστησεν αὐτὸν ὁ συνιστάς, μέρος οὐδὲν οὐδενὸς οὐδὲ δύναμιν ἕξωθεν ὑπολιπών, τάδε διανοηθείς· 26 πρῶτον μὲν, ἵνα ὅλον ὅτι μάλιστα ζῶον, τέλειον ἐκ τελειῶν μερῶν, εἴη· πρὸς δὲ τούτοις ἐν, ἅτε οὐχ ὑπολελειμμένων ἐξ ὧν ἄλλο τοιοῦτον γένοιτ' ἂν· ἔτι δέ, ἵνα ἀγήρων καὶ ἄνοσον ᾗ, κατανοῶν ὡς συστάτῳ<sup>1</sup> σώματι θερμὰ καὶ ψυχρὰ καὶ πάνθ' ὅσα δυνάμεις ἰσχυρὰς ἔχει περιστάμενα ἕξωθεν καὶ προσπίπτοντα ἀκαίρως λυπεῖ<sup>2</sup> καὶ νόσους καὶ γῆρας ἐπάγοντα φθίνειν ποιεῖ. διὰ τὴν αἰτίαν καὶ τὸν λογισμὸν τόνδε θεὸς<sup>3</sup> ὅλον ἐξ ὅλων ἀπάντων τέλειον
 27 καὶ ἀγήρων καὶ ἄνοσον αὐτὸν ἐτεκτήνατο.” τοῦτο μὲν δὴ παρὰ Πλάτωνος πρὸς τὴν ἀφθαρσίαν τοῦ κόσμου μαρτύριον εἰλήφθω, τὸ δ' ἀγένητον παρὰ τῆς φυσικῆς ἀκολουθίας<sup>4</sup>. ἔπεται μὲν γὰρ τῷ γενομένῳ διάλυσις, ἀφθαρσία δὲ τῷ ἀγενήτῳ· ἐπεὶ καὶ ὁ τὸ τρίμετρον ἐκεῖνο ποιήσας

“ τό τοι γενόμενον κατθανεῖν ὀφείλεται ”

<sup>1</sup> mss. ὡς τὰ τῷ.

<sup>2</sup> Plato λυεῖ. On this and other variations in the quotations from Plato's text see App. p. 527.

<sup>3</sup> Plato ἐν.

<sup>4</sup> mss. ἀληθείας.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 24-27

be destroyed by anything external because nothing at all has been left outside, neither will anything within it cause its destruction as demonstrated by the argument stated above, namely that that which is liable to be destroyed by one of the causes must be susceptible to the other.

VI. In the Timaeus, too, we have the following testimony to show that the world is proof against disease and destruction in the future.<sup>a</sup> “ Now the framing of the world took up the whole of each of these four elements, for out of all fire, of all water and air and earth did the framer fashion it, leaving no part nor power of any without. Therein he had this intent, first that it might be a creature, perfect to the utmost with all its parts perfect, next that it might be one, seeing that nothing was left over by which another of the kind should be formed: furthermore, that it might be free from age and sickness, for he reflected that when hot things and cold and all such as have strong powers gather round a composite body from without and fall unseasonably upon it they annoy it and bringing upon it sickness and age cause it to decay. With this motive and on such reasons God fashioned it as a whole, with each of its parts whole in itself so as to be perfect, and free from age and sickness.” We may take this as Plato’s testimony to the indestructibility of the world; that it is uncreated follows the natural law of consequences. Dissolution is consequential to the created, indestructibility to the uncreated. The author of the verse “ All that is born is due to death ”<sup>b</sup> seems to

<sup>a</sup> Timaeus 32 c. The translation here and in § 38 mostly follows that of Archer-Hind.

<sup>b</sup> The source is unknown.

δοκεῖ μὴ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ, συνεῖς<sup>1</sup> ἀκολουθίαν τῶν αἰτιῶν τῆς (γενέσεως καὶ τῆς) φθορᾶς, * * * ὡδ' ἔχει.<sup>2</sup>

- 28
[498] Ἐτέρως δέ ἐστι τοιούδε· | πάνθ' ὅσα τῶν συν-θέτων φθείρεται, διάλυσιν εἰς τὰ ἐξ ὧν συνετέθη λαμβάνει· διάλυσιν δ' οὐδὲν ἦν ἄρα ἢ πρὸς τὸ κατὰ φύσιν ἐκάστων ἐπάνοδος, ὥστε κατὰ τοῦναντίον ἢ σύνθεσις εἰς τὸ παρὰ φύσιν τὰ συνελθόντα βεβίασται. καὶ δὴ τὰδ'<sup>3</sup> οὕτως ἔοικεν 29 ἀψευδέστατα ἔχειν. ἄνθρωποι γὰρ ἀπὸ τῶν τεττάρων στοιχείων, ἃ δὴ ὅλα τοῦ παντός ἐστιν οὐρανοῦ,<sup>4</sup> γῆς, (ὑδατος), ἀέρος τε καὶ πυρός, βραχέα τὰ μέρη δανεισάμενοι συνεκράθημεν· τὰ δ' ἀνακραθέντα τῆς κατὰ φύσιν θέσεως ἐστέρηται, θερμότητος μὲν τῆς ἀνωφοίτου κατω(σθείσης), τῆς δὲ γεώδους καὶ βάρους ἐχούσης οὐσίας ἐπελαφρισθείσης καὶ τὸν ἄνω τόπον ἀντιλαβούσης, ὃν<sup>5</sup> τὸ γεωδέστατον τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἐπέσχηκε κεφαλῆ.
30 δεσμῶν δὲ φαυλότατος ὃν ἐσφυγξε βία, βαιὸς<sup>6</sup> καὶ ὀλιγοχρόνιος· ῥήγνυται γὰρ θᾶπτον ὑπὸ τῶν δεθέντων, ἅτε ἀπαυχενιζόντων διὰ πόθον [ὑπὸ] τῆς κατὰ φύσιν κινήσεως, πρὸς ἣν σπεύδοντα μετ-

<sup>1</sup> mss. συνθεῖς.

<sup>2</sup> Suggestions for completing or correcting this sentence are: (1) Cumont εἰπεῖν for ἔχει, (2) Bernays <ὡδε λέγειν καὶ αὐτὴ μὲν ἢ ἀπόδειξις> ὡδ' ἔχει, (3) Cohn and Bücheler <μαρτυρεῖν ὅρ ὁμολογεῖν ὅτι> ὡδ' ἔχει.

<sup>3</sup> mss. καὶ δῆτα.

<sup>4</sup> Cohn, presumably like Bernays, takes οὐρανοῦ as agreeing with παντός. But though οὐρανός can = κόσμος (see § 4), can it be said to have four elements? Cumont expunges οὐρανοῦ. He quotes De Som. i. 15, where the constituents, of which we as well as the Cosmos are composed, are said to be earth, water, air, heaven, and to the same effect Mos. i. 113,

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 27-30

have hit the truth and to have understood the causal connexion between birth and destruction.

The matter is put otherwise thus. All compound 28 things which are destroyed are dissolved into what they were compounded from. Dissolution then is found to be nothing else than a return to the natural condition of each, and therefore conversely composition has forced the ingredients thus collected into an unnatural condition. And indeed the absolute truth of this appears as follows. We men are 29 an amalgamation out of the four elements which in their totality are elements of the universe, namely earth, water, air and fire, out of which we have borrowed only small pieces. But the pieces thus amalgamated have lost their natural position. Heat the upward soaring is thrust down and the earthy and weighty substance is lightened and has taken instead the upper position which is occupied by the most earthy of our constituents, the head.<sup>a</sup> But the 30 bond which violence has clinched is the most worthless of all bonds and lasts for but a little time. Quickly it is broken by the rebellious prisoners in their yearning for their natural free movement towards which they eagerly take their departure.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the skull. Cumont's reading (see note 5) gives a more natural sense. It is strange to find the head called our most earthy part.

---

ii. 37. These however rather point to the omission of πυρός. The addition of ὑδατος which all three editors make is evidently necessary.

<sup>5</sup> One MSS. κεφαλῆ. Cumont ᾧστε . . . ἐν κεφαλῆ. In this case ἐπέσχηκε = "has stopped"; or "takes up its place," see note a.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. βίαιος.

PHILO

ανίσταται· κατὰ γὰρ τὸν τραγικὸν

“ χωρεῖ δ’ ὀπίσω τὰ μὲν ἐκ γαίας φύντ’ εἰς γαίαν, τὰ δ’ ἀπ’ αἰθερίου βλαστόντα γονῆς<sup>1</sup> εἰς οὐράνιον πόλον ἦλθε πάλιν·
θνήσκει δ’ οὐδὲν τῶν γιγνομένων, διακρινόμενον δ’ ἄλλο πρὸς ἄλλο μορφὴν ἰδίαν<sup>2</sup> ἀπέδειξεν.”

31 τοῖς μὲν δὴ φθειρομένοις ἅπασι νόμος ἀναγέ-γραπται καὶ θεσμὸς οὗτος, ὁπότε μὲν ὑφέστηκε τὰ συνελθλυθότα ἐν τῇ κράσει, πρὸ τῆς κατὰ φύσιν τάξεως ἀταξίας ἀντιμετεκληφέναι καὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἐναντίους τόπους μετανίστασθαι, ὡς τρόπον τινὰ ξενιτεύειν δοκεῖν, ὁπότε δὲ διαλύοιτο, πρὸς τὴν οἰκείαν τῆς φύσεως λήξιν ἀνακάμπτειν.

32 VII. ὁ δὲ κόσμος ἀμέτοχος τῆς ἐν τοῖς λεχθεῖσιν ἀταξίας ἐστίν. ἐπεὶ, φέρε, θεασώμεθα· φθειρομένου τὰ μέρη νυνὶ μὲν ἀνάγκη τετάχθαι τὴν παρὰ φύσιν ἕκαστα χώραν· τοῦτο δὲ ὑπονοεῖν οὐκ εὐαγές· ἀρίστην γὰρ θέσιν καὶ τάξιν ἐναρμόνιον τὰ τοῦ κόσμου μέρη πάντα εἴληχεν, ὡς ἕκαστον καθάπερ πατρίδι φιλοχωροῦν 33 μὴ ζητεῖν ἀμείνω μεταβολήν. διὰ τοῦτο γῆ μὲν ὁ μεσαίτατος ἀπενεμήθη τόπος, ἐφ’ ἣν πάντα τὰ γεώδη, κἂν ἀναρρίψης, καταφέρεται — τὸ δ’ ἐστὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. γῆς.

<sup>2</sup> So MSS. here, elsewhere ἐτέραν. See note a.

---

<sup>a</sup> These seven lines, the last three of which are quoted also in §§ 5 and 144, are quoted in bits by several writers including Clement, who says that they come from the Chrysisippus 206

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 30-33

As the tragic poet says

What springs from earth goes back to earth,
The ether-born to heaven's vault returns ;
Naught that is born can die ;
Hither and thither its parts disperse
And take their proper form.<sup>a</sup>

Now the law laid down to govern all things which 31 are destroyed is this. When the assembled things are in the combined state of existence they have accepted conditions of disorder in exchange for their natural order and move away into positions opposite to the natural. So in a sense they seem to live like strangers in a foreign land. But when they are dissolved they return to the condition proper to their nature. VII. But the world has 32 nothing of the disorder which exists in the compounds of which we have been speaking. Observation will show that if it undergoes destruction its several parts must at present have been arranged in an unnatural position and such a supposition is irreverent. For all the parts of the world have been given the best possible situation and harmony of order, so that each is as it were in its beloved fatherland and does not seek any change for the better.

And so the earth has been assigned the mid-most 33 position to which all things of earth descend even if they are thrown up, a sign that this is their natural of Euripides. Besides these seven there are seven others, given by Sextus Empiricus, which, we learn from the paraphrase given by Vitruvius of the whole fourteen, must have preceded our seven. In these Aether and Earth are addressed as the father and mother of all things living. Vitruvius's paraphrase ends with "in eandem recidere, in qua fuerant, propriatatem," which shows that he read ιδίαν and not ἐτέραν.

See Nauck on Fr. 839 of Euripides.

- [499] | σημεῖον χώρας τῆς κατὰ φύσιν· ἔνθα γὰρ μὴ ὑπὸ βίας ὅτιοῦν ἐνεχθὲν ἴσονται καὶ ἡρεμεῖ, τὸν οἰκεῖον εἴληχε χῶρον — ὕδωρ δὲ ἐπὶ γῆν ἀνακέχυται [δεύτερον], ἀήρ δὲ καὶ πῦρ ἀπὸ τοῦ μέσου πρὸς τὸν ἄνω κεχώρηκεν, ἀήρ μὲν τὸν μεθόριον ὕδατος καὶ πυρὸς κληρωσάμενος τόπον, πῦρ δὲ τὸν ἀνωτάτω· διὸ κἂν ἀναψάμενος δᾶδα πρὸς γῆν καταφέρῃς, ἢ φλόξ οὐδὲν ἦπτον ἀντιβιάσεται καὶ πρὸς τὴν φυσικὴν τοῦ πυρὸς κίνησιν ἐπικουφίσασα
- 34 αὐτὴν ἀναδραμεῖται. εἰ δὲ φθορᾶς μὲν αἴτιον ἢ παρὰ φύσιν τάξις τῶν ἄλλων [ἔχει] ζώων, ἐν δὲ τῷ κόσμῳ κατὰ φύσιν ἕκαστα τῶν μερῶν διατέτακται τὰς οἰκειᾶς διακληρωσάμενα χώρας, ἐνδίκως ἂν λέγοιτο ὁ κόσμος ἄφθαρτος.
- 35 Ἔτι τοίνυν ἐκεῖνο παντί τῳ δῆλον, ὅτι φύσις ἐκάστη διατηρεῖν καὶ διασώζειν, εἰ δ' οἷόν τε εἴη, καὶ ἀθανατίζειν ἕκαστα ὧν φύσις ἐστὶν ἐσπούδακεν, ἢ μὲν ἐν τοῖς δένδροισι τὰ δένδρα, ἢ δ' ἐν τοῖς
- 36 ζώοις τῶν ζώων ἕκαστον. ἐξασθενεῖ<sup>1</sup> δὲ ἢ ἐπὶ μέρους ἀναγκαίως ἄγειν πρὸς ἀιδιότητα· ἢ γὰρ ἔνδεια ἢ φλογμὸς ἢ κρυμὸς ἢ μυρία ἄλλα τῶν εἰωθότων ἐπισυνίστασθαι κατασκήψαντα διέσεισε καὶ διέλυσε τὸν συνέχοντα δεσμὸν καὶ τέλος κατέρρηξε· τοιοῦτον δ' εἰ μηδὲν ἐφήδρευεν ἕξω, κἂν ὅσον ἐφ' ἑαυτῇ πάντα μικρά τε αὐτὴ καὶ μεγάλα
- 37 ἀγήρω διεφύλαττεν.<sup>2</sup> ἀναγκαῖον οὖν καὶ τὴν τοῦ κόσμου φύσιν γλίχεσθαι τῆς τοῦ ὄλου διαμονῆς· οὐ γὰρ δὴ τῶν ἐπὶ μέρους ἐστὶ χείρων, ὡς ἀπο-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn suspects ἐξασθενεῖ on account of the infinitive following it. It may perhaps be justified on the analogy of the construction not uncommon with adjectives, e.g., νῆες ὀλίγα ἀμύνειν, or ὡς may have fallen out after ἀναγκαίως on the position, for if anything stands at rest anywhere without being forced thither it is there that it has found its proper place. Water is spread over the surface of earth, and air and fire have made their way from the middle to the upper position, air having allotted to it the space between water and fire and fire the uppermost. And so even if you light a torch and make it descend to earth the flame will all the same force its way against you and speed upwards lightening itself to gain the motion natural to fire. In fact if we grant that in other creatures destruction 34 is caused by their unnatural arrangement of their parts, while in the world each of the parts is arranged naturally and has its proper position apportioned to it, we are justified in saying that the world is indestructible.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 33-37

Another point which must be clear to everyone is 35 this. Nature in each case strives to maintain and conserve the thing of which it is the nature and if it were possible to render it immortal. Tree nature acts so in trees, animal nature in each kind of animal, but the nature of any particular part is necessarily 36 too feeble to carry it into a perpetual existence. For privation or scorching or chilling or the vast multitude of other circumstances which ordinarily affect it descend to shake it violently and loosen and finally break the bond which holds it together, though if no such external force were lying ready to attack it, so far as itself was concerned, it would preserve all things small or great proof against age. The 37 nature of the world then must necessarily desire the conservation of the All. For it is not inferior to analogy of ψυχρόν ἐστὶ τὸ ὕδωρ ὥστε λούσασθαι (Madvig 149, 150).

---

2 MSS. διαφυλάττειν.

PHILO

διδράσκουσα καὶ λιποτακτοῦσα νόσον ἀνθ' ὑγείας καὶ φθορὰν ἀντὶ σωτηρίας παντελοῦς ἐπιχειρεῖν τεχνάζειν, ἐπειδὴ

“ πασάων ὑπὲρ ἧ γε κάρη ἔχει ἠδὲ μέτωπα, ρεῖά τ' ἀριγνώτη πέλεται, καλαὶ δέ τε πᾶσαι.”

ἀλλ' εἰ τοῦτ' ἀληθές ἐστι, φθορὰν ὁ κόσμος οὐ δέξεται. διὰ τί; ὅτι ἡ συνέχουσα φύσις αὐτὸν ἀήττητός ἐστι κατὰ πολλὴν ἰσχύος ῥώμην, τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα βλάπτειν ἔμελλεν ἀπαξαπάντων ἐπι-38 κρατοῦσα. διὸ καὶ Πλάτων εὖ “ ἀπήει τε γὰρ ” φησὶν “ οὐδὲν οὐδὲ προσήει αὐτῷ ποθεν· οὐδὲν γὰρ ἦν. αὐτὸ<sup>1</sup> γὰρ ἑαυτῷ τροφήν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ φθίσιον παρέχον<sup>1</sup> καὶ πάντ' ἐν ἑαυτῷ καὶ ὑφ' ἑαυτοῦ πάσχον<sup>1</sup> καὶ δρῶν ἐκ τέχνης γέγονεν· ἠγήσατο γὰρ αὐτὸ ὁ συνθεὶς αὐταρκες ὃν ἄμεινον ἔσεσθαι μᾶλλον ἢ προσδεῆς (ἄλλων).”

39 VIII. Ἀποδεικτικώτατός γε μὴν κακείνος ὁ λόγος ἐστίν, ἐφ' ᾧ μυρίους οἶδα σεμννομένους ὡς ἠκριβωμένῳ καὶ πάννυ ἀνεξελέγκτῳ. πυνθά-νονται γάρ· τίνος ἔνεκα τὸν κόσμον φθереῖ ὁ θεός;
[500] ἦτοι γὰρ | ὑπὲρ τοῦ μηκέτι κοσμοποιῆσαι ἢ ὑπὲρ
40 τοῦ ἕτερον κατασκευάσαι. τὸ μὲν δὴ πρότερον ἀλλότριον θεοῦ· πρὸς τάξιν γὰρ ἀταξίαν μεταβάλλειν δέον, οὐ πρὸς ἀταξίαν τάξιν· εἶτα δ' ὅτι καὶ μετάνοιαν πάθος καὶ νόσημα δέξεται ψυχῆς· ἔδει γὰρ ἢ μὴ κοσμοποιῆσαι τὸ παράπαν ἢ κρίνοντα πρέπον αὐτῷ τὸ ἔργον χαίρειν τῷ 41 γενομένῳ. τὸ δὲ δεύτερον ἄξιον οὐ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αὐτὸς . . . παρέχων . . . πάσχων.

<sup>a</sup> Od. vi. 107 f., said of Artemis and her nymphs.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 37-41

the nature of particular parts that it should take to its heels and leave its post and try to manufacture sickness rather than health, destruction rather than complete preservation, since

High o'er them all she rears her head and brows
Easy to recognize though all are fair.<sup>a</sup>

But if this is true the world will not be susceptible to destruction. Why so? Because the nature which holds it together fortified by its great fund of strength is invincible and prevails over everything which could injure it. And so Plato says well <sup>b</sup>: "For nothing went out from it nor entered it from anywhere. For there was nothing. For by design it was created to supply its own sustenance by its own wasting <sup>c</sup> and have all its actions and passions in itself and by itself. For its framer deemed that were it self-sufficing it would be far better than if it required aught else."

VIII. There is another highly logical line of proof <sup>39</sup> which thousands, I know, hail with pride as very exact and absolutely irrefutable. They ask what motive will God have for destroying the world. It must be either to cease from world-making or to construct another.

Now the first of these is incon- <sup>40</sup> sistent with God's nature, which demands that He should change disorder to order, not order to disorder. Secondly He will be allowing Himself to change His mind, and such change is an affection and distemper of the soul. For rightly He should either have made no world at all or judge His work to be befitting to Himself and rejoice in what has been made.

The second motive suggested <sup>41</sup>

<sup>b</sup> Timaeus 33 c.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. each part or element feeds upon another. Archer-Hind compares the saying of Heracleitus quoted in § 111.

PHILO

βραχείας ἐρεύνης. εἰ γὰρ ἕτερον ἀντὶ τοῦ νῦν ὄντος κατασκευάσει, πάντως ὁ γενόμενος ἢ χείρων ἢ ὅμοιος ἢ κρείττων ἀποτελεσθήσεται· ὦν ἕκαστον ἐπίληπτον. εἰ μὲν γὰρ χείρων ὁ κόσμος, χείρων καὶ ὁ δημιουργός. ἀμώμητα δὲ καὶ ἀνεξέλεγκτα καὶ ἀνεπανόρθωτα τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ τελειοτάτη τέχνη καὶ ἐπιστήμη δημιουργηθέντα·

“ οὐδὲ ” γὰρ “ γυνή ” φασὶ “ τοσσόνδε νόου ἐπιδεύεται ἐσθλοῦ, ὥστε χερείον’ ἐλέσθαι ἀμεινοτέρων (παρεόντων).”

ἐμπρεπὲς δὲ θεῶ τὰ ἄμορφα μορφοῦν καὶ τοῖς αἰσχίστοις περιτιθέναι θαυμαστὰ κάλλη.

42 εἰ δ’ ὅμοιος, ματαιοπόνος ὁ τεχνίτης, οὐδὲν κομιδῆ νηπίων παιδων διαφέρων, οἳ πολλάκις παρ’ αἰγιαλοῖς ἀθύροντες ψάμμου γεωλόφους ἀνιστᾶσι κᾄπειθ’ ὑφαιροῦντες ταῖς χερσὶ πάλιν ἐρείπουσι· πολὺ γὰρ ἄμεινον τοῦ κατασκευάζειν ὅμοιον μηδὲν μῆτε ἀφαιροῦντα μῆτε προστιθέντα μηδ’ αὖ πρὸς τὸ ἄμεινον ἢ χεῖρον μεταβάλλοντα τὸν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἅπαξ 43 γενόμενον κατὰ χώραν εἶναι. εἰ δὲ κρείτ-τονα δημιουργήσει, γενήσεται τότε κρείττων καὶ ὁ δημιουργός, ὥσθ’ ἡνίκα τὸν πρότερον κατεσκεύαζε καὶ τὴν τέχνην καὶ τὴν διάνοιαν ἦν ἀτελέστερος, ὅπερ οὐδὲ θέμις ὑπονοεῖν ἐστίν· ἴσος γὰρ αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ καὶ ὅμοιος ὁ θεός, μῆτε ἀνεσιν πρὸς τὸ χεῖρον μῆτ’ ἐπίτασιν πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον δεχόμενος.

<sup>a</sup> Source unknown.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 41-43

demands no little examination. If he should construct another world to take the place of that which now exists, the work thus made must be either a worse, or a like or a superior construction and each of these suppositions is unsatisfactory. For if it is worse its framer also is worse, but the works of God framed with the most consummate skill and knowledge are not liable to censure or condemnation or correction. As they say,

Not even a woman so far lacks good sense
As when the better's there to choose the worse.<sup>a</sup>

And it befits God to give form to the formless and invest the ugliest things with marvellous beauties.

If it is a similar world, the craftsman 42 has wasted his toil and differs not a whit from quite senseless children who often when playing on the beach erect great mounds of sand and then undermine them with their hands and send them tumbling back to the ground.<sup>b</sup> Far better than constructing a similar world would it be neither to take away nor to add, neither to change for the better or for the worse but to leave where it is what was once originally created.

If the work is to be better, the 43 workman also will then be better, consequently less perfect in skill and intelligence when he constructed the first world. And even to harbour such a thought is profane, for God is equal to Himself and like Himself; His power admits neither relaxation to make it worse, nor tension to make it better. Such

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Il. xv. 362 ff. :

ὡς ὅτε τις ψάμαθον παῖς ἄγχι θαλάσσης, ὅς τ' ἐπεὶ ὄν ποιήσῃ ἀθύρματα νηπιέησιν, αἷψ' αὐτίς συνέχευε ποσὶν καὶ χερσὶν ἀθύρων.

PHILO

ἐπὶ δὲ τὰς τοιαύτας ἀνωμαλίας ἄνθρωποι κεχωρήκασιν, πρὸς ἐκάτερον τό τε εὖ καὶ τὸ χεῖρον πεφυκότες μεταβάλλειν, αὐξήσῃσι καὶ προκοπαῖς καὶ βελτιώσῃσι καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ἐναντίοις εἰωθότες

44 χρῆσθαι. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις τὰ μὲν τῶν θνητῶν ἔργα ἡμῶν φθαρτὰ δεόντως ἂν γένοιτο, τὰ δὲ τοῦ ἀθανάτου κατὰ τὸν εἰκότα λόγον ἀφθαρτα δῆπου· τῇ γὰρ φύσει τῶν τεχνιτῶν εὐλογον τὰ δημιουργηθέντα ἐξομοιοῦσθαι.

45 IX. Καὶ μὴν ἅπαντί που<sup>1</sup> κάκεῖνο δῆλον, ὅτι φθειρομένης μὲν τῆς γῆς ἀνάγκη καὶ τὰ χερσαῖα τῶν ζώων καθ' ὅλον τὸ γένος ἀπόλλυσθαι, φθειρομένου δὲ ὕδατος τὰ ἔνυδρα, καὶ αἶρος μέντοι καὶ

46 πυρὸς τὰ ἀεροπόρα καὶ πυρίγονα. κατ' ἀνάλογον οὖν εἰ φθείρεται ὁ οὐρανός, φθαρῆσεται μὲν ἥλιος καὶ σελήνη, φθαρῆσονται δ' οἱ λοιποὶ πλάνητες, φθαρῆσονται δ' οἱ ἀπλανεῖς ἀστέρες, ὁ τοσοῦτος |

[501] αἰσθητῶν θεῶν εὐδαίμων τὸ πάλαι νομισθεὶς στρατός. ὁ δὲ [εἰ] γένοιτ' ἂν οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἢ θεοὺς φθειρομένους ὑπονοεῖν· ἴσον γὰρ ἔστι τῷ καὶ ἀνθρώπους ἀθανάτους ὑπονοεῖν. καίτοι τις<sup>2</sup> ἐν ἀτίμων συγκρίσει τοῦτ' ἂν εὖροι σκοπῶν εὐλογώτερον ἐκείνου· χάριτι μὲν γὰρ θεοῦ<sup>3</sup> θνητὸν ἀθανασίας μεταλαχεῖν εἰκὸς ἔστιν, ἀφθαρσίαν δὲ θεοὺς ἀπο-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn corrects to τῷ, I think, unnecessarily. He says that παντί τῷ is very common in Philo, which is certainly true, and that που is unsuitable. Why? Having used παντί τῷ just above, § 35, he might naturally prefer to vary the form of introduction.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. καὶ τοῖς οἱ καίτοι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐκείνου, χάριτι μὲν θεοῦ ὄν· θνητὸν μὲν γὰρ κτλ.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 43-46

irregularities occur in the lives of men. It is their nature to change in both directions for good and for worse. To grow, to advance, to improve and their opposites are to them common events. Add to this 44 that the works of us mortals will rightly be destructible, while those of Him the immortal may surely be expected to be indestructible. For it is reasonable to suppose that what the craftsmen have wrought should be assimilated to the nature of those who wrought them.

IX. Further, it is surely clear to everyone that if 45 the earth is destroyed land animals too as a race must all perish : so, too, if water is destroyed, the aquatic, if air and fire, the traversers of the air and the fire-born.<sup>a</sup> On the same analogy, if heaven is 46 destroyed, the sun and moon will be destroyed, so also the other planets, so also the fixed stars, that mighty host of visible gods whose blessedness from of old has been recognized. This would be the same as supposing that gods are destroyed, and that is on a par with supposing also that men are immortal.<sup>b</sup> Though if we compare one futility with another we shall find on examination that this is more reasonable than that. Through the grace of God a mortal may conceivably gain immortality, but that gods should

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Gig. 7 and De Plant. 12, where they are said to be seen particularly in Macedonia.

<sup>b</sup> Bernays explains this as a Peripatetic hit at the Stoic readiness to believe that men become gods. He quotes among other references Cic. De Nat. Deorum i. 39, where Chrysippus is declared to have included among the many things which he held to be divine "homines eos qui immortalitatem essent consecuti." The Peripatetic then says here that a doctrine which involved the death of the heavenly beings is even worse than that which asserts the deification of men.

PHILO

βαλεῖν ἀδύνατον, κὰν αἱ ἀνθρώπων σοφίαι κακο-47 μανῶσι. καὶ μὴν οἷ γε τὰς ἐκπυρώσεις καὶ τὰς παλιγγενεσίας εἰσηγούμενοι τοῦ κόσμου νομίζουσι καὶ ὁμολογοῦσι τοὺς ἀστέρας θεοὺς εἶναι, οὓς τῷ λόγῳ διαφθείρειν οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσιν. ἔδει γὰρ ἢ μύδρους διαπύρους ἀποφύνασθαι, καθάπερ ἔνιοι τῶν οἶα περὶ δεσμωτηρίου φλυαρούντων τοῦ σύμπαντος οὐρανοῦ, ἢ θείας ἢ δαιμονίας φύσεις νομί-ζοντας τὴν ἀρμόττουσαν θεοῖς ἀφθαρσίαν προσομολογήσαι. νυνὶ δὲ τοσοῦτον δόξης ἀληθοῦς διήμαρτον, ὥστε λελήθασιν αὐτοὺς καὶ τῇ προνοίᾳ — ψυχῇ δ' ἐστὶ τοῦ κόσμου — φθορὰν ἐπιφέροντες 48 ἐξ ὧν ἀνακόλουθα φιλοσοφοῦσι. Χρῦσιππος γοῦν ὁ δοκιμώτατος τῶν παρ' αὐτοῖς ἐν τοῖς Περὶ ἀξαναομένου τερατεύεται τι τοιοῦτον· προκατασκεύασας ὅτι “ δύο ἰδίως ποιᾶ<sup>1</sup> ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῆς οὐσίας ἀμήχανον συστήναι,” φησὶν· “ ἔστω θεωρίας ἔνεκα τὸν μὲν τινα ὀλόκληρον, τὸν δὲ χωρὶς ἐπι-νοεῖσθαι τοῦ ἑτέρου ποδός, καλεῖσθαι δὲ τὸν μὲν ὀλόκληρον Δίωνα, τὸν δὲ ἀτελῆ Θέωνα, κᾶπειτα ἀποτέμεσθαι Δίωνος τὸν ἕτερον τοῖν ποδοῖν.” ζητουμένου δὴ, πότερος ἔφθαρται, τὸν Θέωνα φάσκειν οἰκειότερον εἶναι. τοῦτο δὲ παραδοξο-

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn and Cumont for mss. εἰδοποιούς. Arnim however in S. V. F. ii. 397 quoting this passage has ἰδίως ποιούς, and as several other passages from Plutarch, etc., have the masculine, it seems that this as nearer to the mss. is correct.

<sup>a</sup> The meaning is to be judged from De Som. i. 22 “ Some people have declared them (the stars) to be . . . masses of fiery metal, for which they themselves deserve a prison and millhouse (i.e. a place for hard labour like Lat. “pistrinum”), in

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 46-48

lose their indestructibility is impossible whatever the mischievous ravings of men's philosophies may say. And indeed those who propound the doctrines of 47 conflagration and rebirth hold and openly declare the god-head of the stars which they destroy in their theorizing without a blush. For they must either declare them to be lumps of red hot metal as do some of those who nonsensically talk of the whole heaven as if it were a prison,<sup>a</sup> or regarding them as divine or superhuman beings also acknowledge that they have the indestructibility which befits gods. In fact they err so far from the true doctrine that they fail to observe that in their inconsistent philosophizing they are imposing destruction on providence also which is 48 the soul of the world. So at least says the most esteemed among them, Chrysippus, who in his treatise on "increase" makes the following marvellous statement.<sup>b</sup> Starting from the premise that there cannot be two individuals qualifying the same substance he continues "as an illustration, suppose that one person has all his members and that another has only one foot and let us call the first Dion and the defective one Theon and then suppose that Dion has one of his feet cut off." Now if we ask which of the two has suffered destruction, he thinks that Theon is the more correct answer. This savours which such instruments are kept to punish impiety." And both passages seem to be connected with the story that Anaxagoras was prosecuted for impiety because he said that the sun was a μύδρος διάπυρος. They seem to be the only passages which suggest that such a form of punishment was used in prisons. Was there perhaps a story that Anaxagoras when imprisoned, as according to one version he was, was subjected to this as an appropriate punishment?

<sup>b</sup> On the meaning of the term ιδίως ποιόν or ποιός and the argument of §§ 48-51 see App. p. 528.

PHILO

49 λογούντος μᾶλλον ἔστιν ἢ ἀληθεύοντος. πῶς γὰρ ὁ μὲν οὐδὲν ἀκρωτηριασθεὶς μέρος, ὁ Θέων, ἀνήρπασται, ὁ δ' ἀποκοπεὶς τὸν πόδα Δίων οὐχὶ διέφθαρται; “δεόντως” φησὶν· “ἀναδεδράμηκε γὰρ ὁ ἐκτμηθεὶς τὸν πόδα Δίων ἐπὶ τὴν ἀτελῆ τοῦ Θέωνος οὐσίαν, καὶ δύο ἰδίως ποιᾷ<sup>1</sup> περὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ὑποκείμενον οὐ δύνατ' εἶναι. τοιγαροῦν τὸν μὲν Δίωνα μένειν ἀναγκαῖον, τὸν δὲ Θέωνα διεφθάρθαι.”

“τὰ δ' οὐχ ὑπ' ἄλλων ἀλλὰ τοῖς αὐτῶν πτεροῖς ἀλίσκόμενα” φησὶν ὁ τραγικός· ἀπομαζάμενος γὰρ τις τὸν | [502] τύπον τοῦ λόγου καὶ ἐφαρμόσας τῷ παντὶ κόσμῳ δείξει σαφέστατα καὶ αὐτὴν φθειρομένην τὴν πρό-50 νοιαν. σκόπει δ' ὧδε· ὑποκείσθω τὸ μὲν<sup>2</sup> ὡσανεὶ Δίων ὁ κόσμος — τέλειος γάρ —, τὸ δὲ<sup>2</sup> ὡσανεὶ Θέων ἢ τοῦ κόσμου ψυχὴ, διότι τοῦ ὅλου τὸ μέρος ἔλαττον, καὶ ἀφαιρείσθω, ὡσπερ ἀπὸ τοῦ Δίωνος ὁ πούς, οὕτως καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ κόσμου ὅσον 51 αὐτοῦ σωματοειδές. οὐκοῦν ἀνάγκη λέγειν ὅτι ὁ μὲν κόσμος οὐκ ἔφθαρται ὁ τὸ σῶμα ἀφαιρεθείς, ὡσπερ οὐδὲ ὁ ἀποκοπεὶς τὸν πόδα Δίων, ἀλλ' ἢ τοῦ κόσμου ψυχὴ, ὡσπερ Θέων ὁ μηδὲν παθών.

 ὁ μὲν γὰρ κόσμος ἐπ' ἐλάττονα οὐσίαν ἀνέδραμεν, ἀφαιρεθέντος αὐτῷ τοῦ σωματοειδοῦς, ἐφθάρη δ' ἢ ψυχὴ διὰ τὸ μὴ δύνασθαι δύο ἰδίως ποιᾷ<sup>1</sup> εἶναι περὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ὑποκείμενον. ἔκθεσμον δὲ τὸ λέγειν

<sup>1</sup> See note 1, p. 216.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὁ μὲν . . . ὁ δὲ.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 49-51

more of paradox than of truth. For how can one 49 say that Theon the unmutilated has been made away with while Dion whose foot is amputated has suffered no destruction? "Quite rightly," he replies, "for Dion who has had his foot amputated has passed over to the defective substance of Theon. Two individuals cannot qualify the same substratum and so Dion must remain and Theon has been destroyed."

Themselves, no others, winged the shaft which slew them,<sup>a</sup>

as says the tragic poet. For by reproducing this form of argument and applying it to the whole world one can very clearly show that providence itself is also destroyed. Consider it as follows. Postulate 50 on the one hand the world which is complete like Dion and on the other the soul of the world as Theon, for the part is less than the whole. Then just as we take away Dion's foot, take away from the world all its bodily part. Then we must say 51 that the world which has lost its body has not been destroyed just as Dion whose foot was cut off was not destroyed. But the soul of the world has been destroyed just as Theon who suffered no injury was destroyed. The world has passed over into a lesser state of being since its bodily part has been taken from it and its soul has been destroyed because two individuals cannot qualify the same substratum.

<sup>a</sup> A fragment of the Myrmidons of Aeschylus. The passage is often quoted with or without the preceding lines ὄδ' ἐστὶ μύθων τῶν Λιβυστικῶν κλέος, πληγέντ' ἀτράκτω τοξικῶ τὸν αἰετὸν εἰπεῖν ἰδόντα μηχανὴν πτερώματος, τάδ' οὐχ ὑπ' ἄλλων ἀλλὰ τοῖς αὐτῶν πτεροῖς ἀλίσκόμεσθα.

φθείρεσθαι τὴν πρόνοιαν· ἀφθάρτου δὲ ὑπαρχούσης, ἀνάγκη καὶ τὸν κόσμον ἀφθαρτον εἶναι.

- 52 X. Μεγίστην μέντοι παρέχεται πίστιν εἰς αἰδιότητα καὶ ὁ χρόνος. εἰ γὰρ ἀγένητος ὁ χρόνος, ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ ὁ κόσμος ἀγένητος. διὰ τί; ὅτι, ἢ φησιν ὁ μέγας Πλάτων, ἡμέραι καὶ νύκτες μῆνες τε καὶ ἐνιαυτῶν περίοδοι χρόνον ἔδειξαν. ἀμήχανον δέ τι τούτων συστήναι δίχα ἡλίου κινήσεως καὶ τῆς τοῦ παντὸς οὐρανοῦ περιφορᾶς· ὥστ' εὐθυβόλως ἀποδεδόσθαι πρὸς τῶν εἰωθότων τὰ πράγματα ὀρίζεσθαι χρόνον διάστημα τῆς τοῦ κόσμου κινήσεως. ἐπεὶ δὲ τοῦθ' ὑγιές ἐστι, γίνεται ὁ 53 κόσμος ἰσηλιξ τοῦ χρόνου καὶ αἴτιος. πάντων δ' ἀτοπώτατον ὑπονοεῖν, ὅτι ἦν ποτε κόσμος,<sup>1</sup> ἠνίκα οὐκ ἦν χρόνος<sup>1</sup>. ἀναρχος γὰρ καὶ ἀτελεύτητος ἡ τούτου φύσις, ἐπεὶ καὶ αὐτὰ ταῦτα, τὸ ἦν, τὸ ποτέ, τὸ ἠνίκα, χρόνον συνεμφαίνει. τούτῳ δ' ἀκό-[492] λουθον τὸ μηδὲ χρόνον<sup>2</sup> | ὑποστήναι καθ' ἑαυτόν, ἠνίκα κόσμος οὐκ ἦν· τὸ γὰρ μὴ ὑπάρχον οὐδὲ κινεῖται· διάστημα δὲ κοσμικῆς κινήσεως ἐδείχθη ὁ χρόνος ὢν. ἀνάγκη τοίνυν ἐκάτερον ἐξ αἰδίου ὑφεστάναι γενέσεως ἀρχὴν μὴ λαβόντα· τὰ δ' αἰδία 54 φθορᾶς ἀνεπίδεκτα. τάχα τις εὐρεσιλογῶν Στωικὸς ἐρεῖ, τὸν χρόνον ἀποδεδόσθαι διάστημα τῆς τοῦ κόσμου κινήσεως οὐχὶ τοῦ νυνὶ διακεκοσμημένου μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ κατὰ τὴν ἐκπύρωσιν ὑπονοουμένου. πρὸς ὃν λεκτέον· τὴν ἀκοσμίαν, ᾧ γενναῖε, μετατιθεῖς τὰ ὀνόματα κόσμον καλεῖς· εἰ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. χρόνος . . . κόσμος.

<sup>2</sup> On the transposition of the text at this point see App. p. 527.

<sup>a</sup> Timaeus 37 E.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 51-54

Now to say that providence is destroyed is an atrocity but if providence is indestructible the world also is indestructible.

X. Another very weighty proof to show its per- 52 petuity is supplied by time. If time is uncreated, the world also necessarily must be uncreated. Why? Because as great Plato says time is indicated by days and nights and months and successions of years, and none of these can subsist without the movement of the sun and the revolution of the whole heaven.<sup>a</sup> Thus people who are accustomed to define things have correctly explained time as what measures the movement of the universe, and since this is sound, the world is coeval with time and its original source. But nothing can be so preposterous as to suppose that 53 there was a time when the world was when time was not. Time by its nature has no beginning or end,<sup>a</sup> since these very terms "was, time when, when," involve the idea of time. From this it follows that time also did not exist of itself when the world was not, for what does not subsist does not move either and time has been shown to be what measures the cosmic movement. It is necessary therefore that both should have subsisted from everlasting without having any beginning in which they came into being and things which are from everlasting are not susceptible of destruction. Possibly some argumenta- 54 tive Stoic quibbler will say that time is explained as the measurement of the movement not only of the world of the present cosmic order but of that postulated at the conflagration. The answer to this is, "My friend, you are transferring your terms and give the sense of Cosmos to the negation of Cosmos, for if this world which we see is very fitly called γὰρ οὗτος ὃν ὀρώμεν ἐτύμως καὶ προσφύεστατα κόσμος κέκληται, διατεταγμένος καὶ διακεκοσμημένος ἀνεπανορθώτου<sup>1</sup> τέχνης ἀκρότητι, τὴν πρὸς τὸ πῦρ αὐτοῦ μεταβολὴν δεόντως ἂν τις ἀκοσμίαν ὀνομάσαι.

PHILO

- 55 XI. Κριτόλαος δέ (τις) τῶν κεχορευκότων Μούσαις, τῆς Περιπατητικῆς ἐραστῆς φιλοσοφίας, τῷ περὶ τῆς αἰδιότητος κόσμου δόγματι συνειπὼν ἐχρήσατο τοιαύταις πίστεσιν· εἰ γέγονεν ὁ κόσμος, ἀνάγκη καὶ τὴν γῆν γεγονέναι· εἰ δὲ ἡ γῆ γενητή, πάντως καὶ τὸ ἀνθρώπων γένος· ἄνθρωπος δὲ ἀγένητον, ἐξ αἰδίου τοῦ γένους ὑφεστῶτος, ὥσπερ
- 56 ἐπιδειχθήσεται· αἰδιος ἄρα καὶ ὁ κόσμος. τὸ δὲ ὑπερτεθὲν ἤδη κατασκευαστέον, εἰ δεῖ καὶ ἀποδείξωσ τοῖς οὕτως ἐμφανέσι· δεῖ δέ, ὡς ἔοικεν, ἔνεκα τῶν μυθοπλαστῶν, οἱ ψευσμάτων ἀναπλήσαντες τὸν βίον ἀλήθειαν ὑπερόριον πεφυγαδεύκασιν, οὐ μόνον πόλεις καὶ οἴκους ἀλλὰ καὶ ἕνα ἕκαστον τοῦ (ἀρίστου) κτήματος χηρεύειν βιασάμενοι καὶ πρὸς τὸ τῆς φράσεως<sup>2</sup> ὀλκὸν μέτρα καὶ ῥυθμοὺς δέλεαρ εἰς ἐνέδραν ἐπινοήσαντες, οἷς ἀφρόνων ὦτα καταγοητεύουσι, καθάπερ ὀφθαλμοὺς αἱ ἄμορφοι καὶ εἰδεχθεῖς ἑταῖραι περιάπτοις καὶ
- 57 νόθῳ κόσμῳ χηρεῖα γνησίῳ. λέγουσι γὰρ ὅτι ἡ ἐξ ἀλλήλων γένεσις ἀνθρώπων νεώτερον φύσεως ἔργον,
- [493] ἀρχεγονώτερον δὲ καὶ πρεσβύτερον | ἡ ἐκ γῆς, ἐπειδὴ πάντων μήτηρ ἐστὶ τε καὶ νενόμισται· τοὺς δὲ ἀδομένους παρ' Ἑλλησι Σπαρτοὺς ἐκφῦναι,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἄτ' ἐπ' ἀνθρώπου.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πρὸς τὸν τῆς ὀράσεως.

---

<sup>a</sup> Lived about the middle of the second century B.C. For 000

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 54-57

Cosmos in the proper sense of the word being ordered and disposed with consummate craftsmanship, which admits of no improvement, one may rightly describe its change into fire as the negation of Cosmos."

XI. <sup>a</sup> Critolaus, one of the votaries of the Muses, <sup>55</sup> a lover of the Peripatetic philosophy, who assents to the doctrine of the perpetuity of the world, used the following arguments. If the world has been created, the earth must have been so too, and if the earth was created, so certainly must have been the human race, but man is uncreated and his race has existed from everlasting as will be shown, therefore the world also is everlasting. Now for the <sup>56</sup> establishment of the point just left for discussion <sup>b</sup> if, indeed, facts so obvious need proof. But they do need it, because of the myth-makers who have infected our life with their falsehoods and chased away truth from its borders. They have forced not only cities and houses but also every single individual to lack that best of possessions and devised as a bait to trap them metres and rhythms and so expressed their views in an attractive form. With these they bewitch the ears of the foolish as uncomely and repulsive courtesans bewitch their eyes with their trappings and spurious adornment for lack of the genuine. These people say that the birth of man- <sup>57</sup> kind from mankind is a later work of nature and that the earlier and more original form was a generation from the earth, since the earth both is and is held to be the mother of all things and that the Sown men celebrated in Grecian lore sprang from some remarks on the part assigned to him in the argumentation which follows see Intr. p. 176.

<sup>b</sup> Or "assumed"; cf. § 125.

PHILO

καθάπερ νῦν τὰ δένδρα, τελείους καὶ ἐνόπλους 58 γῆς παῖδας. ὅτι δὲ μύθου πλάσμα τοῦτ' ἐστὶ, συνιδεῖν ἐκ πολλῶν ῥάδιον. αὐτίκα τῷ πρώτῳ γενομένῳ ἔδει καθ' ὠρισμένα μέτρα καὶ ἀριθμούς χρόνων αὐξήσεως· βαθμούς γάρ τινας ἢ φύσις τὰς ἡλικίας ἐγέννησε, δι' ὧν τρόπον τινὰ ἀναβαίνει καὶ κάτεισιν ἄνθρωπος, ἀναβαίνει μὲν αὐξόμενος, κατέρχεται δ' ἐν ταῖς μειώσεσιν· ὅρος δ' ὁ τῶν ἀνωτάτῳ<sup>1</sup> βαθμῶν ἀκμή, πρὸς ὃν φθάσας τις οὐκέτι πρόεισιν, ἀλλ', ὥσπερ οἱ διαυλοδρο-μοῦντες ἀνακάμπτουσι τὴν αὐτὴν ὁδόν, ὅσα παρ' ἰσχυούσης νεότητος ἔλαβεν, ἀποδίδωσιν<sup>2</sup> ἀσθενεῖ 59 γήρᾳ. τὸ δὲ γεννηθῆναί τινας οἰεσθαι τελείους ἐξ ἀρχῆς) ἡγνοηκότων ἐστὶ νόμους φύσεως, θεσμούς ἀκινήτους. αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἡμέτεραι γινώμαι προσαναματτόμεναι τὸ πλημμελὲς ἐκ τοῦ συνεξευγμένου θνητοῦ τροπᾶς καὶ μεταβολᾶς εἰκότως ἐνδέχονται, ἄτρεπτα δὲ τὰ τῆς τῶν ὄλων ἐστὶ φύσεως, ἅτε πάντων ἐπικρατούσης καὶ διὰ βεβαιότητα τῶν ἅπαξ γνωσθέντων τοὺς ἐξ ἀρχῆς παγέοντας ὅρους 60 ἀκινήτους διαφυλαττούσης. εἶπερ οὖν ἀρμόττον ὁ ἐνόμιζεν ἀποτίκτεσθαι τελείους, καὶ νῦν ἂν ἐτε-λειογονεῖτο ἄνθρωπος, μὴ βρέφος, μὴ παῖς, μὴ μειράκιον γινόμενος, ἀλλ' ἀνὴρ εὐθύς ὧν, ἴσως δὲ καὶ πρὸς ἅπαν ἀγήρως καὶ ἀθάνατος· ᾧ γὰρ μὴ αὐξήσις, μηδὲ μείωσις πρόσεστιν· αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἄχρι τῆς ἀνδρὸς ἡλικίας μεταβολαὶ κατ' αὐξήσιν, αἱ δ' ἀπὸ ταύτης ἄχρι γήρως καὶ τελευτῆς κατὰ μείωσιν συνίστανται· τῷ δὲ μὴ κοινωνοῦντι τῶν

<sup>1</sup> Cohn thinks the superlative meaningless and suggests ἀνω, but "the uppermost steps are bounded by the ἀκμή" seems an intelligible phrase. <sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀποδίδωσιν ἐν ἀσθενεῖ.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 57-60

the earth as trees do now, full-grown and in armour.

That this is a mythical fiction can be easily seen on many grounds ; one is that the growth of the man first born must have followed periods of time determined by fixed measurements and numerical rules. For nature has created the stages of age as a sort of steps by which man may be said to go up and down, up while he is growing, down in the times of his decreasing. The limit of the upward steps is the culmination of youth. When he has reached this he no longer advances but like the runners of the double course who return along the self-same track he repays to feeble old age all that he received from lusty youth. But to think that any were born full-grown from the first shows an ignorance of those immutable statutes, the laws of nature. Our decisions and judgements reflect the discord which belongs to the mortal element, our yoke-fellow, and may be expected to admit of change and instability. But there is no swerving in the nature of the universe, for that nature is supreme above all and so steadfast are its decisions once taken that it keeps immutable the limits fixed from the beginning. If then nature had thought it fitting that they should be produced full-grown, mankind would even now be created in that condition, not as infants, nor boys nor youths, but in manhood straight away, and perhaps altogether proof against old age and death. What is not subject to increase is not subject to decrease either, for the process of the changes up to manhood is one of increase but from manhood to old age and death one of decrease, and it is reasonable that one who is exempt from the first set of προτέρων καὶ τὰς ἐπομένας εὐλογον μὴ ἐπιγί-61 γνεσθαι. τί δ' ἐμποδῶν ἦν ἀνθρώπους καθάπερ φασὶ πρότερον καὶ νῦν βλαστάνειν; οὕτως καὶ ἡ γῆ γεγήρακεν, ὡς διὰ χρόνου μῆκος ἐστειρῶσθαι δοκεῖν; ἀλλ' ἐν ὁμοίῳ μένει νεάζουσα αἰεί, διότι τετάρτη μοῖρα τοῦ παντός ἐστι καὶ ἔνεκα τῆς τοῦ ὄλου διαμονῆς ὀφείλει μὴ φθίνειν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰ ἀδελφὰ στοιχεῖα αὐτῆς ὕδωρ ἀήρ τε καὶ πῦρ 62 ἀγήρω διατελεῖ. πίστις δὲ ἐναργῆς τῆς ἀδιαστάτου καὶ αἰδίου περὶ γῆν ἀκμῆς τὰ φυόμενα· καθαρθεῖσα<sup>1</sup> γὰρ ἡ ποταμῶν ἀναχύσεσιν, ὡσπερ φασὶν Αἴγυπτον, ἡ τοῖς ἐτησίοις ὄμβροις τὸν ἐκ τῆς φορᾶς<sup>2</sup> κάματον ὑπανίεται καὶ χαλᾶται, κᾶπειτα διαναπαυσασμένη τὴν οἰκείαν δύναμιν ἀνακτᾶται μέχρι παντελοῦς ῥώμης, εἰτ' ἄρχεται πάλιν τῆς τῶν ὁμοίων γενέσεως τροφᾶς ἀφθόνους 63 ἀπάσαις ζώων ιδέαις ἀναδιδούσα. XII. παρ' ὃ [494] μοι δοκοῦσιν | οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ ποιηταὶ Πανδώραν αὐτὴν ὀνομάσαι, πάντα δωρουμένην [καὶ] τὰ πρὸς ὠφέλειαν καὶ ἡδονῆς ἀπόλαυσιν οὐ τισὶν ἀλλὰ πᾶσιν ὅσα ψυχῆς μεμοίραται. εἰ γοῦν τις ἕαρος ἀκμάσαντος περωθεὶς ἀρθείη μετάρσιος καὶ κατἰδοὶ τὴν τε ὄρεινὴν καὶ πεδιάδα, τὴν μὲν εὐχορτον καὶ χλοηφόρον πόας καὶ χιλὸν κριθάς τε καὶ πυροὺς καὶ μυρίας ἄλλας σπαρτῶν φύσεις ἀνα-διδούσαν, ἃς τε γεωργοὶ κατεβάλλοντο καὶ ἃς ἀπαντοματίζουσα ἡ τοῦ ἔτους ὥρα παρέχεται, τὴν

PHILO

<sup>1</sup> Mangey, Bernays and Cumont correct to καταρθεῖσα (from κατάρδω = "irrigate"), and Cohn's reference to Timaeus 22 D ("When the gods send a flood upon earth to purify her") is hardly to the point; but the example which he quotes (Hermes, 1916, p. 184) from De Providentia 43, where the purification is effected by the ordinary rains which

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 60-63

changes should not be subject to those which follow. And what is to prevent men from springing now as they are alleged to have sprung in former times? Has the earth too grown so old that it may be thought to have been sterilized by length of time? On the contrary it remains as it was ever young, because it is the fourth part of the All and is bound to remain undecayed in order to conserve the sum of things, just as also its sister elements, water, air and fire, continue to defy old age. 61

A clear proof 62 that the earth retains its vigour continually and perpetually at its height is its vegetation, for purified either by the overflow of rivers, as they say is the case in Egypt, or by the annual rains, it takes a respite and relaxation from the weary toil of bearing fruit, and then after this interval of rest recuperates its native force till it reaches its full strength and then begins again to bear fruits like the old and supplies in abundance to each kind of living creature such food as they need. XII. And therefore it seems 63 to me that the poets did not do amiss in giving her the name of Pandora, because she gives all things that bring benefit and pleasurable enjoyment not to some only but to all creatures endowed with conscious life. Suppose one soaring aloft on wings when spring has reached its height were to survey the uplands and the lowlands, he would see the lowlands verdant with herbage, producing pasturage and grass fodder and barley and wheat and numerous other forms of grain, some sown by the farmer, others provided self-grown by the season of the year. He would nourish animal and vegetable life, justifies the retention of καθαρθείσα.

---

<sup>2</sup> MSS. φθορᾶς.

PHILO

δὲ κλάδοις καὶ φυλλάσι κατάσκιον, οἷς ἐπικο-σμεῖται τὰ δένδρα, καὶ καρπῶν περιπληθεστάτην, οὐχὶ τῶν πρὸς ἔδωδὴν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ οἷς πόνους ἀκείσθαι συμβέβηκεν—ὁ μὲν γὰρ τῆς ἐλαίας καρπὸς σώματος κάματον ἰᾶται, ὁ δὲ τῆς ἀμπέλου ποθεῖς 64 μετρίως ἐπιχαλᾷ τὰς σφοδρὰς ὀδύνας ψυχῆς—, ἔτι δὲ τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθέων ἀναφερομένας εὐωδιστάτας αὔρας καὶ τὰς τῶν χρωμάτων ἀμυθήτους ἰδιότητας τέχνη δαιμονίῳ πεποικιλμένας, τὴν δ' ὄψιν ἀποκλίνας ἀπὸ τῶν ἡμέρων ἐν μέρει πάλιν αἰγείρους, κέδρους, πεύκας, ἐλάτας, δρυῶν ὕψη περιμηκέστατα, τὰς ἄλλας τῶν ἀγρίων συνεχεῖς καὶ βαθείας ὕλας περιαθρήσειεν, αἱ τὰ πλεῖστα καὶ μέγιστα τῶν ὄρων καὶ τὴν πολλὴν ὄση βαθύγειος τῆς ὑπορείου συσκιάζουσι, γνῶσεται τὴν ἀνένδοτον καὶ 65 ἀκάματον τῆς γῆς αἰὲν νεαζούσης ἀκμὴν· ὥστ' οὐδὲν ἐλαττωθεῖσα τῆς παλαιᾶς ἰσχύος καὶ νῦν ἄν, εἴ γε τὸ πρότερον, ἔτικτεν ἀνθρώπους, ὑπὲρ δυοῖν τοῖν ἀναγκαιοτάτοι, ἐνὸς μὲν τοῦ μὴ λιποτακτεῖν τάξιν οἰκείαν καὶ μάλιστα ἐν σπορᾷ καὶ γενέσει τοῦ χερσαίων ἀπάντων ἀρίστου καὶ ἡγεμόνος ἀνθρώπου δευτέρου δὲ γυναικῶν ἐπικουρίας, αἱ κύουσαι μὲν βαρυτάτοις ἄχθεσι δέκα πού μῆνας πιέζονται,<sup>1</sup> μέλλουσαι δ' ἀποτίκτειν πολλάκις ὠδίσιν 66 αὐταῖς ἐναποθνήσκουσιν. ὅλως τοῦτ' οὐκ εὐθήθεια δεινὴ μήτραν ὑπολαμβάνειν γῆν ἐγκεκολπίσθαι πρὸς ἀνθρώπων σποράν; τὸ γὰρ ζωογονοῦν χωρίον ἐστὶ μήτρα, “ φύσεως,” ὡς εἰπέ τις,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. βιάζονται.

<sup>a</sup> Literally “the most and greatest of the mountains,” 228

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 63-66

see the uplands overshadowed with the branches and foliage which deck the trees and filled with a vast quantity of fruits, not merely those which serve for food, but also those which prove to be a cure for troubles. For the fruit of the olive heals the weariness of the body and that of the vine if drunk in moderation relaxes the violence of sorrow in the soul. Further he would perceive the sweet fragrance of 64 the exhalations wafted from the flowers and the multitudinous varieties of their colours diversified by superhuman skill. Again looking away from the cultivated vegetation, he would survey poplars, cedars, pines, firs, tall towering oaks and the other deep, unbroken forests of wild trees which overshadow the vast expanse of the huge mountains <sup>a</sup> and the wide stretch of deep soil which lies at their feet. Seeing all this he will recognize that the ever-youthful earth still has the indomitable and unwearying 65 vigour of its prime. And therefore the earth, which has suffered no diminution of its ancient strength, would, if she brought forth men before, be doing so still, and this for two most cogent reasons, part to avoid desertion of her proper post, particularly her duty of sowing and generating man, the best and chief of all the creatures who walk the land, and secondly to aid women, who in pregnancy labour with very grievous burdens for some ten months and when they are on the point of child-birth often actually die in the pains of travail. Indeed is it not 66 terribly foolish to suppose that earth has in its bosom a womb for the sowing of men? For the place which generates life is the womb, the "workshop of meaning perhaps "nearly all and even the highest." In the next line τὴν πολλήν may = "the greater part."

PHILO

“ἐργαστήριον,” ἐν ᾧ ζῶα μόνον διαπλάττεται· τὸ δὲ οὐ γῆς μέρος ἐστίν, ἀλλὰ ζῶου θήλεος, δημιουργηθὲν εἰς γένεσιν· ἐπεὶ καὶ μαζοὺς καθάπερ γυναικὶ γῆ φάτέον ἠνίκα ἠνθρωπογόνοι προσγενέσθαι, τροφήν ἔχουσιν οἰκείαν οἱ πρῶτον ἀποκυθηθέντες· ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐ ποταμός, οὐ πηγὴ τις οὐδαμοῦ τῆς οἰκουμένης ἀνθ’ ὕδατος μνημονεύεται 67 ποτε ὀμβρῆσαι γάλα. πρὸς δὲ δὴ τούτοις, ὥσπερ γαλακτοτροφεῖσθαι χρὴ τὸ ἀρτίγονον, οὕτως καὶ τῇ δι’ ἀμπεχόνης σκέπη χρῆσθαι διὰ τὰς ἀπὸ [495] κρυμοῦ | καὶ θάλπους ἐγγινομένας τοῖς σώμασι ζημίας, οὗ χάριν μαῖαι καὶ μητέρες, αἷς ἀναγκαῖα φροντὶς εἰσέρχεται<sup>1</sup> τῶν γεννωμένων, κατασπαρ-γανοῦσι τὰ βρέφη. τοὺς δὲ γηγενεῖς φύντας πῶς οὐκ ἂν τις εὐθύς διέφθειρε γυμνοὺς ἐαθέντας ἢ ἀέρος κατάψυξις ἢ ἀφ’ ἡλίου φλογμός; κρυμοὶ γὰρ καὶ θάληη κρατήσαντα νόσους καὶ φθορὰς 68 ἀπεργάζονται. ἐπειδὴ δ’ ἅπαξ ἤρξαντο ἀλογεῖν ἀληθείας οἱ μυθοπλάσται, τοὺς Σπαρτοὺς ἐκείνους καὶ ἐνόπλους ἑτερατεύσαντο ἐκφῦναι. τίς γὰρ ἦν κατὰ γῆς χαλκουργὸς ἢ τοσοῦτος Ἡφαι-στος, ὡς αὐτίκα παντευχίας εὐτρεπίζεσθαι; τίς δὲ τοῖς πρῶτοις γενομένοις εἰς ὄπλισιν<sup>2</sup> οἰκειότης; ἡμερώτατον γὰρ ζῶον ὁ ἄνθρωπος, λόγον δωρησαμένης φύσεως αὐτῷ γέρας, ᾧ καὶ τὰ ἐξηγριωμένα πάθη κατεπάδεται καὶ τιθασεύεται. πολὺ βέλτιον ἦν ἀνθ’ ὄπλων κηρύκεια ἀναδύναι, συμβατηρίων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εἰσέρχεται.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn and Cumont from Diels for MSS. ἰσόπαις ἦν.
Bernays ὀπλίσεως ἦν.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 66-68

nature,"<sup>a</sup> as someone calls it, where alone the living are moulded into shape, and this is not a part of the earth but of a female creature framed for generation of other creatures. Folly indeed, since we should also have to say that the earth like a woman has the addition of breasts when she bore men, that the offspring when first brought to birth might have their proper sustenance. But no river or spring anywhere in the habitable earth is recorded as having ever run milk instead of water. Besides just as the newly born needs to be fed with milk, so too he needs to be sheltered by clothing to meet the harms brought upon the body by cold and heat, and therefore midwives and mothers necessarily feeling anxious to protect the offspring wrap the infants in swaddling clothes. Must not then earth-born creatures if left naked have been at once destroyed either by some refrigeration of the air or scorching of the sun, for the powers of cold and heat produce diseases and fatalities? But the myth-makers having once begun to disregard truth also made out these Sown men to have been born armed, a marvel indeed, for what smith was there on earth or a Vulcan so powerful as to prepare full suits of armour straightaway? And what suitable connexion is there between the first generation of men and wearing arms? Man is the gentlest and kindest of animals, because nature has given him the prerogative of reason, with which the savage passions are charmed away and tamed. Far better would it be for a reasonable being if instead of arms, the herald <sup>a</sup> This phrase is used several times by Philo, Mos. ii. 84, Spec. Leg. iii. 33, 109 and Legatio 56. This is the only place where he indicates that it is a definite quotation.

σπονδῶν σύμβολα, λογικῇ φύσει, ὅπως εἰρήνην πρὸ πολέμου πᾶσι τοῖς πανταχοῦ καταγγέλλῃ.

69 XIII. τὰ μὲν οὖν τῶν ἐπιτειχιζόντων ψευδολογίαν κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας φλυαρήματα με-τρίως ἐξελέλεγκται. χρὴ δ' εὖ εἰδέναι, ὅτι ἐξ αἰδίου κατὰ διαδοχὰς ἐξ ἀνθρώπων βλαστάνουσιν ἄνθρωποι, σπείροντος μὲν εἰς μήτραν ἀνδρὸς ὡς εἰς ἄρουραν, γυναικὸς δ' ὑποδεχομένης τὰ σπέρ-ματα σωτηρίως, τῆς δὲ φύσεως ἀοράτως ἕκαστα καὶ τῶν τοῦ σώματος καὶ τῶν τῆς ψυχῆς δια-πλαττούσης μερῶν καὶ ὅπερ οὐκ ἴσχυσε λαβεῖν ἡμῶν ἕκαστος τοῦθ' ἅπαντι τῷ γένει δωρησαμένης, τὸ ἀθάνατον· μένει γὰρ εἰς αἰεὶ, φθειρομένων τῶν ἐν εἴδει, τεράστιον ὡς ἀληθῶς καὶ θεῖον ἔργον. εἰ δ' αἰδίου ἄνθρωπος, βραχεῖα μοῖρα τοῦ παντός, ἀγένητος δῆπου καὶ ὁ κόσμος, ὥστε ἀφθαρτος.

70 XIV. Ἐπαγωνιζόμενος δ' ὁ Κριτόλαος ἐχρήτο καὶ τοιούτῳ λόγῳ· τὸ αἷτιον αὐτῷ τοῦ ὑγιαίνειν ἄνοσόν ἐστιν· ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ αἷτιον αὐτῷ τοῦ ἀγρυπνεῖν ἀγρυπνόν ἐστιν· εἰ δὲ τοῦτο, καὶ τὸ αἷτιον αὐτῷ τοῦ ὑπάρχειν αἰδιόν ἐστιν· αἷτιος δ' ὁ κόσμος αὐτῷ τοῦ ὑπάρχειν, εἴ γε καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἅπασιν· αἰδῖος ἄρα ὁ κόσμος ἐστίν.

71 Οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ κάκεῖνο σκοπεῖν ἄξιον, ὅτι πᾶν τὸ γενόμενον ἐν ἀρχῇ μὲν δεῖ πάντως ἀτελὲς εἶναι, χρόνου δὲ προϊόντος αὖξεσθαι μέχρι παντελοῦς τελειώσεως· ὥστε, εἰ γέγονεν ὁ κόσμος, ἦν μὲν

<sup>a</sup> Perhaps a reminiscence of Plato, Symp. 206 c ἔστι δὲ τοῦτο θεῖον τὸ πρᾶγμα, καὶ τοῦτο ἐν θνητῷ ὄντι τῷ ζῳῷ ἀθάνατον ἔνεστιν, ἢ κύησις καὶ ἡ γέννησις. See App. p. 521 (on De Vit. Cont. 59).

<sup>b</sup> Alluding perhaps to the use of κομιδῇ νήπιος in § 42.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 68-71

staff, the symbol of treaties of agreement, should spring from the ground, so that it should proclaim peace instead of war to all men everywhere.

XIII. So then since the foolish imaginations of those 69 who fortify falsehood against truth have been satisfactorily refuted, we must be well assured that from everlasting men spring from men in successive generations. The man sows the seeds into a womb as into a field, the woman receives the seed for safe-keeping; nature invisibly moulds and shapes each part of the body and soul and bestows upon the race as a whole what individually we were not able to receive, namely immortality. For the race remains for ever, though particular specimens perish, a marvel in very truth and the work of God.<sup>a</sup> And if man, a small portion of the All, is everlasting, the world must surely be uncreated and therefore is indestructible.

XIV. Critolaus in his contention used also this 70 further kind of argument: That which causes itself to be healthy is free from disease, that which causes itself to be wakeful is wakeful, and if this is so, that which causes itself to exist is everlasting. But the world, since it causes all other things to exist, causes itself to exist, and therefore the world is everlasting.

This is not all. A further point worth considera- 71 tion is that every created thing must in its beginning be quite imperfect and only as time advances grow to its full perfection. Consequently if the world has been created it was once, if I too<sup>b</sup> may borrow a Philo here speaks in the person of Critolaus, forgetting that Critolaus would not know what arguments had been adduced in the earlier parts of the treatise. This goes to show that Critolaus is throughout these sections paraphrased rather than quoted.

PHILO

- ποθ', ἵνα καὶ γὰρ χρήσωμαι τοῖς ἡλικιῶν ὀνόμασι, κομιδῇ νήπιος, ἐπιβαίνων δ' αἰθῆς ἐνιαυτῶν περιόδοις καὶ μήκεσι χρόνων ὅψε καὶ μόλις ἐτελειώθη·
- 72 τὸν γὰρ μακροβιωτάτου βραδεῖα ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἀκμή.
 [496] τὸν δὲ | κόσμον εἴ τις νομίζει χρήσασθαι ποτε ταῖς τοιαύταις μεταβολαῖς, ἀθεραπεύτω μανίᾳ κεκρατημένος μὴ ἀγνοεῖτω<sup>1</sup>. δῆλον γὰρ ὡς οὐ μόνον αὐτοῦ τὸ σωματοειδὲς αὐξηθήσεται, λήψεται δὲ καὶ ὁ νοῦς ἐπίδοσιν, ἐπεὶ καὶ οἱ φθείροντες αὐτὸν λογικόν εἶναι ὑπονοοῦσιν. οὐκοῦν ἀνθρώπου τρόπον ἐν ἀρχῇ μὲν τῆς γενέσεως ἄλογος ἔσται, περὶ δὲ τὴν ἀκμάζουσαν ἡλικίαν λογικός· ἅπερ οὐ μόνον λέγειν ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπονοεῖν ἀσεβές· τὸν γὰρ τελειότατον ὀρατῶν περίβολον καὶ (θεοὺς)<sup>2</sup> τοὺς ἐν μέρει περιέχοντα κληρούχους πῶς οὐκ ἄξιον ὑπολαμβάνειν αἰεὶ τέλειον κατὰ τε σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, ἀμέτοχον κηρῶν, αἷς τὸ γενητὸν καὶ φθαρτὸν πᾶν συνέζευκται;
- 74 XV. Πρὸς δὲ τούτοις φησὶ τριττὰς αἰτίας δίχα τῶν ἕξωθεν ὑποβεβλήσθαι ζώοις τελευτῆς, νόσον, γῆρας, ἔνδειαν, ὧν οὐδεμιᾶ τὸν κόσμον ἀλωτὸν εἶναι· πεπηγέναι τε γὰρ ἐξ ὅλων τῶν στοιχείων, ὡς ὑπὸ μηδενὸς ὑπολειφθέντος καὶ ἀπελευθεριάζοντος μέρους βιασθῆναι, κατακρατεῖν τε τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀγνοεῖσθω.

<sup>2</sup> θεοὺς in this place is my insertion. Cumont and Cohn have τῶν ὀρατῶν (θεῶν). It seems to me necessary, for the sense, to state that the κληρούχοι of the περίβολος are gods, and with this insertion it is not necessary with Cumont to suppose that κληρούχους is corrupt. On the other hand ὀρατῶν can stand alone. Bernays also does not insert either θεῶν or θεοὺς, translates καὶ τοὺς . . . κληρούχους "welcher die einzelnen göttlichen Theilmächte umschliesst," and περίβολος by "Tempelbezirk." He says that περίβολος is speci-

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 71-74

term from those applied to the stages of human life, a mere infant, and afterwards progressing through the revolutions of years and long stretches of time, was at long last and with difficulty brought to perfection. For the very long-lived is necessarily slow to reach its culmination. Now if anyone thinks that the world has passed through such changes, he had better recognize that he is under the sway of a fatal delusion. For clearly not only will the world's bodily parts increase but its mind also will make advances, for those who preach its destruction also suppose that it is rational. So then like a man, when it originally comes into being it will be irrational, but at the age of culmination rational. Such things are impious not merely to speak but even to think. Surely this the all-perfect which embraces things visible wherein the several occupants included are gods, deserves to be held ever perfect both in body and soul, immune from the plagues inseparable from all that is created and destructible. 72 73

XV. In addition to all this Critolaus says<sup>a</sup> that 74 apart from external causes of death to living creatures, there are three to which they are subject, disease, old age and privation, to none of which the world can fall a prey. For it is compacted from the whole of the elements, so that it cannot suffer violence from any part that has been left out and defies control.

<sup>a</sup> The argument in this section is substantially the same as in §§ 20 ff., but it is expressed in a different way in many respects, particularly at the end.

---

ally applied to temples. But I do not think the index bears this out for Philo. Though in several places it is used with reference to the temple, it does not seem in itself to mean more than "enclosure."

PHILO

δυνάμεων, ἐξ ὧν αἱ ἀσθένειαι, τὰς δ' ὑπεικούσας ἄνοσον καὶ ἀγήρων αὐτὸν διαφυλάττειν, αὐταρκέστατόν τε αὐτὸν αὐτῷ καὶ ἀνεπιδεᾶ παντὸς γεγονέναι, μηδενὸς τῶν εἰς διαμονὴν ὑστερίζοντα, τὰς κενώσεις καὶ πληρώσεως ἐν μέρει διαδοχὰς ἀπώσασθαι, αἷς διὰ τὴν ἄμουσον ἀπληστίαν τὰ ζῶα χρῆσθαι, θάνατον ἀντὶ ζωῆς μνώμενα ἢ, τό γε ἀσφαλέστερον εἰπεῖν, οἰκτρότερον βίον ἀπωλείας.

75 Ἔτι τοίνυν, εἰ μὲν μηδεμίᾳ φύσιν αἰδίδιος ἐωρᾶτο, ἦττον ἂν ἐδόκουν οἱ φθορὰν εἰσηγούμενοι τοῦ κόσμου, μηδὲν γὰρ ἔχοντες παράδειγμα αἰδιότητος, [ἐδόκουν οἱ φθορὰν εἰσηγούμενοι τοῦ κόσμου ἂν] εὐπροφάσιστα ἀδικεῖν.<sup>1</sup> ἐπεὶ δὲ εἰμαρμένη κατὰ τοὺς ἄριστα φυσιολογοῦντας ἄναρχος καὶ ἀτελεύτητός ἐστιν, εἴρουσα τὰς ἐκάστων ἀνελλιπῶς καὶ ἀδιαστάτως αἰτίας, τί δή ποτ' οὐχὶ καὶ τὴν τοῦ κόσμου φύσιν λεκτέον εἶναι μακραιώνα, τὴν τάξιν τῶν ἀτάκτων, τὴν ἁρμονίαν τῶν ἀναρμόστων, τὴν συμφωνίαν τῶν ἀσυμφώνων, τὴν ἔνωσιν τῶν διεστηκότων, τὴν ξύλων μὲν καὶ λίθων ἕξιν,

<sup>1</sup> Bernays has ἀνευ προφάσεως for the mss. εὐπροφάσιστα, Cumont ἦττον ἂν ἠδίκουν οἱ φθορὰν εἰσηγούμενοι τοῦ κόσμου, μηδὲν γὰρ ἔχοντες παράδειγμα αἰδιότητος ἐδόκουν ἂν εὐπροφάσιστα διδάσκειν. I have simply printed Cohn's text rather than adopt that of Bernays or Cumont, neither of which I feel to be quite satisfactory. Cohn discusses his text in Hermes (1916) and professes himself quite satisfied with it (he defends the anacoluthic γὰρ by other examples). But I cannot translate it, and the translation I have given involves either the omission of ἦττον or the substitution of ἀνευ προφάσεως for εὐπροφάσιστα.

<sup>a</sup> This end of the section seems to be a not very happy adaptation of Timaeus 73 A, where the bowels are said to 236

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 74-75

It has dominion over the forces which produce infirmities, and the subservience of these forces keeps it from disease and decay of age. It is absolutely self-sufficient and independent of every need. It is lacking in nothing which can ensure permanence and has excluded the successive alternations between inanition and repletion, which living creatures experience through their gross avidity and thereby court not life but death, or to speak more cautiously, an existence more pitiful than extinction.<sup>a</sup>

Again if there was no everlasting form of nature <sup>75</sup> to be seen, those who propound the destruction of the world might seem to have a good excuse for their iniquity, since they had no example of perpetual existence before them. But since according to the best professors of natural philosophy, fate has no beginning or end, being a chain <sup>b</sup> connecting the causes of each event in un failing continuity without a gap or break, why should we not also declare that the nature of the world or cosmic system is age-long, since it is order of the disordered, adjustment of the unadjusted, concord of the discordant, unification of the discrepant, appearing as cohesion in wood and have been formed so that the food should not pass too quickly, and so, producing ἀπληστία, make the whole race ἀφιδόσφον καὶ ἄμουσον through gluttony (γαστριμαργία). Grammatically ἄμουσον might agree with γαστριμαργίαν or even with ἀπληστίαν, and so perhaps Philo (or Critolaus ?) took it.

<sup>b</sup> This is an allusion to the supposed connexion between εἰμαρμένη and εἰρμός, which would involve connexion with εἶρω also, cf. De Mut. 135 ἡ εἰμαρμένη, ἀκολουθία καὶ ἀναλογία τῶν συμπάντων εἰρμὸν ἔχουσα ἀδιάλυτον. See note there (vol. v. p. 590), where reference is given to S. V. F. ii. 918 ἡ εἰμαρμένη εἰρμός τις οὐσα αἰτιῶν ἀπαράβατος· οὕτω γὰρ αὐτὴν οἱ Στωικοὶ ὀρίζονται. It may be noted that here it appears in a non-Stoical argument.

PHILO

σπαρτῶν δὲ καὶ δένδρων φύσιν, ψυχὴν δὲ ζώων ἀπάντων, ἀνθρώπων δὲ νοῦν καὶ λόγον, ἀρετὴν δὲ σπουδαίων τελειοτάτην; εἰ δ' ἡ τοῦ κόσμου φύσις ἀγέννητός τε καὶ ἀφθαρτος, δῆλον ὅτι καὶ ὁ κόσμος, αἰωνίῳ συνεχόμενος καὶ διακρατούμενος δεσμῷ.

- 76 Νικηθέντες δὲ ὑπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας καὶ τῶν ἀντιδοξούντων ἔνιοι μετεβάλοντο· προσκλητικὴν γὰρ [497] ἔχει δύναμιν τὸ κάλλος, τὸ δ' ἀληθὲς | δαιμονίως ἐστὶ καλόν, ὡς τὸ ψεῦδος ἐκτόπως αἰσχροῦν. Βοηθὸς γοῦν ὁ Σιδώνιος<sup>1</sup> καὶ Παναίτιος,<sup>2</sup> ἄνδρες ἐν τοῖς Στωικοῖς δόγμασιν ἰσχυρότες, ἅτε θεόληπτοι, τὰς ἐκπυρώσεις καὶ παλιγγενεσίας καταλιπόντες πρὸς ὀσιώτερον<sup>3</sup> δόγμα τὸ τῆς ἀφθαρσίας 77 τοῦ κόσμου παντὸς ἠὺτομόλησαν. λέγεται δὲ καὶ [502] Διογένης ἠνίκα νέος ἦν συνεπιγραφάμενος | τῷ δόγματι τῆς ἐκπυρώσεως ὁπὲ τῆς ἡλικίας ἐνδοιάσας ἐπισχεῖν· οὐ γὰρ νεότητος ἀλλὰ γήρως τὰ σεμνὰ καὶ περιμάχητα διδεῖν, καὶ μάλισθ' ὅσα μὴ δικάζει ἢ ἄλογος καὶ ἀπατηλὸς αἴσθησις ἀλλ' ὁ καθαρῶ- 78 τας καὶ ἀκραιφνέστατος νοῦς. XVI. ἀποδείξει δ' οἱ περὶ τὸν Βοηθὸν κέχρηται πιθανωτάταις, ἃς αὐτίκα λέξομεν· εἰ, φασί, γενητὸς καὶ φθαρτὸς ὁ κόσμος, ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος τι γενήσεται, ὅπερ καὶ τοῖς Στωικοῖς ἀτοπώτατον εἶναι δοκεῖ. διὰ τί;

<sup>1</sup> Mangey and earlier editors read καὶ Ποσειδώνιος, which is rejected by later editors on the grounds that Boethus is elsewhere called a Sidonian and that Posidonius upheld the doctrine of ἐκπύρωσις.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πάνεπος.

<sup>3</sup> So Cohn following Cumont for the mss. θειώτερον, which Bernays retains, translating "göttlicheren." I do not feel that it is impossible.

---

<sup>a</sup> For the fourfold classification cf. particularly Quod 238

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 75-78

stone, growth in crops and trees, conscious life in all animals, mind and reason in men and the perfection of virtue in the good?<sup>a</sup> And if the nature of the world is uncreated and indestructible, clearly the world also is the same, held together as it is by the might of an eternal bond.

Some conquered by truth and the arguments of 76 their opponents have changed their views. For beauty has power to call us to it and truth is marvellously beautiful as falsehood is monstrously ugly. Thus Boethus of Sidon and Panaetius,<sup>b</sup> powerful supporters of the Stoic doctrines, did under divine inspiration abandon the conflagrations and regenerations and deserted to the more religious doctrine that the whole world was indestructible. It is said 77 too that Diogenes<sup>c</sup> in his youth subscribed to the doctrine of the conflagration but in later years felt doubts and suspended judgement, for it is not given to youth but to old age to discern things precious and worthy of reverence, particularly those which are judged, not by unreasoning and deceitful sense, but by mind when absolutely pure and unalloyed. XVI. The demonstrations given by the school of 78 Boethus are very convincing and I will proceed to state them. If, they say, the world is created and destructible we shall have something created out of the non-existent and even the Stoics regard this as quite preposterous. Why so? Because it is im-

Deus 35 ff. This too appears to be an exclusively Stoic theory (see Zeller, Stoics, p. 196). The addition of the fifth quality "virtue in the good" I have not seen elsewhere.

<sup>b</sup> Boethus, middle of third century B.C. Panaetius, second century.

<sup>c</sup> Diogenes (the Babylonian), late third and early second century.

PHILO

[503] ὅτι οὐδεμίαν φθοροποιὸν | αἰτίαν εὐρεῖν ἔστιν, οὐτ' ἐντὸς οὐτ' ἐκτὸς, ἢ τὸν κόσμον ἀνελεῖ· ἐκτὸς μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲν ἔστιν ὅτι μὴ τάχα πού κενόν, τῶν στοιχείων ἀποκριθέντων εἰς αὐτὸν ὀλοκλήρων, εἴσω δ' οὐδὲν νόσημα τοιοῦτον, ὃ γένοιτ' ἂν αἴτιον θεῶ<sup>1</sup> τοσοῦτω διαλύσεως. εἰ δ' ἀναιτίως φθείρεται, δῆλον ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος ἔσται ἡ γένεσις τῆς φθορᾶς, ὅπερ οὐδ' ἡ διάνοια παραδέξεται.

79 Καὶ μὴν φασιν, ὅτι γενικοὶ τρόποι φθορᾶς εἰσι τρεῖς· ὃ τε κατὰ διαίρεσιν καὶ ὃ κατὰ ἀναίρεσιν τῆς ἐπεχούσης ποιότητος καὶ ὃ κατὰ σύγχυσιν. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἐκ διεστηκόντων, αἰπόλια, βουκόλια, χοροί, στρατεύματα, ἢ πάλιν ἐκ συναπτομένων<sup>2</sup> σώματα παγέντα διαστάσει καὶ διαιρέσει λύεται· κατὰ δὲ ἀναίρεσιν τῆς ἐπεχούσης ποιότητος ὁ μετασχηματιζόμενος κηρὸς ἢ καταλεινόμενος,<sup>3</sup> ἵνα μῆδὲ ἑτεροειδῆ τινα παράσχη τύπον μορφῆς· κατὰ δὲ σύγχυσιν, ὡς ἡ παρὰ ἰατροῖς τετραφάρμακος· αἱ γὰρ δυνάμεις τῶν συνενεχθέντων ἠφανίσθησαν

80 εἰς ἐξαιρέτου μιᾶς γένεσιν ἀποτελεσθείσης. ποίω δὴ τούτων ἄξιον τὸν κόσμον φθείρεσθαι φάναι; τῷ κατὰ διαίρεσιν; ἀλλ' οὔτε ἐκ διεστηκόντων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τῷ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. συναπτόμενον.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. καὶ λεαινόμενος.

<sup>a</sup> This again is to some extent the same argument as that of §§ 20 and 74. But to these dissident Stoics the main point is that since there is nothing to cause destruction either within or without the world, the destruction, if it came, would come from the non-existent, which is unthinkable.

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps "inherent." I have not found any examples of such a meaning nor yet of "prevailing." Bernays "umhaftenden," Mangey "primariae." Later we have simply ποιότητος.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 78-80

possible to find any destructive cause either within or without to make away with the world. For there is nothing outside it except possibly a void, since the elements have been completely merged into it and within it there is no distemper such as to cause a dissolution of so great a deity. And if it is destroyed without a cause, clearly the origin of the destruction will arise from what does not exist and this the understanding will reject as not even thinkable.<sup>a</sup>

Further they say that the methods of destruction 79 are of three kinds, namely, dismemberment, annihilation of the prevailing<sup>b</sup> quality and amalgamation.<sup>c</sup> Combinations of detached units, such as herds of goats or oxen, choirs and armies, or again bodies compacted of conjoined parts are disjoined by detachment and dismemberment. We find annihilation of the prevailing quality in wax when moulded into a new form or when smoothed out without taking any other different shape. We have amalgamation in the quadruple drug<sup>d</sup> used by physicians, for the properties of the substances collected vanish and the effect thus produced is one single value of a special kind. Which of these can we say is adequate for the destruc- 80 tion of the world? Dismemberment? The world is neither composed of detached units, so that its parts <sup>c</sup> Cf. De Conf. 183-187, where the use of the word throughout the treatise makes it necessary to translate "confusion," but here it can be avoided. But I do not know of any word which suggests the φθορά τῶν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ποιητήτων. Possibly "fusion" may be better than "amalgamation," cf. the quotation from Chrysippus in S. V. F. ii. 473, given in vol. iv. p. 558.

<sup>d</sup> The same illustration is given in De Conf. 187, where the drug is said to be a compound of wax, tallow, resin and pitch.

PHILO

- ἐστίν, ὡς τὰ μέρη σκεδασθῆναι, οὔτε ἐκ συναπτομένων, ὡς διαλυθῆναι, οὔτε τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον τοῖς ἡμετέροις ἦνται σώμασι· τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἐπικήρως τε ἐξ ἑαυτῶν ἔχει καὶ δυναστεύεται πρὸς μυρίων ὑφ' ὧν βλάπτεται, τοῦ δ' ἀήττητος ἡ ῥώμη πολλῇ
- 81 τινι περιουσίᾳ πάντων κατακρατοῦσα. ἀλλ' ἀναιρέσει παντελεῖ τῆς ποιότητος; ἀλλ' ἀμήχανον τοῦτό γε· μένει γὰρ κατὰ τοὺς τάναντία αἵρουμένους ἡ τῆς διακοσμήσεως ποιότης ἐπ' ἐλάττονος οὐσίας τῆς τοῦ Διὸς σταλεῖσα<sup>1</sup> κατὰ τὴν ἐκπύρω-
- 82 σιν. ἀλλὰ τῷ κατὰ σύγχυσιν; ἄπαγε, δεήσει γὰρ πάλιν εἰς τὸ μὴ ὄν γίνεσθαι τὴν φθορὰν παραδέχεσθαι. τοῦ χάριν; ὅτι εἰ μὲν ἕκαστον ἐν μέρει τῶν στοιχείων ἐφθείρετο, μεταβολὴν ἐδύνατο τὴν εἰς ἕτερον δέχεσθαι, πάντων δὲ συλλήβδην ἀθρώων κατὰ σύγχυσιν ἀναιρουμένων, ἀναγκαῖον<sup>2</sup> ὑπονοεῖν τὸ ἀδύνατον.
- 83 Ἐτι πρὸς τούτοις, ἐὰν ἐκπυρωθῇ, φασί, τὰ πάντα, τί κατ' ἐκείνον ὁ θεὸς πράξει τὸν χρόνον; ἢ τὸ παράπαν οὐδέν; καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· νυνὶ μὲν γὰρ ἕκαστα ἐφορᾷ καὶ πάντων οἶα γνήσιος πατὴρ ἐπιτροπεύει καί, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἡνιόχου καὶ κυβερνήτου τρόπον ἡμιοχεῖ καὶ πηδα-λιουχεῖ τὰ σύμπαντα, ἡλίῳ τε καὶ σελήνῃ καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις πλάνησι καὶ ἀπλανέσιν ἔτι δ' ἀέρι καὶ τοῖς

<sup>1</sup> So Bernays from τῇ τούτου ἰδιοσταλεῖσα found in the corresponding passage of the De Mundo, the spurious work made up of centos from Philo. The mss. themselves leave blanks of various length before σταλεῖσα. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἀνάγκη.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 80-83

can be dispersed, nor of conjoint parts which can be disjoined, nor is it a unity of the same kind as that of our bodies, for they are in themselves perishable, and under the sway of innumerable instruments of mischief, while the world's strength is invincible and far more than sufficient to give it domination over all. What of a complete annihilation of its quality? 81 This is impossible, for according to those who hold the opposite view, the quality of its original construction remains at the conflagration, though contracted, in a diminished substance, namely, Zeus.<sup>a</sup> What of amalgamation? Nonsense. For again we 82 shall have to admit that destruction passes into non-existence. Why? Because if each of the elements were severally destroyed each might be capable of changing into something else, but if all are annihilated in a body together by amalgamation we should be obliged to suppose something which is impossible.

Moreover if all things are as they say consumed 83 in the conflagration, what will God be doing during that time? Will He do nothing at all? That surely is the natural inference. For at present He surveys each thing, guardian of all as though He were indeed their father, guiding in very truth the chariot and steering the bark of the universe, the defender of the sun and moon and stars whether fixed or wandering, and also the air and the other parts of the world, co-sovereign of the world and subordinate gods; in other words, between the universal divine power as a Unity working in the world and its individual parts and manifestations. The former they denoted by the term Zeus; to the latter they applied the names of the subordinate gods" (Zeller, Stoics (Eng. trans.), p. 328). Thus at the ἐκπύρωσις, such Unity alone remained.

PHILO

<ἄλλοις> μέρεσι τοῦ κόσμου παριστάμενος καὶ συνδρῶν ὅσα πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὄλου διαμονὴν καὶ τὴν 84 κατ' ὀρθὸν λόγον ἀνυπαίτιον διοίκησιν. πάντων [504] δ' ἀναιρεθέντων, ὑπ' ἀργίας καὶ ἀπραξίας | δεινῆς ἀβιώτῳ βίῳ χρήσεται· οὐ τί γένοιτ' ἂν ἀτοπώτερον; ὀκνῶ λέγειν, ὃ μηδὲ θέμις ὑπονοεῖν, ὅτι ἀκολουθήσει θεῷ θάνατος, εἴ γε καὶ ἡρεμία· τὸ γὰρ ἀεικίνητον ἔαν ἀέλης ψυχῆς, καὶ αὐτὴν πάντως συνανελεῖς· ψυχὴ δὲ τοῦ κόσμου κατὰ τοὺς ἀντιδοξοῦντας ὁ θεός.

85 XVII. Ἐκεῖνο δ' οὐκ ἀνάξιον<sup>1</sup> διαπορῆσαι, τίνα τρόπον ἔσται παλιγγενεσία, πάντων εἰς πῦρ ἀναλυθέντων· ἐξαναλωθείσης γὰρ τῆς οὐσίας ὑπὸ πυρός, ἀνάγκη καὶ τὸ πῦρ οὐκέτ' ἔχον τροφήν ἀποσβεσθῆναι. μένοντος μὲν οὖν, ὃ σπερματικὸς τῆς διακοσμῆσεως ἐσώζेत' <ἂν> λόγος, ἀναιρεθέντος δὲ συνανήρηται. τὸ δ' ἐστὶν ἔκθεσμον καὶ ἀσέβημα ἤδη διπλοῦν, μὴ μόνον φθορὰν τοῦ κόσμου κατηγορεῖν ἀλλὰ καὶ παλιγγενεσίαν ἀναιρεῖν, ὥσπερ ἐν ἀκοσμία καὶ ἀπραξία καὶ τοῖς πλημμελέσι πᾶσι 86 χαίροντος θεοῦ. τὸν δὲ λόγον ἀκριβέστερον ὧδε διερευνητέον· πυρὸς τριπτὸν εἶδος· τὸ μὲν ἄνθραξ, τὸ δὲ φλόξ, τὸ δὲ αὐγὴ. ἄνθραξ μὲν οὖν ἐστὶ πῦρ ἐν οὐσίᾳ γεώδει, ὃ τρόπον ἕξεως

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οὐκ ἄξιον.

---

<sup>a</sup> The thought of God as "the soul of the world" is mentioned by Philo, Leg. All. i. 91, De Mig. 179 and 181, in each case with a certain amount of disapproval (see note on Leg. All. i. 91, vol. i. p. 478). The words κατὰ τοὺς ἀντι-244

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 83-86

operating in all that is needful for the preservation of the whole and the faultless management of it which right reason demands. But if all things are 84 annihilated inactivity and dire unemployment will render His life unworthy of the name and what could be more monstrous than this? I shrink from saying, for the very thought is a blasphemy, that quiescence will entail as a consequence the death of God, for if you annihilate the perpetual motion of the soul you will annihilate the soul itself also and, according to our opponents, God is the soul of the world.<sup>a</sup>

XVII. Another question worthy of examination is: 85 How will the rebirth come about if all things are resolved into fire? For if the substance is consumed by fire, the fire too must be extinguished having nothing any longer to feed it. Now if the fire remains the seminal principle<sup>b</sup> of the ordered construction would be preserved, but if the fire perishes that principle perishes with it, and it is an enormity, a twofold sacrilege, not only to predicate destruction of the world but to do away with the rebirth as though God rejoiced in disorder and inactivity and every kind of faultiness. But we must examine 86 it more carefully. Consider it from this point of view. Fire takes three forms: these are the live coal, the flame and the fire-light. Now live coal is fire embodied in an earthy substance, a sort of δοξοῦντας quite suit Boethus, if we are still having his opinion. For he definitely rejected the common Stoic view that God was contained in the universe (Zeller, p. 152).

<sup>b</sup> Or "Generative Reason" or "Seed Power" (Arnold). By the term "Generative Reason" must be understood the creative and forming forces in nature, which have collectively produced the universe, and particular exercises of which (σπερματικοὶ λόγοι) produce individual things (Zeller).

PHILO

πνευματικῆς πεφώλευκε καὶ ἔλλοχα δι' ὅλης ἄχρι περάτων τεταμένον· φλόξ δέ ἐστιν ὅπερ ἐκ τροφῆς αἴρεται μετεωριζόμενον· αὐγὴ δὲ τὸ ἀποστελλό-μενον ἐκ φλογός, συνεργὸν ὀφθαλμοῖς εἰς τὴν τῶν ὄρατῶν ἀντίληψιν. μέσην δὲ χώραν αὐγῆς τε καὶ ἄνθρακος εἴληχε φλόξ· σβεσθεῖσα μὲν γὰρ εἰς ἄνθρακα τελευτᾷ, ζωπυρουμένη δ' ἔχει φέγγος, ὃ 87 τὴν καυστικὴν ἀφηρημένον δύναμιν ἀστράπτει. εἰ κατὰ τὴν ἐκπύρωσιν οὖν τὸν κόσμον ἀναλύεσθαι φαίμεν, ἄνθραξ μὲν οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο, διότι παμπληθὲς ὑπολείπεται τοῦ γεώδους, ᾧ τὸ πῦρ ἐγ-κατελήφθαι συμβέβηκεν, ἀρέσκει δὲ μηδὲν τότε τῶν ἄλλων ὑφεστάναι σωμάτων, ἀλλὰ γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ 88 καὶ ἀέρα εἰς ἄκρατον πῦρ ἀναλελύσθαι. καὶ μὴν οὐδὲ φλόξ· ἄμμα<sup>1</sup> γὰρ τροφῆς ἐστι, μηδενὸς δὲ καταλειφθέντος, ἀτροφήσασα αὐτίκα ἀποσβεσθήσεται. τούτοις ἔπεται τὸ μηδ' αὐγὴν ἀποτελεῖσθαι· καθ' ἑαυτὴν γὰρ ὑπόστασιν οὐκ ἔχει, ρεῖ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν προτέρων, ἄνθρακος καὶ φλογός, ἀφ' οὗ μὲν ἐλάττων, πολλὴ δ' ἀπὸ φλογός· χεῖται γὰρ ἐπὶ μήκιστον· ἐκείνων δ', ὡς ἐδείχθη, κατὰ τὴν ἐκπύρωσιν οὐκ ὄντων, οὐδ' ἂν αὐγὴ γένοιτο· καὶ γὰρ ἢ μεθημερινὴ πολλὴ καὶ βαθεῖα αὐγὴ, τὸν ὑπὸ γῆς ἡλίου δρόμον ἰόντος, εὐθύς ἀφανίζεται νυκτὶ

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. ἄμα.

---

<sup>a</sup> Bernays "geistiger Zusammenhalt." But see the definition of ἐξίς in Quod Deus 35 as πνεῦμα ἀναστρέφον ἐφ' ἑαυτό, and note on Quis Rerum 242 "the three terms πνεῦμα, ἐξίς, τόνος for a permeating and binding force seem more or less convertible." See S. V. F. ii. 439-462.

<sup>b</sup> Or "kindled by." The word ἄμμα is common enough

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 86-88

permeating current <sup>a</sup> which has taken the fuel for its lair and lurks there extending through it from end to end. Flame is what rises up into the air from that which feeds it. Fire-light is what is sent out from the flame and co-operates with the eyes to give apprehension of things visible. The middle place between the light and the coal is held by flame, for when it is extinguished it dies away into coal, but when kindled into a blaze it has a radiance which flashes from it, though destitute of combusive force. If we say that at the conflagration the world is dis- 87 solved there would be no coal there, because if there were the great quantity of earthy matter which is the substance in which fire is contained will be still remaining and it is one of their tenets that nothing else of other bodies then subsists and that earth, water and air are resolved into fire pure and simple. Further there is no flame either, for flame is linked 88 on to <sup>b</sup> the fuel and when nothing is left it will be extinguished for lack of sustenance. It follows also that the light is not produced. For it has no existence of itself but issues from the first two, the coal and the flame, in a smaller stream from the coal but a great outflow from the flame, for it is diffused to a very great distance. But since the other two, as has been shown, do not exist at the conflagration, there will be no light either. For when the sun takes its course under the earth, the daylight, great and far-reaching as it is, is immediately hidden from our sight by the night, especially if it is moonless.

for a knot or fastening, but there is no example = "the thing fastened," though such a meaning might easily have been developed. Nor is there any example = "the thing kindled," though there is ἀναμμα in this sense. Perhaps we should read ἀναμμα.

[505] καὶ μάλιστα ἀσελήνω. | οὐ τοίνυν ἐκπυροῦται ὁ κόσμος, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἀφθαρτος· εἰ δ' ἐκπυρωθήσεται, ἕτερος οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο.

- 89 XVIII. Διὸ καὶ τινες τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς Στοᾶς ὀξύδερκέστερον ἐκ μακροῦ θεασάμενοι τὸν ἐπιφερόμενον ἔλεγχον ἠξίωσαν ὥσπερ θανατῶντι κεφαλαίῳ βοηθήματα προευτρεπίζεσθαι· τὰ δ' οὐδὲν ἦν ὄφελος. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ αἴτιον κινήσεως ἐστὶ τὸ πῦρ, κινήσεις δὲ γενέσεως ἀρχή, γενέσθαι δ' ἄνευ κινήσεως ὀτιοῦν ἀδύνατον, ἔφασαν ὅτι μετὰ τὴν ἐκπύρωσιν, ἐπειδὴν ὁ νέος κόσμος μέλλῃ δημιουργεῖσθαι, σύμπαν μὲν τὸ πῦρ οὐ σβέννυται, ποσὴ δὲ τις αὐτοῦ μοῖρα ὑπολείπεται· πάνυ γὰρ ἠύλαβήθησαν, μὴ σβεσθέντος ἀθροῦς μείνη τὰ πάντα ἡσυχάσαντα ἀδιακόσμητα, τοῦ τῆς κινήσεως
- 90 αἰτίου μηκέτ' ὄντος. εὐρεσιλογούντων δὲ πλάσματα ταῦτ' ἐστὶ καὶ κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας τεχνάζοντων. τί δήποτε; ὅτι τὸν κόσμον ἐκπυρωθέντα γενέσθαι μὲν ἄνθρακι παραπλήσιον ἀμήχανον, ὡς δέδεικται, γεώδους πολλῆς ἂν ὑπολειφθείσης οὐσίας, ἣ δεήσει τὸ πῦρ ἔλλοχᾶν, ἴσως δ' οὐδ' ἐκπυρώσεως τότε κρατούσης, εἴ γε<sup>1</sup> μένει τὸ στοιχείων βαρύτατον καὶ δυσαναλωτότατον ἔτι, γῆ μὴ διαλυθεῖσα, μεταβάλλειν δὲ ἢ εἰς φλόγα ἢ εἰς αὐγὴν ἀναγκαῖον, εἰς μὲν φλόγα, ὡς ᾤετο Κλεάνθης, εἰς δ' αὐγὴν, ὡς
- 91 ὁ Χρύσιππος. ἀλλ' εἴ γε φλόξ γίνεται, τραπομένη πρὸς σβέσιν ἅπαξ οὐκ ἐκ μέρους ἀλλ' ἀθροῶ σβεσθήσεται· συνυπάρχει γὰρ τῇ τροφῇ<sup>2</sup>. διὸ πολλῆς μὲν οὐσῆς ἐπιδίδωσι καὶ χεῖται, στελλομένης δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εἴτε.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἡ τροφή.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 88-91

Therefore the world is not consumed by conflagration but is indestructible, and if it should be so consumed another world could not come into existence.

XVIII. This has induced some of the Stoic school, 89 whose keener sight discerned from a distance the oncoming refutation, to assist their cardinal doctrine when lying as it were at the point of death, but without avail. They said that since fire is the cause of motion and motion the origin of generation, without which it is impossible that anything should be generated, after the conflagration when the new world has to be created all the fire in it is not extinguished but a part of it of some amount remains. For they were filled with great alarm lest, if the whole mass was extinguished, the universe would remain at a standstill and not be reconstructed, since there was no longer anything to cause motion. But 90 these are the fictions of ingenious quibblers who are scheming to overthrow truth. Why so? Because the world when consumed by fire cannot become like live coal, as has been shown, since a lot of earthy matter would be left in which the fire will be bound to lurk encamped, and in that case perhaps we may say that the conflagration has still to establish its power, since the heaviest and most resistant of the elements, namely, earth, remains undissolved. It must therefore either change into fire as Cleanthes or light as Chrysippus thought. But if it becomes 91 flame, once it starts being extinguished it will not be extinguished partially but altogether.<sup>a</sup> For its existence is bound up with its feeder and therefore if that feeder is plentiful it increases and diffuses <sup>a</sup> Or "totally and simultaneously," and so below, § 92.

PHILO

- μειοῦται. τεκμηριώσαιοιτο δ' ἄν τις ἀπὸ τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν τὸ γινόμενον· ὁ λύχνος, ἕως μὲν τις ἔλαιον ἄρδει, περιφεγγεστάτην δίδωσι φλόγα, ἐπειδὴν δ' ἐπίσχη, δαπανήσας ὅσον τῆς τροφῆς λείψανον αὐτίκα κατεσβέσθη, μηδὲν μέρος ταμειυσάμενος
- 92 τῆς φλογός. εἰ δὲ μὴ τοῦτο ἄλλ' αὐγὴ γίνεται, πάλιν ἀθρόα μεταβάλλει. διὰ τί; ὅτι ὑπόστασιν ἰδίαν οὐκ ἔχει, γεννᾶται δ' ἐκ φλογός, ἧς ὅλης δι' ὄλων σβέσιν λαμβανούσης, ἀνάγκη καὶ τὴν αὐγὴν μὴ κατὰ μέρος ἄλλ' ἀθρόαν ἀναιρεῖσθαι· ὁ γὰρ πρὸς τροφήν φλόξ, τοῦτο αὐγὴ πρὸς φλόγα· καθάπερ οὖν τροφῇ συναναιρεῖται φλόξ, καὶ αὐγὴ
- 93 φλογί. ὥστ' ἀμήχανον παλιγγενεσίαν τὸν κόσμον λαβεῖν, μηδενὸς ἐντυφομένου σπερματικοῦ λόγου, πάντων δὲ δαπανηθέντων, τῶν μὲν ἄλλων ὑπὸ πυρός, αὐτοῦ δ' ὑπ' ἐνδείας. ἐξ ὧν ἔστι δῆλον, ὅτι ἀγένητος καὶ ἀφθαρτος ὧν διατελεῖ.
- 94 XIX. Φέρε δ' οὖν, ὡς φησιν ὁ Χρύσιππος, τὸ ἀναστοιχειῶσαν τὴν διακόσμησιν εἰς αὐτὸ πῦρ τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀποτελεῖσθαι κόσμου σπέρμα εἶναι καὶ ὧν ἐπ' αὐτῷ πεφιλοσόφηκε μηδὲν ἐψεῦσθαι, πρῶτον
- [506] μὲν ὅτι καὶ ἐκ | σπέρματος ἢ γένεσις καὶ εἰς σπέρμα ἢ ἀνάλυσις, ἔπειτα δ' ὅτι φυσιολογεῖται ὁ κόσμος καὶ φύσις λογική, οὐ μόνον ἔμφυχος ὧν ἀλλὰ καὶ νοερός, πρὸς δὲ καὶ φρόνιμος, ἐκ τούτων τούναντίον οὐ βούλεται κατασκευάζεται, τὸ μηδέ-
- 95 ποτε φθαρῆσθαι. αἱ δὲ πίστεις προχειρόταται τοῖς συνεξετάζειν μὴ ἀποκνοῦσιν. οὐκοῦν ὁ κόσμος

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 142 ζῶον ὁ κόσμος καὶ λογικὸν καὶ ἔμφυχον καὶ νοερόν. The argument that follows does not depend upon these higher qualities, but they make it still 250

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 91-95

itself, but if that shrinks it diminishes. We can judge the result from our own experience. A lamp as long as we feed it with oil gives a very brilliant light, but if we cease to do so after using up what little of the feeder remains, it goes out at once as it has no reserve of flame to fall back upon. Alter- 92 natively if it becomes light, again the change is total. Why? Because it has no definite existence of its own but is generated from flame, and if the flame is wholly and absolutely extinguished the light must also perish not partially but totally. For what the flame is to the feeder that the light is to the flame. Therefore, just as the flame perishes with its feeder, the light perishes with the flame. Therefore it is im- 93 possible that the world should have a rebirth, as no embers of the seminal principle are alive within it, but all have been exhausted, the rest by the fire, the seminal principle by lack of sustenance. These facts show clearly that it continues uncreated and indestructible.

XIX. Now suppose that as Chrysippus says the 94 fire which has resolved the world as constructed into itself is the seed of the world which will result and that there is no fallacy in his theories on the subject, primarily that its generation comes from seed and its resolution passes into seed; secondly that natural philosophy shows the world to be also a rational being, having not only life but mind, and further a wise mind,<sup>a</sup> still these establish nothing of what he wishes to prove but its opposite, namely that it will never be destroyed. The proofs of this lie ready 95 at hand for those who do not shrink from examining more impossible that its qualities should be below even those of a plant.

PHILO

ἢ φυτόν, (ὡς) ἕοικεν,<sup>1</sup> ἢ ζῶον· ἀλλ' εἴτε φυτόν ἐστὶν εἴτε καὶ ζῶον, κατὰ τὴν ἐκπύρωσιν φθαρεῖς οὐδέποτε αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ γενήσεται σπέρμα. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ τὰ παρ' ἡμῖν, ὧν οὐδέν οὐκ ἔλαττον οὐ μείζον 96 ποτε φθαρὲν εἰς σπέρματος ἀπεκρίθη γένεσιν. οὐχ ὄρας ὅσαι μὲν ἡμέρων φυτῶν ὕλαι, ὅσαι δὲ ἀγρίων κατὰ πᾶν μέρος τῆς γῆς ἀνακέχυνται; τούτων τῶν δένδρων ἕκαστον, ἄχρι μὲν ὑγιαίνει τὸ στέ-λεχος, ἅμα τῷ καρπῷ καὶ τὸ ὄχυμα<sup>2</sup> τίκτει, μήκει δὲ χρόνων ἀφαιανθὲν (ἢ) καὶ ἄλλως αὐταῖς ρίζαις φθαρὲν οὐδέποτε τὴν ἀνάλυσιν εἰς σπέρμα 97 ἔλαβεν. τὸν αὐτὸν μέντοι τρόπον καὶ τὰ γένη τῶν ζῶων, ἃ μὴδὲ εἰπεῖν διὰ πλήθος ῥάδιον, ἄχρι μὲν περίεστι καὶ ἡβᾶ, σπέρμα προὔεται γόνιμον, τελευτήσαντα δ' οὐδαμῆ οὐδαμῶς γίνεται σπέρμα· καὶ γὰρ εὐῆθες ἄνθρωπον ζῶντα μὲν ὀγδόω μέρει ψυχῆς, ὃ καλεῖται γόνιμον, πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὁμοίου σπορὰν χρῆσθαι, τελευτήσαντα δὲ ὄλω<sup>3</sup> ἑαυτῷ· 98 θάνατος γὰρ οὐτι ζωῆς ἀνυσιμώτερος. ἄλλως τε τῶν ὄντων οὐδὲν ἐκ μόνου σπέρματος δίχα τῆς οἰκείας τροφῆς ἀποτελεῖται· σπέρμα γὰρ ἕοικεν ἀρχῇ, ἀρχὴ δὲ καθ' αὐτὴν οὐ τελειογονεῖ. μὴ γὰρ αὐτονομίης τὸν στάχυν ἐκ μόνου τοῦ καταβληθέντος ὑπὸ γεωργῶν εἰς τὰς ἀρούρας βλαστάνειν πυροῦ, τὸ δὲ πλείστον εἰς αὐξήσιν αὐτοῦ<sup>4</sup> συνεργεῖν ὑγρὰν τε καὶ ξηρὰν διττὴν ἐκ γῆς τροφήν· καὶ τὰ ἐν μήτραις μέντοι διαπλαττόμενα πέφυκεν οὐκ ἐκ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. φυτῷ ἕοικεν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ὄλον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὄχημα.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. αὐτῶν.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 110. The eight parts are the five senses, speech, the rational faculty and the generative.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 95-98

them. The world has evidently either plant-life or animal-life, but whether it has one or the other, if it is destroyed at the conflagration it will never become seed to itself. Take the testimony of the plants and animals in our experience; none of them lesser or greater ever when destroyed pass into the condition of producing seed. We see how many types of 96 cultivated trees and of uncultivated also are spread over every part of the earth. Each of these trees so long as the stem is sound produces with its fruit the germ of impregnation also. But when it withers away by length of time, or is destroyed in some other way with its roots as well it is never anywhere capable of being resolved into seed. In the same 97 way also the different kinds of animals so numerous that it would be difficult even to give their names, while they survive and are vigorous, emit generating seed, but when they are dead they never anywhere become seed. For it is foolish to suppose that a man when alive uses the eighth part <sup>a</sup> of his life principle, called the generative, to produce his like, but when dead uses his whole self. For death is not more efficacious than life. Besides nothing that exists is made 98 completely out of seed alone without its proper sustenance. Seed is analogous to beginning and the beginning by itself does not generate fullness. For neither must you suppose that the ear of wheat grows only from the seed laid down in the field by the husbandmen. The double sustenance from the earth, moist and dry is a very great factor in its growth and the embryos moulded in the womb cannot Philo has given the same classification in De Op. 117, though there the point is that the irrational soul has seven parts. So too De Agr. 30, Quod Det. 168, Quis Rerum 232.

PHILO

μόνου ζωογονεῖσθαι σπέρματος ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ἕξωθεν ἀρδομένης τροφῆς, ἣν ἡ κύουσα προσ-99 φέρεται. πρὸς δὴ τί ταῦτα λέγω; ὅτι κατὰ τὴν ἐκπύρωσιν σπέρμα μόνον ὑπολειφθήσεται, τροφῆς μὴ ὑπαρχούσης, ἀπάντων ὅσα τρέφειν ἔμελλεν εἰς πῦρ ἀναλυθέντων, ὥσθ' ὁ κατὰ τὴν παλιγγενεσίαν ἀποτελούμενος κόσμος χωλὴν καὶ ἀτελεῖ γένεσιν ἕξει, τοῦ μάλιστα πρὸς τελείωσιν συνεργούντος, ᾧ καθάπερ βάκτρῳ τινὶ τὴν σπερματικὴν ἀρχὴν ἐφιδρῦεσθαι συμβέβηκεν, ἐφθαρμένου. τοῦτο δ' ἦν 100 ἄτοπον ἐξ αὐτῆς ἐλεγχόμενον τῆς ἐναργείας.<sup>1</sup> ἔτι τοῖνυν ὅσα λαμβάνει τὴν γένεσιν ἐκ σπέρματος, μείζονα τὸν ὄγκον ἐστὶ τοῦ πεποιηκότος καὶ ἐν τόπῳ μείζονι θεωρεῖται· δένδρα γοῦν οὐρανομήκη πολλάκις ἀναβλαστάνει ἐκ βραχυτάτης κέγχρου καὶ ζῶα πιότατα καὶ περιμηκέστατα ἐξ ὀλίγου τοῦ προεθέντος ὑγροῦ. ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ μικρῶ πρότερον [507] εἰρημένον | συμβαίνει, κατὰ μὲν τὸν γειννιῶντα τῇ γενέσει χρόνον βραχύτερα τὰ γεννηθέντα εἶναι, μεγεθύνεσθαι δ' αὖθις ἄχρι παντελοῦς τελειώσεως.
 101 ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ παντός γενήσεται τούναντίον· τὸ μὲν γὰρ σπέρμα καὶ μείζον ἔσται καὶ πλείονα τόπον ἐφέξει, τὸ δ' ἀποτέλεσμα βραχύτερον καὶ ἐν ἐλάττω φανεῖται τόπῳ, καὶ ὁ κόσμος ἐκ σπέρματος συνιστάμενος οὐκ ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ὀλίγον ἐπιδώσει πρὸς αὔξησιν, ἀλλ' ἔμπαλιν ἐξ ὄγκου 102 μείζονος εἰς ἐλάττωνα συναيرهθήσεται. τὸ δὲ λεγόμενον ῥάδιον συνιδεῖν· ἅπαν σῶμα ἀναλυόμενον

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 98-102

be brought to life merely from the seed, but need also the fostering sustenance from outside which the pregnant mother administers. What is the purpose <sup>99</sup> of these remarks? It is to show that at the conflagration seed alone will remain and nothing will exist to nourish it, as all things that would give nourishment are resolved into fire, and lame and imperfect therefore will be the genesis of the world brought about at the rebirth, since that which could best co-operate in its consummation, which the originating seed takes as a staff for its support, has been destroyed. The absurdity of this is self-evident and needs no further refutation. Again all things <sup>100</sup> which originate from seed are greater in bulk than that which made them and visibly occupy a greater space. Thus trees which soar to heaven often spring from a very small grain, and animals of great corpulence and stature come from the emission of a little moisture. Also there is the fact mentioned a little above<sup>a</sup> that during the time following closely on the birth the things generated are smaller but afterwards increase in size till they reach their full consummation. But in the universe the opposite <sup>101</sup> will take place. The seed will both be greater and will occupy more space, but the result produced will be smaller, and will be seen to take up less space, and the Cosmos which forms itself from the seed will not gradually advance in growth but on the contrary will be reduced from a greater bulk to a lesser. The truth of this statement can be easily seen. <sup>102</sup> Every body which is resolved into fire is diffused as <sup>a</sup> i.e. in § 71.

---

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐνεργείας.

PHILO

εἰς πῦρ ἀναλύεται<sup>1</sup> τε καὶ χεῖται, σβεννυμένης δὲ τῆς ἐν αὐτῷ φλογός, στέλλεται καὶ συνάγεται· πίστεων δὲ τοῖς οὕτως ἐμφανέσι πρὸς μαρτυρίαν ὡς ἀδηλουμένοις οὐδεμία χρεία. καὶ μὴν ὁ κόσμος ὁ πυρωθεὶς γενήσεται μείζων, ἅτε συμπάσης τῆς οὐσίας εἰς τὸν λεπτότατον ἀναλυθείσης αἰθέρα. ὁ μοι δοκοῦσι καὶ οἱ Στωικοὶ προϊδόμενοι κενὸν ἄπειρον ἐκτὸς τοῦ κόσμου τῷ λόγῳ καταλιπεῖν, ἴν', ἐπειδὴ χύσιν ἀπέραντόν τινα ἔμελλε λήψεσθαι, μὴ ἀπορῆ τοῦ δεξομένου χωρίου τὴν ἀνάχυσιν.

103 ὅτε μὲν οὖν εἰς τοσοῦτον ἐπιδέδωκε καὶ συνηύξεται, ὡς μονονουχὶ τῇ ἀορίστῳ τοῦ κενοῦ φύσει τῷ τῆς ἐλάσεως ἀπειρομεγέθει συνδραμεῖν, σπέρματος ἔχει καὶ τοῦτο λόγον, ὅτε δὲ κατὰ τὴν παλιγγενεσίαν ἐκ τελείων τῶν μερῶν<sup>2</sup> τῆς συμπάσης οὐσίας * * *, στελλομένου μὲν κατὰ τὴν σβέσειν τοῦ πυρὸς εἰς παχὺν ἀέρα, στελλομένου δ' αἴρος εἰς ὕδωρ καὶ συνίζοντος, παχυνομένου δ' ἔτι μᾶλλον ὕδατος κατὰ τὴν εἰς γῆν, τὸ πυκνότατον τῶν στοιχείων, μεταβολήν. ἔστι δὲ ταῦτα παρὰ τὰς κοινὰς ἐννοίας τῶν δυναμένων ἀκολουθίαν πραγμάτων ἐκλογίζεσθαι.

<sup>1</sup> Cohn pronounces ἀναλύεται to be corrupt. Alternatives suggested are ἐλαύνεται (based on ἐλάσεως in § 103), ἀναδίδοται and διαλύεται, which Bernays reads. I do not feel that ἀναλ. is quite impossible; see translation.

<sup>2</sup> Cumont ἐκτελειούται μείων, in which case there is no lacuna, ἔχει λόγον being understood before τῆς συμπάσης οὐσίας. See note b.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 140 ἔξωθεν δ' αὐτοῦ περικεχυμένον εἶναι τὸ κενὸν ἀπειρον, ὅπερ ἀσώματον εἶναι.

<sup>b</sup> The text as printed gives "when at the rebirth it . . .

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 102-103

well as resolved, but when the flame in it is being quenched, it is contracted and drawn in. Facts so clear as these need no proofs to testify to them as though they were matters of uncertainty. Assuredly the world when consumed by fire will become greater because its whole substance is resolved into very fine ether. This the Stoics seem to me to have foreseen and therefore left room in their theory for an infinite void outside the Cosmos,<sup>a</sup> so that when it had to accept a sort of infinite diffusion, it might not lack a place to receive the overflow. So then 103 when it has advanced and grown to such an extent that, under the infinite magnitude of the pressure forcing it, it extends its course almost to the illimitable existence of the void, even this ranks as seed, but when at the rebirth it is brought to its consummation in a diminished condition it ranks as a whole substance,<sup>b</sup> though the fire at its extinction is contracted into the thickness of air and the air is contracted and subsides into water and the water condenses still more as it changes into the most compressed of the elements, earth. These conclusions are contrary to the accepted principles<sup>c</sup> of those who are capable of judging the sequence of events aright.

of the whole substance . . .", i.e. we must supply some verb as συνίσταται = "consisting of" to complete the protasis, and then something more = "it will take up less room." This does not give any real antithesis to σπέρματος. Cumont's suggestion (see note 2) was not accepted by Cohn, but seems to me very probable, and as it avoids the lacuna I have translated it.

<sup>c</sup> "Common notions," otherwise translated as "primary conceptions." According to Zeller, Stoics, pp. 79 f., they are not innate ideas, but "those conceptions which from the nature of thought can be equally formed by all men out of experience."

PHILO

- 104 XX. Δίχα τοίνυν τῶν εἰρημένων κάκεινῳ χρή-σαιτ' ἄν τις εἰς πίστιν, ὃ καὶ τοὺς μὴ πέρα τοῦ μετρίου φιλονεικεῖν αἰρουμένους ἐπισπάσεται. τῶν ἐν ταῖς συζυγίαις ἐναντίων ἀμήχανον τὸ μὲν εἶναι, τὸ δὲ μὴ· λευκοῦ γὰρ ὄντος ἀνάγκη καὶ μέλαν ὑπάρχειν καὶ μεγάλου βραχὺ καὶ περιττοῦ ἄρτιον καὶ γλυκέος πικρὸν καὶ ἡμέρας νύκτα καὶ ὅσα τούτοις ὁμοιότροπα. γενομένης δ' ἐκπυρώσεως, ἀδύνατόν τι συμβήσεται· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἕτερον ὑπάρξει τῶν ἐν ταῖς συζυγίαις, τὸ δὲ ἕτερον οὐκ ἔσται.
- 105 φέρε δ' οὕτωςι θεασώμεθα· πάντων εἰς πῦρ ἀναλυθέντων, κοῦφον μὲν ἔσται τι καὶ μανὸν καὶ θερμόν —ἴδια γὰρ πυρὸς ταῦτα—, βαρὺ δ' οὐδὲν ἢ πυκνὸν ἢ ψυχρόν, τὰ τοῖς λεχθεῖσιν ἐναντία. πῶς οὖν ἄν τις ἐπιδείξαι<sup>1</sup> μᾶλλον τὴν πεπλεγμένην ἐκ τῆς ἐκπυρώσεως ἀκοσμίαν ἢ τὰ φύσει συνυπάρχοντα δεικνὺς ἀπαρτώμενα τῆς συζυγίας; ἢ δ' ἄλλοτρίωσις ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον κεχώρηκεν, ὡς τοῖς μὲν
- [508] αἰδιότητα | προσομολογεῖν, τοῖς δὲ τὸ ἀνύπαρκτον.
- 106 "Ἐτι τοίνυν κάκεινό μοι δοκεῖ μὴ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τοῖς ἰχνηλατοῦσι τάληθές εἰρῆσθαι· φθειρόμενος ὁ κόσμος ἦτοι ὑπὸ τινος ἐτέρας φθαρῆσεται αἰτίας ἢ ὑπὸ θεοῦ. ὑπ' ἄλλου μὲν οὐδενὸς τὸ παράπαν δέξεται διάλυσιν· οὐδὲν γὰρ ἔστιν ὃ μὴ περιέχει· τὸ δὲ περιεχόμενον καὶ κατακρατούμενον<sup>2</sup> ἀσθενέ-στερον δήπου τοῦ περιέχοντος, ὑφ' οὗ καὶ κατακρατεῖται. ὑπὸ δὲ θεοῦ φθείρεσθαι λέγειν αὐτὸν πάντων ἀνοσιώτατον· ὃ γὰρ θεὸς οὐκ ἀταξίας καὶ ἀκοσμίας καὶ φθορᾶς ἀλλὰ τάξεως καὶ εὐκοσμίας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιχῆται or ἐπισχῆται.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κρατούμενον.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 104-106

XX. Besides those already mentioned, there is 104 another argument which may be used to prove the point, and this, too, will win the assent of those who prefer not to carry their contentiousness to an immoderate extent. In couples of opposites, it is impossible that one member should exist and the other not. If there is white there must be black also, if there is great there must be small, and so with odd and even, bitter and sweet, night and day, and the like. But when the conflagration has taken place we shall have an impossibility. For one of the opposites in couples will exist and the other will not. Consider the following facts. When all things are 105 resolved into fire, there will be something light, rare and hot, since these qualities belong to fire, but nothing of their opposites, heavy, dense and cold. How could we better express the disorder woven by the conflagration theory than by showing that things naturally coexistent are disjoined from the coupling which holds them, and so far does this dissociation extend that we have to predicate perpetuity of the one set and non-existence of the other.

Still further, a good point I think is made by the 106 investigators of truth when they say that if the world is destroyed, it will be destroyed either by some other cause or by God. Nothing else at all will cause it to undergo dissolution. For there is nothing which it does not encompass and what is encompassed and dominated is surely weaker than what encompasses and therefore also dominates it. On the other hand, to say that it is destroyed by God is the worst of profanities. For those who hold the true creed acknowledge Him to be the cause, καὶ ζωῆς καὶ παντὸς αἴτιος ἀνωμολόγηται τοῦ ἀρίστου παρὰ τοῖς τάληθῆ δοξάζουσι.

PHILO

107 XXI. Θαυμάσαι δ' ἂν τις τοὺς τὰς ἐκπυρώσεις καὶ παλιγγενεσίας θρυλοῦντας οὐ μόνον ἔνεκα τῶν εἰρημένων, οἷς ἀπελέγχονται ψευδοδοξοῦντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ἐκείνο μάλιστα. τετάρων γὰρ ὄντων στοιχείων, ἐξ ὧν ὁ κόσμος συνέστηκε, γῆς, ὕδατος, ἀέρος, πυρός, τίνος ἔνεκα πάντων ἀποκληρωσάμενοι τὸ πῦρ τὰ ἄλλα φασὶν εἰς τοῦτο μόνον ἀναλυθήσεσθαι; δέον γάρ, εἴποι τις ἂν,—πῶς οὐκ;—εἰς ἀέρα ἢ ὕδωρ ἢ γῆν· ὑπερβάλλουσαι γὰρ καὶ ἐν τούτοις εἰσὶ δυνάμεις. ἀλλ' οὐδεὶς ἐξαερούσθαι ἢ ἐξυδατοῦσθαι ἢ ἀπογεοῦσθαι τὸν κόσμον εἶπεν, ὥστ' εἰκὸς ἦν μηδὲ ἐκπυροῦσθαι φάναι.

108 Χρῆ μέντοι καὶ τὴν ἐνυπάρχουσαν ἰσονομίαν τῷ κόσμῳ κατανοήσαντας ἢ δεῖσαι ἢ αἰδεσθῆναι τοσούτου θεοῦ<sup>1</sup> κατηγορεῖν θάνατον· ὑπερβάλλουσα γάρ τις τῶν τετάρων ἀντέκτισις δυνάμεων ἰσότητος κανόσι καὶ δικαιοσύνης ὄροις σταθμωμένων

109 τὰς ἀμοιβάς. καθάπερ γὰρ αἱ ἐτήσιοι ὄραι κύκλον ἀμείβουσιν ἀλλήλας ἀντιπαραδεχόμεναι πρὸς τὰς ἐνιαυτῶν οὐδέποτε ληγόντων περιόδους, [εἰς] τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον [τίθησι]<sup>2</sup> καὶ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου ταῖς εἰς ἄλληλα μεταβολαῖς, τὸ παραδοξότατον, θνήσκειν δοκοῦντα ἀθανατίζεται δολιχεύοντα αἰεὶ καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ὁδὸν ἄνω καὶ κάτω συνεχῶς ἀμεί-
110 βοντα. ἢ μὲν οὖν προσάντης ὁδὸς ἀπὸ γῆς ἄρχεται·

<sup>1</sup> MSS. θείου.

<sup>2</sup> Cumont reads αἰεὶ for εἰς, and περιθέει for τίθησι, but the latter has little resemblance to the word which it replaces. Bernays φησί, but the introduction of the disputant at this point seems unlikely. But the mere omission is equally unsatisfactory.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 106-110

not of disorder, disharmony and destruction, but of order and harmony and life and all that is most excellent.

XXI. The people whose talk is for ever of con- 107 flagration and rebirth may well excite our wonder, not only for the aforesaid reasons which prove the falsity of their creed, but particularly on the following grounds. As there are four elements, earth, water, air and fire, of which the world is composed, why out of all these do they pick out fire and assert that it will be resolved into that alone? Surely it may be said that it is just as right that it should be resolved into earth or water or air, for all these have transcendent powers, and yet no one has declared that the world is converted into any of the three, and therefore the natural conclusion is that it is not turned into fire either.

Indeed also observation of the equality inherent in 108 the world should make them afraid or ashamed to affirm the death of so great a deity. For there is a vast reciprocation between the four powers and they regulate their interchanges according to the standards of equality and the bounds laid down by justice. For just as the annual seasons circle round and round, 109 each making room for its successor as the years ceaselessly revolve, so, too, the elements of the world in their mutual interchanges seem to die, yet, strangest of contradictions, are made immortal as they ever run their race backwards and forwards and continually pass along the same road up and down. The 110 uphill journey begins from earth.<sup>a</sup> Earth is trans-

<sup>a</sup> The idea of the "uphill" and "downhill" journey comes from Heracleitus, see Diog. Laert. ix. 9, where they are called ἡ ἐπὶ τὸ ἄνω and ἡ ἐπὶ τὸ κάτω ὁδός.

PHILO

- τηκομένη γὰρ εἰς ὕδωρ [μετα]λαμβάνει<sup>1</sup> τὴν μεταβολήν, τὸ δ' ὕδωρ ἐξατμιζόμενον εἰς ἀέρα, ὁ δ' ἀὴρ λεπτυνόμενος εἰς πῦρ· ἡ δὲ κατάντης ἀπὸ κεφαλῆς, συνίζοντος μὲν πυρὸς κατὰ τὴν σβέσιν εἰς ἀέρα, συνίζοντος δ' ὅποτε συνθλίβωτο εἰς ὕδωρ [509] ἀέρος, ὕδατος δὲ [τὴν πολλήν | ἀνάχυσιν]<sup>2</sup> κατὰ τὴν εἰς γῆν πυκνουμένου μεταβολήν. εὖ καὶ ὁ Ἡράκλειτος ἐν οἷς φησι· “ ψυχῆσι θάνατος ὕδωρ γενέσθαι, ὕδατι θάνατος γῆν γενέσθαι.” ψυχὴν γὰρ οἴομενος εἶναι τὸ πνεῦμα τὴν μὲν ἀέρος τελευτὴν γένεσιν ὕδατος, τὴν δὲ ὕδατος γῆς πάλιν γένεσιν αἰνίττεται, θάνατον οὐ τὴν εἰς ἅπαν ἀναίρεσιν ὀνομάζων, ἀλλὰ τὴν εἰς ἕτερον στοιχείον 112 μεταβολήν. ἀπαραβάτου<sup>3</sup> δὴ καὶ συνεχοῦς τῆς αὐτοκρατοῦς ἰσονομίας ταύτης αἰεὶ φυλαττομένης, ὥσπερ οὐκ εἰκὸς μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀναγκαῖον, ἐπεὶ τὸ μὲν ἄνισον ἄδικον, τὸ δ' ἄδικον κακίας ἔγγονον, κακία δ' ἐξ οἴκου τῆς ἀθανασίας πεφυγάδεται, θεῖον δὲ τι <διὰ τὸ> μέγεθος<sup>4</sup> ὁ κόσμος καὶ οἶκος θεῶν αἰσθητῶν ἀποδέδεικται, τὸ δὴ φάσκειν ὅτι φθείρεται μὴ συνωρώντων ἐστὶ φύσεως εἰρμὸν καὶ πραγμάτων συνηρημένην ἀκολουθίαν.
- 113 XXII. Προσφιλοτεχνούντες δέ τινες τῶν αἰδίων ὑπολαμβανόντων τὸν κόσμον εἶναι καὶ τοιούτῳ

<sup>1</sup> The other editors retain μεταλαμβάνει, which gives a fair sense, “has, like the other elements, its share of change.”

<sup>2</sup> Here again the omission is drastic. Cumont declares the text to be right, possibly regarding τὴν πολλήν ἀνάχυσιν as an accusative of respect. Bernays τῇ πολλῇ ἀναχύσει, corresponding to μετὰ σβέσιν and ὅποτε θλίβωτο. (If so why not <διὰ> τὴν πολλήν ἀνάχυσιν?) The mss. have πυκνουμένην (one πηνουμένου).

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 110-113

formed by melting into water, water by evaporation into air, air by rarefaction into fire. The downhill path leads from the top, the fire as it is extinguished subsides into air; air as it is compressed subsides into water, while water is condensed as it changes into earth. Well, too, spoke Heracleitus 111 when he says, "death for souls is to become water, death for water to become earth," for conceiving that soul<sup>a</sup> is breath he indicates that the final end of air is to become water and again of water to become earth, while by the term death he does not mean complete annihilation but transmutation into another element. That this self-determined equality should 112 be maintained for ever inviolate and constant is not only natural but necessary. And, therefore, since inequality is unjust and injustice is the child of wickedness, and wickedness is banished from the dwelling-place of immortality, while the world is divine in its vastness and has been shown to be the dwelling-place of visible deities, the assertion that it is destroyed shows inability to descry the chain of nature and the unbroken sequence of events.

XXII. Some of those who consider that the world 113 is everlasting carry their ingenuity still farther and <sup>a</sup> Philo is apparently mistaken here, and Heracleitus by "soul" meant fire, not air, which he did not consider to be one of the fundamental elements. See Zeller, Presocratics, vol. ii. p. 50.

---

<sup>3</sup> mss. ἀπαραβλήτου (-ους) or ἀπεριβλήτου.

<sup>4</sup> Bernays θεῖον δέ τι τέμενος, Cumont θεῖος δὲ τὸ μέγεθος. The objection to this and Cohn's is that size is a poor reason for the divinity of the Cosmos. Perhaps the most plausible suggestion is Wendland's θεῖον δέ τι (μᾶλλον δὲ) μέγας θεός, which might perhaps be simplified with ἦ instead of μᾶλλον δὲ.

PHILO

πρὸς κατασκευὴν λόγῳ χρῶνται· φθορᾶς τέτταρας εἶναι τρόπους τοὺς ἀνωτάτω συμβέβηκε, πρόσθεσιν ἀφαιρέσιν μετάθεσιν ἀλλοίωσιν. δυὰς μὲν οὖν προσθέσει μονάδος εἰς τριάδα φθείρεται μηκέτι μένουσα δυὰς, τετράς δ' ἀφαιρέσει μονάδος εἰς τριάδα, μεταθέσει δὲ τὸ  $\Gamma^1$  στοιχείον εἰς Η, ὅταν αἱ μὲν ἐγκάρσιοι παράλληλοι πρὸς ὀρθὰς διαναστώσιν, ἢ δὲ πρὸς ὀρθὰς ἐπεζευγμένη πλαγιασθεῖσα συνάψῃ τὰς παρ' ἐκάτερα, κατ' ἀλλοίωσιν δὲ μετα-

- 114 βάλλων οἶνος εἰς ὄξος. τῶν δὲ κατειλεγμένων τρόπων οὐδεὶς ἐφάπτεται τοῦ κόσμου τὸ παράπαν. ἐπεὶ καὶ τί φῶμεν; προστίθεσθαί τι τῷ κόσμῳ πρὸς ἀναίρεσιν; ἀλλ' οὐδέν ἐστιν ἐκτός, ὃ μὴ μέρος γέγονεν αὐτοῦ <τοῦ> ὅλου· περιέχεται γὰρ καὶ κατακρατεῖται. ἀλλ' ἀφαιρεῖσθαι; πρῶτον μὲν τὸ ἀφαιρεθὲν πάλιν κόσμος ἔσται, τοῦ νῦν βραχύτερος· ἔπειτα <δ'> ἀμήχανον ἕξω τι σῶμα τοῦ ὅλου διαρτηθὲν τῆς συμφυΐας σκεδασθῆναι.
- 115 ἀλλὰ τὰ μέρη μετατίθεσθαι; μενεῖ μὲν οὖν ἐν ὁμοίῳ τοὺς τόπους οὐκ ἐναλλάττοντα· οὐ γὰρ ἐποχήσεται ποτε οὔτε<sup>2</sup> ὕδατι πᾶσα γῆ οὔθ' ὕδωρ ἀέρι οὔτε ἀῆρ πυρί, ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν φύσει βαρέα, γῆ<sup>3</sup> καὶ ὕδωρ, τὸν μέσον ἐφέξει τόπον, γῆς μὲν θεμελίου τρόπον ὑπερειδούσης, ὕδατος δ' ἐπιπολάζοντος,
- [510] ἀῆρ δὲ καὶ πῦρ, τὰ φύσει κοῦφα, | τὸν ἄνω, πλὴν οὐχ ὁμοίως· ἀῆρ γὰρ πυρὸς ὄχημα γέγονε, τὸ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ζ or ζῆτα . . . ἦ or ἦτα (the letter printed here for zeta is an old form which accords with the argument).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔτι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐν γῆ.

<sup>a</sup> "The four ways of destruction are Peripatetic and

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 113-115

employ an argument of the following kind to establish their view. We find, they say, four principal ways in which destruction occurs, addition, subtraction, transposition, transmutation.<sup>a</sup> Thus two is destroyed and becomes three by the addition of one and similarly four by subtraction of one becomes three. The letter  $\Gamma$  becomes H by transposition when the horizontal parallels rise vertically and the line which joined them vertically has been turned sideways to connect the lines on either side of it. By transmutation wine perishes and becomes vinegar. But none of the ways enumerated affects 114 the world at all. For can we say that anything can be added to the world to destroy it? No, there is nothing outside it, nothing which is not a part of itself, that is of the whole, since each thing is encompassed and dominated by it. What of subtraction? In the first place anything subtracted will in its turn be a world only smaller than the present world. Secondly, it is impossible that any body should be detached from its fellow substance and dispersed outside the whole. Can its parts be 115 transposed? No, they will remain as they are and do not change their relative positions. For earth will never anywhere stand mounted on water, nor water on air, nor air on fire. But the naturally heavy elements, earth and water, will occupy the central position, with earth forming the support like a foundation and water floating on its surface, while the naturally light air and fire occupy the upper position though with a difference, for air is the vehicle on which fire rests and that which rests on a Atomistic as contrasted with the three of the Stoics given in § 79" (Bernays).

PHILO

- 116 δ' ἐποχοῦμενον ἐξ ἀνάγκης ὑπερφέρεται. καὶ μὴν οὐδὲ κατ' ἀλλοίωσιν φθείρεσθαι νομιστέον· ἰσοκρατῆς γὰρ ἢ τῶν στοιχείων μεταβολή, τὸ δ' ἰσοκρατῆς ἀκλινοῦς βεβαιότητος καὶ ἀσαλεύτου μονῆς αἴτιον, ἅτε μήτε πλεονεκτοῦν μήτε πλεονεκτούμενον· ὥσθ' ἢ ἀντίδοσις καὶ ἢ ἀντέκτισις τῶν δυνάμεων ἀναλογίας<sup>1</sup> ἐξισουμένη κανόσιν ὑγιείας καὶ ἀτελευτήτου σωτηρίας δημιουργός. ἐξ ὧν αἰδῖος ὁ κόσμος ἀποδείκνυται.
- 117 XXIII. Θεόφραστος μέντοι φησὶ τοὺς γένεσιν καὶ φθορὰν τοῦ κόσμου κατηγοροῦντας ὑπὸ τεττάρων ἀπατηθῆναι τῶν μεγίστων, γῆς ἀνωμαλίας, θαλάττης ἀναχωρήσεως, ἐκάστου τῶν τοῦ ὄλου μερῶν διαλύσεως, χερσαίων φθορᾶς κατὰ γένη
- 118 ζώων. κατασκευάζειν<sup>2</sup> δὲ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον οὕτως· εἰ μὴ γενέσεως ἀρχὴν ἔλαβεν ἢ γῆ, μέρος ὑπανεστὸς οὐδὲν ἂν ἔτι αὐτῆς ἑωρᾶτο, χθαμαλὰ δ' ἤδη τὰ ὄρη πάντα ἐγεγένητο καὶ οἱ γεώλοφοι πάντες ἰσόπεδοι τῇ πεδιάδι· τοσοῦτων γὰρ καθ' ἕκαστον ἐνιαυτὸν ὄμβρων ἐξ αἰδίου φερομένων, εἰκὸς ἦν τῶν διηρμένων πρὸς ὕψος τὰ μὲν χεῖμαρροις ἀπερρῆχθαι, τὰ δ' ὑπονοστήσαντα κεχαλάσθαι, πάντα δὲ διὰ πάντων ἤδη λελειάνθαι.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀναλογίας.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κατασκευάζει. See note b.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or more exactly "those who affirm of the world that it is subject to γένεσις and φθορά," with the suggestion perhaps that such an idea is depreciatory (κατηγοροῦντας).

<sup>b</sup> Bernays retains the indicative κατασκευάζει, which is I think quite defensible. In either case the statement is vehicle is necessarily carried above it. Once more 116 we must not suppose that the world is destroyed by transmutation, for there is a balance of powers in the interchange of the elements and such a balance produces unswerving stability and unshaken permanence, since it neither encroaches nor is encroached on. And thus the reciprocation, the giving and taking of values, equalized according to the standards of proportion creates sound health and perpetual security. These things show the world to be everlasting.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 116-118

XXIII. Further, Theophrastus says that those who 117 maintain the creation and future destruction of the world<sup>a</sup> are misled by four main considerations, the unevenness of the earth's surface, the withdrawal of the sea, the dissolution of each several part of the universe, and the perishing of whole species of land animals. The proof which they base on the first 118 of these is according to him the following.<sup>b</sup> If the earth had no beginning in which it came into being, no part of it would still be seen to be elevated above the rest. The mountains would now all be quite low, the hills all on a level with the plain, for with the great rains pouring down from everlasting each year, objects elevated to a height would naturally in some cases have been broken off by winter storms, in others would have subsided into a loose condition and would all of them have been completely planed loosely worded. The "first part" may be either that the surface of the world is uneven, or that they are deceived by this unevenness. Taking the infinitive, they prove neither of these, but that the unevenness shows that the world is everlasting. Taking the indicative, Theophrastus states their reason for holding this opinion, but the proof that it is misleading is deferred till § 143.

PHILO

119 νυνὶ δὲ συνεχεῖς ἀνωμαλῖαι καὶ παμπόλλων ὀρῶν αἰ πρὸς αἰθέριον ὕψος ὑπερβολαὶ μνηύματ' ἐστὶ τοῦ τὴν γῆν μὴ αἰδῖον εἶναι. πάλαι γάρ, ὡς ἔφην, ἐν ἀπείρῳ χρόνῳ ταῖς ἐπομβρίαῖς ἀπὸ περάτων ἐπὶ πέρατα πᾶσ' ἂν λεωφόρος ἐγεγένητο· πέφυκε γὰρ ἡ ὕδατος φύσις καὶ μάλιστα ἀπὸ ὑψηλοτάτων καταράπτουσα τὰ μὲν ἐξωθεῖν τῇ βίᾳ, τὰ δὲ τῶ συνεχεῖ τῶν ψεκάδων κολάπτουσα κοιλαίνειν ὑπεργάζεσθαι τε τὴν σκληρόγεω καὶ λιθωδεστάτην ὀρυκτῆρων οὐκ ἔλαττον.

120 Καὶ μὴν ἥ γε θάλασσα, φασίν, ἤδη μεμείωται. μάρτυρες δ' αἰ νήσων εὐδοκιμώταται Ῥόδος τε καὶ Δῆλος· αὐταὶ γὰρ τὸ μὲν παλαιὸν ἠφανισμένοι κατὰ τῆς θαλάττης ἐδεδύκεσαν ἐπικλυζόμενοι, χρόνῳ δ' ὕστερον ἐλαττουμένης ἠρέμα, κατ' ὀλίγον ἀνίσχουσαι διεφάνησαν, ὡς αἰ περὶ αὐτῶν ἀνα-

121 γραφεῖσαι μνηύουσιν ἱστορίαι. τὴν δὲ Δῆλον καὶ Ἀνάφην<sup>1</sup> ὠνόμασαν δι' ἀμφοτέρων ὀνομάτων πιστούμενοι τὸ λεγόμενον, ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἀναφανείσα δήλη ἐγένετο, ἀδηλουμένη καὶ ἀφανῆς οὖσα τὸ πάλαι. <sup>2</sup> διὸ καὶ Πίνδαρος ἐπὶ τῆς Δήλου φησί·

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀναγραφὴν (-ειν).

<sup>2</sup> διὸ . . . αἰνιττόμενος appears in the mss. after ἀποβράττεσθαι at the end of § 122. It certainly is less appropriate there. Both Bernays and Cumont however retain it there.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 119-121

down. As it is, the constant unevennesses and the 119 great multitude of mountains with their vast heights soaring to heaven are indications that the earth is not from everlasting. For in the course of infinite time it would long ago as I have said <sup>a</sup> have under the rain-pour become an open, level road from end to end. For it is a natural characteristic of water that sometimes, particularly when it dashes down from a great height, it drives everything out before it by its force, sometimes by constant dripping it scoops out and hollows and so completely undermines the hardest and stoniest ground quite as much as a digger would.

Again, they say, the sea is already diminished. 120 Witness the most famous of the islands, Rhodes and Delos. For these in old times had disappeared, sunk and submerged below the sea, but in the course of time as the sea was slowly diminishing they gradually emerged and became conspicuous, as we read in the narratives written about them. Men 121 also gave the name of Anaphe to Delos,<sup>b</sup> using both names to vouch for the fact here stated, because <sup>c</sup> it became apparent and visible, while in the past it was unapparent and invisible, and so Pindar says of Delos.

<sup>a</sup> Note the first person singular, an illustration of Philo's tendency to identify himself with the argument he is stating, even though he disagrees with it. See on Quod Omn. Prob. 6 ff. It can hardly be that he is verbally reproducing Theophrastus, for this is not what Theophrastus says but what he says the Stoics say.

<sup>b</sup> Apparently a mistake. Delos and Anaphe are different islands.

<sup>c</sup> The anacoluthic ἐπειδὴ γὰρ is read by all three editors (though γὰρ is omitted by some mss.). Cf. § 75.

PHILO

“ Χαῖρ’, ὦ θεοδμάτα, λιπαροπλοκάμου παίδεσσι Λατοῦς ἱμεροέστατον ἔρνος, πόντου θύγατερ, χθονὸς εὐρείας ἀκίνητον τέρας, ἄν τε βροτοὶ
 Δᾶλον κικλήσκουσιν, μάκαρες δ’ ἐν Ὀλύμπῳ τηλέφαντον κυανέας χθονὸς ἄστρον.”

122 θυγατέρα γὰρ πόντου τὴν Δῆλον εἶρηκε τὸ λεχθὲν
 [511] αἰνιττόμενος. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις μεγάλων | πελαγῶν μεγάλους κόλπους καὶ βαθεῖς ἀναξηρανθέντας ἠπειρῶσθαι καὶ γεγενῆσθαι τῆς παρακειμένης χώρας μοῖραν οὐ λυπρὰν σπειρομένους καὶ φτευομένους, οἷς σημεῖ’ ἄττα<sup>1</sup> τῆς παλαιᾶς ἐναπολελείφθαι θαλατ-τώσεως ψηφιδᾶς τε καὶ κόγχας καὶ ὅσα ὁμοιότροπα 123 πρὸς αἰγιαλοὺς εἶωθεν ἀποβράττεσθαι. εἰ δὲ μει-οὔται ἢ θάλαττα, μειωθήσεται μὲν καὶ ἡ γῆ, μακραις δ’ ἐνιαυτῶν περιόδοις καὶ εἰς ἅπαν ἐκάτερον στοιχείον ἀναλωθήσεται, δαπανηθήσεται δὲ καὶ ὁ σύμπας ἀῆρ ἐκ τοῦ κατ’ ὀλίγον ἐλαττού-μενος, ἀποκριθήσεται δὲ τὰ πάντα εἰς μίαν οὐσίαν τὴν πυρός.

124 XXIV. Πρὸς δὲ τὴν τοῦ τρίτου κεφαλαίου κατα-σκευὴν χρῶνται<sup>2</sup> λόγῳ τοιῶδε· φθείρεται πάντως ἐκεῖνο, οὗ πάντα τὰ μέρη φθαρτά ἐστι, τοῦ δὲ κόσμου πάντα τὰ μέρη φθαρτά ἐστι, φθαρτὸς ἄρα 125 ὁ κόσμος ἐστίν. ὁ δ’ ὑπερεθέμεθα, νῦν ἐπι-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. σημεία τὰ.

<sup>2</sup> Bernays χρῆται with some ms. authority. Cf. § 117.

<sup>a</sup> The idea is supposed to be that earth seems dark-blue to the gods, as heaven seems to us, and that Delos shines like a

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 121-125

Hail, island built by gods, Thou scion best beloved by those Whom lustrous-haired Latona bore, Daughter of Ocean, marvel of broad earth,
Whose base no power can shake.
Delos we mortals name thee, but on high,
Where dwell the blessed ones, they call thee Star
Seen in the distance of the azure earth.<sup>a</sup>

By calling Delos the daughter of the sea he suggests what has been said above. In addition to this they 122 point out that belonging to great tracts of sea there are deep and great bays which have dried up and turned into mainland and become a part of the adjoining cō<sup>u</sup>ntry, by no means barren but sown and planted, yet have left in them some signs that they once were sea—pebbles and shells and all things of the same sort which are so often thrown up upon the seashore. Now if the sea diminishes 123 the earth will diminish also and after many a long cycle of years both elements will be utterly exhausted. So, too, will the whole air be gradually lessened and waste away and all things will be drafted off into one single substance, namely, fire.

XXIV. To establish their third point they employ 124 an argument of this sort. Anything, the parts of which are all perishable, necessarily perishes itself. All the parts of the world are perishable, therefore, the world itself is perishable.<sup>b</sup> This point which we 125 reserved for future argument <sup>c</sup> must now be examined.

star in it. See Sandys's note on Pindar, fr. 87 (Loeb translation). Asteria was another name of Delos.

<sup>b</sup> This argument is stated by Diog. Laert. vii. 141 in almost the same words as here, but the reason given there for believing that the parts are perishable is that they change into each other.

<sup>c</sup> Or simply "assumed in this syllogism," cf. § 56.

PHILO

σκεπτέον. ποῖον μέρος τῆς γῆς, ἵνα ἀπὸ ταύτης ἀρξώμεθα, μείζον ἢ ἔλαττον, οὐ χρόνω διαλύεται; λίθων οἱ κραταιότατοι ἀρ' οὐ μυδῶσι καὶ σήπονται <καὶ> κατὰ τὴν ἕξεως ἀσθένειαν—ἢ δ' ἐστὶ πνευματικὸς τόνος, δεσμὸς οὐκ ἄρρηκτος ἀλλὰ μόνον δυσδιάλυτος—θρυπτόμενοι καὶ ῥέοντες εἰς λεπτὴν τὸ πρῶτον ἀναλύονται κόνιν, εἴθ' ὕστερον δαπανηθέντες ἐξαναλοῦνται;<sup>1</sup> τί δ', εἰ μὴ πρὸς ἀνέμων ριπίζοιτο τὸ ὕδωρ, ἀκίνητον ἔαθ' οὐχ ὑφ' ἡσυχίας νεκροῦται; μεταβάλλει γοῦν καὶ δυσωδέστατον γίνε-126 νεται, οἷα ψυχὴν ἀφηρημένον ζῶον. ἢ γε μὴν ἀέρος φθορὰ παντὶ τῷ δῆλον· νοσεῖν γὰρ καὶ φθίνειν καὶ τρόπον τινὰ ἀποθνήσκειν πέφυκεν. ἐπεὶ τί ἂν τις μὴ στοχασάμενος ὀνομάτων εὐπρεπείας ἀλλὰ τὰλη-127 θοῦς εἴποι λοιμὸν εἶναι πλὴν ἀέρος θάνατον τὸ οἰκεῖον πάθος ἀναχέοντος ἐπὶ φθορᾷ πάντων ὅσα ψυχῆς μεμοίραται; τί χρὴ μακρηγορεῖν περὶ πυρός; ἀτροφῆσαν γὰρ αὐτίκα σβέννυται, χλωόν,
 [512] | ἢ φασιν οἱ ποιηταί, γεγονὸς ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ· διὸ σκηριπτόμενον<sup>2</sup> ὀρθοῦται κατὰ τὴν τῆς ἀναφθείσης
 128 ὕλης μονήν,<sup>3</sup> ἐξαναλωθείσης δ' ἀφανίζεται. τὸ παραπλήσιον μέντοι καὶ τοὺς κατὰ τὴν Ἰνδικὴν δράκοντάς φασι πάσχειν· ἀνέρποντας γὰρ ἐπὶ τὰ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐξαναλοῦνται.

<sup>2</sup> Cumont reads χλωός Ἡφαιστος . . . γεγονώς ἐξ αὐτοῦ Διὸς σκηριπτόμενος. See App. p. 529. <sup>3</sup> Cumont νομῆν.

<sup>a</sup> See on § 86.

<sup>b</sup> The lameness of Hephaestus (cf. Il. xviii. 397) was interpreted by the allegorists as the inability of the earthly fire (in contrast to the heavenly) to go on without the support of fuel. See App. p. 529.

<sup>c</sup> This story, which is found also in Pliny and Aelian, seems very inappropriate. The fire consumes the fuel and

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 125-128

To begin with earth. What part of it, great or small, is there which is not dissolved by the action of time? Do not the strongest stones become dank and decay through the weakness of their cohesiveness, that current of spirit force,<sup>a</sup> that bond which is not unbreakable but merely difficult to loose? They break in pieces and first disintegrate into a stream of fine dust and afterwards waste away till there is nothing left of them. Again if water is not whipped by the wind but left unmoved, does it not become like a dead thing through its inactivity? It certainly changes and becomes very malodorous like an animal bereft of its vital force. As for the air, its destruction 126 is evident to everybody, for sickness and decay and what may be called death is natural to it. How, indeed, could anyone, who aimed at truth rather than elegance of language, describe a pestilence save as a death of the air which diffuses its own distemper to destroy all things to which the life force has been given? We need not spend many words on fire, for 127 when it has lost its sustenance it is extinguished at once, in itself lame as the poets say.<sup>b</sup> While with a support it stands erect because the kindled fuel is still there; when that is used up it is seen no more. Much the same is said to happen with the snakes in 128 India.<sup>c</sup> They creep up to those hugest of animals, then perishes. The snakes suck the blood and then perish also; but not because they can get no blood, though Philo seems to suggest this by μηκέτ' έχοντες τροφήν, but because the fallen elephants stifle them. We may suppose that the story interested him so much that he brought it in without considering whether it really illustrated his point. Cumont aptly quotes the account in De Ebr. 174 of the elk, which camouflages its colours to illustrate the different impressions which an object makes on different people, and the same may be said of the polypus and chameleon in the same context.

- μέγιστα τῶν ζώων, ἐλέφαντας, περὶ νῶτα καὶ νηδὺν ἅπασαν εἰλεῖσθαι, φλέβα δ' ἦν ἂν τύχη διελόντας ἐμπίνειν τοῦ αἵματος, ἀπλήστως ἐπι-σπωμένους βιαίῳ πνεύματι καὶ συντόνῳ ροίῳ, μέχρι μὲν οὖν τινος ἐξαναλουμένους ἐκείνους ἀντέχειν ὑπ' ἀμηχανίας ἀνασκιρτῶντας καὶ τῇ προνομαίᾳ τὴν πλευρὰν τύπτοντας. ὡς καθιζομένους τῶν δρακόντων, εἶτα αἰετινομένους τοῦ ζωτικῆς, πηδᾶν μὲν μηκέτι δύνασθαι, κραδαιομένους δ' ἐστάναι, μικρὸν δ' ὕστερον καὶ τῶν σκελῶν ἐξασθενησάντων, κατασεισθέντας ὑπὸ λιφαιμίας ἀποψύχειν, πεσόντας δὲ τοὺς αἰτίους τοῦ θανάτου
- 129 συναπολλύναι τρόπῳ τοιῶδε· μηκέτ' ἔχοντες τροφήν οἱ δράκοντες ὄν περιέβησαν δεσμὸν ἐπιχειροῦσιν ἐκλύειν ἀπαλλαγὴν ἤδη ποθοῦντες, ὑπὸ δὲ τοῦ βάρους τῶν ἐλεφάντων θλιβόμενοι πιέζονται, καὶ πολὺ μᾶλλον ἐπειδὴν τύχη στέριφον καὶ λιθῶδες τὸ ἔδαφος· ἰλυσπώμενοι γὰρ καὶ πάντα ποιοῦντες εἰς διάλυσιν, ὑπὸ τῆς τοῦ πιέσαντος βίας πεδηθέντες, ἑαυτοὺς πολυτρόπως ἐν ἀμηχανοῖς καὶ ἀπόροις γυμνάσαντες ἐξασθενοῦσι (καὶ) καθάπερ οἱ καταλευσθέντες ἢ τείχους αἰφνίδιον ἐπενεχθέντος προκαταληφθέντες, οὐδ' ὅσον ἀνακύψαι δυνάμενοι, πιυγῇ τελευτῶσιν. εἰ δὲ τῶν μερῶν ἕκαστον τοῦ κόσμου φθορὰν ὑπομένει, δῆλον ὅτι καὶ ὁ ἐξ αὐτῶν παγεῖς κόσμος ἀφθαρτος οὐκ ἔσται.
- 130 Τὸν δὲ τέταρτον καὶ λοιπὸν λόγον ἀκριβωτέον ὧδε, φασίν· εἰ ὁ κόσμος αἰδῖος ἦν, ἦν ἂν καὶ τὰ ζῶα αἰδία καὶ πολὺ γε μᾶλλον τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένος, ὅσῳ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἄμεινον. ἀλλὰ καὶ ὀψίγονον φανῆναι τοῖς βουλομένοις ἐρευνᾶν τὰ

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 128-130

the elephants, and wind themselves round their backs and the whole of their belly. Then making an incision in a vein, as chance directs, they imbibe the blood, sucking it in greedily with violent inhalations and continuous hissing. For a time the elephants hold out, leaping about in their helplessness, and beating their sides with the trunk to try and reach the snakes, then as their life-power is continually being drained, they can leap no more but stand still quivering. Soon afterwards when their legs have lost all strength they drop down through lack of blood and expire. But in their fall they involve the authors of their death in the same fate. The way of it is as follows : the snakes no longer getting their 129 nourishment try to loosen the bond which they have drawn round their victims, as they now desire release, but being squeezed and pressed down by the weight of the elephants, most especially when the ground happens to be hard and stony, they wriggle about and do everything they can to free themselves but are fettered by the force of the weight upon them. In their helpless straits, their manifold exertions only exhaust them, and like people stoned to death or caught by the sudden fall of a wall, unable even to free their heads<sup>a</sup> they are stifled and die. Now if each part of the world suffers destruction, clearly the world compacted from them will not be indestructible.

The fourth and last proposition must, they tell us, 130 be argued out as follows. If the world was everlasting, the animals in it would be everlasting also, and most especially the human race inasmuch as it is superior to the rest. But man also is seen to be of late origin by those who wish to search into the

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 530.

PHILO

- φύσεως· εἰκὸς γὰρ μᾶλλον δ' ἀναγκαῖον ἀνθρώποις συνυπάρξαι τὰς τέχνας ὡς ἂν ἰσηλικας, οὐ μόνον ὅτι λογικῇ φύσει τὸ ἐμμέθοδον οἰκείον, ἀλλὰ καὶ 131 ὅτι ζῆν ἀνευ τούτων οὐκ ἔστιν. ἴδωμεν οὖν τοὺς ἐκάστων χρόνους ἀλογήσαντες τῶν ἐπιτραγωδου-μένων θεοῖς μύθων * * * εἰ (δέ) μὴ αἰδῖος ἀνθρω-πος, οὐδ' ἄλλο τι ζῶον, ὥστ' οὐδ' αἰ δεδεγμένα ταῦτα χῶραι, γῆ καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ ἀήρ· ἐξ ὧν τὸ φθαρτὸν εἶναι τὸν κόσμον δῆλόν ἐστιν.
- 132 XXV. Ἀναγκαῖον δὲ πρὸς τὴν τοσαύτην εὐρε-σιλογίαν ἀπαντῆσαι, μὴ τις τῶν ἀπειροτέρων ἐνδοὺς ὑπαχθῆ· καὶ ἀρκτέον γε τῆς ἀντιρρήσεως [513] ἀφ' οὗ καὶ τῆς ἀπάτης | οἱ σοφισταί. τὰς ἀνωμαλίας οὐκέτ' ἐχρῆν εἶναι τῆς γῆς, εἴπερ αἰδῖος ἦν ὁ κόσμος; διὰ τί, ὦ γενναῖοι; φήσουσι γὰρ ἕτεροι παρελθόντες, ὅτι δένδρων οὐδὲν αἰ φύσεις τῶν ὀρῶν διαφέρουσιν, ἀλλὰ καθάπερ ἐκεῖνα καιροῖς μὲν τισι φυλλορροεῖ καιροῖς δὲ πάλιν ἀνηβᾶ—διὸ καὶ τὸ ποιητικὸν εὖ εἴρηται
- “ φύλλα τὰ μὲν τ' ἄνεμος χαμάδις χέει, ἄλλα δέ θ' ὕλη
 τηλεθώσα φύει, ἔαρος δ' ἐπιγίγνεται ὤρη ”—, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τῶν ὀρῶν τὰ μὲν ἀπο-133 θραύεται μέρη, τὰ δὲ προσφύεται. μακροῖς δὲ χρόνοις ἢ πρόσφυσις καθίσταται γνώριμος, διότι

---

<sup>a</sup> Presumably some words followed showing that the arts were invented by particular men who lived at one particular time and not by the gods, as Hermes is said to have invented the lyre and Hephaestus and Pallas artistic work (cf. Od. vi. 233). Bernays' suggestion that no such passage ever facts of nature. For it is probable or rather necessary that the existence of the arts should coincide with that of man, that they are in fact coeval, not only because system and method are natural to a rational being but also because it is impossible to live without them. Let us observe then the dates 131 of each of the arts, disregarding the myths palmed off on the gods by the play-wrights.<sup>a</sup> . . . But if man is not from everlasting, so neither is any other living creature, therefore neither the regions which have given them a habitat, earth and water and air. This shows clearly that the world is destructible.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 130-133

XXV. All this special pleading must be en- 132 countered lest any of the less proficient should yield to its authority. And the refutation must begin with that with which the sophistical speakers also opened their delusive argument. "The unevennesses of the earth would no longer exist if the world was from everlasting." Why so, my dear sirs? For others will come forward to say that trees and mountains differ not in nature. The trees shed their leaves at some seasons and then bloom again at others. And so there is truth in the poet's lines which tell us that

Driven by the wind the leaves pour down to earth,
But others come when spring returns and brings Fresh life into the forest.<sup>b</sup>

In the same way the mountains, too, have parts broken off but others come as accretions. But the 133 accretions take long periods of time to become reappeared in this treatise and that though it was in his source the author left it because the details were too much for him, depreciates the "Compiler," as he calls him, far too much.

<sup>b</sup> Il. vi. 147 f.

PHILO

- τὰ μὲν δένδρα ὠκυτέρα χρώμενα τῇ φύσει θάπτον καταλαμβανομένην ἔχει τὴν ἐπίδοσιν, τὰ δ' ὄρη βραδυτέρα,<sup>1</sup> διὸ καὶ τὰς ἐκφύσεις αὐτῶν αἰσθητὰς ὅτι μὴ χρόνῳ μακρῷ μόλις εἶναι συμβέβηκεν.
- 134 εἰοικασί γε τὸν τρόπον τῆς γενέσεως αὐτῶν ἄγνοεῖν, ἐπεὶ κὰν ἴσως αἰδεσθέντες ἠσύχασαν. φθόνος δ' οὐδεὶς ἀναδιδάσκειν· ἔστι δ' οὔτε νέον τὸ λεγόμενον οὔτε ῥήμαθ' ἡμῶν, ἀλλὰ παλαιὰ σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν, οἷς οὐδὲν ἀδιερεύνητον τῶν εἰς ἐπιστήμην
- 135 ἀναγκαίων ἀπολέλειπται. ὅταν τὸ κατακεκλεισμένον ἐν τῇ γῆ πυρῶδες ἄνω τῇ τοῦ πυρὸς ἐλαύνηται φυσικῇ δυνάμει, πρὸς τὸν οἰκείον τόπον στείχει, κὰν τινος λάβηται βραχείας ἀναπνοῆς, ἄνω μὲν συνασπᾶ πολλὴν τῆς γεώδους οὐσίας, ὄσσην ἂν οἶόν τε ἦ, ἔξω δ' ἐπιγενόμενον φέρεται βραδύτερον,<sup>2</sup> [ἦ] καὶ μέχρι πολλοῦ συμπαρελθεῖν βιασθεῖσα, πρὸς μήκιστον ἀρθείσα ὕψος, στέλλεται κορυφουμένη καὶ πρὸς ὀξείαν ἀποτελευτᾶ κορυφήν
- 136 τὸ πυρὸς σχῆμα μιμουμένη. γίνεται γὰρ τοῦ κουφοτάτου καὶ βαρυτάτου τότε, τῶν φύσει ἀντιπάλων, ἀναγκαῖα συρραξάντων διαμάχῃ, πρὸς τὴν οἰκείαν ἑκατέρου χώραν ἐπειγομένου καὶ (πρὸς) τὸ βιαζόμενον ἀντιτείνοντος· τὸ μὲν δὴ πῦρ συνανέλκον γῆν ὑπὸ τοῦ περι αὐτὴν νευστικοῦ βρίθειν ἀναγκάζεται, ἡ δὲ γῆ κατωτάτῳ ταλαντεύουσα τῷ τοῦ πυρὸς ἀνωφοίτῳ συνεπελαφρισθεῖσα μετέωρος ἐξαίρεται καὶ κρατηθεῖσα μόλις ὑπὸ δυνατω-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. βραχύτερα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔξω δ' ἐπιγενόμενον φέρεσθαι βραχύτερον. Cohn pronounces ἐπιγενόμενον to be corrupt, but does not suggest any

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 133-136

cognizable, because as the process of growth in trees is more rapid their advance is apprehended more quickly, while in mountains that process is slower, and, therefore, their after-growths become just perceptible only after a long time. These people seem 134 to have no knowledge of the way in which mountains come to be, otherwise they would probably have held their tongues for shame. But we shall not grudge giving them instruction, for the tale is nothing new, nor are the words ours, but old-time sayings of wise men, who left nothing uninvestigated that was necessary for knowledge. When the fiery element 135 enclosed in the earth is driven upward by the natural force of fire, it travels towards its proper place, and if it gets a little breathing space, it pulls up with it a large quantity of earthy stuff, as much as it can, but with this outside and on it it moves more slowly. This earthy substance forced to travel with it for a long distance, rises to a great height and contracts and tapers, and passes finally into a pointed peak with the shape of fire for its pattern. For there is 136 necessarily then a conflict when the natural antagonists, the heaviest and the lightest, clash. Each presses on to its proper location and resists the force applied by the other. The fire which is dragging the earth with it is necessarily weighted by the counter-pull which the earth exerts upon it, while the earth though gravitating ever downwards lightened by the upward tendency of the fire rises aloft, and, compelled at last to yield to the stronger power which emendation; nor does Cumont, who also retains it. Bernays ἡ δ' ἔξωθεν ἐπιγενομένη. The translation I have given supposes ἐπιγενομένης (sc. οὐσίας) and ἡ or ἡ δὲ for the ἡ expunged by Cohn.

---

PHILO

τέρας τῆς ἐπικουφιζούσης ἰσχύος ἄνω πρὸς τὴν 137 τοῦ πυρὸς ἔδραν ὠθεῖται καὶ ἴσταται.<sup>1</sup> τί οὖν θαυμαστόν, εἰ μὴ τὰ ὄρη ταῖς τῶν ὑετῶν φοραῖς ἐξανήλωται, τῆς συνεχούσης αὐτὰ δυνάμεως, ὑφ' ἧς καὶ διανίσταται, μάλα παγίως καὶ κραταιῶς ἐνειλημμένης; λυθέντος γὰρ δεσμοῦ τοῦ συν-ἔχοντος, εἰκὸς ἦν διαλυθῆναι καὶ πρὸς ὕδατος σκεδασθῆναι, δυνάμει δὲ σφιγγόμενα τῇ τοῦ πυρὸς στεγανώτερον πρὸς τὰς τῶν ὑετῶν φορὰς ἀντέχει.

[514] XXVI. | ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἡμῖν λελέχθω περὶ τοῦ τὴν ἄνωμαλίαν τῆς γῆς πίστιν οὐκ εἶναι γενέσεως καὶ φθορᾶς κόσμου.

138 Πρὸς δὲ τὸ ἀπὸ τῆς μειώσεως τῆς θαλάττης ἐπιχειρηθὲν ἐκεῖνο δεόντως ἂν λέγοιτο· μὴ τὰς ἀνασχούσας νήσους αὐτὸ μόνον αἰεὶ μηδ' εἴ τινες ἀποτομαὶ κατακλυζόμεναι τὸ πάλαι χρόνοις αὐθις ἠπειρώθησαν σκοπεῖτε—φυσιολογίας γὰρ ἀντί-παλον φιλονεικία τριπόθητον ἠγουμένης ἀλήθειαν ἰχνηλατεῖν—, ἀλλὰ πολυπραγμονεῖτε<sup>2</sup> καὶ τοῦναντίον, ὅσαι μὲν ἐν ἠπείροις οὐ παράλιοι μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ μεσόγειοι μοῖραι κατεπόθησαν, ὅση δὲ χέρσος 139 θαλαττωθεῖσα μυριοφόροις ναυσὶν ἐμπλείται. (ἦ) τὴν περὶ τὸν ἱερώτατον Σικελικὸν πορθμὸν ἄδομένην ἱστορίαν ἀγνοεῖτε; (ἦν μὲν γὰρ) τὸ

<sup>1</sup> So mss., to which I can see no objection. Cohn and Cumont κἀνίσταται.

<sup>2</sup> mss. πολυπραγμονεῖται or πολυπραγμονεῖν ἔτι.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 136-139

buoys it up, is pushed up into the seat of fire and takes its stand there. Why should we wonder then 137 that the mountains are not destroyed by the onrush of the rain,<sup>a</sup> since the power which holds them together, which also makes them rise as they do, embraces them so firmly and stoutly? For if the bond which held them together were loosened, they might naturally be dissolved and dispersed by the water. As it is, kept tight by the force of fire they hold their own and show themselves weather-proof in face of the onrush of the rains. XXVI. This is what we have to say to show that the unevennesses of the earth are no proof that the world is created and will be destroyed.

To the proof which they attempt to draw from 138 the diminution of the sea, the following answer may justly be given. Do not perpetually fix your eyes merely on the islands which have emerged or any segments which were submerged long ago and in the course of time have been rejoined to the mainland. For contentiousness is a foe to the nature study which holds the investigation of truth to be profoundly desirable. Busy yourselves also with the converse of this, namely, all the parts of the mainland, not only on the sea-coast but in the centre, which have been swallowed up, and all the dry land which has been turned into sea and is the sailing ground of ships of considerable tonnage. Do you 139 not know the celebrated story of the sacred Sicilian theory here stated to account for the permanence of mountains from that in § 132. Philo might reply that the two reasons though different are not inconsistent. The fire prevents them from being destroyed just as the trunk stands when the leaves go, but does not prevent the breaking-off of pieces, which are replaced by new accretions.

PHILO

παλαιὸν ἠπειρῶ Ἰταλία Σικελία συνάπτουσα, μεγάλων δὲ τῶν παρ' ἑκάτερα πελαγῶν βιαίοις πνεύμασιν ἐξ ἐναντίας ἐπιδραμόντων, ἡ μεθόριος ἐπεκλύσθη καὶ ἀνερράγη, παρ' ἣν καὶ πόλις ἐπώνυμος τοῦ πάθους Ῥήγιον κτισθεῖσα ὠνομάσθη. καὶ τοῦναντίον οὐ προσεδόκησεν ἂν τις ἀπέβη· συνεζεύχθη μὲν γὰρ τὰ τέως διεστῶτα πελάγη κατὰ τὴν σύρρυσιν ἐνωθέντα, ἡ δὲ ἠνωμένη γῆ τῶ μεθοριῶ πορθμῶ διεζεύχθη, παρ' ὅν ἠπειρος οὐσα

140 Σικελία νήσος ἐβιάσθη γενέσθαι. πολλὰς δὲ καὶ ἄλλας λόγος τῆς θαλάττης ὑπερσχούσης ἠφανίσθαι πόλεις καταποθείσας, ἐπεὶ καὶ κατὰ Πελοπόννησόν φασι τρεῖς

“ Αἴγειραν Βοῦράν τε καὶ ὑψηλὴν Ἐλίκειαν, τείχεσιν ἢ τάχ' ἔμελλε περὶ βρύα μυρία φύσειν,” εὐδαίμονας τὸ πάλαι γενομένας πολλῇ τοῦ πελάγους

141 ἐπικλυσθῆναι φορᾶ. ἡ δὲ Ἀτλαντὶς νήσος, “ ἅμα Λιβύης καὶ Ἀσίας μείζων,” ἢ φησιν ἐν Τιμαίῳ Πλάτων, ἡμέρα μιᾶ καὶ νυκτὶ “ σεισμῶν ἐξαισίων καὶ κατακλυσμῶν γενομένων δῦσα κατὰ τῆς θαλάττης ἐξαίφνης ἠφανίσθη,” γενομένη πέλαγος, οὐ

<sup>a</sup> This belief including the derivation of the name Rhegium is mentioned by Diodorus, Strabo, Seneca and Pliny.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 139-141

straits? In old days Sicily joined on to the mainland of Italy but under the assault on either side of great seas driven by violent winds from opposite directions, the land between them was inundated and broken up and at its side a city was founded, whose name of Rhegium records what happened to it. The result was the opposite of what one would have expected. The seas which were hitherto divided joined together through their confluence, while the land once united was divided by the intervening straits, by which Sicily, which had been mainland, was forced to become an island.<sup>a</sup> Many other cities also are stated 140 to have been swallowed up and to have disappeared overwhelmed by the sea. And so too in Peloponnese they say that the three,

Aegira, Bura, lofty Heliceia, Whose walls would soon be clad with thick sea-moss,<sup>b</sup> which were most flourishing in old times were inundated by a great inroad of the sea. And the 141 island of Atlantis "greater than Libya and Asia put together," as Plato says in the Timæus, "in a single day and night through extraordinary earthquakes and floods sank below the sea and suddenly disappeared," turning into a sea which was not navigable but full Strabo's notice, vi. 6, shows that it was also mentioned by Aeschylus, from whom he quotes the line ἀφ' οὗ δὴ Πήγμον κικλήσκειται.

<sup>b</sup> The source of these lines is unknown. In themselves they do not imply the submersion of any except Heliceia, and nothing is said elsewhere of that of Aegira. Bura (Buris) and Heliceia (Helice) are mentioned as submerged by later writers, including Seneca (Nat. Quaest. vi. 23. 4 and vii. 5. 3), where he gives Callisthenes as his authority, as well as an unknown treatise of Aristotle.

PHILO

- 142 πλωτόν, ἀλλὰ βαραθρῶδες. οὐδὲν οὖν εἰς τὸ φθει-ρεσθαι τὸν κόσμον ἢ πλασθεῖσα τῷ λόγῳ μείωσις τῆς θαλάττης συνεργεῖ· φαίνεται γὰρ ὧν μὲν ἐξαναχωροῦσα, τὰ δ' ἐπικλύζουσα. ἐχρῆν δὲ μὴ θάτερον τῶν γινομένων ἀλλὰ συνάμφῳ θεωροῦντας ἐπικρίνειν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τοῖς περὶ βίον ἀμφισβητήμασιν [515] | ὁ νόμιμος δικαστής, πρὶν [παρὰ] τῶν ἀντιδίκων ἀκοῦσαι, γνώμην οὐκ ἀποφανεῖται.
- 143 XXVII. Καὶ μὴν ὁ τρίτος λόγος ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ διελέγχεται, μὴ ὑγιῶς ἐρωτηθεῖς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐθύς ἐν ἀρχῇ φάσεως. οὐ γὰρ δήπουθεν οὐδὲ πάντα τὰ μέρη φθίρεται φθαρτόν ἐστιν ἐκεῖνο, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα τὰ μέρη ἅμα καὶ ἐν ταύτῳ <καὶ> ἀθρόα κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον, ἐπεὶ καὶ ἄκρον ἀποκοπεῖς τις δάκτυλον ζῆν οὐ κεκώλυται, εἰ δὲ τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν μερῶν καὶ μελῶν πᾶσαν, αὐτίκα τελευτήσει.
- 144 τὸν αὐτὸν οὖν τρόπον, εἰ μὲν συλλήβδην ἀπαξ-ἅπαντα τὰ στοιχεῖα ὑφ' ἓνα καιρὸν ἠφανίζετο, φάσκειν ἐνδέχασθαι τὸν κόσμον φθορὰν ἦν ἀναγκαῖον· εἰ δ' ἕκαστον ἰδίᾳ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ γείτονος

---

<sup>a</sup> Taken partly verbatim from Timaeus 24 E and 25 c-d. The meaning of βαραθρῶδης is doubtful. Philo is paraphrasing Plato's ἄπορον καὶ ἀδιερεύνητον . . . πηλοῦ κάρτα βραχέος (v.l. βαθέος) ἐμποδῶν ὄντος, ὃν ἡ νῆσος ἰζομένη παρ-έσχετο. L. & S. (revised) give (for this passage) "dangerous." Bernays has "mit Untiefen besäete Wasserfläche."

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 142-144

of abysses.<sup>a</sup> So then the fiction which they propound 142 that the sea is diminished contributes nothing to show that the world is destroyed, for it is clear that the sea withdraws from some places and inundates others. And judgement should not be given on observation of one of the phenomena but of both together, just as also in the disputes of ordinary life the law-abiding judge will not declare his decision until he has heard both litigants.

XXVII. Further, their third argument stands self- 143 convicted as an unsound proposition <sup>b</sup> from the very terms of the enunciation with which it begins. For the truth surely is not that a thing is destructible if all its parts are destroyed, but if all its parts are destroyed together and simultaneously, just as one who has had the tip of his finger cut away is not prevented from living, but if the whole system of his parts and limbs is cut away, he will die at once. In the same way, if the elements one and all were 144 put out of existence at one and the same time, it would be necessary to admit that the world is liable to destruction. But if each of them separately is

Dr. Rouse suggests that he may mean hidden reefs, which he thinks of as sunken ravines. Stephanus quoting this passage says "fortasse coenosus," and cites De Agr. 144 θολερῶ δὲ καὶ βαραθρῶδει βίω. There Mangey's correction to βορβορῶδει has been generally accepted. Is it possible that the same correction should be made here?

<sup>b</sup> This use of ἐρωτάω = "to state a proposition or syllogism not in the form of a question," is described as a late usage by L. & S. (revised), who cite Galen v. 327. Stephanus speaks of it as a known usage, but after giving some examples of συνερωτάω, gives one example of the simple verb, Sext. Emp. Pyrrh. iii. 13 οἱ κατὰ τῆς ἀποδείξεως ἠρωτημένοι λόγοι. Our passage seems to be a clear example, and cf. Quod Omn. Prob. 53, though that may only apply to the question asked by Zeno. See also App. p. 530.

PHILO

μεταβάλλει φύσιν, ἀθανατίζεται μᾶλλον ἢ φθείρεται κατὰ τὸ φιλοσοφηθὲν ὑπὸ τοῦ τραγικοῦ

“ θνήσκει δ’ οὐδὲν τῶν γιγνομένων, διακρινόμενον δ’ ἄλλο πρὸς ἄλλο
μορφήν ἑτέραν ἀπέδειξεν.”

- 145 Παντελής γε μὴν εὐήθεια τὸ γένος τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀπὸ τῶν τεχνῶν ἐξετάζεσθαι· τῇ γὰρ περὶ τὸν λόγον ἀτοπία τις ἀκολουθήσας νέον τὸν κόσμον ἀποφανεῖ κομιδῇ μόλις πρὸ χιλίων παγέντα ἐνιαυτῶν, ἐπεὶ καὶ οὓς παρειλήφαμεν τῶν ἐπιστημῶν εὐρετὰς τὸν λεχθέντα τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν ἀριθμὸν οὐχ 146 ὑπερβάλλουσιν. εἰ δὲ δὴ καὶ λεκτέον τὰς τέχνας ισήλικας ἀνθρώπων γένει, μεθ’ ἱστορίας φυσικῆς ἄλλ’ οὐκ ἀπερισκέπτως καὶ ῥαθύμως λεκτέον. ἡ δ’ ἱστορία τίς; φθοραὶ τῶν κατὰ γῆν, οὐκ ἀθρόων ἀπάντων ἀλλὰ τῶν πλείστων, δυσι ταῖς μεγίσταις αἰτίαις ἀνατίθενται, πυρὸς καὶ ὕδατος ἀλέκτοις φοραῖς· κατασκήπτειν δ’ ἑκατέραν ἐν μέρει φασὶν ἐν πάνυ μακραῖς ἐνιαυτῶν περιόδοις.
147 ὅταν μὲν οὖν ἔμπρησις καταλαμβάνῃ, ῥεῦμα αἰθε-

<sup>a</sup> See on § 30. The citation of these three lines for the third time must be regarded as a piece of careless composition.

<sup>b</sup> With this sentence begins the answer to the fourth argument. It is abruptly introduced and very imperfectly carried through. The fourth argument was (1) that as men could not exist without the arts and the arts are known to have been invented by definite persons at definite times, man could not have existed from everlasting and therefore (2) neither the inferior animals, (3) nor their habitats. The answer to the first point is given at length and it might be said that, with the refutation of this, that of the second and third follows at once, but we should have expected Philo to indicate it.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Plato, Phaedo 96 A σοφίαν, ἣν δὴ καλοῦσι περὶ φύσεως

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 144-147

changed into the nature of its neighbour, it is not destroyed but rather rendered immortal, as says the tragic poet philosophizing

Nothing that is born can die,
Hither and thither its parts disperse
And take another form.<sup>a</sup>

Finally it is the height of folly to take the arts as 145 the standard of measurement for mankind.<sup>b</sup> Anyone who follows this topsy-turvey line of reasoning will make out that the world is quite new, framed hardly a thousand years ago, since those who tradition tells us were the inventors of the sciences do not go back farther than that number of years. And if they must 146 say that the arts are coeval with the human race, they must do so not carelessly and perfunctorily but with the aid of natural history.<sup>c</sup> And what does natural history tell us?<sup>d</sup> Destructions of things on earth, destructions not of all at once but of a very large number, are attributed by it to two principal causes, to tremendous onslaughts of fire and water.
These two visitations, we are told, descend in turns after very long cycles of years. When the agent is 147 ιστορίαν. The phrase covers both the research as here and the result obtained as in the next sentence.

<sup>a</sup> The substance of the next four sections is drawn from Plato, Laws iii. 676, 677, and Timaeus 22 A f. In the former we have the periodical destruction of mankind by deluge and other causes, and the consequent extinction of the arts, and also the remark that the traditional discoveries of the arts as we have them go back at most to a thousand or two thousand years. In the Timaeus nothing is said about the arts (though it is noted that the records and traditions of a nation perish in the destruction), but we have a more specific account of the destruction by fire and deluge, and the different ways in which the two affect the inhabitants of the highlands and the lowlands. See also App. p. 530.

PHILO

ρίου πυρὸς ἄνωθεν ἐκχεόμενον πολλαχῆ σκεδάν-νυσθαι, μεγάλα κλίματα τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐπιτρέχον· ὅταν δὲ κατακλυσμός, ἅπασαν τὴν ὕδατος [κατομβρίαν] κατασύρειν<sup>1</sup> φύσιν, αὐθιγενῶν καὶ χειμάρρων ποταμῶν οὐ πλημμυρούντων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ καθεστὸς προσυπερβαλλόντων τῆς ἐπιβάσεως καὶ τὰς ὄχθας ἢ τῇ βίᾳ παραρρηγνύντων ἢ ὑπερπηδῶντων ἀναβάσει τῇ πρὸς μήκιστον ὕψος· ὅθεν ὑπερβλύσαντας εἰς τὴν παρακειμένην ἀναχεῖσθαι πεδιάδα, τὴν δὲ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον εἰς μεγάλας λίμνας διανέμεσθαι, πρὸς τὰ κοιλότερα αἰεὶ τοῦ ὕδατος συνίζοντος, αὐθις δ' ἐπιρρέοντος καὶ τοὺς μεθορίους [516] ἰσθμοὺς | κατακλύζοντος, οἷς διεκρίνοντο αἱ λίμναι, εἰς μέγεθος ἀχανοῦς πελάγους κατὰ τὴν πολλῶν 148 ἔνωσιν ἀποκρίνεσθαι. πρὸς δὲ μαχομένων δυνάμewn ἐν μέρει τοὺς ἐν τοῖς ἐναντίοις οἰκοῦντας τόποις ἀπόλλυσθαι, πυρὶ μὲν τοὺς ἐν ὄρεσι καὶ γεωλόφοις καὶ δυσύδροις χωρίοις, ἅτ' οὐκ ἔχοντας φύσει<sup>2</sup> πυρὸς ἀμυντήριον ἀφθονον ὕδωρ, ἔμπαλιν δ' ὕδατι τοὺς παρὰ ποταμοῖς ἢ λίμναις ἢ θαλάττῃ· γειτόνων γὰρ ἄπτεισθαι φιλεῖ τὰ κακὰ πρώτων ἢ 149 καὶ μόνων.<sup>3</sup> κατὰ δὴ τοὺς λεχθέντας τρόπους δίχα μυρίων ἄλλων βραχυτέρων φθειρομένου τοῦ πλείστου μέρους ἀνθρώπων, ἐπιλείπειν<sup>4</sup> ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ τὰς τέχνας· δίχα γὰρ τοῦ μεθοδεύοντος οὐκ εἶναι καθ' αὐτὴν ἰδεῖν ἐπιστήμην. ἐπειδὴν δὲ αἱ μὲν κοιναὶ νόσοι χαλάσωσιν, ἄρξῃται δὲ ἀνηβᾶν καὶ βλαστάνειν τὸ γένος ἐκ τῶν μὴ προκαταληφθέντων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κατασύρει (-η).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. φησι which Bernays retains.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἡγεμόνων or ἡγουμένων

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐπιλείπειν.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 147-149

the conflagration, a stream of heaven-sent fire pours out from above and spreads over many places and over-runs great regions of the inhabited earth. When it is the deluge, it sweeps along in every form which water takes. The rivers, either spring fed or winter torrents, not only flow with a full volume but exceed the usual level to which they rise and either break down their banks by force or over-leap them mounting to a very great height. Then streaming over they are diffused into the adjoining lowland, which is at first divided into great lakes as the water always subsides into the deeper hollows, then again as it flows on and submerges the intervening isthmuses which divide the lakes, making many into one, is converted into a great expanse of boundless sea. Through these contending powers the inhabitants of 148 contrasted regions have perished alternately. Fire is fatal to the dwellers in the mountains and hills and places ill-supplied with water, as they do not possess the abundance of water which is the natural instrument of defence against fire. Water, on the other hand, destroys those who live near rivers, or lakes, or the sea, for it is a way that evils have, that those who live close to them are the first if not the only ones to feel their power. Since the chief part 149 of mankind perish in the way here mentioned apart from numberless minor ways<sup>a</sup> the arts, too, necessarily fail. Science in itself is lost to sight, without someone to put it in practice. But when the epidemics of evil have abated and from those who have not fallen victims to their overwhelming terrors a new race begins to bloom again and grow, the arts <sup>a</sup> So Timaeus 22 c φθοραὶ . . . πυρὶ μὲν καὶ ὕδατι μέγιστα, μυρίοις δὲ ἄλλοις ἔτεραι βραχύτεραι.

PHILO

τοῖς ἐπιβρίασσι δεινοῖς, ἄρχεσθαι καὶ τὰς τέχνας πάλιν συνίστασθαι, οὐ τότε<sup>1</sup> πρῶτον γενομένας, ἀλλὰ τῇ μειώσει τῶν ἐχόντων ὑποσπανισθείσας.

150 Ἄ μὲν οὖν περὶ ἀφθαρσίας τοῦ κόσμου παρειλήφαμεν, εἴρηται κατὰ δύναμιν. τὰς δὲ πρὸς ἕκαστον ἐναντιώσεις ἐν τοῖς ἔπειτα δηλωτέον.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οὔτε.

THE ETERNITY OF THE WORLD, 149–150

also, which are not then born for the first time but have sunk into insignificance through the diminution of persons possessing them, establish themselves once more.

We have described to the best of our abilities the 150 arguments transmitted to us to maintain the indestructibility of the world. In what follows we have to expound the answers given in opposition to each point.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> See Introduction, p. 177 note a.

FLACCUS
(IN FLACCUM)

INTRODUCTION TO IN FLACCUM

THE story told in this treatise <sup>a</sup> is as follows.

Flaccus, whose misgovernment and cruelty to the Jews and ultimate fate are here described, was appointed prefect of Alexandria and Egypt in or about A.D. 32 near the end of the principate of Tiberius. Philo tells us that he showed considerable ability and industry during his first five years of office. He remarks that he praises him to exhibit his villainy in a clearer light, and he might have added that his description goes to prove that his toleration of the abominable cruelty shown to the Jews by the Alexandrian populace was not due to weakness but to definite intention (1-7). He had stood well with Tiberius, but the accession of Gaius in 37 endangered his position, for he had been a partisan of Tiberius Gemellus, the rival candidate for the succession, had been concerned in the steps taken to prosecute Agrippina, Gaius's mother, and was friendly with Macro, who, though he had done much to protect Gaius from the distrust and dislike of Tiberius, soon <sup>a</sup> It is generally accepted that this is the second part of a work of which the first part has been lost. For (1) the opening words suggest that it follows on an account of the accusations brought against the Jews by Sejanus which are alluded to in Legatio 160; (2) the closing sentence "Flaccus also suffered" implies that the fate of some or other persecutor has been told; (3) a passage not to be found in the extant work, but stated to come from the Flaccus, is cited by St. John Damascene (see Prolegomena to Cohn-Reiter, vol. vi. pp. xlix f.).

PHILO

fell into disfavour with Gaius and was put to death (8-15). This last event reduced Flaccus to despair, and it was at this point that according to Philo the anti-Semitic party in Alexandria, though they included some who at bottom were his enemies, approached him and suggested that if he would give them his support they and the city as a whole would stand by him to protect him against the hostility of the Emperor (16-24). All this may be partially or even wholly true, but it is compatible with the view held by some, who have more right to pronounce an opinion than I, that behind it lies a movement on the part of the Jews to enlarge to full citizenship the special privileges which they had as a πολίτευμα, and that it was this which roused the Greeks to take action and enlist Flaccus's support.<sup>a</sup>

Philo represents Flaccus as only gradually throwing his lot in with them and exhibiting his hostility to the Jews (24). The climax came when Herod Agrippa, recently appointed by Gaius to the kingship of his uncle Philip's tetrarchy, visited Alexandria on his way to his kingdom, and the Alexandrians deeply resenting this exaltation of a Jew and (though Philo does not tell us this) further exasperated by the enthusiasm with which the Jews welcomed their compatriot,<sup>b</sup> staged an insulting mockery by bringing the lunatic Carabas into the Gymnasium and greeting him with royal honours. Philo does not accuse Flaccus of taking an active part in this, and, indeed, admits that in public he behaved to Agrippa with courtesy and friendliness, but charges him with abetting it in as much as he took no steps to suppress the demonstration or punish the offenders (25-40).

<sup>a</sup> See note to § 54, App. p. 534.

<sup>b</sup> See note to § 30.

FLACCUS

The Alexandrians, presumably aware that they might compromise themselves by insulting Gaius's favourite, then proceeded to a step which would naturally be gratifying to the Emperor. They desecrated the synagogues by setting up images of Gaius in them. We are told very little about this in this treatise.<sup>a</sup> Philo enlarges upon the consequences it entailed, on the danger of such a movement extending beyond Alexandria, and on its futility because the desecrated synagogues would cease to exist as synagogues and the Jews would be unable to pay the homage which they were accustomed to pay by dedicating them in honour of the Emperor or installing such emblems as had been lawfully installed in them in the past (41-52).<sup>b</sup> He passes on to a second wrong, a certain proclamation issued by Flaccus. This which is vaguely described as denouncing the Jews as foreigners and aliens may be fairly connected with the eviction from four of the five "letters" or quarters of the city which is mentioned in the same section (53-54).<sup>c</sup> Then comes a third wrong. He permitted the mob not merely to evict the householders but to plunder their houses, and one consequence of the evictions was that the Jews were unable to carry on their businesses. In fact, a regular <sup>a</sup> In the Legatio 132 ff. we hear a good deal more. There the desecration seems to follow the pogrom, not precede it, as here, and we are told that there was a wholesale destruction and burning of the synagogues. It is only where the density of the Jewish inhabitants resisted this that the images were installed, though one would have thought that this might have been prevented more easily than the other.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Legatio 133, where the destruction of the synagogues is said to have involved the destruction of many shields and inscriptions of this sort.

<sup>c</sup> See note to § 54, App. p. 534.

PHILO

pogrom ensued and its brutalities are described in lurid terms. The items selected are somewhat different from those of the Legatio but the story is substantially the same (54-72). One point on which Philo dwells with considerable length is the treatment of the Jewish senators. Apparently these as a body were accused of some offences and, though only about half of the members were arrested, they were cruelly flogged. In particular some of them had lost all their property in the sack, and though Flaccus had already been informed of this they were scourged none the less (73-77). A further indignity was the instruments used. Alexandrian citizens were scourged with blades, and hitherto Alexandrian Jews had had the same privilege, but on this occasion there were substituted the scourges used on the Egyptians (78-80). Further, apparently all this took place on or about the Emperor's birthday, which was usually considered an occasion for mercy, but on this occasion brutal treatment of Jews was actually made part of the birthday celebrations (81-85).

The next outrage seems far less serious. The Jews or some of them were accused of having stocks of arms. Their houses were searched and according to Philo none were found, in marked contrast to the huge number taken when a similar investigation had been held of the Egyptians. His indignation seems overdone,<sup>a</sup> and, indeed, the only specific complaint he makes is that the modesty of the women was offended by a military investigation of their intimate belong-

<sup>a</sup> If the Jews, as stated in Legatio 134, effectively resisted in some cases the attacks upon the synagogues, they must have had weapons of some kind, and though these may not have been of the kinds enumerated in § 90, the suspicion that they were such was natural.

FLACCUS

ings, and in connexion with this he mentions other ill-treatment which the women had received in the pogrom (86-96).

The last item in the list of Flaccus's crimes is that he suppressed the resolution of congratulation which the Jewish senate had passed at Gaius's accession and which he had promised to transmit to the Emperor. The Jews suspecting that he had not sent it on had consulted Agrippa when he visited Alexandria and received from him an undertaking which they believed <sup>a</sup> that he had carried out (97-103).

So much for Flaccus's offences. We pass on to his punishment. The story of his arrest with a detailed account of the circumstances and of the exultation felt by the Jews, is related with all the vividness of which Philo is a master. We note that this occurred during the Feast of Tabernacles, not much more than a month after the birthday of the emperor and that his journey to Rome, during which he suffered from stormy weather, was at the beginning of winter (104-125). We do not know exactly what he was charged with, but are told that Isidorus and Lampo, who were mentioned earlier as leaders of the faction which urged him to secure his position by persecuting the Jews, now appeared as his accusers (126-127). And here Philo interrupts his narrative to tell us something about these two. His tirade against Lampo amounts to a charge that as secretary to the prefect acting as judge he persistently perverted justice, though we also incidentally learn that he had been for a time in serious trouble under Tiberius (128-134). As to Isidorus, we have a lengthy account of an incident belonging to the early days of Flaccus's prefectship.

<sup>a</sup> ὡς ἀκούομεν. Does this imply some uncertainty?

PHILO

Flaccus had originally shown him considerable favour. When he became less cordial Isidorus took umbrage and organized a gathering of his touts, who brought baseless slanders against Flaccus here represented as behaving with moderation and good sense. A meeting to which the respectable part of the people were summoned brought the whole city together full of indignation against the slanderers and sympathy with the governor. Isidorus was completely exposed and had to flee from the city (135-145). He must have reappeared and, surprising as it seems, must, if Philo's account is true, have persuaded Flaccus that he was a friend on whose advice he could rely. What charges he and Lampo brought against Flaccus we are not told, but a trial was held in which Flaccus was condemned, his property confiscated and himself sentenced to deportation (146-150).

From this point the story proceeds straightforwardly to the end. We are given an account of his journey to Andros and his miserable plight after his arrival, interspersed with speeches and soliloquies in which he laments his fall and acknowledges that his punishment is just. Whether this last represents his feeling may be doubted. We have not and probably Philo had not any means of judging. The end came when Gaius, who is said to have come to the conclusion that the life of the deported was too mild a punishment for him, determined to have him executed. The treatise closes with a description of the way in which this was carried out, followed by the assertion that the fate of Flaccus shows that God still watches over the Jews (151-191).

The Flaccus has considerable literary merits. The narrative, particularly in the last forty sections, is exceedingly vivid. It is also, no doubt, historically valuable in so far as it gives a substantially true account of events of which we know very little from other sources. How far it is good history, in the sense of giving a reliable account of the motives and feelings of the actors in the story, I leave to those more competent than myself to assess. Also it is a powerful embodiment of that profound conviction that the nation is under the special Providence of God which has been the life and soul of Judaism throughout the centuries. This conviction naturally entails a belief that the enemies of Judaism are the enemies of God and their punishment a divine visitation. But this belief has its evil side, which seems to me to be very strongly exhibited in this treatise. In § 117 the Jews are represented as saying " We do not rejoice at the punishment of an enemy because we have been taught by the Holy Laws to have human sympathy." This is easily said but not so easily done, and if Philo believed that he himself had learnt this lesson I think he deceived himself. He gloats over the misery of Flaccus in his fall, exile, and death, with a vindictiveness which I feel to be repulsive.<sup>a</sup> While, as I have said in the preface, none of the treatises in this volume have any great value nor would probably have survived but for the high esteem given to his main work, this is the only one which those who admire the beauty and spirituality so often shown both in the Commentary and Exposition might well wish to have been left unwritten.

FLACCUS

<sup>a</sup> See also the conclusion to the De Praemiis.

ΕΙΣ ΦΛΑΚΚΟΝ

[517] I. Δεύτερος μετὰ Σηιανὸν Φλάκκος Ἰουδαίος
<sup>1</sup> διαδέχεται τὴν κατὰ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἐπιβουλὴν, σύμπαν μὲν ἀδικῆσαι τὸ ἔθνος ὡσπερ ἐκείνος ἀντικρυσ οὐ δυναθεῖς—ἐλάττους γὰρ εἶχε τὰς εἰς τοῦτ' ἀφορμάς—, ἐφ' ὅσους δ' ἔφθανεν, ἀθρόους ἀνηκέστοις περιέπειρε κακοῖς. οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ μέρει δόξας ἐπιτίθεσθαι τὴν ἐπιβουλὴν ἐξέτεινεν ἐπι-
<sup>2</sup> ὀρθοῦσιν. ὁ Φλάκκος οὖν οὗτος ἐν τοῖς ἐταίροις κριθεῖς παρὰ Τιβερίῳ Καίσαρι μετὰ τὴν Ἰβήρου<sup>1</sup> τελευτήν, ὃς ἐπετέτραπτο Αἴγυπτον, καθίσταται τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας καὶ τῆς χώρας ἐπίτροπος, ἄνθρωπος ἐν ἀρχῇ μυρία καλοκαγαθίας ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν ἐξενεγκῶν δείγματα· πυκνὸς τε γὰρ ἦν καὶ συνεχῆς καὶ ὀξὺς νοῆσαι καὶ τὰ βουλευθέντα πράξαι καὶ προχειρότατος εἰπεῖν καὶ πρὸ τοῦ <sup>3</sup> λεγομένου τὸ ἡσυχάζομενον αἰσθῆσθαι. παντάπασι οὖν ὀλίγῳ χρόνῳ τῶν κατὰ τὴν Αἴγυπτον

<sup>1</sup> So Reiter for mss. βήρου or σεβήρου. See note b.

<sup>a</sup> For Sejanus's hostility to the Jews cf. Legatio 159-161, and see further App. p. 531.

<sup>b</sup> The name of Iberus is mentioned by Dio Cass. lviii. 19. 6

FLACCUS

I. The policy of attacking the Jews begun by 1 Sejanus <sup>a</sup> was taken over by Flaccus Avillius. He had not like his predecessor the power to ill-treat outright the whole nation, for he had less opportunities of doing so, but those whom he reached suffered the direst misery from the stabs which he dealt to them one and all. And, indeed, though his assault appeared to be only partial, by employing craft rather than power he brought them all wherever they were within the scope of his hostility. For persons naturally tyrannical who have not the addition of strength achieve their malignant designs through cunning. This Flaccus then, who had been given a 2 place in the suite of Tiberius Caesar, was after the death of Iberus, <sup>b</sup> who had been prefect of Egypt, made prefect of Alexandria and the country round it.
He was a man who at first gave to all appearance a multitude of proofs of high excellence. He was sagacious and assiduous, quick to think out and execute his plans, very ready at speaking, and at understanding what was left unspoken better even than what was said. So in quite a short time he 3 became thoroughly familiar with Egyptian affairs, as succeeding Vitrasius Pollio as prefect of Egypt. Older editions adopting the reading of most of the mss. called him Severus. Cf. De Som. ii. 123 and note, vol. v. p. 609.

PHILO

πραγματειῶν ἐθὰς γίνεται· πολύτροποι δ' εἰσὶ καὶ ποικίλοι, μόλις τοῖς ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας τὸ ἔργον ἐπιτήδευμα πεπονημένοις γνωριζόμεναι. περιττὸς ὄχλος ἦσαν οἱ γραμματεῖς, ἥδη πρὸς πάντα μικρὰ καὶ μεγάλα φθάνοντος αὐτοῦ ταῖς ἐμπειρίαις, ὡς μὴ μόνον ὑπερβαλεῖν ἀλλὰ χάριν ἀκριβείας ἀντὶ γνωρίμου διδάσκαλον γεγενῆσθαι τῶν τέως ὑφηγη-4 τῶν. καὶ ὅσα μὲν περὶ λογισμοὺς καὶ τὴν τῶν προσοδομένων κατώρθου διοίκησιν, εἰ καὶ μεγάλα καὶ ἀναγκαῖα ἦν, ἀλλ' οὐδέν γε δεῖγμα
 [518] | ψυχῆς ὑπέφαιεν ἡγεμονικῆς, ἃ δὲ λαμπρότεραν καὶ βασιλικὴν ἐδήλου φύσιν, μετὰ πλείονος παρρησίας ἐπεδείκνυτο· οἷον σεμνότερον ἦγεν αὐτόν— ἄρχοντι δὲ λυσιτελέστατον ὁ τύφος—, ἐδίκαιζε τὰ μεγάλα μετὰ τῶν ἐν τέλει, τοὺς ὑπεραύχους καθήρει, μιγάδων καὶ συγκλύδων ἀνθρώπων ὄχλον ἐκώλυνεν ἐπισυνίστασθαι· τὰς τε ἑταιρείας καὶ συνόδους, αἱ αἰεὶ ἐπὶ προφάσει θυσιῶν εἰστιῶντο τοῖς πράγμασιν ἐμπαροinouσαι, διέλυε τοῖς ἀφηνία-5 ζουσιν ἐμβριθῶς καὶ εὐτόνως προσφερόμενος. εἶπ' ἐπειδὴ τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὴν χώραν ἀνέπλησεν εὐνομίας, ἐν μέρει πάλιν ταῖς στρατιωτικαῖς δυνάμεσιν ἐφήδρευεν ἐκτάττων, συγκροτῶν, γυμνάζων πεζοὺς, <sup>a</sup> Cf. § 133.

<sup>b</sup> παρρησία seems to be used here in a wider sense than the ordinary "frankness of speech" and to describe a person who shows his mind by actions as well as speech.

<sup>c</sup> Or simply "behaved in matters generally like drunkards." So Josephus, Ant. vi. 12. 7 uses the phrase of Saul's general conduct. Cf. De Ios. 45, where the adulterer ἐμπαροινεῖ ταῖς ἑλπίσιν of the husband. But the description of the θίασοι in § 136 suggests that drunkenness in the literal sense is intended.

<sup>d</sup> This is a curious use of ἐφεδρεύω. The regular sense of

FLACCUS, 3-5

intricate and diversified as they are and hardly grasped even by those who have made a business of studying them from their earliest years. His crowd of secretaries were a superfluity, since nothing small or great was beyond the reach of his experience, so that he not only surpassed them but thanks to his mastery of detail became the teacher instead of the pupil of his erstwhile instructors. And <sup>4</sup> all matters connected with accountancy and administration of the revenue he managed successfully.<sup>a</sup> These indeed, great and vital though they were, did not supply proof that he possessed the soul of a leader of men, but in a more open way <sup>b</sup> he displayed qualities which revealed a more brilliant and kingly nature. Thus he bore himself with dignity, for outward pomp is very useful to a ruler. He judged important cases with the help of those in authority, humbled the arrogant and prevented any motley promiscuous horde of people from combining in opposition. The sodalities and clubs, which were constantly holding feasts under pretext of sacrifice in which drunkenness vented itself in political intrigue,<sup>c</sup> he dissolved and dealt sternly and vigorously with the refractory. Then when he had fully <sup>5</sup> established good order throughout the city and the country he began to turn his attention to supporting<sup>d</sup> the armed forces. He set them in array,<sup>e</sup> drilled, exercised them, cavalry, infantry and light-of the word in Philo is to watch or wait generally for an opportunity to attack, sometimes to help. So in De Mig. 57 πρὸς βοήθειαν δύναμις ἀρωγὸς ἐφεδρεύει παρὰ θεῶν. In other writers the sense of waiting seems sometimes to be lost, and it is used more generally for "help" or "reinforce," though hardly in the sense required here of improving the morale of the troops. <sup>e</sup> Box gives "detail to special duties."

PHILO

ἰππεῖς, τοὺς τῆς κούφης ὀπλίσεως, τοὺς ἡγεμόνας, ἵνα μὴ τὰς μισθοφορὰς τῶν στρατιωτῶν ἀφαιρούμενοι πρὸς ληστείας καὶ ἀρπαγὰς αὐτοὺς ἀλείψωσι, πάλιν τῶν στρατιωτῶν ἕκαστον, ἵνα μηδὲν ἕξω τῶν κατὰ τὴν στρατείαν περιεργάζηται μεμνημένος, ὅτι τέτακται καὶ τὴν εἰρήνην διαφυλάττειν.

- 6 II. Ἴσως δ' ἂν τις εἴποι· “σὺ δ', ὦ οὗτος, ἐγνωκῶς ἀνθρώπου κατηγορεῖν ἔγκλημα μὲν οὐδὲν διεξῆλθες, μακροὺς δ' ἐπαίνους συνείρεις· μὴ ἄρα παραπαίεις καὶ μέμνηνας;”—οὐ μέμνηνα, ὦ οὗτος, οὐδ' ἠλίθιός τίς εἰμι, ὡς μὴ δύνασθαι πράγματος
- 7 ἀκολουθίαν ἰδεῖν. ἐπαινῶ τὸν Φλάκκον, οὐκ ἐπειδὴ προσῆκεν ἐχθρὸν ἐγκωμιάζειν, ἀλλ' ἵν' αὐτοῦ τὴν μοχθηρίαν ἀριδηλοτέραν παραστήσω· τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἀγνοία τοῦ κρείττονος διαμαρτάνοντι συγγνώμη δίδοται, ὁ δ' ἐξ ἐπιστήμης ἀδικῶν ἀπολογίαν οὐκ ἔχει προεαλωκῶς ἐν τῷ τοῦ συν-
- 8 εἰδότος δικαστηρίῳ. III. ἐξαιτίαν γὰρ τὴν ἐπικράτειαν λαβὼν πέντε μὲν ἔτη τὰ πρῶτα, ζῶντος Τιβερίου Καίσαρος, τὴν τε εἰρήνην διεφύλαξε καὶ οὕτως εὐτόνως καὶ ἐρρωμένως ἀφηγήσατο, ὡς
- 9 τοὺς πρὸ αὐτοῦ πάντας ὑπερβαλεῖν. τῷ δ' ὑστάτῳ, Τιβερίου μὲν τελευτήσαντος, Γαίῳ δ' ἀποδειχθέντος αὐτοκράτορος, ὑφίεναι καὶ χαλᾶν ἤρξατο τὰ πάντα εἴτε διὰ τὸ ἐπὶ Τιβερίῳ βαρύτερον πένθος—δῆλος γὰρ ἦν ὡς ἐπ' οἰκειοτάτῳ περιπαθῶν ἕκ τε τῆς συνεχοῦς κατηφείας καὶ τῆς τῶν δακρύων φορᾶς, ἃ καθάπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς ἀπαύστως ἐξεχεῖτο

<sup>a</sup> Box takes μεμνημένος as agreeing with Flaccus instead of the individual soldier. This is grammatically possible, but I think the run of the sentence is against it, and

FLACCUS, 5-9

armed alike, training the officers not to withhold the pay of their men and so incite them to pillage and rapine, and also each single soldier not to interfere in things outside his military duties but remember<sup>a</sup> that he had been appointed also to maintain the peace.

II. Possibly someone may say " My dear sir, after 6 deciding to accuse a man you have stated no charge but come out with a long string of praises. Are you out of your senses and gone quite mad ? " No, my friend, I have not gone mad and I am not a silly person who cannot see what the sequence of an argument demands. I praise Flaccus not because I 7 thought it right to laud an enemy but to show his villainy in a clearer light. For to one who sins through ignorance of a better course pardon may be given, but a wrongdoer who has knowledge has no defence but stands already convicted at the bar of his conscience. III. Flaccus held his prefectship 8 for six years and for the first five of these while Tiberius Caesar was alive maintained peace and held command with such activity and vigour that he excelled all his predecessors. But in the last year 9 when Tiberius was dead and Gaius had been appointed Emperor he began to let everything slip from his hands. This may have been due to his profound grief at the death of Tiberius. For how greatly he mourned the loss of one whom he looked on as his closest friend was shown by his constant depression and the stream of tears which poured ceaselessly from " remembered " is hardly the word we should expect. I doubt also whether the sense is much, if at all, better. The soldier may very properly be admonished to remember that he is a policeman as well.

PHILO

—εἴτε καὶ κακόνους ὧν τῷ διαδόχῳ διὰ τὸ τῆν τῶν γνησίων πρὸ τῆς τῶν θετῶν τεθεραπευκέναι μερίδα εἴτε καὶ τῶν συνεπιθεμένων τῇ Γαῖου μητρί, καθ' ὃν χρόνον εἶχε τὰς αἰτίας ἐφ' αἷς ἀνηρέθη, γεγονὼς καὶ διὰ φόβον ἀλώσεως ἐπιλελησμένος.<sup>1</sup>

- 10 καὶ μέχρι μὲν τινος ἔτ' ἀντείχε μὴ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς μεθιέμενος τὴν τῶν πραγμάτων ἀντίληψιν. ὡς δ' ἤκουσε τὸν Τιβερίου μὲν νιωνὸν
 [519] κοινωνὸν δὲ τῆς ἀρχῆς ἀναιρεθέντα | Γαῖου κελεύσαντος, ἀλέκτῳ πληγείς συμφορᾷ καταβαλὼν ἑαυτὸν ἀχανῆς ἔκειτο, τῆς διανοίας πολὺ πρότερον
 11 ἀπειρηκυίας καὶ παρειμένης αὐτῷ. ζῶντος μὲν γὰρ τοῦ μειρακίου τὰ ζώπυρα τῆς ἰδίας σωτηρίας οὐκ ἀπεγίνωσκεν, ἀποθανόντος δὲ συντεθνάαι καὶ τὰς οἰκείας ἐλπίδας ἔδοξεν, εἰ καὶ μικρά τις ἀπελείπετο αὖρα βοηθείας, ἢ πρὸς Μάκρωνα φιλία τὰ σύμπαντα παρὰ Γαῖῳ κατ' ἀρχὰς δυνηθέντα καὶ πλείστην μοῖραν ὡς λόγος εἰσενεγκάμενον αὐτῷ πρὸς τὸ τυχεῖν τῆς ἡγεμονίας καὶ ἐτι μᾶλλον πρὸς
 12 τὸ σωθῆναι, πολλάκις μὲν ἐκποδῶν ποιήσασθαι

<sup>1</sup> The translation is based on the suggestion that some such phrase as ὧν ἔδει has fallen out. The simplest emendation perhaps would be to change καὶ to καίπερ or, according to Philo's common use, to καίτοι "though he had neglected later" (to take an active part). But can ἐπιλελησμένος mean this?

<sup>a</sup> For this use of γνήσιος see note on Quod Omn. Prob. 87.

<sup>b</sup> Tiberius Gemellus. For him and other historical points in these sections see App. p. 531.

<sup>c</sup> The statement seems hardly consistent with what has been said just before. A better sense can be got if πολὺ πρότερον can be taken as a "much graver matter," i.e. the effect of the news upon him extended much beyond the refusal to speak. There are other passages in Philo which him as from a fountain. Or it may have been the ill-will he bore to his successor, since he had been a devoted partisan of the actual<sup>a</sup> rather than the adopted children. Or again as he had been one of those who had attacked Gaius's mother when she lay under the charges for which she was put to death, his fear of being held guilty on this count caused him to neglect his duties. And for a time he held out 10 and did not entirely lose his grasp of affairs, but when he heard that the grandson of Tiberius,<sup>b</sup> who shared the sovereignty, had been killed by Gaius's orders, this misfortune was so terrible a blow that he threw himself down and lay speechless, and for a considerable time before<sup>c</sup> this his thinking powers had become feeble and paralysed. For while the youth lived, 11 his hopes of preserving his own safety were still alight, but with his death it seemed that his personal hopes had died also, even though some little waft of possible assistance still reached him in his friendship with Macro, who originally was all-powerful with Gaius, said to have contributed more than anyone to his gaining the principate and still more to his preservation.<sup>d</sup> For Tiberius had been often minded to 12 point to some such meaning for the phrase. In Spec. Leg. i. 101 (of priests marrying) we have "he is a man πολύ πρότερον than a priest and therefore must feel the desire for mating." Here the idea may be that manhood is a wider thing than priesthood. In De Mig. 87, "there is no use in seeming to be so and so, unless you are it πολύ πρότερον." Here "long before" is rather pointless and a better sense is got if the phrase emphasizes the necessity of "being." In Legatio 115 the Jews have been taught from the cradle to worship the one God, by their parents and teachers and πολύ πρότερον by the holy laws. So also perhaps Mos. i. 162, De Praem. 88.

<sup>d</sup> On Macro see Legatio 32-61, where what is stated here is given much more fully.

PHILO

- τὸν Γάιον διανοηθέντος Τιβερίου ὡς κακοήθη καὶ οὐ πεφυκότα πρὸς ἀρχήν, καὶ ἅμα διὰ τὸν ἐπὶ τῷ υἱωνῷ φόβον—ἐδεδίδει γάρ, μὴ παρανάλωμα γένηται τελευτήσαντος αὐτοῦ—, πολλάκις δὲ τοῦ Μάκρωνος τὰς ὑπονοίας ὑπεξαιρουμένου καὶ τὸν Γάιον ἐπαινοῦντος ὡς ἀπλοῦν καὶ ἀπόνηρον καὶ κοινωνικὸν καὶ τοῦ ἀνεψιοῦ μάλιστα ἠττημένον, ὡς ἢ μόνῳ ἂν ἐθελῆσαι παραχωρῆσαι τὴν ἡγεμονίαν ἢ πάντως
- 13 τὰ πρωτεῖα. ὑφ' ὧν ἀπατηθεῖς ἔλαθεν ἄσπονδον ἐχθρὸν ἐαυτῷ καὶ υἱωνῷ καὶ γένει καὶ παρακλήτῳ Μάκρωνι καὶ πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις κατα-
- 14 λιπών. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ὁ Μάκρων ὄρων αὐτὸν ἐκδιαιτώμενον καὶ ἀχαλίνοις ταῖς ὀρμαῖς, ἐφ' ἃ ἂν τύχη καὶ ὡς ἂν τύχη, χρώμενον ἐνουθέτει καὶ παρηγόρει νομίζων ἐκεῖνον εἶναι Γάιον τόν, ἡνίκ' ἔτ' ἔζη Τιβέριος, ἐπειικῆ καὶ πειθαρχικόν, ὁ κακοδαίμων εὐνοίας περιττῆς ἔδωκε τὰς ἀνωτάτω δίκας πανοίκιος αὐτῇ γυναικὶ καὶ τέκνοις συναναιρεθεῖς
- 15 ὡς περιττὸν ἄχθος καὶ παρενόχλημα. καὶ γὰρ ὁπότε πόρρωθεν αὐτὸν ἀφικνούμενον ἴδοι, τοιαῦτα πρὸς τοὺς συνόντας διεξήει· “μὴ μειδιῶμεν, κατηφῶμεν· ὁ νουθετητῆς παραγίνεται, ὁ αὐθέκαστος, ὁ ἀνδρὸς τελείου καὶ αὐτοκράτορος ἀρξάμενος νῦν εἶναι παιδαγωγός, ὅτε καὶ τοὺς ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ὁ καιρὸς ἀπήλασε καὶ διεξέυξεν.”
- 16 IV. Ἐπεὶ δ' οὖν καὶ τοῦτον ἔγνω προσανηρη-

<sup>a</sup> The word παρανάλωμα recurs in Legatio 369, but in a different sense. There life if sacrificed for no profitable purpose is a παρανάλωμα. Here the idea may be as in the translation, or perhaps simply “an extra expenditure,” i.e. “having got rid of Tiberius let us get rid of his kin too.”

FLACCUS, 12-16

get Gaius out of the way as a person ill-disposed and devoid of natural gifts for rulership, and also because he was concerned for his grandson, who he feared might at his death be got rid of as an encumbrance.<sup>a</sup> But Macro often tried to eliminate his suspicions and would praise Gaius as straight-forward and free from vice and liberal and particularly devoted to his cousin, so much so that he would willingly relinquish the principate to his sole charge, or, at any rate, the premier place.

Deceived by these representations Tiberius unwittingly left behind him an implacable enemy to himself, his grandson, his family, Macro the intercessor and all mankind. For when Macro saw him straying from the regular way and letting his impulses range unbridled anywhither and in any way he would admonish and exhort him, thinking that he was the same Gaius who while Tiberius still lived was reasonable and docile. But, alas, poor wretch, for his excessive goodwill he paid the extreme penalty, being slain with his whole house, wife and children as a burden, a superfluity and a nuisance. For whenever Gaius caught sight of him at a distance he would talk in this strain to his companions, "Let us not smile, let us look downcast, for here comes the monitor, the stickler for straight speaking,<sup>b</sup> who has begun to take charge as tutor of a grown man and an emperor, at this very time which has dismissed and set aside those who tutored him from his earliest years."

IV. So when Flaccus learnt that Macro too had <sup>b</sup> Or simply "martinet," "strict disciplinarian." The word is coupled by Plutarch with ὀμφακίας and στρυφνός in describing a harsh father. For other examples see Stephanus, who explains it as meaning a person who reckons αὐτὰ ἕκαστα and leaves nothing out.

PHILO

μένον ὁ Φλάκκος, τὴν λοιπὴν ἐλπίδα κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἀπεγνώκει καὶ οὐκέθ' ὁμοίως ἀντιλαμ-βάνεσθαι τῶν πραγμάτων οἷός τε ἦν ἐξασθενῶν 17 καὶ διαρρέων τὴν γνώμην. ὅταν δ' ὁ ἄρχων ἀπογνῶ τὸ δύνασθαι κρατεῖν, ἀνάγκη τοὺς ὑπηκόους εὐθὺς ἀφηνιάζειν καὶ μάλιστα τοὺς ἐκ μικρῶν καὶ τῶν τυχόντων πεφυκότας ἀνερεθίζεσθαι· ἐν οἷς 18 σπινθῆρος εἰωθὸς ἐκφυσᾶν στάσεις μεγάλας. ἐν ἀμηχάνοις δὲ καὶ ἀπόροις γεγωνῶς ἐσφάδαξε καὶ τὰ πρὸ μικροῦ πάντα<sup>1</sup> ἥλλαξεν ἅμα τῇ τοῦ λογισμοῦ [520] | πρὸς τὸ χεῖρον μεταβολῇ ποιησάμενος τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ τῶν συνηθεστάτων· τοὺς μὲν γὰρ εὖνους καὶ μάλιστα φίλους ὑφωρᾶτο καὶ διωθεῖτο, τοῖς δ' ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἀνομολογηθεῖσιν ἐχθροῖς ἐσπένδετο καὶ 19 συμβούλοις περὶ πάντων ἐχρήτο. οἱ δ'—ἐγκότως γὰρ εἶχον—τὸ κατηλλάχθαι δοκεῖν λόγῳ μόνον ἐπιμορφάσαντες, ἔργοις δὲ κατὰ διάνοιαν ἀσύμβατα μνησικακοῦντες καὶ ὡσπερ ἐν θεάτρῳ καθυποκρι-νόμενοι γνησίαν φιλίαν ὄλον αὐτὸν συναρπάζουσι· καὶ γίνεται ὁ μὲν ἄρχων ὑπήκοος, οἱ δ' ὑπήκοοι ἡγεμόνες, εἰσηγούμενοι μὲν ἀλυσιτελεστάτας γνώ-20 μας, εὐθὺς δὲ ταύτας ἐπισφραγιζόμενοι. βεβαιωταὶ γὰρ ὦν ἐβουλεύσαντο πάντων ἐγίνοντο κωφὸν ὡς ἐπὶ σκηνῆς προσωπέιον ἔνεκα προσχήματος αὐτὸ μόνον παραλαμβάνοντες ἐπιγεγραμμένον ὄνομα ἀρχῆς, Διονύσιοι δημοκόποι, Λάμπωνες γραμμα-

<sup>1</sup> Some word or phrase to express policy seems to be needed. Reiter suggests δόξαντα.

FLACCUS, 16-20

been put to death he completely lost any hope that he still had and could no longer keep any grip of affairs, so utterly enfeebled was he and incapable of solid judgement. And when the ruler despairs of 17 keeping control the subjects necessarily at once become restive, particularly those who are naturally excited by quite small and ordinary occurrences. Among such the Egyptian nation holds the first place, accustomed as it is to blow up the tiniest spark into grave seditions. Flaccus, thus left without help 18 or resources, was much agitated and at the same time as his reasoning powers deteriorated made changes in all his recent policy, beginning with his treatment of his closest companions. For he suspected and repelled those who were well disposed and particularly friendly to him, while he allied himself to those who from the first had been his avowed enemies and took them for his counsellors in every matter. But their rancour was still there. The 19 apparent reconciliation was a counterfeit, existing only in words. In real fact they cherished an implacable vindictiveness and acting as in a theatre the part of genuine friends they carried him off into complete captivity. The ruler became the subject, the subjects leaders, who put forward very pernicious proposals and straightway set on them the seal of reality. They proceeded to confirm all their plans, 20 and took Flaccus like a masked dummy on the stage with the title of government inscribed upon him merely for show, to be an instrument in the hands of a popularity-hunting Dionysius,<sup>a</sup> a paper-

<sup>a</sup> Dionysius's name does not recur again in this treatise, but see App. p. 532, on him as well as on Isidorus and Lampo.

PHILO

τοκύφωνες, Ἰσιδωροὶ στασιάρχαι, φιλοπράγμονες, κακῶν εὐρεταί, ταραξιπόλιδες· τοῦτο γὰρ κεκρά-21 τηκέ πως τοῦνομα.                      συνταξάμενοι πάντες οὔτοι βούλευμα βουλεύουσι κατὰ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἀργαλεώτατον καὶ τῷ Φλάκκῳ προσελθόντες ἰδίᾳ 22 φασίν· “ ἔρρει μὲν σοὶ τὰ ἀπὸ Τιβερίου Νέρωνος τοῦ παιδός, ἔρρει δὲ καὶ ἡ μετ’ ἐκείνον ἐλπίς, ὁ ἑταῖρός σου Μάκρων, αἴσια δ’ οὐκ ἔστι σοὶ τὰ ἀπὸ τοῦ κρατοῦντος· δεῖ δὴ παράκλητον ἡμᾶς εὐρεῖν 23 δυνατώτατον, ὅφ’ οὗ Γάιος ἐξευμενισθήσεται. ὁ δὲ παράκλητος ἡ πόλις Ἀλεξανδρέων ἐστίν, ἣν τετίμηκε μὲν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἅπας ὁ Σεβαστὸς οἶκος, διαφερόντως δ’ ὁ νῦν ἡμῶν δεσπότης. παρα-κλητεύσει δὲ τυχούσά τινος παρὰ σοῦ δωρεᾶς· μείζον δ’ ἀγαθὸν οὐδὲν αὐτῇ παρέξεις ἢ τοὺς 24 Ἰουδαίους ἐκδοὺς καὶ προέμενος.” ἐπὶ τούτοις ὀφείλων ἀπώσασθαι καὶ δυσχερᾶναι τοὺς λέγοντας ὡς νεωτεροποιὸς καὶ κοινὸς πολεμίους συνεπιγράφεται τοῖς λεχθεῖσι. καὶ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀδηλοτέρας ἐποιεῖτο τὰς ἐπιβουλάς μῆτ’ ἴσον παρέχων καὶ κοινὸν ἀκροατὴν ἑαυτὸν τοῖς τὰς ἀμφισβητήσεις ἔχουσιν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς θάτερον ἀποκλίνων μέρος, μῆτ’ ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις ἰσηγορίαν διδούς, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅποτε προσίοι τις τῶν Ἰουδαίων, ἀποστρεφόμενος καὶ τὸ δυσέντευκτον ἐπιτηδεύων

---

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps “paper-nosing,” if that is not too slangy.
 “Paper-porer” is a variation on L. & S.’s “record-porer.”
 This epithet, which recurs again in § 131, is taken from De 314

FLACCUS, 20-24

poring<sup>a</sup> Lampo, an Isidorus, faction leader, busy intriguer, mischief contriver and a name which has gained special currency—state embroiler.<sup>b</sup> All 21 these combining concerted a plot of the most damaging kind against the Jews and coming to Flaccus privately said, “Lost are your prospects from the 22 boy Tiberius Nero, lost too the hope that you had next to him in your comrade Macro, and your expectations from the Emperor are anything but favourable. We must find you a really powerful intercessor to propitiate Gaius. Such an intercessor 23 is the city of the Alexandrians which has been honoured from the first by all the Augustan house and especially by our present master; and intercede it will if it receives from you some boon, and you can give it no greater benefaction than by surrendering and sacrificing the Jews.” Though on hearing these 24 words it was his duty to repulse and frown upon the speakers as sedition-makers and enemies of the commonwealth he subscribed to their suggestions. At first he showed his hostile intentions in a somewhat less obvious way by refusing to give a fair and impartial hearing to the parties in disputes and leaning to one side only, while in all other matters he gave them no right of free speech, but whenever any Jew approached he turned away, while to all others he

Cor. 209. Though it is uncertain whether Demosthenes applies it to Aeschines as a scribe, or as an usher in his father's school, Philo clearly takes it in the first sense. No effective rendering has been suggested to my knowledge for the term which describes a pedant hunching his shoulders over writings. Kennedy translates it by “scribbler,” Abbott by “hack of a scribe.” Dr. Rouse suggests to me a number of renderings of which I select “ledger-dredger” as the most effective.

<sup>b</sup> This epithet is again applied to Isidorus in § 137.

PHILO

ἐπὶ μόνων τούτων· αὐθις δὲ καὶ ἐκ τοῦ φανεροῦ τὴν δυσμένειαν ἐπεδείξατο.

- 25 V. Προσεπέρρωσε δ' αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐκ μαθήσεως τὸ πλεόν ἢ φύσεως ἐπιτετηδευμένην ἀπόνοιαν καὶ συντυχία τις τοιαύτη. Γάιος Καῖσαρ Ἀγρίππα τῷ Ἡρώδου βασιλέως υἱωνῶ δίδωσι βασιλείαν [521] | τῆς παπώας λήξεως τρίτην μοῖραν, ἣν Φίλιππος τετράρχης θεῖος ὢν αὐτῷ πρὸς πατρός ἐκαρπούτο.
- 26 μέλλοντι δ' ἀπαίρειν συνεβούλευσεν ὁ Γάιος τὸν μὲν ἀπὸ Βρεντεσίου μέχρι Συρίας πλοῦν μακρὸν ὄντα καὶ καματηρὸν παραιτήσασθαι, χρῆσθαι δ' ἐπιτόμῳ τοὺς ἐτησίας ἀναμείναντι τῷ διὰ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας· τὰς τε γὰρ ἐκείθεν ὀλκάδας ταχυναυτεῖν ἔφασκε καὶ ἐμπειροτάτους εἶναι κυβερνήτας, οἱ καθάπερ ἀθλητὰς ἵππους ἡνιοχοῦσιν ἀπλανῆ παρέχοντες τὸν ἐπ' εὐθείας δρόμον. ὁ δὲ πει-θαρχεῖ ὡς δεσπότη τε ἅμα καὶ τὰ δοκοῦντα συμ-27 φέρειν παραγγέλλονται. καταβὰς δ' εἰς Δικαιάρχειαν καὶ ναῦς ὑφόρμους Ἀλεξανδρίδας ἰδὼν εὐτρεπεῖς πρὸς ἀναγωγὴν, ἐπιβὰς μετὰ τῶν ἰδίων, εὐπλοῖα χρησάμενος, ὀλίγαις ὕστερον ἡμέραις ἀνεπιφάτως καὶ ἀφωράτως κατάγεται, κελεύσας τοῖς κυβερνήταις—περὶ γὰρ δείλην ὥραν ὁ Φάρος ἀναφαίνεται—τὰ μὲν ἰστία συνάγειν, ἔξω δὲ περὶ αὐτὸν μὴ μακρὰν ἀφισταμένους θαλαττεύειν ἄχρι τοῦ βαθείαν ἐσπέραν ἐπιγενέσθαι καὶ νυκτὸς τοῖς λιμέσι προσσχεῖν, ἵν' ἀποβὰς ἤδη τετραμμένων <ἀπάντων> πρὸς ὕπνον, μηδενὸς ὀρώντος, ἀφίκηται 28 πρὸς τὸν ξενοδόχον. ὁ μὲν δὴ μετὰ τοσαύτης αἰδοῦς ἐπεδήμησε βουλόμενος εἶ πως οἶόν τε ἦν,

<sup>a</sup> For Agrippa see App. p. 532.

<sup>b</sup> Puteoli.

FLACCUS, 24-28

made himself easily accessible. But later he also showed his ill-will openly.

V. The infatuation due to instruction from others 25 rather than to his own nature, which thus was shown in his conduct, was further strengthened by the following incident. Gaius Caesar gave to Agrippa, the grandson of King Herod, the kingship over that third part of his grandfather's territory, the revenues of which were taken by Philip the tetrarch, Agrippa's paternal uncle.<sup>a</sup> When he was about to set out 26 thither Gaius advised him not to undertake the voyage from Brundisium to Syria which was long and wearisome but wait for the etesian winds and take the short route through Alexandria. He told him that thence there were swift-sailing merchant vessels and highly skilled pilots who manage them as a charioteer manages race-horses and provide a straightforward passage along the direct route. Agrippa did as he was told, partly out of deference to his lord and master, and also because the course he enjoined seemed to be advisable. He went down 27 to Dicaearchia,<sup>b</sup> and seeing there some ships of Alexandria lying at anchor and ready to sail he embarked with his retinue, and after a good voyage came to land a few days later without being expected or his purposes detected. He had ordered the pilots when they sighted Pharos in the late afternoon to furl the sails and lie outside round about it and not far off until the evening had well set in, and then by night to put in at the harbour, so that he might disembark when everyone had settled down to sleep and reach the house of his host without anyone seeing him. His reason for making his visit in such an unassuming 28 way was that he wished if possible to slip out of the ἅπαντας τοὺς ἐν τῇ πόλει λαθὼν ὑπεξελεθεῖν· οὐ γὰρ κατὰ θεῶν ἀφίκτο τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας ἐπιδημητικῶς αὐτῇ πρότερον, ἡνίκα τὸν ἐπὶ Ῥώμης πλοῦν ἐστέλλετο πρὸς Τιβέριον, ἀλλ' ὁδῶ χρησό-29 μενος ἐπιτόμῳ τῆς οἴκαδε ἀφίξεως. οἱ δ' ὑπὸ φθόνου ῥηγνύμενοι—βάσκανον γὰρ φύσει τὸ Αἰγυπτιακόν—καὶ τὰς ἐτέρων εὐτυχίας ἰδίας ὑπελάμβανον εἶναι κακοπραγίας καὶ ἅμα διὰ τὴν παλαιὰν καὶ τρόπον τινα (φύσει) γεγενημένην<sup>1</sup> πρὸς Ἰου-δαίους ἀπέχθειαν ἤσχαλλον ἐπὶ τῷ γεγενῆσθαι τινα βασιλέα Ἰουδαίων οὐχ ἦττον, ἢ εἰ αὐτός τις 30 ἕκαστος βασιλείαν προγονικὴν ἀφήρητο. καὶ τὸν ἄθλιον Φλάκκον πάλιν οἱ συνόντες ἀνηρέθιζον εἰς τὸν αὐτὸν ἐνάγοντες καὶ προκαλούμενοι<sup>2</sup> φθόνον, “σὴ κατάλυσις ἐστὶ” φάσκοντες “ἢ ἐπιδημία τούτου· μείζονα τιμῆς καὶ εὐδοξίας ὄγκον ἢ σὺ περιβέβληται· πάντας εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἐπιστρέφει τὴν δορυφόρον τῶν σωματοφυλάκων στρατιὰν ὀρῶντας ἐπαργύροις καὶ ἐπιχρύσοις ὄπλοις διακεκοσμημένην.

PHILO

 31 ἔδει γὰρ ἦκειν εἰς ἐπικράτειαν ἐτέρου δυνάμενον πλῶ χρησάμενον εἰς τὴν οἰκείαν ἀσφαλῶς παρα-πεμφθῆναι; καὶ γὰρ εἰ Γάιος ἐπέτρεπε, μᾶλλον δ' ἠνάγκαζεν, ἐχρῆν ἐκλιπαρήσαντα παραιτήσασθαι τὴν ἐνθάδε ἀφίξιν, ἵνα μὴ παρενημερηθεῖς ὁ τῆς 32 χώρας ἡγεμῶν ἀδοξῆ.” ταῦτα ἀκούων ἔτι μᾶλλον

<sup>1</sup> Other suggestions are συγγεγενημένην or ἐγγεγενημένην. (Perhaps συγγεγεννημένην as Cohn in De Praem. 62.)

<sup>2</sup> MSS. προσκαλούμενοι.

---

<sup>a</sup> This and indeed the general excitement caused by Agrippa's visit seem inconsistent with his attempt to remain incognito. The explanation presumably is that the Jews forced this change of attitude on him. We find later (§ 103) city quietly and unobserved by the whole population. For he had not come to see Alexandria as he had stayed there before on his voyage to Rome to join Tiberius, and he only wanted to get a short route for his journey home. But jealousy is part of the 29 Egyptian nature, and the citizens were bursting with envy and considered that any good luck to others was misfortune to themselves, and in their ancient, and we might say innate hostility to the Jews, they resented a Jew having been made a king just as much as if each of them had thereby been deprived of an ancestral throne. And the unhappy Flaccus 30 was again stirred up by his companions with incitements and appeals calculated to make him as envious as themselves. "His stay here," they said, "is your deposition. The dignity of the honour and prestige which invest him surpasses yours; he is attracting all men to him by the sight of his bodyguard of spearmen, decked in armour overlaid with gold and silver.<sup>a</sup> Was it right for him to come to another 31 ruler's domain when a fair wind<sup>b</sup> could have carried him safely by sea to his own? For if Gaius gave him permission or rather put compulsion on him to do so, he ought to have earnestly entreated to be excused from coming here, so that the governor of the country would not be thrown into the background and lose prestige." Such words made his temper 32 that they took the occasion to lay before him their grievance against Flaccus for failing to transmit their address to Gaius and doubtless were as ready to make much of his royal status as the Alexandrines were to resent it.

<sup>b</sup> πλω here = εὐπλοία. See examples in L. & S. revised, e.g. πλοῦς ἡμῖν γίγνεται, and the same phrase as here πλω χρησασθαι Thuc. iii. 3. 5. Cf. also εὐπλοία χρησάμενος § 27 above.

PHILO

ἢ πρότερον ᾧδει καὶ ἐν μὲν τῷ φανερωῷ τὸν ἑταῖρον καὶ φίλον καθυπεκρίνετο διὰ τὸν ἐκ τοῦ πέμψαντος φόβον, ἰδία δὲ ἐξηλοτύπει καὶ ἐξελάλει τὸ μῖσος [522] καὶ πλαγίως | αὐτὸν ὕβριζεν, ἐπειδὴ περ ἄντικρυς 33 οὐκ ἐθάρρει. τῷ γὰρ ἀργοῦντι καὶ σχολάζοντι τῆς πόλεως ὄχλω—πλήθος δ' ἐστὶν ἐπιτετηδευκὸς γλωσσαλίαν καὶ ἐνευκαιροῦν διαβολαῖς καὶ βλασφημίαις—ἐπιτρέπει κακηγορεῖν τὸν βασιλέα εἴτε ἀρξάμενος δι' ἑαυτοῦ τῶν λοιδοριῶν εἴτε προτρεψάμενος καὶ ἐναγαγὼν αὐτὸς διὰ τῶν ὑπηρετεῖν τὰ 34 τοιαῦτα εἰωθότων. οἱ δ' ἀφορμῆς λαβόμενοι διημέρευον ἐν τῷ γυμνασίῳ χλευάζοντες τὸν βασιλέα καὶ σκώμματα συνείροντες· πῆ δὲ καὶ ποιηταῖς μίμων καὶ γελοίων διδασκάλοις χρώμενοι τὴν ἐν τοῖς αἰσχροῖς εὐφυῖαν ἐπεδείκνυντο, βραδεῖς μὲν ὄντες τὰ καλὰ παιδεύεσθαι, τὰ δ' ἐναντία 35 μανθάνειν ὀξύτατοι καὶ προχειρότατοι. διὰ τί γὰρ οὐκ ἠγανάκτησεν, οὐκ ἀπήγαγεν, οὐκ ἐπέπληξε τῆς αὐθάδους βλασφημίας; εἰ δὲ μὴ βασιλεὺς ἦν, ἀλλὰ τις τῶν ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος οἰκίας, οὐκ ᾧφειλε προνομίαν τινὰ καὶ τιμὴν ἔχειν; ἀλλὰ ταῦτ' εἰσὶ πίστεις ἐναργεῖς τοῦ συναίτιον γεγενῆσθαι τῶν βλασφημιῶν Φλάκκον· ὁ γὰρ ἐπιπλήττειν ἢ τὸ πανύστατον ἐπέχειν ἂν δυνηθεῖς εἰ μὴ κεκώλυκε, δῆλος ἦν ἐφίεις καὶ ἐπιτρέπων αὐτός. πρὸς ὅτι δ' ἂν ὄχλος ἀσύντακτος ἀφορμὴν λάβῃ τῶν

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. "took a leaf from their book," referring to the 320

FLACCUS, 32-35

rise still more, and while in public he played the part of friend and comrade to Agrippa through fear of him who had sent him there, in private he vented his jealousy and gave full utterance to his hatred by insulting him indirectly since he had not the courage to do so outright. For the lazy and unoccupied mob 33 in the city, a multitude well practised in idle talk, who devote their leisure to slandering and evil speaking, was permitted by him to vilify the king, whether the abuse was actually begun by himself or caused by his incitement and provocation addressed to those who were his regular ministers in such matters. Thus started on their course they spent 34 their days in the gymnasium jeering at the king and bringing out a succession of gibes against him. In fact they took the authors of farces and jests for their instructors<sup>a</sup> and thereby showed their natural ability in things of shame, slow to be schooled in anything good but exceedingly quick and ready in learning the opposite. Why did Flaccus show no 35 indignation? Why did he not arrest them? Why did he not chastise them for their presumptuous evil-speaking? Even if Agrippa had not been a king, yet as a member of Caesar's household, did he not deserve to have some precedence and marks of honour? No, these are clear proofs that Flaccus was a party to the defamation. For it is evident that if he who could have chastised or at the very least stopped them did nothing to prevent them from acting in this way they did it with the full permission and consent of him himself. And if the undisciplined mob get a starting point for their misconduct in any Carabas incident which was a sort of "mime." See Box's notes on §§ 34 and 38.

ἀμαρτημάτων, οὐχ ἴσταται, μέτεισι δ' ἀφ' ἑτέρων εἰς ἕτερα προσεπεξεργαζόμενος αἰεί τι νεώτερον.

- 36 VI. Ἦν τις μεμηνὼς ὄνομα Καραβᾶς οὐ τὴν ἀγρίαν καὶ θηριώδη μανίαν—ἄσκηπτος<sup>1</sup> γὰρ αὕτη γε καὶ τοῖς ἔχουσι καὶ τοῖς πλησιάζουσιν—, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀνειμένην καὶ μαλακωτέραν. οὗτος διημέρευε καὶ διενυκτέρευε γυμνὸς ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς οὔτε θάλπος οὔτε κρυμὸν ἐκτρεπόμενος, ἄθυρμα νηπίων καὶ 37 μειρακίων σχολαζόντων. συναλάσαντες τὸν ἄθλιον ἄχρι τοῦ γυμνασίου καὶ στήσαντες μετέωρον, ἵνα καθορῶτο πρὸς πάντων, βύβλον μὲν εὐρύναντες ἀντὶ διαδήματος ἐπιτιθέασιν αὐτοῦ τῇ κεφαλῇ, χαμαιστρώτῳ δὲ τὸ ἄλλο σῶμα περιβάλλουσιν ἀντὶ χλαμύδος, ἀντὶ δὲ σκήπτρου βραχύ τι παπύρου τμήμα τῆς ἐγχωρίου καθ' ὁδὸν ἐρριμμένον ἰδὼν
38 τις ἀναδίδωσιν. ἐπεὶ δὲ ὡς ἐν θεατρικοῖς μίμοις τὰ παράσημα τῆς βασιλείας ἀνειλήφει καὶ διεκεκόσμητο εἰς βασιλέα, νεανίαὶ ράβδους ἐπὶ τῶν ὤμων φέροντες ἀντὶ λογχόφορων ἐκατέρωθεν εἰστήκεσαν μιμούμενοι δορυφόρους. εἶθ' ἕτεροι προσήεσαν, οἱ μὲν ὡς ἀσπασόμενοι, οἱ δὲ ὡς δικασόμενοι, οἱ δ' ὡς ἐντευξόμενοι περὶ κοινῶν
39 πραγμάτων. εἶτ' ἐκ τοῦ περιστῶτος ἐν κύκλῳ πλήθους ἐξήχει βοή τις ἄτοπος Μάριν ἀποκαλούντων—οὕτως δέ φασι τὸν κύριον ὀνομάζεσθαι παρὰ Σύροις— ἤδεσαν γὰρ Ἀγρίππαν καὶ γένει

<sup>1</sup> So mss. This otherwise unknown word, for which L. & S. gives "which cannot be feigned," makes nonsense here. So also does ἄσκηπτος, which Mangey adopts and translates "improvisus." I think that another suggestion ἀσκεπής (better in the equivalent form ἀσκέπαστος) is not quite hopeless. From its natural meaning of "uncovered" it direction, they do not halt there but pass on from one thing to another, always engaging in some fresh form of violence.

FLACCUS, 35-39

VI. There was a certain lunatic named Carabas, 36 whose madness was not of the fierce and savage kind, which is dangerous both to the madmen themselves and those who approach them, but of the easy-going, gentler style. He spent day and night in the streets naked, shunning neither heat nor cold, made game of by the children and the lads who were idling about. The rioters drove the poor fellow into the gymnasium 37 and set him up on high to be seen of all and put on his head a sheet of byblus spread out wide for a diadem, clothed the rest of his body with a rug for a royal robe, while someone who had noticed a piece of the native papyrus thrown away in the road gave it to him for his sceptre. And when as in some theatrical 38 farce he had received the insignia of kingship and had been tricked out as a king, young men carrying rods on their shoulders as spearmen stood on either side of him in imitation of a bodyguard. Then others approached him, some pretending to salute him, others to sue for justice, others to consult him on state affairs. Then from the multitudes standing 39 round him there rang out a tremendous shout hailing him as Marin,<sup>a</sup> which is said to be the name for "lord" in Syria. For they knew that Agrippa was both a might come to mean "defenceless" and so as applied to a position "indefensible" and therefore "dangerous," which seems to be what we want here. But we have no knowledge of any such development. Box very tentatively suggests ἀστεκτος = "insufferable."

<sup>a</sup> Cf. 1 Cor. xvi. 22. R.V. "Maranatha," with marginal note, "That is, our Lord cometh."

---

PHILO

- [523] Σύρον καὶ Συρίας μεγάλην | ἀποτομὴν ἔχοντα, 40 ἧς ἐβασίλευε. ταῦτα δὲ ἀκούων, μᾶλλον δὲ ὀρών ὁ Φλάκκος, δεόντως ἂν καὶ τὸν μεμνηότα συλλαβῶν καὶ καθείρξας, ἵνα μὴ παρέχῃ τοῖς κατακερτομοῦσιν ἀφορμὴν εἰς ὕβριν τῶν βελτιόνων, καὶ τοὺς ἐνσκευά-σαντας τιμωρησάμενος, ὅτι γε βασιλέα καὶ φίλον Καίσαρος καὶ ὑπὸ τῆς Ῥωμαίων βουλῆς τιμημένον στρατηγικαῖς τιμαῖς ἐτόλμησαν καὶ ἔργοις καὶ λόγοις καὶ φανερώς καὶ πλαγίως ὑβρίζειν, οὐ μόνον οὐκ ἐπέπληξεν, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐπισχεῖν ἠξίωσεν ἄδειαν καὶ ἐκεχειρίαν διδούς τοῖς ἐθελοκακοῦσι καὶ ἐθελέχθρως ἔχουσι, προσποιούμενος ἅ τε εἴωρα μὴ 41 ὄραν καὶ ὦν ἤκουε μὴ ἀκούειν. ὅπερ συναισθη-μένος ὁ ὄχλος—οὐχ ὁ καθεστῶς καὶ δημοτικός, ἀλλ' ὁ πάντα θορύβου καὶ ταραχῆς εἰωθὸς ἀναπιπλάναι διὰ φιλοπραγμοσύνην καὶ ζῆλον ἀβιώτου βίου καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἔθους ἀργίαν καὶ σχολήν, πρᾶγμα ἐπίβουλον—συρρυνέντες εἰς τὸ θέατρον ἐξ ἐωθινοῦ Φλάκκον ἤδη τιμῶν ἀθλίων ἐωνημένοι, ἃς ὁ δοξομανῆς καὶ παλίμπρατος ἐλάμβανεν οὐ καθ' αὐτοῦ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς κοινῆς ἀσφαλείας, ἀνεβόησαν ἀφ' ἑνὸς συνθήματος εἰκόνας ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς ἀνατιθέναι, καινότατον καὶ μηδέπω 42πραχθὲν εἰσηγούμενοι παρανόμημα. καὶ τοῦτ' εἰδότες—ὀξύτατοι γὰρ τὴν μοχθηρίαν εἰσὶ—κατασοφίζονται τὸ Καίσαρος ὄνομα προκάλυμμα ποιησάμενοι, ᾧ προσάπτειν τι τῶν ἐπαιτίων οὐ θεμιτόν.
 43 τί οὖν ὁ τῆς χώρας ἐπίτροπος; ἐπι-

---

<sup>a</sup> Hardly, I think, as Box "called upon him." Flaccus is only accused here of not taking any steps to stop it, cf. 324

Syrian by birth and had a great piece of Syria over which he was king. When Flaccus heard, or rather 40 saw all this, it was his duty to take and keep the madman in charge, to prevent him from providing an occasion to the railers for insulting their betters and then to punish those who had arrayed him thus, because they had dared both in word and deed both openly and indirectly to insult a king, a friend of Caesar's, a person who had received Praetorian honours from the Roman Senate. Instead of this not merely did he refrain from chastising them but even shrank from restraining them, thereby giving immunity and free-play to those who displayed evil intentions and hostile feeling by pretending not to see what he saw nor hear what he heard. When 41 the crowd perceived this, not the peaceful, public-spirited crowd, but the crowd which regularly fills everything with confusion and turmoil, which by its love of meddling, its eager pursuit of the worthless life, its habitual laziness and idling, is a thing that means mischief, they streamed into the theatre at early dawn, and having Flaccus purchased by the miserable price which he crazy for fame and ever-ready to be sold took to the destruction not only of himself but of the public safety, called out with one accord <sup>a</sup> for installing images in the meeting-houses. What they proposed was a breach of the law en- 42 tirely novel and unprecedented and knowing this, quick-witted as they are for villainy, they cunningly glozed it by using the name of Caesar as a screen, that name with which no guilty action can lawfully be associated. What then did the governor 43

Legatio 132 f. Later in § 53 a more active participation is suggested.

PHILO

στάμενος, ὅτι καὶ ἡ πόλις οἰκήτορας ἔχει διττούς, ἡμᾶς τε καὶ τούτους, καὶ πᾶσα Αἴγυπτος, καὶ ὅτι οὐκ ἀποδέουσι μυριάδων ἑκατὸν οἱ τὴν Ἀλεξάνδρειαν καὶ τὴν χώραν Ἰουδαῖοι κατοικοῦντες ἀπὸ τοῦ πρὸς Λιβύην καταβαθμοῦ μέχρι τῶν ὀρίων Αἰθιοπίας, καὶ ὡς ἡ πείρα κατὰ πάντων ἐστὶ καὶ ὡς οὐ λυσιτελὲς ἔθη πάτρια κινεῖν, ἀμελήσας ἀπάντων ἐπιτρέπει ποιήσασθαι τὴν ἀνάθεσιν, μυρία καὶ πάντα προνοητικὰ δυνάμενος ἢ ὡς ἄρχων κελεύειν ἢ συμβουλεύειν ὡς φίλος.

- 44 VII. Ὁ δέ—συνεχειροῦργει γὰρ ἕκαστα τῶν ἀμαρτανομένων—καὶ ἀπὸ μείζονος ἐξουσίας ἀναρριπίζειν καινοτέραις αἰεὶ κακῶν προσθήκαις τὴν στάσιν ἡξίου καὶ τό γ' ἐφ' αὐτὸν ἦκον μέρος ἅπασαν ὀλίγου δεῖν φάναι τὴν οἰκουμένην ἐμφυλίων 45 πολέμων ἐπλήρωσεν. οὐ γὰρ ἦν ἄδηλον, ὅτι ἡ περὶ τὴν κατάλυσιν τῶν προσευχῶν φήμη λαβοῦσα τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας διαδοθήσεται μὲν εὐθὺς εἰς τοὺς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ νομούς, δραμεῖται
[524] | δ' ἀπὸ μὲν Αἰγύπτου πρὸς ἀνατολὰς καὶ ἔθνη τὰ ἐῶα, ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς ὑποταυνίου καὶ Μαρείας, αἱ Λιβύης εἰσὶν ἀρχαί, πρὸς δυσμᾶς καὶ ἔθνη τὰ ἐσπέρια. Ἰουδαίους γὰρ χώρα μία διὰ πολυανθρω-
46 πῖαν οὐ χωρεῖ. ἥς αἰτίας ἔνεκα τὰς πλείστας καὶ εὐδαιμονεστάτας τῶν ἐν Εὐρώπῃ καὶ Ἀσίᾳ κατὰ τε νήσους καὶ ἡπείρους ἐκνέμονται μητρόπολιν μὲν

<sup>a</sup> As to what is implied by this word, see App. p. 533.

<sup>b</sup> Or district below the coastal strip (Box, see his note on the geography). Mangey has "ora maritima."

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "the most and most prosperous." So in § 51 "the most and most necessary," and in De Aet. 64 τὰ πλείστα καὶ of the country do? He knew that both Alexandria and the whole of Egypt had two kinds of inhabitants, us and them, and that there were no less than a million Jews resident in Alexandria and the country from the slope into Libya to the boundaries of Ethiopia; also that this was an attack against them all, and that ancestral customs cannot be disturbed without harm, yet he disregarded all these facts and permitted the installation of the images though there were a host of considerations all tending to caution which he might have set before them either as orders from a ruler or advice from a friend.

VII. But since he worked hand in hand with them 44 in all their misdeeds he did not scruple to use his superior power to fan the flames of sedition perpetually by still more novel additions of evil, and as far as lay in his power filled, one may also say, the whole habitable world with racial conflict. For it was perfectly clear that the rumour of the overthrowing<sup>a</sup> of the synagogues beginning at Alexandria would spread at once to the nomes of Egypt and speed from Egypt to the East and the nations of the East and from the Hypotaenia<sup>b</sup> and Marea, which are the outskirts of Libya, to the West and the nations of the West. For so populous are the Jews that no one country can hold them, and therefore they settle in 46 very many of the most prosperous countries<sup>c</sup> in Europe and Asia both in the islands and on the mainland, and while they hold the Holy City where μέγιστα τῶν ὀρῶν. Here Box gives "the most extensive and wealthiest," and below "the greatest and most important." I am not sure whether πλείστα can mean this and at any rate it does not fit in with De Aet. 64. I think that in all three places it is a curious way of expressing "most of the wealthiest, greatest," etc.

PHILO

τὴν ἱερόπολιν ἡγούμενοι, καθ' ἣν ἰδρυται ὁ τοῦ ὑψίστου θεοῦ νεὺς ἅγιος, ἃς δ' ἔλαχον ἐκ πατέρων καὶ πάππων καὶ προπάππων καὶ τῶν ἔτι ἄνω προγόνων οἰκεῖν ἕκαστοι πατρίδας νομίζοντες, ἐν αἷς ἐγεννήθησαν καὶ ἐτράφησαν· εἰς ἐνίας δὲ καὶ κτιζομένας εὐθὺς ἦλθον ἀποικίαν στειλάμενοι, τοῖς 47 κτίσταις χαριζόμενοι. καὶ δέος ἦν, μὴ οἱ πανταχοῦ τὴν ἀφορμὴν ἐκεῖθεν λαβόντες ἐπηρεάζωσι τοῖς πολίταις αὐτῶν Ἰουδαίοις εἰς τὰς προσευχὰς καὶ 48 τὰ πάτρια νεωτερίζοντες. οἱ δέ—οὐ γὰρ ἔμελλον ἄχρι παντὸς ἡσυχάζειν καίτοι πεφυκότες εἶπὸς εἰρήνην, οὐ μόνον ὅτι παρὰ πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις οἱ περὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν ἀγῶνες καὶ τοὺς περὶ ψυχῆς κινδύ-νους ὑπερβάλλουσιν, ἀλλ' ὅτι καὶ μόνοι τῶν ὑφ' ἡλίον ἅμα ταῖς προσευχαῖς ἀπεστεροῦντο τὴν εἰς τοὺς εὐεργέτας εὐσέβειαν, ὃ μυρίων θανάτων ἐτετίμηστο ἄν—οὐκ ἔχοντες ἱεροὺς περιβόλους, οἷς ἐνδιαθήσονται τὸ εὐχάριστον,<sup>1</sup> καὶ τοῖς ἐναντιου-49 μένοις εἶπον ἄν· “λελήθατε ἑαυτοὺς οὐ προστιθέντες τοῖς κυρίοις τιμὴν, ἀλλ' ἀφαιρούμενοι, οὐκ εἰδότες ὡς τοῖς πανταχοῦ τῆς οἰκουμένης Ἰουδαίοις ὀρμητήρια τῆς εἰς τὸν Σεβαστὸν οἶκον

<sup>1</sup> It would perhaps be better to omit the marks of the parenthesis, and put a colon or full stop at εὐχάριστον. In this case we have the same anacoluthic γὰρ as in De Aet. 75, and the verb to which οἱ δὲ is subject is ἔμελλον. See note b.

<sup>a</sup> The thought here seems confused. The point in which the Jews were unique is that they believed that the admission of an image into a place of worship desecrated it, and assuming as Philo does that εὐσέβεια can only be adequately shown in a place of worship, they would be deprived of the means of stands the sacred Temple of the most high God to be their mother city, yet those which are theirs by inheritance from their fathers, grandfathers, and ancestors even farther back, are in each case accounted by them to be their fatherland in which they were born and reared, while to some of them they have come at the time of their foundation as immigrants to the satisfaction of the founders. And 47 it was to be feared that people everywhere might take their cue from Alexandria, and outrage their Jewish fellow-citizens by rioting against their synagogues and ancestral customs. Now the Jews though 48 naturally well-disposed for peace could not be expected to remain quiet whatever happened, not only because with all men the determination to fight for their institutions outweighs even the danger to life, but also because they are the only people under the sun <sup>a</sup> who by losing their meeting-houses were losing also what they would have valued as worth dying many thousand deaths, namely, their means of showing reverence to their benefactors, since they no longer had the sacred buildings where they could set forth their thankfulness.<sup>b</sup> And they might have said to their enemies " You have failed to see that you are 49 not adding to but taking from the honour given to our masters, and you do not understand that everywhere in the habitable world the religious veneration of the Jews for the Augustan house has its basis as showing it adequately. But the destruction of their temples would equally incapacitate Gentiles. But see App. p. 533.

<sup>b</sup> The sentence as punctuated here has no verb to the initial οἱ, unless καὶ at the end is taken = "also," which seems pointless. If punctuated as suggested in note 1, there would be no objection to taking εἶπον as 1st person singular, which will fit in better with οὐκ οἶδα.

PHILO

ὁσιότητός εἰσιν αἱ προσευχαὶ ἐπιδήλως, ὧν ἡμῖν ἀναιρεθεισῶν τίς ἕτερος ἀπολείπεται τόπος ἢ 50 τρόπος τιμῆς; εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἐφιέντων<sup>1</sup> τῶν ἐθῶν ὀλιγωροῦμεν, τῆς ἀνωτάτω τιμωρίας δίκαιοι τυγ-χάνειν ἐσμέν μὴ παρέχοντες ἀρτίους καὶ πλήρεις τὰς ἀμοιβάς. εἰ δ' οὐκ ἐξὸν τοῖς ἰδίῳις ὑποστέλ-λομεν νομίμοις, ἃ καὶ τῷ Σεβαστῷ φίλον βεβαιοῦν, τί μικρὸν ἢ μέγα πλημμελοῦμεν οὐκ οἶδα· πλὴν εἰ μὴ ψέγειν τις ἐθελήσειε τὸ μὴ γνώμη ἐκουσίῳ παρανομεῖν τὰς ἐκδαιτήσεις τῶν ἐθῶν οὐ φυλαξα-μένους, αἷ, κὰν ἀφ' ἐτέρων ἄρξωνται, τελευτῶσι 51 πολλάκις εἰς τοὺς αἰτίους." ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν Φλάκκος τὰ τε λεκτέα ἡσυχάζων καὶ τὰ ἡσυχαστέα λέγων οὕτως εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐξημάρτανεν. ἐκείνοι δ', οἷς ἐχαρίζετο, τίνα γνώμην εἶχον; ἄρα γε τὴν τῶν τιμᾶν ἐθελόντων; εἶτα σπάνις ἦν ἱερῶν κατὰ τὴν πόλιν, ἧς τὰ πλεῖστα καὶ ἀναγκαιοτάτα μέρη 52 τετεμένισται, πρὸς ἀνάθεσιν ὧν ἐβούλοντο; τὴν μὲν οὖν τῶν φιλαπεχθημόνων καὶ μετὰ τέχνης ἐπιβουλευόντων ὄρμην ἔφαμεν, δι' ἣν οἱ μὲν ἐπηρεά-[525] ζοντες | οὐ δόξουσιν ἀδικεῖν, τοῖς δ' ἐπηρεαζομένοις

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀφιέντων or ἀφεθέντων.

<sup>a</sup> I take νομίμοις as a dative of the same kind as νόμῳ or νόμοις corresponding to our own "by the law," e.g. χρῆθαι ἀντιὸν ἀντιὸν ἀντιὸν answered by ποίῳ νόμῳ; or οἰκεῖν τοῖς νόμοις. See other examples in Stephanus. Box takes it after ὑποστέλλειν = "shelter ourselves under the laws."

<sup>b</sup> The sentence πλὴν . . . αἰτίους is very difficult, for (1) πλὴν εἰ μὴ is pleonastic instead of either πλὴν εἰ or εἰ μὴ; (2) the general sense seems to be "if we are to be blamed it is not because we refused to break the law by admitting images, but because we have not been strict enough in preventing defec-tion" (though what this alludes to is not clear); (3) τοὺς αἰτίους must mean those who are responsible by having allowed the all may see in the meeting-houses, and if we have these destroyed no place, no method is left to us for paying this homage. If we neglect to pay it 50 when our institutions permit we should deserve the utmost penalty for not tendering our requital with all due fullness. But if we fall short because it is forbidden by our own laws,<sup>a</sup> which Augustus also was well pleased to confirm, I do not see what offence, either small or great, can be laid to our charge.<sup>b</sup> The only thing for which we might be blamed would be that we transgressed, though involuntarily, by not defending ourselves against the defections from our customs, which even if originally due to others often ultimately affect those who are responsible for them." It was by saying what he should leave unsaid and 51 leaving unsaid what he should say that Flaccus treated us in this iniquitous way. But what were the motives of those whose favour he was seeking? Was it that they really wished to honour the Emperor? Was there then any lack of temples in the city, so many parts of which are consecrated and give all that is needed for the installation of anything they wished? No, what we have described is an act of aggression 52 by bitterly hostile and crafty plotters in which the authors of the outrages would not appear to be acting unjustly and the sufferers could not oppose them with others to begin. But this is very forced (I am inclined to think that μη has dropped out as often in Philo, or that we should read ἀναίτιους); (4) assuming that τοὺς αἰτίους is right, what is meant by τελευτῶσι . . . εἰς? Perhaps "they at last come to practise them" (Box). Rather I think "they ultimately suffer from the consequences," and perhaps the thought may be something like this: "If we had insisted more on the strict observance of the law in other matters, the Greeks would not have attempted to force this desecration upon us."

PHILO

οὐκ ἀσφαλὲς ἐναντιοῦσθαι. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν, ὡς γενναῖοι, τιμὴ καταλύειν νόμους, ἔθνη πάτρια κινεῖν, ἐπηρεάζειν τοῖς συνοικοῦσι, διδάσκειν καὶ τοὺς ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις πόλεσιν ὁμοφροσύνης ἀλογεῖν.

- 53 VIII. Ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ἢ κατὰ τῶν νόμων πείρα εὐδοεῖν ἔδοξεν αὐτῷ τὰς προσευχὰς ἀρπάσαντι καὶ μηδὲ τοῦνομα ὑπολιπομένῳ, πάλιν ἐφ' ἕτερον ἐτρέπετο, τὴν τῆς ἡμετέρας πολιτείας ἀναίρεσιν, ἢ ἀποκοπέντων οἷς μόνοις ἐφώρμει ὁ ἡμέτερος βίος ἐθῶν τε πατρίων καὶ μετουσίας πολιτικῶν δικαίων τὰς ἐσχάτας ὑπομένωμεν συμφορὰς οὐδενὸς
- 54 ἐπειλημμένοι πείσματος εἰς ἀσφάλειαν. ὀλίγαις γὰρ ὕστερον ἡμέραις τίθησι πρόγραμμα, δι' οὗ ξένους καὶ ἐπήλυδας ἡμᾶς ἀπεκάλει μηδὲ λόγου μεταδούς, ἀλλ' ἀκρίτως καταδικάζων. οὐ τί ἂν εἶη τυραννίδος ἐπάγγελμα μείζον; αὐτὸς γενόμενος τὰ πάντα, κατήγορος, ἐχθρός, μάρτυς, δικαστής, κολαστής, εἶτα δυσὶ τοῖς προτέροις καὶ τρίτον προσέθηκεν ἐφείς ὡς ἐν ἀλώσει τοῖς ἐθέλουσι
- 55 πορθεῖν Ἰουδαίους. οἱ δὲ λαβόντες ἄδειαν τί πράττουσι; πέντε μοῖραι τῆς πόλεως εἰσιν, ἐπώνυμοι τῶν πρώτων στοιχείων τῆς ἐγγραμμάτου φωνῆς· τούτων δύο<sup>1</sup> Ἰουδαϊκαὶ λέγονται διὰ τὸ πλείστους Ἰουδαίους ἐν ταύταις κατοικεῖν· οἰκοῦσι δὲ καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις οὐκ ὀλίγοι σποράδες. τί οὖν ἐποίησαν; ἐκ τῶν τεσσάρων γραμμάτων ἐξώκισαν τοὺς Ἰουδαίους καὶ συνήλασαν εἰς ἑνὸς μοῖραν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐν δυσὶν.

<sup>a</sup> As to what this proclamation actually meant, see App. pp. 534 f. The only point which here emerges is that the Jews were restricted to the one quarter (Delta, according to 332 safety. For surely, my good sirs, there is no honour given by overthrowing the laws, disturbing ancestral customs, outraging fellow-citizens and teaching the inhabitants of other cities to disregard the claims of fellow feeling.

VIII. When then his attack against our laws by 53 seizing the meeting-houses without even leaving them their name appeared to be successful, he proceeded to another scheme, namely, the destruction of our citizenship, so that when our ancestral customs and our participation in political rights, the sole mooring on which our life was secured, had been cut away, we might undergo the worst misfortunes with no cable to cling to for safety. For a few days afterwards he 54 issued a proclamation in which he denounced us as foreigners and aliens and gave us no right of pleading our case but condemned us unjudged.<sup>a</sup> What stronger profession of tyranny could we have than this? He became everything himself, accuser, enemy, witness, judge and the agent of punishment, and then to the two first wrongs he added a third by permitting those who wished to pillage the Jews as at the sacking of a city. Having secured this immunity what did 55 they do? The city has five quarters named after the first letters of the alphabet, two of these are called Jewish because most of the Jews inhabit them,<sup>b</sup> though in the rest also there are not a few Jews scattered about. So then what did they do? From the four letters they ejected the Jews and drove them Josephus, B.J. ii. 18. 8) which had been originally allotted to them. It did not of course formally sanction the pogrom which ensued. That Flaccus did not stop this was a third wrong.

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps "because most of the inhabitants are Jews," i.e. there are also Gentiles.

PHILO

56 βραχυτάτην. οἱ δὲ ἐξεχέοντο διὰ τὸ πλῆθος εἰς αἰγιαλοὺς καὶ κοπρίας καὶ μνήματα πάντων στερόμενοι τῶν ἰδίων. ἐκεῖνοι δὲ τὰς οἰκίας ἐρήμους καταδραμόντες ἐφ' ἀρπαγὴν ἐτράποντο καὶ ὡς ἐκ πολέμου λείαν διενέμοντο, μηδενὸς δὲ κωλύοντος καὶ τὰ ἐργαστήρια τῶν Ἰουδαίων συγκεκλεισμένα διὰ τὸ ἐπὶ Δρουσίλλῃ πένθος ἀναρρήξαντες ὅσα εὖρον—πολλὰ δὲ καὶ ταῦτ' ἦν—ἐξεφόρησαν καὶ διὰ μέσης ἀγορᾶς ἐκόμιζον ὡς οἰκείους τοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις

57 καταχρώμενοι. τῆς δ' ἀρπαγῆς ἡ ἀπραξία κακὸν ἦν βαρύτερον, τὰς μὲν ἐνθήκας ἀπολωλεκότων τῶν ποριστῶν, μηδενὸς δὲ ἐωμένου, μὴ γεωργοῦ, μὴ ναυκλήρου, μὴ ἐμποροῦ, μὴ τεχνίτου, τὰ συνήθη πραγματεῦσθαι, ὡς διχόθεν κατεσκευάσθαι πενίαν, ἔκ τε τῆς ἀρπαγῆς, ἐξουσιῶν μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ γενομένων καὶ περισεσυλημένων τὰ ἴδια, κακ τοῦ μὴ δεδυνῆσθαι πορίζειν ἐκ τῶν συνήθων ἐπιτηδευμάτων.

[526] 58 IX. | Καὶ ταῦτα μὲν εἰ καὶ ἀφόρητα, ἀλλ' οὖν τοῖς αὐθις πεπραγμένοις συγκρινόμενα οἰστά. πενία γὰρ χαλεπὸν μὲν, καὶ μάλισθ' ὅταν κατασκευάζεται πρὸς ἐχθρῶν, ἔλαττον δὲ τῆς εἰς τὰ to herd in a very small part of one. The Jews were 56 so numerous that they poured out over beaches, dunghills and tombs, robbed of all their belongings. Their enemies overran the houses now left empty and turned to pillaging them, distributing the contents like spoil of war, and as no one prevented them they broke open the workshops of the Jews which had been closed as a sign of mourning for Drusilla,<sup>a</sup> carried out all the articles they found, which were very numerous, and bore them through the middle of the market-place, dealing with other people's property as freely as if it was their own. A still more grievous 57 evil than the pillaging was the unemployment produced. The tradespeople had lost their stocks, and no one, husbandman, shipman, merchant, artisan, was allowed to practise his usual business. Thus poverty was established in two ways : first, the pillaging, by which in the course of a single day they had become penniless, completely stripped of what they had, and secondly, their inability to make a living from their regular employments.

59 σώματα ὑβρεως, κἂν ἢ βραχυτάτη. τοὺς δ' ἡμετέρους διὰ τὰς ὑπερβολὰς ὧν ἔπαθον οὐδ' ἂν εἴποι τις ὑβριν ἢ αἰκίαν ἐνδεδέχθαι κυρίοις χρώμενος τοῖς ὀνόμασιν, ἀλλὰ μοι δοκεῖ προσρήσεων οἰκείων ἂν ἀπορηῆσαι διὰ μέγεθος κεκαιουργημένης ὠμότητος, ὡς τὰ τῶν πολέμων μὲν κρατησάντων, ἐκ φύσεως δ' ἀσπόνδων εἰς τοὺς ἐαλωκότας, συγκρινόμενα

---

<sup>a</sup> Gaius's sister. She died on June 10th, which gives the terminus a quo for the attack. See also App. p. 535.

IX. Unbearable though these things were, yet 58 compared with subsequent actions they were tolerable. Poverty, indeed, is grievous, particularly when it is effected by enemies, but it is less grievous than bodily injuries if suffered through wanton violence, even the slightest. But so excessive were the suffer- 59 ings of our people that anyone who spoke of them as undergoing wanton violence or outrage would be using words not properly applicable and would I think be at a loss for adequate terms to express the magnitude of cruelty so unprecedented that the actions of conquerors in war, who are also naturally merciless to the conquered, would seem kindness

PHILO

- 60 τοῖς τούτων ἡμερώτατα ἂν εἶναι δόξαι. χρήματα ἀρπάξουσιν ἐκεῖνοι καὶ πλῆθος αἰχμαλώτων σωμάτων, ἀλλὰ κινδυνεύσαντες, εἶπερ ἠττήθησαν, ἀποβαλεῖν τὰ οἰκεία. οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ μυρίους, ὧν λύτρα κατατιθέασι συγγενεῖς ἢ φίλοι, μεθίενται τῶν δορυαλώτων, ἴσως μὲν ἀκαμπεῖς ὄντες πρὸς ἔλεον, ἠττώμενοι δὲ φιλαργυρίας. ἀλλὰ τί τοῦτο; φαίη τις ἄν· τοῖς γὰρ εὖ πάσχουσιν ἀδιαφορεῖ τῆς
- 61 σωτηρίας ὁ τρόπος. ἤδη δὲ καὶ τοὺς πεσόντας ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ταφῆς ἀξιοῦσιν οἱ μὲν ἐπεικεῖς καὶ φιλάνθρωποι ταῖς οἴκοθεν δαπάναις, οἱ δὲ τὴν ἔχθραν καὶ πρὸς νεκροὺς ἀποτείνοντες ὑπόσπονδα τὰ σώματα διδόντες ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ τῆς τελευταίας χάριτος ἀμοιρῆσαι τῶν νομιζομένων.
- 62 ἐν πολέμῳ μὲν οἱ δυσμενεῖς ταῦτα· ἐν εἰρήνῃ δ' οἱ πρὸ μικροῦ φίλοι θεασώμεθα ὅποια. μετὰ γὰρ τὰς ἀρπαγὰς καὶ τοὺς ἀνοικισμοὺς καὶ τὰς ἐκ τῶν πλείστων μερῶν τῆς πόλεως βιαίους ἐλάσεις καθάπερ τειχήρεις ἐν κύκλῳ περικαθημένων ἐχθρῶν γεγονότες, ἀπορία καὶ σπάνει δεινῇ τῶν ἀναγκαίων πιεζόμενοι καὶ γύναια καὶ τέκνα νήπια ὄρωντες ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς παραπολλύμενα λιμῷ χειροποιήτω—
- 63 πάντα γὰρ τᾶλλα εὐθηνίας καὶ εὐετηρίας μεστὰ ἦν, τοῦ μὲν ποταμοῦ ταῖς πλημμύραις τὰς ἀρούρας πλουσίως λιμνάσαντος, τῆς δὲ πεδιάδος, ὄση πυροφόρος, ἀφθονώτατον ὑπ' εὐγονίας τὸν τοῦ
- 64 σίτου καρπὸν ἀναγούσης—, μηκέτι στέγειν δυνάμενοι τὰς ἐνδείας, οἱ μὲν ἐπὶ συγγενῶν καὶ φίλων, πρότερον οὐκ εἰωθότες, οἰκίας ἤλθον ἔρανον αὐτὰ

<sup>a</sup> For another account of the pogrom described in the next

FLACCUS, 60-64

itself in comparison. Those conquerors do seize 60 property and take numerous captives but they have run the risk of losing their own if they were defeated. And indeed, multitudes of the prisoners of war, whose ransoms are provided by their kinsfolk and friends, are released by their captors, not perhaps because they have weakened towards mercy, but because they cannot resist their desire for money, though of that one might say, "to the benefited the method of their rescuing is a matter of indifference." Ob- 61 serve, too, that enemies fallen in war are allowed burial. The mild and humane give it at their own expense and those who extend their hostility even to the dead restore the bodies under a truce, that they may not lack the final boon which the established rites supply. This is what enemies do in war. 62 Let us see what was done in peace by our friends of yesterday.<sup>a</sup> After the pillaging and eviction and violent expulsion from most parts of the city the Jews were like beleaguered men with their enemies all round them. They were pressed by want and dire lack of necessities; they saw their infant children and women perishing before their eyes through a famine artificially created, since elsewhere all else was 63 teeming with plenty and abundance, the fields richly flooded by the overflow of the river and the wheat-bearing parts of the lowlands producing through their fertility the harvest of grain in unstinted profusion. Unable any longer to endure their privation, 64 some of them contrary to their former habits went to the houses of their kinsmen and friends to ask for ten sections see Legatio 119-131, where the violence is ascribed to the belief of the Alexandrians that Gaius hated the Jews, a point completely ignored here.

PHILO

τὰ ἀναγκαῖα αἰτήσοντες, οἱ δ' ἀπὸ φρονήματος εὐγενοῦς τὴν μεταιτῶν τύχην ὡς δουλοπρεπῆ καὶ ἀνελεύθερον ἐκτρεπόμενοι προῆλθον εἰς ἀγορὰν οὐδενὸς ἐτέρου χάριν ἢ τοῦ πρίασθαι τοῖς τε 65 οἰκείοις καὶ ἑαυτοῖς τροφάς, οἱ δυστυχεῖς. εὐθὺς γὰρ συναρπασθέντες ὑπὸ τῶν τὴν ὀχλοκρατίαν ἐπιτειχισάντων δολοφονοῦνται καὶ συρόμενοι καὶ πατούμενοι διὰ τῆς πόλεως ἀπάσης ἐξαναλώθησαν, οὐδενὸς ὑπολειφθέντος μέρους, ὃ δυνήσεται κοινω-66 νῆσαι ταφῆς. μυρίους μέντοι καὶ ἄλλους πολυ-τρόποις κακῶν ιδέαις ἐπιτετηδευμέναις εἰς χαλεπὴν ὠμότητα κατειργάσαντο καὶ διέφθειραν οἱ λελυτ-[527] τηκότες ὑπ' ἀγριότητος | εἰς θηρίων φύσιν· τοὺς γὰρ ὄπη τύχοι φανέντας τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἢ κατέλεον ἢ ξύλοις κατέκοπτον οὐκ εὐθὺς ἐπὶ τὰ καιριώτατα μέρη τὰς πληγὰς φέροντες, ἵνα μὴ θάττον τελευ-τήσαντες θάττον καὶ τὴν τῶν ὀδυνηρῶν ἀντίληψιν 67 ἀπόθωνται. τῇ δὲ τῶν συμφορῶν ἀδεία<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐκεχειρία τινὲς ἐπινεανιεύμενοι, τῶν ἀμβλυτέρων ὄπλων ἀλογήσαντες, ἀνελάμβανον τὰ πάντων ἀνυσιμώτατα, πῦρ καὶ σίδηρον, καὶ πολλοὺς μὲν ξίφεσιν 68 ἀνεῖλον, οὐκ ὀλίγους δὲ πυρὶ διέφθειραν. ἤδη δὲ καὶ γενεὰς ὅλας, ἄνδρας μετὰ γυναικῶν, τέκνα νήπια μετὰ γονέων, ἐνέπρησαν οἱ πάντων ἀνηλε-ἔστατοι κατὰ μέσσην τὴν πόλιν, μὴ γῆρας, μὴ νεότητα, μὴ παίδων ἄκακον ἡλικίαν οἰκτισάμενοι· καὶ ὁπότε ξύλων ὕλης ἀπορήσειαν, φρύγανα συλ-λέγοντες καπνῶ τὸ πλεόν ἢ πυρὶ διέφθειρον, οἰκτρότερον καὶ ἐπιμηκέστερον ὄλεθρον τοῖς δειλαίοις τεχνάζοντες, ὧν τὰ σώματα ἡμίφλεκτα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀδικία or ἀδίκω.

FLACCUS, 64-68

the mere necessities as a charity, while those whose high-born spirit led them to avoid the beggar's lot as fitter for slaves than for the free went forth into the market solely to buy sustenance for their families and themselves. Poor wretches, they were at once 65 seized by those who wielded the weapon of mob rule, treacherously stabbed, dragged through the whole city, and trampled on, and thus completely made away with till not a part of them was left which could receive the burial which is the right of all. Multi- 66 tudes of others also were laid low and destroyed with manifold forms of maltreatment, put in practice to serve their bitter cruelty by those whom savagery had maddened and transformed into the nature of wild beasts ; for any Jews who showed themselves anywhere, they stoned or knocked about with clubs, aiming their blows at first against the less vital parts for fear that a speedier death might give a speedier release from the consciousness of their anguish. Some, made rampant by the immunity and licence <sup>a</sup> 67 which accompanied these sufferings, discarded the weapons of slower action and took the most effective of all, fire and steel, and slew many with the sword, while not a few they destroyed with fire. Indeed, 68 whole families, husbands with their wives, infant children with their parents, were burnt in the heart of the city by these supremely ruthless men who showed no pity for old age nor youth, nor the innocent years of childhood. And when they lacked wood for fire they would collect brushwood and dispatch them with smoke rather than fire, thus contriving a more pitiable and lingering death for the miserable victims whose bodies lay promiscuously half-burnt, <sup>a</sup> See note on Quod Omn. Prob. 123.

PHILO

69 ἀναμιξ ἔκειτο, χαλεπή καὶ ὀδυνηροτάτη θέα. εἰ δὲ καὶ οἱ παραληφθέντες ἐπὶ φρυγανισμὸν ἐβράδυνον, ἐπὶ τῶν ἰδίων σκευῶν τῶν ἐκ τῆς ἀρπαγῆς ἐνεπίμπρασαν τοὺς δεσπότας τὰ μὲν πολυτελῆ νοσφιζόμενοι, τὰ δὲ μὴ πάνυ χρήσιμα συγκαταφλέ-70 γοντες, οἷς ἀντὶ ξύλων εἰκαίων ἐχρῶντο. πολλοὺς δὲ καὶ ζῶντας τοῖν ποδοῖν τὸν ἕτερον ἐκδήσαντες κατὰ τὸ σφυρὸν εἶλκον ἅμα καὶ κατηλόων ἐναλλό-71 μενοι θάνατον ὠμότατον ἐπινοήσαντες· καὶ τελευ-τησάντων, οὐδὲν ἦπτον ἀτελεύτητα μηνιῶντες βαρυτέρας αἰκίας τοῖς σώμασιν ἐπέφερον, διὰ πάντων ὀλίγου δέω φάναι τῶν τῆς πόλεως στενωπῶν κατασύροντες, ἕως ὃ νεκρὸς δοράς, σάρκας, ἴνας ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν ἐδάφων ἀνωμαλίας καὶ τραχύ-τητος περιβρυφθεῖς, καὶ τῶν ἠνωμένων μερῶν τῆς συμφυίας διαστάντων καὶ διασπαρέντων ἀλλαχόσε 72 ἄλλων, ἔδαπανήθη. καὶ οἱ μὲν ταῦτα δρῶντες ὡσπερ ἐν τοῖς θεατρικοῖς μίμοις καθυπεκρίνοντο τοὺς πάσχοντας· τῶν δ' ὡς ἀληθῶς πεπονθότων φίλοι καὶ συγγενεῖς, ὅτι μόνον ταῖς τῶν προσηκόντων συμφοραῖς συνήλγησαν, ἀπή-γοντο, ἐμαστιγοῦντο, ἐτροχίζοντο, καὶ μετὰ πάσας τὰς αἰκίας, ὅσας ἐδύνατο χωρῆσαι τὰ σώματα αὐτοῖς, ἢ τελευταία καὶ ἔφεδρος τιμωρία σταυρὸς ἦν.

---

<sup>a</sup> Not to be translated "mimicked the sufferers," even if that is the outcome of what is said. The regular use of this verb followed by the article with a noun or participle points to what I have put. Thus in § 32 above we have τὸν ἐταῖρον καὶ φίλον καθυπεκρίν., in De Ios. 50 Potiphar's wife accusing a painful and most heart-rending spectacle. And 69 if the persons enlisted to get brushwood were too slow, they would burn the owners with their own furniture taken out of the spoil. Costly articles, indeed, they appropriated but anything that was not very useful they put on the fire to serve instead of ordinary wood. Many also while still alive they 70 drew with one of the feet tied at the ankle and meanwhile leapt upon them and pounded them to pieces. And when by the cruel death thus devised, their life 71 ended, the rage of their enemies did not end, but continued all the same. They inflicted worse outrages on the bodies, dragging them through almost every lane of the city until the corpses, their skin, flesh and muscles shattered by the unevenness and roughness of the ground, and all the parts which united to make the organism dissevered and dispersed in different directions, were wasted to nothing.

While those who did these things like 72 actors in a farce assumed the part of the sufferers,<sup>a</sup> the friends and kinsmen of the true sufferers, simply because they grieved over the misfortunes of their relations, were arrested, scourged, tortured and after all these outrages, which were all their bodies could make room for, the final punishment kept in reserve was the cross.

Joseph καθυπεκ. τὴν σώφρονα, ibid. 166 Joseph to his brothers καθυπεκ. τὸν δυσχεραίνοντα. So also in this treatise with similar verbs ἐπιφάσκων τὸν πλούσιον § 130 and προσποιούμενος τὸν ἠδόμενον § 98. No doubt "pretended to be the sufferers" may mean "mimicked them," but I should prefer to take it that they assumed the air of the injured parties, who were only inflicting a righteous punishment. This will give more point to ἀληθῶς, and if Box is right in his note on "mimes" (§ 34) that they emphasized the characteristic rather than the dramatic, it will be in accord with this view.

PHILO

- 73 X. Πάντα δὲ διορύξας καὶ τοιχωρυχήσας ὁ Φλάκκος καὶ μηδὲν μέρος τῶν Ἰουδαϊκῶν ἀμέτοχον ἐπιβουλῆς τῆς ἀνωτάτω καταλιπὼν ἐπενόησεν 74 λουργός, ὁ καινῶν ἀδικημάτων εὐρετής. τῆς γὰρ ἡμετέρας γερουσίας, ἣν ὁ σωτὴρ καὶ εὐεργέτης Σεβαστὸς ἐπιμελησομένην τῶν Ἰουδαϊκῶν εἴλετο
 [528] μετὰ τὴν τοῦ γενάρχου | τελευτὴν διὰ τῶν πρὸς
 Μάγιον Μάξιμον ἐντολῶν μέλλοντα πάλιν [ἀπ'] Ἀλεξανδρείας καὶ τῆς χώρας ἐπιτροπεύειν, ὅκτῳ καὶ τριάκοντα συλλαβῶν τοὺς εὐρεθέντας ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις εὐθὺς μὲν δῆσαι κελεύει, καὶ στείλας καλὴν πομπὴν διὰ μέσης ἀγορᾶς πρεσβύτας δεσμίους ἐξηγκωνισμένους, τοὺς μὲν ἱμάσι, τοὺς δὲ σιδηραῖς ἀλύσειν, εἰς τὸ θέατρον εἰσάγει—θέαν οἰκτίστην 75 καὶ ἄλλοτριωτάτην τῷ καιρῷ—καὶ στάντας ἀντικρὺ ἐχθρῶν καθεζομένων πρὸς ἐπίδειξιν αἰσχύνης προστάττει πάντας περιδυσθέντας αἰκισθῆναι μᾶστιξιν, αἷς ἔθος τοὺς κακούργων πονηροτάτους προπηλακίζεσθαι, ὡς ἐκ τῶν πληγῶν τοὺς μὲν φοράδην ἐκκομισθέντας αὐτίκα τελευτῆσαι, τοὺς δὲ νοσήσαντας ἐπὶ πλείστον χρόνον εἰς ἀπόγνωσιν σωτηρίας 76 ἔλθειν. ἧς ἐπιβουλῆς τὸ μέγεθος ἐξελέγλεγκται μὲν καὶ δι' ἐτέρων, οὐχ ἦττον δὲ καὶ διὰ

<sup>a</sup> The term γενάρχης elsewhere applied by Philo to founders and heads of the nation (Abraham, the three Patriarchs, and the Seventy Elders) here apparently = the technical word ἐθνάρχης (cf. 2 Cor. xi. 32), the official who at Alexandria, at any rate according to Strabo writing under Augustus, served as general administrator and judge of the Jews.

<sup>b</sup> Or "elsewhere," i.e. either in some other treatise or some lost part of this. Reiter and others assume that this is the

X. Having broken into everything like a burglar 73 and left no side of Jewish life untouched by a hostility carried to the highest pitch, Flaccus devised another monstrous and unparalleled line of attack worthy of this perpetrator of enormities and inventor of novel iniquities. Our Senate had been appointed 74 to take charge of Jewish affairs by our saviour and benefactor Augustus, after the death of the ethnarch,<sup>a</sup> orders to that effect having been given to Magius Maximus when he was about to take office for the second time as Governor of Alexandria and the country. Of this Senate the members who were found in their houses, thirty-eight in number, were arrested by Flaccus, who having ordered them to be straightway put in bonds marshalled a fine procession through the middle of the market of these elderly men trussed and pinioned, some with thongs and others with iron chains, and then taken into the theatre, a spectacle most pitiable and incongruous with the occasion. Then as they stood with their 75 enemies seated in front to signalize their disgrace he ordered them all to be stripped and lacerated with scourges which are commonly used for the degradation of the vilest malefactors, so that in consequence of the flogging some had to be carried out on stretchers and died at once, while others lay sick for a long time despairing of recovery.

The great lengths 76 of malevolence to which the plan was carried have been fully proved in other ways,<sup>b</sup> but all the same meaning of δι' ἐτέρων and perhaps there are other places in Philo, not quoted by them nor observed by me, which go to prove that this is its meaning here. Failing such evidence, I should prefer to take it as above. The ἐπιβουλή may be either the pogrom in general or the treatment of the thirty-eight just described.

PHILO

- τοῦ μέλλοντος λέγεσθαι σαφέστερον ἐπιδειχθήσεται. τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς γερουσίας τρεῖς ἄνδρες, Εὐδοσ καὶ Τρύφων καὶ Ἄνδρων, ἐγεγένητο ἐξουσιοί, πάνθ' ὅσα εἶχον ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις διαρπασθέντες ἐφόδω μιᾷ, οὓς οὐκ ἠγνόησε ταῦτα πεπονθότας· ἐδηλώθη γὰρ αὐτῷ μεταπεμφαμένῳ πρότερον τοὺς ἡμετέρους ἄρχοντας ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν ἐπὶ καταλλαγαῖς ταῖς πρὸς
- 77 τὴν ἄλλην πόλιν. καὶ ὁμως εἰδὼς ἀκριβῶς (τού)- τους στερομένους τῶν ἰδίων ἐν ὄψεσι τῶν ἀρπασάν-των ἔτυπτεν, ἵν' οἱ μὲν ὑπομένωσι διττὰς συμφοράς, πενίαν ὁμοῦ καὶ τὴν ἐν τοῖς σώμασιν ὕβριν, οἱ δὲ διττὴν ἠδονὴν, ἀλλότριόν τε καρπούμενοι πλοῦτον καὶ τῆς τῶν ἀφαιρεθέντων ἀτιμίας εἰς κόρον ἀπολαύοντες.
- 78 Ἐχων τι τῶν τότε πεπραγμένων εἰπεῖν ἐπαμφο-τερίζω, μὴ ἄρα εὐτελὲς εἶναι νομισθὲν ἐκλύση τὰ μεγέθη τῶν τοσούτων· ἔστι δ' εἰ καὶ μικρόν, ἀλλ' οὐ μικρᾶς δεῖγμα κακονοίας. τῶν μαστίγων εἰσὶ διαφοραὶ διακεκριμένα κατὰ τὴν πόλιν πρὸς τὰ τῶν τύπτεσθαι μελλόντων ἀξιώματα· τοὺς μὲν γὰρ Αἰγυπτίους ἐτέραις μαστίζεσθαι συμβέβηκε καὶ πρὸς ἐτέρων, τοὺς δὲ Ἀλεξανδρέας σπάθαις καὶ
- 79 ὑπὸ σπαθηφόρων Ἀλεξανδρέων. τὸ ἔθος τοῦτο καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἡμετέρων διετήρησαν οἱ πρὸ Φλάκκου καὶ Φλάκκος αὐτὸς τοὺς πρώτους χρόνους. ἔστι

---

<sup>a</sup> It will be observed that this interview must have taken place after the pillaging described in §§ 56 f. This suggests the possibility that it was either the attitude there taken up by

FLACCUS, 76-79

they will be shown still more clearly by the following statement. Three members of the Senate, Euodus, Trypho and Andro, had become penniless, having been robbed in a single inroad of all that they had in their houses ; and that they had been so treated was known to Flaccus, who had been so informed when on an earlier occasion <sup>a</sup> he sent for our magistrates, ostensibly to reconcile them with the rest of the city. Nevertheless, though he knew quite well 77 that they had been deprived of their property, he beat them before the eyes of their despoilers. Thus, while they suffered a twofold misfortune, poverty and the outrage to their persons, the others had a twofold pleasure, enjoying the possession of the wealth which was not their own and sating themselves with gloating on the dishonour of those from whom that wealth was taken.

One point in the deeds committed at this time I 87 mention only with hesitation, lest by being considered an insignificant matter it may detract from the magnitude of these horrors. Yet even if it is a small thing it is an evidence of no small malignancy. There are differences between the scourges used in the city, and these differences are regulated by the social standing of the persons to be beaten. The Egyptians actually are scourged with a different kind of lash and by a different set of people, the Alexandrians with a flat blade, and the persons who wield them also are Alexandrians. This custom was also ob- 79 served in the case of our people by the predecessors of Flaccus and by Flaccus himself in his first years of office. For it is surely possible when inflicting the magistrates or their failure to carry out the conditions there laid down which led to their arrest and punishment.

PHILO

γάρ, ἔστι καὶ ἐν ἀτιμίᾳ βραχύ τι τῶν εἰς ἐπιτιμίαν εὐρεῖν καὶ ἐν ὕβρει παραφερόμενόν τι τῶν εἰς τὸ ἀνύβριστον, ὅταν τις αὐτὰς ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν ἐὰ τὰς φύσεις τῶν πραγμάτων ἐξετάζεσθαι, μὴ προστιθεὶς οἴκοθεν ἐπίβουλον πάθος, ὃ πάνθ' ὅσα παρα-μέμικται τῆς ἐπιεικεστέρας ἰδέας ὑφαίρει καὶ 80 διοικίζει. πῶς οὖν οὐ παγχάλεπον, τῶν ἰδιωτῶν Ἰουδαίων ταῖς ἐλευθεριωτέραις καὶ πολιτικωτέραις μάστιξι τετυπτημένων, εἴ ποτε ἔδοξαν πληγῶν ἄξια ἐργάσασθαι, τοὺς ἄρχοντας, [529] | τὴν γερουσίαν,<sup>1</sup> οἳ καὶ γήρως καὶ τιμῆς εἰσιν ἐπώνυμοι, κατὰ τοῦτο τὸ μέρος ἔλαττον τῶν ὑπηκόων ἐνέγκασθαι, καθάπερ Αἰγυπτίων τοὺς ἀφανεστάτους καὶ ἐνόχους τοῖς μεγίστοις ἀδική-81 μασιν; ἐὼ λέγειν ὅτι, εἰ καὶ μυρία ἦσαν ἡμαρτηκότες, ὥφειλε τὸν καιρὸν αἰδεσθεὶς τὰς τιμωρίας ὑπερθέσθαι· τοῖς γὰρ ὀρθῶς πολιτευο-μένοις τῶν ἀρχόντων καὶ μὴ προσποιουμένοις τιμᾶν ἀλλ' ὄντως τιμῶσι τοὺς εὐεργέτας ἔθος ἐστὶ μηδένα κολάζειν τῶν κατακρίτων, ἄχρῖς ἂν αἱ ἐπιφανεῖς<sup>2</sup> γενέθλιοι καὶ πανηγύρεις αὐταὶ τῶν 82 ἐπιφανῶν Σεβαστῶν διεξέλθωσιν. ὁ δ' ἐν αὐταῖς παρηγόμεναι καὶ ἐτιμωρεῖτο τοὺς μηδὲν ἀδικοῦντας, οὓς ἐνῆν<sup>3</sup> αὐθις, εἴπερ ἐβούλετο, κολάζειν. ἀλλ' ἔσπευδε καὶ κατήπειγεν ἕνεκα τῆς πρὸς τὸν ἐναντίον ὄχλον ἀρεσκείας, ταύτῃ νομίζων ἐξοικειώσασθαι 83 μᾶλλον αὐτὸν εἰς ἅπερ διανοεῖτο. ἤδη τινὰς οἶδα

<sup>1</sup> Very possibly a gloss inserted in view of the words which follow.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps, as Mangey held, an insertion. The duplication of the epithet, with no obvious point, is not like Philo.

degradation on others to find some little thing to sustain their dignity, or when wantonly maltreating them, to find some accompaniment to counteract the wantonness, if one allows the nature of the case to be determined on its own merits and does not import some personal feeling of malice which removes and dislodges all ingredients of the milder type. Surely then it was the height of harshness that when 80 commoners among the Alexandrian Jews, if they appeared to have done things worthy of stripes, were beaten with whips more suggestive of freemen and citizens, the magistrates, the Senate, whose very name implies age and honour, in this respect fared worse than their inferiors and were treated like Egyptians of the meanest rank and guilty of the greatest iniquities.

I leave out of account 81 the point that if they had committed a host of crimes he ought to have postponed the punishments in respect for the season,<sup>a</sup> for rulers who conduct their government as they should and do not pretend to honour but do really honour their benefactors make a practice of not punishing any condemned person until these notable celebrations in honour of the birthdays of the illustrious Augustan house are over. Instead he made them an occasion for illegality and 82 for punishing those who had done no wrong, whom he could have punished at a later time if he wished. But he hurried and pressed on the matter to conciliate the mob, who were opposed to the Jews, thinking that this would help to bring them to make his policy their own. I have known cases when on 83

<sup>a</sup> Apparently the birthday of Gaius himself (Aug. 31st). Cf. αὐτοκράτορος § 83.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. οὐδένα ἦν.

PHILO

τῶν ἀνεσκολοπισμένων μελλούσης ἐνίστασθαι τοιαύτης ἐκεχειρίας καθαιρεθέντας καὶ τοῖς συγγενέσιν ἐπὶ τῷ ταφῆς ἀξιοθῆναι καὶ τυχεῖν τῶν νενομισμένων ἀποδοθέντας· ἔδει γὰρ καὶ νεκροὺς ἀπολαῦσαι τινος χρηστοῦ γενεθλιακαῖς ἀυτοκράτορος καὶ ἅμα τὸ ἱεροπρεπὲς τῆς πανηγύρεως φυλαχθῆναι.

84 ὁ δ' οὐ τετελευτηκότας ἐπὶ σταυρῶν καθαιρεῖν, ζῶντας δ' ἀνασκολοπιζέσθαι προσέταπτεν, οἷς ἀμνηστίαν ἐπ' ὀλίγον, οὐ τὴν εἰς ἅπαν, ὁ καιρὸς ἐδίδου πρὸς ὑπέρθειν τιμωρίας, οὐκ ἄφεισιν παντελῆ. καὶ ταῦτ' εἰργάζετο μετὰ τὸ πληγαῖς αἰκίσασθαι ἐν μέσῳ τῷ θεάτρῳ καὶ πυρὶ καὶ σι-
85 δῆρῳ βασανίσαι. καὶ ἡ θεὰ διενενέμητο· τὰ μὲν γὰρ πρῶτα τῶν θεαμάτων ἄχρι τρίτης ἢ τετάρτης ὥρας ἐξ ἑωθινοῦ ταῦτα ἦν· Ἰουδαῖοι μαστιγοῦμενοι, κρεμάμενοι, τροχιζόμενοι, κατακιζόμενοι,<sup>1</sup> διὰ μέσης τῆς ὀρχήστρας ἀπαγόμενοι τὴν ἐπὶ θανάτῳ· τὰ δὲ μετὰ τὴν καλὴν ταύτην ἐπίδειξιν ὀρχησταὶ καὶ μῖμοι καὶ αὐληταὶ καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα σκηνικῶν ἀθύρματα ἀγώνων.

86 XI. Καὶ τί ταῦτα μηκύνω; δευτέρα γὰρ ἐπινοεῖται πόρθησις, βουλομένου καὶ τὸ στρατευόμενον πλῆθος ἡμῖν ἐπιτειχίσαι ξένου συκοφαντήματος εὐρέσει. τὸ δὲ συκοφάντημα ἦν, ὡς τῶν Ἰουδαίων πανοπλίας ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις ἐχόντων. μεταπεμφόμενος οὖν ἑκατόνταρχον ᾧ μάλιστα ἐπίστευε, Κάστον ὄνομα, κελεύει παραλαβόντα τῆς ὑπηκόου τάξεως ἑαυτῷ τοὺς εὐτολμοτάτους στρατιώτας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καταδικαζόμενοι.

<sup>a</sup> This elliptical phrase is principally cited from Herodotus, κεκοσμημένον τὴν ἐπὶ θανάτῳ i. 109, συλλαβῶν δέ σφεας ἔδησε τὴν ἐπὶ θανάτῳ iii. 119, and so with κατέδησαν v. 72. If this the eve of a holiday of this kind, people who have been crucified have been taken down and their bodies delivered to their kinsfolk, because it was thought well to give them burial and allow them the ordinary rites. For it was meet that the dead also should have the advantage of some kind treatment upon the birthday of an emperor and also that the sanctity of the festival should be maintained. But 84

Flaccus gave no orders to take down those who had died on the cross. Instead he ordered the crucifixion of the living, to whom the season offered a short-lived though not permanent reprieve in order to postpone the punishment though not to remit it altogether. And he did this after maltreating them with the lash in the middle of the theatre and torturing them with fire and the sword. The show had been arranged 85 in parts. The first spectacle lasting from dawn till the third or fourth hour consisted of Jews being scourged, hung up, bound to the wheel, brutally mauled and haled for their death march<sup>a</sup> through the middle of the orchestra. After this splendid exhibition came dancers and mimes and flute players and all the other amusements of theatrical competitions.

XI. But why dwell on these things, for he had a 86 second plan of spoliation hatching. He desired to use the large body of soldiers serving under him as a weapon against us, and to do this he invented a strange calumny to the effect that the Jews had stocks of every kind of arms in their houses. Accordingly having sent for a centurion named Castus, whom he especially trusted, he bade him take the most intrepid soldiers in the company under him and withrepresents the facts it would seem to be a deliberate archaism in Philo. Lucian however also uses it (Alex. 44).

PHILO

ἐπισπεύδειν καὶ ἄνευ προρρήσεως ἐπεισιόντα ταῖς 87 τῶν Ἰουδαίων οἰκίαις ἐρευνᾶν, μή τις ὄπλων
 [530] ἐναπόκειται παρασκευή. | καὶ ὁ μὲν συντείνας ἔθει τὸ προσταχθὲν ἐργασόμενος. οἱ δὲ τὴν ἐπί-νοιαν οὐκ εἰδότες ἀχανεῖς τὸ πρῶτον εἰστήκεσαν ὑπ' ἐκπλήξεως, γυναίων καὶ τέκνων αὐτοῖς ἐμπλεκομένων καὶ ῥεομένων δάκρυσι διὰ τὸν ἐπ' αἰχμαλώτοις φόβον· ὁ γὰρ λοιπὸν τῆς πορθήσεως, τοῦτ' 88 αἰὲ προσεδόκων. ὡς δ' ἤκουσαν παρά τινος τῶν ἐρευνώντων· “ ποῦ ταμιεύεσθε τὰ ὄπλα; ” μικρὸν ἀνέπνευσάν καὶ πάντα καὶ τὰ ἐν μυχοῖς ἀναπετά-89 σαντες ἐπεδείκνυντο, τῇ μὲν ἠδόμενοι, τῇ δὲ στένοντες, ἠδόμενοι μὲν ἐπὶ τῷ διελεγχθῆσεσθαι τὸ συκοφάντημα ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ, δυσχεραίνοντες δέ, ὅτι πρῶτον μὲν αἱ τηλικαῦται διαβολαὶ κατ' αὐτῶν προπιστεύονται συντιθέμεναι πρὸς ἐχθρῶν, ἔπειτα δ', ὅτι γυναῖα κατάκλειστα μηδὲ τὴν αὐλειον προερχόμενα καὶ θαλαμευόμεναι παρθένοι, δι' αἰδῶ τὰς ἀνδρῶν ὄψεις καὶ τῶν οἰκειοτάτων ἐκτρεπόμεναι, τότε οὐ μόνον ἀσυνήθεσιν ἀλλὰ καὶ στρατιω-90 τικὸν δέος ἐπανατεινομένοις ἐμφανεῖς ἐγένοντο. γενομένης δ' ὅμως ἀκριβοῦς ἐρεύνης ὅσον<sup>1</sup> πλήθος ἀμυντηρίων ὄπλων εὔρεθη! κράνη, θώρακες, ἀσπίδες, ἐγχειρίδια, κοντοί, παντευχίαι σωρηδὸν προεκομίζοντο, καὶ ἐν μέρει τὰ ἐκηβόλα, παλτοί,

<sup>1</sup> Wendland suggests πόσον, but see note c.

<sup>a</sup> The phrase τὸν ἐπ' αἰχμαλώτοις is certainly strange, but we have something like it in De Ios. 184 τὸν ὡς ἐπὶ τεθνεῶτι φόβον “the fear that he is dead,” though here to make the parallel complete we should have a participle ἐσομένους.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Spec. Leg. iii. 169 “The women are best suited to the indoor life which keeps to the house, within which the out loss of time and without giving notice enter and search the houses of the Jews to see whether they had any arms stored there. Castus hurried off to do what 87 he was told. The Jews as they knew nothing of the scheme at first stood dumbfounded in consternation, while their women and children clung to them bathed in tears in the fear of being taken into captivity.<sup>a</sup> For they lived in expectation of this which was the one thing left to complete the spoliation. When they heard one of the searching party say 88 "Where do you stock your arms?" they revived somewhat and laid open everything, even the contents of the recesses. In one way they felt pleased, 89 in another deeply pained. They were pleased that the refutation of the calumny would be self-evident but indignant first that such grave slanders, fabricated against them by their enemies, were so readily believed, secondly that their women kept in seclusion, never even approaching the outer doors, and their maidens confined to the inner chambers, who for modesty's sake avoided the sight of men, even of their closest relations, were displayed to eyes, not merely unfamiliar, but terrorizing through the fear of military violence.<sup>b</sup> And after this careful inves- 90 tigation, what an enormous amount<sup>c</sup> of defensive weapons was discovered, the helmets, breastplates, shields, daggers, pikes, outfits of armour, piles of which were produced, and on another side, the mis-middle door (μέσαυλον = θαλαμεύμεναι here) is taken by the maidens as their boundary, and the outer door by those who have reached full womanhood." See note, vol. vii. p. 640. A good deal of additional information is given by Box.

<sup>c</sup> ὅσον exclamatory may be kept as more expressive than πόσον, cf. e.g. Rep. 450 α οἶον . . . εἰργάσασθε! ὅσον λόγον . . . κινεῖτε!

PHILO

σφενδόναί, τόξα, βέλη! τούτων ἀπλῶς οὐδέν· ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τὰ πρὸς τὴν καθ' ἡμέραν διάιταν ὀψαρτυτῶν 91 αὐτάρκη μαχαιρίδια. ἕξ οὗ καὶ ἡ περὶ τὸν βίον εὐθύς εὐκολία διεφαίνετο πολυτέλειαν καὶ τὸ ἀβροδίατον μὴ προσιεμένων, ἃ πέφυκε γεννᾶν κόρον· κόρου δ' ὕβρις ἕκγονον, ἡ πάντων κακῶν 92 ἀρχή. καίτοι γ' οὐ πρὸ πολλοῦ τῶν κατὰ τὴν χώραν Αἰγυπτίων ὀπλολογηθέντων ὑπὸ Βάσσου τινός, ᾧ προσέταξεν ὁ Φλάκκος τουτὶ τὸ ἔργον, [ἀλλ'] ἦν τότε ἰδεῖν στόλον μὲν πολὺν νεῶν καταπεπλευκότα καὶ ἐνορμοῦντα τοῖς τοῦ ποταμοῦ λιμέσι, γέμοντα παντοίων ὄπλων, ἀχθοφόρα δ' ὑποζύγια παμπληθῆ συνδεδεμένων δοράτων φορμηδὸν ἀφ' ἑκατέρας πλευρᾶς εἰς τὸ ἰσόρροπον, τὰς δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ στρατοπέδου πάσας σχεδὸν ἀρμαμάξας μεστὰς πανοπλιῶν, αἱ στοιχηδὸν ὑπὸ μίαν ὄψιν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν σύνταξιν ἐν κόσμῳ προῆσαν· τὸ δὲ μεταξὺ τῶν λιμένων καὶ τῆς ἐν τοῖς βασιλείοις ὀπλοθήκης, εἰς ἣν ἔδει κατατεθῆναι τὰ ὄπλα, δέκα 93 σταδίων πού διάστημα σύμπαν ἔχον. τὰς τῶν ταῦτα παρασκευασαμένων οἰκίας ἄξιον ἦν ἐρευ-νᾶσθαι· πρὸς γὰρ νεωτερισμὸν ὑποπτοὶ πολλάκις ἀποστάντες ἦσαν, καὶ ἔδει κατὰ μίμησιν τῶν ἱερῶν ἀγώνων τριετηρίδας ἄγειν καινὰς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ συγκομιδῆς ὄπλων τοὺς προεστῶτας, ἔν' ἡ μὴ κατασκευάζεσθαι φθάνωσιν ἢ ἀντὶ πολλῶν ὀλίγα, 94 καιρὸν οὐκ ἔχοντες εἰς ἀναχώρησιν.<sup>1</sup> ἡμᾶς δὲ τί
 [531] τοιοῦτον ἔδει παθεῖν; | πότε γὰρ εἰς ἀπόστασιν

<sup>1</sup> The word is hopeless. Of the corrections proposed, 352

FLACCUS, 90-94

sile kind, javelins, slings, bows and arrows! Why! absolutely nothing, not even the knives which suffice the cooks for their daily use. This last in itself 91 showed clearly the simplicity of the life led by people who discarded the expensive habits and luxury which naturally breed that satiety, whose child is the wanton insolence which is the source of all evils.

And yet not long before, when the Egyptians in the 92 country districts had their weapons collected by one Bassus, on whom Flaccus had laid this task, there was a great array of ships to be seen which had sailed to the bank and moored in the harbours of the river brimful of all manner of weapons, also a great number of beasts of burden with spears tied in bundles hung on each side to balance equally. Also there was a procession of waggons sent from the camp, nearly all full of outfits of armour, moving regularly one after the other so as to form a single ordered line, all visible at once, and the space between the harbours and the armoury in the palace where the arms had to be deposited was, taken altogether, about ten stades long. Those who procured these equipments 93 might well have had their houses searched, for they had often revolted and were suspected of favouring sedition. Indeed, the authorities ought to have copied the sacred contests by instituting new triennial celebrations for the collection of arms, so that the Egyptians would not have time to provide them or at least only a few instead of this great quantity, as they had no opportunity for replacing them. But why 94 should we have been subject to anything of the kind?

---

ἀνανέωσις and ἀναχώνευσις ("reforging"), the latter seems the more probable. Considering that it follows on ἀντὶ πολλῶν δόλῳ, I should myself prefer ἀναπλήρωσιν to ἀνανέωσιν.

PHILO

ὑπωπτεύθημεν; πότε δ' οὐκ εἰρηνικοὶ πᾶσιν ἐνομίσθημεν; τὰ δ' ἐπιτηδεύματα, οἷς καθ' ἐκά-στην ἡμέραν χρώμεθα, οὐκ ἀνεπίληπτα, οὐ συντείνοντα πρὸς εὐνομίαν πόλεως καὶ εὐστάθειαν; εἴ γε μὴν εἶχον ὄπλα Ἰουδαῖοι παρ' αὐτοῖς, ὑπὲρ τετρακοσίας ἀφηρέθησαν οἰκίας, ἐξ ὧν μετανάσται ἐγένοντο, φυγαδευθέντες πρὸς τῶν τὰς οὐσίας ἀρπασάντων<sup>1</sup>. διὰ τί οὖν οὐχὶ καὶ τὰ παρὰ τούτοις ἠρεύνησέ τις, τοῖς εἰ καὶ μὴ ἴδια ὄπλα, 95 ὅσα γοῦν ἤρπασαν, ἔχουσιν; ἀλλ' ἦν, ὡς ἔφην, ὅλον τὸ πρᾶγμα ἐπιβουλή τῆς ἀποτομίας Φλάκκου καὶ τῶν ὄχλων, ὧν ἀπέλαυσαν καὶ γυναῖκες. οὐκ ἐν ἀγορᾷ γὰρ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν μέσῳ τῷ θεάτρῳ καθάπερ αἰχμάλωτοι συνηρπάζοντο καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν σκηνὴν ἐφ' ὅτῳ δήποτε συκοφαντούμεναι παρήγγοντο μετὰ τινος ἀφορήτου καὶ ἀργα-16 λεωτάτης ὕβρεως. εἰτ' ἐπειδὴ μὲν ἐγνωρίσθησαν ἐτέρου γένους, ἀπελύοντο—πολλὰς γὰρ ὡς Ἰουδαίας ἀκριβῆ μὴ ποιούμενοι τῆς ἀληθείας τὴν ἔρευναν συνελάμβανον—, εἰ δ' ἐφάνησαν ἡμέτεραι, προσἔταπτον οἱ ἀντὶ θεατῶν τύραννοι καὶ δεσπότες γεγονότες κρέα χοίρεια διδόναι κομίζοντας. ὅσαι

<sup>1</sup> Mangey, Reiter, etc., take this sentence as a question, and Reiter inserts ἂν after ἀφηρέθησαν. But see note a.

<sup>a</sup> This sentence has been taken by other editors as a question (ἂν being inserted after ἀφηρέθησαν) and understood to mean "if they had had arms, would they have been stripped of their homes?" This is quite good sense in itself, but what bearing has it on the sequel? As I have taken it, the apodosis is suppressed for the moment, but is understood from the next sentence, i.e. "if they had arms, they must have passed into the hands of those who occupied their houses."

FLACCUS, 94-96

When were we suspected of revolting? When were we not thought to be peacefully inclined to all? Were not our ways of living which we follow day by day blameless and conducive to good order and stability in the State? Indeed, if the Jews did have arms in their possession, they had been dispossessed from over four hundred houses from which they were driven to wander by those who seized their property.<sup>a</sup> Why then did not their despoilers have their property searched, since they would have, if not arms of their own, at any rate those which they had seized?

But the whole proceeding was as I have 95 said a malicious plot, due to the ruthlessness of Flaccus and the turbulent outbreaks,<sup>b</sup> the effect of which was felt by women also.<sup>c</sup> For they were seized like captives not only in the market-place but also in the middle of the theatre and taken on to the stage on no matter what calumnious charge, meanwhile being subjected to outrage of an intolerable and most barbarous kind. Then, if they were recognized 96 to be of another race, since many were arrested as Jewesses without any careful investigation of the truth, they were released. But if they were found to be of our nation then these onlookers at a show turned into despotic tyrants and gave orders to fetch swine's flesh and give it to the women. Then all

<sup>b</sup> So rather than "crowds," for which Philo would use the singular; nor does it suit ἀπέλαυσαν so well. For the use cf. τὸ πλῆθος . . . ὄχλων καὶ θορύβων De Mut. 144.

<sup>c</sup> Why does Philo bring this account of the women's sufferings in at this point? They belong rather to the pogrom which we left at § 85. Possibly he means that the insult to feminine modesty involved in the investigation just described did not stand alone, though in the account of the atrocities nothing had been said about the women.

PHILO

μὲν οὖν φόβῳ κολάσεως ἀπεγεύσαντο, μηδὲν ἔτι δεινὸν προσυπομείνασαι ἀπελύοντο· αἱ δ' ἐγκρατέστεραι βασιανισταῖς παρεδίδοντο πρὸς αἰκίας ἀνηκέστους, ὅπερ τοῦ μηδὲν ἀδικεῖν αὐτὰς σαφειστάτη πίστις ἐστί.

- 97 XII. Πρὸς τοῖς εἰρημένοις οὐ δι' ἑαυτοῦ μόνον ἀλλ' ἤδη καὶ διὰ τοῦ αὐτοκράτορος ἐζήτει καὶ ἐπενόει κακοῦν ἡμᾶς. τιμὰς γάρ, ὅσας οἶόν τε ἦν καὶ ἐπέτρεπον οἱ νόμοι, πάσας Γαῖῳ ψηφισάμενοι καὶ ἐπιτελέσαντες ἔργοις ἀνέδομεν τὸ ψήφισμα αὐτῷ, δεηθέντες, ἐπειδὴ πρεσβείαν αἰτησαμένοις οὐκ ἂν ἐπέτρεψεν, ἵνα διαπέμψηται δι' αὐτοῦ.
- 98 ἀναγνοὺς δὲ καὶ ἐκάστῳ τῶν ἐν τῷ ψηφίσματι πολλακίς τῇ κεφαλῇ συνεπινεύσας, ὑπομειδιῶν καὶ γεγανωμένος ἢ προσποιούμενος τὸν ἠδόμενον, “ ἀποδέχομαι πάντας ὑμᾶς ” ἔφη “ τῆς εὐσεβείας καὶ πέμψω, καθάπερ αἰτεῖσθε, ἢ πρεσβευτοῦ τάξιν ἐκπλήσω, ἵν' αἰσθηται Γάιος τῆς ὑμετέρας εὐχαριστίας. μαρτυρήσω δὲ καὶ αὐτὸς ὅσα σύννοια τῷ πλήθει τῶν εἰς κοσμιότητα καὶ εἰς εὐπίθειαν προστιθεῖς οὐδέν· ἢ γὰρ ἀλήθεια αὐταρκέστατος
- 100 ἔπαινος.” ἐπὶ ταύταις ταῖς ὑποσχέσεσι γεγηθότες εὐχαριστοῦμεν, ὡς ἤδη ταῖς ἐλπίσι παρανεγνωσμένου Γαῖῳ τοῦ ψηφίσματος. καὶ γὰρ ἦν εἰκός, ἐπειδὴ πάνθ' ὅσα διὰ τῶν ὑπάρχων πέμπεται μετὰ
- [532] σπουδῆς | ἀνυπέρθeton ἔχει τὴν παρ' ἡγεμονί<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἡμῖν or ὑμῖν.

---

<sup>a</sup> The sections which follow describe events which go back to a time previous to those narrated in § 25 and onwards. Philo seems to take this action of Flaccus as his crowning the women who in fear of punishment tasted the meat were dismissed and did not have to bear any further dire maltreatment. But the more resolute were delivered to the tormentors to suffer desperate ill-usage, which is the clearest proof of their entire innocence of wrongdoing.

356

FLACCUS, 96-100

XII. <sup>a</sup>To all these we have to add that Flaccus had 97 before this been seeking to utilize the emperor to supplement his own efforts to injure us and laid his plans accordingly. We had decreed and ratified with our actions all the tributes to Gaius which were possible and were allowed by the laws and had submitted the decree to Flaccus, begging him since he would not have granted our request for an embassy to provide himself for its transmission. He read it and nodded 98 his head several times in assent at each point, smiled gently, and looked pleased or pretended to be pleased, and said "I commend you all for your piety, and I will send it as you ask or will fulfil the duties of an envoy myself that Gaius may learn your gratitude. I will also testify myself from my own knowledge to 99 your abundantly orderly and loyal behaviour without adding anything else,<sup>b</sup> for the truth in itself is all-sufficient praise." When we heard these promises 100 we rejoiced and were thankful, feeling in our hopefulness as though Gaius had already read the decree. The hope was reasonable, since any communication sent by a viceroy with urgency secures a prompt de-wickedness, and very possibly connects it directly with his fall, perhaps justly. It is quite conceivable that when the insulted Agrippa informed the emperor that Flaccus had suppressed a complimentary address to himself, his animosity against Flaccus was roused to activity.

<sup>b</sup> Or "without adding to the multitude," etc. But the dative of the thing known following σύνουδα is not uncommon.

PHILO

- 101 διάγνωσιν. ὁ δὲ πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσας οἷς δι-ενοήθημεν, οἷς εἶπεν, οἷς ὠμολόγησε, τὸ ψήφισμα παρ' ἑαυτῷ παρακατέσχεν, ἵνα μόνοι τῶν ὑφ' ἡλίον ἀνθρώπων ἐχθροὶ νομισθῶμεν. ταῦτ' οὐ διηγρυπνηκότος ἦν ἐκ πολλοῦ καὶ περιεσκεμμένου τὴν καθ' ἡμῶν ἐπιβουλήν, ἀλλὰ μὴ κατ' ἀπόνοιαν<sup>1</sup> αὐτοσχεδιάζοντος ἀκαίρῳ φορᾷ καὶ παραγωγῇ τινὶ
- 102 λογισμοῦ; θεὸς δ' ὡς ἔοικεν, ᾧ μέλει τῶν ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων, τοὺς θῶπας αὐτοῦ λόγους καὶ κεκομφευμένους ἐπὶ φενακισμῷ καὶ τὸ τῆς ἐκνόμου διανοίας βουλευτήριον, ἐν ᾧ κατεστρατήγει, προβαλλόμενος, λαβῶν οἶκτον ἡμῶν, ἀφορμὴν οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἐμπαρέσχε τοῦ μὴ ψευ-
- 103 σθῆναι τῆς ἐλπίδος. Ἀγρίππας γὰρ ἐπίδημήσας ὁ βασιλεὺς διηγησαμένοις ἡμῖν τὴν ἐκ Φλάκκου γενομένην ἐπιβουλήν ἐπανορθοῦται τὸ πρᾶγμα καὶ ὑποσχόμενος τὸ ψήφισμα διαπέμψεσθαι λαβῶν ὡς ἀκούομεν ἔπεμψεν, ἀπολογησάμενος καὶ περὶ τοῦ χρόνου, ὡς οὐκ ὀψέ μαθόντων εὐσεβεῖν εἰς τὸν εὐεργέτην οἶκον, ἀλλ' ἐξ ἀρχῆς μὲν σπουδασάντων, ἐπηρεῖα δὲ τοῦ προεστῶτος τὴν καίριον ἐπίδειξιν
- 104 ἀφαιρεθέντων. ἐπὶ δὴ τούτοις ἤρξατο κονίεσθαι κατ' αὐτοῦ ἢ ὑπέρμαχος μὲν καὶ παραστάτις ἀδικουμένων τιμωρὸς δ' ἀνοσίων καὶ ἔργων καὶ ἀνθρώπων δίκη. πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ καινοτάτην

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπίνοιαν.

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "perusal," for διαγιγνώσκω is sometimes used for διαναγιγνώσκω. Perhaps indeed read διανόγνωσιν, which Mangey suggested and Box adopts.

<sup>b</sup> Literally "in the council chamber (or council) of his lawless mind," cf. De Vit. Cont. 27. The figure it may be noted is a common one in Philo, cf. Quod Det. 40, De Ebr.

FLACCUS, 101-104

cision<sup>a</sup> by the head. But Flaccus, dismissing all con- 101 sideration for our intentions and his own words and agreements, detained the decree in his own possession so that it might be supposed that we alone among men who dwell under the sun were hostile. Do not these actions show long unsleeping vigilance and careful preparation of the insidious attack against us and that it was not improvised in a fit of insanity, in an ill-timed outburst due to some perversion of the reason?

But God, it is clear, who takes 102 care for human affairs, rejected his flattering words so elegantly framed to cajole and the treacherous counsels against us debated in his lawless mind<sup>b</sup> and in His compassion before long provided us with grounds for thinking that our hopes would not be disappointed. For when King Agrippa visited Alex- 103 andria and we told him of Flaccus's malignant action, he rectified the matter, promised us that he would have the decree transmitted and took it and as we understand sent it, apologizing also for the delay and stating that we had not been slow to learn the duty of piety to the house of our benefactors; on the contrary we had been eager to show it from the first but had been deprived of the chance of proving it in good time by the spite of the Governor. At this 104 point justice, the champion and defender of the wronged, the avenger of unholy men and deeds, began to enter the lists against him. For in the 165, De Conf. 86, De Dec. 98. καταστρατηγέιν = "to overcome by cunning or treachery" is here used absolutely by Philo, as also in Legatio 25, and perhaps De Dec. 141. In De Dec. 91 we have καταστρατηγείς τὸν ὄρκον of making the oath which the judges have sworn of none effect. All the other examples cited by Stephanus have an accusative or genitive following.

PHILO

- ὑπέμεινεν ὕβριν καὶ συμφορὰν οὐδενὶ τῶν πάλαι γενομένην ὑπάρχων, ἀφ' οὗ τὴν ἡγεμονίαν ὁ Σεβαστὸς οἶκος ἀνήψατο γῆς καὶ θαλάττης.
- 105 ἔνιοι γὰρ καὶ ἐπὶ Τιβερίου καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ Καίσαρος τῶν διεπόντων τὰς ἐπικρατείας, τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν εἰς δυναστείαν καὶ τυραννίδα μεθαρμοσάμενοι, τὰς χώρας ἐνέπλησαν κακῶν ἀνηκέστων δωροδοκίας, ἀρπαγαῖς, καταδίκαις, τῶν μηδὲν ἡμαρτηκῶτων ἐλάσσει καὶ φυγαῖς, τῶν δυνατῶν ἀκρίτοις ἀναι-ρέσει· οὗς μετὰ τὸν ὀρισθέντα χρόνον τῆς ἀρχῆς ἐπανελθόντας εἰς Ῥώμην οἱ αὐτοκράτορες λόγον καὶ εὐθύνας τῶν πεπραγμένων ἤτουν, καὶ μάλιστα
- 106 ὁπότε πρεσβεύσαιντο αἱ ἀδικηθεῖσαι πόλεις. τότε γὰρ κοινὸς παρέχοντες ἑαυτοὺς δικαστάς, ἐξ ἴσου καὶ τῶν κατηγορῶν καὶ τῶν ἀπολογουμένων ἀκροώμενοι, μηδενὸς ἀκρίτου προκαταγινώσκειν ἀξιοῦντες, ἐβράβευον οὔτε πρὸς ἔχθραν οὔτε πρὸς χάριν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὴν φύσιν τῆς ἀληθείας τὰ δόξαντα
- 107 εἶναι δίκαια. Φλάκκω δ' οὐ μετὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀλλ' ἐμπροθέσμως προϋπήντησεν ἡ μισοπόνηρος δίκη ταῖς ἀμέτροις ὑπερβολαῖς ὧν ἡδίκηει καὶ παρηνόμει δυσχεράνασα.
- [533]
108 XIII. | Γίνεται δ' ὁ τρόπος αὐτῷ τῆς συλλήψεως τοιόσδε. ὑπέλαβεν ἤδη τὸν Γάιον περὶ ὧν ὑποπτος ἦν ἐξευμενίσθαι, τὰ μὲν ἐπιστολιμαίοις γράμμασιν, ἃ κολακείας ἦν ὑπέρμεστα, τὰ δὲ ἐν οἷς δημηγορῶν πολλάκις ἐθεράπευε λόγους θῶπας καὶ μακρὰς ρήσεις πεπλασμένων ἐγκωμίων συνείρων, τὰ δὲ καὶ ἐκ τοῦ σφόδρα εὐδοκμεῖν παρὰ τῷ πλείστῳ

FLACCUS, 104-108

first place he was subjected to an unprecedented indignity and disaster such as had not befallen any of the viceroys in the past since the Augustan House assumed the sovereignty of land and sea.

Some, indeed, of those who held governorships in the 105 time of Tiberius and his father Caesar, had perverted their office of guardian and protector into domination and tyranny and had spread hopeless misery through their territories with their venality, robbery, unjust sentences, expulsion and banishment of quite innocent people, and execution of magnates without trial. But these people on their return to Rome, after the termination of their time of office, had been required by the emperor to render an account and submit to scrutiny of their doings, particularly when the aggrieved cities sent ambassadors. For on these 106 occasions the emperors showed themselves impartial judges; they listened equally to both the accuser and the defender, making it a rule to condemn no one offhand without a trial, and awarded what they thought to be just, influenced neither by hostility nor favour but by what actually was the truth.
Flaccus, on the other hand, not after his time of office, 107 but in advance of the regular date, was encountered by justice, who hates evil and was indignant at the boundless excesses of his unjust and lawless actions.

XIII. The manner of his arrest was as follows. He 108 supposed that Gaius had been by now propitiated as to the matters on which he was under suspicion, partly through his written dispatches, which overflowed with flattery, partly through the obsequiousness of his public harangues, in which he span together fawning words and long screeds of insincere encomium, partly again by the high esteem in which

PHILO

- 109 μέρει τῆς πόλεως. ἔλαθε δ' αὐτὸν ἀπατῶν· ἀβέβαιοι γὰρ αἱ τῶν πονηρῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐλπίδες, εἰκαζόντων μὲν τὰ χρηστότερα, τὰ δὲ παλίμφημα καὶ ὧν ἄξιοι τυγχάνειν εἰσὶ πασχόντων. πέμπεται μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰταλίας Βάσσος ἑκατοντάρχης ὑπὸ Γαίου χειροτονηθεὶς μετὰ τῆς τάξεως τῶν
- 110 στρατιωτῶν, ἧς ἀφηγεῖτο. σκάφους δ' ἐπιβάς τῶν μάλιστα ταχυναυτούντων ὀλίγαις ἡμέραις πρὸς τοῖς λιμέσι γίνεται τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας κατὰ τὴν Φάρον νῆσον περὶ δείλην ἐσπέραν καὶ κελεύει τῷ κυβερνήτῃ μέχρις ἡλίου καταδύσεως ἔξω θαλαττεύειν, τεχνάζων τὸ ἀνεπίφαντον ἕνεκα τοῦ μὴ προαισθόμενον Φλάκκον καὶ βουλευσάμενόν τι νεώτερον ἄπρακτον αὐτῷ τὴν ὑπηρεσίαν ἐργάσασθαι.
- 111 γενομένης δ' ἐσπέρας, ἣ μὲν ναῦς προσέσχεν, ὁ δὲ Βάσσος μετὰ τῶν ἰδίων ἀποβάς προῆει, μήτε γνωρίζων τινὰ μήτε γνωριζόμενος ὑπὸ του, στρατιώτην δέ τινα τῶν ἐν τοῖς τετραδίοις φυλάκων καθ' ὁδὸν εὐρῶν κελεύει δεικνύναι τὴν οἰκίαν τοῦ στρατάρχου· τούτῳ γὰρ ἐβούλετο τὸ ἀπόρρητον ἀνενεγκεῖν, ἵνα, κὰν δέῃ πολυχειρίας, ἔχη τὸν
- 112 συναγωνιούμενον. πυθόμενος δ' αὐτὸν ἐστιᾶσθαι παρὰ τινι σὺν Φλάκκῳ, μηδὲν τάχους ἀνείεις συνέτεινεν ἄχρι τῆς τοῦ κεκληκότος οἰκίας—Στεφανίων ἦν τῶν τοῦ Τιβερίου Καίσαρος ἀπελευθέρων, παρ' ᾧ κατήγοντο—καὶ μικρὸν ἄποθεν ὑποστείλας ἐκπέμπει τινὰ τῶν ἰδίων κατασκευσόμενον εἰς ἀκόλουθον ἀσκήσας, σόφισμα τοῦ μηδένα

<sup>a</sup> Cf. § 92. It is somewhat surprising to find another and evidently different Bassus. But the name is too common to justify any suspicion of its genuineness here or there.

<sup>b</sup> More literally "the sentries arrayed in quaternions,"

FLACCUS, 109-112

he was held by the chief part of the city. But he 109 little knew that he was deceiving himself, for the hopes of the wicked are without foundation. Their prognostications are favourable but their experiences fraught with evil omens are what they deserve. A centurion named Bassus<sup>a</sup> was sent from Italy by Gaius's appointment with the company of soldiers which he commanded. Having embarked on one of 110 the swiftest sailing ships he arrived in a few days at the harbours of Alexandria, off the island of Pharos, in the late afternoon and bade the pilot wait at sea outside till sunset, his scheme being to avoid observation, so that Flaccus might not get knowledge of it beforehand and by planning some act of violence, make his mission unsuccessful. When it was evening the ship 111 was brought to land and Bassus disembarking with his men went forward without recognizing or being recognized by anyone. And finding on the way a soldier belonging to the quaternions acting as sentries,<sup>b</sup> he ordered him to show him the house of the military commander. For he wished to communicate his secret instructions to him so that if a strong force was required he might have someone to support him in the contest. And learning that the commander 112 as well as Flaccus was feasting with someone, he hurried with unabated speed to the house of the giver of the feast, by name Stephanio, one of the freedmen of Tiberius Caesar. It was in his house that the two were being entertained, and Bassus keeping in the background a little way off sent on one of his men to reconnoitre attired as an attendant, hoping by this artifice to maintain secrecy. The

i.e. the night was divided into four watches and each watch was served by four soldiers. For "quaternions" cf. Acts xii. 4.

PHILO

- συναισθέσθαι. παρελθὼν δὲ εἰς τὸ συμπόσιον ὡς ἑνός τινος τῶν παρατυγχανόντων οἰκέτης, ἅπαντα μετ' ἀκριβείας περιαθρήσας, ἐπανελθὼν ἐμήνυσε
- 113 τῷ Βάσσῳ. γνούς δὲ τὸ περὶ τὰς εἰσόδους ἀφύ-λακτον καὶ τὴν περὶ τὸν Φλάκκον ὀλιγότητα—μόλις γὰρ δέκα ἢ πεντεκαίδεκα τῶν διακονικῶν ἀνδραπόδων ἐπηκολουθήκει—σύνθημα δὸς τοῖς περὶ αὐτὸν εἰσέδραμεν ἐξαίφνης, καὶ τῶν στρατιω-τῶν οἱ μὲν παρὰ τὸ συμπόσιον ἐπιστάντες ὑπέζωσμένοι τὰ ξίφη κυκλοῦσιν αὐτὸν οὐ προῖδόμενον· ἐτύγγανε γὰρ καὶ πρόποσίν τινα διδοὺς καὶ φιλο-
- 114 φρονούμενος τοὺς παρόντας. εἰς μέσον δὲ τοῦ Βάσσου παρελθόντος, ἰδὼν εὐθύς ὑπ' ἐκπλήξεως ἀχανῆς γίνεται καὶ βουλόμενος ἀναστῆναι, τὴν ἐν κύκλῳ φρουρὰν θεασάμενος, ἔγνω καὶ πρὶν ἀκοῦσαι, τί βούλεται Γάιος ἐπ' αὐτῷ καὶ τί προστέτακται τοῖς ἤκουσι καὶ τί παραντίκα μελλήσει ὑπομένειν· δεινὸς γὰρ ὁ νοῦς τὰ κατὰ μέρος ἐν χρόνῳ μακρῷ γινόμενα πάνθ' ἅμα ἰδεῖν καὶ πάντων ἀθρόων<sup>1</sup>
- 115 ἀκοῦσαι. τῶν μὲν | οὖν συνδειπνούντων ἕκαστος [534] ἀναστὰς ὑπὸ δέους ἐπεφρίκει καὶ ἐπεπήγει, μὴ τις ὄρισται καὶ τοῦ συνεστιαθῆναι δίκη· φεύγειν γὰρ οὔτ' ἀσφαλὲς ἦν οὔτ' ἄλλως ἐνεδέχето, προκατ-εχομένων τῶν εἰσόδων. ὁ δὲ ὑπὸ τῶν στρατιωτῶν τοῦ Βάσσου κελεύσαντος ἀπάγεται, τελευταίαν ταύτην ἀνάλυσιν ἐκ συμποσίου ποιησάμενος· ἔδει γὰρ ἀφ' ἐστίας ἄρξασθαι τὴν δίκην κατὰ τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἄθροον.

FLACCUS, 112-115

soldier made his way into the dining-hall in the guise of a servant of one or other of the visitors and having taken a careful look all round returned with his information to Bassus. He, learning the unguarded 113 condition of the entrances and the scantiness of Flaccus's retinue, for barely ten or fifteen of his household slaves had accompanied him, gave the signal to his companions and rushed in suddenly. Some of the soldiers taking their stand along the dining-hall, with swords in their girdles, surrounded Flaccus before he saw them, since he was drinking the health of some particular person and toasting<sup>a</sup> the company. But 114 when Bassus came forward into the middle of the room he saw him and was at once struck speechless with consternation. He wished to rise but when he surveyed the guard around him, he knew even before he heard it what Gaius wanted to do with him and what orders had been given to the newcomers and what would be his fate in the immediate future. For the mind has a marvellous power of seeing all at once and hearing altogether the successive events which will cover a long space of time. As for his fellow- 115 guests, each of them rose shuddering and petrified with fear lest their presence in his company at the feast was a crime destined for punishment. For it was unsafe to fly and, moreover, impossible, since the entrances had been occupied in advance. Flaccus himself at Bassus's orders, was led away by the soldiers. Thus it was from a convivial gathering that he made his final departure, for it was only right that a hospitable hearth should be the scene where justice <sup>a</sup> According to the lexicons, φιλοφρονείσθαι merely means "making himself agreeable to them"; but the context seems to need some specific action which diverted his attention.

PHILO

μυρίους ἀνεστίους οἴκους οὐδὲν ἡδικηκότων ἀνθρώπων ἐργασαμένου.

- 116 XIV. Τοῦτο καινότερον ὑπέμεινε Φλάκκος ἐν χώρα, ἧς ἀφηγεῖτο, πολεμίου τρόπον ζωγρηθεὶς ἕνεκά μοι δοκῶ τῶν Ἰουδαίων, οὓς ἄρδην ἀφανίσαι διεγνώκει λιμοδοξῶν. ἐναργῆς δὲ πίστις καὶ ὁ χρόνος τῆς συλλήψεως· ἑορτὴ μὲν γὰρ ἦν πάνδημος τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις κατὰ τὴν μετοπωρινὴν ἰσημερίαν,
- 117 ἐν ἣ διαγείν Ἰουδαίους ἔθος ἐν σκηναῖς. οὐδὲν δὲ τῶν ἐν ἑορτῇ συνόλως ἀπετελεῖτο, τῶν μὲν ἀρχόντων ἔτι καθειργμένων μετὰ τὰς ἀνηκέστους καὶ ἀφορήτους αἰκίας καὶ ὕβρεις, τῶν δὲ ἰδιωτῶν τὰς τε ἐκείνων συμφορὰς ἅπαντος τοῦ ἔθνους κοινὰς νομιζόντων καὶ ἐπὶ ταῖς ἐξαιρέτοις, ἃς ἰδίᾳ
- 118 ἕκαστος ὑπέμεινε, οὐ μετρίως κατηφούντων. τὰ γὰρ ἀνιαρὰ διπλασιάζεσθαι φιλεῖ μάλιστα ἐν ἑορταῖς τοῖς μὴ δυναμένοις ἑορτάζειν, στερήσει τε ἰλαρὰς εὐθυμίας, ἣν πανήγυρις ἐπιζητεῖ, καὶ μετουσία λύπης, ὑφ' ἧς ἐξετραχλίζοντο, μηδὲν ἄκος τῶν τοσοῦτων κακοπραγιῶν ἀνευρεῖν δυνάμενοι.
- 119 σφόδρα δ' ἔχουσιν ὀδυνηρῶς καὶ πεπιεσμένοις ἄχθει βαρυτάτῳ—συνεῖληντο δ' ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις, ἅτε νυκτὸς ἐπεχούσης—ἠκόν τινες ἀπαγγέλλοντες τὴν γενομένην σύλληψιν. οἱ δ' ἀπόπειραν εἶναι νομίσαντες, οὐκ ἀλήθειαν, ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐπὶ τῷ κατακερτομείσθαι καὶ ἐνεδρεύεσθαι δοκεῖν ὠδυνῶντο.

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo means that providence shows itself by sending deliverance just when things are darkest. The festal season, particularly as its chief characteristic, the living in booths, could not be observed, brought their misery to a climax.

<sup>b</sup> Note the imperfect with its sudden change from the general to the particular.

FLACCUS, 115-119

first fell on one who had destroyed numberless hearths and homes of persons that had done no wrong.

XIV. Such was the unprecedented blow which fell 116 upon Flaccus, carried off like a prisoner in war in the country which he was governing. It was caused, I am convinced, by his treatment of the Jews, whom in his craving for aggrandisement he had resolved to exterminate utterly. We have a clear proof of this also in the time of his arrest,<sup>a</sup> for the Jews were holding then the national feast of the autumn equinox, in which it is the custom of the Jews to live in tents. But nothing at all of the festal proceedings 117 was being carried out. The rulers after suffering deadly and intolerable injuries and outrages were still in prison and their misfortunes were regarded by the commoners as shared by the whole nation, while the special sufferings which each of them experienced individually made them extremely depressed. For 118 painful sensations are apt to double themselves most especially at feast time in persons who are unable to observe the feast, both because they are deprived of the cheerful gaiety which the festal gathering demands and also because they communicate to each other their sorrow—sorrow which in this case <sup>b</sup> laid them prostrate through their powerlessness to find any remedy for their great miseries. They were 119 in this very painful condition oppressed by an overwhelming burden when there came to them while crowded in their houses, because night was falling,<sup>c</sup> some messengers who announced the arrest that had been made. They supposed that it was no true story but something fabricated to try them and were still more pained at what seemed a mockery and a snare.

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "was in possession," i.e. "had fallen."

PHILO

- 120 θορύβου δ' ὄντος κατὰ τὴν πόλιν καὶ τῶν νυκτοφυλάκων ἄνω κάτω διαθεόντων καὶ τινων ἱππέων εἰς τὸ στρατόπεδον καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ στρατοπέδου τάχει συντόνω μετὰ σπουδῆς ἀντεξελαυνόντων, τῷ τοῦ πράγματος ἀήθει κινηθέντες τινὲς προῆλθον ἐκ τῶν οἰκιῶν κατὰ πύστιν τοῦ συμβεβηκότος·
- 121 ἐφαίνετο γὰρ εἶναι τι νεώτερον. ὡς δ' ἦσθοντο τὴν ἀπαγωγὴν καὶ τὸν Φλάκκον ἐντὸς ἀρκύων ἤδη γεγεννημένον, προτείνοντες τὰς χεῖρας εἰς οὐρανὸν ὕμνον καὶ παιᾶνας ἐξῆρχον εἰς τὸν ἔφορον θεὸν τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων πραγμάτων, “ οὐκ ἐφηδόμεθα,” λέγοντες, “ ὦ δέσποτα, τιμωρίας ἐχθροῦ, δεδιδαγμένοι πρὸς τῶν ἱερῶν νόμων ἀνθρωποπαθεῖν· ἀλλὰ σοὶ δικαίως εὐχαριστοῦμεν οἶκτον καὶ ἔλεον ἡμῶν λαβόντι καὶ τὰς συνεχεῖς καὶ ἐπαλλήλους | [535] κακώσεις ἐπικουφίσαντι.” πάννηχοι δὲ διατελέσαντες ἐν ὕμνοις καὶ ᾠδαῖς καὶ ἅμα τῇ ἔω διὰ πυλῶν ἐκχυθέντες ἐπὶ τοὺς πλησίον αἰγιαλοὺς ἀφικνοῦνται—τὰς γὰρ προσευχὰς ἀφήρηντο—κἀν τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ στάντες ἀνεβόησαν ὁμοθυμαδόν·
- 122 “ γῆν καὶ θάλατταν, ἀέρα τε καὶ οὐρανόν, τὰ μέρη τοῦ παντὸς καὶ σύμπαντα τὸν κόσμον, ὦ μέγιστε βασιλεῦ θνητῶν καὶ ἀθανάτων, παρακαλέσοντες εἰς εὐχαριστίαν τὴν σὴν ἤκομεν, οἷς μόνοις ἐνδιδαιτώμεθα, τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα δημιουργεῖται πρὸς ἀνθρώπων ἐληλαμένοι καὶ στερόμενοι πόλεως καὶ τῶν ἐν πόλει δημοσίων καὶ ἰδιωτικῶν περιβόλων, ἀπόλιδες καὶ ἀνέστιοι μόνοι τῶν ὑφ' ἡλίον ἐξ

---

<sup>a</sup> This is the classification natural to the ordinary man, who speaks of what he sees around him, rather than the scientific “four elements.” So of the translators of the LXX

But when a tumult arose in the city and the night- 120 watch were running up and down and horsemen busily riding backwards and forwards at full speed to and from the camp, some of them, stirred by so unusual an event, advanced from their houses to get information of what had occurred. For it was clear that there was some upheaval. And when they 121 learnt of the arrest and that Flaccus was now within the toils, with hands outstretched to heaven they sang hymns and led songs of triumph to God who watches over human affairs. "We do not rejoice, O Lord," they said, "at the punishment meted to an enemy, for we have been taught by the holy laws to have human sympathy. But we justly give thanks to Thee because Thou has taken pity and compassion on us and relieved our unbroken and ceaseless afflictions." All night long they continued to sing 122 hymns and songs of praise and at dawn pouring out through the gates, they made their way to the parts of the beach near at hand, since their meeting-houses had been taken from them, and standing in the most open space cried aloud with one accord "Most 123 Mighty King of mortals and immortals, we have come here to call on earth and sea, and air and heaven,<sup>a</sup> into which the universe is partitioned, and on the whole world, to give Thee thanks. They are our only habitation, expelled as we are from all that men have wrought, robbed of our city and the buildings within its walls, public and private, alone of all men under the sun bereft of home and country through the malig-in Mos. ii. 37, where these same four as here are called τὰ μέρη τῆς φύσεως (where μέρη should not have been translated "elements"). Cf. also Mos. i. 113 and De Som. i. 15, though in the last the phrase ἐξ ὧν συνέστηκε instead of μέρη is nearer to the scientific conception. See also on De Act. 29.

PHILO

124 ἐπιβουλῆς ἄρχοντος γενόμενοι. χρηστὰς ὑπογράφεις ἡμῖν ἐλπίδας καὶ περὶ τῆς τῶν λειπομένων ἐπανορθώσεως, ἥδη ταῖς ἡμετέραις λιταῖς ἀρξάμενος συνεπινεύειν, εἴ γε τὸν κοινὸν ἐχθρὸν τοῦ ἔθνους καὶ τῶν ἐπ' αὐτῷ συμφορῶν ὑφηγητὴν καὶ διδάσκαλον μέγα πνέοντα καὶ οἰηθέντα διὰ ταῦτα εὐδοκιμήσειν ἐξαίφνης καθεῖλες, οὐ πορρωτάτω γενόμενον, ἢν' αἰσθόμενοι δι' ἀκοῆς οἱ κακῶς πεπονθότες ἀμβλύτερον ἡσθῶσι, ἀλλ' ἐγγὺς οὕτωςί, μόνον οὐκ ἐν ὄψει τῶν ἡδικημένων, πρὸς τρανότεραν φαντασίαν τῆς ἐν βραχεῖ καὶ παρ' ἐλπίδας ἐπεξόδου."

125 XV. Τρίτον δ' ἔτι πρὸς τοῖς εἰρημένοις κακείνῳ μοι δοκεῖ θεία προνοία συμβῆναι. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἀναχθεὶς ἀρχομένου χειμῶνος—ἔδει γὰρ αὐτὸν καὶ τῶν ἐν θαλάττῃ φοβερῶν ἀπολαῦσαι τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ παντὸς ἀσεβημάτων ἀναπλήσαντα—μυρία πονηθεὶς μόλις ἦλθεν εἰς Ἰταλίαν, εὐθὺς ἐκδέχονται τὰς ἐπ' αὐτῷ κατηγορίας δύο τῶν ἐχθίστων, Ἰσίδωρος

126 τε καὶ Λάμπων, οἳ πρὸ μικροῦ μὲν τάξιν εἶχον ὑπηκόων δεσπότην καὶ εὐεργέτην καὶ σωτήρα καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ἀνακαλοῦντες, νυνὶ δ' ἀντιδίκων οὐκ ἰσόρροπον ἀλλὰ δυνατωτέραν ἰσχὺν ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος ἐπιδεικνυμένων, οὐ μόνον ἔνεκα τοῦ θαρρεῖν τοῖς δικαίοις, ἀλλ', ὃ δὴ μέγιστον ἦν, ὅτι τὸν πρῦτανιν τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων πραγμάτων ἐχθρὸν

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "wilt restore what is in an inferior condition" or "fallen behind," a sense which λείπομαι sometimes has.

<sup>b</sup> On the common phrase (cf. § 152) signifying sometimes pride and sometimes influence see note on De Virt. 171.

<sup>c</sup> See further on these two App. p. 532.

FLACCUS, 124-126

nancy of a governor. Thou givest also a glimpse of 124 cheering hopes that Thou wilt amend what remains for amendment,<sup>a</sup> in that Thou hast already begun to assent to our prayers. For the common enemy of the nation, under whose leadership and by whose instruction these misfortunes have befallen it, who in his windy pride <sup>b</sup> thought that they would promote him to honour, Thou hast suddenly brought low ; and that not when he was afar off, so that they whom he ill-treated would hear it by report and have less keen pleasure, but just here close at hand almost before the eyes of the wronged to give them a clearer picture of the swift and un hoped-for visitation."

XV. Besides the two circumstances which I have 125 mentioned there is a third which seems to me to have been brought about by divine providence. He had started on his voyage in early winter and endured a multitude of hardships, tasting of the terrors of the sea also, a just fate for one who had filled the elements of the universe with his impious deeds.
When with difficulty he arrived in Italy the charges against him were taken up by two of his worst enemies, Isidorus and Lampo.<sup>c</sup> It was not long since these 126 men had ranked as his subjects and hailed him as their master and benefactor and saviour and the like.
But now they appeared to plead against him with a strength which was not a mere match for his but vastly more powerful.<sup>d</sup> For not merely had they confidence in the justice of their case but their most important advantage was that they saw that he who presided over human affairs was his mortal enemy, <sup>a</sup> Here ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος intensifies δυνατωτέραν and marks the contrast to ἰσόρροπον, "so far from being equal it is more powerful with a lot to spare." See note on De Vit. Cont. 63.

PHILO

- έώρων άσπονδον αυτώ, μέλλοντα σχήμα μέν υποδύεσθαι δικαστοῦ, προνοία τοῦ μή δοκεῖν άκρίτου τινός προκαταγνώσκειν, έργον δ' έπιδείκνυσθαι δυσμενοῦς, πρό κατηγορίας και άπο-λογίας ήδη τή ψυχή κατεγνωκότος και τās άνωτάτω*
- 127 τιμωρίας ώρικότος έπ' αυτώ. χαλεπόν δ' ουδέν ούτως, ώς ύπ' έλαττόνων κρείττους και προς ύπηκόων άρχοντάς ποτε γενομένους κατηγορεῖσθαι, ώσπερ αν ει και δεσπότας ύπ' οικοτρίβων ή άργυρωνήτων.
- 128 XVI. 'Αλλ' ήν, ώς έοικε, τουτο κουφότερον κακόν συγκρινόμενον έτέρω μείζονι. ου γάρ άπλην τινα τάξιν έχοντες ύπηκόων αιφνίδιον έπ-[536] έθεντο ταίς κατηγορίαις | έπαποδυσάμενοι και συμφρονήσαντες, αλλά και τον πλείστον χρόνον τής επιτροπής ήν έπετρόπευσε τής χώρας εκ πάντων ουτοι μάλιστ' αυτώ δι' άπεχθείας έγεγέ-νητο. Λάμπων μέν άσεβείας τής εις Τιβέριον Καίσαρα δίκην σχών και επί διετίαν τριβομένου
- 129 του πράγματος άπειρηκώς. υπερθέσεις γάρ και αναβολάς ό δικαστής έθελοκακών έσκήπτετο βουλόμενος, καν άποφύγη τó έγκλημα, τον γοῦν περι μέλλοντος άδηλου<sup>1</sup> φόβον προς μήκιστον χρόνον επικρεμάσας αυτώ ζωήν οδυνηροτέραn θανάτου
- 130 παρασχεῖν. ειθ' ύστερον και οτε νικαν έδοξεν, εις την ουσίαν έπηρεασθήναι έφασκεν—ήναγκάσθη γάρ γυμνασιαρχειν—, ήτοι τώ γλίσχρος και ανελεύθερος είναι περι τās δαπάνας, προφασιζόμενος τó μή κεκτηθῆσθαι προς τοσαύτην άφθονίαν αναλω-μάτων ικανήν ουσίαν, ή τώ οντι μή κεκτημένος,

<sup>1</sup> mss. άδηλον (also άδολον and άδικον).

who would assume, indeed, the guise of a judge to save himself from appearing to condemn anyone by anticipation and without trial, but in his actions would be revealed as an enemy, who forestalled the accusation and defence by condemning him already in his soul and had fixed his punishment at the uttermost. And no lot is so hard as for superiors to be ac- 127 cused by inferiors and rulers by their former subjects ; as well might masters be accused by the slaves whom they have bred in their house or purchased with their money.

XVI. But this as we shall see was a lighter evil 128 compared with another still greater. For they were not simply in the position of subjects who suddenly attacked him and by mutual agreement addressed themselves to accusing him. On the contrary, throughout the greater part of his time of governorship of the country, they were above all others his bitterest enemies. Lampo had been put on his trial for impiety to Tiberius Caesar and as the trial had dragged on for two years he had broken down under it. For the ill-will of his judge had concocted post- 129 ponements and delays, as he wished, even if he was acquitted on the charge, to keep hanging over him for as long as possible the fear of the uncertain future, and so render his life more painful than death. Afterwards when he appeared to have won his case 130 he declared that he was the victim of an outrageous attack upon his property. For he was forced to act as gymnasiarch and protested that he had not sufficient means to meet the great expenses of the office.<sup>a</sup> The excuse may be due to meanness and illiberality in spending his money, or it may be that

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 535.

PHILO

- ἀλλὰ πρὶν μὲν εἰς ἀπόπειραν ἔλθειν ἐπιφάσκων τὸν πάνυ πλούσιον, ἐν δὲ τῇ δοκιμασίᾳ μὴ φανείς ἄγαν πολυχρήματος ἄνθρωπος, ὅσα ἐκτήσατο σχεδὸν
- 131 ἅπαντα ἐξ ἀδικημάτων περιποιησάμενος· προσ-εστὼς γὰρ τοῖς ἡγεμόσιν, ὅποτε δικάζοιεν,<sup>1</sup> ὑπ-εμνηματίζετο τὰς δίκας εἰσάγων ὡς ἔχων τάξιν,<sup>2</sup> εἶτα τὰ μὲν ἀπήλειπεν ἢ παρήει ἐκῶν, τὰ δ' οὐ λεχθέντα προσενέταπτεν, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ ὑψηλ-λάττετο μεταποιῶν καὶ μετατιθεῖς καὶ στρέφων ἄνω κάτω τὰ γράμματα, κατὰ συλλαβὴν, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ κεραίαν ἐκάστην ἀργυρολογῶν ὁ γραμματο-
- 132 κύφων· ὃν πολλάκις ὁ δῆμος ἅπας ὁμοθυμαδὸν εὐθυβόλως καὶ εὐσκόπως καλαμοσφάκτην ἐξεκήρυξεν, οἷς ἔγραφε μυρίους [καὶ] ἀνελόντα καὶ ζῶντας ἀθλιωτέρους τῶν ἀποθανόντων ἀπεργασά-μενον, οἱ δυνάμενοι νικᾶν καὶ περιουσιάζειν ἤτταν καὶ πενίαν ἀδικωτάτην ὑπέμειναν, ὠνησαμένων ἀμφοτέρα τῶν ἐχθρῶν παρὰ τοῦ τὰς ἀλλοτρίας
- 133 οὐσίας ἐπευωνίζοντος καὶ πιπράσκοντος. ἀμήχανον μὲν γὰρ ἦν τοὺς ἡγεμόνας τοσαύτης χώρας ἐπιτροπεύοντας, αἰεὶ<sup>3</sup> καινοτέρων ἐπεισερόντων ἰδιω-τικῶν τε καὶ δημοσίων πραγμάτων, ἀπάντων μεμνήσθαι, καὶ ταῦτα οὐ δικάζοντας μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ λογισμοὺς τῶν προσόδων καὶ δασμῶν λαμ-βάνοντας, ὧν ἡ ἐξέτασις τὸν πλείονα τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ
- 134 χρόνον ἀνήλισκεν. ὁ δὲ φυλάττειν ἐπιτραπείς τῇν

<sup>1</sup> mss. δικάζοντο.

<sup>2</sup> This can hardly give the required sense, and even with the addition of τοίανδε (as in A) is rather otiose. Mangey suggested ὡς ἔχριεν τάξιν ("as they came in order"). The suggestion εἰσαγωγῆς for εἰσάγων ὡς made by Mr. Box in Class. Quarterly 1935 seems admirable, if it can be fitted in with the functions here described. On this see App. p. 536.

he really had not the means, and though before the test he had pretended to be quite rich he was shown under examination to be not very wealthy, owning in fact hardly anything beyond the proceeds of his iniquitous deeds.<sup>a</sup> For he stood beside the governors 131 when they were giving judgement, and took the minutes of the cases which he introduced in virtue of this position. He would then expunge some of the evidence or deliberately pass it over and sometimes insert statements which had not been made, sometimes, too, tamper with the documents by remodelling and rearranging them and turning them upside-down, while he picked up money at every syllable, or rather at every jot and tittle, like the paper-porer that he was. Frequently the whole 132 people, truly and appropriately, denounced him as a pen-murderer, whose writings had done multitudes to death and made more miserable than the dead multitudes of the living, who, when they might have won their case and enjoyed abundance, had suffered a defeat and poverty utterly undeserved, both purchased by their enemies from this cheapjack and vendor of other people's property. For it was im- 133 possible that the governors who had the management of so large a territory should keep in mind the perpetual flood of new cases private and public, particularly as they not only acted as judges but received the calculations of revenues and tributes, the scrutiny of which took up the greater part of the year. But 134 Lampo, who was commissioned to guard the most <sup>a</sup> Philo means that his attempt to avoid the office was discreditable on either supposition. Either he was rich and mean or if he was not rich he had pretended to be rich.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. διὰ.

PHILO

ἀναγκαιοτάτην παρακαταθήκην, τὰ δίκαια καὶ τὰς ἐπ' αὐτοῖς ὀσιωτάτας γνώμας, ἐνεπορεύετο τὴν λήθην τῶν δικαστῶν, τοὺς μὲν νικᾶν ὀφείλοντας γράφων ἐν ἡττημένοις, τοὺς δ' ἡττᾶσθαι μετὰ τὸν ἐπάρατον μισθὸν ἢ κυριώτερον εἰπεῖν τὸ μίσθωμα ἐν νενικηκόσιν.

[537]

135

XVII. | Ὁ μὲν δὴ Λάμπων τοιοῦτος ὢν ἐφειστήκει κατήγορος, ὁ δ' Ἰσίδωρος οὐκ ἀποδέων τὴν μοχθηρίαν, ἄνθρωπος ὀχλικός, δημοκόπος, ταραττειν καὶ συγχέειν πράγματα μεμελετηκῶς, ἐχθρὸς εἰρήνῃ καὶ εὐσταθείᾳ, στάσεις καὶ θορύβους κατασκευάσαι μὲν οὐκ ὄντας, γενομένους δὲ συγκροτῆσαι καὶ συναυξῆσαι δεινός, ὄχλον ἀσύντακτον καὶ πεφορημένον ἐκ μιγάδων καὶ συγκλύδων ἡρμοσμένον περὶ αὐτὸν ἔχειν ἐσπουδακῶς, ὃς εἰς μοίρας καθάπερ τινὰς συμμορίας διανενέμηται.

136 θίασοι κατὰ τὴν πόλιν εἰσὶ πολυάνθρωποι, ὧν κατάρχει τῆς κοινωνίας οὐδὲν ὑγιές, ἀλλ' ἄκρατος καὶ μέθη καὶ παροινία καὶ ἡ τούτων ἔκγονος ὕβρις· σύνοδοι καὶ κλῖναι προσονομάζονται ὑπὸ τῶν

137 ἐγχωρίων. ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς θιάσοις ἢ τοῖς πλείστοις ὁ Ἰσίδωρος τὰ πρωτεῖα φέρεται καὶ λέγεται ὁ συμποσίαρχος,<sup>1</sup> ὁ κλινάρχης, ὁ ταραξίπολις. εἶτα ὅταν τι βουλευθῆ διαπράξασθαι τῶν ἀλυσιτελῶν, ἀφ' ἐνὸς συνθήματος ἀθρόως συνέρχονται καὶ τὸ

138 κελευσθὲν λέγουσι καὶ δρῶσι. καὶ ποτε τῷ Φλάκκῳ δυσχεράνας, ὅτι δόξας παρ' αὐτῷ τις εἶναι κατ' ἀρχὰς οὐκέθ' ὁμοίως αὐθις ἐσπουδάζετο, μισθοδοτήσας τοὺς ἀλειφοβίους καὶ φωνασκεῖν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ποσίαρχος.

vital trust, justice and the verdicts based with all sanctity on justice, traded on the short memory of the judges and recorded defeat for those who should have had victory and for those who should have been defeated a victory in return for the accursed fee, better described as hire, which he received.

XVII. Such was the Lampo who appeared against 135 Flaccus as an accuser. And with him was Isidorus nothing behind him in villainy, a mob courter, popularity hunter, practised in producing disturbance and confusion, a foe to peace and tranquillity, an adept at creating factions and tumults where they do not exist and organizing and fostering them when made, ever at pains to keep in contact with him an irregular and unstable horde of promiscuous, ill-assorted people, divided up into sections, or what might be called syndicates.

In the city there are clubs 136 with a large membership, whose fellowship is founded on no sound principle but on strong liquor and drunkenness and sottish carousing and their offspring, wantonness. "Synods" and "divans"<sup>a</sup> are the particular names given to them by the people of the country. In all or most of the 137 clubs Isidorus held the first place and was called the feast ruler or divan master and state embroiderer. Then when he wished to get some worthless project carried out, a single call brought them together in a body and they said and did what they were bidden. And at one time being annoyed with Flaccus, because, 138 whereas at first he seemed to be regarded by him as a person of some importance, he afterwards found himself no longer in the same favour, he hired the <sup>a</sup> As to whether this term implies a religious association or merely one for banqueting, see App. p. 536.

PHILO

- εἰωθότας, οἱ τὰς καταβολήσεις ὡσπερ ἐπ' ἀγορᾶς πιπράσκουσι τοῖς ἔχουσιν ὠνητικῶς, παρακελεύει 139 συνελθεῖν εἰς τὸ γυμνάσιον. οἱ δὲ πληρώσαντες αὐτὸ τοῦ Φλάκκου ἀπ' οὐδεμιᾶς προφάσεως κατη-γόρουν, ἀγένητα πλάττοντες ἐγκλήματα καὶ ψευδεῖς ῥήσεις δι' ἀναπαίστων καὶ μακρὰς συνείροντες, ὡς καταπεπλήχθαι μὴ μόνον Φλάκκον ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἐπὶ τῷ παραλόγῳ καί, ὅπερ ἦν, συμβαλεῖν, ὅτι πάντως ἐστὶ τις ᾧ χαρίζονται, μήτ' αὐτοὶ τι πεπονθότες ἀνήκεστον μήτε τὴν ἄλλην πόλιν εὐ 140 εἰδότες πλημμεληθεῖσαν. ἔπειτα βουλευομένοις ἔδοξε συλλαβεῖν τινὰς καὶ τὴν αἰτίαν τῆς ἀκρίτου καὶ αἰφνιδίουμανίας καὶ λύττης πυνθάνεσθαι. οἱ δὲ συλληφθέντες ἄνευ βασάνων ὁμολογοῦσι τάληθές, ἅμα καὶ τὰς διὰ τῶν ἔργων πίστει ἐφαρμόζοντες, τὸν διομολογηθέντα μισθόν, τὸν ἤδη δεδομένον, τὸν καθ' ὑποσχέσεις ὕστερον δοθησόμενον, τοὺς ἐπὶ τὴν διανομὴν αἰρεθέντας ὡς ἂν ἡγεμόνας τῆς στάσεως, τὸν τόπον, τὸν καιρόν, ἐν ᾧ γέγονεν ἡ 141 δωροδοκία. πάντων δ', ὡς εἰκός, ἀγανακτοῦντων καὶ τῆς πόλεως χαλεπῶς φερούσης ἐπὶ τῷ τὴν ἐνίων ἀγνωμοσύνην προσαναμάττεσθαι τοῦνομι' αὐτῆς, ἔδοξε τὸ καθαρῶτατον τοῦ δήμου μεταπεμψαμένῳ<sup>1</sup> τῇ ὕστεραία παραγαγεῖν τοὺς τὸν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μεταπεμψάμενον.

<sup>a</sup> Or "touts" (Box). See App. p. 537.

<sup>b</sup> The word φωνασκεῖν, which properly means "exercising" (rather than as L. & S. "training") the voice, does not seem to carry in itself any unfavourable sense. It is applied by Demosthenes to Aeschines in several places (e.g. De Cor. 308 and De Fal. Leg. 336), but that Aeschines had a fine voice is recognized. Cf. also Plato, Legg. 665 f.

<sup>c</sup> Or possibly literally "in anapaests." See App. p. 537.

beggarly lot<sup>a</sup> who regularly served him as vocalists,<sup>b</sup> the people who sell their yells as in a market to willing purchasers, and ordered them to come to the gymnasium. They filled the building and launched 139 accusations against Flaccus with no foundation, inventing against him things which had never happened and spinning long lying screeds of ribald doggerel,<sup>c</sup> so that not only Flaccus but everyone else was utterly astonished at so unexpected an onset and conjectured, as indeed was the case, that there was surely someone whom they wanted to gratify and that they had never themselves suffered any injury past mending nor had real knowledge of any offence<sup>d</sup> committed 140 against the rest of the State. Then on deliberation the authorities decided to arrest some and ascertain the cause of so reckless and sudden an outburst of insanity. The persons arrested without being put to the question confessed the truth and also added the proofs supplied by the facts, the payment agreed upon, both what had already been given and what was to be given afterwards according to the promises; the persons chosen as ringleaders of the agitation to distribute the money, the place and occasion where and when the act of bribery had taken place. And 141 as everyone was naturally indignant and the city felt annoyed that the senselessness of some persons should also set its stamp<sup>e</sup> upon her name, he decided to summon the most highly respectable part of the public on the morrow and set the dispensers of the

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "knew well that no offence," etc., though in that case the second μήτε is wrongly used.

<sup>e</sup> The subject of the infinitive is probably τοῦνομ', not ἀγνωμοσύνην, but see App. p. 538. The point of προσ- is perhaps that the loss of reputation was an addition to the actual inconvenience caused by the uproar.

PHILO

μισθὸν ἐπινείμαντας, ἵνα καὶ τὸν Ἰσίδωρον ἀπελέγξῃ καὶ ἀπολογήσῃται περὶ τῆς αὐτοῦ πολιτείας ὡς ἀδίκως διαβληθεῖς. αἰσθόμενοι δὲ [538] τῆς παραγγελίας | οὐχ οἱ ἐν τέλει μόνον ἦκον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ σύμπασα πόλις, ἔξω τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀπ-142 ελέγχεσθαι μέρους ἐπὶ τῷ μεμισθοδοτηῆσθαι. καὶ οἱ μὲν ὑπηρετήσαντες τὴν καλὴν ταύτην ὑπηρεσίαν ἀναβιβασθέντες, ἵνα μετέωροι καὶ ἐμφανεῖς εἶεν καὶ γνωρίζοντο πρὸς ἀπάντων, ἤλεγχον τὸν Ἰσίδωρον ὡς αἴτιον τῶν θορύβων καὶ τῶν βλασφημιῶν τῶν εἰς Φλάκκον γενομένων, οὐκ ὀλίγω πλήθει παρασχόντα καὶ ἀργύριον καὶ οἶνον δι'
 143 αὐτόν.<sup>1</sup> “ἐπεὶ πόθεν” ἔφασκον “ἡμῖν ἀφθονία τοσαύτη; πένητές ἐσμεν καὶ μόλις τοῦφήμερον εἰς αὐτὰ τὰ ἀναγκαῖα πορίζειν δυνάμεθα. τί δὲ καὶ δεινὸν ἐπεπόνθειμεν ὑπὸ τοῦ ἡγεμόνος, ὡς βιασθῆναι μνησικακεῖν; ἀλλ’ ὁ πάντων αἴτιος καὶ δημιουργὸς ἐκεῖνος, αἰεὶ τοῖς εὖ πράττουσι βασκαί-144 ων καὶ εὐνόμῳ καταστάσει πολέμιος.” ἃ γνωρίζοντες οἱ παρατυγχάνοντες—τύποι γὰρ τινες ἦσαν ἀρίδηλοι καὶ χαρακτήρες τὰ λεγόμενα τῆς τοῦ κατηγορουμένου προαιρέσεως—ἀνεβίων, οἱ μὲν ἀτιμοῦν, οἱ δὲ φυγαδεύειν, οἱ δ’ αἶρειν· πλείους δ’ ἦσαν οὗτοι· πρὸς οὓς καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι μετεβάλλοντο, ὡς ἅπαντας ὁμοθυμαδὸν μιᾷ φωνῇ κεκραγῆναι, κτείνειν τὸν κοινὸν λυμεῶνα, τὸν ἀφ’ οὗ παρῆλθε

<sup>1</sup> So three mss. of the four. But the sense “on account of him,” i.e. Flaccus, is very poor, and I have translated the reading of S δι’ αὐτῶν. A possible alternative would be παρασχόντες (αὐτόν = Isidorus).

<sup>a</sup> Something like this must be the meaning of διακύπτω

FLACCUS, 141-144

payment before them so that he might both expose Isidorus and defend his own administration against the aspersions unjustly cast upon him. But on hearing the summons there came not only persons in high position but the whole city except that part whose acceptance of payment was to be exposed. And those who had served in this glorious capacity, being set on a platform so that in this conspicuous elevation they might be recognized by all, gave proof that Isidorus was responsible for the tumults and slanders against Flaccus and had employed them to supply both money and wine to no small number of people. "Whence," they asked, "could we have had all this money to squander? We are poor people scarcely able to provide the daily wage needed to purchase absolute necessities. What terrible grievance had we suffered from the governor that we should be compelled to cherish a grudge against him? No! The author and creator of all these things is that Isidorus ever envious of the prosperous and the foe of law-abiding tranquillity." The audience, recognizing the truth of this, since the statement clearly represented and indicated the motives and intention of the accused, shouted out some for disfranchisement, some for banishment, some for death. These last were the majority and the rest came over and joined them so that they all cried out with one heart and voice, "Slay the ruiner of all alike, who ever since he came to the front and wormed his way<sup>a</sup> into state here and it is a fairly natural development from the original meaning of "stoop through." But there is little authority for such a development, at any rate in Philo. He uses the word at least fourteen times, but never except here in any other sense than to look or peer into, suggesting minute examination.

PHILO

- καὶ διέκυψεν ἐπὶ τὰ κοινά, μηδὲν μέρος τῆς πόλεως 145 ἄνοσον εἶσαντα. καὶ ὁ μὲν ἔνεκα τοῦ συνειδότητος ἀπεδίδρασκε σύλληψιν εὐλαβηθείς· ὁ δὲ Φλάκκος οὐδὲν ἐπ' αὐτῷ περιειργάζετο, νομίσας ἐκποδῶν ἔκουσίῳ γνώμῃ γεγονότος ἀστασίαστα καὶ ἀνερίθευτα τὰ κατὰ τὴν πόλιν ἔσεσθαι.
- 146 XVIII. Ταῦτ' ἐμήκυνα, οὐχ ὑπὲρ τοῦ παλαιῶν ἀπομνημονεύειν ἀδικημάτων, ἀλλὰ τεθαυμακῶς τὴν ἔφορον τῶν ἀνθρωπέων δίκην, ὅτι οἱ ἐξ ἀρχῆς γενόμενοι δυσμενεῖς αὐτῷ καὶ οἷς ἐκ πάντων ἀπηχ-θάνετο καὶ ἐκκληρώσαντο τὴν ἐπ' αὐτῷ κατηγορίαν εἰς ἀνίας ὑπερβολήν· οὐ γὰρ οὕτως ἐστὶ δεινὸν τὸ ἐγκαλεῖσθαι ὡς τὸ πρὸς ὁμολογουμένων ἐχθρῶν.
- 147 ὁ δ' οὐ κατηγορήθη μόνον, ἀρχῶν πρὸς ὑπηκόων καὶ ὑπὸ δυσμενῶν ἀεὶ γενομένων ὁ πρὸ μικροῦ κύριος ὢν τῆς ἐκατέρου ζωῆς, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνὰ κράτος ἠλίσκετο, διπλοῦν ἐκδεχόμενος κακόν, τὸ μεθ' ἡττης γελαῖσθαι πρὸς ἐχθρῶν ἐφηδομένων, ὃ καὶ θανάτου χεῖρόν ἐστι τοῖς εὖ φρονούσιν.
- 148 εἰτά τις εὐφορία γίνεται κακοπραγιῶν αὐτῷ· τῆς τε γὰρ οὐσίας ἀπάσης εὐθὺς ἐξίσταται, ἣν τε παρὰ γονέων ἐκληρονόμησε καὶ ἦν αὐτὸς ἐκτήσατο, φιλόκοσμος ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα γεγονώς. οὐ γὰρ ὡς [539] | ἐνίων πολυχρημάτων ὁ πλοῦτος ἀργὸς ἦν ὕλη, πάντα δ' ἐξητασμένα πρὸς τὸ περιέργον, ἐκπώματα, ἐσθῆτες, στρωμαί, ἔπιπλα, τᾶλλα ὅσα οἰκίας κό-
- 149 σμος, ἔκλογα πάντα· καὶ πρὸς τούτοις ἡ οἰκετικὴ θεραπεία, ἀριστίνδην ἐπικριθεῖσα κατὰ τε τὰς τῶν σωμάτων εὐμορφίας ὁμοῦ καὶ εὐεξίας καὶ κατὰ τὸ ἄπταιστον ἐν τῷ χρειώδει τῶν ὑψηρεσιῶν· ἐφ'

FLACCUS, 144-149

affairs, has let no part of the city remain untainted." Fearing arrest, Isidorus fled conscious-stricken, but 145 Flaccus took no trouble about him, thinking that, since he was out of the way by his own freewill, the life of the city could now go on undisturbed by faction and intrigue.

XVIII. I have described these events at length, 146 not in order to recall long-past iniquities but to extol the justice which watches over human affairs, because, to those who had been hostile to him from the first and of all his foes the most bitter it also fell to conduct his arraignment and so magnify his afflictions to the uttermost. For arraignment is not by itself so grievous as when it is brought by admitted foes. Not only was he accused, a ruler by his subjects, a 147 potentate who but now had the life of both in his hands by inveterate enemies, but he was also condemned, suffering thereby a mighty twofold blow in that his fall was coupled with the laughter of gloat-ing enemies, which to men of good sense is worse even than death.

Then there came to 148 him a rich harvest of misfortunes. He was at once deprived of all his property, both what he inherited from his parents and what he acquired himself. For his taste for things ornamental was quite exceptional. Wealth was not with him as it is with some rich men inert matter, but everything had been carefully selected for its elaborate workmanship, his cups, clothes, coverlets, utensils and all the other ornaments of the house, all were of the choicest: besides these 149 the staff of household slaves had been picked as the best for comeliness of form and fine condition and the faultless way in which they ministered to the needs of their master. For whatever tasks they were ὧν γὰρ ἦσαν ἕκαστοι τεταγμένοι, διέφερον, ὡς ἢ 150 πρῶτοι νομίζεσθαι τῶν τὰ αὐτὰ ἐπιτηδευόντων ἢ μηδενὸς δεύτεροι τὸ παράπαν. ἐναργῆς δὲ πίστις τὸ μυρίων δημοπράτων γενομένων οὐσιῶν, αἱ τῶν κατακρίτων ἦσαν, μόνην τὴν τοῦ Φλάκκου ταμειυ-θῆναι τῷ αὐτοκράτορι, δίχα τινῶν ὀλίγων, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ παραβιβασθῆναι τὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς οὕτως ἑαλωκόσι 151 τεθέντα νόμον. μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἀφαίρεσιν τῆς οὐσίας κατέγνωστο αὐτοῦ φυγή, καὶ ἐξ ἀπάσης μὲν ἡλαύ-νετο τῆς ἠπείρου—τὸ δ' ἐστὶ μείζον καὶ ἄμεινον τμήμα τῆς οἰκουμένης—, ἐξ ἀπάσης δὲ νήσου τῶν εὐδαιμόνων. ἐμέλλησε γὰρ εἰς τὴν λυπροτάτην τῶν ἐν Αἰγαίῳ—Γύαρα καλεῖται—διώκεσθαι, μὴ παρακλήτῳ χρησάμενος Λεπίδῳ, δι' ὃν ἀνθυπηλ-152 λάξατο Γυάρων Ἄνδρον ἐγγυτάτῳ κειμένην. εἰτ' ἐστέλλετο τὴν ἀπὸ Ῥώμης ἄχρι Βρεντεσίου πάλιν ὁδόν, ἣν καὶ πρὸ ὀλίγων ἐτῶν ἐστείλατο, καθ' ὃν καιρὸν κεχειροτόνητο τῆς Αἰγύπτου καὶ τῆς ὁμόρου Λιβύης ἐπίτροπος, ἵν' αἱ τότε θεασάμεναι πόλεις αὐτὸν μέγα πνέοντα καὶ τὸν ὄγκον τῆς εὐτυχίας ἐπιδεικνύμενον πάλιν θεάσωνται μεστὸν ἀτιμίας.

PHILO

 153 ὁ δὲ δακτυλοδεικτούμενος καὶ ὄνειδιζόμενος τῆς ἀθροῆς μεταβολῆς πιέζεται βαρυτέρας ἀνίας, αἰεὶ καινουμένης<sup>1</sup> καὶ ζωπυρουμένης αὐτῷ τῆς συμφορᾶς νεωτέρων <κακῶν> προσθήκαις, ἃ καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καινουμένης.

<sup>a</sup> For Gyara or Gyaros as the proverbial place for “deportatio” see Mayor’s note on Juv. i. 73 “aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris et carcere dignum.”

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps “and reproached for the complete (or overwhelming) change.” My only objections to this are that I do not know what authority there is for this genitive after ὄνειδίζω, and the “complete change” is hardly a matter for severally appointed to do they excelled in, so that they were held to stand either first among those who performed the same functions or certainly second to none. A clear proof of this is that while a vast number of 150 properties belonging to condemned persons were sold by public auction, that of Flaccus alone was reserved for the emperor, a few articles only being excepted so as not to run counter to the law enacted about persons convicted on these grounds. And when his 151 property had been taken from him he was sentenced to banishment and expelled not only from the whole continent, which is the larger and better section of the habitable world, but also from every one of the islands in which life can prosper. For he was to be exiled to the most miserable of the Aegean islands, called Gyara,<sup>a</sup> had he not found an intercessor in Lepidus who enabled him to exchange Gyara for Andros, the island which lies nearest to it. He then again 152 travelled along the road from Rome to Brundisium which he had travelled a few years before at the time when he had been appointed a governor of Egypt and its neighbour Libya, so that the cities which then beheld him puffed with pride, parading the grandeur of his good fortune, might once more behold him covered with dishonour instead. As fingers pointed 153 at him and reproaches poured upon him he was oppressed by the heavier afflictions caused by the change which had overwhelmed him,<sup>b</sup> for his misery was ever being renewed and rekindled by the accession of fresh troubles which also forcibly brought back, reproaches, which I should suppose were pointed against real or supposed misdeeds. If the translation is right the meaning is that the finger-pointing and reproaches affected him comparatively little, because the sense of ruin occupied his mind.

PHILO

νόσοις ὑποτροπιάζειν ἀναγκάζει<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὰς τῶν ἀρχαίων κακοπραγιῶν ὑπομνήσεις, αἱ τέως ἔδοξαν ἡμαυρῶσθαι.

- 154 XIX. Περαιωσάμενος δὲ τὸν Ἴόνιον κόλπον ἔπλει τὴν ἄχρι Κορίνθου θάλατταν, ταῖς παράλοις τῶν ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ πόλεων θεῶν γινόμενος κατὰ πύστιν τῆς αἰφνιδίου μεταβολῆς· ὅποτε γὰρ ἀποβαίῃ τῆς νεώς, συνέθεον οἱ μὲν μοχθηροὶ τὰς φύσεις ἐθελοκακοῦντες, οἱ δ' ἄλλοι συναλγήσοντες, οἷς
- 155 ἔθος ταῖς ἐτέρων τύχαις σωφρονίζεσθαι. διελθὼν δ' ἀπὸ Λεχαιῶν τὸν Ἴσθμόν εἰς τὴν ἀντιπέραν θάλατταν καὶ καταβὰς εἰς Κεγχρεάς, τὸ Κορίνθιον ἐπίνειον, ἀναγκάζεται πρὸς τῶν φυλάκων ἀναχώρησιν οὐδ' ἠντιναοῦν ἐνδιδόντων εὐθύς ἐπιβὰς
- [540] βραχείας ὀλκάδος | ἀνάγεσθαι καὶ πνεύματος ἐναντίου καταρραγέντος μυρία ταλαιπωρηθεὶς μόλις
- 156 ἄχρι τοῦ Πειραιῶς κατασύρεται. λήξαντος δὲ τοῦ χειμῶνος, παραμειψάμενος τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἄχρι τῆς Σουνιάδος ἄκρας τὰς ἐξῆς λοιπὸν ἐπεραιούτο νήσους, τὴν Ἑλένην, τὴν Κίαν, τὴν Κύθνον, τὰς ἄλλας ὅσαι κεῖνται στοιχηδὸν ἐξῆς μέχρι τῆς ἐφ' ἣν τελευταίαν ἐλθεῖν ἔδει, τὴν Ἀνδριῶν.
- 157 ἣν πόρρωθεν ἰδὼν ὁ κακοδαίμων δακρύων τινὰ

<sup>1</sup> Mangey suggested ὑποτροπιαζούσαις ἀνάγει which Box has adopted. See note a.

<sup>a</sup> Literally "which force the recollections to recur." The whole sentence is rather vague and wordy, but I see little or no difficulty in the text, whereas Mangey's would give a difficult order in ἐν ταῖς νόσοις ὑποτροπ. for ἐν ταῖς ὑ. ν. ὑποτροπιάζω is a medical term which can be applied to the like symptoms recurring in sickness, recollections of past mishaps which seemed for a while to have been dulled.<sup>a</sup>

XIX. Having passed through the Ionian Gulf he sailed upon the sea which extends to Corinth, a spectacle to the Peloponnesian cities on the seaboard when they heard of his sudden change of fortune. For whenever he disembarked the people flocked thither, the baser natures out of malice, the rest, whose way is to find lessons of wisdom in the fate of others, to sympathize. And crossing the Isthmus from Lechaëum to the opposite coast and coming down to Cenchreae, the port of Corinth, he was forced by his guards, who refused him any kind of intermission, to embark at once on a small merchant vessel and put to sea, where under the violence of a contrary wind he suffered a thousand discomforts and only with difficulty arrived storm-tossed<sup>b</sup> at the Peiræus. When the tempest ceased he coasted along Attica to Cape Sunium and then continued his journey along the series of islands, namely Helene, Cia, Cythnus and the rest, which lie in a row one after the other, to that which was to be the end of his journey, the island of the Andrians.

When he saw it afar off the miserable man let a stream of tears pour disease which recurs as in § 182, to the things (i.e. symptoms) which recur in diseases as here, and to the patient who relapses into his old disease (ἐπὶ τὴν ἀρχαίαν ὑποτροπιάσας νόσον) as in De Mig. 150. The only slight difficulty is that καί, which brings out that new misfortunes remind us of the old, besides the actual misery which they give, should come before ὑποτροπ. ἀναγκ. instead of after it. But I do not think that Philo is very particular where he places his καί.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "kept being swept down," a phrase which would naturally suggest a rapid passage, the reverse of μόλις. Here "was swept about till he reached Peiræus."

PHILO

φορὰν ὡσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς ἐξέχει κατὰ τῶν παρειῶν καὶ τὰ στέρνα πλήξας, πικρότατα ἀνοιμώξας, “ ἄνδρες,” εἶπεν, “ οἱ φύλακές μου καὶ προπομποί, καλήν γε χώραν Ἄνδρον, οὐκ εὐτυχῆ νῆσον, τῆς 158 εὐδαίμονος Ἰταλίας ἀνθυπαλλάττομαι, Φλάκκος, ὁ γεννηθεὶς μὲν καὶ τραφεὶς καὶ παιδευθεὶς ἐν τῇ ἡγεμονίδι Ῥώμῃ, συμφοιτητῆς δὲ καὶ συμβιωτῆς γενόμενος τῶν θυγατριδῶν τοῦ Σεβαστοῦ, κριθεὶς δὲ τῶν πρώτων φίλων παρὰ Τιβεριῷ Καίσαρι καὶ 159 ἕξαετιαν ἐπιτραπεῖς. τίς ἢ τοσαύτη μεταβολή; νῦξ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, καθάπερ ἐκλείψεως γενομένης, τὸν ἐμὸν ἐπέσχηκε βίον. τὴν νησίδα ταύτην τί φῶ; πότερον φυγαδευτήριον ἐμὸν ἢ πατρίδα καινήν,<sup>1</sup> ὑπόδρομον καὶ καταφυγὴν ἀτυχῆ; τάφος ἂν εἴη τὸ κυριώτατον αὐτῆς ὄνομα. στέλλομαι γὰρ ὁ κακοδαίμων ἐγὼ τρόπον τινὰ νεκροφορῶν ἐμαντὸν ὡσπερ εἰς ἡρίον· ἢ γὰρ ταῖς ἀνίαις τὴν ἀθλίαν ζωὴν ἀπορρήξω ἢ, κὰν ἐπιβιώσαις δυνηθῶ, τὸν μακρὸν 160 καὶ σὺν αἰσθήσει θάνατον ἐκδέξομαι.” καὶ ὁ μὲν τοιαῦτα ἀπωδύρετο. τῆς δὲ νεὼς τῷ λιμένι προσ-σχούσης, ἀπέβαινε πᾶς εἰς τοῦδαφος νεύων, ὡσπερ οἱ θλιβόμενοι πρὸς ἄχθους βαρυτάτου, τὸν αὐχένα ταῖς συμφοραῖς πιεζόμενος, οὐδ’ ὅσον ἀνακύψαι σθένων ἢ μὴ τολμῶν διὰ τοὺς συναντῶντας καὶ τοὺς ἐπὶ θέαν ἦκοντας, οἱ παρ’ ἐκάτερα τῆς ὁδοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κενήν.

<sup>a</sup> “ Sons of daughters,” i.e. the sons of Julia by her second husband M. Agrippa. These were C. Caesar, L. Caesar and Agrippa Postumus, all of whom died young. As the eldest would have been 58 at the time of Flaccus’s banishment, down his cheeks as from a fountain and smiting his breast with bitter wailing cried " Oh my guards and escort, it is for this fine land of Andros, this unblest island that I exchange happy Italy, I, Flaccus, 158 who was born and reared and educated in sovereign Rome, the school-mate and familiar associate of the grandsons<sup>a</sup> of Augustus, chosen at the court of Tiberius to be among his foremost friends, entrusted for six years with the charge of Egypt the greatest of his possessions? This great reversal what does it 159 mean? A night in daytime as in an eclipse has taken possession of my life. This petty island what shall I call it? My home of exile,<sup>b</sup> or a new fatherland, a hapless haven and refuge? A tomb would be its truest name, for as I journey in my misery it is as though I were bearing the corpse that is myself to a sepulchre. For either through my afflictions I shall break the thread of my miserable life, or even, if I am able to survive die a long drawn-out death in which consciousness still lives." In such wise did 160 he lament and when the ship put in at the haven he got out with his whole body bowing down to the ground, as people do under the pressure of an exceedingly heavy load, his neck over-weighted with his misfortunes, lacking either the strength even to lift his head, or else the courage to face those who met him and came to gaze at him as they stood in and the youngest 50, we get a hint of Flaccus's age which is not, I think, found elsewhere.

<sup>b</sup> So perhaps rather than "city of refuge," and so avoid the tautology with καταφυγήν. Elsewhere Philo uses the word only in reproducing the LXX of Num. xxxv. 12, etc., for the "Cities of Refuge." But in dealing with φυγή he passes very easily from refuge to banishment, and the Cities themselves are regarded as places of exile in De Fug. 100 f.

PHILO

- 161 προεισηγήκεσαν. οἱ δὲ παραπέμφαντες αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὸν δῆμον ἀγαγόντες τῶν Ἀνδρίων ἐπεδείξαντο πᾶσι, μάρτυρας ποιούμενοι τῆς εἰς τὴν
- 162 νῆσον ἀφίξεως τοῦ φυγάδος. καὶ οἱ μὲν τὴν διακονίαν ἐκπλήσαντες ἀπήεσαν· τῷ δὲ Φλάκκῳ μηδεμίαν ὄψιν οἰκείαν ἔτι θεωμένῳ τὸ πάθος ἐκαινοῦτο τρανότερον φαντασίαις ἐναργεστέραις· καὶ τὴν ἐν κύκλῳ κατανοοῦντι πολλὴν ἐρημίαν, ἧς μέσος ἀπειλήπτο, κουφότερον ἐδόκει κακὸν ἢ ἐν τῇ πατρίδι βίαιος ἀναίρεσις, μᾶλλον δὲ συγκρίσει
- [541] τῶν παρόντων ἀσπαστὸν ἀγαθόν. | οὕτως ἐσφάδαζεν, ὡς μηδὲν τῶν μεμνηνόντων διαφέρειν· ἐπήδα πολλάκις ἄνω κάτω διαθέων, τὰς χεῖρας συνεκρότει, τοὺς μηροὺς ἔπαιε, κατέβαλεν εἰς τοῦδαφος ἑαυτόν,
- 163 ἐξεφώνει πολλάκις· “ ἐγὼ Φλάκκος εἰμί, ὁ πρὸ μικροῦ τῆς μεγαλοπόλεως ἢ πολυπόλεως Ἀλεξανδρείας ἡγεμῶν, ὁ τῆς εὐδαιμονεστάτης χώρας ἐπίτροπος Αἰγύπτου, εἰς ὃν ἐπέστρεφον αἱ τοσαῦται μυριάδες τῶν οἰκητόρων, ὁ δυνάμεις πολλὰς πεζὰς καὶ ἵππικὰς καὶ ναυτικὰς οὐκ ἀριθμὸν ἄλλως ἄλλ’ ὅσον δοκιμώτατον ἐν ὑπηκόοις ἔχων, ὁ καθ’ ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἐν ταῖς ἐξόδοις ὑπὸ μυρίων ὄσων
- 164 παραπεμπόμενος. ἀλλὰ μὴ φάσμα ταῦτ’ ἦν, οὐκ ἀλήθεια; καὶ κοιμώμενος ὄναρ εἶδον τὴν τότε εὐθυμίαν, εἶδωλα κατὰ κενοῦ βαίνοντα, πλάσματα ψυχῆς ἴσως ἀναγραφούσης τὰ μὴ ὑπάρχοντα ὡς
- 165 ὄντα; διηπάτημαι· σκιὰ πραγμάτων ἄρ’ ἦσαν, οὐ πράγματα, μίμησις ἐναργείας, οὐκ ἐνάργεια τρα-

---

<sup>a</sup> Or “ so violent was his emotion.” That is to say σφάδαζεν in Philo nearly always suggests strong mental emotion,

FLACCUS, 161-165

front on either side of the road. His 161 escort brought him to the popular assembly of the Andrians and exhibited him to them all, calling them to witness to the arrival of the exile at the island.
Then having fulfilled their service they departed, 162 but Flaccus having no longer before his eyes any familiar face felt his sufferings renewed thereby more poignantly as his imaginations grew more vivid. And gazing at the wide desolation around him, in the midst of which he was isolated, it seemed to him that a death by violence in his native land would be the lighter evil, or rather in comparison with his present plight a welcome boon. His wild gesticulations<sup>a</sup> were just like those of a madman. He would often jump about, run up and down, clash his hands together, smite his thighs, fling himself on the ground and often cry out, " I am Flaccus, who 163 but now was governor of Alexandria, that great city, or multitude of cities, ruler of the highly blest land of Egypt, to whom so many thousands of inhabitants paid regard, who had among his subjects great forces of infantry, cavalry, naval, not a mere lot of counters but all men of the best-proved excellence, who every day when I proceeded forth went escorted by a host of followers. But was this then a phantom, not the 164 truth? Was I asleep and dreamt the light-heartedness of those days, saw but spectres moving in a void, figments of a soul which recorded as we may suppose things which had no existence as though they were?
Yes, I have been deluded. They were the shadow 165 of realities, not the realities themselves, a counterfeit of clear vision, not the clear vision which exposes the but does not necessarily imply that the violence has any special outward expression. See further App. p. 538.

PHILO

ουσα τὸ ψεῦδος. ὡς γὰρ τῶν ἐν τοῖς ὀνείροις φανέντων οὐδὲν περιαναστάντες εὐρίσκομεν, ἀλλ' οἴχεται πάντα ἄθροα διαπτάντα, οὕτως καὶ τὰ λαμπρὰ ἐκεῖνα, οἷς ποτε ἐνωμίλησα, ἐσβέσθη βραχυτάτη καιροῦ ῥοπή.”

- 166 XX. Τοιούτοις ἀεὶ κατεπαλαίετο λογισμοῖς καὶ τρόπον τινα ἐξετραχλιζετο· τὰς δὲ τῶν πολλῶν συνόδους ἀποδιδράσκων διὰ τὴν παρακολουθοῦσαν αἰσχύνην οὐτ' εἰς λιμένα κατῆει οὐτ' εἰς ἀγορὰν προελθεῖν ὑπέμενεν, ἀλλ' οἴκοι συγκλεισάμενος ἐφώλευε, μηδὲ τὴν αὐλιον ὑπερβαίνειν θαρρῶν.
- 167 ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ περὶ βαθὺν ὄρθρον, ἔτι τῶν ἄλλων ἐν εὐναῖς ὄντων, μηδενὶ φανεῖς τὸ παράπαν ἔξω τείχους προῆει καὶ διημέρευεν ἐπὶ τῆς ἐρημίας, ἐκτρεπόμενος. εἴ πού τις ὑπαντήσειεν ἔμελλε, καὶ ταῖς ἐναύλοις μνήμαις τῶν κακοπραγιῶν διακναιόμενος καὶ διεσθιόμενος τὴν ψυχὴν, ὁ δειλαιος, νυκτὸς εἰσῆει βαθείας, εὐχόμενος διὰ τὰς ἀμέτρους καὶ ἀτελευτήτους ἀδημονίας ἐσπέραν μὲν πρῶϊαν γενέσθαι, πεφρικῶς τὸ σκότος καὶ τὰς ἀλλοκότους φαντασίας, ὅποτε τύχοι καταδαρθῶν, ἅμα δὲ τῇ ἔω πάλιν ἐσπέραν· ὁ γὰρ περὶ αὐτὸν ζόφος ἦναν-
- 168 τιοῦτο τοῖς φαιδροῖς ἅπασιν. ὀλίγοις δ' ὕστερον μῆσι βραχὺ τι γῆδιον πριάμενος ἐν αὐτῷ πολλὰ διέτριβε μονούμενος καὶ τὸν οἰκεῖον ἐπι-

---

<sup>a</sup> So perhaps simply, though the examples of ῥοπή= “moment” without qualification are principally from the LXX. Otherwise more exactly “by a momentary change in what time brings,” i.e. in fortune. Cf. καιρῶν ὀξείαις μεταβολαῖς De Post. 113.

FLACCUS, 165-168

falsehood to the light. For just as when we wake up we find nothing of what we saw in our dreams, but all are gone and have taken flight together, so, too, that brightness which surrounded my life has been quenched in one short moment of time.”<sup>a</sup>

XX. Such were the thoughts which held him ever 166 firmly in their grip and so to speak flung him prostrate to the ground. He shunned meeting with people in large numbers because of the sense of shame which accompanied him. He did not go down to the harbour nor bring himself to enter the market but shut himself at home and there lay hidden not having even the courage to pass the threshold. Sometimes, 167 too, in the dark hours of the morning when everyone else was still in bed he would come out without a soul seeing him and advance outside the wall and spend the day in the solitude, turning aside if anyone was about to meet him, his soul lacerated, poor wretch, and devoured by the vivid memories of his calamities.
Then when the night had quite closed in he would go indoors, praying in his endless and boundless sorrow that the evening might be morning, so much did he dread the darkness and the weird visions which it gave him, if he chanced to fall asleep.
So in the morning again he prayed for evening, for to the gloom that surrounded him everything bright was repugnant.<sup>b</sup> A few months later he 168 bought a small piece of ground and spent much of his time there in solitude, bewailing with tears and

<sup>b</sup> Clearly a reminiscence of the curse in Deut. xxviii. 67 “ In the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even !
and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning ! ” See note on De Praem. 151, where as here Philo takes the words which follow “ for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see ” to refer to the awful dreams seen by the accursed.

PHILO

- 169 στένων καὶ κατακλαίων δαίμονα. λέγεται δέ ποτε [542] καὶ περὶ μέσας νύκτας ὥσπερ οἱ | κορυβαντιῶντες ἔνθους γενόμενος, ἐκ τῆς ἐπαύλευς ἕξω προελθὼν καὶ τὴν ὄψιν ἀνατείνας εἰς οὐρανὸν καὶ τοὺς ἀσ-τέρας, τὸν ἐν κόσμῳ κόσμον ὄντως ἰδὼν, ἀναβοῆ-170 σαι· “ βασιλεῦ θεῶν καὶ ἀνθρώπων, οὐκ ἄρα τοῦ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἔθνους ἀμελῶς ἔχεις, οὐδ’ ἐπιψεύ-δονται τὴν ἐκ σοῦ πρόνοιαν, ἀλλ’ ὅσοι φασὶν αὐτοὺς μὴ προαγωνιστῆ σοι καὶ ὑπερμάχῳ χρῆσθαι, δόξης ὑγιοῦς διαμαρτάνουσι. σαφῆς δ’ ἐγὼ πίστις· ὅσα 171 γὰρ κατεμάνην τῶν Ἰουδαίων, αὐτὸς πέπονθα. τὰς οὐσίας ἀρπαζομένων περιεῖδον ἐκεχειρίαν τοῖς λεηλατοῦσι διδούς· ἀφηρέθην διὰ τοῦτο τὰ πατρῶα καὶ μητρῶα καὶ ὅσα ἐν μέρει χάριτος καὶ δωρεᾶς ἔλαβον ἢ ὅσα ἄλλα καθ’ ἐτέρας ἰδέας ἐκτησάμην.
 172 ὠνείδισά ποτε ἀτιμίαν καὶ ξενιτείαν αὐτοῖς ἐπιτί-μοις οὔσι κατοίκους, ἵν’ ἡσθῶσιν οἱ ἀντίπαλοι, πλῆθος ἀσύντακτον καὶ πεφορημένον, ὑφ’ οὗ κολακευόμενος ὁ δυστυχῆς ἡπατώμην· διὰ τοῦτο ἡτίμωμαι καὶ φυγὰς ἐξ ἀπάσης ἐληλαμένος τῆς 173 οἰκουμένης ἐνταυθοῖ συγκέκλεισμαι. παράγων εἰς τὸ θέατρον ἐνίους ἐν ὄψεσι τῶν ἐχθίστων αἰκίζεσθαι προσέταπτον ἀδίκως· τοιγαροῦν ἐγὼ δικαίως οὐκ εἰς θέατρον ἐν ἣ μίαν πόλιν ἐπὶ ταῖς ἐσχάταις ὕβρεσι παρήχθην αἰκισθεὶς πρὸ τοῦ σώματος τὴν ἀθλίαν ψυχὴν, ἀλλ’ ἐπόμπευσα διὰ μὲν πάσης Ἰταλίας ἄχρι Βρεντεσίου, διὰ δὲ πάσης Πελο-ποννήσου μέχρι Κορίνθου, διὰ δὲ τῆς Ἀττικῆς καὶ

---

“ Lit. “ his peculiar fate.” οἰκεῖον seems pleonastic, but expresses, perhaps, the feeling of one who asks “ Why should I in particular have this fate?” See however on De Prov. 8.

FLACCUS, 169-173

groans that such should be his fate.<sup>a</sup> It is said that 169 once about midnight he became possessed as in a Corybantic frenzy, and coming out of the shelter put up there turned his eyes to heaven and the stars,
